sponsor (spon′sor), n. [< L. sponsor, a surety, LL. a sponsor in baptism, < spondere, pp. sponsus, promise; cf. Gr. σπονδαί (pl. of σπονδή), a truce, < σπένδειν, pour a libation, as when making a solemn treaty: see spondee. From L. spondere are also ult. despond, respond, correspond, spouse, espousal, etc.] 1. A surety; one who binds himself to answer for another, and is responsible for his default; specifically, one who is surety for an infant at baptism, professing the Christian faith in its name, and guaranteeing its religious education; a godfather or godmother. The custom of having sponsors in baptism is as old as the second century. See godfather.—2. [cap.] [NL.] In entom., a genus of coleopterous insects.

sponsorial (spon-sō′ri-al), a. [< sponsor + -i-al.] Of or pertaining to a sponsor.

sponsorship (spon′sor-ship), n. [< sponsor + -ship.] The state of being a sponsor.

spontaneity (spon-tā-nē′i-ti), n. [< F. spontanéité = Sp. espontaneidad = Pg. espontaneidade = It. spontaneità, < ML. spontaneita(t-)s*, < LL. spontaneus, spontaneous: see spontaneous.] 1. Spontaneous character or quality; that character of any action of any subject by virtue of which it takes place without being caused by anything distinguishable from the subject itself. Spontaneity does not imply the absence of a purpose or external end, but the absence of an external incitement or external efficient cause.

2. In biol., the fact of apparently automatic change in structure, or activity in function, of animals and plants, whereby new characters may be acquired, or certain actions performed, under no influence of external conditions or stimulus; animal or vegetable automatism. (a) The inherent tendency of an individual organism to vary in structure without reference to its conditions of environment, as when a plant or animal sports; spontaneous variability. Some of the most valuable strains of domestic animals and cultivated plants have arisen thus spontaneously. (b) The tendency to purposeless activity of the muscular system of animals, whereby they execute movements independent of external stimulus. Such actions, though voluntary, lack recognizable motive, and appear to depend upon the tension of a vigorous nervous system refreshed by repose. Such spontaneity is notable in the great activity of children and the gambols of young animals.—Spontaneity of certain cognitive faculties, in the philosophy of Kant, the self-activity of those faculties which are not determined to act by anything in the sense-impressions on which they act. But the conception is not made very clear by Kant.

spontaneous (spon-tā′nē-us), a. [= F. spontané = Sp. Pg. espontaneo = It. spontaneo, < LL. spontaneus, willing, < L. spon(t-)s*, will, only in gen. spontis and abl. sponte, of one's own will, of one's own accord.] 1. Proceeding from a conscious or unconscious internal impulse; occurring or done without the intervention of external causes; in a restricted sense, springing from one's own desire or volition, apart from any external suggestion or incitement. Of late the employment of spontaneous in the sense of 'irreflective' or 'not controlled by a definite purpose' is creeping in from the French; but this is an objectionable use of the term.

The spontaneous grace with which these homely duties seemed to bloom out of her character. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, v.

Now my speculation is that advantageous permanent changes are always produced by the spontaneous action of the organism, and not by the direct action of the environment. W. K. Clifford, Lectures, I. 101.

A man whose nature leads him to a spontaneous fulfilment of the Divine will cannot be conceived better. H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 277.

2. Growing naturally, without previous human care.

Spontaneous flowers take the place of the finished parterre. Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xxxi.

3. Growing as native; indigenous. [Rare.]

Whence they had their Indian corn I can give no account; for I don't believe that it was spontaneous in those parts. Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 20.

4. In biol., instinctive or automatic, as some actions of animals which depend upon no external stimulus and are performed without apparent motive or purpose; uninfluenced by external conditions, as a change in structural character. Compare spontaneity, 2. Spontaneous actions may be either voluntary, in a usual sense, as the gambols of puppies or kittens, or involuntary and quite uncontrollable by the will. Of the latter class, some are abnormal, as spontaneous (in distinction from induced) somnambulism, and these are also called idiopathic.—Center of spontaneous rotation. See rotation.—Spontaneous axis, an axis of rotation of a body under instantaneous forces, in case there is no translation in the first instant.—Spontaneous cause, a cause that is moved to causing by the end or the object.—Spontaneous combustion. See combustion.—Spontaneous dislocation. See dislocation, 2 (a).—Spontaneous energy, free energy, unrepressed and unforced.—Spontaneous evolution, in obstet., the spontaneous expulsion of the fetus in a case of shoulder presentation, the body being delivered before the head.—Spontaneous generation. See generation and abiogenesis.—Spontaneous suggestion, suggestion by the action of the laws of association, without the intervention of the will.=Syn. 1. Willing, etc. (see voluntary), instinctive, unbidden.

spontaneously (spon-tā′nē-us-li), adv. In a spontaneous manner; with spontaneity.

spontaneousness (spon-tā′nē-us-nes), n. The character of being spontaneous; spontaneity.

spontoon (spon-tön′), n. [Formerly also esponton; = G. sponton, < F. sponton, esponton, F. dial. éponton = Sp. esponton = Pg. espontão, < It. spontone, puntone, a sharp point, a bill, javelin, pike, spontoon; cf. spuntare, shoot forth, break off the point, blunt; puntone, a point, < punto, a prick, a point: see *point*1.] A kind of halberd or partizan formerly serving as the distinguishing arm for certain officers of the British infantry. Compare half-pike. Also called demi-pike.

spook (spök), n. [Also spuke; < D. spook, MD. spoocke = MLG. spōk, spūk, LG. spook = G. spuck (obs. except in dial. use), also spuk (after LG.) = Sw. spöke (cf. D. spooksel, MD. spoocksel, Dan. spögelse), a spook, ghost. There is nothing to show any connection with Ir. puca, elf, sprite, = W. pwca, pwci: see puck, *pug*1.] A ghost; a hobgoblin. [Now colloq.]

Woden, who, first losing his identity in the Wild Huntsman, sinks by degrees into the mere spook of a Suabian baron, sinfully fond of field-sports. Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 118.

spook (spök), v. i. [= D. spoken = MLG. spoken = G. spuken, spucken = Sw. spöka = Dan. spöge; from the noun.] To play the spook. [Rare.]

Yet still the New World spooked it in his veins,
A ghost he could not lay with all his pains.
Lowell, Fitz Adam's Story.

spookish (spö′kish), a. [< spook + *-ish*1.] 1. Like a spook or ghost; ghostly.—2. Given over to spooks; congenial to ghosts; haunted: as, a spookish house.—3. Affected by a sense or fear of ghosts; suggestive of the presence or agency of spooks: as, a spookish circumstance; a spookish sensation. [Colloq. in all uses.]

spooky (spö′ki), a. [< spook + *-y*1.] Same as spookish, in any sense. [Colloq.]

spool (spöl), n. [< ME. spole (not in AS.), < MD. spoele, D. spoel, a spool, quill, = MLG. spōle, LG. spole = OHG. spuolo, spuolā, MHG. spuole, G. spule, a spool, bobbin, = Icel. spōla = Sw. Dan. spole, a spool (cf. It. spola, spuola, bobbin, OF. epolet, spindle, < Teut.); perhaps akin to Icel. spölr, a rail, a bar: see spale.] 1. A small cylinder of wood or other material (with a projecting disk at each end), upon which thread or yarn is wound; a reel.—2. The revolving metal shaft of an anglers' reel, upon which the fishing-line is wound. See cut under reel.

spool (spöl), v. t. [< spool, n.] To wind on a spool.

spool-cotton (spöl′kot″n), n. Cotton thread wound on spools.

spooler (spö′lėr), n. [< spool + *-er*1.] One who winds, or a machine used in winding, thread or yarn on spools. Ure, Dict., IV. 122.

spool-holder (spöl′hōl″dėr), n. 1. A stand for one or more spools of sewing-thread, on which the spools are mounted on pins, so as to turn freely as the thread is unwound. Also spool-stand.—2. In warping, a creel on which spools are placed on skewers.

spooling-machine (spö′ling-ma-shēn″), n. A machine for winding thread on spools.

spooling-wheel (spö′ling-hwēl), n. Same as spole, 2. Halliwell.

spool-stand (spöl′stand), n. Same as spool-holder, 1.

spoomt (spöm), v. [Supposed to be a var. of spume, q. v. Cf. *spoon*2.] I. intrans. Naut., to sail steadily and rapidly, as before the wind.

We'll spare her our main-top sail;
She shall not look us long, we are no starters.
Down with the fore-sail too! we'll spoom before her.
Fletcher, Double Marriage, ii. 1.

II. trans. To cause to scud, as before the wind.

Spoom her before the wind, you'll lose all else!
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 4.

spooming (spö′ming), p. a. Rushing before the wind: in the quotation perhaps used erroneously in the sense of 'foaming,' 'surging,' 'roaring.'

O Moon! far spooming Ocean bows to thee.
Keats, Endymion, iii.

spoon1 (spön), n. [< ME. spoon, spone, spon, span, < AS. spōn, a splinter of wood, chip, = OFries. spōn, span = D. spaen, spaan = MLG. spōn, LG. spoon = MHG. spān, G. span, a thin piece of wood, shaving, chip, = Icel. spānn, spōnn = Sw. spån = Dan. spaan, a chip; root uncertain. Cf. span-new, spick-and-span-new.] 1†. A thin piece of wood; a splinter; a chip.

A fyre of sponys, and iowe of gromis
Full soun woll be att a nende [an end].
Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), p. 41.

2. A utensil consisting of a bowl or concave part and a handle, used for conveying liquids or liquid food to the mouth. Spoons were originally of wood, later of horn or metal. They are now made usually of silver, gold, iron, or mixed metal, of wood, horn, shell, or other materials, in various sizes and shapes, and for a great variety of purposes. Compare dessert-spoon, egg-spoon, table-spoon, etc.

He must have a long spoon that must eat with the devil.
Shak., C. of E., iv. 3. 62.

3. Something wholly or in part like a spoon (def. 2) or the bowl of a spoon in shape. Specifically—(a) The blade of an oar when broad and slightly curved, or an oar with such a curved blade. (b) A bright spoon-shaped piece of metal or other substance, swiveled above hooks, used as a lure or decoy in fishing. It revolves as it is drawn through the water. (c) A piece cut from the horn of an ox or bison, in the shape of an elongated bowl of a spoon, six to eight inches in length. It is used in gold-washing, and for testing the value of any kind of detrital material or pulverized ore. (d) A club the striking-surface of which is somewhat hollowed, used in the game of golf. (e) The spoonbill or paddle-fish. (f) In ornith., the spatulate dilatation at the end of the bill of a spoon-billed bird. (g) In cotton-manuf., a weighted gravitating arm in the stop-motion of a drawing-frame. One of these is held in position by the tension of each sliver, and in case the sliver breaks or the can becomes empty, and the tension is thus relieved, it falls, and, actuating a belt-shifter, causes the driving-belt to slip from the fast pulley to the loose pulley, thus stopping the machine. (h) In archery, same as petticoat, 5.—Apostle's spoon. See apostle-spoon.—Bag and spoon. See *bag*1.—Deflagrating-spoon, a small spoon of metal, upon which a substance which is to be deflagrated is subjected to the action of heat.—Eucharistic spoon. Same as labis.—Maidenhead spoon. See maidenhead.—To be born with a silver spoon in one's mouth. See *born*1.—Wooden spoon. (a) At Cambridge University, the student whose name stands last in the Mathematical Tripos. (b) At Yale, formerly, the student who took the last appointment at the Junior Exhibition; later, the most popular student in a class.

spoon[1] (spön), v. [< spoon[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To take up or out with a spoon or ladle; remove with a spoon; empty or clean out with a spoon: often with up: as, to spoon up a liquid.

> Ours, . . .
> An age of scum, spooned off the richer past.
> Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, v.

2. To lie close to, the face of one to the back of the other, as the bowl of one spoon within that of another. Compare spoon-fashion. [Colloq.]

> "Now spoon me." Sterling stretched himself out on the warm flag-stone, and the boy nestled up against him.
> Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 49.

II. intrans. 1. In croquet, to use the mallet as a spoon; push or shove the ball along with the mallet instead of striking it smartly as is required by the strict rules of the game.

> Belabour thy neighbour, and spoon through thy hoops.
> F. Locker, Mr. Placid's Flirtation.

2. To fish with spoon-bait.—3. To lie spoon-fashion. Compare I., 2. [Colloq.]

> Two persons in each bunk, the sleepers spooning together, packed like sardines. Harper's Mag., LXXIV. 781.

spoon[2] (spön), v. i. [A var. or corruption of spoom.] Same as spoom.

> Such a storme did arise, they were forced to let slip Cable and Anchor, and put to Sea, spooning before the wind. Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 52.

spoon[3] (spön), n. [Usually assumed to be a particular use of spoon[1]; but rather a back-formation from spoony, orig. in allusion to the use of a spoon in feeding an infant.] 1. A foolish fellow; a simpleton; a spoony; a silly lover. [Colloq.]

> A man that's fond precociously of stirring > Must be a spoon. Hood, Morning Meditations.

> What a good-natured spoon that Dodd is!
> C. Reade, Hard Cash, Prol.

2. A fit of silliness; especially, a fit of silly love. [Colloq.]—To be spoons on, to be sillily in love with. [Slang.]

> I ought to remember, for I was spoons on you myself for a week or two. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 749.

spoon[3] (spön), v. i. [< spoon[3], n.] To be a spoon or spoony; be sillily in love. [Colloq.]

spoonage† (spö'nāj), n. [< spoon[1] + -age.] Spoon-meat. Warner, Albion's England, ii. 10.

spoon-bait (spön'bāt), n. A trolling-spoon; a revolving metallic lure for the capture of certain kinds of fish, used in trolling; a spinner or propeller.

spoonbeak (spön'bēk), n. Same as spoonbill, 1 (b). [Prov. Eng.]

spoonbill (spön'bil), n. 1. In ornith.: (a) A large grallatorial bird of either of the genera Platalea and Aiaia: so called from the broad, flat, spatulate dilatation of the end of the bill, likened to a spoon. See cuts under Platalea and aiaia. (b) The shoveler-duck, Spatula clypeata. See cut under shoveler[2]. (c) The scaup-duck, Fuligula marila. See cut under scaup. [East Lothian.] (d) The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida; the broadbill: more fully called spoon-billed butterball. See cut under Erismatura. [Massachusetts and New York.]—2. In ichth., the spoon-billed cat, or paddle-fish, Polyodon spatula. See cuts under paddle-fish.—Roseate spoonbill. See aiaia.

spoon-billed (spön'bild), a. 1. In ornith., having a spoon-like or spatulate bill, dilated at the end. See spoonbill.—2. In ichth., duck-billed; shovel-nosed; having a long spatulate snout, as a sturgeon. See cuts under paddle-fish and Psephurus.—Spoon-billed butterball. Same as spoonbill, 1 (d).—Spoon-billed cat. Same as paddle-fish.—Spoon-billed duck, teal, or widgeon, the shoveler.—Spoon-billed heron, a spoonbill.—Spoon-billed sandpiper, Eurynorhynchus pygmæus, a sandpiper with the bill dilated into a spoon at the end. In other respects this curious little bird is almost identical in form with the stints, or least sandpipers, of the genus Actodromas; it is also of about the same size, and its plumage is similar. See cut under Eurynorhynchus.

spoon-bit (spön'bit), n. A shell-bit in which the piercing-end is drawn to a radial point: same as dowel-bit.

spoon-chisel (spön'chiz″el), n. See chisel[2]. E. H. Knight.

spoon-drift (spön'drift), n. [< spoon[2] + drift.] Naut., a showery sprinkling of sea-water or fine spray swept from the tops of the waves by the violence of the wind in a tempest, and driven along before it, covering the surface of the sea; scud. Sometimes called spindrift.

spooney, a. and n. See spoony.

spoon-fashion (spön'fash″ on), adv. Like spoons close together; with the face of one to the back of the other and with the knees bent: as, to lie spoon-fashion. The Century, XXXV. 771. [Colloq.]

spoonflower (spön'flou″ėr), n. A plant, Xanthosoma sagittifolium, more specifically arrow-leafed spoonflower, considerably resembling a calla-lily. It is a native of the West Indies, occurring very sparingly in the southern United States. Its rootstock after boiling is mealy and edible, and for this it is said to be cultivated in Brazil. [Local, U. S.]

spoonful (spön'fůl), n. [< spoon[1] + -ful.] As much as a spoon contains.

spoon-gouge (spön'gouj), n. In carp., a gouge with a crooked end, used for hollowing out deep furrows or cuttings in wood.

spoon-hook (spön'hůk), n. A fish-hook with a spoon attached; an anglers' spoon.

spoonily (spö'ni-li), adv. In a silly or spoony manner.

spooniness (spö'ni-nes), n. Spoony character or state; silliness; especially, silly fondness. E. H. Yates, Land at Last, I. 107.

spoon-meat (spön'mēt), n. Food that is or has to be taken with a spoon; liquid food; figuratively, food for babes or weaklings.

> Caur. Will you go with me? We'll mend our dinner here?
> Dro. S. Master, if you do, expect spoon-meat; or bespeak a long spoon. Shak., C. of E., iv. 3. 61.

spoon-net (spön'net), n. A landing-net used by anglers.

spoon-saw (spön'sâ), n. A spoon-shaped instrument with a serrated edge, used in gynecological operations.

spoon-shaped (spön'shāpt), a. Shaped like a spoon; spatulate; cochleariform.

spoontail (spön'tāl), n. A phylloped crustacean of the genus Lepidurus.

spoon-victuals (spön'vit″lz), n. pl. Same as spoon-meat. [Colloq.]

spoonwood (spön'wůd), n. The mountain-laurel or calico-bush, Kalmia latifolia, of the eastern United States. It is commonly a shrub, but in the Alleghanies southward becomes a tree 20 or 30 feet high. Its wood is hard and heavy, and is used for tool-handles, in turnery, and for fuel. The leaves are considered poisonous, and have a slight medicinal repute. See cut under Kalmia.

spoonworm (spön'wėrm), n. A gephyrean worm; especially, a sipunculoid worm. See Gephyrea, and cuts under Sipunculus.—Neptune's spoonworm. See Neptunc.

spoonwort† (spön'wėrt), n. [< spoon[1] + wort[1].] The scurvy-grass, Cochlearia officinalis.

spoony (spö'ni), a. and n. [Also spooney; cf. spoon[3].] I. a. Soft; silly; weak-minded; specifically, weakly or foolishly fond; sentimental.

> Not actually in love, . . . but only spoony.
> Lever, Davenport Dunn, lx.

> His grandson was not to his taste; amiable, no doubt, but spoony. Disraeli.

II. n.; pl. spoonies (-niz). A stupid or silly fellow; a noodle; a ninny; a simpleton; especially, a sillily fond sentimental fellow. Also spoon. [Slang.]

> In short, I began the process of ruining myself in the received style, like any other spoonie.
> Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xv.

> What the deuce can she find in that spooney of a Pitt Crawley? . . . The fellow has not pluck enough to say Bo to a goose. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxxiv.

spoor (spör), n. [< D. spoor = MLG. spor = OHG. MHG. spor, G. spur = Icel. spor = Sw. spår = Dan. spor, track, = AS. spor, a track, trace, footprint. Cf. spcer[1], spur.] The track or trail of a wild animal or animals, especially such as are pursued as game; slot; hence, scent: used originally by travelers in South Africa.

spoor (spör), v. [< spoor, n. Cf. speer[1].] I. intrans. To follow a spoor or trail.

> After searching and spooring about for another hour, we were obliged to abandon pursuit.
> The Field, Feb. 17, 1887. (Encyc. Dict.)

II. trans. To track by the spoor.

> The three bulls, according to the natives, have been spoored into the dense patch of bush above the kloof.
> Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 192.

spoorer (spör'ėr), n. One who follows or tracks game by the spoor or scent.

> Ventvogel . . . was one of the most perfect spoorers I ever had to do with.
> H. R. Haggard, King Solomon's Mines, iii.

spoorn†, n. [Origin obscure.] The name of a fiend or hobgoblin whose nature does not appear to be determinable.

> Urchins, Elves, Hags, Satyrs, . . . Kitt-with-the-candle-stick, Tritons, . . . the Spoorn, the Mare, the Man-in-the-oak. Middleton, The Witch, i. 2.

> Most antiquarians will be at fault concerning the spoorne, Kitt-with-the-candlestick, Boneless, and some others.
> Scott, Letters on Demonology, note.

> The scene of fairy revels, . . . the haunt of bulbeggars, witches, . . . the spoorn. S. Judd, Margaret, i. 5.

sporaceous (spō-rā'shius), a. [< spore + -aceous.] In bot., pertaining to spores; contributing to spores.

Sporades (spor'a-dēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. σποράδες, sc. νῆσοι, 'the scattered islands,' a group of islands off the west coast of Asia Minor, pl. of σποράς, scattered: see sporadic.] 1. A group of scattered islands in the Greek Archipelago.—2. [l. c.] In anc. astron., stars which were not included in any constellation.

sporadial (spō-rā'di-al), a. [< Gr. σποράς (σποραδ-), scattered (see sporadic), + -i-al.] Scattered; sporadic. [Rare.]

sporadic (spō-rad'ik), a. [= F. sporadique = Sp. esporádico = Pg. esporadico = It. sporadico, < NL. sporadicus, < Gr. σποραδικός, scattered, < σποράς, scattered, < σπείρειν, scatter: see spore[2].] Separate; single; scattered; occurring singly, or apart from other things of the same kind; widely or irregularly scattered; of exceptional occurrence (in a given locality); straggling.

> If there was discontent, it was in the individual, and not in the air; sporadic, not epidemic.
> Lowell, New Princeton Rev., I. 158.

Sporadic cholera. See cholera, 2.—Sporadic dysentery, dysentery occurring in scattered cases, which have no apparent common origin.

sporadical (spō-rad'i-kal), a. [< sporadic + -al.] Same as sporadic. Arbuthnot.

sporadically (spō-rad'i-kal-i), adv. In a sporadic manner; separately; singly; dispersedly.

sporadicalness (spō-rad'i-kal-nes), n. The quality of being sporadic.

> Rare even to sporadicalness.
> W. D. Whitney, Amer. Jour. Philol., V. 287.

sporal (spō'ral), a. [< spore[2] + -al.] Relating to or resembling spores.

sporange (spō-ranj'), n. [< sporangium.] In bot., same as sporangium.

sporangia, n. Plural of sporangium.

sporangial (spō-ran'ji-al), a. [< sporangium + -al.] 1. Of or relating to the sporangium: as, the sporangial layer.—2. Containing spores; having the character of a sporangium; pertaining to sporangia.

sporangidium† (spō-ran-jid'i-um), n.; pl. sporangidia (-ä). [NL., dim. of sporangium.] In bot.: (a) The columella in mosses. (b) A sporangium.

sporangiferous (spō-ran-jif'e-rus), a. [< NL. sporangium + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] In bot., bearing or producing sporangia.

sporangiform (spō-ran'ji-fôrm), a. [< NL. sporangium + L. forma, form.] In bot., having the form or appearance of a sporangium.

sporangioid (spō-ran'ji-oid), a. [< NL. sporangium + Gr. εἶδος, appearance.] In bot., having the appearance of a sporangium.

sporangiole (spō-ran'ji-ōl), n. [< NL. sporangiolum.] In bot., same as sporangiolum.

sporangiolum (spō-ran-jī'ō-lum), n.; pl. sporangiola (-lä). [NL., dim. of sporangium.] In bot., a small sporanginm produced in certain genera of Mucorini in addition to the large sperangium. The spores are similar in both. The term has also been used as a synonym for ascus.

sporangiophore (spō-ran'ji-ō-fōr), n. [< NL. sporangiophorum, < sporangium + Gr. -φορος, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] In bot., the axis or receptacle which bears the sporangia; a sporophore bearing sporangia. See sporophore.

sporangiophorum (spō-ran-ji-of'ō-rum), n.; pl. sporangiophora (-rä). [NL.: see sporangiophore.] In bot., same as sporangiophore.

sporangiospore (spō-ran'ji-ō-spōr), n. [< Gr. σπορά, σπόρος, seed. + ἀγγεῖον, vessel, + σπορά, σπόρος, seed.] In bot., one of the peculiar spores of the Myxomycetes. See Myxomycetes.

sporangium (spō-ran'ji-um), n.; pl. sporangia (-ä). [NL., < spora, a spore, + Gr. ἀγγεῖον, vessel.] 1. In bot., a spore-case; the case or sac in cryptegamous plants in which the spores, which are the analogues of the seeds of the higher or flowering plants, are produced endogenously. The sporangium receives different names, in accordance with the kind of spores produced: as, macrosporangium, microsporangium, oösporangium, zoösporangium, etc. In mosses sporangium is usually the same as capsule, but by some authors it is restricted to the spore-case or sac lining the cavity of the capsule. See spore-sac.

2. In zoöl., the spore-capsule or spore-receptacle of the Myeetozoa. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 334.

Also sporange.

sporation (spō-rā'shon), n. [< spore[2] + -ation.] In biol., a mode of generation which consists in the interior division of the body into a mass of spores or germs, which are freed upon the rupture of the body-wall; also, spore-formation. Usually called sporulation.

spore[1]†, n. A Middle English form of spur.

spore[2] (spōr), n. [= F. spore, < NL. spora, a spore, < Gr. σπορά, a sowing, seed-time, seed sown, seed, produce, offspring; cf. σπόρος, a sowing, seed-time, seed, produce; < σπείρειν, sow, scatter; cf. sperm[1].] 1. In bot., a single cell which becomes free and is capable of developing directly into a new morphologically and physiologically independent individual. The name is given to all the reproductive bodies of cryptogamous plants, which are the analogues of the seeds of the higher or flowering plants, from which they further differ by having no embryo. In the majority of cases a spore consists of a nucleated mass of protoplasm, inclosing starch or oil as reserve nutritive material, surrounded by a cell-wall. In those cases in which the spore is capable of germination immediately on the completion of its development, the cell-wall is a single delicate membrane consisting of cellulose; but in those cases in which the spore must pass through a period of quiescence before germination, the wall is thick and may consist of two layers, an inner, the endospore, which is delicate and consists of cellulose, and an outer, the exospore, which is thick and rigid, frequently dark-colored, and beset externally with spines or bosses, and which consists of cutin. In certain plants, as some algæ and fungi, spores are produced which are for a time destitute of any cell-wall. They are further peculiar in that they are motile, on which account they are called zoöspores. In the various divisions of cryptogams the spores are produced in many different ways and under various conditions. See æcidiospore, ascospore, bispore, carpospore, chlamydospore, clinospore, macrospore, microspore, oospore, protospore, pseudospore, pycnidiospore, stylospore, teleutospore, tetraspore, uredospore, zoöspore, zygospore, etc.

Spores.

1. Of Lycopodium clavatum. 2. Of Selaginella marginata, germinating. 3. Of Isoëtes lacustris. 4. Of Equisetum arvense. 5. Of Marsilea quadrifolia. 6. Of Salvinia natans. 7. Of Marattia fraxinifolia. 8. Of Aneimia sp. 9. Of Polypodium aureum. 10. Of Parmelia ciliaris. 11. Of Parmelia parietina. 12. Of Ceramium purpureum. 13. Of Coleochæte pulvinata.

2. In zoöl., the seed or germ of an organism, of minute size, and not of the morphological value of a cell, such as one of the microscopic bodies into which the substance of many protozoans is resolved in the process of reproduction by sporation; a sporule; a gemmule, as of a sponge.—3. In biol., an organic body of extremely minute size, and not subject to ordinary classification; a sporozoid or zoöspore; a living germ, as a seed of certain diseases.—4. Figuratively, a germ; a seed; a source of being.

> The spores of a great many ideas are floating about in the atmosphere. O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 46.

Cellular spore, compound spore. Same as sporidesm.—Cystocarpic spore, a carpospore.—Helicoid, secondary, etc., spores. See the adjectives.—Multilocular, plurilocular, or septate spore. Same as sporidesm.

spore-capsule (spōr'kap″sūl), n. A sporangium; a spore-case.

spore-case (spōr'kās), n. 1. In bot., the sporangium, or immediate covering of the spores, of cryptogams.—2. In zoöl., a spore-capsule.

spore-cell (spōr'sel), n. In bot., a spore, or a cell which gives rise to a spore.

spore-formation (spōr'fôr-mā″shọn), n. In biol., the origination of spores; the vital process whereby spores are produced. (a) A kind of multiple fission or interior subdivision of many unicellular organisms, by which they become converted into a mass of spores or sporules. See spore[2], and cut under Protomyxa. (b) The formation of reproductive spores, as of bacilli. See spore[2], 3.

spore-group (spōr'gröp), n. In bot., same as sporidesm.

spore-plasm (spōr'plazm), n. In bot., the protoplasm of a sporangium that is devoted to the formation of spores.

sporert, n. A Middle English form of spurrier.

spore-sac (spōr'sak), n. In bot., in mosses, the sac lining the cavity of the sporangium, which contains the spores.

sporget. A Middle English form of spurge[1] and spurge[2].

sporid (spor'id), n. [< NL. sporidium.] In bot., a sporidium.

sporidesm (spor'i-dezm), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. δέσμη, a bundle.] In bot., a pluricellular body which becomes free like a spore, and in which each cell is an independent spore with the power of germination. Also called spore-group, semen-multiplex, compound spore, multilocular spore, cellular spore, plurilocular spore, septate spore, etc. De Bary.

sporidia, n. Plural of sporidium.

sporidiferous (spō-ri-dif'ẹ-rus), a. [< NL. sporidium + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] In bot., bearing sporidia. Also sporidiiferous.

sporidiole (spō-rid'i-ōl), n. [< NL. sporidiolum.] In bot., same as sporidiolum.

sporidiolum (spō-ri-dī'ọ̄-lum), n.; pl. sporidiola (-lä). [NL., dim. of sporidium.] In bot., one of the minute globose bodies produced upon slender pedicles by germinating spores in certain fungi. They are regarded by Tulasne as spermatia.

sporidium (spō-rid'i-um), n.; pl. sporidia (-ä). [NL., < Gr. σπορά, σπόρος, seed (see spore[2]), + dim. -ίδιον.] In bot.: (a) A name restricted by some to the reproductive organs or so-called spores which are borne upon and detached from a promycelium; by others also given to the spores produced in asci or ascospores. (b) A spore. See promycelium.

sporiert, n. An obsolete form of spurrier.

sporiferous (spō-rif'ẹ-rus), a. [< NL. spora, spore, + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] In bot. and zoöl., bearing or producing spores.

sporification (spō″ri-fi-kā'shọn), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + L. -ficatio, < -ficare: see -fy.] In bot. and zoöl., the process of bearing spores; production of spores; spore-formation.

sporiparity (spō-ri-par'i-ti), n. [< sporiparous + -ity.] Reproduction by means of spores; the character of being sporiparous. See sporation, sporulation.

sporiparous (spō-rip'a-rus), a. [< NL. spora, spore, + L. parere, produce.] Reproducing by means of spores or sporular encystment, as an infusorian; sporogenous. W. S. Kent.

sporling (spôr'ling), n. A variant of sparling[1].

spornet, v. and n. A Middle English form of spurn.

sporoblast (spō'rọ-blâst), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. βλαστός, germ.] 1. In bot., Körber's term for merispore.—2. The germ or rudiment of a spore.

Sporobolus (spō-rob'ọ̄-lus), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1810), so called with ref. to the seed, which is loose and readily scattered; < Gr. σπορά, σπόρος, seed, + βάλλειν, cast forth.] A genus of grasses, of the tribe Agrostideæ, type of the subtribe Sporoboleæ. It is characterized by a diffuse or cylindrical and spike-like panicle, generally containing very numerous and small one-flowered spikelets, each with three awnless glumes, the flowering glume equal to the others or shorter, and the grain free and often readily deciduous from the glumes and palet. In typical species the pericarp, unlike that of most grasses, is a utricle; other species having the usual caryopsis are sometimes separated as a genus Vilfa (Beauvois, 1812). There are about 80 species, widely scattered through temperate and warmer regions, numerous in America, but with only one species, S. pungens, in Europe. They are commonly perennials, slender or sometimes coarse, the leaves flat or rolled, the panicle various, sometimes inclosed in the leaf-sheaths, the spikelets sometimes minute. They are known in general as dropseed-grass, some as rush-grass (which see).

sporocarp (spō'rō-kärp), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. καρπός, fruit.] In bot., a pluricellular body developed as the product of a sexual act, serving essentially for the formation of spores, and ceasing to exist after having once, with comparative rapidity, formed a number of spores. The fructification developed from an archicarp or procarp in Fungi and Rhodophyceæ is a sporocarp; such, also, is the sporogonium in Muscineæ. The term is also used for the capsule-like structure formed by the indusium inclosing the sporangia in the heterosporous Filicinæ. Goebel. See cystocarp, and cuts under annulus, Marsilea, mildew, and moss.

Sporocarpeæ (spō-rō-kär'pẹ̄-ē), n. pl. [NL., < sporocarp + -eæ, from the nature of the fruit.] A group proposed by late systematists to include certain well-marked classes of fungi, such as the Ascomycetes and Uredineæ. They are characterized by the production of sporocarps. See cut under ascus.

sporocarpium (spō-rō-kär'pi-um), n.; pl. sporocarpia (-ä). [NL., < spora, spore, + Gr. καρπός, fruit.] In bot., a sporocarp.

Sporochnaceæ (spō-rok-nā'sẹ̄-ē), n. pl. [< Sporochnus + -aceæ.] An order of olive-colored seaweeds, of the class Phæosporeæ, taking its name from the genus Sporochnus. The fronds are cylindrical or tubular, branching, and composed within of elongated cuboidal cells, which become smaller and roundish at the surface; the fructification is in external scattered sori. The order contains 4 or 5 genera and about 25 species.

Sporochnus (spō-rok'nus), n. [NL. (Agardh, 1844), < Gr. σπορά, seed, + χνόος, χνοῦς, down, bloom.] A genus of olive-colored inarticulate seaweeds, of the class Phæosporeæ, giving name to the order Sporochnaceæ. According to Agardh there are 6 species, widely separated in distribution.

sporocyst (spō'rō-sist), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. κύστις, a bag or pouch: see cyst.] In zoöl.: (a) The cyst, sac, or capsule which is developed in the process of sporular encystment; any unicellular organism which becomes encysted and proceeds to sporulation. (b) A cyst or sac containing spores or germs, such as is developed in the larval state of certain flukes, or trematoid worms, as Bucephalus; this state of such worms; a redia containing cercariæ. See redia, and cuts under cercaria, germarium, and Trematoda.

A, Ramified Sporocyst of Bucephalus; B, part of same, more magnified: a, outer, b, inner coat; c, d, germ-masses; C, one of these, more magnified still.

sporocystic (spō-rō-sis'tik), a. [< sporocyst + -ic.] In zoöl.: (a) Containing spores, as a cyst. (b) Contained in a cyst, as spores; encysted. (c) Embryonic and asexual, as a stage of a trematoid worm; of or pertaining to a sporocyst.

sporocyte (spō'rō-sīt), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. κύτος, a hollow.] In bot., the mother-cell of a spore. Goebel.

sporoderm (spō'rọ-dėrm), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. δέρμα, skin.] In bot., the covering or coating of a spore. Compare exospore.

sporoduct (spō'rō-dukt), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + L. ducere, carry: see duct.] A duct or passage in which spores are lodged, or through which they pass.

sporogen (spō'rō-jen), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. -γενής, producing: see -gen.] In bot., a plant producing spores instead of seed.

sporogenesis (spō-rō-jen'e-sis), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. γένεσις, generation: see genesis.] 1. The origination of spores; spore-formation.—2. Reproduction by means of spores. Also sporogony.

sporogenous (spō-roj'e-nus), a. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. -γενής, producing: see -genous.] Reproducing or reproduced by means of spores; sporiparous; bearing or producing spores.—Sporogenous layer, in hymenomycetous fungi, same as hymenium.—Sporogenous tissue, in bot., the tissue from which the spores are developed.

sporogone (spō'rō-gōn), n. [< NL. sporogonium.] In bot., same as sporogonium.

sporogonium (spō-rō-gō'ni-um), n.; pl. sporogonia (-ä). [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. γονή, generation.] In bot., the sporocarp in the Muscineæ. It is the capsule or "moss-fruit," with its various appendages, being the whole product of the sexual act, and remaining attached to, but not in organic connection with, the plant bearing the sexual organs. See Musci, and cut under moss.

sporogony (spō-rog'ọ̄-ni), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. -γονία, < γόνος, producing: see -gony.] Same as sporogenesis, 2.

sporoid (spō'roid), a. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. εἶδος, form.] Resembling a spore; sporular.

sporologist (spō-rol'ọ̄-jist), n. [< sporolog-y* (< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak) + -ist.] In bot., a botanist, especially a lichenologist, who gives prominence to the spore as a basis of classification.

soront (spō'ront), n. [< Gr. σπορά, seed, + ὤν (ὀντ-), being, ppr. of εἶναι, be: see ens and be[1].] A gregarine not provided with an epimerite, or proboscidiform organ which attaches the parasite to its host: distinguished from cephalont.

sporophore (spō'rọ-fōr), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. -φόρος, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] In bot.: (a) A placenta. (b) The branch or part of the thallus which bears spores or spore mother-cells. The various forms are further distinguished as gonidiophore, sporangiophore, ascophore, etc. (c) In Archegoniatæ, a sporophyte. Also called encarpium.—Compound sporophore, a sporophore formed by the cohesion of the ramifications of separate hyphal branches.—Filamentous sporophore. Same as simple sporophore.—Simple sporophore, a sporophore consisting of a single hypha, or branch of a hypha.

sporophoric (spō-rọ-for'ik), a. [< sporophore + -ic.] Having the character of a sporophore.

sporophorous (spō-rof'ọ̄-rus), a. [As sporophore + -ous.] In bot.: (a) Spore-bearing. (b) Of or pertaining to the sporophore.

sporophyas (spō-rof'i-as), n. [NL. (A. Braun), < spora, spore, + Gr. φίειν, produce.] Same as sporophydium.

sporophydium (spō-rō-fid'i-um), n.; pl. sporophydia (-ä). [NL. (T. F. Allen, 1888), < spora, spore, + Gr. φύειν, produce, + -ιδιον, dim. suffix.] In bot., in the Characeæ, a term applied to the whole fruit, including the spore proper, its basal cell, and the enveloping cells. It is the same, or nearly the same, as the antheridium of Sachs and Goebel, the sporophyas of Braun, the "enveloped oögonium" of Celakowsky, and the sporangium of authors in general. See spermocarp.

sporophyl, sporophyll (spō'rō-fil), n. [< NL. sporophyllum, < spora, spore, + Gr. φύλλον, a leaf.] In bot., the leaf or leaf-like organ which bears the spores, or receptacles containing the spores, in many of the vascular cryptogams. It is usually more or less modified and unlike the normal leaves, as in the spikes of Lycopodium, Selaginella, Ophioglossum, etc. See cuts under these words, also under Osmunda, polypody, and sorus.

sporophyte (spō'rō-fīt), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + Gr. φυτόν, plant.] In bot., the segment or stage of the life-cycle of the higher cryptogams (Pteridophyta, Bryophyta) in which the non-sexual organs of reproduction are borne. It is a stage in what has been called the alternation of generations, and is the fern-plant, club-moss plant, etc., of popular language. It bears the spores in countless numbers. By some authors the word sporophore is used for sporophyte. Compare oösphyte and oösphore. See Musci.

sporophytic (spō-rō-fit'ik), a. [< sporophyte + -ic.] In bot., belonging to, resembling, or characteristic of a sporophyte.

sporosac (spō'rō-sak), n. [< NL. spora, spore, + L. saccus, sack: see *sack*².] 1. In Hydrozoa, a degenerate medusiform person; one of the simple generative buds or gonophores of certain hydrozoans in which the medusoid structure is not developed. Encyc. Brit., XII. 554. —2. In Vermes, a sporocyst or redia. See sporocyst (b).

sporostegium (spō-rō-stē'ji-um), n.; pl. sporostegia (-ä). [NL., < spora, spore, + Gr. στέγειν, cover, roof.] In bot., in the Characeæ, the characteristic spirally twisted or furrowed shell of the oöspore. It is thick and hard, usually black or brown in color, and consists of five cells which arise from the base of the spore. It is the so-called Chara-fruit.

sporous (spō'rus), a. [< *spore*² + -ous.] In bot., of or pertaining to a spore.

Sporozoa (spō-rō-zō'ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. σπορά, seed, + ζῷον, an animal.] 1. Mouthless parasitic corticate protozoans, a class of Protozoa, synonymous with Gregarinida, but more comprehensive, including many organisms not ordinarily classed with the gregarines. They are parasitic, and occur in almost all animals. Most are very minute, but some attain the largest size by far known among protozoans. The Sporozoa have been divided into four subclasses, Gregarinidea, Coccidiidea, Myxosporidia, and Sarcocystidia. Also called Cytozoa.

2. [l. c.] Plural of sporozoön.

sporozoan (spō-rō-zō'an), a. and n. [< Sporozoa + -an.] I. a. Having the characters of the Sporozoa; pertaining to the Sporozoa.

II. n. A member of the Sporozoa.

sporozoic (spō-rō-zō'ik), a. [< Sporozoa + -ic.] Same as sporozoan.

sporozooid (spō-rō-zō'oid), n. [< Gr. σπόρος, seed, + zooid.] In biol., a zoöspore.

sporozoön (spō-rō-zō'on), n.; pl. sporozoa (-ä). [NL.: see Sporozoa.] An individual of the Sporozoa; a sporozoan.

Sporran of the modern form.

sporran (spor'an), n. [< Gael. sporan = Ir. sparan, a purse, pouch.] In Highland costume, the purse hanging down from the belt in front of the kilt. It is commonly of fur. In its present form, as a large and showy adjunct to the dress, it is not very old. See also cut under purse.

sport (spōrt), v. [< ME. sporten; by apheresis from disport.] I. trans. 1. To amuse; divert; entertain; make merry: commonly with a reflexive object.

> Ffor to sport hym a space, & speike with the kynges.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7909.
>
> I shall sport myself with their passions above measure.
> B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v 3.

2†. To represent by any kind of play.

> Now sporting on thy lyre the loves of youth.
> Dryden, tr. of Persius's Satires, vi. 9.

3. To display sportively or with ostentation; show off; show; exhibit.

> By-and-by, Captain Brown sported a bit of literature.
> Mrs. Gaskell, Cranford, i.
>
> A man . . . must sport an opinion when he really had none to give. J. H. Newman.

4. To spend in display. [Australia.]

> I took him for a flash overseer sporting his salary, and I was as thick as you like with him.
> H. Kingsley, Geoffry Hamlyn, xxxi.

5. To cause to sport, or vary from the normal type. Dawson, Geol. Hist. of Plants, p. 258.—To sport off†, to utter sportively; throw off with easy and playful copiousness.

> He thus sports off a dozen epigrams. Addison.

To sport one's oak. See oak.—To sport one's door. Same as to sport one's oak.

> Stop that, till I see whether the door is sported.
> Kingsley, Alton Locke, xiii.

II. intrans. 1. To divert one's self; play; frolic; take part in games or other pastimes; specifically, to practise field-sports.

> If you come to another mans house
> To sport and to playe.
> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 83.
>
> If all the year were playing holidays,
> To sport would be as tedious as to work.
> Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 2. 229.

2. To jest; speak or act jestingly; trifle.

> He was carefull lest his tongue should any way digresse from truth, euen when he most sported.
> Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 294.

3. In zoöl. and bot., to become a sport; produce a sport; vary from normal structure in a singular spontaneous manner, as an animal or a plant. See sport, n., 8.

sport (spōrt), n. [< ME. sport, spoort, sporte; by apheresis from disport.] 1. Amusement; enjoyment; entertainment; diversion; fun.

> Whan they had take hyr sporte in halle,
> The kyng to counselle gan hyr calle.
> Ipomydon (Weber's Metr. Romances, II. 303), l. 601.
>
> For 'tis the sport to have the enginer > Hoist with his own petar.
> Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4. 206.

2. A mode of amusement; a playful act or proceeding; a pastime; a merrymaking; a play, game, or other form of diversion.

> What man that I wrastele with, . . .
> I geve him sneche a trepett, he xal evyr more ly stille, ffor deth kan no sporte.
> Coventry Plays (ed. Halliwell), p. 185.
>
> Devote old age
> To sports which only childhood could excuse.
> Cowper, Task, ii. 638.

Specifically—(a) A dramatic or spectacular performance.

> The shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort,
> Who Pyramus presented, in their sport
> Forsook his scene and enter'd in a brake.
> Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 14.

At the beginning of the 16th century the May sports in vogue were, besides a contest of archery, four pageants.—the Kingham, or election of a Lord and Lady of the May, otherwise called Summer King and Queen, the Morris Dance, the Hobby Horse, and the "Robin Hood."
Child's Ballads, V., Int., p. xxvii.

(b) Any out-of-door pastime, such as hunting, fishing, racing, or the various forms of athletic contests.

> Horse and chariots let us have,
> And to our sport. Madam, now shall ye see > Our Roman hunting. Shak., Tit. And., ii. 2. 19.

3. Jest, as opposed to earnest; mere pleasantry.

> In a merry sport
> . . . let the forfeit
> Be nominated for an equal pound
> Of your fair flesh. Shak., M. of V., i. 3. 146.
>
> Earnest wed with sport. Tennyson, Day-Dream, Epil.

4†. Amorous dallying; wantonness. Shak., Othello, ii. 1. 230.—5. A plaything; a toy.

> Commit not thy prophetick mind
> To flitting leaves, the sport of every wind, > Lest they disperse in air our empty fate.
> Dryden, Æneid, vi. 117.

6. A subject of amusement, mirth, or derision; especially, a mock; a laughing-stock.

> Of slouth, there is no man ashamed, but we take it as for a laughynge matter and a sporte.
> Sir T. More, Works, p. 102.
>
> They made a sport of his prophets. 1 Esd. i. 51.

7. Play; idle jingle.

> An author who should introduce such a sport of words upon the stage even in the comedy of our days would meet with small applause.
> W. Broome, Notes on Pope's Odyssey, ix. 432.

8. In zoöl. and bot., an animal or a plant, or any part of one, that varies suddenly or singularly from the normal type of structure, and is usually of transient character, or not perpetuated. A sport is generally an individual variation of apparently spontaneous origin. The difference from the normal type is usually slight, but may be quite marked; in either case its tendency is to disappear with the individual in which it arises, though some sports repeat themselves, or may be preserved by careful selection. If perpetuated, it becomes a strain, breed, or variety. Sports are observed chiefly among domesticated animals and cultivated plants. Many of the beautiful or curious hothouse-flowers are mere sports, that are produced by high cultivation, crossing, or accident, and some valued breeds of domestic animals have arisen in like manner. Monstrous characters are sometimes acquired, but mere monstrosities or malformations are not usually called sports. Compare spontaneity, 2 (a), and freak of nature (under *freak*²).

9. A sporting man; one who is interested in open-air sports; hence, in a bad sense, a betting man; a gambler; a blackleg. [Colloq.]

> "The sports," by which is meant those who like fast living. Contemporary Rev., LIII. 228.

In sport, in jest; in play; jesting.—To make sport of or (formerly) at, to laugh at; mock at; deride.

> It were not good
> She knew his love, lest she make sport at it.
> Shak., Much Ado, iii. 1. 58.

=Syn. 1. Recreation, hilarity, merriment, mirth, jollity, gamboling.—2. Frolic, prank.

sportability (spōr-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [< sportable + -ity (see -bility).] Frolicsomeness; playfulness. Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 82. [Rare.]

sportable (spōr'ta-bl), a. [< sport + -able.] Mirthful; playful; frolicsome. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ix. 6. [Rare.]

sportal† (spōr'tal), a. [< sport + -al.] Of or pertaining to sports; used in sports: as, "sportal arms," Dryden. [Rare.]

sportance† (spōr'tans), n. [< sport + -ance.] Sporting; merrymaking. Peele, Arraignment of Paris, i. 3.

sporter (spōr'tèr), n. [< sport + *-er*¹.] One who or that which sports, in any sense of the verb. Goldsmith.

sportful (spōrt'fùl), a. [< sport + -ful.] 1. Frolicsome; playful; mirthful; merry.

> Down he alights among the sportful herd.
> Milton, P. L., iv. 396.

2†. Amorous; wanton.

> Let Kate be chaste and Dian sportful.
> Shak., T. of the S., ii. 1. 263.

3. Tending to or causing mirth; amusing; gay; also, designed for amusement only; jesting; not serious.

> Though 't be a sportful combat,
> Yet in the trial much opinion dwells.
> Shak., T. and C., i. 3. 335.

sportfully (spōrt'fùl-i), adv. In a sportful manner; playfully; sportively; in jest. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

sportfulness (spōrt'fùl-nes), n. The state of being sportful. Donne, Letters, To Sir Henry Goodyere, xxvii.

sporting (spōr'ting), n. [Verbal n. of sport, v.] 1. A sport; a game; specifically, participation in horse-racing, sports of the field, etc.; sports collectively, with all the interests involved in them.

> When that these pleasant sportings quite were done,
> The marquess a messenger sent
> For his young daughter and his pretty smiling son.
> Patient Grissel (Child's Ballads, IV. 211).

2. In zoöl. and bot., spontaneous origination of new and singular characters; the appearance of a sport, or the assumption of that character by an individual animal or plant. See sport, v. i., 3, and n., 8.

sporting (spōr'ting), p. a. 1. Engaging or concerned in sport or diversion; specifically, interested in or practising field-sports: as, a sporting man. See sport, n., 9.

> The most famous sporting man of his time was Tregonwell Frampton, Esq., of Moreton, Dorsetshire, "The Father of the Turf," who was keeper of her Majesty's running horses at Newmarket.
> J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 306.

2. In bot. and zoöl., assuming the character of a sport. See sport, n., 8. Darwin, Var. of Animals and Plants, p. 413.—Sporting rifle. See *rifle*².

sporting-book (spōr'ting-bùk), n. A book in which bets, etc., are recorded.

sporting-house (spōr'ting-hous), n. A house frequented by sportsmen, betting men, gamblers, and the like.

sportingly (spōr'ting-li), adv. In a sportive manner; sportively; in jest. Hammond, Works, I. 193.

sportive (spōr'tiv), a. [< sport + -ive.] 1. Inclined toward sport; fond of sport or amusement; frolicsome; playful.

> Is it I
> That drive thee from the sportive court?
> Shak., All's Well, iii. 2. 109.

2. Connected with amusement or sports; characterized by sport, mirth, or pleasantry.

> I am not in a sportive humour now.
> Shak., C. of E., i. 2. 58.
>
> As from the sportive Field she goes,
> His down-cast Eye revcals his inward Woes.
> Prior, Henry and Emma.

3†. Amorous; wanton.

> Why should others' false adulterate eyes
> Give salutation to my sportive blood?
> Shak., Sonnets, cxxi.

4. In bot. and zoöl., tending to vary from the normal type. See sport, n., 8. Darwin, Var. of Animals and Plants, p. 407. =Syn. 1. Jocose, jocular, facetious, gamesome, prankish.

sportively (spôr'tiv-li), adv. In a sportive or playful manner. Drayton, Duke of Suffolk to the French Queen.

sportiveness (spôr'tiv-nes), n. The state of being sportive; disposition to mirth; playfulness; mirth; gaiety; frolicsomeness: as, the sportiveness of one's humor. I. Walton, Complete Angler.

sportless (spôrt'les), a. [< sport + -less.] Without sport or mirth; joyless. P. Fletcher, Piscatory Eclogues, vii. 1.

sportling (spôrt'ling), n. [< sport + -ling[1].] 1. A light or playful sport; a frolic.

> The shepherd's boys with hundred sportlings light > Gave wings unto the time's too speedy haste.
> Britain's Ida, i. 1. (Mason's Supp. to Johnson.)

2. A playful little creature.

> When again the lambkins play,
> Pretty sportlings! full of May.
> A. Philips, Ode to Miss Carteret.

[Rare in both uses.]

sportsman (spôrts'man), n.; pl. sportsmen (-men). [< sport's, poss. of sport, + man.] 1. A man who sports; specifically, a man who practises field-sports, especially hunting or fishing, usually for pleasure and in a legitimate manner.

> The pointer ranges, and the sportsman beats
> In russet jacket; — lynx-like is his aim;
> Full grows his bag. Byron, Don Juan, xiii. 75.

2. One who bets or is otherwise interested in field-sports, especially racing; a sporting man.

> It was pleasant to be called a gentleman sportsman — also to have a chance of drawing a favourite horse.
> T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 8.

sportsmanlike (spôrts'man-lik), a. Having the characteristics of sportsmen; fond of field-sports; also, characteristic of or befitting a sportsman; hence, legitimate from the point of view of a sportsman.

sportsmanly (spôrts'man-li), a. [< sportsman + -ly[1].] Same as sportsmanlike.

sportsmanship (spôrts'man-ship), n. [< sportsman + -ship.] The practice or art of sportsmen; skill in field-sports.

sportswoman (sports'wum″an), n.; pl. sportswomen (-wim″en). A woman who engages in or is interested in field-sports. [Rare.]

sportulary† (spôr'tū-lā-ri), a. [< sportule + -ary.] Subsisting on alms or charitable contributions. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iii. 7.

sportule† (spôr'tūl), n. [< L. sportula, a little basket, esp. one in which food or money was given to a great man's clients, a present, dim. of sporta, a plaited basket.] An alms; a dole; a gift or contribution.

> The bishops who consecrated the ground had a spill or sportule from the credulous laity. Aylife, Parergon.

sporular (spor'ū-lär), a. [< sporule + -ar[3].] Having the character of a sporule; pertaining to a sporule; sporoid; sporuloid; also, swarming like a mass of spores.

sporulate (spor'ū-lāt), v.; pret. and pp. sporulated, ppr. sporulating. [< sporule + -ate[2].] I. intrans. To form spores.

II. trans. To convert into spores. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 854.

sporulation (spor-ū-lā'shon), n. [< sporulate + -ion.] Formation of or conversion into spores or sporules; sporation.

sporule (spor'ūl), n. [< NL. sporula, dim. of spora, spore: see spore[2].] A spore; sometimes, a small spore.

sporuliferous (spor-ū-lif'e-rus), a. [< NL. sporula + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] In bot., bearing sporules.

sporuloid (spor'ū-loid), a. [< sporule + -oid.] Resembling a sporule; sporular.

posh (posh), n. [Perhaps a var. of splosh for splash, like sputter for splutter. The resemblance to slosh, slush, is merely accidental.] Slush, or something resembling it; splosh. [Local, U. S.]

sposhy (posh'i), a. [< posh + -y[1].] Soft and watery; sloshy. [Local, U. S.]

> There 's a sight o' difference between good upland fruit and the sposhy apples that grows in wet ground.
> S. O. Jewett, A Country Doctor, p. 22.

spot (spot), n. [< ME. spot, spotte = OFlem. spotte, a spot; cf. D. spat, a speck (see spat[1]), Dan. spætte, a spot; these forms are appar. connected with Icel. spotti, spottr, Sw. spott, spittle, and so with E. spit[2]; but ME. spot may be in part a var. of splot, < AS. splot, a spot: see splot. The D. spot = OHG. MHG. spot, G. spott = Icel. Sw. spott, Dan. spot, mockery, derision, is not related.] 1. A stain made by foreign matter; a blot; a speck.

> Thi best cote, Hankyn,
> Hath many moles and spottes, it moste ben ywasshe.
> Piers Plowman (B), xiii. 315.
>
> Out, damned spot! out, I say! Shak., Macbeth, v. 1. 39.

2. A blemish; a flaw; a fault; especially, a stain upon moral purity.

> Alauo is the spot of lecherie more ouuler and more perilous ine clerkes and ine prelaa thanna ine leawede nolke.
> Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 237.
>
> Sublimely mild, a spirit without spot.
> Shelley, Adonais, st. 45.

3. A bit of surface differing in some way from the rest, as in color, material, or finish; a dot; a small mark. Specifically — (a†) A patch; a beauty-spot.

> I was sorry to see my Lady Castlemaine; for the mourning forcing all the ladies to go in black, with their hair plain and without spots, I find her to be a much more ordinary woman than ever I durst have thought she was.
> Pepys, Diary, April 21, 1666.

(b) A pustule or other eruptive mark, as in a rash. (c) One of the pips on a playing-card: hence, in composition with a numeral, the card having pips to the number expressed: as, to play a ten-spot. (d) One of two marked points on a billiard-table, on which balls are placed, or from which they are to be played. (e) A dark place on the disk or face of the sun or of a planet. See sun-spot. (f) In zoöl., a color-mark of rounded or indeterminate form, but not very long for its width, and thus not forming a streak or stripe; a blotch; a macula: usually said of markings larger than those called dots or points. An eyed spot forms an ocellus (which see).

4. A small extent of space; a particular locality; a place; a site. — 5. A piece; a bit; hence, something very minute; a particle; an atom.

> This earth, a spot, a grain,
> An atom, with the firmament compared.
> Milton, P. L., viii. 17.

6. A breed of domestic pigeons having a spot on the head above the beak. — 7. (a) A sciænoid fish, Liostomus xanthurus (obliquus), also called goody, lafayette, oldwife, and pig-fish. See cut under lafayette. (b) The southern redfish or drum, Sciænops ocellatus. See cut under redfish. — 8. A small fishing-ground. — Acoustic spot. See macula acustica, under macula. — Black-spot. See black. — Blind spot. See blind[1]. — Compound ocellated spot. See compound[1]. — Confluent, discal, distinct, ermine spots. See the qualifying words. — Crescent spot, in entom., a butterfly of the genus Melitæa and some related forms, having crescentic white spots on the edges of the wings. — Embryonal spot. Same as germinal spot. — Eyed spot, an ocellus. — Geminate, germinal, obliterate spot. See the adjectives. — On the spot. (a) Without change of place; before moving; at once; immediately.

> Treasury Department, Jan. 29, 1861. . . . If any one attempts to haul down the American flag, shoot him on the spot. John A. Dix (Memoirs, by Morgan Dix, i. 370).

(b) At the precise place and time; at the place and time at which something specified occurred: as, a picture of a skirmish made on the spot. — Orbicular spot. See orbicular, n. — Receptive, reniform, sagittate spot. See the adjectives. — Sieve-like spot. See macula cribrosa, under macula. — Solar spots. See sun-spot. — Sommering's spot, the macula lutea, or yellow spot of the eye. — Spot of Wagner. See nucleolus, 1. — To knock spots out of. See knock. — Yellow spot of the eye. See macula lutea, under macula.

spot (spot), v.; pret. and pp. spotted, ppr. spotting. [< ME. spotten (= OFlem. spotten); < spot, n. Cf. spat[2], spatter.] I. trans. 1. To make a spot on; blot; stain; discolor or defile in a spot or spots.

> He that meddleth with pitch is like to be spotted with it. Latimer, 5th Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.
>
> With rust his armor bright was spotted o'er.
> William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 84.

2. To mar the perfection or moral purity of; blemish; tarnish; sully.

> Spotted with the stain of unlawful or indirect procurement. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 79.

3. To mark or cover with spots; mark in spots; dot.

> A handkerchief
> Spotted with strawberries.
> Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 435.
>
> The surface of the water was spotted with rings where the trout were rising. Froude, Sketches, p. 75.

Specifically — 4†. To put a patch or patches on (the face) by way of ornament.

> Faces spotted after the Whiggish manner.
> Addison, Spectator, No. 81.

5. To mark as with a spot; especially, to note as of suspicious or doubtful character. Tuft's Glossary of Thieves' Jargon (1798). [Thieves' slang.]

> At length he became spotted. The police got to know him, and he was apprehended, tried, and convicted.
> Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 484.

6. To note or recognize by some peculiarity; catch with the eye; detect; come upon; find out. [Slang.]

> The Widow Leech . . . rang three times with long intervals, — but all in vain: the inside Widow having spotted the outside one through the blinds.
> O. W. Holmes, Elsie Venner, xxi.

7. In horse-racing, to indicate, give a hint as to, or name: as, to spot the winner of a future race. — 8. To place upon a spot; specifically, in billiards, to place (a ball) on one of the spots or marks on the table. — To spot timber, to cut or chip it, in preparation for hewing.

II. intrans. 1. To make a spot; cause a stain, discoloration, or shadow. — 2. To be subject to spots; be easily spotted: as, a fabric that spots when exposed to damp.

spot-ball (spot'bâl), n. In billiards: (a) The ball which belongs on the spot. (b) That one of the two white balls which is distinguished by a black spot; the "black" ball.

spot-lens (spot'lenz), n. In microscopy, a plano-convex lens used in the place of an ordinary condenser. It has a central stop on the plane side toward the object, and since the rays which pass through the annular portion converge too strongly to enter the objective, the transparent or translucent object under examination appears to be self-luminous surrounded by a dark background.

spotless (spot'les), a. [< ME. spotles, < spot + -less.] 1. Free from spots, foul matter, or discoloration.

> Of spotlez perlez tha[y] beren the creste.
> Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), i. 855.
>
> This palliament of white and spotless hue.
> Shak., Tit. And., i. 1. 182.

2. Free from blemish, fault, or reproach; immaculate; pure.

> My true service . . .
> May so approve my spotless loyalty.
> Chapman, Byron's Tragedy, iv. 1.

3. Guiltless; innocent: followed by of. [Rare.]

> You fight for her, as spotless of these mischiefs
> As Heaven is of our sins, or truth of errors.
> Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, ii. 5.

=Syn. Unspotted, blameless, unblemished, irreproachable, untainted, untarnished.

spotlessly (spot'les-li), adv. In a spotless manner; without spot, stain, or blemish.

spotlessness (spot'les-nes), n. The state or quality of being spotless; freedom from spot, stain, or blemish. Donne, Devotions.

spotneck (spot'nek), n. The Hudsonian curlew, Numenius hudsonicus. [Local, New Eng.]

spotrump (spot'rump), n. The Hudsonian godwit, Limosa hæmastica. Also whiterump. G. Trumbull. [Massachusetts.]

spot-stitch (spot'stich), n. In crochet-work, a stitch by means of which raised rounded figures are produced at equal intervals, forming a kind of pattern.

spotted (spot'ed), p. a. [< ME. spotted; < spot + -ed[2].] 1. Marked with a spot or spots; dotted or sprinkled with spots: as, the spotted leopard. — 2. Distributed in separate places or spots: said of a mineral vein when the ore which it carries is very irregularly distributed through the workings. — Black and spotted heathcock†, the Canada grouse. — Dusky and spotted duck. See duck[2]. — Spotted adder. See Oligodontidæ. — Spotted alder, the wych-hazel. — Spotted axis. See axis[2], 1. — Spotted cat, any one of the larger felines which is spotted (not striped as the tiger, nor plain as the lion). See cuts under chetah, jaguar, leopard, ocelot, ounce, panther, and serval. — Spotted comfrey. See Pulmonaria[1]. — Spotted cowbane, eyebright, fever. See the nouns. — Spotted deer. Same as axis[2], 1. — Spotted grouse, the Canada grouse, or spruce-partridge. See cut under Canace. — Spotted gum. See gum[2], 3. — Spotted hemlock. Same as hemlock, 1. — Spotted Iceland falcon. See Iceland falcon, under falcon. — Spotted kidney, the condition of the kidney in chronic parenchymatous nephritis. — Spotted knotweed, mackerel, medic. See the nouns. — Spotted lace, an openwork material, generally made of cotton, somewhat resembling a lace réseau with small spots at equal intervals. — Spotted metal. See organ-metal, under metal. — Spotted net. Same as spotted lace. — Spotted rail, skitty, water-hen. See rail[4]. — Spotted sandpiper. See sandpiper. — Spotted schists. See spilosite. —

Spotted Yellow Warbler (Dendræca maculosa).

Spotted seal, a leopard-seal.—Spotted shrike, spurge, tortoise, wintergreen, etc. See the nouns.—Spotted tringa. Same as spotted sandpiper.—Spotted yellow warbler, the magnolia warbler, Dendræca maculosa, the male of which is much spotted. The adult male is rich-yellow below, with white crissum, heavily streaked with black; the rump is bright-yellow, the back nearly black, the crown clear ash; there is a white circumocular and postocular stripe, and the wing- and tail-feathers are marked with conspicuous white spots. This bird is 5 inches long and 7½ in extent of wings; it inhabits eastern North America, abounds in woodland, breeds from New England northward, builds a small neat nest in low conifers, and lays 4 or 5 white eggs spotted with reddish-brown. Also called black-and-yellow warbler. See cut on preceding page.

spotted-bass (spot'ed-bȧs), n. Same as drum[1], 11 (c).

spottedness (spot'ed-nes), n. The state or quality of being spotted.

spotted-tree (spot'ed-trē), n. A small Australian tree, Flindersia Strzeleckiana (F. maculosa), remarkably spotted from the falling off of the outer bark in patches.

spotter (spot'ėr), n. [< spot + -er[1].] One who or that which spots; specifically, one who is employed to shadow suspicious or suspected persons; a detective. [Slang.]

A conductor . . . had a private detective arrested for following him about, and the spotter was fined ten dollars by a magistrate. The American, VI. 333.

spottiness (spot'i-nes), n. The state or character of being spotty.

spotting (spot'ing), n. In bot., same as necrosis, 2.

spotty (spot'i), a. [< ME. spotty, spotti; < spot + -y[1].] 1. Full of spots; marked with spots; spotted.

Thou ne sselt nazt maky none sacrefice to God of oxe, ne of ssep, thet by [be] spotty.
Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 192.

To descry new lands,
Rivers, or mountains in her spotty globe.
Milton, P. L., i. 291.

2. Occurring in spots or irregularly: as, hops are said to run spotty when the crops are unequal. Halliwell.—3. Patchy; lacking harmony of parts; without unity.

spounge†, n. A Middle English form of sponge.

spousage† (spou'zāj), n. [< spouse + -age.] Espousal; marriage.

The manne shall gene vnto the womanne a ring, and other tokens of spousage.
Marriage Service, Prayer-Book of Edward VI., 1549.

spousal (spou'zal), a. and n. [In E. first as a noun, < ME. spousail, spousaile, spousaille, sposail, espousaile, < OF. espousailles, < L. sponsalia, betrothal, neut. pl. of sponsalis, pertaining to betrothal, < sponsus, a betrothal: see spouse, espousal.] I. a. Pertaining to marriage or espousal; nuptial; bridal; connubial.

Now the Rabbi, receiving a Ring of pure gold, . . . puts it on the brides finger, and with a loud voice pronounceth the spousall letters. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 214.

The well-wrought, lovely spousal ring.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 203.

II. n. Marriage; nuptials; espousal: often used in the plural.

Boweth your nekke under that blisful yok
Of soveraynetee, nought of servyse,
Which that men clepeth spousail or wedlok.
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 59.

By our spousals and marriage begun, . . .
Rue on this realm, whose ruin is at hand.
Surrey, Æneid, iv. 407.

spouse (spouz), n. [< ME. spouse, spowse, spuse, spus = Icel. spūsa, pūsa, pūsi, < OF. espos, spous, F. époux, m., OF. espouse, espuse, F. épouse, f., = Sp. Pg. esposo, m., esposa, f., = It. sposo, m., sposa, f., < L. sponsus, m., sponsa, f., one betrothed, a bridegroom, a bride (cf. sponsus, a betrothal), prop. masc. and fem. pp. of spondere, promise: see sponsor.] A married person, husband or wife; either one of a married pair.

The soule is widewe thet haueth vorloren hire spus, thet is . . . Crist. Ancren Riwle, p. 10.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring,
For her white virgins hymeneals sing.
Pope, Eloisa to Abelard, l. 219.

spouse† (spouz), v. t. [< ME. spousen, spowsen, spusen, < OF. espouser, F. épouser = Pr. espozar = Pg. esposar = It. sposare, < LL. sponsare, betroth, espouse: see spouse, n., and cf. espouse, v.] 1. To take for a husband or a wife; wed; espouse.

Ye ryde as coy and stille as doth a mayde
Were newe spoused, sitting at the bord.
Chaucer, Prol. to Clerk's Tale, l. 3.

They led the vine
To wed her elm; she, spoused, about him twines
Her marriageable arms. Milton, P. L., v. 216.

2. To give in marriage.

Kyng William of Scotland did his douhter spouse
To the erle of Boloyn. Rob. of Gloucester, p. 210.

spouse-breach† (spouz'brēch), n. [< ME. spousbreche, spousebriche, spusbruche; < spouse + breach.] Adultery.

But oonis he saued a weddid wijf
In spousebriche that hadde doon mys.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 47.

spousehede†, n. See spouschood.

spousehood† (spouz'hůd), n. [< ME. spoushod, also spousehede; < spouse + -hood.] The state of wedlock; matrimony.

The eldore of the tuo in spoushod he nome.
Rob. of Gloucester, p. 307.

spouseless (spouz'les), a. [< spouse + -less.] Without a spouse; unmarried or widowed.

The spouseless Adriatic mourns her lord.
Byron, Childe Harold, iv. 11.

spousess† (spou'zes), n. [< ME. spowsesse; < spouse + -ess.] A bride or wife; a married woman.

At whiche marriage was no persones present but the spowse, the spowsesse, the dnches of Bedforde her moder, ye preest, two gentylwomen, and a yong man to helpe the preest synge. Fabyan, Chron., an. 1664.

spousing† (spou'zing), n. [< ME. spowsynge, spusing; verbal n. of spouse, v.] The act of marrying; wedding; espousal; marriage.

Loke to thi dougtren that noon of hem be lorn; . . .
And ȝeue hem to spowsynge as soone as thei been ablee.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 46.

spout (spout), v. [< ME. spouten, spowten = MD. spuyten, D. spuiten, spout, = Sw. sputa, a dial. var. of spruta, squirt, spout, sprout, etc.: see sprout. A similar loss of r occurs in speak. Cf. sputter.] I. intrans. 1. To issue with force, as a liquid through a narrow orifice, or from a spout; spurt: as, blood spouts from an artery.

Like a raving torrent, struggling amongst the broken rocks and lesse free passages, at length he spouts down from a wonderfull height into the valley below.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 73.

2. To discharge a fluid in a jet or continuous stream; send out liquid as from a spout or nozle; specifically, to blow, as a whale.

With youre mouthe ye vse nowther to sqnyrt nor spout.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 135.

When the larger Cetacea come up to breathe, the expired vapor suddenly condenses into a cloud; and, if expiration commences before the spiracle is actually at the surface, a certain quantity of spray may be driven up along with the violent current of the expelled air. This gives rise to the appearance termed the spouting of Whales, which does not arise, as it is commonly said to do, from the straining off of the sea-water swallowed with the food, and its expulsion by the nostrils. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 348.

3. To speak volubly and oratorically; talk or recite in a declamatory manner, especially in public; speechify. [Colloq.]

For anything of the acting, spouting, reciting kind I think he has always a decided taste.
Jane Austen, Mansfield Park, xiii.

II. trans. 1. To pour out in a jet and with some force; throw out as through a spout or pipe: as, an elephant spouts water from his trunk.

A conduite cold into it bringe aboute,
Make pipes water warme inwarde to spoute.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 40.

Your statue spouting blood in many pipes.
Shak., J. C., ii. 2. 85.

2. To cause to spurt or gush out.

From the dry stones he can water spout.
Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 6.

3. To utter volubly or grandiloquently.

Pray, spout some French, son.
Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, iv. 4.

4. To pawn; pledge. See spout, n., 2. [Slang.]

The dons are going to spout the college plate.
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. 1.

5. To furnish or provide with a spout, in any sense: as, to spout a roof; to spout a tea-kettle.

spout (spout), n. [< ME. spoute, spowte = MD. spuyte, D. spuit = Sw. sprута, a spout: see spout, v., and cf. sprout, n.] 1. A pipe, tube, or trough through which a liquid is poured, and which serves to guide its flow. Similar tubes, etc., are used for finely divided solids, as grain. The spout of a small vessel, as a pitcher, may be a mere fold or doubling of the rim, or may be a piece put on the outside, a notch having been cut in the rim to allow the liquid to pass, or may be a closed tube, as in a tea-pot or aftaba. See cut under mill.

She dreamt to-night she saw my statua,
Which, like a fountain with an hundred spouts, Did run pure blood. Shak., J. C., ii. 2. 77.

The walls surmounting their roofes, wrought thorow with potsheards to catch and strike down the refreshing winds; having spouts of the same.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 116.

2. A lift or shoot in a pawnbroker's shop; hence, vulgarly, the shop itself.

Pawnbrokers, . . . before spouts were adopted, used a hook to lift the articles offered in pawn.
N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 56.

3. A continuous stream of fluid matter issuing, actually or seemingly, from a pipe or nozle; a jet or column, as of water.

Before this grotto is a long poole into which ran divers spouts of water from leadcn escollop basins.
Evelyn, Diary, Feb. 27, 1644.

Specifically—(a) A waterspout.

They say furthermore that in certeyne places of the sea they sawe certeyne stremes of water, which they caule spoutes, fauiynge owt of the ayer into the sea.
R. Eden, First Books on America (ed. Arber), p. 336.

(b) The column of spray or vapor emitted from the spout-hole of a whale during the act of expiration, resembling the escape of steam from a valve.

4. The spout-hole of a whale.—5. A short underground passage connecting a main road with an air-head: a term used in the thick coal-workings of South Staffordshire, England.—Up the spout, in pawn. See def. 2. [Slang.]

His pockets, no doubt,
Being turn'd inside out,
That his moucheir and gloves may be put up the spout.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 16.

spouter (spou'tėr), n. [< spout, v., + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which spouts. (a) Something that sends forth a jet or stream of fluid matter.

The flowing-wells of the Baku district, in the energy with which they throw out the oil and the quantity so projected, far exceed even our largest American spouters.
Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXIII. 77.

(b) One who speaks grandiloquently or oratorically; a mere declaimer; a speechifier. [Colloq.]

The quoters imitate parrots or professed spouters, in committing words only to memory, purposely for the sake of ostentation. V. Knox, Winter Evenings, xxxii.

2. An experienced whaleman. [Nautical slang.]

The spouter, as the sailors call a whaleman, had sent up his main top gallant mast and set the sail, and made signal for us to heave to.
R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 36.

spout-fish (spout'fish), n. A bivalve mollusk which squirts water through its siphons, as the common clam, razor-shell, and many others.

spout-hole (spout'hōl), n. 1. An orifice for the discharge of a liquid.—2. The spiracle or blow-hole of a whale or other cetacean. The number of spout-holes differs in different species, the sperm-whales and porpoises having one, and the right whales, bowheads, finbacks, sulphur-bottoms, etc., two. The nostrils of the walrus are also sometimes called spout-holes.

spoutless (spout'les), a. [< spout + -less.] Having no spout, as a pitcher. Cowper, Task, iv. 776.

spout-shell (spout'shel), n. A shell of the family Aporrhaidæ, as Aporrhais pes-pelecani, the pelican's-foot. See also cut under Aporrhais.

Spout-shell (Aporrhais pes-pelecani).

spowrge†, n. A Middle English form of spurge[1], spurge[2].

spp. An abbreviation of species (plural).

S. P. Q. R. An abbreviation of the Latin Senatus Populusque Romanus, the senate and the people of Rome.

sprach, v. and n. See spraich.

sprachle, v. i. See sprackle.

sprack (sprak), a. [Also dial. sprag; < ME. sprac, < Icel. sprækr, also sparkr, sprightly, = Norw. spræk = Sw. dial. spräk, spräg, spräker, cheerful, talkative, noisy. Cf. spark[2], spry.] Sprightly; lively; brisk; alert. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar than I thought he was.
Evans. He is a good sprag memory.
Shak., M. W. of W., iv. 1. 84.

If your Royal Highness had seen him dreaming and dozing about the banks of Tully Veolan like an hypochondriac person, . . . you would wonder where he hath sae suddenly acquired all this fine sprack festivity and jocularity. Scott, Waverley, xliii.

sprackle (sprak'l), r. i.; pret. and pp. sprackled, ppr. sprackling. [Also sprachle, spraickle, sprauchle; prob. < Icel. sprauklа, sprökla, mod. sprikla, sprawl; freq. of a verb represented by Sw. sparka = Dan. sparke, kick. Cf. sprangle and sprawl[1].] To clamber; get on with difficulty. [Scotch.]

Sae far I sprachled up the brae,
I dinner'd wi' a Lord.
Burns, On Meeting with Lord Daer.

sprackly†, a. [ME. sprakliche, < Icel. sprækligr, sprightly, < sprækr, sprightly: see sprack and -ly[1].] Same as sprack. Piers Plowman (C), xxi. 10.

spraddet, spradt. Obsolete forms of the preterit and past participle of spread.

sprag[1] (sprag), n. [< Dan. dial. sprag = Sw. dial. sprägg, spragge, a spray, sprig: see spray[1].] 1. A billet of wood. [Prov. Eng.] Specifically —2. In coal-mining: (a) A short billet of wood used instead of a brake to lock the wheels of a car. (b) A short wooden prop used to support the coal during the operation of holing or undercutting; a punch-prop. [Eng.]

sprag[1] (sprag), v. t.; pret. and pp. spragged, ppr. spragging. [< sprag[1], n.] To prop by a sprag; also, to stop, as a carriage on a steep grade, by putting a sprag in the spokes of the wheel. [Prov. Eng.]

sprag[2] (sprag), n. [Prob. a particular use of sprag[1] in sense of 'sprout,' i. e. 'young one'; cf. sprat[2], sprot[2], a small fish, similarly derived from sprot[1], a sprout.] 1. A young salmon of the first year; a smolt.—2. A half-grown cod. [Prov. Eng. in both senses.]

sprag[3] (sprag), a. A dialectal form of sprack.

sprag-road (sprag′rōd), n. In coal-mining, a mine-road having such a steep grade that sprags are needed to control the descent of the car. Penn. Surv. Gloss.

spraich (sprāċh), r. i. [Also sprach, spreich; prob. < Sw. spraka = Dan. sprage = Icel. spraka, mako a noise, crackle, burst: see spark[1].] To cry; shriek. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

spraich (sprāċh), n. [Also spraeh, spreich; < spraich, v.] 1. A cry; a shriek.

Anone thay herd sere vocis lamentabill,
Grete walyng, quhimpering, and sprachis miserabill.
Gavin Douglas, tr. of Virgil, p. 178.

2. A pack; a multitude: as, a spraich of bairns. Jamieson. [Scotch in both uses.]

spraickle (sprā′kl), r. i. Same as sprackle. [Scotch.]

spraid (sprād), a. [Also sprayed; a reduced form of spreathed.] Chapped with cold. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

It was much worse than Jamaica ginger grated into a poor sprayed finger. R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xxxl.

sprain (sprān), v. t. [< OF. espreindre, press, wring, < L. exprimere, press out, < ex, out, + premere, press: see press[1], and cf. express.] 1†. To press; push.

Hee sprainde in a sprite [sprit, pole] & spradde it aboute.
Alisaunder of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 1097.

2. To overstrain, as the muscles or ligaments of a joint so as to injure them, but without luxation or dislocation.

The sudden turn may stretch the swelling vein,
Thy cracking joint unhinge, or ankle sprain.
Gay, Trivia, i. 38.

sprain (sprān), n. [< sprain, v.] 1. A violent straining or wrenching of the soft parts surrounding a joint, without dislocation. The ordinary consequence of a sprain is to produce some degree of swelling and inflammation in the injured part.

2. The injury caused by straining; a sprained joint.

spraint (sprānt), n. [< ME. spraynte*, prob. < OF. espreinte, a pressing out, straining, F. épreinte, < espreindre, press out: see sprain.] The dung of the otter. Kingsley, Two Years Ago, xviii.

sprainting (sprān′ting), n. [< ME. sprayntyng: < spraint + -ing[1].] Same as spraint.

spraith (sprāth), n. Same as spreagh.

sprale (sprāl), r. A dialectal variant of sprawl[1].

sprallt, r. An obsolete spelling of sprawl[1].

sprang (sprang). A preterit of spring.

sprangle (sprang′gl), v. i.; pret. and pp. sprangled, ppr. sprangling. [Appar. a nasalized var. of sprackle.] To sprawl; straggle. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

Over its fence sprangles a squash vine in ungainly joy.
Cornhill Mag., May, 1882. (Encyc. Dict.)

When on the back-stretch his legs seemed to sprangle out on all sides at once.
Philadelphia Times, Aug. 15, 1883.

sprangle (sprang′gl), n. [< sprangle, v.] The act or attitude of sprangling. J. Spalding, Divine Theory (1808). [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

sprat[1] (sprat), n. [Se. also spreat, sprelt, sprit, sprot, the joint-leafed rush; another form and use of sprot[1], a stump, chip, broken branch: see sprot[1], and cf. sprat[2], n.] 1. A name of various species of rushes, as Juncus articulatus, etc. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]—2. pl. Small wood. Kennett; Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

sprat[2] (sprat), n. [A dial. var., now the reg. form, of sprot[2], q. v.] 1. A small clupeoid fish of European waters, Clupea (Harengula) sprattus. At one time the sprat was thought to be the young of the herring, pilchard, or shad; but it can be easily distinguished from the young of any of these fishes by the sharply notched edge of the abdomen. Young sprats, an inch or two long, are the fishes of which whitebait mainly or largely consists at some seasons. The sprat is known in Scotland by the name of garvie or garvie-herring.

Sprat (Clupea sprattus).

'Stoet, ye all talk
Like a company of sprat-fed mechanics.
Beau. and Fl. (?), Faithful Friends, i. 2.

2. A name of other fishes. (a) A young herring. (b) The sand-eel or -lance. See cut under Ammodytidæ. [Prov. Eng.] (c) A kind of anchovy, Stolephorus compressus, about six inches long, of a very pale or transiucent olivaceous color, with a silvery lateral band, found on the coasts of California and Mexico. It closely resembles S. delicatissimus of the same coasts, but is larger and has a longer anal fin. (d) Same as alfiana.—Fresh-water sprat, the bleak. I. Walton. [Local, Eng.]—London sprat, the true sprat: so distinguished from the sand-eel or -lance.

sprat[2] (sprat), v. i.; pret. and pp. spratted, ppr. spratting. [< sprat[2], n.] To fish for sprats.

They will be afloat here and there in the wild weather, spratting. Daily Telegraph, Aug. 27, 1886. (Encyc. Dict.) sprat[3] (sprat), n. [Perhaps a particular use of sprat[2].] A small coin. [Slang.]

Several Lascara were charged with passing sprats, the slang term applied to spurious fourpenny pieces, sixpences, and shillings. Morning Chronicle, Dec. 2, 1857.

sprat-barley (sprat′bär″li), n. See barley[1].

sprat-borer (sprat′bōr″ėr), n. A loon, as the red-throated diver, Colymbus (or Urinator) septentrionalis: from its fondness for sprats.

sprat-day (sprat′dā), n. The ninth day of November: so called in London as being the first day of the sprat-selling season. Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 69.

sprat-loon (sprat′lön), n. Same as sprat-borer.

sprat-mew (sprat′mū), n. A sea-gull which catches sprats; the kittiwake.

spratter (sprat′ėr), n. [< sprat[2], v., + -er[1].] 1. One who fishes for sprats.—2. The guillemot. [Prov. Eng.]

sprattle (sprat′l), v. i.; pret. and pp. sprattled, ppr. sprattling. [Also sprottle; < Sw. sprattla, sprawl, = Dan. sprælle, sprælde, sprawl, flounder, toss the legs; cf. D. spartelen, flutter, leap, wrestle, sparkle. Cf. sprackle, sprawl[1].] To scramble. Burns, To a Louse. [Scotch.]

sprattle (sprat′l), n. [< sprattle, v.] A scramble; a struggle. Scott, Redgauntlet, ch. xii. [Scotch.]

sprauchle (sprâ′ċhl), v. i. Same as sprackle.

sprault, r. An obsolete form of sprawl[1].

sprawl[1] (sprâl), v. [Early mod. E. also sprall; < ME. sprawlen, spraulen, sprawcelen, spraullen, sprallen, < AS. sprǽwtlian (a rare and doubtful word, cited by Zupitza ("Studium der neueren Spraehen," July, 1886) from a gloss); perhaps akin to Icel. spraukla, sprökla, sprawl; cf. Sw. dial. spralla, spraila = Dan. sprælle, sprælde, sprawl, flounder: see sprackle and sprattle.] I. intrans. 1. To toss the limbs about; work the arms and legs convulsively; in general, to struggle convulsively.

He drow it [a fish] in to the drie place, and it bigan to sprawle bifor hise feet. Wyclif, Tobit vi. 4.

He sprailleth lyke a yonge padocke. I sprawle with my legges, struggell, je me debats. Palsgrave, p. 729.

Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy agony. [Stabs him. Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 5. 39.

Grim in convulsive agonies he sprawls.
Pope, Odyssey, xxii. 23.

2. To work one's way awkwardly along with the aid of all the limbs; crawl or scramble.

I haue seene it, saith Cambrensis, experimented, that a toad, being incompassed with a thong, . . . reculed backe, as though it had beene rapt in the head; wherevpon he began to sprall to the other side.
Stanihurst, Descrip. of Ireland, ii. (Holinshed's Chron.).

3. To be spread out in an ungraceful posture; be stretched out carelessly and awkwardly.

On painted ceilings you devoutly stare,
Where sprawl the saints of Verrio or Laguerre,
Or gilded clouds in fair expansion lie.
Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 146.

4. To have an irregular, spreading form or outline; straggle: said of handwriting, vines, etc.

The arches which spring from the huge pillars, though wide, are not sprawling. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 21.

5. To widen or open irregularly, as a body of cavalry.

II. trans. To spread out ungracefully.

The leafless butternut, whereon the whippoorwill used to sing, and the yellow warbler make its nest, sprawls its naked arms, and moans pitifully in the blast.
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 17.

sprawl[1] (sprâl), n. [< sprawl[1], v.] 1. The act of sprawling.—2. A sprawling posture; an awkward recumbent attitude: as, to be stretched out in a careless sprawl.—3. Motion; activity. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

sprawl[2] (sprâl), n. [Prob. dim. of spray or dial. E. spray[1]: see sprag[1], spray[1].] A small twig or branch of a tree; a spray. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

sprawler (sprâ′lėr), n. [< sprawl[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which sprawls. Specifically, in entom.: (a) One of certain moths or their larvæ. (1) The European noctuid moth Asteroscopus sphinx: so called from the sprawling of the larva. The rannoch sprawler is A. nubeculosus. (2) A noctuid moth, Demas coryli. (b) The dobson or hellgrammite. [Local, U. S.]

Sprawler (b) (Larva of Corydalus cornutus), two thirds natural size.

spray[1] (sprā), n. [< ME. spray, spraye, < Sw. dial. spragg, spraggc = Dan. sprag, a sprig, a spray: see sprag[1], a doublet of spray[1], and cf. sprig. Cf. Lith. sproga, a spray of a tree, also a rift, sprogti, split, sprout, bud; Gr. ασπάραγος, asparagus, perhaps orig. 'sprout.'] 1. A branch of a tree with its branchlets, especially when slender and graceful; also, twigs, or such branches collectively; a stem of flowers or leaves; a sprig.

He knelyde down appon his knee
Vndir nethe that grenwode spraye.
Thomas of Erssseldoune (Child's Ballads, I. 100).

O nightingale, that on yon bloomy spray
Warblest at eve, when all the woods are still.
Milton, Sonnets, i.

2†. An orchard; a grove.

Abute the orchard is a wal;
The ethelikeste ston is cristal;
Ilo so wonede a moneth in that spray
Nolde him neure longen away.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 59.

3. A binding-stick for thatching. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—4. Any ornament, pattern, or design in the form of a branch or sprig: as, a spray of diamonds; an embroidered spray.

spray[2] (sprā), n. [Not found in ME. or AS.; the alleged sprēgan*, in AS. geond-sprēgan*, pour out, is appar. an error for sprengan, cause to spring: see spreng, spring. The Icel. spræna, jet, spurt out, Norw. spræn, a jet of water, are not related. Cf. D. spreijen (Sewel), for spreiden, = LG. spreen, spreien, for spreden, = E. spread: see spread.] Water flying in small drops or particles, as by the force of wind, or the dashing of waves, or from a waterfall; water or other liquid broken up into small particles and driven (as by an atomizer) along by a current of air or other gas.

Winds raise some of the salt with the spray. Arbuthnot.

Carbolic spray, carbolic acid and water in various proportions, as used with an atomizer in the treatment of the mucous membrane of the throat, in surgical operations, and the like.

spray[2] (sprā), v. [Cf. spray[2], n.] I. trans. 1. To throw in the form of spray; let fall as spray; scatter in minute drops or particles.

The niched snow-bed sprays down Its powdery fall. M. Arnold, Switzerland, ii.

2. To sprinkle with fine drops; dampen by means of spray, as of perfume, or of some adhesive liquid used to preserve drawings and the like.

II. intrans. To discharge or scatter a liquid in the form of spray: as, the instrument will either spout or spray.

spray-board (sprā′bōrd), n. A strip on the gunwale of a boat to keep out spray.

spray-drain (sprā′drān), n. In agri., a drain formed by burying in the earth brush, or the spray of trees, which serves to keep open a channel. Drains of this sort are much used in grass-lands.

sprayed, a. See spraid.

sprayer (sprā′ėr), n. One who or that which discharges spray; specifically, one of a large class of machines for applying liquid insecticides or fungicides to plants, consisting of a pneumatic or hydraulic force-pump and a suitable reservoir and discharge-nozle or spray-tip.

sprayey[1] (sprā′i), a. [< spray[1] + -ey.] Forming or resembling sprays, as of a tree or plant; branching.

Heaths of many a gorgeous hue . . . and ferns that would have overtopped a tall horseman mingled their sprayey leaves with the wild myrtle and the arbutus.
Lever, Davenport Dunn, lviii.

sprayey[2] (sprā′i), a. [< spray[2] + -ey.] Consisting of liquid spray.

This view, sublime as it is, only whets your desire to stand below, and see the river, with its sprayey crest shining against the sky, make but one leap from heaven to hell.
B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 357.

spraying-machine (sprā′ing-ma-shēn″), n. Same as sprayer.

spray-instrument (sprā′in″strō-ment), n. In med., an instrument for producing and diffusing spray, or for the application of liquids in the form of spray; an atomizer.

spray-nozle (sprā′noz″l), n. An attachment for the nozle of a hose which serves to project liquid insecticides and fungicides in the form of a fine spray.

spreach, spreacherie, spreachery. See spreagh, spreaghery.

spread (spred), v.; pret. and pp. spread, ppr. spreading. [< ME. spreden (pret. spredde, spradde, spredd, spred, pp. spredd, spred, sprad, y-sprad), < AS. sprǣdan = D. spreiden, spreijen, = MLG. spreden, spreiden, LG. spreden, spreen, spreien = OHG. spreitan, MHG. G. spreiten = Norw. spreida, dial. spreie = Dan. sprede, extend, spread; causal of the more orig. verb MHG. spriten, sprīden = Sw. sprida, spread; cf. Icel. sprita, sprawl. Not connected, as is often said, with broad (AS. brǣdan, make bread, etc.).] I. trans. 1. To scatter; disperse; rout.

Was neuer in alle his lyue ther fadere ore so glad Als whan he sauh his sons tuo the palens force to sprad.
Rob. of Brunne, p. 18.

I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the Lord. Zech. ii. 6.

2. To distribute over a surface as by strewing, sprinkling, smearing, plastering, or overlaying.

Eche man to pleye with a plow, pykoys, or spade, Spynne, or sprede donge, or spille hym-self with sleuthe.
Piers Plowman (B), iii. 308.

He carved upon them carvings of cherubims and palm trees, . . . and spread gold upon the cherubims, and upon the palm trees. 1 Ki. vi. 32.

3. To flatten out; stretch or draw out into a sheet or layer.

Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarshish, and gold from Uphaz. Jer. x. 9.

In other places similar igneous rocks are spread out in sheets which are intercalated between the sedimentary strata. E. W. Streeter, Precious Stones, p. 65.

4. To extend or stretch out to the full size; unfold; display by unfolding, stretching, expanding, or the like.

The saisnes com faste ridinge with baner sprad, and were moo than fifty thousande. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 248.

A parcel of a field where he had spread his tent.
Gen. xxxiii. 19.

Some species, as the meadow-lark, have a habit of spreading the tail at almost every chirp. Amer. Nat., XXII. 202.

5. To lay or set out; outspread; display, as something to be viewed in its full extent.

With orchard, and with gardeyne, or with mede,
Se that thyne hous with hem be umviroune,
The side in longe upon the south thou sprede.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 13.

To spread the earth before him, and commend . . .
Its various parts to his attentive note.
Couper, Tirocinium, l. 640.

6. To reach out; extend.

Bot 3it he sprange and sprente, and spraddene his armes,
And one the spere lenghe spekes, he spekes thire wordes.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 331.

One while he spred his armes him fro,
One while he spred them nye.
Sir Cauline (Child's Ballads, III. 174).

Rose, as in dance, the stately trees, and spread
Their branches hung with copious fruit.
Milton, P. L., vii. 324.

7. To send out in all directions; scatter or shed abroad; disseminate; diffuse; propagate.

Great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 4. 50.

The hungry sheep . . .
Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 127.

And all the planets, in their turn,
Confirm the tidings as they roll,
And spread the truth from pole to pole.
Addison, Ode, Spectator, No. 465.

On this blest age
Oh spread thy influence, but restrain thy rage.
Pope, Dunciad, iii. 122.

8. To overspread; overlay the surface of.

The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold. Isa. xl. 19.

Rich tapestry spread the streets.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., iii. 104.

Hence—9. To cover or equip in the proper manner; set; lay: as, to spread a table.

The boordes were spred in righte litle space,
The ladies sate eche as hem semed best.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 55.

10. To set forth; recount at full length; hence, in recent use, to enter or record.

If Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, . . . spread before him
How highly it concerns his glory now
To frustrate and dissolve these magick spells.
Milton, S. A., l. 1147.

The resolutions, which the [Supreme] Court ordered spread on the minutes, expressed the profound loss which the members of the bar felt.
New York Tribune, Dec. 16, 1890.

11. To push apart: as, the weight of the train spread the rails.—To spread one's self, to take extraordinary and generally conspicuous pains; exert one's self to the utmost that something may appear well. [Slang, U. S.]

We dispatched Cullen to prepare a dinner. He had promised, to use his own expression, to spread himself in the preparation of this meal.
Hammond, Wild Northern Scenes, p. 266. (Bartlett.)

=Syn. 7. To scatter, circulate, publish.

II. intrans. 1. To become scattered or distributed.

As soone as the ssisnes were logged thei spredde a-brode in the contrey to forry, and euer brente and distroied as thei wente. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 272.

2†. To stretch one's self out, especially in a horizontal position.

Ther he mihte wel sprædе on his feire hude [hide].
Layamon, l. 14203.

3. To be outspread; hence, to have great breadth; be broad.

The cedar . . .
Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 2. 14.

Plants which, if they spread much, are seldom tall.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 354.

4. To become extended by growth or expansion; increase in extent; expand; grow.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself
Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 2. 137.

Spread upward till thy boughs discern
The front of Sumner-place.
Tennyson, Talking Oak.

The streams run yellow,
Burst the bridges, and spread into bays.
R. W. Gilder, Early Autumn.

5. To be extended by communication or propagation; become diffused; be shed abroad.

This speche sprang in that space & spradde alle aboute.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), iii. 365.

Lest his infection, being of catching nature, Spread further. Shak., Cor., iii. 1. 311.

His renown had spread even to the coffee-houses of London and the cloisters of Oxford.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

6. To be pushed apart, as the rails of a car-track.—7. To set a table; lay the cloth or dishes for a meal.

Dromio, go bid the servants spread for dinner.
Shak., C. of E., ii. 2. 189.

Spreading globe-flower, a plant, Trollius laxus, growing in swamps in the northeastern United States: it little resembles the true globe-flower in appearance, its sepals being spreading, and of a greenish-yellow or nearly white color.

spread (spred), n. [< spread, v.] 1. The act of spreading or extending; propagation; diffusion: as, the spread of knowledge.

No flower hath that kind of spread that the woodbine hath. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 670.

2. The state, condition, quality, or capability of being outspread; expansion: as, the tail of the peacock has an imposing spread.—3. The amount of extension or expansion, especially in surface; expanse; breadth; compass.

These naked shoots . . .
Shall put their graceful foliage on again,
And more aspiring, and with ampler spread,
Shall boast new charms, and more than they have lost.
Couper, Task, vi. 145.

The capitals of the triforium of Laon have about the same spread as those of the choir of Paris.
C. H. Moore, Gothic Architecture, p. 203.

Hence—4. See the quotation.

The spread of the wheels or axles . . . is the distance between the centres of two axles.
Forney, Locomotive, p. 285.

5. A stretch; an expanse.

An elm with a spread of branches a hundred feet across.
O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, p. 248.

6. Capacity for spreading or stretching.

Skins dressed by this process, . . . it is claimed, are made soft, pliable, and with elasticity or spread.
C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 558.

7. That which is spread or set out, as on a table; a meal; a feast; especially, a meal, more or less elaborate, given to a select party. [Colloq.]

We had such a spread for breakfast as th' Queen herself might ha' sitten down to. Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, ix.

After giving one spread,
With fiddling and masques, at the Saracen's Head.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 51.

8. A cloth used for a covering, as of a table or bed; a coverlet. [U. S.]—9. The privilege of demanding shares of stock at a certain price, or of delivering shares of stock at another price, within a certain time agreed on.—10. A saddle. Tuft's Glossary of Thieves' Jargon (1798). [Cant.]—11. Among lapidaries, a stone which has a large surface in proportion to its thickness.—12. In zoöl., the measure from tip to tip of the spread wings, as of a bat, a bird, or an insect; the expanse or extent.—13. In math., a continuous manifold of points: thus, space is a three-way spread.—Cone of spread. See cone.

spread (spred), p. a. [< ME. spred, sprad; pp. of spread, v.] 1. Extended in area; having a broad surface; broad.

Tho wnrthen waxen so wide and spred,
Pride and giselnge [desire] of louerd-hed.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 831.

Of stature spread and straight, his armes and hands delectable to behold.
Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 302.

2. Shallower than the standard; having insufficient depth or thickness for the highest luster: said of a gem.

The other Spinel was also an octagon-shaped stone, of perfect color, very spread, and free from flaws.
E. W. Streeter, Precious Stones, p. 158.

Spread eagle. (a) See eagle. (b) Naut., a sailor or other person lashed in the rigging or elsewhere with arms and legs outspread: a form of punishment. (c) In cookery, a fowl split open down the back and broiled. G. Macdonald, Warlock o' Glenwarlock, xiv. (d) In the language of the stock exchange, a straddle. [Colloq.]

Spread Eagle is where a broker buys a certain stock at seller's option, and sells the same at seller's option within a certain time, on the chance that both contracts may run the full time and he gain the difference.
Biddle, On Stock Brokers, p. 74.

Spread harmony. See harmony, 2 (d).—Spread window-glass. Same as broad glass (which see, under broad).

spread-eagle (spred′ē″gl), a. [< spread eagle: see spread and eagle.] Having the form or characteristics of a spread eagle, or of the kind of display so called; hence, ostentatious; bombastic; boastful: as, a spread-eagle oration. See spread eagle, under eagle.

A kind of spread-eagle plot was hatched, with two heads growing out of the same body.
Dryden, Postscript to the History of the League, II. 469.

We Yankees are thought to be fond of the spread-eagle style. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 375.

Spread-eagle orchid. See Oncidium.

spread-eagle (spred′ē″gl), v. t. [< spread eagle.] To stretch out in the attitude of a spread eagle. [Rare.]

Decapitated carcases of cod—as well as haddock and ling, which are included under the name of stockfish—may be seen spread-eagled across transverse sticks to dry.
N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 278.

spread-eagleism (spred′ē″gl-izm), n. [< spread-eagle + -ism.] Vainglorious spirit as shown in opinion, action, or speech; ostentation; bombast, especially in the display of patriotism or national vanity.

When we talk of spread-eagleism, we are generally thinking of the United States.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLI. 330.

spreader (spred′ėr), n. [< spread + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which spreads. (a) One who or that which expands, outspreads, or spreads abroad. See spread, v. i.

If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet perchance he may . . . yield . . . as useful and more sober fruit than the other.
Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 77.

(b) One who or that which extends, diffuses, disseminates, etc. See spread, v. t.

If it be a mistake, I desire I may not be accused for a spreader of false news. Swift.

2. In flax-manuf., a machine for drawing and doubling flax from the heckles, and making it into slivers; a drawing-frame.—3. In cotton-manuf., same as lapper[2], 2.—4. A device fitted to the nozle of a hose for causing the stream to spread into a thin fan of spray; a form of spray-nozle.—5. A bar, commonly of wood, used to hold two swingletrees apart, and thus form a substitute for a doubletree for a plow, stone-boat, cart, etc.. E. H. Knight.— Blower and spreader. See blower[1].

spreading-adder (spred′ing-ad″ėr), n. Same as blowing-snake.

spreading-board (spred′ing-bōrd), n. Same as setting-board.

spreading-frame (spred′ing-frām), n. In spinning, a machine for spreading slivers of flax and leading them to the drawing-rollers. E. H. Knight.

spreading-furnace (spred′ing-fėr″nās), n. In glass-manuf., a flattening-furnace, in which the split cylinders of blown glass are flattened out. The hearth of this furnace is called the spreading-plate.

spreadingly (spred′ing-li), adv. In a spreading or extending manner.

> The best times were spreadingly infected.
> Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

spreading-machine (spred′ing-ma-shēn″), n. In cotton-manuf., a batting and cleaning machine for forming loose cotton into a continuous band ready for the carder. Compare scutcher.

spreading-oven (spred′ing-uv″n), n. In glass-manuf., a spreading- or flattening-furnace.

spreading-plate (spred′ing-plāt), n. In glass-manuf., a flat plate or hearth on which a split cylinder of glass is laid to be opened into a flat sheet. See flattening-furnace, spreading-furnace, cylinder-glass.

spreagh (spreėch), n. [Also spreach, spreich, spreath, spreith, spreth, spraith; ⟨ Ir. Gael. spreidh, cattle, = W. praidd, flock, herd, booty, prey.] Prey, especially in cattle; booty; plunder. Gavin Douglas, tr. of Virgil, p. 64. [Scotch.]

spreaghery, sprechery (spreėch′ėr-i), n. [Also spraygherie, spreagherie, spreachery, spreacherie, sprecherie; ⟨ spreagh + -ery.] 1. Cattle-lifting; plundering.—2. Prey, in cattle or other property; booty; plunder; movables of an inferior sort, especially such as are collected by depredation. [Scotch in both uses.]

spreat, n. Same as sprat[1]. [Scotch.]

spreath, n. See spreagh. [Scotch.]

sprechery, n. See spreaghery. [Scotch.]

spreckled (sprek′ld), a. [⟨ spreckle* (⟨ Icel. sprekla (Haldorsen) = Sw. spräkla, a spot, speck) + -ed[2]. The E. may be in part a var. of speckled.] Speckled. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

> "What like were your fishes, my jollie young man?"
> "Black backs and spreckl'd bellies."
> Lord Donald (Child's Ballads, II. 246).

spred†, spredde†. Obsolete forms of spread, preterit and past participle of spread.

spree[1] (sprē), n. [Perhaps ⟨ Ir. spre, a spark, flash, animation, spirit; cf. sprac, a spark, life, motion, spraic, strength, vigor, sprightliness, = Gael. spraic, vigor, exertion. Cf. sprack and spry.] 1. A lively frolic; a prank.

> John Blower, honest man, as sailors are aye for some spree or another, wad take me ance to see ane Mrs. Siddons. Scott, St. Ronan's Well, xx.

2. A bout or season of drinking to intoxication; a fit of drunkenness.

> Periodic drinkers, with long intervals between sprees.
> Amer. Jour. Psychol., I. 518.

=Syn. 2. Revel, Debauch, etc. See carousal[1].

spree[1] (sprē), v. i. [⟨ spree[1], n.] To go on a spree; carouse: often with an indefinite it: as, to spree it for a week.

> He . . . took to spreein' and liquor, and let down from a foreman to a hand. T. Winthrop, Love and Skates.

spree[2] (sprē), a. [Appar. a var. of spry. Connection with spree[1] is uncertain.] Spruce; gay. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

spreettail (sprēt′tāl), n. Same as sprittail.

spreich[1], v. and n. See spraich.

spreich[2], spreith, n. See spreagh.

spreint†. Preterit and past participle of spreng.

Sprekelia (sprē-kē′li-ạ), n. [NL. (Heister, 1753), named after J. H. von Spreckelsen of Hamburg, from whom Linnæus obtained the plant, and who wrote on the yucca in 1729.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Amaryllideæ and tribe Amarylleæ. It is characterized by a one-flowered scape with a single spathaceous bract, by a perianth without a tube and with an ascending posterior segment, and by versatile anthers, a corona of small scales between the filaments, and a three-celled ovary with numerous ovules. The only species, S. formosissima, is known in cultivation as the jacobæa-lily (which see).

sprengt (spreng), v.; pret. and pp. sprent, spreint. [An obs. verb, now merged, so far as existent, in its primary verb, spring, or represented by the dial. springe[1]; ⟨ ME. sprengen (pret. sprente, spreynte, pp. spreynd, spreind, spreint, yspreynd), ⟨ AS. sprengan, cause to spring, sprinkle (= Icel. sprengja = Sw. spränga, cause to burst, = Dan. sprænge, sprinkle, burst, = OHG. MHG. G. sprengen, cause to burst), causal of springan, etc., spring, burst: see spring; cf. bespreng.] I. trans. 1. To scatter in drops or minute particles; strew about; diffuse.

> Gamelyn sprengeth holy water with an oken spire.
> Tale of Gamelyn (Lansdowne MS.), l. 503.
>
> A fewe fraknes in his face yspreynd.
> Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1311.

2. To sprinkle; overspread with drops, particles, spots, or the like. [The past participle sprent is still in use as an archaism.]

> Sprengeth on [you] mid hali water. Ancren Riwle, p. 16.
>
> Otherwhere the snowy substaunce sprent
> With vermeil. Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 45.
>
> The cheek grown thin, the brown hair sprent with grey.
> M. Arnold, Thyrsis.

II. intrans. 1. To leap; spring.

> To the chambyr dore he sprente,
> And claspid it with barres twoo.
> MS. Harl. 2252, f. 109. (Halliwell.)
>
> The blode sprente owtte and sprede as the horse spryngez.
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2062.

2. To rise; dawn.

Sprengel pump. See mercury air-pump, under mercury.

sprenkelt, v. and n. An obsolete form of sprinkle.

sprent[1]†, v. i. [ME. sprenten = MHG. sprenzen = Icel. spretta (for sprentu*), start, spring, spurt out, = Sw. spritta = Dan. sprætte, start, startle.] To leap; bound; dart.

> Sparkes of fire that obout sal sprent.
> Hampole, Prick of Conscience, l. 6814.

sprent[2]. Preterit and past participle of spreng. [Obsolete or archaic.]

spret†, spretet†, n. Obsolete forms of sprit[1].

sprett (spret), n. Same as sprat[1], 1. [Scotch.]

sprew, sprue (sprö), n. [Sc. also sproo; ⟨ D. spruw, sprouw, the thrush.] A disease: same as thrush[2].

spreynde†, spreynd†. Old forms of the preterit and past participle of spreng.

sprig[1] (sprig), n. [⟨ ME. sprygg, sprigge, perhaps a var. of sprikke*, ⟨ MLG. sprik, LG. sprikk, stick, twig, = AS. sprec* (in Somner, not authenticated) = Icel. sprek, a stick (smá-sprek, small sticks); cf. Sw. dial. spragg, spragge = Dan. dial. sprag, a sprig, spray: see sprag[1], sprag[1].] 1. A sprout; a shoot; a small branch; a spray, as of a tree or plant.

> So it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and shot forth sprigs. Ezek. xvii. 6.
>
> A faded silk, . . .
> With sprigs of summer laid between the folds.
> Tennyson, Geraint.

2. An offshoot from a human stock; a young person; a scion; a slip: often implying slight disparagement or contempt.

> A sprig of the nobility,
> That has a spirit equal to his fortunes.
> Shirley, Hyde Park, i. 1.

3. An ornament or a design in the form of a spray; especially, such a design stamped, woven, or embroidered on a textile fabric.

> Ten Small Diamonds singly set in Silver, but made up together into a Sprig fastened by a Wire, which were lost from her Majesty's Robes.
> Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 182.

4. A kind of spike.—5. See the quotation. [Prov. Eng.]

> Men who work in wall or mud-work have to run barrows full of earth on planks, perhaps upwards. To prevent slips a triangular piece of iron is screwed to their shoe-heels, having three points half an inch long projecting downwards. These are called sprigs. Halliwell.

6. A small brad or nail without a head. [Prov. Eng.]—7. A small wedge-shaped piece, usually of tin-plate, used to hold the glass in a wooden sash until the putty can be applied and has time to harden.—8. In lace-making, one of the separate pieces of lace, usually pillow-made lace, which are fastened upon a net ground or réseau in all kinds of application-lace. They are generally in the form of flowers and leaves (whence the name).—9. The sprigtail or pintail duck, Dafila acuta. G. Trumbull, 1888.—10. Naut., a small eye-bolt ragged at the point.—Chantilly sprig pattern. See Chantilly porcelain (a), under porcelain[1].

sprig[1] (sprig), v. t.; pret. and pp. sprigged, ppr. sprigging. [⟨ sprig[1], n.] 1. To decorate with sprigs, as pottery or textile fabrics.

> A grey clay sprigged with white. Dwight.
>
> Friday, went to the Lower Rooms; wore my sprigged muslin robe with blue trimmings.
> Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, iii.

2. To form into a sprig or sprigs.

> Sprigg'd rosemary the lads and lasses bore.
> Gay, Shepherd's Week, Friday, l. 135.

3. To drive sprigs into.

sprig[2] (sprig), n. [Cf. sprug.] The sparrow, Passer domesticus. [Prov. Eng.]

sprig[3]† (sprig), a. [Cf. sprack.] Spruce; smart.

> For all he wears his beard so sprig.
> Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque. (Davies.)

sprig-bolt (sprig′bōlt), n. Same as rag-bolt.

sprig-crystal (sprig′kris″tal), n. A crystal or cluster of prismatic crystals of quartz, adhering to the rock at one end, and tapering off to a sharp point at the other extremity.

> In perpendicular fissures, crystal is found in form of an hexangular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other lessening gradually, till it terminates in a point: this is called by lapidaries sprig or rock crystal.
> Woodward.

spriggy (sprig′i), a. [⟨ sprig[1] + -y[1].] Full of sprigs or small branches. Bailey, 1729.

spright[1]†, n. and v. An obsolete and erroneous spelling of sprite[1].

spright[2]†, n. See sprite[2].

sprightful† (sprīt′fûl), a. [Prop. spriteful; ⟨ spright, sprite[1], + -ful.] Full of spirit; sprightly; brisk; animated; gay.

> Spoke like a sprightful noble gentleman.
> Shak., K. John, iv. 2. 177.

sprightfully† (sprīt′fûl-i), adv. In a sprightly or lively manner; with spirit.

> Archid. So, so, 'tis well: how do I look?
> Mar. Most sprightfully. Massinger, The Bondman, ii. 1.

sprightfulness† (sprīt′fûl-nes), n. [Prop. spritefulness; ⟨ sprightful, spriteful, + -ness.] Sprightliness; vigor; animation. Bp. Parker, Platonick Philos., p. 6.

sprightless† (sprīt′les), a. [Prop. spriteless; ⟨ spright, sprite[1], + -less.] Lacking spirit; spiritless.

> Nay, he is spriteless, sense or soul hath none.
> Marston, Scourge of Villanie, vii. 44.

sprightliness (sprīt′li-nes), n. [Prop. spritelíness; ⟨ sprightly, spritely, + -ness.] The state or character of being sprightly; liveliness; life; briskuess; vigor; activity; gaiety; vivacity.

> To see such sprightliness the prey of sorrow I pitied her from my soul. Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 20.

=Syn. Life, Liveliness, etc. See animation.

sprightly (sprit′li), a. [Prop. spritely, but sprightly is the common spelling, the literal meaning and therefore the proper form of the word being lost from view; ⟨ spright[1], sprite[1], + -ly[1].] 1†. Of or pertaining to a sprite or spirit; ghostly; spectral; incorporeal.

> As I slept, me thought > Great Iupiter, vpon his Eagle back'd, > Appear'd to me, with other sprightly shewes.
> Shak., Cymbeline (folio 1623), v. 5. 428.

2. Full of spirit or vigor; brisk; lively; vivacious; animated; spirited; gay.

> I am glad you are so sprightly. You fought bravely.
> Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, ii. 1.
>
> Let me tell you, that sprightly grace and insinuating manner of yours will do some mischief among the girls here. Sheridan, The Rivals, ii. 1.

=Syn. 2. See animation.

sprightly† (sprīt′li), adv. [Prop. spritely; ⟨ sprightly, a.] In a sprightly manner; with vigor, liveliness, or gaiety. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 53.

sprigtail (sprig′tāl), n. 1. The pintail or sprig, a duck, Dafila acuta. See cut under Dafila.—2. The sharp-tailed or pin-tailed grouse, Pediœcetes phasianellus columbianus: more fully sprig-tailed grouse. See cut under Pediœcetes.

sprig-tailed (sprig′tāld), a. Having a sprigged or sharp-pointed tail, as a bird; pin-tailed: as, the sprig-tailed duck, Dafila acuta.

spring (spring), v.; pret. sprang or sprung, pp. sprung, ppr. springing. [Also dial. sprink; ⟨ ME. springen, spryngen (pret. sprang, sprong, pl. sprungen, sprongen, pp. sprungen, sprongen, sprunge), ⟨ AS. springan, sprincan (pret. sprang, sprane, pl. sprungon, pp. sprungen), spring, = OS. springan = OFries. springa = D. springen = MLG. springen = OHG. springan, MHG. G. springen, spring, = Icel. springa = Sw. springa = Dan. springe, spring, run, burst, split, = Goth. spriggan* (not recorded); cf. OF. espringuier, etc., spring, dance, = It. springare, kick about (⟨ OHG.); prob. akin to Gr. σπέρχεσθαι, move rapidly, be in haste, σπερχνός, hasty. Cf. Lith. sprugti, spring away, escape. Hence spring, n., and ult. springal[1], springal[2], the causal spreng (now mostly merged in spring), sprinkle, etc.] I. intrans. 1. To leap up; jump.

Whan Gonnore this aaugh, she sprongе for ioye.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 210.

They would often spring, and bound, and leap, with prodigious agility. Swift, Gulliver's Travels, iv. 1.

2. To move with leaps; bound along; rush.

Than sprongе forth Gawein and his companye a-monge the forreyours, that many were there alsin and wounded.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 587.

The horses, springing from under the whip of the charioteer, soon bore us from the great entrance of the palace into the midst of the throng that crowded the streets.
W. Ware, Zenobia, I. 58.

Specifically—3. To start up; rise suddenly, as a bird from a covert.

Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring.
Otway, Venice Preserved, i. 1.

4. To be impelled with speed or violence; shoot; fly; dart.

And sudden light
Sprung through the vaulted roof. Dryden.

The blood sprang to her face.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

Out sprang his bright steel at that latest word.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 285.

5. To start, recoil, fly back, etc., as from a forced position; escape from constraint; give; relax; especially, to yield to natural elasticity or to the force of a spring. See spring, n., 9.

Thor [Jacob] wrestelede an engel with,
Senwe [sinew] sprungen fro the lith [limb].
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 1804.

No sooner are your . . . appliances withdrawn than the strange casket of a heart springs to again.
Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, ii. 6.

6. To be shivered or shattered; split; crack.

Whene his spere was sprongene, he spede hym fulle gerne, Swappede owtte with a swerde, that swykede hym never.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 1704.

East and Tom were chatting together in whispers by the light of the fire, and splicing a favourite old fives bat which had sprung. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 9.

7. To come into being; begin to grow; shoot up; come up; arise; specifically, of the day, to dawn: said of any kind of genesis or beginning, and often followed by up.

The derke was done & the day sprange.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1076.

Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do, . . .
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung like summer flies.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 6. 17.

In the night, when the Land winds came, they anchored, and lay still till about 10 or 11 a Clock the next day, at which time the Sea-breeze usually sprang up again, and enabled them to continue their Course.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 106.

Alone the sun arises, and alone
Spring the great streams.
M. Arnold, In Utrumque Paratus.

8. To take one's birth, rise, or origin (from or out of any one or any thing); be derived; proceed, as from a specified source, stock, or set of conditions.

This folc, sprungen of Israel,
Is vnder God timed wel.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 4023.

My only love sprung from my only hate!
Shak., R. and J., i. 5. 140.

9†. To come into view or notice; be spread by popular report; gain fame or prevalence.

Thus withinne a whyle his name is sprongе
Bothe of his dedes and his goode tonge.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 579.

The word shal springen of him into Cologne.
Flemish Insurrection (Child's Ballads, VI. 271).

10. To rise above a given level; have a relatively great elevation; tower.

Up from their midst springs the village spire,
With the crest of its cock in the sun afire.
Whittier, Prophecy of Samuel Sewall.

Above this springs the roof, semicircular in general section, but somewhat stilted at the sides, so as to make its height greater than the semi-diameter.
J. Fergusson, Illst. Indian Arch., p. 119.

11. To warp, or become warped; bend or wind from a straight line or plane surface, as a piece of timber or plank in seasoning.

The battens are more likely to spring fairly than when the curves are nearly straight. Thearle, Naval Arch., § 21.

12. To bend to the oars and make the boat leap or spring forward, as in an emergency: often in the form of an order: as, "Spring ahead hard, men!"—Springing bow. In violin-playing, a staccato passage, produced by dropping the bow on the strings so that it rebounds by its own elasticity, is said to be played with a springing bow. Also called spiccato, and, when the bow rebounds to a considerable distance, saltato. = Syn. Leap, Jump, etc. See skip[1], v. i.

II. trans. 1. To cause to leap or dart; urge or launch at full speed.

So they sped at the spoures, they sprangene theire horses, Hyres theme bakenayes hastyly there aftyre.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 483.

I spring my thoughts into this immense field.
J. Hervey, Meditations, II. 129.

2. To start or rouse, as game; cause to rise from the earth or from a covert; flush: as, to spring a pheasant.

The men sprange the birdes out of the busshes, and the haukes sorynge ouer them bete them doune, so that the men mought easily take them.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 18.

Here 's the master fool, and a covey of cuxcombs; one wise man, I think, would spring you all.
Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay.

3. To bring out hastily or unexpectedly; produce suddenly; bring, show, contrive, etc., with unexpected promptness, or as a surprise.

I may perhaps spring a wife for you anon.
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, v. 3.

Surprised with fright,
She starts and leaves her bed, and springs a light.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., x. 153.

The friends to the cause sprang a new project. Swift.

It 's a feast at a poor country labourer's place when he springs sixpenn'orth of fresh herrings.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 53.

4. To jump over; overleap.

Far be the spirit of the chase from them [women]!
Uncomely courage, unbeseeming skill;
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed.
Thomson, Autumn, l. 575.

5†. To cause to spring up or arise; bring forth; generate.

Two wellis there bethe, I telle thee,
That springyngythe oyle, there men may see.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 142.

Their indulgence must not spring in me
A fond opinion that he cannot err.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 1.

6†. To scatter as in sowing; strew about; shed here and there; sprinkle (a liquid).

Before theise Ydoles men sleen here Children many tymes, and springen the Blood upon the Ydoles; and so thei maken here Sacrifise. Mandeville, Travels, p. 170.

7. To sprinkle, as with fine drops, particles, or spots; especially, to moisten with drops of a liquid: as, to spring clothes. [Now only prov. Eng.]

With holi water thou schalt me springe,
And as the snowe I schal be whyt.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 253.

8. To shiver; split; crack: as, to spring a bat; the mast was sprung.

Our shippes [were] in very good plight, more then that the Mary Rose, by some mischance, either sprang or spent her fore-yarde. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 609.

9. To cause to burst or explode; discharge.

I sprung a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown. Addison, Spectator.

10. To shift out of place; relax; loosen.

The linch-pins of the wagon are probably lost, and the tire of the wheels sprung. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 178.

Specifically—11. To relax the spring of; cause to act suddenly by means of a spring; touch off, as by a trigger: as, to spring a trap; to spring a rattle; also figuratively: as, to spring a plot or a joke.

He shall weave his snares,
And spring them on thy careless steps.
Bryant, Antiquity of Freedom.

12. To bend by force, as something stiff or strong.—13. To insert, as a beam in a place too short for it, by bending it so as to bring the ends nearer together, and allowing it to straighten when in place: usually with in: as, to spring in a slat or bar.—14. In arch., to commence from an abutment or pier: as, to spring an arch.—15. Naut., to haul by means of springs or cables: as, to spring the stern of a vessel around.—16. In carp., to unite (the boards of a roof) with bevel-joints in order to keep out wet.—To spring a butt (naut.). See butt[2].—To spring a leak. See leak.—To spring her luff (naut.). See luff[2].

spring (spring), n. and a. [< ME. spring, springe, a leap, spreng, sprynge, a spring (of water), a rod, a sprig, < AS. spring, sprynd, a leap, a spring, fountain, ulcer, = OS. spring (in aho-spring = AS. ēa-spryng, a well, 'water-spring') = OFries. spring (in spedelspring) = MLG. sprink = OHG. spring, sprung, MHG. sprinc, sprunc, G. spring, a spring of water (cf. sprung, a leap), = Sw. Dan. spring, a leap, run, spring (cf. Sw. språng, a leap, bound, water-spring); from the verb: see spring, v.] I. n. 1. The act of springing or leaping. (a) A leaping or darting; a vault; a bound.

The Indian immediately started back, whilst the lion rose with a spring, and leaped towards him.
Addison, Spectator, No. 56.

(b) A flying back; the resilience of a body recovering its former state by its elasticity.

The bow well bent, and smart the spring.
Cowper, Human Frailty.

2. The act or time of springing or appearing; the first appearance; the beginning; birth; rise; origin: as, the spring of mankind; the spring of the year; the spring of the morning or of the day (see dayspring). [Archaic except as in def. 3 and its figurative use.]

Men, if we view them in their spring, are at the first without understanding or knowledge at all.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 6.

This river taketh spring out of a certain lake eastward.
B. Jonson, Masque of Blackness.

So great odds there is between the Spring and Fall of Fortune. Baker, Chronicles, p. 126.

At morning spring and even-fall
Sweet voices in the still air singing.
Whittier, Mogg Megone, ii.

Specifically—3. The first of the four seasons of the year; the season in which plants begin to vegetate and rise; the vernal season (see season); hence, figuratively, the first and freshest period of any time or condition.

Rough winter spent,
The pleasant spring straight draweth in ure.
Surrey, The Louer Comforteth Himself.

My hasting days fly on with full career,
But my late spring no bud or blossom shew'th.
Milton, Sonnets, ii.

4. That which springs or shoots up. (a†) A sprout; shoot; branch; sapling.

Springis and plantes, any spryg that growt out of any tree. Arnold's Chron., p. 168.

This canker that eats up Love's tender spring.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 656.

(b) A young wood; any piece of woodland; a grove; a shrubbery. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

When the spring is of two years' growth, draw part of it for quick-sets. Evelyn, Sylva, III. viii. § 23.

(c†) A rod; a switch.

For ho so spareth the spring spilleth hus children;
And so wrot the wise to wissen us alle.
Piers Plowman (C), vi. 139.

5†. A youth; a springal.

The one his bowe and shafts, the other Spring
A burning Teade about his head did move.
Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 292.

Ca' me nae mair Sir Donald,
But ae spring Donald your son.
Lizie Lindsay (Child's Ballads, IV. 65).

6†. Offspring; race.

Who on all the human spring conferred confusion.
Chapman. (Imp. Dict.)

7. Water rising to the surface of the earth from below, and either flowing away in the form of a small stream or standing as a pool or small lake. Rivers are chiefly fed, both before and after being joined by their various affluents, by underground springs, and some pools of water large enough to be called ponds or even lakes are supplied in the same way. The conditions under which springs are formed are exceedingly variable, at once as regards the quantity of water, its temperature, the amount and nature of the gaseous and solid substances which it holds in solution, and the manner in which it is delivered at the surface; hence springs are variously designated in accordance with these peculiarities, the most familiar terms used for this purpose being shallow, simple, common, or surface; hot, boiling, thermal; mineral, medicinal; and spouting, or geyser, as this kind of spring is more generally called. Shallow or surface springs ordinarily furnish water which is pretty nearly pure, can be used for drinking, and does not differ much in temperature from the mean of the locality where they occur. They are due to the fact that the water falling on the surface in the form of rain, or furnished by melting snow, sinks to a certain depth (according as the soil and underlying rocks are more or less porous or permeable), where it is held in greater or less quantity according to the amount of rainfall and the thickness and relative position of the various permeable and impermeable formations with which it is brought in contact, but seeks under the influence of gravitation to escape, and makes its appearance at the surface when the topographical or geological conditions are favorable. Thus, a bed of gravel or sand resting on a mass of clay (the former being very permeable, the latter almost impermeable) will become saturated with water below a certain depth, the distance from the surface of the saturated sand or gravel, or the line of saturation, as it is called, varying with the climate and season. If, however, there be an adjacent ravine or valley which is cut deep enough to expose the line of junction of the permeable and impermeable formations, the water will escape along this line in greater or less quantity, giving rise to springs, which will vary in number and copiousness with the varying conditions which present themselves. The water of such springs, not having descended to any great depth, will not vary much in temperature from the mean of the locality. Very different are the conditions in the case of thermal or hot springs, which may have any temperature up to boiling, and of which the water may have been heated either by coming from great depths or by contact with volcanic rocks; hence thermal springs are phenomena very characteristic of volcanic and geologically disturbed or faulted regions, and those hot springs which are of the geyser type (see geyser) are most interesting from the scenic point of view. The medicinal properties and curative effects of various hot springs are of great practical importance; and many such springs, in Europe and the United States, are places much resorted to by invalids and pleasure-seekers. The variety of constituents, both solid and gaseous, held in solution by different hot springs is very great. From the medicinal point of view springs are variously classified, and without regard to temperature, because the nature and quantity of the substances which the water contains are not by any means entirely dependent on temperature, although in general the hotter the water the larger the amount of foreign matter likely to be held in solution, while a high temperature is undoubtedly in many cases an important element in the therapeutic effect produced. A convenient classification of mineral waters, from the medicinal point of view, is into (a) indifferent, (b) earthy, (c) sulphurous, (d) saline, (e) alkaline, (f) purgative, (g) chalybeate. Indifferent waters are such as contain but a small amount of foreign matter—often so little, indeed, that they might well be classed as potable, but they are usually thermal. Their mode of therapeutic action is not well understood, and by some the imagination is thought to play an important part as a curative agency. Examples of well-known and much-visited springs of this class are Schlangenbad in Nassau; Gastein in Salzburg; Teplitz in Bohemia; Plombières in France; Lebanon, New York; Hot Springs, Bath Court House, Virginia; Clarendon Springs, Vermont; Hot Springs, Arkansas, etc. Earthy waters contain a large amount of mineral matter in solution, calcium sulphate predominating in quantity. Examples: Leuk, Switzerland; Bagnères-de-Bigorre, France; Bath, England; Sweet Springs and Berkeley Springs, West Virginia. Sulphurous waters are weak solutions of alkaline sulphurets, the mineral constituents ranging from a few grains to a hundred or more in the gallon, and the sulphur from a trace to 4 parts in 10,000; some are cold, others hot. Examples: many of the most frequented springs of the Pyrenees, as Cauterets, Eaux-Bonnes, Eaux-Chaudes, Bagnères-de-Luchon; Aix-la-Chapelle, Prussia; Harrogate, England; White Sulphur, West Virginia; and many others. Saline springs: these are very numerous, both hot and cold, common salt being the predominating ingredient; but besides this there are usually present salts of lime, magnesia, soda, iron, iodine, and bromine. Examples: Kissingen, Bavaria; Wiesbaden, Badcu-Baden, Niederselters, in Germany; St. Catherines, Canada; Saratoga, New York. Alkaline waters: these contain salts of soda, potash, lime, and magnesia; also, more or less commonly, lithia, strontia, and traces of iodine, bromine, fluorin, and arsenic. Examples: Vichy in France; Bilin in Bohemia; Heilbrunn, Ems, in Germany. Purgative waters, containing especially the sulphate of magnesia, and also of soda, often in large quantity, as in the case of the Pullna water, which has 1,986 grains to the gallon, mostly sodium and magnesium sulphates. Examples: Sedlitz, Carlsbad, and Pullna, Bohemia; Cheltenham and Scarborough, England. Chalybeate waters, in which salts of iron are the essential ingredient. Examples: Schwalbach, Nassau; Spa, Belgium; Pyrmont, Germany.

8. Figuratively, any fount or source of supply.

Macb. The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood
Is stopp'd; the very source of it is stopp'd.
Macd. Your royal father's murder'd.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 3. 103.

9. An elastic body, as a strip or wire of steel coiled spirally, a steel rod or plate, strips of steel suitably joined together, a mass or strip of india-rubber, etc., which, when bent or forced from its natural state, has the power of recovering it again in virtue of its elasticity. Springs are used for various purposes—as for diminishing concussion, as in carriages; for motive power, as in clocks and watches; for communicating motion by sudden release from a state of tension, as a bow, the spring of a gun-lock, etc.; for measuring weight and other force, as in the spring-balance; as regulators to control the movement of wheel-works, etc.

To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it.
Shak., Cymbeline, ii. 2. 47.

10. In entom., a special elastic organ by which an insect is enabled to spring into the air. (a) The springing-organ of species of the family Poduridæ. It consists of several bristle-like appendages at the end of the abdomen, which are united at their bases and bent under the body. In leaping, the end of the abdomen is first bent down and then suddenly extended, bringing the elastic bristles with great force against the ground. See cut under springtail. (b) The springing-organ of a skipjack beetle, or elater. It consists of a spine extending backward from the prosternum and received in a cavity of the mesosternum. When the insect is placed on its back, it extends the prothorax so as to bring the spine to the edge of the mesosternal cavity; then, suddenly relaxing the muscles, the spine descends violently into the cavity, and the force given by this sudden movement causes the base of the elytra to strike against the supporting surface with such power that the body is thrown into the air. See cut under click-beetle.

11. Any active or motive power, physical or mental; that by which action is produced or propagated; motive.

Self-love, the spring of motion, acts the soul.
Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 59.

12. Capacity for springing; elastic power; elasticity, either physical or mental.

Heav'ns! what a spring was in his arm! Dryden.

Th' elastic spring of an unwearied foot,
That mounts the stile with ease, or leaps the fence.
Cowper, Task, i. 135.

13. Naut.: (a) The start, as of a plank; an opening in a seam; a leak.

Each petty hand
Can steer a ship becalmed; but he that will Govern and carry her to her ends must know . . .
Where her springs are, her leaks; and how to stop 'em.
B. Jonson, Catiline, iii. 1.

(b) A crack in a mast or yard, running obliquely or transversely. (c) A line made fast to the bow or quarter of a ship, in order to pull the head or stern in any required direction. (d) A rope extending from some part of a ship to another ship, or to a fixed object, to cant or move the ship by being hauled upon.—14. A quick and cheerful tune; a skip. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

We will meet him,
And strike him such new springs, and such free welcomes,
Shall make him scorn an empire.
Fletcher (and another?), Prophetess, v. 2.

Last night I play'd . . .
"O'er Bogie" was the spring.
Ramsay, Gentle Shepherd, i. 1.

15. In falconry, a collection of teal.

A spring of teels. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 97.

Presently surprising a spring of teal.
Daily Telegraph, Dec. 26, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.)

Atmospheric, bituminous, boiling, caballine spring. See the adjectives.—Backlash-spring. See backlash.—C spring. See C-spring.—Carbonated springs. See carbonate[2].—Compound spring, a spring in which springs of different types are combined.—Intermittent or intermitting spring. See intermittent.—Platform-spring, a form of spring used for heavy vehicles, consisting of four semi-elliptical steel springs arranged as a sort of resilient skeleton platform.—Pneumatic spring, a device in which air is confined and made by its elasticity to perform the functions of a spring. It may be a simple air-bag or a cylinder with a close-fitting piston, etc. Also called air-spring, air-cushion.—Spiral spring, a coiled spring used chiefly where the pressure to be resisted is direct and in line with the axis of the spring. See cut under oiler.—Spring of a beam or of a deck, the curve of a beam or deck upward from a horizontal line.—Spring of pork, the lower part of the fore quarter, which is divided from the neck, and has the leg without the shoulder.=Syn. 7. Fountain, etc. See well[1].

II. a. Pertaining to, suitable for, or occurring or used in the spring of the year: as, spring fashions; spring wheat.—Spring canker-worm. See canker-worm.—Spring cress, an American bittercress, Cardamine rhomboidea, common in wet places, bearing white flowers in early spring.—Spring crocus, an early crocus, Crocus vernus, having blue, white, or party-colored flowers, perhaps the most common garden species.—Spring fare, the first fare of fish taken any year. Fishermen make about two fares of cod in a year, and the first or spring fare, which commences early in April, is of a superior quality. [New England.]—Spring fever. See fever[1].—Spring grinder. See grinder.—Spring lobster. See lobster, 2.—Spring mackerel. See mackerel.—Spring safety-valve. See safety-valve.—Spring snowflake. See snowflake, 3.

springal[1]†, springald[1]† (spring'al, -ald), n. [< ME. springal, sprungal, sprungold, espringold = MHG. springal, springolf, < OF. espringale, espringalle (AF. also springalde), also espingalle, espinguale, and also espingole, espringarde, espingarde (= Pr. espingala = Sp. Pg. espingarda = It. spingarda, ML. spingarda), a military engine, also a dance, < espringuier, espringhier, espringier, espinguer, espinguier, spring, dance (= It. springare, spingare, kick about), < OHG. springan, spring, jump: see spring.] A military engine, resembling the ballista, used in Europe in the middle ages.

Eke withynne the castelle were Springoldes, gunnes, and bowa, archers.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 4191.

springal[2], springald[2] (spring'al, -ald), n. [Also springel, springall, springold, springow, < spring + -ald, equiv. to -ard (the word being then perhaps suggested by springal[1], springald[1]), or else + -al, equiv. to -el, -le, AS. -ol, as in E. brittle, newfangle, etc. Cf. spring, n., 5, springer, 1 (b).] A young person; a youth; especially, a young man. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

A Springald, adolescens.
Levins, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 16.

Ha, well done! excellent boy! dainty, fine springal!
Middleton, More Dissemblers Besides Women, v. 1.

springard† (spring'ärd), n. Same as springal[1].

spring-back (spring'bak), n. In bookbinding, a false back put on the sewed sections of a book, which springs upward when the book is opened flat, but returns to its proper position when the book is closed. The outer or true back does not change its outward curve, being kept stiff on library books by sheets of stiff paper, in large blank books by molded pasteboard or sheets of thin steel.

spring-balance (spring'bal*ans), n. See balance.

spring-band (spring'band), n. In a vehicle, a loop or strap used to unite the arms of an elliptic spring.

spring-bar (spring'bär), n. In a vehicle, a bar upon the ends of which the body is supported. It lies parallel with the axle, and rests upon the center of the elliptic spring.

spring-beam (spring'bēm), n. 1. A beam reaching across a wide space, without a central support.—2. In ship-building, a fore-and-aft timber uniting the outer ends of the paddle-box beams, and carrying the outboard shaft-bearing.—3. An elastic bar at the top of a tilt-hammer, jig-saw, or mortising-machine, to accelerate the fall, or afford return motion.—4. In a railroad-car, one of two heavy timbers resting on the springs of a six-wheel car-truck, and serving to support the bolster-bridges, which, through the bolster, support the car-body.—5. In carp., the tie-beam of a truss.

spring-beauty (spring'bū*ti), n. 1. A common American wild flower of the genus Claytonia, especially C. Virginica, a low, succulent herb, sending up from a deep-set tuber in early spring a simple stem bearing a pair of narrow leaves and a loose gradually developing raceme of pretty flowers, which are white or rose-colored with deeper veins. See cut under Claytonia. The smaller C. Caroliniana, with spatulate or oval leaves, is more northern except in the mountains.—2. In entom., a beautiful little butterfly of America, Erora læta, which appears in spring, and has the hind wings in the male brown bordered with blue, in the female mostly blue. S. H. Scudder. [Recent.] spring-bed (spring'bed), n. 1. A mattress formed of spiral springs or a fabric woven of coiled spiral wire, set in a wooden frame.—2. In a cloth-shearing machine, a long elastic plate of steel fastened to the framing of the machine to press the fibers of the cloth within the range of the cutting edges.

spring-beetle (spring'bē*tl), n. A beetle of the family Elateridæ; an elater; a click-beetle. See cut under click-beetle. Also springing-beetle. See spring, n., 10 (b).

spring-bell (spriug'bel), n. A species of rush-lily, Sisyrinchium grandiflorum. See rush-lily.

spring-block (spring'blok), n. 1. Naut., a common block or deadeye connected to a ring-bolt by a spiral or india-rubber spring. It is attached to the sheets, so as to give a certain amount of elasticity.—2. In a vehicle, a piece of wood fixed on the axle as a support for the spring.—3. In a car-truck, a distance-piece placed above or below an elliptic spring.

spring-board (spring'bōrd), n. An elastic board used in vaulting, etc.

springbok (spring'bok), n. [< S. African D. springbok (= G. springbock), a wild goat, < spring, = E. spring, + bok = E. buck[1].] A beautiful gazel, Gazella euchore, so called by the Dutch colonists of South Africa, where it abounds, from its agility in springing upward when alarmed or as it scours the plain in escaping from its pursuers. It is of lithe and graceful form and handsome coloration, in which a rich tawny brown is varied with pure-white and black. Also spring-boc, springbuck, sprink-buck, and springer.

Springbok (Gazella euchore).

spring-box (spring'boks), n. 1. The box which contains the mainspring of a watch or other mechanism; the barrel.—2. A box or some similar receptacle closed by a lid which opens or shuts by the elasticity of a spring or some similar device. See palpal.—3. In upholstery, the wooden frame within which the springs, as of a mattress or of the seat of a sofa, are contained.

spring-buck (spring'buk), n. Same as springbok. Imp. Dict.

spring-carriage (spring'kar*āj), n. A wheeled carriage mounted upon springs.

spring-cart (spring'kärt), n. A light cart mounted upon springs.

springe[1] (sprinj), v. t.; pret. and pp. springed, ppr. springeing. [< ME. sprengen, < AS. sprengan, causal of springan, spring: see spring, and cf. spreng (of which springe is the proper form (cf. singe, as related to sing), now only dialectal).] To sprinkle. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

springe[2] (sprinj), n. [< ME. springe, < springen, spring: see spring, v. Cf. springle, and D. spring-net, a spring-net, OHG. springa, MHG. sprinke, a bird-snare.] A noose or snare for catching small game; a gin. It is usually secured to an elastic branch, or small sapling, which is bent over and secured by some sort of trigger which the movements of the animal will release, when it flies up and the noose catches the game.

A woodcock to mine own springe.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 317.

I will teach thee a springe, Tony, to catch a pewit.
Scott, Kenilworth, xli.

springe[2] (sprinj), v.; pret. and pp. springed, ppr. springeing. [< springe[2], n.] I. trans. To catch in a springe.

We springe ourselves, we sink in our own bogs.
Fletcher (and another), Queen of Corinth, iv. 4.

II. intrans. To set springes; catch game by means of springes.

springe[3] (sprinj), a. [< spring, v.] Active; nimble; brisk; agile. [Prov. Eng.]

The squire 'a pretty springe, considering his weight.
George Eliot, Silas Marner, xi.

springer (spring'ėr), n. [< spring + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which springs, in any sense. (a) A growing plant, shrub, or tree; a sapling.

The young men and maidens go out into the woods and coppices, cut down and spoil young springers to dress up their May-booths. Evelyn, Sylva, IV. iv. § 4.

(b) A youth; a lad. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

2. In arch.: (a) The impost or place where the vertical support to an arch terminates, and the curve of the arch begins. (b) The lower voussoir or bottom stone of an arch, which lies immediately upon the impost. (c) The bottom stone of the coping of a gable. (d) The rib of a groined roof or vault. See cross-springer.— 3. A dog of a class of spaniels resembling the cocker, used, in sporting, to spring or flush game. See spaniel.

The Springer is smaller than the former (the Water Spaniel), of elegant form, gay aspect, and usually white with red spots, black nose and palate.
Quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., V. 376.

4. The springbok.— 5. A grampus.— Springer antelope, the springbok.

Springfield gun, rifle. See gun[1], rifle[2], also cut under bullet.

spring-flood (spring'flud), n. [< ME. springflood (= D. spring-vloed = G. spring-fluth = Sw. Dan. spring-flod); as spring + flood.] Same as springtide.

Than shal she [the moon] been evene atte fulle alway,
And spryng-flood laste bothe nyght and day.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 342.

spring-fly (spring'flī), n. A caddis-fly.

spring-forelock (spring'fōr″lok), n. A cotter-key having a spring in the entering end to prevent its accidental withdrawal. E. H. Knight.

spring-garden† (spring'gär″dn), n. A word of doubtful meaning, possibly a corrupt form; perhaps, according to Nares, a garden where concealed springs were made to spout jets of water upon the visitors.

Sophocles [bound]. Thy slave, proud Martius?
. . . not a vein runs here
From head to foot, but Sophocles would unseam, and Like a spring-garden shoot his scornful blood
Into their eyes durst come to tread on him.
Beau. and Fl., Four Plays in One, Play 1st.

spring-gun (spring'gun), n. A gun which is discharged by the stumbling of a trespasser upon it, or against a wire connected with the trigger; also, a gun similarly set for large animals, as bears or wolves.

spring-haas (spring'häs), n. [< S. African D. spring-haas, < spring (= E. spring) + haas, a hare, = E. hare: see spring and hare[1].] The Cape jumping-hare, Pedetes caffer, a kind of jerboa, of the family Dipodidæ. See cut under Pedetes.

spring-halt (spring'hâlt), n. [Also, corruptly, string-halt; < spring + halt[1].] An involuntary convulsive movement of the muscles of either hind leg in the horse, by which the leg is suddenly and unduly raised from the ground and lowered again with unnatural force; also, the nervous disorder on which such movements depend, and the resulting gait.

One would take it,
That never saw 'em pace before, the spavin
Or springhalt reign'd among 'em.
Shak., Hen. VIII., i. 3. 13.

spring-hammer (spring'ham″ėr), n. A machine-hammer in which the blow is partly or wholly made by a spring to which tension has been imparted by mechanism during the lift of the hammer-head. In some hammers the spring is a volume of confined and compressed air. In the accompanying cut a is the anvil-block; b, anvil; c, frame; d, guides for hammer; e, piston-rod; f, cylinder; g, hammer; h, crank (driven by the pulley i) which lifts the hammer, at the same time compressing the air in the air-spring cylinder f; j, idler-pulley which tightens the driving-belt k when pressed against the belt by the action of the rock-lever l, the rod n, and the foot-lever or treadle o—the rock-lever l being pivoted to the frame at m, while the treadle is pivoted to it at p. Pressure upon the treadle by the foot tightens the belt, and the hammer is then raised. The treadle is then relieved from pressure, the belt is slackened on the pulley i, and the compressed air, acting on the piston, delivers the blow, the belt then slipping easily over the pulley i.

Spring-hammer.

spring-hanger (spring'hang″ėr), n. A U-shaped strap of iron serving to support the end of a semi-elliptical car-spring.

spring-head (spring'hed), n. 1. A fountain-head; a source.

Water will not ascend higher than the level of the first spring-head from whence it descendeth.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i.

2. A clutch, button, or other connecting device at the end of an elliptic carriage-spring.

spring-headed† (spring'hed″ed), a. Having heads that spring afresh. [Rare.]

Spring-headed Hydres, and sea-shouldring Whales.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 23.

spring-hook (spring'hůk), n. 1. In locomotives, a hook fixing the driving-wheel spring to the frame.— 2. A latch or door-hook having a spring-catch for keeping it fast in the staple.— 3. A fish-hook set like a spring-trap, with a supplementary hook, which, on being released, fixes itself in the fish; a snap-hook. Also called spear-hook.

spring-house (spring'hous), n. A small building constructed over a spring or brook, where milk, fresh meat, etc., are placed in order to be kept cool in or near the running water. [U. S.]

As I was a-settin' in the spring-house, this mornin', a-workin' my butter, I says to Dinah, "I'm goin' to carry a pot of this down to Miss Scudder."
H. B. Stowe, Minister's Wooing, iv.

springiness (spring'i-nes), n. 1. The state or property of being springy; elasticity.

The air is a thin fluid body endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction.
Bentley.

2. The state of abounding with springs; wetness; sponginess, as of land.

springing (spring'ing), n. [< ME. springing, sprynggynge; verbal n. of spring, v.] 1. The act or process of leaping, arising, issuing, or proceeding; also, growth; increase.

The Poo out of a welle smal Taketh his firste springing and his sors.
Chaucer, Prol. to Clerk's Tale, l. 49.

Thou visitest the earth, and waterest it. . . . Thou makest it soft with showers; thou blessest the springing thereof. Ps. lxv. 10.

2. In arch., the point from which an arch springs or rises; also, a springer.

springing (spring'ing), p. a. Liable to arise; contingent: as, springing uses. See use.

springing-beetle (spring'ing-bē″tl), n. Same as spring-beetle.

springing-course (spring'ing-kōrs), n. See course[1].

springing-hairs (spring'ing-hârz), n. pl. The locomotory cilia of some infusorians, as the Halteriidæ, by means of which these animalcules skip about.

springing-line (spring'ing-līn), n. The line from which an arch springs or rises; the line in which the springers rest on the imposts, and from which the rise or versed sine is calculated.

springing-time† (spring'ing-tīm), n. [< ME. springing time; < springing + time.] The time of the new growing of plants; spring-time; spring.

[T]he furst age of man Iocond & light,
The springyngye tyme clepe "ver."
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 169.

springing-tool (spring'ing-tōl), n. In iron-working, same as hanging-tool.

springing-wall (spring'ing-wâl), n. In building, a buttress.

spring-jack (spring'jak), n. In teleg., a device for inserting a loop in a line-circuit. It usually consists of a plug to be inserted between two spring-contacts, the ends of the loop being joined to metallic strips fixed to the opposite sides of the insulating plug. If the latter is entirely of insulating material, it becomes a spring-jack cut-out.

spring-latch (spring'lach), n. A latch that snaps into the keeper after yielding to the pressure against it. See cuts under lateh.

springle (spring'l), n. [= D. G. sprenkel, a noose, snare, springe, = Sw. spränkla, a springle, = Dan. sprinkel, trellis; a dim. of spring, springe, in similar senses: see spring, springe[2].] 1. A springe.

They [woodcocks] arriue first on the north coast, where almost euerie hedge serueth for a roade and euerie plash-oote for springles to take them.
R. Carew, Survey of Cornwall, fol. 25.

2. A rod about four feet in length, used in thatching. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

springless (spring'les), a. [< spring + -less.] Lacking springs or spring. (a) Having no springs, or natural fountains of water. (b) Lacking elastic springs: as, a springless wagon.

springlet (spring'let), n. [< spring + -let.] A little spring; a small stream.

But yet from out the little hill Oozes the slender springlet still.
Scott, Marmion, vi. 37.

spring-ligament (spring'lig″a-ment), n. The inferior calcaneoscaphoid ligament of the sole of the foot, connecting the os calcis or heel-bone with the scaphoid, supporting the head of the astragalus, and forming part of the articular cavity in which the latter is received.

springlike (spring'līk), a. Resembling spring; characteristic of spring; vernal: as, springlike weather; a springlike temperature.

There the last blossoms spring-like pride unfold.
Savage, Wanderer, v.

spring-line (spring'līn), n. In milit. engin., a line passing diagonally from one pontoon of a bridge to another.

spring-lock (spring'lok), n. A lock which fastens itself automatically by a spring when the door or lid to which it is attached is shut. Also called lateh-lock.

spring-mattress (spring'mat″res), n. See mattress and spring-bed.

spring-net (spring'net), n. A bird-net which can be shut by means of a spring and trigger; a flap-net. A net of similar form is used for trapping rabbits.

springold[1]†, n. Same as springal[1].

springold[2]†, springow†, n. Same as springal[2].

spring-oyster (spring'ois″tėr), n. A thorn-oyster. See cut under Spondylus.

spring-padlock (spring'pad″lok), n. A padlock which locks automatically by means of a spring when the hasp is pressed into its seat.

spring-pawl (spring'pâl), n. A pawl actuated by a spring.

spring-plank (spring'plangk), n. A transverse timber beneath a railway truck-bolster, forming a support for the bolster-springs. E. H. Knight.

spring-pole (spring'pōl), n. A pole fastened so that its elasticity can be used for some mechanical purpose.— Spring-pole drilling, a method of boring holes in rock for oil, water, or any other purpose, in which the rods and drill are suspended from a spring-pole, which by its elasticity lifts them up after every stroke. The down motion is effected by hand-power, or sometimes a stirrup is added to enable the driller to use his feet. Prospecting-holes of from two to three inches in diameter can be bored with this simple apparatus to the depth of one or two hundred feet, or even more.

spring-punch (spring'punch), n. A punch which has a spring to throw it back after it has been driven down by pressure. This is usually done only in quick-working punches which are driven by the blows of a hammer, or in hand-punches such as those used by shoemakers, railway conductors, etc.

spring-searcher (spring'sėr″chėr), n. A tool having steel prongs projected by springs, used to detect defects in a cannon-bore.

spring-shackle (spring'shak″l), n. 1. A shackle closed by a spring.— 2. A shackle connecting two springs, or connecting a spring to a rigid part: used in vehicles, etc.

spring-stay (spring'stā), n. Naut. See stay[1].

spring-stud (spring'stud), n. A rod passed through the axis of a coil-spring to hold the spring in place. The upper end works in a guide. See cut under oiler.

springtail (spring'tāl), n. 1. A collembolous thysanurous insect which leaps or skips about by means of abdominal hairs acting like a spring, as any poduran. In these creatures the anal bristles are united and bent under the body, forming a spring by the aid of which they leap to a great height. They are found in gardens, in hotbeds, on manure-heaps in winter, and on snow, and may also be seen on the surface of water in quiet pools. See Collembola, 2, Podura, and Thysanura.

Springtails.
1, Degeeria nivalis; 2, a poduran; both greatly enlarged.

2. A thysanurous insect of the suborder Cinura, oftener called bristletail. See Cinura, Lepisma, and cut under silverfish.—3. One of certain minute neuropterous insects of the panorpid genus Boreus, found in moss and on the surface of snow; a snow-fly. This insect springs, but not by means of anal appendages.

spring-tailed (spring'tāld), a. Springing by means of the tail, or having a spring on the tail, as a collembolous insect; thysanurous; podurous.

spring-tide (spring'tīd), n. [= D. spring-tij, spring-tide, = G. spring-zeit, high tide, = Sw. Dan. spring-tid, spring-tide; as spring, v., rise, + tide.] 1. The tide which occurs at or soon after the new and full moon, and rises higher than common tides, the ebb sinking correspondingly lower. At these times the sun and moon are in a straight line with the earth, and their combined influence in raising the waters of the ocean is the greatest, consequently the tides thus produced are the highest. See tide.

Hence—2. Figuratively, any great flood or influx.

Yet are they doubly replenished by the first and latter spring-tides of devotion. Sandys, Travailes, p. 160.

springtide (spring'tīd), n. [< spring, n., 3, + tide.] Springtime.

Sounds as of the springtide they, . . .
While the chill months long for May.
D. G. Rossetti, Love's Nocturn.

springtime (spring'tīm), n. Spring.

Primrose, first-born child of Ver,
Merry spring-time's harbinger.
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1.

spring-tool (spring'tōl), n. A light tongs closing by a spring, used by glass-blowers.

spring-trap (spring'trap), n. 1. A trap working by a spring, which may cause a door or bar to fall when the detent is released by the moving of the bait, or may throttle the victim, as in an ordinary form of mouse-trap, etc.—2. A form of steam-trap. E. H. Knight.

spring-valve (spring'valv), n. 1. A valve fitted with a spring, which holds it to its seat except when it is opened by extraneous force.—2. A safety-valve with which is connected a spring-balance, graduated to any required number of pounds, and acting as a check on the valve until the determined pressure is attained. See cut under safety-valve.

spring-wagon (spring'wag″on), n. A wagon the bed of which rests on springs.

spring-water (spring'wâ″tėr), n. Water issuing from a spring: in contradistinction to river-water, rain-water, etc.

Spare Diet, and Spring-water clear, Physicians hold are good.
Prior, Wandering Pilgrim.

spring-weir (spring'wēr), n. A kind of weir arranged to drop to the bottom at low water, and allow the fish to pass over it with the incoming tide, while at high water it is lifted up. It is worked from the shore by means of capstans and ropes, so that it forms an impassable barrier to the fish, which are retained as the tide passes out, and are thus taken in large numbers. [Maine.]

spring-worm (spring'wėrm), n. A pin-worm, as Oxyuris vermicularis; a small threadworm. See cut under Oxyuris.

springwort (spring'wėrt), n. [< ME. springwurt, sprungwurt; < spring + *wort*1.] In European folk-lore, a plant to which various magical virtues were attributed, among them that of drawing down the lightning and dividing the storm: identified by Grimm with the caper-spurge, Euphorbia Lathyris. Dyer, Folk-lore of Plants.

springy (spring'i), a. [< spring + *-y*1.] 1. Having elasticity like that of a spring; elastic; light: as, springy steel; a springy step.

Which vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous. Newton, Opticks, iii. query 31.

2. Abounding with springs or fountains; wet; spongy: as, springy land.

sprink (springk), v. t. [A dial. var. of spring; cf. sprinkle.] To sprinkle; splash. Halliwell. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

sprink (springk), n. [< sprink, v.] 1†. A sprinkle; a drop, as of water. Howell, Arbor of Amitie (1568). (Nares.)—2. A crack or flaw. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

sprink-buck (springk'buk), n. Same as springbok.

sprinkle (spring'kl), v.; pret. and pp. sprinkled, ppr. sprinkling. [Early mod. E. sprenkle, sprenkyll, < ME. sprenkelen, sprynklen, springgolen (= MD. sprinckelen, sprenckelen, D. sprenkelen = G. sprenkeln), sprinkle; freq. of ME. sprengen, < AS. sprengan, causal of springan, sprincan, spring: see spreng and spring. Cf. sprink.] I. trans. 1. To scatter in drops or particles; let fall in minute quantities here and there; strew.

To sprenkylle; spergere, fundere. Cath. Ang., p. 356.

Take to you handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it toward the heaven in the sight of Pharaoh. Ex. ix. 8.

2. To besprinkle; bespatter or bestrew; overspread with drops or particles, as of a powder, liquid, coloring matter, etc.

Valerianus . . . at last was flayed alive, and sprinkled with Salt. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 357.

3. To cleanse with drops, as of water; wash; purify.

Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. Heb. x. 22.

4. To distribute here and there; diffuse.

Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle cool patience. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4. 124.

These and such other reflections are sprinkled up and down the writings of all ages. Steele, Spectator, No. 11.

5. To diversify by objects placed here and there over the surface; dot.

Spacious meads, with cattle sprinkled o'er.
Cowper, Task, i. 164.

II. intrans. 1. To issue in fine drops or particles; be sprinkled.

It will make the water sprinkle up in a fine dew. Bacon.

2†. To send out sparks; scintillate; sparkle.

Toward the lady they come fast rennyng,
And sette this whele uppon her hede,
As eny hote yren yt was sprynggolyng rede.
MS. Laud. 416, f. 70. (Halliwell.)

3. To rain slightly: used impersonally: as, does it sprinkle?—4. To scatter a liquid or any fine substance so that it may fall in small particles.

The priest . . . shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger. Lev. xiv. 16.

5†. To dart hither and thither.

The siluer scalit fyschis on the grete,
Ouer thowrt clere stremes sprinkilland for the hete,
With fynnys schinand broun as synopare.
Gavin Douglas, tr. of Virgil, p. 400.

sprinkle (spring'kl), n. [< ME. sprynkil, sprenkill, sprenkylle (cf. MHG. G. sprengel); from the verb.] 1†. A utensil for sprinkling; a sprinkler; specifically, a brush for sprinkling holy water; an aspersorium.

And the litil sprynkil of ysop wetith in bloode, that is in the nethir threswold, and sprengith of it the ouerthreswold, and either post. Wyclif, Ex. xii. 22.

She alway smyld, and in her hand did hold
An holy-water-sprinckle, dipt in deowe.
Spenser, F. Q., III. xii. 13.

2. A sprinkling, or falling in drops; specifically, a light rain.

He meets the first cold sprinkle of the world,
And shudders to the marrow.
Browning, Ring and Book, II. 213.

3. That which is sprinkled about; hence, a scattering or slight amount; a sprinkling.—4. A light tinkling sound; a tinkle. [Rare.]

At Sorrento you hear nothing but the light surges of the sea, and the sweet sprinkles of the guitar.
Landor, Imag. Conv., Tasso and Cornelia.

5. Milit., same as morning-star, 2.

sprinkled (spring'kld), a. [< sprinkle + *-ed*2.] Marked by small spots; appearing as if sprinkled from a wet brush: specifically noting a kind of decoration of pottery, the edges of cheaply bound books, etc.

sprinkler (spring'klėr), n. [< sprinkle + *-er*1.] 1. One who or that which sprinkles. Especially —(a†) A spherical or barrel-shaped vase having a small spout. Such vases were grasped in the hand, and the liquid contents thrown out with a jerking motion. (b) A brush for sprinkling holy water. Compare aspersorium, 1. (c) A device for spraying water over plants, or over a lawn, etc.

2. Milit., same as morning-star, 2.—Holy-water sprinkler. See holy.

sprinkling (spring'kling), n. [Verbal n. of sprinkle, v.] 1. The act of one who sprinkles, in any sense of the word; aspersion.

Your uncleanly unctions, your crossings, creepings, censings, sprinklings. Bp. Hall, Epistles, i. 1.

2. A small quantity falling in distinct drops or parts, or coming moderately: as, a sprinkling of rain or snow. Hence—3. A small amount scattered here and there, as if sprinkled.

We have a sprinkling of our gentry, here and there one, excellently well learned. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 197.

4. In bookbinding, the operation of scattering a shower of fine drops of color on the trimmed edges of the leaves to produce a mottled effect. It is done by striking a brush charged with color against a rod held above the edges of the book to be sprinkled.

sprint (sprint), v. i. [Also dial. sprunt; a later form of *sprent*1, q. v. Cf. *spurt*2, *spirt*2.] To run at full speed, as in a short-distance foot-race. Nineteenth Century, XXI. 520.

sprint (sprint), n. [< sprint, v.] A run at full speed, as in a short-distance foot-race.

sprinter (sprin'tėr), n. A contestant in a sprint-race; a short-distance runner. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 61.

sprinting (sprin'ting), n. [Verbal n. of sprint, v.] The act or the sport of running at full speed, as in a short-distance foot-race.

sprint-race (sprint'rās), n. A short-distance foot-race.

sprint-runner (sprint'run″ėr), n. Same as sprinter. The Century, XL. 206.

sprit1† (sprit), v. [< ME. sprutten, < AS. spryttan (= LG. sprutten = G. spritzen, sprützen), sprout, a secondary form of spreótan, sprout: see sprout. Cf. *spirt*1, *spurt*1.] I. intrans. To sprout; bud; germinate, as barley steeped for malt.

The withi thet sprutteth ut. Ancren Riwle, p. 86.

II. trans. To throw out with force from a narrow orifice; eject; spurt. Sir T. Browne.

sprit1 (sprit), n. [Early mod. E. also spret; < ME. spret, sprete, spreot, a pole, < AS. sprēót, a pole, orig. a sprout, shoot, branch of a tree (= D. spriet, > G. spriet, a sprit), < spreótan, sprout: see *sprit*1, v., and sprout. Cf. bowsprit.] 1†. A sprout; a shoot.

The barley, after it has been couched four days, will sweat a little, and shew the chit or sprit at the root-end of the corn. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2†. A stick; a pole; especially, a boatman's pole.

Hastili hent eche man a spret or an ore.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2754.

3. Naut.: (a) A small pole, spar, or boom which crosses the sail of a boat diagonally from the mast to the upper aftmost corner, which it is used to extend and elevate. The lower end of the sprit rests in a becket, called the snotter, which encircles the mast at that place. See cuts under *snotter*2 and spritsail. (b) The bowsprit.

sprit2 (sprit), n. [Appar. a particular use of *sprit*1, a sprout. Cf. *sprot*1, *sprat*1.] 1. A rush: same as *sprat*1, 1.—2. See the quotation.

The object of the rubbing [in the modern Irish process of bleaching linen], which is so essential for many qualities of goods, is to remove small specks of brownish matter called sprits, which may appear here and there throughout the piece. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 518.

sprit3 (sprit), v. i. [A corruption of split, simulating *sprit*1.] To split. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

sprite1 (sprīt), n. [Early mod. E. also spright (erroneously conformed to the spelling of light, night, etc.); < ME. sprite, spryte, sprit, spreit, < OF. esprit, espirit, F. esprit = Sp. espíritu = Pg. espirito = It. spirito, spirto, spirit, < L. spiritus, spirit: see spirit. Doublet of spirit.] 1†. The breath; the vital principle; the spirit.

I thus beheld the king of equal age
Yield up the sprite with wounds so cruelly.
Surrey, Æneid, ii.

2. A disembodied soul; a ghost; a shade.

Thy haire vpon thy head doth stand vpright,
As if thou hadst been hannted with a spright.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 102.

3. An elf; a fairy; a goblin.

Of these am I, who thy protection claim,
A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name.
Pope, R. of the L., i. 106.

4†. The faculty of thought and feeling; the wit; the mind.

When the frantick fitt inflamd his spright,
His force was value. Spenser, F. Q., II. iv. 7.

5†. Frame of mind; mood; humor; spirits: sometimes in the plural.

With weary sprite he stretcht him up, and thus he told his plaint. Surrey, Complaint of a Dying Lover.

Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprites.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 1. 127.

Holy Sprite†. Same as Holy Spirit (which see, under spirit).

sprite[1]† (sprīt), v. t. [< sprite[1], n.] To haunt, as a sprite.

I am sprited with a fool. Shak., Cymbeline, ii. 3. 144.

sprite[2]†, n. [Also spright; a var. form of sprit[1].] A short arrow intended to be fired from a musket.

We had in use at one time for sea-fight short arrows, which they called sprights, without any other heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 704.

sprite[3] (sprīt), n. [A corruption of spite[2], prop. spight*, a var. of speight: see speight.] The green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis. Also woodspite, wood-spack. See cut under popinjay. [Prov. Eng.]

sprited† (sprī'ted), a. [Early mod. E. sprighted; < sprite[1] + -ed[2].] Mentally gifted; quick-witted.

A well sprighted man and wise, that by his wisdome wrought . . . well. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 75.

spritefull, spritefully†, etc. See sprightful, etc.

spriteliness, spritely. See sprightliness, etc.

spriting† (sprī'ting), n. Same as spiriting.

spritishly (sprī'tish-li), adv. [< spritish* (< sprite[1] + -ish[1]) + -ly[2].] In the manner of a sprite or an elf; hence, mischievously; impishly. G. Harvey, Four Letters.

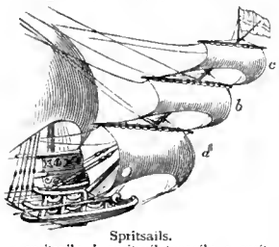
spritsail (sprit'sāl), n. Naut.: (a) A sail extended by a sprit, chiefly used in small boats. See sprit[1], 3. (b) A sail, no longer in use, attached to a yard slung across the bowsprit of large vessels. It was often pierced with a large hole at each of its lower corners, to let out the water with which the belly of it was frequently filled when the ship pitched. Spritsail topsails and spritsail topgallantsails were also formerly used. — Spritsail-yard, a yard formerly slung across the bowsprit to support a spritsail.

Spritsail-rigged Boat.



Spritsails.
a, spritsail; b, spritsail topsail; c, spritsail topgallantsail.

sprittail (sprit'tāl), n. The pintail duck, Dafila acuta. Also spreettail. [Local, U. S.]

sprittle (sprit'l), v. t. Same as spruttle.

spritty (sprit'i), a. [Also (Sc.) sprithy; < sprit[2] + -y[1].] Abounding in sprits or sprats (rushes). [Scotch.]

His dead master . . . was lying in a little sprithy hollow. Blackwood's Mag., XIII. 319.

sprocket (sprok'et), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. One of a series of projections in a grooved recess round the lower part of a ship's capstan, by which the chain-cable is grasped while heaving up anchor.—2. One of the projections on a sprocket-wheel which engage the chain.

Sprocket-wheel.

sprocket-wheel (sprok'et-hwēl), n. [< sprocket + wheel.] In mach., a wheel upon which are radial projections that engage the links of a chain passing over it.

sprong[1]†. An old preterit of spring.

sprong[2] (sprông), n. [Appar. a var. of prong[2].] 1. A prong of a fork, etc.—2. The stump of a tree or a tooth. [Prov. Eng. in both uses.]

sprong[3] (sprông), n. [Cf. sprug, sprig[3].] The sparrow, Passer domesticus. [Prov. Eng.]

sproo, n. See sprew.

sproot (sprōt), n. A dialectal form of sprout.

sprot[1]† (sprot), n. [Also dial. sprote; < ME. sprotte, sprote, < AS. sprota, sprout, stick, nail (= MD. sprot (> Wall. sprot), a sprout, sprote, sporte, a round of a ladder, = OHG. sprozo, sprozzo, MHG. sprozze, a round of a ladder, G. spross, sprout, twig, = Icel. sproti = OSw. sprotte, sprout, twig, stick), < sprcótan, sprout: see sprout, v. Cf. sprout, n., sprit[1], n., sprit[2].] 1. A splinter; a fragment.

Speiris into sprottes sprongе ouer hede.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 5783.

And thei breken here speres so rudely that the Tronchouna flen in sprotes and peces alle aboute the Halle.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 238.

2. A rush: same as sprat[1], 1.

sprot[2] (sprot), n. [Early mod. E. also sprott, sprotte; < ME. sprot, sprott, sprote, a sprat (glossed by L. epimera, halecula, OF. esplene), = MD. sprot = MLG. LG. sprot = Dan. sprut, a sprat; so called as being orig. considered the young of the herring; lit. 'sprout,' i. e. 'young one,' a particular use of the noun represented by sprot[1]. Hence dial., and now reg., sprat: see sprat[2].] A fish: same as sprat[2]. Palsgrave; Day.

sprottle (sprot'l), v. i. A provincial English form of sprattle.

sprout (sprout), v. [< ME. sprouten, sprowten, spruten, < AS. sprūtan*, a var. of spreótan (pret. spreát, pp. sproten) = OFries. spruta = MD. spruyten, D. spruiten = MLG. spruten, LG. spruten = MHG. spriezen, G. spriessen, sprout; not found outside of Teut. Hence ult. (< AS. sprūtan*, spreótan) E. sprit[1], v. (a secondary form of sprout), sprit[1], n., sprot[1], spurt[1], spirt[1], spirtle, spurtle, etc., spout, sputter, etc.] I. intrans. 1. To shoot forth, as a bud from a seed or stock; begin to grow; spring: said of a young vegetable growth, or, by extension, of animal growth.

That leaf faded, but the young buds did sprout on; which afterwards opened into fair leaves. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 407.

A mouth is formed, and tentacles sprout forth around it.
W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 517.

2. To put forth shoots; bear buds.

The Night, to temper Daies exceeding drought,
Moistens our Aire, and makes our Earth to sprout.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 7.

After a shower a meadow sprouts with the yellow buds of the dandelion. T. Winthrop, Love and Skates.

3. To spring up; grow upward.

To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 3. 60.

These Vines I have seene grow so high that they have sprouted cleane above the toppe of the tree.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 102.

4. To spread into ramifications.

Vitriol . . . is apt to sprout with moisture.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 604.

Sprouting fungi. See fungus.

II. trans. 1. To produce or afford by sprouting; grow: as, to sprout antlers; to sprout a mustache.

Trees old and young, sprouting a shady boon
For simple sheep. Keats, Endymion, i.

2. To remove sprouts from: as, to sprout potatoes. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

sprout (sprout), n. [< ME. sproute = MD. spruyte, D. spruite = MLG. LG. sprute, a sprout; from the verb. Cf. sprot[1], sprit[1], n.] 1. A shoot of a plant. (a) The young shoot from a germinating seed, or from a rootstock, tuber, etc., or from the rooting tip of a stolon. (b) In a tree, a shoot, generally from an adventitious bud, as from the root (a sucker), the stump, or the trunk.

Stumps of trees lying out of the ground will put forth sprouts for a time. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 29.

Her [a vine's] highest sproot
Is quickly levelled with her fading root.
B. Jonson, The Barriers.

Specifically—2. pl. Young coleworts.—A course of sprouts, a thrashing with switches or rods; a switching; a birching; a castigation; hence, severe discipline. [Slang, U. S.]—Brussels sprouts, a subvariety of the Savoy cabbage, originating in Belgium, in which the stem, which grows some 4 feet high, produces along its whole length from the axils of the early deciduous leaves branches with miniature heads an inch or two thick. The main head is small and of little value, but the sprouts are highly esteemed. See cut in next column, and compare cut under broccoli.

sprout-cell (sprout'sel), n. In fungi, a cell produced by sprouting.

sprout-chain (sprout'chān), n. In fungi, a chain of cells produced by sprouting.

sprouted (sprou'ted), a. Having sprouts; budded: as, sprouted potatoes.

The wheat was generally sprouted throughout the country, and unfit for bread.
Lady Holland, Sydney Smith, vii.

sprout-gemma (sprout'jem"ä), n. In fungi, a gemma having the form of a septate confervoid filament, the segments of which are capable of sprouting. De Bary.

Brussels Sprouts (Brassica oleracea, var. gemmifera).

sprout-germination (sprout'jėr-mi-nā"shon), n. In bot., the germination of a spore in which a small process with a narrow base protrudes at one or more points on the surface of the spore, then assumes an elongated cylindrical form, and finally is detached as a sprout-cell. De Bary.

sprouting (sprou'ting), n. 1. In fungi, same as pullulation, 2.—2. Same as spitting, 2.

spruce[1]† (sprös), n. [An abbr. of Spruce leather, also Pruce leather, where Spruce or Pruce is an attributive use of the older E. name of Prussia; < ME. Spruce, a variant, with unorig. initial S-, of Pruce, Prus, Pruys (also in comp. Pruslond, Pruyslond), < OF. Pruce (F. Prusse), < ML. Prussia (G. Preussen = D. Pruissen = Sw. Dan. Preussen), Prussia: see Prussian. The name Spruce, Prussia, was not only used in the phrase Spruce leather, or Pruce leather, but also in connection with fashionable apparel ("apparreyled after the manner of Prussia or Spruce," Hall, Henry VIII., an. 1), and also allusively, somewhat like Cockayne, as a land of luxury ("He shall liue in the land of Spruce, milke and hony flowing into his mouth sleeping"—Chapman, "Masque of Middle Temple and Lincoln's Inn"). Hence prob. the adj. spruce[2]. Cf. spruce[2].] Prussian leather. Compare Pruce.

Spruce, corium pumicatum.
Levins, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 182.

spruce[2] (sprös), a. [Sc. also sprush; prob. an extended use of spruce[1], in allusion to fashionable apparel: see spruce[1]. This adjective cannot be derived, as some attempt to derive it, from ME. prous, preus, < OF. prox, F. preux, brave, etc. (see prow[2]), or from E. dial. sprug[1] or spraek.] 1. Smart in dress and appearance; affectiug neatness or dapperness, especially in dress; trim; hence often, with a depreciatory force, dandified; smug.

Now, my spruce companions, is all ready, and all things neat? Shak., T. of the S., iv. 1. 116.

Be not in so neat and spruce array
As if thou mean'st to make it holiday.
Beaumont, Remedy of Love.

A spruce young spark of a Learned Clerk.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 227.

2. Over-fastidious; exceessively nice; finical.

Taffeta phrases, silken terms precise,
Three-piled hyperboles, spruce affectation.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 407.

The niceties of a spruce understanding.
Jer. Taylor, Sermons, III. iii.

=Syn. Foppish, etc. (see finical), smart, jaunty, nice, dandyish.

spruce[2] (sprös), v.; pret. and pp. spruced, ppr. sprucing. [< spruce[2], a.] I. trans. 1. To make spruce; trim or dress so as to present a smart appearance: sometimes followed by up.

Salmacis would not be seen of Hermaphroditus till she had spruced up her self first. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 335.

2. To brown, as the crust of bread, by heating the oven too much. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. intrans. To become spruce; assume or affect an air of smartness in dress: often followed by up. [Chiefly colloq.]

But two or three years after, all of a sudden, Dench, he seemed to kind o' spruce up and have a deal o' money to spend. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 193.

spruce[3] (sprös), n. [An abbr. of spruce-fir.] A coniferous tree of the genus Picea; a spruce-fir. The species are handsome evergreens of a conical habit, often of great economic worth. Some related trees are also called spruce. See specific names below.

For masts, &c., those [firs] of Prussia which we call spruce and Norway are the best. Evelyn, Sylva, I. xxii. § 2.

Black spruce, Picea nigra, a species of spruce growing 50 or 60 feet high, found through British America, the northern United States, and in the Alleghanies to North Carolina. Its light soft wood is largely made into lumber, and is used in construction, in ship-building, for piles, etc. An essence of spruce is obtained from its branches, used in making spruce-beer.—Blue spruce. Same as white spruce (c).—Double spruce, the black spruce.—Douglas spruce, Pseudotsuga Douglasii. See Pseudotsuga, and Oregon pine (under pine[1]).—Essence of spruce, a thick liquid with a bitterish acidulous astringent taste, obtained by boiling and evaporation from the young branches of the Norway spruce, the black spruce, and perhaps other species. It is used in making spruce-beer.—Hemlock spruce. See hemlock-spruce.—Himalayan or Indian spruce, Picea Morinda, of the temperate Himalayas and Afghanistan, a tree 150 feet high, affording a pale straight-grained timber, durable only under shelter.—New Zealand spruce, the imou-pine, or red pine, Dacrydium cupressinum, a beautiful tree with long weeping branches. From the young growth Captain Cook made an antiscorbutic spruce-beer. See imou-pine.—Norway spruce, Picea excelsa, a spruce of middle and northern Europe and northern Asia. It attains a height of 150 feet, forms extensive forests, endures severe cold, and on mountains reaches an elevation of 4,500 feet. Its tough and elastic wood is the white deal of Europe, excellent for building, furniture, masts, spars, etc. It is the source of Burgundy pitch. See pitch[2].—Oil of spruce, oil of hemlock.—Red spruce, a stunted variety (P. rubra) of the black spruce, growing in swamps.—Single spruce. Same as white spruce (a).—Spruce bud-louse, an aphid of the subfamily Chermesinæ, Adelges abieticolens, which deforms the end-shoots of the spruce in the United States, producing large swellings sometimes mistaken for the natural cones. In Europe A. coccineus and A. strobilobius have the same habit.—Spruce bud-worm, the larva of a tortricid moth, as Tortrix fumiferana, which eats the end-buds of the spruce in northeastern parts of the United States, especially in Maine. Other spruce bud-worms are the reddish-yellow, Steganoptycha ratzeburgiana; the black-headed, Teras variana; and the red, Gelechia obliquistrigella.—Spruce cone-worm, the larva of a phycid moth, Pinipestis reniculella, which bores the fresh young cones of spruces in the United States.—Spruce leaf-hopper, an oblong shining-black leaf-hopper, Athysanus abietis, which punctures spruce-needles in May and June in the United States.—Spruce plume-moth, Oxyptilus nigrociliatus. Its larva feeds on spruce, and it is the only member of the Pterophoridæ known to infest any conifer.—Spruce saw-fly, a common saw-fly, Lophyrus abietis, whose pale-green larvæ defoliate spruce, fir, pine, and cedar in the United States, but especially spruce.—Spruce timber-beetle, Xyloterus bivittatus, the most injurious of several scolytids which attack the spruce in the United States. Others are Xyloborus (or Xyleborus) celatus, Crypturgus atomus, Pityophthorus materiarius, and Hylurgops pinifex.—Tideland spruce, Picea Sitchensis, a spruce found from Alaska to California near the coast, best developed near the mouth of the Columbia river, where for 50 miles in each direction it forms a forest-belt 10 or 15 miles wide. It grows from 140 to 180 feet high, and furnishes an important light, soft, and straight-grained timber, largely manufactured into lumber, and used for construction, inside finish, cooperage, dunnage of vessels, etc. Sargent.—White spruce. (a) Picea alba, the most important timber-tree of subarctic America, extending into northern New England, and at its best in northern Montana. Its timber in commerce is not distinguished from that of the black spruce. Also single spruce. (b) P. Engelmanni, the most valuable timber-tree of the central Rocky Mountain region, where it forms extensive forests. Its wood is of a white or pale-yellow color, light and soft, in Colorado affording lumber, fuel, and charcoal. The bark is rich in tannin, which is locally utilized. (c) P. pungens, a rare and local mountain species of the western United States. Also called blue spruce, Colorado blue spruce. Sargent.

Branchlet, with Cone, of Norway Spruce (Picea excelsa).

spruce[4] (sprös), n. An abbreviation of spruce-beer. [Colloq.]

"Come, friend," said Hawk-eye, drawing out a keg from beneath a cover of leaves, . . . "try a little spruce; 'twill . . . quicken the life in your bosom."
J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, vi.

spruce-beer (sprös'bēr), n. [A partial translation and accommodation (as if 'beer of spruce' or spruce-fir (< spruce[3] + beer[1]), or as if Spruce beer, i. e. 'beer of Spruce' or Prussia (< Spruce, or Pruce, Prussia (see spruce[1]), + beer[1])) of G. sprossen-bier, lit. 'sprouts-beer,' obtained from the young sprouts of the black spruce-fir, < sprossen, pl. of spross, a sprout (= E. sprot), + bier = E. beer: see sprot[1] and beer[1].] A beer made from the leaves and small branches of the spruce-fir, or from the essence of spruce, boiled with sugar or molasses, and fermented with yeast. There are two kinds, the brown and the white, of which the latter is considered the better, as being made with white sugar instead of molasses. Spruce-beer is an agreeable and wholesome beverage, and is useful as an antiscorbutic.

spruce-duff (sprös'duf), n. Duff formed by spruce-trees. See duff, 3. [Local, U. S.]

The soil . . . consisted of from two to four feet of what is known among the woodsmen of northern New York as spruce-duff, which is composed of rotten spruce-trees, cones, needles, etc. Pop. Sci. Mo., XIII. 289.

spruce-fir (sprös'fėr), n. [A partial translation and accommodation (as if 'fir of Spruce' or Prussia, < Spruce, or Pruce, Prussia, + fir[1]: see spruce[3], and the quot.) of the G. sprossen-fichte, the spruce-pine or -fir, whose sprouts furnish the beer called spruce-beer, < sprossen, pl. of spross, a sprout, + fichte, pine, fir. Cf. spruce-beer.] Same as spruce[3]: applied somewhat specifically to the Norway spruce.

spruce-grouse (sprös'grous), n. The Canada grouse. See grouse, and cut under Canace.

spruce-gum (sprös'gum), n. A resinous exudation from the balsam-fir, Abies balsamea, used as a masticatory.

spruce-leather† (sprös'leтн'ėr), n. Same as spruce[1].

sprucely (sprös'li), adv. In a spruce manner; smartly; trimly; smugly.

spruceness (sprös'nes), n. The state or character of being spruce; smartness of appearance or dress.

spruce-ocher (sprös'ō'kėr), n. [Appar. < Spruce, Prussia (see spruce[1]), + ocher.] Brown or yellow ocher.

spruce-partridge (sprös'pär'trij), n. The spotted or Canada grouse, Canace or Dendragapus canadensis: so called in New England, Canada, etc., in distinction from the ruffed grouse, there known as the partridge, and because the bird is highly characteristic of the coniferous woods. See cut under Canace.

spruce-pine (sprös'pīn), n. See pine[1].

sprucify (sprö'si-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. sprucified, ppr. sprucifying. [< spruce[2] + -i-fy.] To make spruce or fine; smarten. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, iii. 37. (Davies.) [Rare.]

Sprue, def. 2.

sprue[1] (sprö), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. In casting metal, one of the passages leading from the "skimming-gate" to the mold; also, the metal which fills the sprue or sprue-gate after solidification: same as dead-head, I (a). Also called sprue-gate.—2. A piece of metal or wood used by a molder in making the ingate through the sand. E. H. Knight.

sprue[2], n. See sprew.

sprue-hole (sprö'hōl), n. In casting metal, the gate, ingate, or pouring-hole.

sprug[1] (sprug), v.; pret. and pp. sprugged, ppr. sprugging. [Cf. sprag[3], sprack.] I. trans. To make smart.

II. intrans. To dress neatly: generally with up. [Prov. Eng.]

sprug[2] (sprug), n. [Cf. sprig[2], sprong, and spug, a sparrow; origin uncertain.] The sparrow, Passer domesticus. [Scotch and prov. Eng.]

sprung (sprung). 1. Preterit and past participle of spring.—2. Tipsy; drunk. [Colloq.]

Captain Tuck was borne dead drunk by his reeling troops to the Tavern. Ex-Corporal Whiston with his friends sallied from the store well sprung. S. Judd, Margaret, i. 13.

sprunk†, n. [Origin obscure. Cf. sprunt[2].] A concubine (Child); a sweetheart.

With fryars and monks, and their fine sprunks,
I make my chiefest prey.
The King's Disguise (Child's Ballads, V. 378).

sprunny (sprun'i), a. and n. [Cf. sprunt[2].] I. a. Neat; spruce. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. n.; pl. sprunnies (-iz). A sweetheart. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Where, if good Satan lays her on like thee, Whipp'd to some purpose will thy sprunny be.
Collins, Miscellanies (1762), p. 111.

sprunt[1] (sprunt), v. i. [A var. of sprent: see sprent[1], sprint.] 1. To spring up; germinate.—2. To spring forward or outward.

See; this sweet simpering babe,
Dear image of thyself; see! how it sprunts
With joy at thy approach!
Somerville, Hobbinol, iii. 393.

To sprunt up, to bristle up; show sudden resentment. [Colloq., U. S.]

sprunt[1] (sprunt), n. [< sprunt[1], v. Cf. sprint.] 1†. A leap; a spring; a convulsive struggle.—2. A steep ascent in a road. [Prov. Eng.]—3†. Anything short and not easily bent, as a stiff curl.

"This sprunt its pertness sure will lose When laid," said he, "to soak in ooze."
Congreve, An Impossible Thing.

sprunt[2]† (sprunt), a. [Cf. ME. sprind, < AS. sprind, agile; cf. also sprunt[1].] Active; vigorous; strong; lively; brisk. E. Phillips, 1706.

spruntly† (sprunt'li), adv. 1. Vigorously; youthfully; like a young man. Imp. Dict.—2. Neatly; gaily; bravely.

How do I look to-day? am I not drest Spruntly? B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, iv. 1.

sprusado†, n. [< spruce, with Spanish-seeming term. -ado.] A spruce fellow; a dandy.

The answer of that sprusado to a judge in this Kingdom, a rigid censor of men's habits; who, seeing a neat finical divine come before him in a cloak lined through with plush, encountered him.
Comm. on Chaucer, p. 19 (Todd's Johnson), 1665.

sprush (sprush), a. and v. A Scotch form of spruce[2].

spruttle (sprut'l), v. t. [Also sprittle; freq. of sprout: see sprout, and cf. spurtle.] To spurt; sprinkle. [Prov. Eng.]

spry (sprī), a. [Also obs. or dial. sprey; < Sw. dial. sprygg, very active, skittish; akin to Sw. dial. spräg, spräk, spirited, mettlesome: see sprack.] Active, as in leaping or running; nimble; vigorous; lively. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

The lady liked our Margaret very well. "She was so feat, and spry, and knowin', and good-natered," she said, "she could be made of some use to somebody."
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 4.

spt. An abbreviation of spiritus, spirit.

spud (spud), n. [< ME. spudde, knife; perhaps < Dan. spyd, a spear: see spit[1]. Prob. not connected with spade[1].] 1. A stout knife or dagger.

The one within the lists of the amphitheatre . . . with a spud or dagger was wounded almost to death.
Holland, tr. of Ammianus Marcellinus (1609). (Nares.)

2. A small spade, or a spade having a small blade, with a handle of any length; a small cutting-blade fixed in the axis of its handle, somewhat like a chisel with a very long handle, for cutting the roots of weeds without stooping.

Every day, when I walk in my own little literary garden-plot, I spy some [weeds], and should like to have a spud, and root them out. Thackeray, De Finibus.

3. A spade-shaped tool for recovering lost or broken tools in a tube-well. E. H. Knight.—4. A nail driven into the timbers of a drift or shaft, or fastened in some other way, so as to mark a surveying-station. [Pennsylvania anthracite region.]—5. Any short and thick thing: usually in contempt. Specifically—(a) A piece of dough boiled in fat. Imp. Dict. (b) A potato. [Provincial.] (c) A baby's hand. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.] (d) A short, dwarfish person. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

spud (spud), v. t.; pret. and pp. spudded, ppr. spudding. [< spud, n.] 1. To remove by means of a spud: often with up or out.

At half-past one lunch on Cambridge cream-cheese; then a ride over hill and dale; then spudding up some weeds from the grass.
E. Fitzgerald, quoted in The Academy, Aug. 3, 1889, p. 63.

2. To drill (a hole) by spudding (which see, below).

A 12 inch hole is usually drilled or spudded down to the rock. Sci. Amer., N. S., LV. 116.

spudding (spud'ing), n. [Verbal n. of spud, v.] In oil-well drilling, a method of handling the rope and tools by which the first fifty or sixty feet of an oil-well are bored by the aid of the bull-wheel, the depth not being sufficient to allow of the use of the working-beam for that purpose.

spuddle (spud'l), v. i.; pret. and pp. spuddled, ppr. spuddling. [Freq. of spud.] 1. To dig; grub.

Hee grubs and spuddles for his prey in muddy holes and obscure cavernes. John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

2. To move about; do any trifling matter with an air of business. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

spuddy (spud'i), a. [< spud + -y[1].] Short and fat.

They rest their spuddy hands on their knees, and shake all over like jelly when they laugh.
W. W. Story, Roba di Roma, xv.

spue, v. An old spelling of spew: retained in modern copies of the authorized version of the Bible.

spuilzie, spulzie (spül'yē), n. [Better written spulye, spulyie: Sc. forms of spoil.] Spoil; booty; in Scots law, the taking away of movable goods in the possession of another, against the declared will of the person, or without the order of law.

spuilzie, spulzie (spül'yē), v. [Better written spulye, spulyie.] Same as spoil. [Scotch.]

Are ye come to spulzie and plunder my ha?
Baron of Brakley (Child's Ballads, VI. 192).

spuke, n. and v. Same as spook.

spuller (spul'ėr), n. A Scotch form of spooler.

spulzie, n. and v. See spuilzie.

spume (spūm), n. [< ME. spume, < OF. (and F.) spume = Sp. Pg. espuma = It. spuma, < L. spuma, foam. Cf. foam; cf. also spoom.] Froth; foam; scum; frothy matter raised on liquors or fluid substances by boiling, effervescence, or agitation.

Waters frozen in pans and open glasses after their dissolution do commonly leave a froth and spume upon them.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 1.

spume (spūm), v. i.; pret. and pp. spumed, ppr. spuming. [< spume, n.] 1. To froth; foam.

At a blow hee instelye swapping Thee wyne fresh spuming with a draught swild vp to the bottom.
Stanihurst, Æneid, i. 727.

2†. Same as spoom.

Spumella (spū-mel'ą), n. [NL., dim. of L. spuma, froth, foam: see spume.] The typical genus of Spumellidæ. S. guttula and S. vivipara are two Ehrenbergian species, abundant in fresh and salt infusions.

Spumellaria (spū-me-lā'ri-ą), n. pl. [NL.: see Spumella.] An order of radiolarians. The central capsule is (usually permanently) spherical, more rarely discoid or polymorphous; the nucleus is usually divided only immediately before the formation of spores, into a number of small nuclei; the capsule-membrane is simple and pierced on all sides by innumerable fine pores; and the extracapsularium is a voluminous gelatinous sheath, without phæodium, and usually with zoöxanthella. The skeleton consists of silica, or of a silicate, originally usually forming a central reticulate sphere, later extremely polymorphous, more rarely rudimentary or entirely wanting. The order is divided into several families.

spumellarian (spū-me-lā'ri-ąn), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Spumellaria.

II. n. A member of the Spumellaria.

Spumellidæ (spū-mel'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Spumella + -idæ.] A family of trimastigate pantostomatous infusorians, typified by the genus Spumella. They have one long and two short flagella, and are adherent by a temporary pedicle.

spumeous† (spū'mē-us), a. [< L. spumeus, frothy, < spuma, foam: see spume.] Frothy; foamy; spumous; spumy. Dr. H. More.

spumescence (spū-mes'ens), n. [< spumescen(t) + -ce.] Frothiness; the state of foaming or being foamy. Imp. Dict.

spumescent (spū-mes'ent), a. [< L. spumescen(t-)s, ppr. of spumescere, grow frothy or foamy, < spuma, froth, foam: see spume.] Resembling froth or foam; foaming. Imp. Dict.

spumidt (spū'mid), a. [< LL. spumidus, frothy, foamy, < L. spuma, froth, foam: see spume.] Frothy; spumous. Imp. Dict.

spumiferous (spū-mif'e-rus), a. [= Pg. espumifero = It. spumifero, < L. spumifer, frothing, foaming, < spuma, froth, foam, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Producing foam. Imp. Dict.

spuminess (spū'mi-nes), n. [< spumy + -ness.] The state or character of being spumy. Bailey.

spumous (spū'mus), a. [= F. spumeux = Pr. spumos = Sp. Pg. espumoso = It. spumoso, < L. spumosus, full of froth or foam, < spuma, froth, foam: see spume.] Consisting of froth or scum; foamy. Arbuthnot.

spumy (spū'mi), a. [< spume + -y[1].] Foamy; covered with foam.

The Tiber now their spumy keels divide.
Brooke, Constantia.

Under the black cliff's spumy base.
Cotton (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 217).

The spumy waves proclaim the wat'ry war. Dryden.

spun (spun). Preterit and past participle of spin.

spunget, spungert, etc. Obsolete spellings of sponge, etc.

spunk (spungk), n. [Formerly also sponk; < Ir. Gael. sponc, sponge, spongy wood, touchwood, tinder, < L. spongia, a sponge, < Gr. σπογγιά, σπόγγος, a sponge: see sponge.] 1. Touchwood; tinder; a kind of tinder made from a species of fungus; amadou. Also called punk.

Spunk, or touch-wood prepared, might perhaps make it [powder] russet. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 5.

2. A very small fire; a fiery spark or small flame; also, a lucifer match. [Scotch.]

Oh for a spunk o' Allan's glee!
Burns, First Epistle to Lapraik.

A spunk o' fire in the red-room.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xi.

3. Mettle; spirit; pluck; obstinate resistance to yielding. [Colloq.]

The Squire has got spunk in him.
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, i. 2.

Parsons is men, like the rest of us, and the doctor had got his spunk up. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 67.

spunk (spungk), v. i. [< spunk, n.] To kindle; show a flame or spark: used in phrases.—To spunk out, to come to light; be discovered. [Scotch.]

But what if the thing spunks out?
Noctes Ambrosianæ, Sept., 1832.

To spunk up, to show spirit, energy, or obstinate endurance amid difficulties. [Colloq., U. S.]

spunkie (spung'ki), n. [< spunk + dim. -ie.] 1. A small fire; a spark.—2. The ignis fatuus, or will-o'-the-wisp.—3. A person of a fiery or irritable temper. [Scotch in all uses.]

spunky (spung'ki), a. [< spunk + -y[1].] 1. Showing a small fire or spark. [Scotch.]—2. Haunted: noting a place supposed to be haunted from the frequent appearance of the ignis fatuus. [Scotch.]—3. Having spunk, fire, spirit, or obstinacy; spirited; unwilling to give up, or to acknowledge one's self beaten. [Colloq.]

Erskine, a spunkie Norland billie.
Burns, Prayer to the Scotch Representatives.

There are grave dons, too, in more than one college, who think they are grown again as young and spunky as undergraduates.
Landor, Imag. Conv., William Penn and Lord Peterborough.

spun-out (spun'out), a. Lengthened; unduly protracted.

We can pardon a few awkward or tedious phrases, a few spun-out passages. Grove, Dict. Music, I. 645.

spur (spėr), n. [< ME. spure, spore, < AS. spora, a spur (hand-spora, 'hand-spur,' talon), = MD. spore, D. spoor, a spur, also a track, = MLG. spore = OHG. sporo, MHG. spore, spor, G. sporn = Icel. spori = Sw. sporre = Dan. spore, spur (cf. OF. esporon, esperon, F. éperon = Pr. espero = OSp. esporon, Sp. espolon = Pg. esporão = It. sperone, sprone (> E. obs. speron), also without the suffix, OSp. espuera, Sp. espuela = Pg. espora, a spur, < OHG. sporo, acc. sporon); orig. 'kicker,' from its use on the heel; from the root of spurn, r. Cf. speer[1], spoor, speron, from the same ult. root.] 1. A pointed instrument worn on the heel by a horseman to goad the horse. The earliest mediæval spurs were without rowels (see prick-spur, goad-spur); another form had a ball from which a short point projected, and was called the ball-and-spike spur. The rowel was first introduced in the thirteenth century, but was not common until the beginning of the fourteenth. The spurs of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries are sometimes of extraordinary length on account of the projection of the steel flanchers which kept the heel far from the horse's side. See rowel-spur (with cut), also cut under prick-spur.

Forms of Spurs.
a, knight's spur (12th or 13th century); b, brass spur (Henry IV.); c, long-spiked rowel-spur (Edward IV.); d, long-necked brass spur (Henry VII.); e, steel spur (Henry VIII.).

Wyth-oute spores other spere spakliche he loked.
Piers Ploweman (B), xviii. 12.

Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,
Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,
And here again. Shak., J. C., v. 3. 15.

2. Anything which goads, impels, or urges to action; incitement; instigation; incentive; stimulus: used in this sense in the phrase on or upon the spur of the moment—that is, on a momentary impulse; suddenly; hastily; impromptu.

What need we any spur but our own cause
To prick us to redress? Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 123.

If you were my counsel, you would not advise me to answer upon the spur of the moment to a charge which the basest of mankind seem ready to establish by perjury.
Scott, Guy Mannering, lvi.

3. Some projecting thing more or less closely resembling a horseman's spur in form or position. (a) A root of a tree; a large lateral root.

By the spurs pluck'd up
The pine and cedar. Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 47.

Yet is thy root sincere, sound as the rock,
A quarry of stout spurs and knotted fangs.
Cowper, Yardley Oak, l. 117.

(b) pl. Short small twigs projecting a few inches from the trunk. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] (c) A snag; a spine; specifically, in herpet.: (1) An anal spur. (2) A calcar of some frogs. (d) In entom., a spine or stiff bristle on the leg. (e) In ornith.: (1) A horny modification of the integument of a bird's foot, forming an outgrowth of the nature of a claw, usually sharp-pointed and supported on a bony core, and used as a weapon of offense and defense; a calcar. Such a spur differs from a claw mainly in not ending a digit, but being an offset from the side of the metatarsus; it is also characteristic of though not confined to the male, and is therefore a secondary sexual character. It is familiar as occurring on the shank of the domestic cock and other gallinaceous birds, and is sometimes double or treble, as in Pavo bicalcaratus and in the genera Galloperdix, Ithaginis, and Polyplectron. See cuts under calcarate, Galloperdix, Ithaginis, pea-fowl, Polyplectron, Rasores, and tarsometatarsus. (2) A similar horny outgrowth on the pinion-bone of the wing in various birds, resembling a claw, but differing in being a lateral offset not terminating a digit. It occurs in certain geese, plovers, pigeons, and jacanas, and is double in the screamer. See cuts under jacana, Palamedea, and spur-winged. (f) In sporting, a gaff, or sharp piercing or cutting instrument fastened upon the natural spur of a game-cock in the pit. (g) In mammal., the calcar of some bats. (h) In phys. geog., a ridge or line of elevation subordinate to the main body or crest of a mountain-range; one of the lower divisions of a mountain-mass, when this, as is frequently the case, is divided by valleys or gorges. See mountain-chain.

The ground-plan of the latter massif [Mont Blanc] is one long ridge, which, except at the two extremities, preserves a very uniform direction, and throws out a series of long spurs to the north-west.
Bonney, The Alpine Regions, p. 25.

(i) A climbing-iron used in mounting telegraph-poles and the like. (j) In carp., a brace connecting or strengthening a post and some other part, as a rafter or cross-beam. (k) In arch., any offset from a wall, etc., as a buttress; specifically, the claw or griffe projecting from the torus at each of the angles of the base of early Pointed mediæval columns. (l) In bot., a calcar; a slender hollow projection from some part of a flower, as from the calyx of columbine and larkspur and the corolla of violets. It is usually nectariferous, being the nectary (nectarium) of Linnæus. The term is also rarely applied to a solid spur-like process. See also cuts under nectary, columbine, and Delphinium. (m) In fort., a wall that crosses a part of the rampart and joins it to an anterior work; also, a tower or blockhouse placed in the outworks before the port. (n) In ship-building: (1) A shore or piece of timber extending from the bilgeways, and fayed and bolted to the bottom of the ship on the stocks. (2) A curved piece of timber serving as a half beam to support the deck where a whole beam cannot be placed. (3) A heavy timber extended from a pier or wharf against the side of a ship to prevent the ship from striking against the pier. (o) In hydraul. engin., a wing-dam, or projection built out from a river-bank to deflect the current. (p) On a casting, a fin, or projection of waste metal. (q) A small piece of refractory clay ware with one or more projecting points, used in a kiln to support or separate articles in a saggar during firing, and to prevent the pieces from adhering to the saggar and to each other. Also called stilt. E. H. Knight. (r) In an auger, a projecting point on the edge, which makes the circular cut, from which the chip is removed by the lip. E. H. Knight. See cut under auger. (s) The prong on the arms of some forms of patent anchors, for the purpose of catching on the bottom and making the fluke bite or take hold more quickly. See cut under anchor. (t) In printing, a register-point. [Eng.] (u) In anat., the angle at which the arteries leave a cavity or trunk. Dunglison. (v) In mining, a branch of a vein; a feeder or dropper.—Anal spurs. See anal.—Hot o' the spur. See hot[1].—Order of the Golden Spur, an old order of the papal court, of which the badge was a Maltese cross with rays between the arms, and having a small spur hanging from it. Having sunk into neglect, it was superseded in 1841 by the Order of St. Sylvester.—Scotch spur, in her., a bearing representing a prick-spur without rowel.—Spur-pepper. See Capsicum.—Spur system, in hort., a method of pruning grape-vines in which the ripened wood of the preceding season is cut back close to the old stem or arm, so as to leave spurs bearing one, two, or three buds, the spurs being so selected as to provide for shoots at equal distances. The growing shoots are trained to a position at right angles to the arm, whether this is horizontal or vertical, and are topped after the formation of one, two, or three bunches of grapes upon each.—Spur valerian. See Centranthus.—To win one's spurs, to gain a title to knighthood (because spurs were given as a reward for gallant or valiant action); hence, to establish a title to honorable recognition and reward.—With spur and yard†, with whip and spur—that is, at once.

s, Spur in the flowers of (1) Impatiens fulva, (2) Tropæolum Moritzianum, (3) Orchis mascula, and (4) Myosurus minimus.

Trusteth wel that I
Wel be hire champyon with spore and yerde,
I raughte noght though alle hire foos it herde.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1427.

spur (spėr), r.; pret. and pp. spurred, ppr. spurring. [< ME. sporen, sperren, sporien, spurien = OHG. sporôn, MHG. sporen, sporn, G. spornen = Sw. sporra = Dan. spore, spur; from the noun. Cf. AS. spyrian, spirian, sperian, etc., track, follow out, E. speer: see speer[1].] I. trans. 1. To prick or rasp with the point or rowel of a spur.

He sporyd his hors, and thedyr toke the way.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 217.

He spurred the old horse, and he held him tight.
Kingsley, The Knight's Leap.

2. Figuratively, to urge or incite.

Remember yet, he was first wrong'd, and honour
Spurr'd him to what he did.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, i. 3.

3. To hasten. [Rare.]

Lovers break not hours,
Unless it be to come before their time;
So much they spur their expedition.
Shak., T. G. of V., v. 1. 6.

4. (a) To fasten spurs to, as a horseman's boot, or a solleret. (b) To furnish with spurs, as a rider: as, booted and spurred; to furnish with a spur or gaff, as a game-cock.—5. To prop; support. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. intrans. 1. To prick one's horse with the spur; ride in haste.

Now spurs the lated traveller space
To gain the timely inn.
Shak., Macbeth, iii. 3. 7.

2. Figuratively, to press forward.

Some bold men, though they begin with infinite ignorance and errour, yet, by spurring on, refine themselves.
Grew.

spur-blind†, a. [Appar. a var. of purblind, simulating spur.] Purblind.

Madame, I crave pardon, I am spur-blind, I could scarce see. Lyly, Sapho and Phaon, ii. 2.

spur-bunting (spėr'bun″ting), n. A spur-heeled bunting; a lark-bunting.

spur-flower (spėr'flou″ėr), n. A plant of the genus Centranthus.

spur-fowl (spėr'foul), n. A gallinaceous bird of the genus Galloperdix. There are several Indian and Ceylonese species. See cut under Galloperdix.

spur-gall (spėr'gâl), n. A sore or callous and hairless place, as on the side of a horse, caused by use of the spur.

spur-gall (spėr'gâl), v. t. [< spur-gall, n.] To make a spur-gall on, as a horse.

And yet I beare a burthen like an Asse,
Spur-gall'd and tyr'd by jauncing Bullingbrooke.
Shak., Rich. II. (folio 1623), v. 5. 94.

spur-gally (spėr'gâ″li), a. [< spur-gall + *-y*1.] Spur-galled; wretched; poor. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

spurge1† (spėrj), v. [< ME. spurgen, spourgen, spowrgen, < OF. espurger, espourger = Sp. Pg. expurgar = It. spurgare, < L. expurgare, purge, cleanse: see expurgate, and cf. purge.] I. trans. To purge; cleanse; rid.

Of flyes men mow hem weyl spourge.
Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, l. 10918.

II. intrans. To purge; froth; emit froth; especially, to work and cleanse itself, as ale.

By reason that . . . the ale and byere haue palled, and were nought by cause such ale and biere hathe taken wynde in spurging. Arnold's Chron., p. 85.

spurge2 (spėrj), n. [< ME. sporgen, spowrge, < OF. spurge, espurge, spurge, < OF. espurger, purge: see *spurge*1.] A plant of the genus Euphorbia. Several species have special names, chiefly used in books; a few related or similar plants also are called spurges. Exotic species are better known as euphorbias.—Alleghany-mountain spurge. See Pachysandra. — Branched spurge, a rubiaceous shrub, Erædea littoralis, of the sea-shores of the West Indies and Florida, a prostrate smooth plant with four-angled branches, and yellowish flowers sessile in the upper axils.—Caper-spurge, Euphorbia Lathyris, a smooth glaucous herb native in southern Europe and western central Asia, cultivated in gardens, thence sometimes escaping. It is singular in the genus for its opposite leaves, and has a four-rayed, then forking, umbel. Its young fruit is sometimes substituted for capers, and its seeds contain an oil formerly used in medicine. Also wild caper, moletree, and myrtle-spurge. —Cypress-spurge, a common garden plant, Euphorbia Cyparissias, with tufted stems and yellowish inflorescence, cultivated for its foliage, which consists of crowded linear leaves suggesting cypress. It is a native of Europe, running wild in the eastern United States.—Flowering spurge, a conspicuous species, Euphorbia corollata, of eastern North America, a rather slender plant 2 or 3 feet high, with an umbel of about five forks, the rays repeatedly forking into twos or threes. The involucre has five white appendages appearing like petals. The root has properties similar to those of the ipecac-spurge. Also (with other species) called milk-weed.—Hyssop-spurge, the purple spurge, Euphorbia Peplis, a European maritime species spreading flat on the sand.—Indian tree-spurge. Same as milk-hedge.—Ipecac-spurge, ipecacuanha-spurge, Euphorbia Ipecacuanhæ, found in the United States from Connecticut to Florida, a plant with many low stems from a long perpendicular root. The root has an active emetic and purgative property, but in large doses tends to produce excessive nausea and purging, and is inferior to true ipecac.—Irish spurge. See makinboy.—Leafy spurge, Euphorbia Esula, an Old World species resembling the cypress-spurge, but larger, with commonly lanceolate leaves.—Myrtle-spurge. See caper-spurge.—Petty spurge, a low branching European species, Euphorbia Peplus.—Purple spurge. See hyssop-spurge.—Sea-spurge, or seaside spurge, Euphorbia Paralias, of European sea-sands.—Slipper-spurge, the slipper-plant. See Pedilanthus.—Spotted spurge, a prostrate American species, Euphorbia maculata, with a dark spot on the leaf: also called milk-purslane. The large spotted spurge is E. Preslii, sometimes called black spurge or purslane. See purslane.—Spurge hawk-moth, a handsome sphinx, Deilephila euphorbiæ, whose larva feeds on the sea-spurge: an English collectors' name.—Sun-spurge, Euphorbia Helioscopia, an erect annual 6 or 8 inches high, whose flowers follow the sun. Also called cat's-milk, little-good (Scotland), and wartweed or wartwort (Prov. Eng.).—Wood-spurge, Euphorbia amygdaloides, of Europe and western Asia.

Flowering Spurge (Euphorbia corollata).

a, a leaf; b, a flower cluster of five male and one female flower; c, flower-cluster, but younger, showing the cup-like base; d, part of the involucre, showing the gland at its base; e, a male flower; f, the fruit, consisting of three carpels.

spur-gear (spėr'gēr), n. Same as spur-gearing.

spur-gearing (spėr'gēr″ing), n. Gearing in Spur-gearing.

which spur-wheels are employed. See gearing, 2.

spurge-creeper (spėrj'krē″pėr), n. A nettle-creeper: same as nettle-bird.

spurge-flax (spėrj'flaks), n. A shrub, Daphne Gnidium, a native of southern Europe: so called from its acrid property and fibrous bark.

spurge-laurel (spėrj'lâ″rel), n. A laurel-like shrub, Daphne Laureola, of southern and western Europe. It has an acrid property suggesting spurge; its fibrous bark is utilized for paper-making.

spurge-nettle (spėrj'net″l), n. A plant, Jatropha urens. See Jatropha.

spurge-olive (spėrj'ol″iv), n. The mezereon.

spurgewort (spėrj'wėrt), n. [< late ME. spurge-woort: see *spurge*2 and *wort*1.] 1. Any plant of the order Euphorbiaceæ. Lindley.—2†. The fetid iris, Iris fœtidissima.

spurging† (spėr'jing), n. [Verbal n. of *spurge*1, v.] Purging. B. Jonson, Masque of Queens.

spur-hawk (spėr'hâk), n. A dialectal form of sparhawk for sparrow-hawk. [Eng.]

spur-heeled (spėr'hēld), a. In ornith., having a very long straightened hind claw; lark-heeled: specifically noting the coucals or cuckoos of the genus Centropus.

spuriæ (spū'ri-ē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. (sc. pennæ, feathers) of spurius, spurious: see spurious.] The packet of feathers growing on the bastard wing, winglet, or alula; the bastard quills, composing the alula. See cut under alula.

spurious (spū'ri-us), a. [= Sp. Pg. espurio = It. spurio, < L. spurius, of illegitimate birth, hence in gen. not genuine, false; perhaps akin to Gr. σπορά, seed, offspring, < σπείρειν, sow: see *spore*2.] 1. Not legitimate; bastard: as, spurious issue.

Iler spurious first-born. Milton, S. A., l. 391.

2. Not proceeding from the true source or from the source pretended; not being what it pretends or appears to be; not genuine; counterfeit; false; adulterated.

Spurious gems our hopes entice,
While we scorn the pearl of price.
Cowper, Self-diffidence (trans.).

3. In zoöl.: (a) False; resembling a part or organ, but not having its function: as, spurious eyes or limbs. (b) Having the functions of an organ, but morphologically different from it: as, the spurious legs, or prolegs, of a caterpillar. (c) Aborted or changed so that the normal functions no longer exist: as, the spurious or aborted front legs of certain butterflies. (d) Erroneous; incorrectly established: as, a spurious genus or species. See pseudogenus.—4. In bot., false; counterfeit; apparent only.—Spurious Baltimore, the orchard-oriole, Icterus spurius, formerly supposed to be a variety of the Baltimore oriole. Also called bastard Baltimore.—Spurious claw, in entom., same as empodium.—Spurious dissepiment, in bot., a partition in an ovary or pericarp not formed by parts of the carpels, but by an outgrowth commonly from the back of the carpel. See dissepiment.—Spurious hermaphrodites. See hermaphrodite, 1.—Spurious ocellus, a circular spot of color without any well-defined central spot or pupil.—Spurious pareira. See pareira.—Spurious primary, in ornith., the first or outermost primary or remex of a bird's wing which has at least ten primaries and the first one very short, rudimentary, or functionless. Also called spurious quill.—Spurious proposition, rainbow, stemma, etc. See the nouns.—Spurious sarsaparilla. See Hardenbergia.—Spurious vein, in entom., a faintly indicated vein or nervure of the wing, traceable only by a strong reflected light, particularly of certain hymenopters.—Spurious wing, in ornith., the ala spuria, or bastard wing; the alula. See spuriæ, and cut under alula. [This use of spurious has no reference to the condition of a first primary so called. See above.]=Syn. 2. Spurious, Supposititious, and Counterfeit agree in expressing intent to deceive, except that counterfeit may be used with figurative lightness where no dishonorable purpose is implied. Spurious, not genuine, expresses strong disapprobation of the deception, successful or attempted. Supposititious applies only to that which is substituted for the genuine; it thus expresses a class under the spurious: a supposititious work of Athanasius is not one that is supposed to have been written by him, but one that is palmed off upon the public as being the genuine text of a work that he is known to have written; a supposititious child is a changeling; was the Tichborne claimant the genuine or a supposititious Sir Roger? Counterfeit applies also to a class under the spurious—namely, to that which is made in attempted imitation of something else: as, a counterfeit coin, bank-note, signature. Chatterton's manuscripts were spurious, but not supposititious; as they were not exact imitations of any particular manuscripts of early days, they would hardly be called counterfeit. See factitious.

spuriously (spū'ri-us-li), adv. In a spurious manner; counterfeitly; falsely.

spuriousness (spū'ri-us-nes), n. 1. Illegitimacy; the state of being bastard, or not of legitimate birth: as, spuriousness of issue.—2. The state or quality of being spurious, counterfeit, false, or not genuine: as, the spuriousness of drugs, of coin, or of writings.

spur-leather (spėr'leтн″ėr), n. A strap by which a spur is secured to the foot.

I could eat my very spur-leathers for anger!
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. 1.

spur-legged (spėr'leg″ed or -legd), a. Having spurs or spines on the legs or feet. The Leptidæ are known as spur-legged flies.

spurless (spėr'les), a. [< spur + -less.] Without a spur, in any sense.

spurling (spėr'ling), n. A spelling of sparling.

spurling-line (spėr'ling-līn), n. Naut.: (a) A line connected with the axis of a wheel by which a telltale or index is made to show the position of the helm. (b) A rope stretched across between the two forward shrouds, having thimbles spliced into it to serve as fair-leaders for the running rigging.

spur-money† (spėr'mun″i), n. Money exacted for wearing spurs in church. See the quotation.

Our cathedrals (and above all St. Paul's) were, in Jonson's time, frequented by people of all descriptions, who, with a levity scarcely credible, walked up and down the aisles, and transacted business of every kind, during divine service. To expel them was not possible; such, however, was the noise occasioned by the incessant jingling of their spur-rowels, that it was found expedient to punish those who approached the body of the church, thus indecently equipped, by a small fine, under the name of spur-money, the exaction of which was committed to the beadles and singing-boys.
Gifford, Note to B. Jonson's Every Man out of his Humour, ii. 1.

spurn1 (spėrn), v. [< ME. spurnen, spornen, < AS. speornan (spornan*, ge-speornan, ge-spornan, spurnan*, in Somner, not authenticated), also in comp. æt-speornan, æl-spornan (pret. spearn, pl. spurnon, pp. spornen) = OS. spurnan = OHG. spurnan = Icel. sporna, spyrna, also sperna, kick against, spurn with the feet, = L. spernere, despise; ult. connected with spur.] I. trans. 1. To kick against; kick; drive back or away with the foot.

And Galashin with his fote spurned his body to gronnde.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 199.

Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus?
Shak., C. of E., ii. 1. 83.

2†. To strike against.

Aungils in hondis schullen beere thee,
Lest thou spurne thi foot at a stoon.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 43.

3. To reject with disdain; scorn to receive or consort with; treat with contempt.

O how my soul would spurn this ball of clay,
And loathe the dainties of earth's painful pleasure!
Quarles, Emblems, v. 13.

II. intrans. 1. To kick.

I purpose not to spurn against the prick, nor labour to set up that which God pulleth down.
Bp. of Ely, in J. Gairdner's Richard III., lv.

2†. To dash the foot against something; light on something unexpectedly; stumble.

No wight on it sporneth
That erst was nothynge, into nought it torneth.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 797.

The maid . . . ran upstairs, but, spurning at the dead body, fell upon it in a swoon. Martinus Scriblerus, i. 8.

3†. To dash; rush.—4. To manifest disdain or contempt in rejecting anything; make contemptuous opposition; manifest contempt or disdain in resistance.

It is very sure that they that be good will bear, and not spurn at the preachers.
Latimer, 3d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

Thou art regardless both of good and shame,
Spurning at virtue and a virtuous name.
Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, v. 3.

spurn[1] (spėrn), n. [< ME. spurn, sporn; < spurn[1], v.] 1. A blow with the foot; a kick.

I'le tosse that heele a yard above his head
That offers but a spurne.
Heywood, Royal King (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 31).

2†. A stumble; a fall. Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 19.—3. Disdainful rejection; contemptuous treatment.

The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes.
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 1. 73.

4. In mining, one of the narrow pillars or connections left between the holings, and not cut away until just before the withdrawal of the sprags. [South Staffordshire coal-field, England.]

spurn[2] (spėrn), n. [A var. of spur, after spurn[1], v. Cf. G. sporn, spur, orig. an acc. form: see spur, n.] 1. A spur. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A piece of wood having one end inserted in the ground, and the other nailed at an angle to a gate-post, for the purpose of strengthening or supporting it. [Prov. Eng.]

spurn[2]† (spėrn), v. t. [< spurn[2], n. Cf. spurn[1], v.] To spur.

The Faery quickly raught
His poynant speare, and sharply gan to spurne
His fomy steed. Spenser, F. Q., III. i. 5.

spurn[3] (spėrn), n. [Early mod. E. spoorn, spoorne; origin obscure.] An evil spirit. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

spurner (spėr'nėr), n. [< spurn[1] + -er[1].] One who spurns or rejects.

spurn-point† (spėrn'point), n. [< spurn[1] + point.] An old game, of uncertain nature.

He stakes heaven at spurnpoint, and trips cross and pile whether ever he shall see the face of God or no.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 743.

spurnwater (spėrn'wâ″tėr), n. [< spurn[1], v., + obj. water.] Naut., a V-shaped barrier or breakwater, from 1 to 2 feet or more high, erected on sea-going vessels forward of the foremast, to shed water coming over the bows.

spur-pruning (spėr'prö″ning), n. A mode of pruning trees by which one or two eyes of the previous year's wood are left and the rest cut off, so as to leave spurs or short rods. Compare spur-system, under spur.

spurred (spėrd), a. [< spur + -ed[2].] 1. Wearing spurs: as, a spurred horseman.—2. In ornith.: (a) Having unusually long claws: as, the spurred towhee, Pipilo megalonyx. S. F. Baird. [Rare.] (b) Having spurs; calcarate. See spur, n., 3 (e) (1). (c) Spur-heeled. (d) Spur-winged.—3. In mammal., herpet., and entom., having spurs of any kind; calcarate.—4. In bot., producing or provided with a spur; calcarate.—Spurred butterfly-pea. See pea[1].—Spurred chameleon, Chamæleon calcifer.—Spurred corolla. See corolla.—Spurred gentian. See gentian.—Spurred rye. See rye[1] and ergot[1], 2.—Spurred tree-frog or tree-toad, Polypedetes eques, of Ceylon, having a calcar.

spurrer (spėr'ėr), n. 1. One who uses spurs.—2. Somebody or something that incites or urges on.

I doubt you want a spurrer-on to exercise and to amusements. Swift, To Pope, July 16, 1728.

spurrey, n. See spurry[2].

spurrier (spėr'iėr), n. [Early mod. E. also sporyor; < ME. sporier, sporyer, sporer; < spur + -ier[1].] One whose occupation is the making of spurs.

Ods so, my spurrier! put them on, boy, quickly.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, i. 1.

spur-royal (spėr'roi″al), n. [Also spur-ryal, spur-rial; < spur + royal. Cf. ryal.] An English gold coin issued by James I., and worth 15*s.* or 16*s.* 6*d.* (about $3.63 or $3.99). It was so named from the resemblance of the sun on its reverse to the rowel of a spur.

Obverse.

Reverse.

Spur-royal of James I.—British Museum. (Size of the original.)

She has nine spur-royals, and the servants say she hoards old gold.
Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, i. 1.

spurry[1]† (spėr'i), a. [< spur + -y[1].] Radiating, like the points on a spur-rowel. Chapman, Iliad, xix. 367.

spurry[2] (spur'i), n. [Also spurrey; < OF. spurrie, < MD. sporie, spurie, speurie, spurrie, D. spurrie, spurry; cf. G. spörgel, spergel (> Sw. Dan. spergel), < ML. spergula, spurry; origin obscure.] A plant of the genus Spergula. The common species is S. arvensis, the corn-spurry, from whose seeds a lamp-oil has sometimes been extracted. Knotted spurry, more properly called knotted pearlwort, is Sagina nodosa. The lawn-spurry (or properly lawn-pearlwort) is Sagina glabra. The sand-spurry is of the genus Spergularia. See Spergula.

Spurrie [F.], spurry, or frank; a Dutch herb and an excellent fodder for cattel. Cotgrave.

spur-shell (spėr-shel), n. A shell of the genus Imperator (formerly called Calcar): so named from its resemblance to the rowel of a spur. The term extends to some similar trochiform shells. See cut under Imperator.

spur-shore (spėr'shōr), n. Naut., same as spur, 3 (m) (1).

spurt[1], spirt[1] (spėrt), r. [Both spellings are in use, spirt being etymologically more correct, and spurt appar. the more common spelling; a transposed form of sprit[1] (like bird[1], bird[2], transposed forms of brid, bride[1]): see sprit[1]. The word is prob. confused with spurt[2], spirt[2].] I. intrans. 1†. To sprout; shoot.

Shall a few sprays of us, . . .
Our scions, put in wild and savage stock,
Spirt up so suddenly into the clouds,
And overlook their grafters?
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 5. 8.

Did you ever see a fellow so spurted up in a moment? He has got the right ear of the duke, the prince, princess, most of the lords, but all the ladies.
Marston, The Fawne, ii. 1.

2. To gush or issue out suddenly in a stream, as liquor from a cask; rush with sudden force from a confined place in a small jet or stream.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spirts in the gardener's eyes who turns the cock.
Pope, Dunciad, ii. 178.

The Prince's blood spirted upon the scarf.
Tennyson, Geraint.

II. trans. To throw or force out in a jet or stream; squirt: as, to spurt water from the mouth; to spurt liquid from a tube.

With toonge three forcked furth spirts fyre.
Stanihurst, Æneid (ed. Arber, p. 59), ii.

Toads are sometimes observed to exclude or spirt out a dark and liquid matter behind.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 13.

spurt[1], spirt[1] (spėrt), n. [< spurt[1], spirt[1], r. Cf. sprout, sprit[1], sprot[1], n.] 1†. A shoot; a sprout; a bud.

These nuts . . . have in the mids a little chit or spirt.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xv. 22.

2. A forcible gush of liquid from a confined place; a jet.

Water, dash'd from fishy stalls, shall stain
His hapless coat with spirts of scaly rain.
Gay, Trivia, iii. 106.

3. A brief and sudden outbreak.

A sudden spurt of woman's jealousy.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

4. A school of shad. [Connecticut.]

spurt[2], spirt[2] (spėrt), v. i. [Both spellings are in use, spirt being etymologically the more correct, and spurt the more common spelling; also rarely spert; a transposed form of sprit* or spret* (cf. E. dial. sprut, jerk), < Icel. spretta (for sprenta*) (pret. spratt, for sprant*), start, spring, also sprout, spout, = Sw. spritta, start, startle, = MHG. sprenzen, spout, crack; the orig. nasal appearing in sprent, ME. sprenten, bound, leap, and the noun sprint, dial. sprunt, a convulsive struggle, etc.: see sprent, sprint.] To make a short, sudden, and exceptional effort; put forth one's utmost energy for a short time, especially in racing.

Cambridge spurled desperately in turn, . . . and so they went, fighting every inch of water. C. Reade, Hard Cash, i.

spurt[2], spirt[2] (spėrt), n. [Cf. Icel. sprettr, a spurt, spring, bound, run; from the verb. Cf. sprunt[1], sprint.] 1. A short, sudden, extraordinary effort for an emergency; a special exertion of one's self for a short distance or space of time, as in running, rowing, etc.: as, by a fine spurt he obtained the lead.

The long, steady sweep of the so-called paddle tried him almost as much as the breathless strain of the spurt.
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, I. vi.

In the race of fame, there are a score capable of brilliant spurts for one who comes in winner after a steady pull with wind and muscle to spare.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 281.

2†. A short period; a brief interval of time.

Heere for a spirt linger, no good opportunitye scaping.
Stanihurst, Æneid, iii. 453.

He lov'd you but for a spurt or so.
Marston and Webster, Malcontent, i. 6.

spurtle[1], spirtle[1] (spėr'tl), v. t. and i. [Freq. of spurt[1], spirt[1]; in origin a transposed form of sprittle, spruttle: see spurt[1], spirt[1], sprit[1], spruttle, etc.] To shoot in a scattering manner; spurt. [Rare.]

The brains and mingled blood were spirtled on the wall.
Drayton, Polyolbion, ii. 283.

spurtle[2], spirtle[2] (spėr'tl), n. [Dim. of sprit[1]. Cf. spurtle[1], spirtle[1].] A stick used for stirring. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

She left the spurtle sticking in the porridge.
Geo. MacDonald, Warlock o' Glenwarlock, xlix.

spurtle-blade (spėr'tl-blād), n. A broadsword. [Scotch.]

It 's tauld he was a sodger bred, . . .
But now he 's quat the spurtle blade.
Burns, Captain Grose's Peregrinations.

spur-track (spėr'trak), n. A short track leading from a line of railway, and connected with it at one end only.

spur-tree (spėr'trē), n. A West Indian shrub or small tree. Petitia Domingensis. Also called yellow fiddlewood.

spurway (spėr'wā), n. A horse-path; a narrow way; a bridle-road; a way for a single beast. [Prov. Eng.]

spur-whang (spėr'hwang), n. A spur-leather. Scott, Monastery. [Scotch.]

spur-wheel (spėr'hwēl). n. The common form of cog-wheel, in which the cogs are radial and peripheral, and made to engage corresponding cogs on another wheel. Compare cut under pinion. E. H. Knight.

Spur-wheel.

spurwing (spėr'wing), n. A spur-winged bird. Especially—(a) A jacana, or any bird of the family Jacanidæ or Parridæ, of which the spur on the wing is a characteristic. See cut under jacana. (b) A spur-winged goose. See cut under Plectropterus. (c) A spur-winged plover. See Chettusia and spur-winged.

spur-winged (spėr'wingd), a. Having a horny spur on the pinion, as various birds. It is a weapon of offense and defense. It is sometimes double, as is well shown in the cut under Palamedea. See also cuts under jacana and Plectropterus.—Spur-winged goose, a species of Plectropterus, as P. gambensis.—Spur-winged plovers, those plovers or lapwings, of the family Charadriidæ, and of several different genera, in which a spur is developed on the wing (including some species of these genera in which such a spur fails to develop). Wing-spurs are more frequent in this than in any other family of birds (excepting the related Jacanidæ or Parridæ). None occur, however, in the true plovers (of the genera Chara- drius, Ægialites, Eudromias, Squatarola, etc.); they are commonest among those plovers which are related to the lapwing of Europe (Vanellus cristatus, which, however, has none), and which have a hind toe and often wattles on the face. The presence of spurs and wattles is often coincident. South American spur-winged plovers, with hind toe and no wattles, constitute the genus Belonopterus; they are two, the Cayenne and the Chilian lapwings, B. cayennensis and B. chilensis; both are crested. The type of the genus Hoplopterus is the Egyptian spur-winged plover, H. spinosus, with large spurs, a crest, no hind toe, and no wattles; it has when adult the whole crown, chin, throat, breast, flanks, and legs black, and the greater wing-coverts and some other parts white. It inhabits especially northern Africa, abounds in Egypt and Nubia, and extends into parts of Europe and Asia. It is among the birds supposed to have been a basis of the trochilus of the ancients (compare crocodile-bird, sicsac, and cut under Pluvianus). It is represented in South Africa by the black-backed spurred lapwing, H. speciosus, with large spurs and the top of the head white. The Indian spur-winged lapwing, H. ventralis, has a black cap, a black patch on the belly in white surroundings, and large spurs. Two South American forms, with spurs, but no wattles, crest, or hind toe, are the Peruvian bronze-winged lapwing, H. resplendens, and the little white-winged, H. cayanus (or stolatus, if the term cayanus be thought too near cayennensis); each of these has been made the basis of a different generic name. In the type of the genus Chettusia, C. gregaria (see cut under Chettusia), and several related species, a hind toe is present, and neither spurs nor wattles are developed; but the name has been used to cover various species with wattles and spurs, more properly separated under the term Lobivanellus. In this group it is the rule that large wattles are associated with well-developed spurs, for in those species which have very small wattles the spurs are almost or quite obsolete. Variations in these respects, and in the presence or absence of the hind toe, have caused the erection of other genera. (See Sarciophorus, Xiphidiopterus.) Five of the best-marked species of Lobivanellus proper, with large spurs, large wattles, and a hind toe, are the following: L. senegallus, of the Ethiopian region north of the equator; L. lateralis, of South Africa; L. cucullatus, of Java, Sumatra, etc.; L. personatus, of northern Australia, New Guinea, and some other islands; and L. lobatus, of eastern Australia from Rockingham Bay to Tasmania (see cut under wattled).

Egyptian Spur-winged Plover (Hoplopterus spinosus).

spurwort (spėr′wėrt), n. [< spur + wort[1].] The field-madder, Sherardia arvensis: so called from its whorls of leaves, likened to the rowel of a spur.

sput (sput), n. [Origin obscure.] A thimble or annular plate used to reinforce a hole in a boiler. E. H. Knight.

sputa, n. Plural of sputum.

sputation† (spū-tā′shon), n. [= F. sputation = Pg. esputação, < L. sputare, pp. sputatus, spit, spit out, < spuere, spit: see spew.] The act of spitting: that which is spit. Harvey.

sputative† (spū′tą-tiv), a. [< L. sputare, spit, spit out (see sputation), + -ive.] Pertaining to spitting; characterized by spitting. Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 370.

sputcheon (spuch′on), n. [Origin obscure.] In a sword-scabbard, the inner part of the mouthpiece, which holds the lining in place. E. H. Knight.

sputet† (spūt), v. i. [< ME. spute, sputi, by apheresis from dispute.] To dispute.

Whatt! thay sputen & speken of so spitous fylthe.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 845.

sputter (sput′ėr), v. [Also in var. splutter; cf. LG. spruttern, sputtern, sprinkle, G. sprudeln, spout, squirt; freq. of the verb represented by spout. Cf. spurtle[1], spirtle[1].] I. intrans. 1. To spit, or eject saliva from the mouth in small or scattered bits; hence, to throw out moisture in small detached parts and with small explosions; emit small particles, as of grease, soot, etc., with some crackling or noise.

They could neither of 'em speak for Rage; and so fell a sputt'ring at one another like two roasting Apples.
Congreve, Way of the World, iv. 8.

Like the green wood,
That, sputtering in the flame, works outward into tears.
Dryden, Cleomenes, i. 1.

2. To speak so rapidly and vehemently as to seem to spit out the words, as in excitement or anger.

The soul, which to a reptile had been changed,
Along the valley hissing takes to flight,
And after him the other speaking sputters.
Longfellow, tr. of Dante's Inferno, xxv. 138.

II. trans. 1. To emit forcibly in small or scattered portions, as saliva, flame, etc.; spit out noisily.

A poisoned tongue cannot forbear to sputter abroad his venom. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 73.

Thus sourly wail'd he, sputt'ring dirt and gore;
A burst of laughter echo'd through the shore.
Pope, Iliad, xxiii. 921.

2. To emit in small particles or amounts with slight explosions: as, the candle sputters smoke; a green stick sputters out steam.—3. To utter rapidly and with indistinctness; jabber.

In the midst of caresses . . . to sputter out the basest accusations! Swift.

sputter (sput′ėr), n. [< sputter, v.] 1. The act of sputtering.—2. That which is thrown off or ejected in sputtering.

She pouted out her blubber-lips, as if to bellows up wind and sputter into her horse-nostrils.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, IV. vii. (Davies.)

3. The noise made by a person who or a thing which sputters; hence, bustle; ado; excited talk; squabble.

What a deal of Pother and Sputter here is, between my Mistress and Mr. Myrtle, from mere Punctilio!
Steele, Conscious Lovers, iv. 1.

sputterer (sput′ėr-ėr), n. One who or that which sputters.

sputum (spū′tum), n.; pl. sputa (-tą). [NL., < L. sputum, that which is spit out, spittle, < spuere, pp. sputus, spit: see spew.] 1. Spittle; a salival discharge from the mouth.—2. In pathol., that which is expectorated or ejected from the lungs: used also in the plural, in designation of the individual masses.—Æruginous sputa, very green expectoration.—Globular sputa, nummular sputa.—Rusty sputa, sputa tinged with blood, and characteristic of some stages of pneumonia.—Sputum coctum, purulent, loose sputum, forming itself into masses, as of the later stages of bronchitis.—Sputum crudum, scant, tenacious, mucous sputum, as of the early stage of bronchitis.

spy (spī), v.; pret. and pp. spied, ppr. spying. [< ME. spyen, spien, by apheresis from espyen, espien, < OF. espier = It. spiare = MD. spien, < OHG. spehōn, MHG. spehen, G. spähen = Icel. speja, spæja, watch, observe, spy, = L. speculari, look, = Gr. σκέπτεσθαι, look, = Skt. √spaç, √paç, see. From the Teut. root are also ult. espy, spial, espial, spion, espionage, etc.; from the L. root ult. E. species, spectacle, etc.; from the Gr., skeptic, scope[3], etc.] I. trans. 1. To discover at a distance, or from a position of concealment; gain sight of; see; espy.

As they forward went,
They spyde a knight fayre pricking on the playne.
Spenser, F. Q., III. viii. 44.

2. To discover by close search or examination; gain a knowledge of by artifice.

Look about with your eyes; spy what things are to be reformed in the Church of England. Latimer. (Imp. Dict.)

His master's eye
Peers not about, some secret fault to spy.
Crabbe, Works, I. 40.

3. To explore; view, inspect, or examine secretly, as a country: usually with out.

Moses sent to spy out Jaazer, and they took the villages thereof. Num. xxi. 32.

4†. To ask; inquire; question.

Theȝ folke had farly of my fare,
And what I was full faste thei spied.
They askid yf I a prophete ware.
York Plays, p. 173.

Thenne watz spyed & spured [speered] vpon spare wyse.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 901.

II. intrans. 1. To search narrowly; scrutinize; pry.

It is my nature's plague
To spy into abuses. Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 147.

2. To play the spy; exercise surveillance.

This evening I will spy upon the bishop, and give you an account to-morrow morning of his disposition.
Donne, Letters, lxxvii.

spy (spī), n.; pl. spies. [< ME. spy, spie, short for espie, aspye, espye (= MD. spie), < OF. espie, a spy; from the verb: see spy, v. Cf. spion.] 1. A person who keeps a constant watch on the actions, motions, conduct, etc., of others; one who secretly watches what is going on.

This sour informer, this bate-breeding spy.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 655.

He told me that he had so good spies that he hath had the keys taken out of De Witt's pocket when he was a-bed, and his closet opened, and papers brought to him, and left in his hands for an hour, and carried back and laid in the place again, and keys put into De Witt's pocket again. Pepys, Diary, IV. 72.

2. A secret emissary who goes into an enemy's camp or territory to inspect his works, ascertain his strength and his intentions, watch his movements, and report thereon to the proper officer. By the laws of war among all civilized nations a spy is liable to capital punishment.

On the morowe erly Gawein sente a spie for to se what the saisnes diden that thei hadde lefte at the brigge of dione. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 290.

Edmund Palmer, an officer in the enemy's service, was taken as a spy lurking within our lines; he has been tried as a spy, condemned as a spy, and shall be executed as a spy.
Gen. Israel Putnam, To Sir Henry Clinton, Aug. 7, 1777.

3†. The pilot of a vessel.—4†. An advanced guard; a forerunner. [Rare.]

Since knowledge is but sorrow's spy,
It is not safe to know.
Sir W. Davenant, The Just Italian, v. 1 (song).

[In the following passage, spy is supposed by some to mean that which precedes and announces the time for the assassination of Banquo, by others the very eye, the exact moment.

I will advise you where to plant yourselves;
Acquaint you with the perfect spy o' the time,
The moment on 't; for 't must be done to-night.
Shak., Macbeth, iii. 1. 130.]

5†. A glance; look; peep. [Rare.]

Each others equall puissaunce envies,
And through their iron sides with cruell spies
Does seeke to perce. Spenser, F. Q., I. ii. 17.

6†. An eye.

With her two crafty spyes
She secretly would search each daintie lim.
Spenser, F. Q., III. i. 36.

If these be true spies which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight. Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 259.

= Syn. 2. Emissary, Spy (see emissary), scout.

spyal†, n. See spial.

spyboat (spī′bōt), n. A boat sent to make discoveries and bring intelligence. [Rare.]

Giving the colour of the sea to their spyboats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti.
Arbuthnot.

spycraft (spī′krâft), n. The art or practices of a spy; the act or practice of spying. [Rare.]

All attempts to plot against the Government were rendered impracticable by a system of vigilance, jealousy, spycraft, sudden arrest, and summary punishment.
Brougham.

spy-glass (spī′glȧs), n. A small hand-telescope.

spy-hole (spī′hōl), n. A hole for spying; a peep-hole.

spyism (spī′izm), n. [< spy + -ism.] The act or business of spying; the system of employing spies. Imp. Dict.

spy-money (spī′mun″i), n. Money paid to a spy; a reward for secret intelligence. B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, ii. 1.

Spyridia (spī-rid′i-ą), n. [NL. (Harvey), < Gr. σπυρίς (σπυριδ-), a basket.] A genus of floridean algæ, giving name to the order Spyridiaceæ (which see for characters). The species are few in number and mostly tropical. There are, however, two forms on the New England coast.

Spyridiaceæ (spī-rid-i-ā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Spyridia + -aceæ.] A monotypic order (or suborder) of floridean algæ. The fronds are filiform, monosiphonous, and formed of longer branching filaments from which are given off short simple branches. The antheridia are borne on the secondary branches; the tetraspores are tripartite, and borne at the nodes of the secondary branches; the cystocarps are subterminal on the branches.

Spy Wednesday†. The Wednesday immediately preceding Easter: so called in allusion to the preparations made by Judas Iscariot on that day to betray Christ.

sq. An abbreviation of square: as, sq. ft. (that is, square foot or feet); sq. m. (square mile or miles).

squat, n. An old spelling of squaw.

squab[1] (skwob), v.; pret. and pp. squabbed, ppr. squabbing. [Also in some senses squob; cf. Sw. dial. sqvapp, a word imitative of a splash (Icel. skrampa, paddle in water). Norw. sqvapa, tremble, shake, = G. schwapp, a slap, E. swap, strike (see swap, swab, squabble); akin to Norw. kveppa, shake, slip, shudder, and to E. quap[1], quop[1], quab[1].] I. intrans. To fall plump; strike heavily; flap; flop.

They watched the street, and beheld ladies in . . . short cloaks with hoods squabbing behind (known as cardinals). S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 11.

II. trans. To squeeze; knock; beat. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

squab[1] (skwob), adv. [An elliptical use of squab[1], v.] So as to strike with a crash; with a heavy fall; plump. [Colloq.]

The eagle took the tortoise up into the air and dropt him down, squab, upon a rock. Sir R. L'Estrange, Fables.

squab[2] (skwob), a. and n. [Also squob; cf. Sw. dial. sqvabb, loose or fat flesh, sqvabba, a fat woman, sqvabbig, flabby; connected with the verb squab[1]. Cf. quab[3].] I. a. 1. Fat; short and stout; plump; bulky.

A little squab French page who speaks no English.
Wycherley, Country Wife, iv. 3.

2. Short; curt; abrupt. [Rare.]

We have returned a squab answer retorting the infraction of treaties.
Walpole, To Mann, July 25, 1756. (Davies.)

3. Unfledged, newly hatched, or not yet having attained the full growth, as a dove or a pigeon.

Why must old pigeons, and they stale, be drest,
When there's so many squab ones in the nest?
W. King, The Old Cheese.

Hence—4. Shy, as from extreme youth; coy.

Your demure ladies that are so squab in company are devils in a corner.
N. Lee, Princess of Cleve, iii. 1. (Encyc. Dict.)

II. n. 1. A young animal in its earliest period; a young beast or bird before the hair or feathers appear. (a) Specifically, a young unfledged pigeon or dove. A young pigeon is properly a squab as long as it sits in the nest; as soon as it can utter its Squabs of Domestic Pigeon.

querulous cries for food it becomes a squealer or squeaker, and so continues as long as it is fed by the parents, which is generally until it is fully fledged; but it continues to be called squab as marketable for its flesh. (b) Figuratively, a young and inexperienced person.

Brit. I warrant you, is he a trim youth?
Mon. We must make him one, Jacke; 'tis such a squab as thou never sawest; such a lumpe, we may make what we will of him. Brome, Sparagus Garden, ii. 2.

2. A short, fat, flabby person: also used figuratively.

Gorgonius sits, abdominous and wan,
Like a fat squab upon a Chinese fan.
Cowper, Progress of Error, l. 218.

We shall then see how the prudes of this world owed all their fine figure only to their being a little straiter laced, and that they were naturally as arrant squabs as those that went more loose.
Pope, To Lady M. W. Montagu, Aug. 18, 1716.

3. (a) A thickly stuffed cushion, especially one for a piece of furniture, as an upholstered chair or sofa, to which it may or may not be attached. Hence—(b) A sofa in which there is no part of the frame visible, and which is stuffed and caught through with strong thread at regular intervals, but so as to be very soft.

Bessie herself lay on a squab, or short sofa, placed under the window. Mrs. Gaskell, North and South, xiii.

(c) An ottoman.

I have seen a folio writer place himself in an elbow-chair, when the author of duodecimo has, out of a just deference to his superior quality, seated himself upon a squab. Addison, Spectator, No. 529.

squab[2] (skwob), v. t.; pret. and pp. squabbed, ppr. squabbing. [< squab[2], n.] To stuff thickly and catch through with thread at regular intervals, as a cushion. A button or soft tuft is usually placed in the depressions to hide the stitches. Furniture upholstered in this manner is said to be squabbed.

squabash (skwa-bash'), v. t. [Appar. an arbitrary formation, or an extension of squab[1].] To crush; squash; quash: also used as a noun. [Slang.]

His [Gifford's] satire of the Baviad and Mæviad squabashed, at one blow, a set of coxcombs who might have humbugged the world long enough.
Scott, Diary, Jan. 17, 1827. (Lockhart.) squabbish (skwob'ish), a. [< squab[2] + -ish[1].] Thick; fat; heavy.

Diet renders them of a squabbish or lardy habit of body. Harvey.

squabble (skwob'l), v.; pret. and pp. squabbled, ppr. squabbling. [< Sw. dial. skvabbla*, dispute (skvabbel, a dispute), freq. of skvappa, chide, lit. make a splashing, < skvapp, a splash: see swab, swap.] I. intrans. To engage in a noisy quarrel or row; wrangle; quarrel and fight noisily; brawl; scuffle.

Drunk? and speak parrot? and squabble? swagger? swear? Shak., Othello, ii. 3. 279.

We should squabble like Brother and Sister.
Steele, Tender Husband, i. 1.

=Syn. To jangle. See quarrel[1], n.

II. trans. In printing, to disarrange and mix (lines of composed types) when they are standing on their feet.

The letters do not range well, giving an irregular or squabbled appearance to the line. Science, VIII. 254.

squabble (skwob'l), n. [< Sw. dial. skvabbel, a dispute; from the verb.] A wrangle; a dispute; a brawl; a scuffle; a noisy quarrel.

Pragmatic fools commonly begin the squabble, and crafty knaves reap the benefit. Sir R. L'Estrange.

This contrariety of humours betwixt my father and my uncle was the source of many a fraternal squabble.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, i. 21.

=Syn. Brawl, Wrangle, etc. See quarrel[1].

squabbler (skwob'lėr), n. [< squabble + -er[1].] One who squabbles; a contentious person; a brawler; a noisy disputant.

squabby (skwob'i), a. [< squab[2] + -y[1].] Thick; resembling a squab; squat.

A French woman is a perfect architect in dress; . . . she never tricks out a squabby Doric shape with Corinthian finery. Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 2.

squab-chick (skwob'chik), n. A chick, or young chicken, not fully feathered; a fledgling. [Prov. Eng.]

squab-pie (skwob'pī), n. 1. A pie made of squabs; pigeon-pie.—2. A pie made of fat mutton well peppered and salted, with layers of apple and an onion or two. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Cornwall squab-pye, and Devon white-pot brings;
And Leicester beans and bacon, food of kings!
W. King, Art of Cookery, l. 165.

squacco (skwak'ō), n. [A native name, prob. imitative (cf. quack[1], quail[3]).] A small rail-like heron of Europe, Asia, and Africa, Ardea or Ardeola comata, ralloides, castanea, or squaiotta, of a white color, much varied with chestnut or russet-brown and black. The head is crested, with six long black and white plumes; the bill is cobalt-blue, tipped with black; the lores are emerald-green; the feet flesh-colored, with yellow soles and black claws; and the irides pale-yellow. The squacco nests in heronries, usually on a tree, and lays four to six greenish-blue eggs. It is rare in Europe north of the Mediterranean basin, but common in most parts of Africa, and extends into a small part of Asia.

Squacco (Ardeola comata).

squad[1] (skwod), n. [(OF. vernacular esquarre, esquare, > ME. square) < OF. esquadre, eseadre, F. escadre = Sp. escuadra = Pg. esquadra, < It. squadra, a squad, squadron, square: see square[1], and cf. squadron.] 1. Milit., any small number of men assembled, as for drill, inspection, or duty.—2. Any small party or group of persons: as, a squad of navvies; a set of people in general: usually somewhat contemptuous.—Awkward squad, a body of recruits not yet competent, by their knowledge of drill and the manual of arms, to take their place in the regimental line.

squad[1] (skwod), v. t.; pret. and pp. squadded, ppr. squadding. [< squad[1], n.] To draw up in a squad.

Squad your men, and form up on the road.
Lever, Charles O'Malley, lxxxvi. (Encyc. Dict.) squad[2] (skwod), n. [Origin obscure; perhaps a dial. var. of shode, ult. < AS. scēadan, scādan, separate: see shode.] 1. Soft, slimy mud. [Prov. Eng.]—2. In mining, loose ore of tin mixed with earth. [Cornish.]

squaddy (skwod'i), a. [A var. of squatty.] Squabby. [Old Eng. and U. S.]

A fatte squaddy monke that had beene well fedde in some cloyster.
Greene, News both from Heaven and Hell (1593). (Nares.)

I had hardly got seated when in came a great, stout, fat, squaddy woman.
Major Downing, May-Day. (Bartlett.) squadron (skwod'ron), n. [= D. escadron = Dan. eskadron, < OF. esquadron, F. escadron = Sp. escuadron = Pg. esquadrão (= G. schwadrone = Sw. sqvadron), < It. squadrone, a squadron, aug. of squadra, a squad, a square: see squad[1], square[1].] 1†. A square.

Sixe dayes iourney from Bezeneger is the place where they get Diamants; . . . it is a great place, compassed with a wall, and . . . they sell the earth within the wall for so much a squadron, and the limits are set how deepe or how low they shall digge. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 221.

2. A body of soldiers drawn up in a square, or in regular array, as for battle; specifically, in modern armies, the principal division of a regiment of cavalry. This corresponds more or less closely to a company in the infantry, and consists of two troops, each commanded by a captain. The actual strength of a squadron varies from 120 to 200 men.

The Ordovices, to welcome the new General, had hew'n in peeces a whole Squadron of Horse.
Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

3. A division of a fleet; a detachment of ships of war employed on a particular service or station, and under the command of a flag-officer. —4. Generally, any ranked and orderly body or group.—5. In early New England records (1636), one of four divisions of town land, probably in the first instance a square. The records show that squadron was used later in other senses: (a) A division of a town for highway care.

Agreed upon by the selectmen for the . . . calling out of their men to work, that is within their several squadrons.
Town Records, Groton, Mass., 1671.

(b) A school district.

Voted and chose a committee of seven men to apportion the school in six societies or squadrons, . . . taking the northwesterly corner for one squadron.
Town Records, Marlborough, Msss., 1749.

Sometimes spelled squadrant.

squadron (skwod'ron), v. t. [< squadron, n.] 1. To form into squadrons, as a body of soldiers. Hence—2. To form in order; array.

They gladly hither haste, and by a quire
Of squadron'd angels hear his carols sung.
Milton, P. L., xii. 367.

squail, squale (skwāl), n. [Also scale; perhaps a dial. var. of skail, in pl. skails, formerly skayles, a var. of kail[2]: see kail[2] and skayles.] 1. A disk or counter used in the game of squails.

Urge, towards the table's centre,
With unerring hand, the squail.
C. S. Calverley, There Stands a City.

2. pl. A game in which disks or counters are driven by snapping them from the edge of a round board or table at a mark in the center. —3. pl. Ninepins. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

squail, squale (skwāl), v. [< squail, n.] I. intrans. To throw a stick, loaded stick, disk, flat stone, or other object at a mark: often applied to the throwing of sticks at cocks or geese on Shrove Tuesday, a sport formerly popular in England. Grose. [Prov. Eng. and New Eng.]

II. trans. To aim at, throw at, or pelt with sticks or other missiles.

"Squailing a goose before his door, and tossing dogs and cats on Shrove Tuesday" (Mr. Hunt's "Bristol"). The allusion is to the republican mayor of the city in 1651.
N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 169.

squail-board (skwāl'bōrd), n. The round board upon which the game of squails is played.

squailer (skwā'lėr), n. A kind of throwing-stick, an improvement on that used formerly in squailing cocks or geese.

Armed with squailers, an ingenious instrument composed of a short stick of pliant cane and a leaded knob, to drive the harmless little squirrel from tree to tree, and lay it a victim at the feet of a successful shot.
Daily Telegraph, Nov. 30, 1881. (Encyc. Dict.)

squaimous†, a. See squeamous.

squaint†, n. An obsolete dialectal form of swain.

squalder (skwol'dėr), n. A kind of jelly-fish. See the quotation.

I have oftentimes mett with two other entities which seeme to bee of a congenerous substance with the aforenamed gellies, both of them to bee found in the salt water. One is flat and round, as broad as a mans palme, or broader, and as thick as the hand, cleare and transparent, convex on one side and somewhat like the gibbous part of the human liver, on the other side concave with a contrivance like a knott in the very middle thereof, but plainly with circular fibers about the verge or edge of it (where it is growne thin) which suffer manifest constriction and dilatation, which doe promote its natation, which is also perceptible, and by which you may discerne it to advance towards the shore, or recede from it. About us they are generally called squalders, but are indeed evidently fishes, although not described in any Ichthyology I have yet mett with. Dr. R. Robinson, To Sir T. Browne, Dec. 12, 1659 (in [Sir T. Browne's Works, I. 423).

squale, n. and v. See squail.

Squali (skwā'lī), n. pl. [NL. (Müller, 1835), pl. of L. squalus, a shark: see Squalus.] In ichth., a section of clasmobranchiate fishes, or selachians, having the gill-slits lateral and plural, five, six, or seven in number; the sharks proper, as distinguished from the Raiæ (rays or skates, with ventral gill-slits) and from the Holocephali (chimeras, with gill-slits a single pair). The name has been used for groups of various extent; it is now generally restricted to the plagiostomous fishes with lateral branchial apertures and the pectoral fins regularly curved backward from the base of insertion. The Squali are divided into about 12 families and many genera, the nomenclature of which is by no means fixed. See Selachii and shark[1], and cuts under selachian and dogfish.

squalid (skwol'id), a. [< L. squalidus, foul, filthy, < squalere, be stiff, rough, or dry (with anything), esp. be stiff or rough from negligence or want of care, be foul; cf. Gr. σκέλλειν, be dry (see skelet, skeleton).] 1. Foul; filthy; extremely dirty: as, a squalid beggar; a squalid house.

Uncomb'd his locks, and squalid his attire.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., i. 539.

2†. Rough; shaggy. [Rare.]

Squalidæ (skwal'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Squalus + -idæ.] A family of sharks, typified by the genus Squalus, to which various limits have been assigned. By Bonaparte the name was used for all true sharks. By some other writers it has been used instead of Acanthiidæ. See dogfish and picked[1].

squalidity (skwo-lid'i-ti), n. [< LL. squalidita(t-)s, roughness, filth, < L. squalidus, rough, filthy: see squalid.] The state of being squalid; foulness; filthiness. Imp. Dict.

squalidly (skwol'id-li), adv. In a squalid or filthy manner. Imp. Dict.

squalidness (skwol'id-nes), n. Squalidity. Bailey.

squaliform (skwā'li-fôrm), a. [< L. squalus, a shark, + forma, form.] Of, or having the characters of, the Squali; resembling a shark.

Squalius (skwā'li-us), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1837), < L. squalus, a shark. The European dace was at one time called, for no obvious reason, Squalus minor.] A genus of small cyprinoid fishes, many of which are known as dace. The type is the European dace, Cyprinus leuciscus of the Linnean system, now called Squalius leuciscus or Leuciscus vulgaris. Numerous American species fall in this genus, and are loosely known as minnows, shiners, chubs, mullets, etc. See cut under dace.

squall[1] (skwâl), n. [< Sw. sqval, a rush of water (sqval-regn, a violent shower of rain, a squall) (= Norw. skval, a gushing, rippling, rinse-water; cf. Dan. skyl, also skyl-regn, a violent shower of rain), < sqrala, dial. skvala, skvâla, gush out, = Norw. skvala, gush out, splash, ripple; also in secondary forms, Norw. skvelja, gush, splash; Norw. skola, wash, gush, = Icel. skola, wash; Icel. skyla = Norw. skylja = Dan. skylle, wash. The word is generally assumed to be connected with squall[2].] A sudden and violent gust of wind, or a succession of such gusts, usually accompanied by rain, snow, or sleet. In a ship's log-book abbreviated q.

A lowering squall obscures the southern sky.
Falconer, Shipwreck, ii. 145.

No gladlier does the stranded wreck
See thro' the gray skirts of a lifting squall
The boat that bears the hope of life approach.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

Arched squall, a remarkable squall occurring near the equator, in which a mass of black clouds collects and rapidly rises, forming a vast arch, or ring-shaped bed of cloud. The ring of cloud enlarges, and above it masses of cloud rise higher and higher until they reach the zenith. Then usually, though not invariably, a violent thunder-storm breaks forth, with vivid zigzag lightning, deafening peals of thunder, and torrents of rain, lasting, perhaps, for half an hour. The phenomenon varies in its details in different seas, but occurs most frequently and on the grandest scale in the southern part of the China Sea, the Gulf of Siam, the Sulu Sea, and particularly in the Straits of Malacca.—Black squall, a squall attended with a specially dark cloud.—Bull's-eye squall, a white squall of great violence on the west coast of Africa.—Heavy squall, a squall in which the wind blows with much force.—Line-squall, a squall accompanying the passage of the trough of a V-shaped barometric depression: so named because the squalls form a line coincident with the axis of the trough, which sweeps across the country, broadside on, with the progressive motion of the depression.—Thick squall, a squall in which the rain or snow obscures the view.—To look out for squalls, to be on one's guard; be on the watch against trouble or danger. [Colloq.]—White squall, a whirlwind of small radius arising suddenly in fair weather without the usual formation of clouds. The only indication of its development is the boiling of the sea beneath the current of ascending air around which the rapid gyrations take place, together with a patch of white cloud, generally formed above it at the level of condensation. These are also the conditions of a waterspout, which may or may not be completely formed, according to the energy of the whirl and the amount of vapor in the atmosphere. White squalls are infrequent, and rarely occur outside of the tropics; in general they are dangerous only to sailing vessels and small craft. =Syn. Gale, etc. See wind[2].

squall[1] (skwâl), v. i. [< squall[1], n.] To blow a squall: used chiefly impersonally: as, it squalled terribly. [Colloq.]

And the quarter-deck tarpauling
Was shivered in the squalling.
Thackeray, The White Squall.

squall[2] (skwâl), v. [Early mod. E. also squawl; < Icel. skrala, scream, = Sw. dial. skvala, skvâla, cry out, chatter, = Dan. (freq.) skraldre, clamor; cf. Icel. skella (pret. skall), resound, = G. schallen, resound (see scold); cf. Sc. squalloch, skelloch, cry shrilly, Gael. sgal, howl. Cf. squeal[1], and see squall[1].] I. intrans. To cry out; scream or cry violently, as a frightened woman or a child in anger or distress: used in contempt or dislike.

You can laugh, and squall, and romp in full security.
Swift, Advice to Servants (General Directions).

"Send that squalling little brat about his business, and do what I bid ye, sir," says the Doctor.
Thackeray, Henry Esmond, iii. 5.

II. trans. To utter in a discordant, screaming tone.

And pray, what are your Town Diversions? To hear a parcel of Italian Eunuchs, like so many Cats, squawl out somewhat you don't understand.
Tunbridge Walks, in Ashton's Queen Anne, I. 328.

squall[2] (skwâl), n. [< squall[2], v.] A harsh cry; a loud and discordant scream; a sound intermediate in character between a squawk and a squeal.

There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sob, loud scream, and shriller squall.
Pope, Imit. of Spenser, The Alley.

squall[3] (skwâl), n. [Perhaps a particular use of squall[2].] A baby; pet; minx; girl: used vaguely, in endearment or reproach.

A pretty, beautiful, juicy squall.
Middleton, Michaelmas Term, i. 2.

The rich gull gallant call's her deare and love,
Ducke, lsmbe, squall, sweet-heart, cony, and his dove.
Taylor's Workes (1630).

squaller (skwâ'lėr), n. [< squall[2] + -er[1].] One who squalls; one who shrieks or cries aloud.

squally[1] (skwâ'li), a. [< squall[1] + -y[1].] 1. Abounding with squalls; disturbed often with sudden and violent gusts of wind: as, squally weather.—2. Threatening; ominous: as, things began to look squally. [Colloq.]

squally[2] (skwâ'li), a. [Perhaps a dial. var. of scally.] 1. Having unproductive spots interspersed throughout: said of a field of turnips or corn. [Prov. Eng.]—2. Badly woven; showing knots in the thread or irregularities in the weaving: said of a textile fabric.

squaloid (skwā'loid), a. [< NL. Squalus + Gr. εἶδος, form.] Like a shark of the genus Squalus; selachian or plagiostomous, as a true shark; of or pertaining to the Squalidæ; squaliform.

squalor (skwol'ėr or skwā'lôr), n. [< L. squalor, roughness, filth, < squalere, be stiff or rough, as with dirt: see squalid.] Foulness; filthiness; coarseness.

Nastiness, squalor, ugliness, hunger. Burton.

Squalor carceris, in Scots law, the strictness of imprisonment which a creditor is entitled to enforce, in order to compel the debtor to pay the debt, or disclose funds he may have concealed.

Squalus (skwā'lus), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1748), < L. squalus, a kind of sea-fish.] A genus founded by Linnæus, including all the sharks and shark-like selachians known to him (15 species in 1766). See Acanthias, and cut under dogfish.

squam (skwom), n. [< Annisquam, a fishing-hamlet in Massachusetts.] An oilskin hat worn originally by fishermen and deep-water sailors; a cheap yellow sou'wester. [U. S.]

squama (skwā'mä), n.; pl. squamæ (-mē). [NL., < L. squama, a scale: see squame.] 1. In bot., a scale of any sort, usually the homologue of a leaf.—2. In anat. and zoöl.: (a) A scale, as of the epidermis. (b) A thin, expansive, scale-like part of a bone: as, the squama of the temporal bone (the squamosal); the squama of the occipital bone (the supra-occipital).—3. In ornith., a scale-like feather, as one of those upon a penguin's wing or the throat of a humming-bird. See cut under Squamipennes.—4. In entom., an elytrum.—Squama frontalis, the vertical part of the frontal bone.—Squama occipitis, the thin expanded part of the occipital bone; the supra-occipital.—Squama temporalis, the thin shell-like part, or the squamous portion, of the temporal bone.

squamaceous (skwā-mā'shius), a. [< L. squama, a scale, + -aceous.] Same as squamous or squamose.

Squamata (skwā-mā'tä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of LL. squamatus, scaly: see squamate.] 1. In herpet., the scaly reptiles. (a) An order of Reptilia, established by Oppel in 1811. It was composed of the saurians or lizards (including crocodiles) and snakes or ophidians, divided accordingly into Saurii and Ophidii. Its contents were the modern orders Crocodilia, Lacertilia, and Ophidia, with, however, one foreign element (Amphisbæna). (b) In Merrem's system of classification (1820), same as Oppel's Squamata exclusive of the crocodiles, or Loricata of Merrem. It formed the third order of Pholidota or scaly reptiles, divided into Gradientia, Repentia, Serpentia, Incedentia, and Predentia. Also called Lepidosauria, and formerly Saurophidia.

2. In mammal., scaly mammals; a group of the Entomophaga or insectivorous edentates, containing the single family Manididæ, the scaly ant-eaters, or pangolins, in which the body is squamated, being covered with horny overlapping scales. The group is now usually ranked as a suborder.

squamate (skwā'māt), a. [< LL. squamatus, scaly, < L. squama, a scale: see squame.] 1. In zoöl., scaly; covered with scales or squamæ; squamose or squamigerous; specifically, of or pertaining to the Squamata, in any sense.—2. In anat., scale-like; forming or formed like a scale; squamous or squamiform: as, a squamate bone; squamate scales of cuticle.—3. In bot., same as squamose.

squamated (skwā'mā-ted), a. [< squamate + -ed[2].] Same as squamate.

squamation (skwā-mā'shon), n. [< squamate + -ion.] In zoöl., the state or character of being squamate, squamose, or scaly; the collection or formation of scales or squamæ of an animal: as, the squamation of a lizard, snake, or pangolin. Compare desquamation.

squam-duck (skwom'duk), n. See duck[2].

squame (skwām), n. [< ME. squame, < L. squama, a scale (of a fish, serpent, etc.), a scale (of metal), scale-armor, a cataract in the eye, hull of millet, etc., LL. fig. roughness; prob. akin to squalere, be stiff or rough: see squalid.] 1†. A thin layer; a scale.

Orpiment, brent bones, yren squames.
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 206.

2. In zoöl., a scale or squama. Huxley, Crayfish, p. 172.

squamella (skwā-mel'ä), n.; pl. squamellæ (-ē). [NL., dim. of L. squama, a scale: see squame.] 1. In bot., same as squamula, 2.—2. [cap.] In zoöl., a genus of zygotrochous rotifers, of the family Euchlanidæ.

squamellate (skwā-mel'āt), a. [< NL. squamellatus*, < squamella, q. v.] Same as squamulate.

squamelliferous (skwam-e-lif'e-rus), a. [< NL. squamella, a little scale, + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] In bot., furnished with or bearing squamellæ.

Squamifera (skwā-mif'e-rä), n. pl. [NL., < F. Squammifères (De Blainville, 1816), < L. squama, a scale, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Squamous or scaly reptiles; Reptilia proper, as distinguished from Nudipellifera or Amphibia: also called Ornithoides.

squamiferous (skwā-mif'e-rus), a. [< L. squama, a scale, + ferre = E. bear[1].] 1. Provided with squamæ or scales; squamate; squamigerous.—2. In bot., bearing scales: as, a squamiferous catkin.

squamiflorous (skwā'mi-flō-rus), a. [< L. squama, a scale, + flos (flor-), flower.] In bot., having flowers like scales; also, having scales bearing flowers, as in the Coniferæ.

squamiform (skwā'mi-fôrm), a. [< L. squama, a scale, + forma, form.] Having the shape, character, or appearance of a scale; squamate in form or structure; scale-like.

squamigerous (skwā-mij'e-rus), a. [< L. squamiger, scale-bearing, < squama, a scale, + gerere, bear, carry.] Provided with squamæ; squamose; squamiferous.

squamipen (skwā'mi-pen), n. Any fish of the group Squamipennes or Squamipinnes.

squamipennate (skwā-mi-pen'āt), a. [< L. squama, a scale, + penna, a wing: see pennate.] Having scaly feathers, as a penguin.

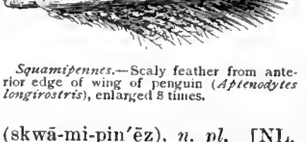
Squamipennes (skwā-mi-pen'ēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. squama, a scale, + penna, a wing, fin: see pen[2].] 1. In ichth., same as Squamipinnes.—2. In ornith., the penguins, or Sphenisci: so called from the scale-like character of the plumage. [Rare.]



Squamipennes.—Scaly feather from anterior edge of wing of penguin (Aptenodytes longirostris), enlarged 8 times.

Squamipinnes (skwā-mi-pin'ēz), n. pl. [NL. (Cuvier, spelled Squammipennes): see Squamipennes.] In ichth.: (a) In Cuvier's system of classification, the sixth family of acanthopterygian fishes: so called because the soft and frequently the spinous parts of their dorsal and anal fins are covered with scales, which render it difficult to distinguish them from the body. The body is generally much compressed; the intestines are long, and the cæca numerous. The group included the families Chætodontidæ, Ephippiidæ, Zanclidæ, Scatopha- gidæ, Platacidæ, Psettidæ, Pimelepteridæ, Bramidæ, Pempheridæ, and Toxotidæ. (b) In Günther's system, a family of Acanthopterygii pereciformes, nearly the same as (a), but without the Zanelidæ, Platacidæ, Psettidæ, Bramidæ, Pempheridæ, and typical Pimelepteridæ.

squamoid (skwā'moid), a. [< L. squama, a scale, + Gr. εἶδος, form.] 1. Resembling a squama; squamiform; scale-like.—2. Squamous; scaly; squamate.

squamomandibular (skwā″mō-man-dib'ū-lăr), a. [< squamo(us) + mandibular.] Of or pertaining to the squamosal and the mandible, or lower jaw-bone: as, the squamomandibular articulation, characteristic of mammals. In human anatomy this joint is commonly called temporomaxillary.

squamomastoid (skwā-mō-mas'toid), a. [< squamo(us) + mastoid.] Of or pertaining to the squamous and mastoid elements of the temporal bone: as, a squamomastoid ankylosis.

squamoparietal (skwā″mō-pā-rī'e-tal), a. [< squamo(us) + parietal.] Of or pertaining to the squamosal and parietal bones: as, the squamoparietal suture, shortly called squamous.

squamopetrosal (skwā″mō-pe-trō'sal), a. [< squamo(us) + petrosal.] Of or pertaining to the squamosal and petrosal elements of the temporal bone: as, squamopetrosal ankylosis.

squamosal (skwā-mō'sal), a. and n. [< squamose + -al.] I. a. Scale-like or squamous: noting only the squamosal. See II.

II. n. In zoöl. and anat., the squamous division of the temporal bone; the thin, expansive, scale-like element of the compound temporal bone; a membrane-bone, morphologically distinct from other parts of the temporal, filling a gap in the cranial walls, articulating in man and mammals with the lower jaw, in birds and reptiles with the suspensorium (quadrate bone) of the lower jaw, effecting squamous suture with various cranial bones, and forming by its zygomatic process in mammals a part of the zygoma, or jugal bar. It is remarkably expansive in man. See cuts under Acipenser, acrodont, Balænidæ, craniofacial, Crotalus, Cyclodus, Felidæ, Gallinæ, Ichthyosauria, Ophidia, Physeter, Pythonidæ, Rana, and skull.

squamose (skwā'mōs), a. [< L. squamosus, full of scales, covered with scales, < squama, a scale: see squame.] 1. In bot., scaly; furnished with small appressed scales or squamæ; also, scale-like. Also squamate, squamous.—2. In zoöl., squamous; squamiferous or squamigerous; covered with scales; scaly; specifically, in entom., covered with minute scales, as the wings of lepidopterous insects; lepidopterous; squamulate.

squamosphenoidal (skwā″mō-sfē-noi'dal), a. [< squamo(us) + sphenoidal.] Pertaining to the squamous part of the temporal bone and the sphenoid bone: as, the squamosphenoidal suture. Also squamosphenoid.

squamotemporal (skwā-mō-tem'pō-ral), a. [< squamo(us) + temporal[2].] Squamosal, as a part of the temporal bone. Owen.

squamotympanic (skwā″mō-tim-pan'ik), a. Of or pertaining to the squamosal and tympanic bones: as, a squamotympanic ankylosis.

squamous (skwā'mus), a. [< L. squamosus, covered with scales: see squamose.] 1. In zoöl. and anat.: (a) Covered with scales; scaly; squamate; squamose; squamiferous or squamigerous. (b) Scale-like; squamoid; squamiform; specifically, of a bone, same as squamosal.—2. In bot., same as squamose.—Squamous bone, the squamosal.—Squamous bulb, in bot., a bulb in which the outer scales are distinct, fleshy, and imbricated; a scaly bulb. See bulb.—Squamous cells, flattened, dry, thin cells, as seen in the superficial layers of the epidermis.—Squamous epithelium, epithelium composed of thin scale-like cells, either in a single layer (tessellated epithelium) or in several layers (stratified scaly epithelium). See epithelium.—Squamous portion of the temporal bone, the squamosal: opposed to petrous and mastoid portions of the same compound bone.—Squamous suture, in anat., a fixed articulation or synarthrosis, in which the thin beveled edge of a squamous bone overlaps another; specifically, the squamoparietal suture and squamosphenoidal suture, those by which the squamosal articulates with the parietal and alisphenoidal bones respectively. See cut under parietal.

squamozygomatic (skwā-mō-zī-gō-mat'ik), a. and n. [< squamo(us) + zygomatic.] I. a. In anat., noting the squamous and zygomatic parts of the temporal bone: as, a squamozygomatic center of ossification.

II. n. A squamozygomatic bone; the squamosal together with its zygomatic process.

squamula (skwam'ū-lă), n.; pl. squamulæ (-lē). [L., dim. of squama, a scale: see squame.] 1. A little scale. Specifically, in entom.: (a) One of the flattened scale-like hairs or processes which in many cases clothe the lower surfaces of the tarsal joints. (b) The tegula or scale covering the base of the anterior wing of a hymenopterous insect.

2. In bot.: (a) A scale of secondary order or reduced size. (b) Same as lodicule. Also squamella.

Also squamule.

squamulate (skwam'ū-lāt), a. [< NL. squamulatus,* < L. squamula, a little scale: see squamule.] Having little scales; covered with squamules; minutely scaly or squamose. Also squamellate, squamulose.

squamule (skwam'ūl), n. [< L. squamula, a little scale, dim. of squama, a scale: see squame.] In bot. and zoöl., same as squamula.

squamuliform (skwam'ū-li-fôrm), a. [< L. squamula, a little scale, + forma, form.] Having the form or character of a squamule.

squamulose (skwam'ū-lōs), a. [< NL. squamulosus,* < L. squamula, a little scale: see squamule.] Same as squamulate.

squander (skwon'dėr), v. [Not found in early use; perhaps a dial. form, a variant, with the common dial. change of initial sw- to squ-, of swander,* which is perhaps a nasalized form of swadder,* orig. scatter as water (?) (cf. MD. swadderen, dabble in water, = Sw. dial. skvadra, gush out, as water), itself a variant of E. dial. swatter, Sc. squatter, throw (water) about, scatter, squander, < Sw. dial. squättra, squander; freq. of E. dial. swat, var. squat, throw down forcibly; cf. Icel. skvetta = Sw. sqvätta, throw out, squirt, = Dan. skvatte, squirt, splash, squander: see squat[2], squatter, swat[2], swatter. The word may owe its nasalization to AS. swindan (pret. swand), vanish, waste, OHG. swantian, G. ver-schwenden, squander, etc.] I. trans. 1. To scatter; disperse. [Archaic.]

Other ventures he hath, squandered abroad.
Shak., M. of V., i. 3. 22.

They drive and squander the huge Belgian fleet.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 67.

The fallen timber obstructed the streams, the rivers were squandered in the reedy morasses.
C. Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 223.

2. To spend lavishly, profusely, or prodigally; dissipate; use without economy or judgment; lavish: as, to squander one's money or an estate.

How much time is squandred away in Vanity and Folly?
Stillingfleet, Sermons, III. x.

Is he not a gay, dissipated rake, who has squandered his patrimony? Sheridan, The Duenna, ii. 3.

II. intrans. 1. To disperse; wander aimlessly; go at random. [Archaic.]

The wise man's folly is anatomized
Even by the squandering glances of the fool.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7. 57.

2. To waste one's substance; go to wasteful expense; spend recklessly.

He was grown needy by squandering upon his vices.
Swift, Change in Queen's Ministry.

squander (skwon'dėr), n. [< squander, v.] The act of squandering. Imp. Dict. [Rare.]

squanderer (skwon'dėr-ėr), n. [< squander + -er[1].] One who squanders; one who spends his money prodigally; a spendthrift; a prodigal; a waster; a lavisher.

I say he is an unthrift, a Squanderer, and must not expect supplyes from me. Brome, Sparagus Garden, iii. 5.

squanderingly (skwon'dėr-ing-li), adv. In a squandering manner; by squandering; prodigally; lavishly. Imp. Dict.

squan-fish (skwon'fish), n. A cyprinoid fish, Ptychochilus lucius. See pike[2], n., 2 (a).

squanter-squash (skwon'tėr-skwosh), n. Same as squash[2]. See the quotation.

Yet the clypeatæ are sometimes called cymnels (as are some others also), from the lenten cake of that name, which many of them very much resemble. Squash, or squanter-squash, is their name among the northern Indians, and so they are called in New York and New England. Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 19.

squap (skwop), v. [A dial. var. of swap.] To strike. [Prov. Eng.]

squap (skwop), n. [< squap, v.] A blow. [Prov. Eng.]

squarable (skwār'a-bl), a. [< square[1] + -able.] In math., capable of being squared. Hutton's Recreations, p. 169.

square[1] (skwār), n. [Formerly also (esp. in def. 5) squire, squier; < ME. square, squar, square, sware, a square, squire, squyre, squyyre, squyzer, a carpenters' square, < OF. esquare, esquarre, escairre, esquierre, esquire, a square, squareness, F. équerre = Sp. escuadra, a square, squad, squadron, = Pg. esquadra, a squadron, esquadria, a square, a rule, esquadro, a right angle drawn on a board, = It. squadra, a square, also a squad or squadron of men (orig. a square); variant forms, with initial s due to the verb (see square[1], v.), of OF. quarre = Sp. cuadra = Pg. It. quadra, a square, < L. quadra, a square, fem. of (LL.) quadrus, square, four-cornered, < quatuor, four, = E. four: see four, quadra[1], quadrate, squad[1], squadron. Cf. square[1], a.] 1. In geom., a four-sided plane rectilineal figure, having all its sides equal, and all its angles right angles.

I have a parlour
Of a great square, and height as you desire it.
Tomkis (?), Albumazar, ii. 3.

The hard-grained Muses of the cube and square.
Tennyson, Princess, Prol.

2. A figure or object which nearly approaches this shape; a square piece or part, or a square surface: as, a square of glass.

A third court, to make a square with the front, but not to be built, nor yet enclosed with a naked wall.
Bacon, Building (ed. 1887).

He bolted his food down his capacious throat in squares of 3 inches. Scott.

The casement slowly grows a glimmering square.
Tennyson, Princess, iv. (song).

Specifically—(a) In printing, a certain number of lines forming a part of a column nearly square: used chiefly in reckoning the prices of newspaper advertisements. (b) A square piece of linen, cloth, or silk, usually decorated with embroidery, fringe, or lace: as, a table-square.

3. A quadrilateral area, rectangular or nearly so, with buildings, or sites for buildings, on every side; also, an open space formed by the intersection of streets; hence, such an area planted with trees, shrubs, or grass, and open to the public for recreation or diversion; a public park among buildings; a common; a green: as, Union Square in New York; Lafayette Square in Washington; Trafalgar Square in London.

The statue of Alexander the Seventh stands in the large square of the town.
Addison, Remarks on Italy (Works, ed. Bohn, I. 401).

4. An area bounded by four streets; a block: as, the house is four or five squares further up-town.—5. An instrument used by artificers, draftsmen, and others for trying or describing right angles. It consists of two rules or branches fastened perpendicularly at one end of their extremities so as to a, carpenters' square (of iron or steel); b, b′, draftsmen's T-squares of wood, b′ having a head adjustable at any angle; c, bevel-square, the blade of which can be set either square or at any angle; d, center-square; e, miter-square; f, carpenters' try-square; g, square with adjustable heads and with vernier scale for measuring diameters, also called vernier calipers.

Squares.

form a right angle. Sometimes one of the branches is pivoted, so as to admit of measuring other than right angles. When one rule is joined to the other in the middle in the form of a T, it is called a T-square.

Thou shalt me fynde as just as is a squyre.
Chaucer, Summoner's Tale, l. 388.

Of alt kyne craftes ich contreeuede here tooles,
Of carpentrie. of kerueres, and contreeuede the compas,
And cast out by squire both lync and leuell.
Piers Plowman (C), xii. 127.

A poet does not work by square or line,
As smiths and joiners perfect a design.
Cowper, Conversation, l. 789.

Hence—6. A true measure, standard, or pattern.

This cause I'll argue,
And be a peace between ye, if 't so please you,
And by the square of honour to the utmost.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Pilgrimage, ii. 1.

Religion being, in the pretence of their Law, the square of all their (otherwise ciuill) actions.
Purchas, Pilgrimsge, p. 183.

7. In arith. and alg., the number or quantity derived from another (of which it is said to be the square) by multiplying that other by itself: thus, 64 is the square of 8, for $8 \times 8 = 64$; x^2 or $x \times x$ is the square of x.

Light diminishes in intensity as we recede from the source of light If the luminous source be a point, the intensity diminishes as the square of the distance increases. . . . This is the meaning of the law of inverse squares as applied to light. Tyndall, Light and Elect., p. 15.

8. Rule; regularity; exact proportion; hence, integrity of conduct; honest dealing. See phrases on the square (c), out of square, etc.

Read not my blemishes in the world's report:
I have not kept my square; but that to come Shall all be done by the rule.
Shak., A. and C., ii. 3. 6.

9. A body of troops drawn up in quadrilateral form. The formation used in the sixteenth century and afterward was a nearly solid body of pikemen, to which the harquebusiers, crossbowmen, etc., formed an accessory, as by being posted on the flanks, etc. In Shakspere's time troops drawn up in battle array were primarily in squares. At the present time the square is a hollow formation, composed of four fronts, each from two to five ranks deep, having the officers, colors, etc., in the center. This formation is used to repel cavalry, or to resist any superior force which outflanks or surrounds the body of troops. See hollow square, below.

He alone Dealt on lieutenantry, and no practice had
In the brave squares of war.
Shak., A. and C., iii. 11. 40.

Dash'd on every rocky square,
Their surging charges foam'd themselves away.
Tennyson, Death of Wellington.

10. A name given to various squared projections or shanks to which other parts of machines may be fitted.—11†. Level; equality: generally with the. See on the square (b), below.—12. In astrol., quartile; the position of planets distant 90 degrees from each other. See aspect, 7.

Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine.
Milton, P. L., x. 659.

13†. Opposition; enmity; quarrel. See square[1], v. i., 2.—14. A part of a woman's dress. (a) The yoke of a chemise or gown: so called because often cut square or angular. [Still in provincial use.]

The sleeve-hand, and the work about the square on't [a smock]. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 212.

(b) A square opening in the upper part of the front of a bodice, or other garment covering the throat and neck. It is usually filled in with another material, except for evening dress.

A round Sable Tippet, about 2 yards long, the Sable pretty deep and dark, with a piece of black Silk in the Square of the neck.
Advt. quoted in Ashton's Reign of Queen Anne, I. 173.

15. A puzzle or device consisting of a series of words so selected that when arranged in a square they may be read alike across and downward. Also called word-square.—16. In bookbinding, the parts of the cover of a bound book that project beyond the edge of the leaves.—17. The square end of the arbor designed to receive the winding-key of a watch, or the similar part by which the hands of the watch are set.—18. In flooring, roofing, and other branches of mechanical art, an area 10 feet square; 100 square feet.—19. In her., a bearing representing a carpenters' square. (See def. 5.) It is represented with or without the scale.—20. In organ-building, a thin piece of wood, in or nearly in the shape of a right-angled triangle, pivoted at the right or largest angle and connected with trackers at the other angles. It serves to change the direction of the tracker-action from vertical to horizontal, or vice versa.—A deep square, a long projection.—A small square, a narrow projection.—At square†, in opposition; at enmity.

S	A	T	E	D
A	T	O	N	E
T	O	A	S	T
E	N	S	U	E
D	E	T	E	R

Square.

Marry, she knew you and I were at square;
At least we fell to blowes.
Promos and Cassandra, ii. 4. (Nares.)

She falling at square with hir husband.
Holinshed, Hist. Eng., iv. 8.

By the square, exactly; accurately.

Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and a half by the squier. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 348.

Why, you can tell us by the squire, neighbour, Whence he is call'd a constable.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, iv. 2.

Cyclical square. See cyclical.—Face of a square. See face[1].—Geometrical square. Same as quadrat, 2.—Gunners' square. Same as quadrant, 5.—Hollow square, a body of infantry drawn up in square with a space in the middle to receive baggage, colors, drums, etc. When orders or proclamations are to be read to troops, it is usual to form a hollow square, with the files facing inward. See def. 9.—Incuse square. See incuse.—In square†, square.

Then did a sharped spyre of Diamond bright,
Ten feetc each way in square, appeare to mee.
Spenser, Visions of Bellay, l. 30.

Magic square. See magic.—Method of least squares, the method used by astronomers, geodesists, and others of deducing the most probable or best result of their observations, in cases in which the arithmetical mean of a number of observations of the same quantity is the most probable or best value of that quantity. The adoption of the mean value of a number of observations may be considered as the simplest application of the method of least squares. When the observed values depend upon several unknown quantities, the rule which results from the principle of the arithmetical mean is to adopt such values for the unknown quantities as to make the sum of the squares of the residual errors of the observations the least possible. When there are certain conditions that must be fulfilled, as for example, in geodesy, that the sum of the angles of each triangle must equal two right angles plus the spherical excess, the rules become still more complicated. There are also rules for calculating probable errors, etc.—Nasik squares. See the quotation.

Squares that have many more summations than in rows, columns, and diagonals have been investigated by the Rev. A. H. Frost (Cambridge Math. Jour., 1857), and called Nasik squares from the town in India where he resided; and he has extended the method to cubes (called Nasik cubes), various sections of which have the same singular properties. Encyc. Brit., XV. 215.

Naval square, a rectilinear figure painted on a ship's deck in some convenient place, for the purpose of aiding in taking the bearings of other ships of a squadron or of objects on shore.—Normal square, the mathematical instrument called a square, for determining right angles.—On or upon the square. (a) At right angles; straight: as, to cut cloth on the square, as opposed to bias. Hence, figuratively—(b) On an equality; on equal terms.

They [the Presbyterians] chose rather to be lorded over once more by a tyrant . . . than endure their brethren and friends to be upon the square with them.
Milton, Ans. to Salmasius, x.

We live not on the square with such as these;
Such are our betters who can better please.
Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, iii. 179.

(c) Honest; just; fairly; honestly.

Keep upon the square, for God sees you; therefore do your duty. Penn, To his Wife and Children.

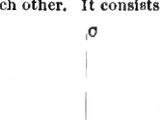
"Was the marriage all right, then?" "Oh, all on the square—civil marriage, church—everything."
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xxi.

Optical square, an instrument used in surveying for laying out lines at right angles to each other. It consists of a circular brass box containing two principal glasses of the sextant, viz. the index- and horizon-glasses, fixed at an angle of 45°. The method of using this instrument is obvious. If the observer moves forward or backward in the straight line AB, until the object B seen by direct vision coincides with another object C, seen by reflection, then a straight line drawn to C from the point at which he stands, as D, when the coincidence takes place will be perpendicular to AB.—Out of square. (a) Not drawn or cut to right angles. (b) Out of order; out of the way; irregular; incorrect or incorrectly.



Herodotus, in his Melpomene, scorneth them that make Europe and Asia equall, affirmynge that Europe . . . passeth them in latitude, wherin he speaketh not greatly out of square. R. Eden, tr. of Francisco Lopez (First Books [on America, ed. Arber, p. 346).

In St. Paul's time the integrity of Rome was famous; Corinth many ways reproved; they of Galatia much more out of square. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iii. 1.

Reducing squares, a method of copying designs or drawings on a different scale. The original is divided into squares by lines drawn at right angles to one another. The surface on which the copy is to be made is divided into the same number of squares, smaller or larger, according to the scale desired, and the lines of the design are drawn on the squares of the copy in the same relative positions that they occupy in the original. Instead of marking the original design with lines, a frame in which crossed threads or wires are set may be laid over it; or such a frame may be used in a similar way in drawing a landscape or any other subject from the original.—Rising-square, a square having a tongue and two arms at right angles to it, used in molding the floor-timbers in wooden ships. The tongue is in width equal to the siding size of the keel; and the seat and throat of the floor-timbers are squared across it, the risings of the floor at the head being squared across the arms. The timber-mold applied to the seating on the tongue and rising on the arm gives the shape of one side of the floor-timber; the mold reversed gives the other.—Solid square (milit.), a square body of troops; a body in which the ranks and files are equal.—Square of an anchor, the upper part of the shank.—Square of sense†. See the quotation.

I professe
My selfe an enemy to all other loyes,
Which the most precious square of sense professes,
And find I am alone felicitate
In your deere Highnesse loue.
Shak., Lear (folio 1673), i. 1. 76.

[This phrase has been variously interpreted by commentators: Warburton refers it to the four nobler senses—sight, hearing, taste, and smell; Johnson makes it mean 'compass or comprehension of sense'; R. G. White, 'the entire domain of sensation'; Schmidt, 'the choicest symmetry of reason, the most normal and intelligent mode of thinking.']—To break no squares†, to make no difference. See the next phrase.—To break or breed squares†, to break the square†, to throw things out of due or just relation and harmony; make a difference.—To reduce the square (milit.). See reduce.—To see how the squares go, to see how the game proceeds, or how matters are going on.

At length they, having an oppertunitie, resolved to send Mr. Winslow, with what beaver they had ready, into England, to see how ye squars wente.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 268.

One frog looked about him to see how squares went with their new king. Sir R. L'Estrange.

square[1] (skwār), a. [< ME. square, sqware, sware, orig. two syllables, < OF. esquarre, escarre (equiv. to quarré, carré, F. carré), < ML. exquadratus* (equiv. to quadratus), squared, square, pp. of exquadrare*, make square: see square[1], v., and cf. square[1], n., and quadrate, quarry[1].] 1. Having four equal sides and four right angles; quadrate; rectangular and equilateral: as, a square room; a square figure.

Thurgh a wyndow thikke, of many a barre
Of iren greet, and square as any sparre.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 218.

A massy slab, in fashion square or round.
Cowper, Task, i. 21.

2. Forming a right angle; having some part rectangular: as, a table with square corners.

Square tools for turning brass are ground in the same manner as triangular tools.
O. Byrne, Artisan's Handbook, p. 29.

3. Cut off at right angles, as any body or figure with parallel sides: as, a square apse or transept; a square (square-headed) window.

The east ends in this architecture [early Pointed in England] are usually square.
C. H. Moore, Gothic Architecture, p. 158.

4. Having a shape broad as compared with the height, with rectilinear and angular rather than curved outlines: as, a man of square frame.

Brode shulders aboue, big of his armys,
A harde brest hade the buerne, & his back sware.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3967.

My queen's square brows [forehead];
Her stature to an inch. Shak., Pericles, v. 1. 109.

Sir Bors it was, . . .
A square-set man. Tennyson, Holy Grail.

5. Accurately adjusted as by a square; true; just; fitting; proper.

She 's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her.
Shak., A. and C., ii. 2. 190.

Should he retain a thought not square of her,
This will correct all. Shirley, Love's Cruelty, ii. 3.

Hence—6. Equitable; just; fair; unimpeachable.

All have not offended;
For those that were, it is not square to take
On those that are revenges.
Shak., T. of A., v. 4. 36.

Telling truth is a quality as prejudicial to a man that would thrive in the world as square play to a cheat.
Wycherley, Plain Dealer, i. 1.

7. Even; leaving no balance: as, to make the accounts square; to be square with the world.

There will be enough to pay all our debts and put us all square. Disraeli, Sybil, iii. 2.

If a man's got a bit of property, a stake in the country, he'll want to keep things square. Where Jack isn't safe, Tom 's in danger. George Eliot, Felix Holt, xx.

8. Absolute; positive; unequivocal: as, a square refusal; a square contradiction; a square issue.—9. Leaving nothing; thorough-going; hearty.

Vn ferial beuveur. A square drinker, . . . one that will take his liquor soundly. Cotgrave (1611).

By Heaven, square eaters!
More meat, I say!—Upon my conscience,
The poor rogues have not eat this month.
Fletcher, Bonduca, ii. 3.

Hence—10. Solid; substantial; satisfying. [Colloq.]

And I've no idea, this minute,
When next a square meal I can raise.
New York Clipper, Song of the Tramp. (Bartlett.)

11. Naut., noting a vessel's yards when they are horizontal and athwartships, or at right angles to the keel.—All square, all arranged; all right. Dickens.—A square man†. (a) A consistent, steadfast man. See brick[3], etym.

The Prince of Philosophers [Aristotle], in his first booke of the Ethicks, termeth a constant minded man, euen egal and direct on all sides, and not easily ouerthrowne by euery litl[e] aduersitie, hominem quadratum, a square man. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (ed. Arber), p. 113.

(b) A man who is fair-dealing, straightforward, and trustworthy.

Then they fill
Lordships; steal women's hearts; with them and theirs
The world runs round; yet there are square men still.
Ford, Lover's Melancholy, iv. 2.

Fair and square. See fair[1].—Knight of the square flag. See banneret[2], 1.—Square B, in music. See B quadratum, under B.—Square capitals. See capital[1].—Square coupling. See coupling.—Square dance. See dance, 1.—Square dice, dice honestly made; dice that are not loaded. Halliwell.—Square fathom, file, foot, joint, knot, lobe, measure. See the nouns.—Square map-projection. See projection.—Square muscle, a quadrate muscle (which see, under quadrate).—Square number, a number which is the square of some integer number, as 1, 4, 9, 16, 25, etc.—Square octahedron, parsley, rig, roof. See the nouns.—Square piano. See pianoforte (c).—Square root, in arith. and alg. See root[1], 2 (g).—Square sail. See sail[1], 1, and squaresail.—Square stern. See stern[2].—Square to, at right angles to.

The plane of cant being square to the half-breadth plane. Thearle, Naval Arch., § 54.

Three-square, five-square, having three or five equal sides, etc.: an old and unwarrantable use of square.

square[1] (skwār), v.; pret. and pp. squared, ppr. squaring. [< ME. squaren, sqwaren, < OF. esquarrer (also esquarer, escarrer, esquarrir, esquarir, escarrir), F. équarrir = Pr. esquayrar, escairar, scayrar = Sp. escuadrar = Pg. esquadrar = It. squadrare, < ML. exquadrare*, square, < L. ex-, out, + quadrare, make square, < quadra, a square, < quadrus, square, four-cornered: see quadrate, and cf. square[1], a., square[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To make square; form with four equal sides and four right angles: as, to square a block; specifically (milit.), to form into a square.

Squared in full legion (such command we had). Milton, P. L., viii. 232.

2. To shape by reducing accurately to right angles and straight lines.

As if the carpenter before he began to square his timber would make his squire crooked. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 129.

Having with his shears squared, i. e. cut off at right angles, the rough outer edge of two adjoining sides of each board. Ure, Dict., I. 421.

3. To reduce to any given measure or standard; mold; adjust; regulate; accommodate; fit.

Stubborn critics, apt, without a theme
For depravation, to square the general sex
By Cressid's rule. Shak., T. and C., v. 2. 132.

Why needs Sordello square his course
By any known example? Browning, Sordello.

4. In astrol., to hold a quartile position in relation to.

Mars was on the cusp of the meridian, squaring the ascendant, and in zodiacal square to the Moon. Zadkiel, Gram. of Astrol., p. 394.

5. To balance; counterbalance; make even, so as to leave no difference or balance; settle: as, to square accounts.

I hope, I say, both being put together may square out the most eminent of the ancient gentry in some tolerable proportion. Fuller, Worthies, I. xv.

They square up their bills with the importers either with the articles themselves or with the money they receive for them, and lay in their new stock of goods. The Century, XL. 317.

6. To make angular; bring to an angular position.

With that I . . . planted myself side by side with Mr. Drummle, my shoulders squared and my back to the fire. Dickens, Great Expectations, xliii.

He again squared his elbows over his writing. R. L. Stevenson, An Inland Voyage, Epil.

7. In math., to multiply (a number or quantity) by itself.—8. To form into a polygon: a loose use of the word.

Summe ben 6 squared, summe 4 squared, and summe 3, as nature schapethe hem. Mandeville, Travels, p. 160.

9. To make "square" or "all right"; "fix"—that is, to make a corrupt bargain with; bribe; suborn: as, to square a subordinate before attempting a fraud. [Slang.]

The horses he had "nobbled," the jockeys "squared," the owners "hocussed." Lever, Davenport Dunn, xi.

How D—— was squared, and what he got for his not very valuable complicity in these transactions, does not appear. Huxley, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXV. 609.

10. To find the equivalent of in square measure; also, to describe a square equivalent to. —To square out†, to arrange; lay out.

Mason,
Advance your Picksaxe, whilst the Carpenter squares out
Our new work. Brome, The Queens Exchange, v.

To square the circle. See problem of the quadrature, under quadrature.—To square the course (naut.), to lay out the course.—To square the deadeyes (naut.), to get the deadeyes in the same horizontal line.—To square the ratlines (naut.), to get the ratlines horizontal and parallel to one another.—To square the yards (naut.), to lay the yards at right angles with the vessel's keel by means of the braces, at the same time bringing them to a horizontal position by means of the lifts.

II. intrans. 1. To accord; agree; fit: as, his opinions do not square with mine.

He [the Duke] could never square well with his Eminency the Cardinal. Howell, Letters, I. vi. 46.

There is no church whose every part so squares unto my conscience. Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 5.

No works shall find acceptance in that day . . .
That square not truly with the Scripture plan.
Cowper, Charity, i. 559.

2†. To quarrel; wrangle; take opposing sides.

And when he gave me the bishopric of Wincheater, he said he had often squared with me, but he loved me never the worse. State Trials, Gardiner, 5 Edw. VI., an. 1551.

Are you such fools
To square for this? Shak., Tit. And., ii. 1. 100.

3. To take the attitude of a boxer; prepare to spar: usually with a qualifying adverb: as, to square up; to square off. [Colloq.]

"Wanted to fight the Frenchman;" . . . and he laughed, and he squared with his fists. Thackeray, Pendennis, xxxviii.

Here Zack came in with the gloves on, squaring on the most approved prize-fighter principles as he advanced. W. Collins, Hide and Seek, i. 12.

4. To strut; swagger. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

As if some curious Florentine had trickte them up to square it up and downe the streets before his mistresse. Greene, Quip for an Upstart Courtier. (Davies.)

To square away, to square the yards for the purpose of keeping the ship before the wind.

square[1] (skwār), adv. [< square[1], a.] Squarely; at right angles; without deviation or deflection: as, to hit a person square on the head.

He who can sit squarest on a three-legged stool, he it is who has the wealth and glory. R. L. Stevenson, Inland Voyage, p. 50.

Fair and square. See fair[1].

square[2] (skwār), n. A dialectal form of squire[1].

square-built (skwār'bilt), a. Having a shape broad as compared with the height, and bounded by rectilinear rather than curved lines: as, a square-built man or ship.

A short, square-built old fellow, with thick bushy hair. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 52.

square-cap† (skwār'kap), n. A London apprentice: so called from the form of his cap.

But still she repli'd, good sir, la-bee,
If ever I have a man, square-cap for me.
Cleaveland, Poems (1651). (Nares.)

square-cut (skwār'kut), a. Cut with square cuffs, collar, and (broad) skirts: noting a style of coat in fashion in the eighteenth century.

He was loosely dressed in a purple, square-cut coat, which had seen service. Froude, Two Chiefs of Dunboy, ii.

square-flipper (skwār'flip″ėr), n. The bearded seal, Erignathus barbatus.

square-framed (skwār'frāmd), a. In joinery, having all the angles of its stiles, rails, and mountings square without being molded: applied to framing.

squarehead (skwār'hed), n. Originally, a free emigrant; now, a German or a Scandinavian. [Slang, Australia.]

square-headed (skwār'hed″ed), a. Cut off at right angles above, as an opening or a figure with upright parallel sides; especially, noting a window or a door so formed, as distinguished from one that is round-headed or arched, or otherwise formed.

The outer range, which is wonderfully perfect, while the inner arrangements are fearfully ruined, consists, on the side towards the town, of two rows of arches, with a third story with square-headed openings above them. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 117.

square-leg (skwār'leg), n. In cricket, a fielder who stands some distance to the batsman's left, nearly opposite the wicket, to stop balls that may be hit square across the field.

squarely (skwār'li), adv. 1. In a square form: as, squarely built.—2. In a square manner. (a) Honestly; fairly: as, to deal squarely. (b) Directly; roundly; positively; absolutely: as, to join issue squarely. (c†) Equally; evenly; justly.

3. In zoöl., rectangularly or perpendicularly to a part or margin: as, squarely truncate; squarely deflexed.

squareman (skwār'man), n.; pl. squaremen (-men). A workman who uses the square; a carpenter. [Scotch.]

The squareman follow'd i' the raw,
And syne the weavers.
Mayne, Siller Gun, p. 22. (Jamieson.)

squareness (skwār'nes), n. The state or quality of being square, in any sense.

squarer (skwār'ėr), n. [< square[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who squares: as, a squarer of the circle. —2†. One who quarrels; a contentious, irascible fellow.

Is there no young squarer now that will make a voyage with him to the devil? Shak., Much Ado, i. 1. 82.

3. One who spars; a boxer. [Colloq.]

square-rigged (skwār'rigd), a. Naut., having the principal sails extended by yards slung to the masts by the middle, and not by gaffs, booms, or lateen yards. Thus, a ship, a bark, and a brig are square-rigged vessels. See cut under ship.

squaresail (skwār'sāl), n. A sail horizontally extended on a yard slung to the mast by the middle, as distinguished from other sails which are extended obliquely; specifically, a square sail occasionally carried on the mast of a sloop, or the foremast of a schooner-rigged vessel, bent to a yard called the squaresail-yard.

square-set (skwār'set), a. Same as square-built.

square-shouldered (skwār'shōl″dėrd), a. Having high and broad shoulders, not sloping, and well braced back, so as to be straight across the back: the opposite of round-shouldered.

square-spot (skwār'spot), a. and n. I. a. Square-spotted, as a moth: as, the square-spot dart; the square-spot rustic: a British collectors' use.

II. n. A square-spotted moth, as the geometrid Tephrosia consonaria.

square-spotted (skwār'spot″ed), a. Having square spots: used specifically by British collectors to note various moths. Also square-spot.

square-stern (skwār'stėrn), n. A boat with a square stern; a Huron.

The boats from Kenosha to Sheboygan are called square-sterns. J. W. Milner.

square-sterned (skwār'stėrnd), a. Having a square stern: noting small boats or vessels.

square-toed (skwār'tōd), a. 1. Having the toes square.

His clerical black gaiters, his somewhat short, strapless trowsers, and his square-toed shoes. Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xvi.

2. Formal; precise; finical; punctilious; prim. [Rare.]

Have we not almost all learnt these expressions of old foozles, and uttered them ourselves when in the square-toed state? Thackeray, Roundabout Papers, xi.

square-toes (skwār'tōz), n. A precise, formal, old-fashioned personage.

I have heard of an old square-toes of sixty who learned, by study and intense application, very satisfactorily to dance. Thackeray, Philip, xv.

squaring (skwār'ing), n. [Verbal n. of square[1], v.] The act of making square.

squaring-boards (skwār'ing-bōrdz), n. pl. Thick planks of seasoned wood truly squared, used by bookbinders for cutting boards for single book-covers, or for the square cutting of paper with rough edges.

squaring-plow (skwār'ing-plou), n. In bookbinding, a hand-tool used to trim the edges of books.

squaring-shears (skwār'ing-shērz), n. sing. and pl. 1. In sheet-metal work, a machine for cutting and tracing sheets of tin-plate. It has an adjustable table with a scale and gage.—2. In bookbinding, a pivoted knife for trimming the edges of piles of paper or book-sheets.

squarrose (skwar'ōs), a. [< LL. squarrosus*, given in Festus as an adj. applied to persons whose skin scales off from uncleanliness; prob. an error for squamosus, scaly, scurfy: see squamose.] 1. In bot., rough with spreading processes; thickly set with divergent or recurved, commonly rigid, bracts or leaves, as the involucres of various Compositæ and the stems of some mosses; of leaves, bracts, etc., so disposed as to form a squarrose surface. Also squarrous. —2. In entom., laciniate and prominent: noting a margin with many long thin projections divided by deep incisions, the fringe-like edge so formed being elevated.

squarrous (skwar'us), a. [< LL. squarrosus*: see squarrose.] 1. In bot., same as squarrose, 1.—2. In entom., irregularly covered with scales, which stand up from the surface at various angles, resembling scurf.

squarrulose (skwar'ū-lōs), a. [Dim. of squarrose.] In bot., somewhat squarrose; finely squarrose.

squarson (skwär'sn), n. [< squ(ire) + (p)arson.] One who is at the same time a landed proprietor and a beneficed clergyman. [Ludicrous, Eng.]

The death has lately occurred of Rev. W. H. Hoare, of Oakfield, Sussex. . . . Mr. Hoare, it is said, was the original of the well-known expression, invented by Bishop Wilberforce, Squarson, by which he meant a landed proprietor in holy orders. Living Church, Aug. 25, 1888.

He held the sacrosanct position of a squarson, being at once Squire and Parson of the parish of Little Wentley. A. Lang, Mark of Cain, ix.

squarsonage (skwär'sn-āj), n. [< squarson + -age.] The residence of one who is at once squire and parson. [Ludicrous, Eng.]

She left the gray old squarsonage and went to London. A. Lang, Mark of Cain, ix.

squash[1] (skwosh), v. [An altered form, conformed to the related quash, of what would prop. be squatch*, < ME. squacchen, squachen, swacchen, < OF. esquachier, escachier, escacier, esquacher, escacher, F. écacher, crush; cf. Sp. acachar, agachar = Pg. agachar, acaçapar, refl., squat, cower; < L. ex-, out (or in Sp. Pg. a-, <

L. ad-, to), + coactare (ML. coactiare*), constrain, force, freq. of cogere (pp. coactus), constrain, force: see cogent. Cf. quash[1], and see squat[1], quat[1].] I. trans. To crush; smash; beat or press into pulp or a flat mass. [Colloq.]

One of the reapers, approaching, . . . made me apprehend that with the next step I should be squashed to death under his foot. Swift, Gulliver's Travels, ii. 1.

II. intrans. To splash; make a splashing sound. [Prov. or colloq.]

Wet through and through; with her feet squelching and squashing in her shoes whenever she moved. Dickens, Hard Times, xi.

squash[1] (skwosh), n. [< squash[1], v.] 1. Something soft and easily crushed; something unripe and soft; especially, an unripe pea-pod.

Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'tis a peascod. Shak., T. N., i. 5. 166.

2. Something that has been crushed into a soft mass.

It seemed churlish to pass him by without a sign, especially as he took off his squash of a hat to me. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 80.

3. A sudden fall of a heavy soft body; a shock of soft bodies.

My fall was stopped by a terrible squash, that sounded louder to my ears than the cataract of Niagara. Swift, Gulliver's Travels, ii. 7.

Lemon squash. See lemon-squash.

squash[2] (skwosh), n. [An abbr. of squanter-squash, squonter-squash, < Amer. Ind. askutasquash; asquash, pl. of asq, raw, green.] The fruit of an annual plant of the gourd kind, belonging to one of several species of the genus Cucurbita; also, the plant itself. The very numerous and divergent varieties of the cultivated squash are reduced by good authority to three species — C. maxima, the great or winter squash; C. Pepo, including the pumpkin and also a large part of the ordinary squashes; and C. moschata, the musky, China, or Barbary squash. The last has a club-shaped, pear-shaped, or long cylindrical fruit with a glaucous-whitish surface. The other squashes may for practical purposes be divided into summer and winter kinds. Among the latter is the C. maxima, of which the fruit is spheroidal in form and often of great size, sometimes weighing 240 pounds. A variety of this is the crowned or turban squash, whose fruit has a circular projection at the top, the mark of the adherent calyx-tube. Other winter squashes are of moderate size, and commonly either narrowed toward the base into a neck which in the "crooknecks" is curved to one side, or egg-shaped and pointed at the ends, as in the (Boston) marrow, long a standard in America, or the still better Hubbard squash. The winter squash can be preserved through the season. The summer squash has a very short vine, hence sometimes called bush-squash. Its fruit is smaller, and is either a crookneck or depressed in form, somewhat hemispherical with a scalloped border (see simlin); it is colored yellow, white, green, or green and white. Squashes are more grown in America than elsewhere, but also, especially the winter squashes, in continental Europe, and generally in temperate and tropical climates. In Great Britain the only ordinary squash is the vegetable marrow (see marrow[1]), or succade gourd. The summer squash is eaten before maturity, prepared by boiling. The winter squash is boiled or roasted; in France and the East it is largely used in soups and ragouts, in America often made into pies. It is also used as food for animals.

Askútasquash, their Vine-apple, Which the English, from them, call Squashes.
Roger Williams, Key to Lang. of America (ed. 1643), xvi. [(Rhode Isl. Soc. Coll.).

Squashes, but more truly squontersquashes; a kind of mellon, or rather gourd.
Josselyn, N. E. Rarities (1672), Amer. Antiq. Soc., IV. 193.

squash[3] (skwosh), n. [Abbr. of musquash (like coon from raccoon, or possum from opossum).] The musquash or muskrat, Fiber zibethicus.

The smell of our weasels, and ermines, and polecats is fragrance itself when compared to that of the squash and the skink. Goldsmith, Hist. Earth (ed. 1822), III. 94.

squash-beetle (skwosh'bē″tl), n. The striped cucumber-beetle, Diabrotica vittata, or a similar species, which feeds upon the squash and related plants. See Diabrotica.

squash-borer (skwosh'bōr″ėr), n. The larva of an ægerian or sesiid moth, Trochilium cucurbitæ, which bores the stems of squashes in the United States.

squash-bug (skwosh'bug), n. An ill-smelling heteropterous insect, Anasa tristis, of the family Coreidæ, found commonly on the squash and other cucurbitaceous plants in North America. There are one or two annual generations, and the bug hibernates as an adult. Throughout its life it feeds upon the leaves of these plants, and is a noted pest.

Squash-bug (Anasa tristis), natural size.

squasher (skwosh'ėr), n. [< squash[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which squashes. [Colloq.]

squash-gourd (skwosh'gōrd), n. Same as squash[2].

squashiness (skwosh'i-nes), n. The state of being squashy, soft, or miry. [Colloq.]

Give a trifle of strength and austerity to the squashiness of our friend's poetry. Landor, Imag. Conv., Southey and Porson, ii.

squash-melon (skwosh'mel″on), n. Same as squash[2].

squash-vine (skwosh'vīn), n. The squash. See squash[2].

squashy (skwosh'i), a. [< squash[1] + -y[1].] Soft and wet; miry; muddy; pulpy; mushy; watery. George Eliot, Mr. Gilfil, xxi. [Colloq.]

squat[1] (skwot), v.; pret. and pp. squatted or squat, ppr. squatting. [< ME. squatten, sqwatten, < OF. esquatir, press down, lay flat, crush, < es- (< L. ex-) + quatir, quattir, press down, = It. quattare, lie close, squat, < L. coactare, press together, constrain, force: see quat[1], and cf. squash[1].] I. trans. 1. To lay flat; flatten; crush; bruise. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

The foundementis of hillis ben togidir smyten and squat. Wyclif, 2 Ki. [2 Sam.] xxii. 8.

And you take me so near the net again,
I'll give you leave to squat me.
Middleton, No Wit like a Woman's, i. 3.

2. To compress. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—3. To make quiet. Compare squatting-pill. [Prov. Eng.]—4†. To quash; annul.

King Edward the second [said] . . . that although lawes were squatted in warre, yet notwithstanding they ought to be reuiued in peace. Stanihurst, Descrip. of Ireland, iii. (Holinshed's Chron., I.).

5. To put or set on the buttocks; cause to cower or crouch close to the ground: used reflexively.

He . . . then squatted himself down, with his legs twisted under him. Marryat, Pacha of Many Tales, the Water-Carrier.

II. intrans. 1. To sit close to the ground; crouch; cower: said of animals; sit down upon the buttocks with the knees drawn up or with the legs crossed: said of a human being: as, to squat down on one's hams.

The hare now, after having squatted two or three times, and been put up again as often, came still nearer. Budgell, Spectator, No. 116.

2. To settle on land, especially public or new lands, without any title or right: as, to squat upon a piece of common. See squatter[1].

The losel Yankees of Connecticut, those swapping, bargaining, squatting enemies of the Manhattoes, made a daring inroad into this neighborhood, and founded a colony called Westchester. Irving, Wolfert's Roost, i.

3. To settle by the stern, as a boat. Qualtrough.

squat[1] (skwot), a. [Pp. of squat[1], v.] 1. Flattened; hence, short and thick, like the figure of an animal squatting.

A squat figure, a harsh, parrot-like voice, and a systematically high head-dress. George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, v.

2. Sitting close to the ground; crouched; cowering; sitting on the buttocks with the knees drawn up or with the legs crossed.

Him there they found,
Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve.
Milton, P. L., iv. 800.

squat[1] (skwot), n. [< squat[1], v.; in defs. 3 and 4, < squat[1], a.] 1†. A bruise caused by a fall.

Bruises, squats, and falls. Herbert. (Johnson.)

Neer or at the salt-worke there growes a plant they call squatmore, and hath wonderfull vertue for a squatt; it hath a roote like a little carrat; I doe not heare it is taken notice of by any herbalist. Aubrey's MS. Wilts, p. 127. (Halliwell.)

In our Western language squat is a bruise. Aubrey's Wilts, Royal Soc. MS., p. 127. (Halliwell.)

2. The posture of one who or that which squats.

One [hare] runneth so fast you will neuer catch hir, the other is so at the squat you can neuer finde hir. Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 421.

And every child hates Shylock, though his soul
Still sits at squat, and peeps not from its hole.
Pope, Moral Essays, i. 56.

3. A short, stout person. [Colloq.]—4. A small mass or bunch of ore in a vein. [Cornwall, Eng.]

squat[2] (skwot), v. [< Dan. sqvatte, splash, spurt: see squander, swat[2], swatter.] To splash. [Prov. Eng.]

squat[3] (skwot), n. [< NL. Squatina.] The angel-fish, Squatina angelus.

Squatarola (skwā-tar'ō-lä), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1817), < It. dial. (Venetian) squatarola, the Swiss plover.] A genus of true plovers which have four toes. The only species is S. helvetica, formerly Tringa squatarola, the common Swiss, gray, black-bellied, or bullhead plover, found in most parts of the world, and having fifty or more technical names. It is much like the golden plover (see plover) in plumage, in changes of plumage with season, and in habits; but it is larger and stouter, and may be distinguished at a glance by the small though evident hind toe, no trace of which appears in any species of Charadrius proper.

Swiss or Black-bellied Plover (Squatarola helvetica), in full plumage.

squatarole, squaterole (skwat'ą-rōl, -ę-rōl), n. [< Squatarola.] The gray or Swiss plover, Squatarola helvetica.

Squatina (skwat'i-nä), n. [NL. (Duméril, 1806, after Aldrovandi), < L. squatina, a skate, dim. < squatus, a skate, an angel-fish.] The only genus of Squatinidæ, represented in most seas. S. angelus is the angel-shark, angel-fish, monkfish, or squat. See cuts under angel-fish and pterygium.

Squatinidæ (skwā-tin'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Squatina + -idæ.] A family of somewhat ray-like anarthrous sharks, represented by the genus Squatina. These fishes inhabit most seas, and are of singular aspect, having a broad flat body with very large horizontal pectoral fins separated from the body by a narrowed part, two small dorsals, large ventrals, a small caudal, and no anal. The body is depressed, the mouth is anterior, and the teeth are conical. The family is also called Rhinidæ, and the suborder Rhinæ is represented by this family alone.

squatinoid (skwat'i-noid), a. and n. [< Squatina + -oid.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Squatinidæ.

II. n. A shark of the family Squatinidæ.

squatmore†, n. [Appar. < squat[1], n., a bruise, + more[2], a plant.] The horned poppy, Glaucium flavum (G. luteum). See the second quotation under squat[1], n., 1. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

squat-snipe (skwot'snīp), n. Same as knicker.

squat-tag (skwot'tag), n. A game of tag in which a player cannot be touched or tagged while squatting.

squattage (skwot'āj), n. [< squat[1] + -age.] Land leased from the government for a term of years. [Australia.]

squatter[1] (skwot'ėr), n. [< squat[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which squats.—2. One who settles on new land, particularly on public land, without a title. [U. S.]

The place where we made fast was a wooding station, owned by what is called a Squatter, a person who, without any title to the land, or leave asked or granted, squats himself down and declares himself the lord and master of the soil for the time being. B. Hall, Travels in N. A., II. 297.

Hence—3. One who or that which assumes domiciliary rights without a title.

The country people disliked the strangers, suspected the traders, detested the heretics, and abhorred the sacrilegious squatters in the site of pristine piety and chastity. R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., xvii.

4. One who obtains from the government a right of pasturage on moderate terms; also, any stock-owner. [Australia.]

Squatters, men who rent vast tracts of land from Government for the depasturing of their flocks, at an almost nominal sum, subject to a tax of so much a head on their sheep and cattle. H. Kingsley, Illillyars and Burfons, xlviii.

5. In ornith., same as knicker.—Squatter sovereignty. See popular sovereignty, under popular.

squatter[2] (skwot'ėr), v. i. [A var. of swatter, freq. of swat: see swat[2], and cf. squander, squat[2].] To plunge into or through water. [Scotch and prov. Eng.]

Amang the springs,
Awa' ye squatter'd, like a drake,
On whistling wings.
Burns, Address to the De'il.

A little callow gosling squattering out of bounds. Charlotte Brontë, Villette, xxv.

squatting-pill (skwot'ing-pil), n. An opiate pill; a pill adapted to squat or quiet a patient. [Prov. Eng.]

squattle (skwot'l), v. i. [Freq. of squat[1].] To settle down; squat. [Scotch.]

Swith, in some beggar's haffet squattle;
There ye may creep, and sprawl, and sprattle.
Burns, To a Louse.

squattocracy (skwot-ok′ra-si), n. [For squatterocracy*, < squatter[1] + -ocracy as in aristocracy, etc.] The squatters of Australia collectively; the rich squatters who are interested in pastoral property. [Slang, Australia.]

The bloated squattocracy represents Australian Conservatism. Mrs. Campbell-Praed, The Head-Station, p. 35.

squatty (skwot′i), a. [< squat[1] + -y[1].] Squat; short and thick; dumpy; low-set.

A few yards away stood another short, squatty hemlock, and I said my bees ought to be there.
J. Burroughs, Pepacton, iii.

squaw (skwâ), n. [Formerly also squa; < Mass. Ind. squa, eshqua, Narragansett squâws, Cree iskwew; Delaware ochqueu, khqueu, a woman, squaw, in comp. female.] A female American Indian; an American Indian woman.

squaw-berry (skwâ′ber″i), n. Same as squaw-huckleberry.

squaw-duck (skwâ′duk), n. See duck[2].

squaw-huckleberry (skwâ′huk″l-ber-i), n. The deerberry, Vaccinium stamineum, a neat low bush of the eastern United States, with scarcely edible fruit, but with pretty racemed flowers having white recurved corolla and projecting yellow stamens.

squawk (skwâk), v. i. [A var. of squeak, perhaps affected by squall[2].] To cry with a loud harsh voice; make a loud outery, as a duck or other fowl when frightened.

Your peacock perch, pet post,
To strut and spread the tail and squawk upon.
Browning.

squawk (skwâk), n. [< squawk, v.] 1. A loud, harsh squeak or squall.

Gerard gave a little squawk, and put his fingers in his ears. C. Reade, Cloister and Hearth, xxvi. (Davies.)

2. The American night-heron: same as quawk.

squawk-duck (skwâk′duk), n. The bimaculated duck. See bimaculate. [Prov. Eng.]

squawker (skwâ′kėr), n. [< squawk + -er[1].] One who or that which squawks. Specifically—(a) A duck-call. Sportsman's Gazetteer. (b) A toy consisting of a rubber bag tied to one end of a tube which contains a tongue-piece or reed.

squawking-thrush (skwâ′king-thrush), n. The mistlethrush. [Prov. Eng.]

squawl†, v. An obsolete spelling of squall[2].

squaw-man (skwâ′man), n. A white man who has married a squaw, and has become more or less identified with the Indians and their mode of life: so called in contempt. [Western U. S.]

Nowadays those who live among and intermarry with the Indians are looked down upon by the other frontiersmen, who contemptuously term them squaw-men.
T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXVI. 832.

squaw-mint (skwâ′mint), n. The American pennyroyal, Hedeoma pulegioides. [Rare.]

squawroot (skwâ′röt), n. 1. A leafless fleshy plaut, Conopholis Americana, of the Orobanchaceæ, found in the eastern United States. It grows from 3 to 6 inches high, with the thickness of a man's thumb, and is covered with fleshy scales having the flowers in their axils, at length becoming hard. It is more or less root-parasitic, and occurs in clusters among fallen leaves in oak-woods. Also cancer-root.

Squawroot (Conopholis Americana), parasitic on the root of oak.

2. Rarely, the blue cohosh, Caulophyllum thalictroides.

squaw-vine (skwâ′vīn), n. The partridge-berry, Mitchella repens. [Rare.]

squaw-weed (skwâ′wēd), n. Same as golden ragwort (which see, under ragwort).

squeak (skwēk), v. [E. dial. also sweak; < Sw. svväka, croak, = Norw. skvaka, cackle, = Icel. skvakka, sound like water shaken in a bottle; an imitative word, parallel to similar forms without initial s—namely, Sw. qväka = Dan. qvakka, croak, quack, = Icel. kraka, twitter, chatter, etc.: see quack[1]. Cf. squawk.] I. intrans. 1. To utter a short, sharp, shrill cry, as a pig or a rat; make a sharp noise, as a pipe or fife, a wheel or hinge that needs oiling, or the sole of a boot.

The sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 1. 116.

Beside, 'tis known he could speak Greek
As naturally as pigs squeak.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. i. 52.

2. To break silence or secrecy; speak out; turn informer; "squeal"; peach. [Slang.]

If he be obstinate, put a civil question to him upon the rack, and he squeaks, I warrant him.
Dryden, Don Sebastian, iv. 3.

"She was at the Kaim of Derncleugh, at Vanbeest Brown's last wake, as they call it." . . . "That's another breaker ahead, Captain! Will she not squeak, think ye?"
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxxiv.

3. To shirk an obligation, as the payment of a debt. [Slang.]

II. trans. To utter with a squeak, or in a squeaking tone.

And that, for any thing in Nature,
Pigs might squeak Love-Odes, Dogs bark Satyr.
Prior, To Fleetwood Shepherd.

squeak (skwēk), n. [< squeak, v.] A short, sharp, shrill cry, such as that uttered by pigs or mice, or made by a wheel or the hinge of a door when dry.

With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak.
Dryden, Cock and Fox, l. 732.

There chanced to be a coquette in the consort, . . . with a great many skittish notes [and] affected squeaks.
Addison, Tatler, No. 157.

A squeak, or a narrow squeak, an escape by the merest chance. [Colloq. or slang.]—Bubble and squeak. See bubble[1].

squeaker (skwē′kėr), n. [< squeak + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which squeaks.

Mimical squeakers and bellowers.
Echard, Gn Ans. to Contempt of Clergy, p. 137. (Latham.)

2. A young bird, as a pigeon, partridge, or quail; a chirper; a peeper; a squealer.

Mr. Campbell succeeded in bagging 220 grouse by evening; every squeaker was, however, counted.
W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 535.

3. An Australian crow-shrike of the genus Strepera, as S. cuneicauda (oftener called anaphonensis, after Temminck, 1824, a specific name antedated by the one given by Vieillot in 1816), mostly of a grayish color, 19 inches long: so called from its cries.—4. One who confesses, or turns informer. [Slang.]

squeakily (skwē′ki-li), adv. [< squeaky + -ly[2].] With a thin, squeaky voice: as, to sing squeakily.

squeakingly (skwē′king-li), adv. In a squeaking manner; with a squeaky voice; squeakily.

squeaklet (skwēk′let), n. [< squeak + -let.] A little squeak. [Affected.]

Vehement shrew-mouse squeaklets.
Carlyle, Misc., III. 49. (Davies.)

squeaky (skwē′ki), a. [< squeak + -y[1].] Squeaking; inclined to squeak.

squeal[1] (skwēl), v. i. [< ME. squelen, < Sw. dial. sqväla = Norw. skvella, squall, squeal; a var. of squall[2], < Icel. skvala, squall: see squall[2].] 1. To utter a sharp, shrill cry, or a succession of such cries, as expressive of pain, fear, anger, impatience, eagerness, or the like.

She pinched me, and called me a squealing chit. Steele.

This child began to squeal about his mother, having been petted hitherto and wont to get all he wanted by raising his voice but a little.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, lxix.

2. To turn informer; peach; "squeak." [Slang.]

The first step of a prosecuting attorney, in attacking a criminal conspiracy, is to spread abroad the rumor that this, that, or the other confederate is about to squeal; he knows that it will be but a few days before one or more of the rogues will hurry to his office to anticipate the traitors by turning State's evidence.
The Century, XXXV. 649.

squeal[1] (skwēl), n. [< squeal[1], v.] A shrill, sharp cry, more or less prolonged.

His lengthen'd chin, his turn'd-up snout,
His eldritch squeal and gestures.
Burns, Holy Fair.

squeal[2] (skwēl), a. [Origin obscure.] Infirm; weak. [Prov. Eng.]

That he was weak, and ould, and squeal,
And seldom made a hearty meal.
Wolcot (Peter Pindar), Works (ed. 1794), I. 286. (Halliwell.)

squealer (skwē′lėr), n. [< squeal[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which squeals.—2. One of several birds. (a) A young pigeon; a squab; a squeaker. See cut under squab.

When ready to leave the nest and face the world for itself, it [a young pigeon] is a squealer, or, in market parlance, a squab. The Century, XXXII. 100.

(b) The European swift, Cypselus apus. Also jack-squealer, screecher. (c) The American golden plover, Charadrius dominicus. F. C. Browne. [Plymouth, Mass.] (d) The harlequin duck. G. Trumbull, 1888. [Maine.]

squeam†, (skwēm), v. i. [A back-formation, < squeamish.] To be squeamish. [Rare.]

This threat is to the fools that squeam
At every thing of good esteem.
C. Smart, tr. of Phædrus (1765), p. 145.

squeamish (skwē′mish), a. [Also dial. sweamish, swaimish; early mod. E. squeimish, squemish; a later form (with suffix -ish[1] substituted for orig. -ous) of squeamous: see squeamous. The sense 'apt to be nauseated' may be due in part to association with qualmish.] 1. Easily disgusted or nauseated; hence, fastidious; scrupulous; particular; nice to excess in questions of propriety or taste; finical: as, a squeamish stomach; squeamish notions.

Let none other meaner person despise learning, nor . . . be any whit squeimish to let it be publisht vnder their names. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 17.

The modern civilized man is squeamish about pain to a degree which would have seemed effeminate or worse to his great-grandfather. The Century, XXXVI. 633.

2. Qualmish; slightly nauseated; sickish: as, a squeamish feeling.

The wind grew high, and we, being among the sands, lay at anchor; I began to be dizzy and squeamish.
Pepys, Diary, I. 42.

=Syn. 1. Dainty, Fastidious, etc. (see nice), overnice, straitlaced.

squeamishly (skwē′mish-li), adv. In a squeamish or fastidious manner; with too much niceness or daintiness.

squeamishness (skwē′mish-nes), n. The state or quality of being squeamish; excessive niceness or daintiness; fastidiousness; excessive scrupulousness.

squeamous† (skwē′mus), a. [E. dial. also swaimous; early mod. E. squemous, skoymose, < ME. squaimous, squaymous, squaymose, skeymous, skoymus, sweymous, disdainful, fastidious, < sweme, sweem, E. dial. sweam, dizziness, an attack of sickness: see sweam. The word has now taken the form squeamish. The dial. change of sw- to squ- (which in ME. further changes to sk-) occurs in many words: cf. squander.] Same as squeamish.

Thou wert not skoymus of the maidens wombe.
Te Deum (14th century), quoted in N. and Q., 4th ser., [III. 181.

But soth to say he was somdel squaimous.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale.

Thow art not skoymose thy fantasy for to tell.
Bale's Kynge Johan, p. 11. (Halliwell.) squean[1]†, v. i. [A var. of squint.] To squint.

squean[2] (skwēn), v. i. [Prob. imitative; cf. squeal[1].] To fret, as the hog. Halliwell; Wright. [Prov. Eng.]

squeasiness† (skwē′zi-nes), n. Queasiness; qualmishness; nausea.

A squeasiness and rising up of the heart against any mean, vulgar, or mechanical condition of men.
Hammond, Works, IV. 614.

squeasy† (skwē′zi), a. [Also squeezy; formerly squeazy; a var. of queasy (with intensive s-, as in splash for plash[1], squench for quench): see queasy.] Queasy; qualmish; squeamish; scrupulous.

His own nice and squeasy stomach, still weary of his last meal, puts him into a study whether he should eat of his best dish or nothing. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 425.

The women are few here, squeezy and formal, and little skilled in amusing themselves or other people.
Gray, Letters, I. 202.

squeege (skwēj), v. and n. A dialectal form of squeeze. Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 530.

squeegee (skwē′jē), n. [A form of squilgee, simulating squeeze for squeeze.] 1. Naut., same as squilgee.—2. In photog., a stout strip of soft rubber set longitudinally in a wooden back which serves as a handle, and beyond which the rubber projects. It is used for expressing moisture from paper prints, for bringing a film into close contact with a glass or mount, etc., and is also made in the form of a roller of soft rubber, much resembling a printers' inking-roller.

squeegee (skwē′jē), v. t. [< squeegee, n.] To treat with a squeegee or squilgee.

A glacé finish may easily be obtained by squeegeeing the washed print on a polished plate of hard rubber.
Sci. Amer., N. S., LX. 53.

squeezability (skwē-za-bil′i-ti), n. [< squeezable + -ity (see -bility).] The quality or state of being squeezable. Imp. Dict.

squeezable (skwē′za-bl), a. [< squeeze + -able.] 1. Capable or admitting of being squeezed; compressible.—2. Figuratively, capable of being constrained or coerced: as, a squeezable government. [Colloq.]

You are too versatile and too squeezable; . . . you take impressions too readily.
Savage, Reuben Medlicott, i. 9. (Davies.)

The peace-of-mind-at-any-price disposition of that [Gladstone] Cabinet had rendered it squeezable to any extent.
Lowe, Bismarck, II. 230.

squeeze (skwēz), v.; pret. and pp. squeezed, ppr. squeezing. [Early mod. E. also squize, squise, E. dial. also squizzen (also perversely squeege); with intensive s-, < ME. queisen, squeeze, ‹ AS. cwēsan, cwȳsan, cwīsan (in comp. tō-cwȳsan, tō-cwēsan), crush; cf. Sw. qväsa, squeeze, bruise; D. kwetsen = MHG. quetzen, G. quetschen, G. dial. quetzen, crush, squash, bruise; MLG. quattern, quettern, squash, bruise; Goth. kwistjan, destroy; Lith. gaiszti, destroy.]

I. trans. 1. To press forcibly; subject to strong pressure; exert pressure upon: as, to squeeze a sponge; hence, to bruise or crush by the application of pressure: as, to squeeze one's fingers in a vise; apply force or pressure to for the purpose of extracting something: as, to squeeze a lemon.

O Phylax, spare
My squeezed Soul, least from herself she start.
Loose, loose the Buckle! if the time be come
That I must die, at least afford me room.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 206.

The people submit quietly when their governor squeezes their purses. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 151.

The ingredients for punch were all in readiness; but no one would squeeze the oranges till he came.
Fielding, Joseph Andrews, i. 13.

2. To press in sympathy or affection, or as a silent indication of interest or emotion: as, to squeeze one's hand.

He is said to be the first that made love by squeezing the hand. Steele, Spectator, No. 109.

With my left hand I took her right — did she squeeze it? I think she did.
Thackeray, Fitz-Boodle Papers, Dorothea.

3. To produce or procure by the application of pressure; express; extract: usually with out: as, to squeeze consent from an official.

Qveise out the jus. Reliq. Antiq., I. 302.

When day appeared, . . . I began againe to squise out the matter [from a wound], & to annoint it with a litle salue which I had.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 146.

He [Canute] squeez'd out of the English, though now his subjects, not his Enemies, 72, some say 82, thousand pound. Milton, Hist. Eng., vi.

They can squeeze Bourdeaux out of a sloe, and draw Champagne from an apple. Addison, Tatler, No. 131.

4. To thrust forcibly; force: with into, or other similar adjunct: as, to squeeze a gown into a box.

He [Webster] has not the condensing power of Shakespeare, who squeezed meaning into a phrase with an hydraulic press. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 318.

Schneider had provided himself at the Greenland ports with the entire costume of the Eskimo belle, and, being a small man, was able to squeeze himself into the garments.
A. W. Greely, Arctic Service, p. 176.

5. To harass or oppress by exactions or the like.

The little officers oppress the people; the great officers squeeze them. Pococke, Description of the East, I. 171.

The whole convict system is a money-making affair; . . . they all just naturally squeeze the convict.
The Century, XL. 221.

6. To obtain a facsimile impression of on paper, by means of water and rubbing or beating. See squeeze, n., 3.

But the overhang of the rock makes it extremely difficult to squeeze satisfactorily. Athenæum, No. 3284, p. 455.

Squeezed-in vessel, a vessel of pottery or glass whose form indicates that it has been pressed in on opposite sides, as if nipped by the fingers. It is a common form in Roman glass bottles; and many Japanese flasks of stoneware also have this shape.

II. intrans. 1. To press; press, push, or force one's way through or into some tight, narrow, or crowded place; pass by pressing or pushing.

Many a public minister comes empty in; but, when he has crammed his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off. Sir R. L'Estrange.

2. To pass (through a body) under the application of pressure.

A concave sphere of gold filled with water, and sodered up, has, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold.
Newton, Opticks, ii. 3, prop. 8.

squeeze (skwēz), n. [‹ squeeze, v.] 1. Pressure, or an application of pressure; a hug or embrace; a friendly, sympathetic, or loving grasp: as, a squeeze of the hand.

Had a very affectionate squeeze by the hand, and a fine compliment in a corner. Gray, Letters, I. 239.

The Squire shook him heartily by the hand, and congratulated him on his safe arrival at Headlong Hall. The doctor returned the squeeze, and assured him that the congratulation was by no means misapplied.
Peacock, Headlong Hall, iii.

2. Crush; crowding.

The pair of MacWhirters journeyed from Tours, . . . and, after four-and-twenty hours of squeeze in the diligence, presented themselves at nightfall at Madame Smolensk's. Thackeray, Philip, xxvi.

3. A cast or an impression, as of an inscription or a coin, produced by forcing some plastic material into the hollows or depressions of the surface; especially, such a facsimile or impression made by applying sheets of wet unsized paper to the object to be copied, and thoroughly passing over the sheets with light blows of a stiff brush, so as to force the paper into every inequality. The paper, upon drying, hardens, yielding a perfect and durable negative, or reversed copy, of the original. This method is employed by archæologists for securing faithful transcripts of ancient inscriptions.

It is to him that we owe the copies and squeezes of the Nabathean inscriptions. Contemporary Rev., LIV. 302.

Armed, therefore, with a stock of photographic plates, and with the far more essential stock of paper for making moulds or squeezes from the stone, I began work on the temples of Thebes. Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 297.

squeezer (skwē′zėr), n. [‹ squeeze + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which squeezes. Specifically — (a) In iron-working, a machine employed in getting the puddled ball into shape, or shingling it, without hammering. (See puddling.) Squeezers are of two kinds, reciprocating and rotary. The essential feature of the reciprocating form is that a movable arm or lever works against a corresponding fixed jaw, the former representing the a, ridged eccentric casing; b, ridged roller. The ball of metal enters at c, in the direction shown by the arrow, and emerges at c′.

Rotary Squeezer.

hammer, the latter the anvil, of the old method of shingling with the hammer. In the rotary squeezer the puddled ball is brought into shape by being passed between a cast-iron cylinder and a cylindrical casing, the former being placed eccentrically within the latter so that the distance between their surfaces gradually diminishes in the direction of the rotation. The ball, being introduced at the widest part of the opening, is carried forward and finally delivered at the narrower end, reduced in size and ready for rolling. (b) In sheet-metal working, a crimping-machine for forcing the tops and covers of tin cans over the cylinders which form the sides of the cans. (c) A lemon-squeezer.

2. pl. A kind of playing-cards in which the face-value of each card is shown in the upper left-hand corner, and can readily be seen by squeezing the cards slightly apart, without displaying the hand. — Alligator squeezer. Same as crocodile squeezer. — Crocodile squeezer, a peculiar form of squeezer, having a long projecting upper jaw armed with teeth. It is used in the manufacture of iron.

squeezing (skwē′zing), n. [Verbal n. of squeeze, v.] 1. The act of pressing; compression. — 2. That which is forced out by or as by pressure; hence, oppressive exaction.

The dregs and squeezings of the brain.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 607.

squeezing-box (skwē′zing-boks), n. In ceram., a cylinder of metal, through an opening in the bottom of which plastic clay is forced in a continuous ribbon of any desired section, to form lugs, handles, etc.

squeezy†, a. See squeasy.

squelch (skwelch), n. [Formerly also squelsh; prob. a var., with intensive prefix s-, of E. dial. quelch, a blow, bang.] A crushing blow; a heavy fall. [Colloq.]

But Ralpho, who had now begun
T' adventure resurrection
From heavy squelch, and had got up.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. ii. 933.

squelch (skwelch), v. [See squelch, n.] I. trans. 1. To crush down; stamp on as if squeezing out something liquid; put an end to. [Colloq.]

'Sfoot, this Fat Bishop hath so overlaid me,
So squelch'd and squeezed me.
Middleton, Game at Chess, v. 3.

Here, all about the fields, is the wild carrot. You cut off its head, just before it seeds, and you think you have squelched it; but this is just what Nature . . . wanted you to do. J. Burroughs, The Century, XIX. 688.

2. To disconcert; discomfit; put down. [Colloq.]

Luke glanced shamefaced at the nosegay in his buttonhole, and was squelched.
J. W. Palmer, After his Kind, p. 120.

II. intrans. To be crushed. [Colloq.]

squelet, v. A Middle English form of squeal.

squelery†, squeleryt, n. Middle English forms of sculler[2], scullery.

squench (skwench), v. t. [A var., with intensive prefix s-, of quench.] To quench. Beau. and Fl. [Obsolete or vulgar.]

squerelt, squerrelt, squerrilt, n. Obsolete forms of squirrel.

squeteague (skwe-tēg′), n. [Also squetee, squitee, squit; of Amer. Ind. origin.] A salt-water sciænoid fish, Cynoscion regalis (formerly Otolithus regalis), also called weakfish, sea-salmon, and sea-trout in common with some other members of the same genus. It is silvery, darker above, with many irregular, small, dark blotches tending to form oblique undulating bars. It is common from Cape Cod southward, and is a valued food-fish. A more distinctly marked fish of this kind is C. maculatus, the spotted squeteague, weakfish, or sea-trout, of more southerly distribution. See Cynoscion, and cut under weakfish.

squib (skwib), v.; pret. and pp. squibbed, ppr. squibbing. [A var. of squip*, ‹ ME. squippen, a var. of swip (ME. swippen), move swiftly, sweep, dash: see swip, swipe.] I. intrans. 1. To move swiftly and irregularly.

A battered unmarried beau, who squibs about from place to place. Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, lxxxviii.

2. [‹ squib, n., 3.] To make a slight, sharp report, like that of an exploding squib. — 3. [‹ squib, n., 4.] To resort to the use of squibs, or petty lampoons.

II. trans. 1. To throw (in or out) suddenly; explode.

Thou wouldst neuer squib out any new Salt-petre Iestes against honest Tucca.
Dekker, Humorous Poet (Works, ed. Pearson, I. 235).

He [Mr. Brian Twyne] squibs in this parenthesis.
Fuller, Hist. Cambridge University, i. § 52.

2. [‹ squib, n., 4.] To attack in squibs; lampoon.

squib (skwib), n. [‹ squib, v.] 1. A ball or tube filled with gunpowder, sent or fired swiftly through the air or along the ground, exploding somewhat like a rocket.

Like a Squib it falls,
Or fire-wingd shaft, or sulph'ry Powder Balls.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 2.

Nor nimble squib is seen to make afeard
The gentlewomen.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, Prol.

So squibs and crackers fly into the air,
Then, only breaking with a noise, they vanish
In stench and smoke. Ford, Broken Heart, ii. 2.

2. A reed, rush, quill, or roll of paper filled with a priming of gunpowder; a tube of some kind used to set off a charge of gunpowder, as at the bottom of a drill-hole. Also called mote, train, and match. — 3. A fire-cracker, especially one broken in the middle so that when it is fired the charge explodes without a loud report. — 4. A petty lampoon; a short satirical writing or sketch holding up a person or thing to ridicule.

Allowing that . . . [the pisy] succeeds, there are a hundred squibs flying all abroad to prove that it should not have succeeded. Goldsmith, Polite Learning, x.

5†. One who writes lampoons or squibs; a petty satirist; a paltry, trifling fellow.

The squibs are those who, in the common phrase of the word, are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers.
Steele, Tatler, No. 88.

6. A kind of cheap taffy, made of treacle.

And there we had a shop, too, for lollipops and squibs.
Hood, Lines by a Schoolboy.

squibbish (skwib′ish), a. [‹ squib + -ish[1].] Flashy; light. T. Mace, Music's Monument. (Davies.) squid (skwid), n. [Origin unknown.] 1. A kind of cuttlefish or calamary; a dibranchiate cephalopod with ten arms, especially of the family Loliginidæ or Teuthididæ. The name is most frequently given to the small, slender calamaries, a few inches long and with a candal fin, which are much used as bait, but is extended (with or without a qualifying term) to many other species of different genera and families, some of which, as the giant squids, are the largest of cephalopods. See cuts under Architeuthis, calamary, Desmoteuthis, Loliginidæ, Sepiola, and Spirula, and compare those under Dibranchiata, cuttlefish, and Sepia.

2. An artificial bait or lure of metal, ivory, etc., used in angling or trolling for fish, often simply a fish-hook on the shank of which a mass of lead is melted in cylindrical or tapering form to imitate a squid (def. 1). — False squids, the Loligopsidæ. — Flying squids, the Ommastrephidæ. — Giant squids, the very large cephalopods of the genus Architeuthis, as A. harveyi of the Atlantic coast of North America, among those called devil-fish. See cut under Architeuthis. — Long-armed squids, the Chiroteuthididæ. — Long-finned squids, species of Loliginidæ. See cut under Loliginidæ. — Short-finned squids, species of Ommastrephes, as O. illecebrosus, common in New England seas and northward, and a principal source of bait.

squid (skwid), v. i.; pret. and pp. squidded, ppr. squidding. [< squid, n.] To fish with a squid or spoon-bait.

squidding (skwid'ing), n. [Verbal n. of squid, v.] The act, art, or practice of fishing with a squid.

squid-fork (skwid'fôrk), n. An instrument used by fishermen in baiting with a squid.

squid-hound (skwid'hound), n. The striped-bass, Roccus lineatus. See cut under bass.

squid-jig (skwid'jig), n. A squid-jigger.

squid-jigger (skwid'jig″ėr), n. A device for catching squids, consisting of a number of hooks soldered together by the shanks so that the points radiate in all directions. It is dragged or jerked through the water.

squid-jigging (skwid'jig″ing), n. The act of jigging for squids; the use of a squid-jigger; squidding.

squid-thrower (skwid'thrō″ėr), n. A device, on the principle of the catapult, used in trolling to cast a fishing-line seaward. E. H. Knight.

squier[1]†, n. An obsolete spelling of squire[1].

squier[2]†, n. An obsolete form of square[1].

squierie†, n. An obsolete spelling of squiry.

squiggle (skwig'l), v. i.; pret. and pp. squiggled, ppr. squiggling. [Appar. a var., with intensive prefix s-, of quiggle*, E. dial. queegle, a var. of wiggle: see wiggle.] 1. To shake a fluid about in the mouth with the lips closed. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To move about like an eel; squirm; wriggle. [Colloq., U. S.]

squilert†, n. A Middle English form of sculler[2].

squilgee (skwil'jē), n. [Also squillagee, squillgee, also squeegee, squegee (see squeegee); origin obscure; perhaps connected with swill, swile, wash, rinse; but the term. is not explained.] 1. Naut.: (a) An implement somewhat resembling a wooden hoe, with an edge of india-rubber or thick leather, used to scrape the water from wet decks. (b) A small swab. (c) A becket and toggle used to confine a studding-sail while setting it.—2. One of several implements constructed like the nautical implement above defined (1 (a)), used for washing glass, in photographic work, etc. See squeegee, 2.

squilgee (skwil'jē), v. t. [< squilgee, n.] Naut., to scrape (the wet decks of a ship) with a squilgee.

The washing, swabbing, squilgeeing, etc., lasts, or is made to last, until eight o'clock, when breakfast is ordered, fore and aft. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 100.

squilgee-toggle (skwil'jē-tog″l), n. A toggle with a small line fastened to it, used to secure a strap round a studdingsail while being set, so that by pulling out the squilgee when the sail is hoisted far enough the sail is released.

squill[1] (skwil), n. [< ME. squille, squylle, sqwylle, squyle, < OF. squille, seille, F. squille, scille = Sp. esquila = Pg. scilla = It. squilla, < L. squilla, scilla, squill, = Gr. σκίλλα, squill, perhaps for σκιδ̄λα* (as equiv. σχῖνος for σχιδ̄νος*), and so called from its splitting easily into scales, < σχίζειν, split: see schism.] 1. The medicinal bulb of Urginea Scilla, or the plant itself; the officinal squill. See def. 2.—2. Any plant of the genus Scilla (which see). S. nutans is commonly called bluebell, or wild hyacinth. The spring squill, S. verna, and the autumn squill, S. autumnalis, are small European wild flowers of no great merit in cultivation. The star-flowered squill, S. amœna, is a distinct early species, the flowers indigo-blue with large yellowish-green ovary, less attractive than the species following. The early squill, S. bifolia, produces rich masses of dark-blue flowers very early in the spring. The Spanish squill, S. Hispanica (S. campanulata), is a fine species of early summer, with a strong pyramidal raceme of large pendent usually light-blue flowers; also called Spanish bluebell. The Italian squill, S. Italica, has pale-blue flowers with intensely blue stamens. The pyramidal or Peruvian squill, S. Peruviana, not from Peru, but from the Mediterranean region, has pale-blue flowers with white stamens, the flowers very numerous in a regular pyramid. The Siberian squill, S. Sibirica (S. amœnula), not from Siberia, but from southern Russia, is a very choice small early-flowering species, the blossom of a peculiar porcelain-blue. These are all hardy except the pyramidal squill.—Chinese squill, a species of Scilla, S. Chinensis, once classed as Barnardia.—Compound syrup of squill. See syrup.—Oxymel of squill. See oxymel.—Pancratic squill, a variety of the officinal squill said to be milder in its action.—Roman squill, the Roman hyacinth, Hyacinthus Romanus, once classed as Scilla, also as Bellevalia.—Wild squill, the American wild hyacinth, or eastern camass, Camassia (Scilla) Fraseri.

Squill (Urginea Scilla).

squill[2] (skwil), n. [< L. squilla, scilla, a small fish of the lobster kind, a prawn, shrimp, so called from a supposed resemblance to the bulb or plant of the same name: see squill[1].] 1. A stomatopodous crustacean of the genus Squilla or family Squillidæ; a mantis-shrimp or squill-fish. See cuts under mantis-shrimp and Squillidæ.—2†. An insect so called from its resemblance to the preceding; a mantis. Also called squill-insect.

Squilla (skwil'ą), n. [NL. (Fabricius), < L. squilla, scilla, a prawn: see squill[2].] 1. The representative genus of Squillidæ, containing such crustaceans as S. mantis, the common mantis-shrimp or locust-shrimp. The southern squill of the United States is Coronis glabriuscula. See cuts under mantis-shrimp and Squillidæ.—2. [l. c.] Same as squill[2], 1.—3†. [l. c.] Same as squill[2], 2.

The Squilla, an insect, differs but little from the fish Squilla. Moufet, Theater of Insects, II. xxxvii.

squillagee (skwil'ą-jē), n. Same as squilgee.

squillante (skwil-lan'te), a. [It., ppr. of squillare, clang, ring.] In music, ringing; bell-like in tone.

squill-fish (skwil'fish), n. A squill, or some similar crustacean.

squillian (skwil'i-an), a. [= F. squillien; as L. squilla, squill (see squill[2]), + -ian.] Of or pertaining to a squill; belonging or relating to the Squillidæ.

Squillidæ (skwil'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Squilla + -idæ.] A family of stomatoped crustaceans, Locust-shrimp (Squilla scabricauda), in longitudinal vertical section.

I–XX, the somites; 1′–XX′, their appendages, of most of which the bases only are seen. Al, alimentary canal; C, heart; An, anus; T, telson; br, branchiæ; p, penis.

typified by the genus Squilla, to which the Stomatopoda are sometimes restricted; the mantis-shrimps or gastrurans. The pseudogenus Alima and at least two other spurious genera were named from larval forms of this family. Other good genera than the type are Coronis and Gonodactylus. Also called Squilloidea.

squill-insect† (skwil'in″sekt), n. Same as squill[2], 2. N. Grew.

squillitic (skwi-lit'ik), a. [< L. squilliticus, scillitieus, < Gr. σκιλλιτικός, pertaining to the squill: see squill[2].] Of, pertaining to, or obtained from squills.

A decoction of this kind of worms sodden in squilliticke vinegre. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxx. 3.

squimble-squamble†, adv. Same as skimble-scamble. Cotgrave.

squint (skwint), v. i. and t. [Also squean, skeen, sken, also squinny, formerly squiny; cf. squint.] To squint.

As doctors in their deepest doubts Stroke up their foreheads hie;
Or men amazde their sorrow flouts
By squeaning with the eye.
Armin's Italian Taylor and his Boy (1609). (Nares.) squinance† (skwin'ąns), n. Same as squinancy, 1.

squinancy† (skwiu'ąn-si), n. [Also contr. squincy, squinsy; < ME. squinacie, sqwinacie, < OF. esquinancie, squinancie, quinsy: see quinsy.] 1. Quinsy.

Diseases that be verie perillous: . . . to wit, the Pleuresie, Squinancie, inflammation, sharpe Feuer, or Apoplexie. Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 285.

2. The quinsywort.

squinancy-berry† (skwin'ąn-si-ber″i), n. Same as quinsy-berry.

squinancy-wort† (skwin'ąn-si-wėrt), n. Same as quinsywort.

squince†, n. [Early mod. E. squynce; var. of squincy, etc.] Same as squinancy.

Diseases and sickenesses, as squynces. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 22.

squinch[1] (skwinch), n. [A var. of sconce[2].] In arch., a small arch, or a series of arches, corbeled out, thrown across an angle, as in a square tower to support the side of a superimposed octagon. In Western architecture it is frequent as performing the function of the Eastern pendentive. The application of the term may be due to the resemblance of this structure to a corner cupboard, which was also called squinch or sconce. See cut in next column.

squinch[2] (skwinch), n. A dialectal variant of quince.

Squinch.

squincy†, n. [A contraction of squinancy: see squinancy, quinsy.] Quinsy.

Shall not we be suspected for the murder,
And choke with a hempen squincy?
Randolph, Jealous Lovers, iii. 14.

squin-eye†, n. A squinting eye.

squink (skwingk), v. i. [A dial. form of wink: see squint and wink.] To wink. [Prov. Eng.]

squinny (skwin'i), v. i. [Formerly also squiny: see squin.] To squint. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

I remember thine eyes well enough. Dost thou squiny at me? Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 140.

squint (skwint), a. and n. [Not found in ME., except as in asquint, askew; appar. an extension of the obs. or dial. squin, squean, sken, prob. connected with D. schuinen, slant, slope, schuin, slant, sloping; perhaps associated with E. dial. squink, wink, partly a var. of wink, partly < Sw. svinka, shrink, flinch, nasalized form of svika, balk, flinch, fail; cf. Dan. svigte, bend, fail, forsake; AS. swīcan, escape, avoid. The history of the word is meager, and the forms appar. related are more or less involved.] I. a. 1. Looking different ways; characterized by non-coincidence of the optic axes; affected with strabismus: said of eyes.

Some things that are not heard
He mutters to himselfe, and his squint eye Casts towards the Moone, as should his wits there lye.
Heywood, Dialogues (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 190).

2. That looks or is directed obliquely; looking askance; indirect; oblique; sinister.

The pleasure I shall live in, and the freedom,
Without the squint eye of the law upon me,
Or prating liberty of tongues that envy!
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1.

I incline to hope, rather than fear,
And gladly banish squint suspicion.
Milton, Comus, l. 413.

Squint quoin, in arch., an external oblique angle.

II. n. 1. An affection of the eyes, consisting in non-coincidence of the optic axes; a squint eye; strabismus (which see).

He's blue eyes, and not to be called a squint, though a little cast he 's certainly got. Hood, The Lost Heir.

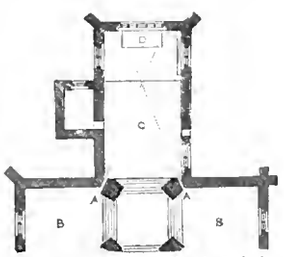
2. An oblique or furtive look; a furtive glance; hence (colloquially), a leaning, an inclination: as, he had a decided squint toward democracy.—3. In arch., an oblique opening through the walls of some old churches, usually having for its object to enable a person in the transepts or aisles to see the elevation of the host at the high altar. The usual situation for a squint is on one or both sides of the chancel arch; but they are also found in other positions, though always directed toward an altar. Generally they are not above a yard high, and 2 feet wide, but sometimes they form narrow arches 10 or 12 feet in height, as at Minster-Lovel, Oxfordshire. The name hagioscope is sometimes applied to them.—Braid's squint, the turning of the eyes simultaneously upward and inward, as if trying to look at the middle of one's own forehead, as a means of producing a hypnotic state.



Squints, Minster-Lovel Church, Oxfordshire, England.

A A, squints; B B, transepts; C, chancel; D, altar.

squint (skwint), v. [< squint, n.] I. intrans. 1. To look askew, or with the eyes differently directed; look askance.

He gets a crick in his neck oft-times with squinting up at windowes and Belconies. Brome, Sparagus Garden, iii. 4.

Some can squint when they will. Bacon.

2. To be affected with strabismus.—3. To run or be directed obliquely; have an indirect reference or bearing.

Not a period of this epistle but squints towards another over against it. Pope.

Not meaning . . .
His pleasure or his good alone,
But squinting partly at my own.
Cowper, To Rev. W. Bull, June 22, 1782.

II. trans. 1. To render squint or oblique; affect with strabismus.

Let him but use
An unsway'd eye, not squinted with affections.
Heywood, Dialogues (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 226).

He gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip. Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 122.

2. To turn, east, or direct obliquely.

Perkin . . . raised his Siege, and marched to Taunton; beginning already to squint one eye upon the crowne and another upon the sanctuary.
Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 183.

squinter (skwin'tėr), n. [< squint + -er[1].] One who squints; a cross- or squint-eyed person.

I pass over certain difficulties about double images, drawn from the perceptions of a few squinters.
W. James, Mind, XII. 523, note.

squint-eyed (skwint'īd), a. 1. Having eyes that squint; having eyes with non-coincident axes. N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 103. —2. Oblique; indirect; sinister; malignant.

This is such a false and squinteyed praise,
Which, seeming to look upwards on his glories,
Looks down upon my fears.
Sir J. Denham, The Sophy. (Latham.)

3. Looking obliquely or by side-glances: as, squint-eyed jealousy or envy.

The hypocrite . . . looks squint-eyed, aiming at two things at once: the satisfying his own lusts, and that the world may not be aware of it.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 494.

squintifego† (skwin-ti-fē'gō), a. [< squint + -ifego, an arbitrary termination.] Squinting.

The timbrel, and the squintifego maid
Of Isis, awe thee.
Dryden, tr. of Persius's Satires, v. 271.

squinting (skwin'ting), n. [Verbal n. of squint, v.] The act or habit of looking asquint; strabismus.

squintingly (skwin'ting-li), adv. With squint look; by side-glances.

squint-minded (skwint'mīn″ded), a. Deceitful; crooked-minded. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, ii. 34. [Rare.]

squinty†, v. i. See squinny.

squir (skwėr), v. t. and i. [Also squirr; a var. of quir* for whirr: see whirr.] To throw with a jerk. [Prov. Eng.]

I saw him squir away his watch a considerable way into the Thames. Budgell, Spectator, No. 77.

Boys squir pieces of tile or flat stones across ponds or brooks to make what are denominated ducks and drakes.
Halliwell.

squiralty (skwīr'al-ti), n. [< squire[1] + -alty, after the analogy of loyalty.] Same as squirearchy. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, I. xviii. [Rare.]

squirarchy, n. See squirearchy.

squire[1] (skwīr), n. [Also dial. square; early mod. E. also squier; < ME. squier, squyer, squier, sewier, swyere, by apheresis from esquire: see esquire[1].] 1. An esquire; an attendant on a knight.

Than tolde Grisandolus how he dide laugh before the abbey and in the chapell, for the squyer that hadde smyten his maister, and the dyuerse wordes that he hadde spoken.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 428.

The rest are princes, barons, lords, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood. Shak., Hen. V., iv. 8. 94.

2. A gentleman who attends upon a lady; an escort; a beau; a gallant.

And eke himselfe had craftily devisd
To be her Squire, and do her service well aguisd.
Spenser, F. Q., II. i. 21.

3. A person not noble nor a knight, but who has received a grant of arms.—4. In England, a landed proprietor who is also justice of the peace: a term nearly equivalent to lord of the manor, as meaning the holder of most of the land in any neighborhood.—5. In the United States, in country districts and towns, a justice of the peace, a local judge, or other local dignitary: chiefly used as a title.—Broom-squire. See the quotation.

"Broom-squires?" "So we call in Berkshire squatters on the moor who live by tying heath into brooms."
Kingsley, Two Years Ago, xiv.

Squire of dames, a man very attentive to women and much in their company.

Marry, there I'm call'd
The Squire of Dames, or Servant of the Sex.
Massinger, Emperor of the East, i. 2.

Squire of the body, a personal attendant, originally on a knight, but later on a courtezan; a pimp.—Squire of the pad†, a footpad; a highwayman.

Sometimes they are Squires of the Pad, and now and then borrow a little Money upon the King's High Way, to recruit their losses at the Gaming House.
Tom Brown, Works (ed. 1705).

squire[1] (skwīr), v. t.; pret. and pp. squired, ppr. squiring. [< ME. squiren*, squeren; < squire[1], n.] 1. To attend and wait upon, as a squire his lord.—2. To attend, as a gentleman a lady; wait upon or attend upon in the manner of a squire; escort.

For he squiereth me bothe up and doun,
Yet hastow caught a fals suspeccioun.
Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 305.

To squire women about for other folks is as ungrateful an employment as to tell money for other folks.
Wycherley, Country Wife, iv. 3.

squire[2]†, n. An old form of square[1].

squireage (skwīr'āj), n. [< squire[1] + -age.] The untitled landed gentry; the squires of a country taken collectively. De Morgan, Budget of Paradoxes, p. 46. [Rare.]

squirearch (skwīr'ärk), n. [< squirearch-y.] A member of the squirearchy.

Man is made for his fellow-creatures. I had long been disgusted with the interference of those selfish squirearchs.
Bulwer, Caxtons, ii. 11.

squirearchal (skwīr'är-kal), a. [< squirearch + -al.] Of or pertaining to a squirearchy.
Imp. Dict.

squirearchical (skwīr'är-ki-kal), a. [< squirearch-y + -ic-al.] Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of squirearchy or a squirearch. Bulwer, My Novel, i. 10.

squirearchy (skwīr'är-ki), n. [Also squirarchy; < squire[1] + Gr. ἀρχία, rule (after analogy of monarchy, etc.).] 1. In England, government by the squires, or "country gentlemen"—that is, the large landed proprietors, most of whom are justices of the peace, and who, before the Reform Bill of 1832, and to a certain extent after it, had great influence in the House of Commons. Hence—2. The squires themselves collectively.

squireen (skwīr-ēn'), n. [< squire[1] + dim. -een, common in Ir. words.] In Ireland, a small landed proprietor: usually contemptuous.

Squireens are persons who, with good long leases or valuable farms, possess incomes of from three to eight hundred a year, who keep a pack of hounds, take out a commission of the peace, sometimes before they can spell (as her ladyship said), and almost always before they know anything of law or justice. Miss Edgeworth, Absentee, vii.

squirehood (skwīr'hůd), n. [< squire[1] + -hood.] The state of being a squire; the rank or position of a squire. Swift, Letter to the King at Arms.

squirel†, n. An obsolete form of squirrel.

squirelet (skwīr'let), n. [< squire[1] + -let.] A petty squire; a squireling. Carlyle, Misc., iii. 56. (Davies.) squireling (skwīr'ling), n. [< squire[1] + -ling[1].] A petty squire; a squirelet.

But to-morrow, if we live,
Our ponderous squire will give A grand political dinner
To half the squirelings near.
Tennyson, Maud, xx. 2.

squirely (skwīr'li), a. [< squire[1] + -ly[1].] Befitting or characteristic of a squire.

One very fit for this squirely function.
Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, i. 4. (Latham.)

How could that oligarchy [the Southern States of the United States], with its squirely tastes, its free wasteful outdoor life, its love of landed property, and its contempt for manual labour, become a trading community?
The Academy, July 20, 1889, p. 32.

squireship (skwīr'ship), n. [< squire[1] + -ship.] Same as squirehood. Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, i. 4. (Latham.) squiress (skwīr'es), n. [< squire[1] + -ess.] The wife of a squire. Bulwer, Pelham, vii. (Davies.) [Colloq., Eng.]

squirm (skwėrm), v. i. [Prob. a var. of squir, throw with a jerk, influenced by association with swarm and worm: see squir.] 1. To wriggle or writhe, as an eel or a worm; hence, to writhe mentally.

You never need think you can turn over any old falsehood without a terrible squirming and scattering of the horrid little population that dwells under it.
O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, v.

They [worms in the pupa state] only squirm a little in a feeble way now and then, and grow stiffer, till they can't squirm at all, and then they're mummies, and that's the end of it till the butterflies are born.
Mrs. Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, viii.

2. To climb by wriggling; "shin": as, to squirm up a tree.

squirm (skwėrm), n. [< squirm, v.] 1. A wriggling motion, like that of a worm or an eel.—2. Naut., a twist in a rope.

squirr, v. See squir.

squirrel (skwur'el or skwir'el), n. [Early mod. E. also squirril, squerrel, squirel, squiril; < ME. squirel, squyrelle, scurel, swerelle, swyrelle, < OF. esquirel, escurel, escuirel, escureul, escureuil, escuricu, F. écureuil = Pr. escurol = Sp. Pg. esquilo (cf. It. scojattolo, scojatto), < ML. sciuriolus, sciurellus (also, after Rom., scuriolus, scurellius, escurellus, corruptly sirogrillus, cirogrillus, experiolus, asperiolus, etc.), dim. of L. sciurus, < Gr. σκίουρος, a squirrel, lit. 'shadow-tailed,' < σκιά, shadow, + οὐρά, tail. For the sense, cf. E. dial. skug, a squirrel, lit. 'shade': see skug.] 1. A rodent quadruped of the family Sciuridæ and genus Sciurus, originally and specifically Sciurus vulgaris of Europe. Squirrels have pointed ears and a long bushy tail; they are of active arboreal habits, and are able to sit up on their hind quarters and use the fore paws like hands. S. vulgaris, called in England skug, is a squirrel 8 or 10 inches long (the tail being nearly as much more), with an elegant reddish-brown coat, white below, and the ears tufted or penciled. It lives in trees, is very agile and graceful in its movements, feeds on all kinds of small hard fruits, nests in a hole, hibernates to some extent in the colder latitudes, and brings forth usually three or four young. It is readily tamed, and makes an interesting pet. The North American squirrel nearest to this one is the chickaree, or red squirrel, S. hudsonius. (See cut under chickaree.) The common gray squirrel of the United States is S. carolinensis. (See cut under Sciurus.) Fox- or cat-squirrels are several large red, gray, or black species of North America. (See cut under fox-squirrel.) North America (including Mexico and Central America) is very rich in squirrels; southern Asia and Africa are less rich, while South America and Europe have each but a single species of Sciurus proper. In the extension of the name squirrel to other genera of the family, the species of Tamias, Spermophilus, and Cynomys are distinguished as ground-squirrels or prairie-squirrels, and some of them are also called marmot-squirrels (see cuts under chipmunk, Spermophilus, owl, and prairie-dog); those of Sciuropterus and Pteromys are flying-squirrels (see cuts under flying-squirrel and Sciuropterus). The scale-tailed squirrels of Africa belong to a different family, Anomaluridæ. (See cut under Anomaluridæ.) Certain Australian marsupials, as phalangers or petaurists, which resemble squirrels, are improperly so called. (See cut under Acrobates.) Some Sciuridæ have other vernacular names, as skug, assapan, taguan, jelerang, hackee, chickaree, gopher, sisel, suslik, prairie-dog, wishtonwish, etc.; but squirrel, without a qualifying term, is practically confined to the genus Sciurus, all the many members of which resemble one another too closely to be mentioned. See the technical names, and cuts under taguan and Xerus.

European Squirrel (Sciurus vulgaris).

2. In cotton-manuf., one of the small card-covered rollers used with the large roller of a carding-machine. Also called urchin.—Barking squirrel, the prairie-dog: an early name of this animal as brought to notice by Lewis and Clarke in 1814.—Burrowing squirrel, Lewis and Clarke's name (1814) of a prairie-dog, or some related prairie-squirrel.—Chipping-squirrel, the chipmunk.—Federation squirrel, the thirteen-lined spermophile, or striped gopher: so called in allusion to the thirteen stripes of the flag of the original States of the American Union. S. L. Mitchill, 1821. See cut under Spermophilus.—Hunt the squirrel. See hunt. (See also flying-squirrel, prairie-squirrel, sugar-squirrel.)

squirrel-bot (skwur'el-bot), n. A bot-fly, Cuterebra emasculator, whose larvæ infest the genital and axillary regions of various squirrels and gophers in the United States, particularly the serotum and testicles of the male of Tamias striatus, the striped chipmunk.

squirrel-corn (skwur'el-kôrn), n. A pretty spring wild flower, Dielytra (Dicentra) Canadensis, of eastern North America. It has elegant dissected leaves, graceful racemes of a few cream-colored heart-shaped blossoms, and separate yellow tubers which resemble kernels of Indian corn. See Dicentra. Less commonly called turkey-corn.

squirrel-cup (skwur'el-kup), n. The hepatica or liverleaf.

squirrel-fish (skwur'el-fish), n. 1. Any fish of the family Holocentridæ, and especially of the genus Holocentrus. The numerous species are remarkable for the development of sharp spines almost everywhere on the surface of the body. The name refers to the noise they make when taken out of the water, which suggests the bark of a squirrel. H. pentacanthus of the West Indies, occasional on the United States coast, is chiefly of a bright-red color, with streaks shining lengthwise; its bright tints and quick movements make it one of the most conspicuous denizens of rocky tide-pools. See cut under Holocentridæ.

2. The serrano, Diplectrum fasciculare, distinguished by the segregation of the serræ at the angle of the preoperculum into two groups. It is common in the West Indies, and also along the southern United States coast to North Carolina.—3. A local name of the pinfish, Lagodon rhomboides.

squirrel-grass (skwur'el-gràs), n. Same as squirreltail.

squirrel-hake (skwur'el-hāk), n. A gadoid fish, Phycis chuss; the white hake. See chuss, hake[2], 2, and cut under Phycis.

squirrel-hawk (skwur'el-hâk), n. The ferruginous rough-legged hawk, Archibuteo ferrugineus, the largest and handsomest bird of its genus, found in California and most other parts of western North America from British America southward: so called because it preys extensively upon ground-squirrels and related rodents. It is 23 inches long and 55 in extent; when adult the under parts are nearly white, with rich chestnut flags barred with black; the tail is mostly white, clouded with silver-gray, and tinged with bay; and the dark upper parts are much varied with brownish red.

Squirrel-hawk (Archibuteo ferrugineus).

squirrel-lemur (skwur'el-lē″mėr), n. A lemur of the subfamily Galagininæ, and especially of the genus Galago. See cut under Galago.

squirrel-lock (skwur'el-lok), n. Squirrel-fur from the under sides of the body. In gray squirrels it is pale-yellow, and it is used for lining winter garments.

squirrel-monkey (skwur'el-mung″-ki), n. One of many kinds of small South American monkeys with a long, bushy, and nonprehensile tail: so called from their general aspect. (a) Any member of the family Hapalidæ or Mididæ; a marmoset. See cut under Hapale. (b) Especially, a saimiri or titi of the genus Chrysothrix, as the death's-head, C. sciureus. See saimiri, and compare saguin.

Squirrel-monkey (Chrysothrix sciureus).

squirrel-mouse (skwur'el-mous), n. Same as dormouse.

squirrel-petaurist (skwur'el-pe-tâ″rist), n. A squirrel-phalanger.

squirrel-phalanger (skwur'el-fā-lan″jėr), n. An Australian flying-phalanger, or petaurist, as Petaurus (Belideus) sciureus, a marsupial mammal resembling a squirrel in some respects.

squirrel-shrew (skwur'el-shrö), n. A small insectivorous mammal of the family Tupaiidæ, as a banxring or a pentail. See cuts under Tupaia and Ptilocercus.

squirreltail (skwur'el-tāl), n. One of several grasses of the genus Hordeum. (a) In Great Britain, H. maritimum, and sometimes H. murinum, the wall-barley, and H. secalinum (H. pratense), the meadow-barley. (b) In the United States, chiefly H. jubatum, but in California also H. murinum, there naturalized and, as elsewhere, a pest, infesting wool, also the throats, etc., of animals, with its long barbed awns.

squirt (skwėrt), v. [E. dial. also swirt; perhaps ‹ LG. swirtjen, squirt. The equiv. verb squitter can hardly be connected.] I. trans. 1. To eject with suddenness and force in a jet or rapid stream from a narrow orifice: as, to squirt water in one's face.

> The hard-featured miscreant . . . coolly rolled his tobacco in his cheek and squirted the juice into the fire-grate.
> Scott, Guy Mannering, xxxiii.

2. To spatter or bespatter.

> They know I dare
> To spurn or baffle them, or squirt their eyes
> With ink. B. Jonson, Apol. to Poetaster.

II. intrans. 1. To issue suddenly in a thin jet or jet-like stream, as from a syringe, or a narrow orifice suddenly opened; spurt.

> The oars seemed to lash the water savagely, like a connected row of swords, and the spray squirted at each vicious stroke. C. Reade, Hard Cash, i.

2†. To prate; blab. [Old slang.]—Squirting cucumber. See Ecballium.

squirt (skwėrt), n. [‹ squirt, v.] 1. An instrument with which a liquid may be ejected in a strong jet-like stream; a syringe.

> His weapons are a pin to scratch and a squirt to bespatter. Pope.

2. A small jet: as, a squirt of water.—3. A system of motion of a fluid, where the motion is everywhere irrotational, and where there is no expansion except at isolated points.—4. Looseness of the bowels; diarrhea. [Low.]—5. A small, insignificant, but self-assertive fellow; an upstart; a cad. [Colloq.]—6. A hasty start or spurt. [Colloq.]

> How different from the rash jerks and hare-brain'd squirts thou art wont, Tristram, to transact it with in other humours—dropping thy pen, spurting thy ink about thy table and thy books. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iii. 28.

7. A sea-squirt; an ascidian or tunicary.

squirter (skwėr'tėr), n. [‹ squirt + -er[1].] One who or that which squirts. O. W. Holmes, Poet at the Breakfast-Table, v.

squirt-gun (skwėrt'gun), n. A kind of squirter or syringe used as a toy by boys.

squiry (skwīr'i), n. [‹ ME. squierie, ‹ OF. esquirie, escuierie, escuyerie, escuerie, escuerie, ‹ escuier, a squire: see squire[1].] 1†. A number of squires or attendants collectively. Rob. of Brunne, Chronicles.—2. The whole body of landed gentry.

squit (skwit), n. Same as squeteague.

squitch (skwich), n. A variant of quitch[2].

squitee (skwi-tē′), n. Same as squeteague.

squob. See squab[1], squab[2].

squorget, n. [ME.; origin obscure.] A shoot.

> The squorges [tr. L. flagilla for flagella] hie and graffes from the folde. Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 65.

squuncket, n. An early spelling of skunk. W. Wood, 1634.

squynget, n. See squince.

sqw-. A Middle English fashion of writing squ-.

Sr. A contraction of senior: as, John Smith, Sr.

Sr. In chem., the symbol for strontium.

sradha, shraddha (sräd'hä, shräd'hä), n. [Skt. çrāddha, ‹ çraddhā, faith.] A Hindu funeral ceremony in honor of a deceased ancestor, at which food is offered, and gifts are made to Brahmans.

ss. A Middle English form of sh.

ss-. A Middle English fashion of writing initial s-.

SS. An abbreviation: (a) of saints; (b) [l. c.] of scilicet (common in legal documents).

S. S. An abbreviation: (a) of Sunday-school; (b) of steamship, also of screw steamship.

S. S. E. An abbreviation of south-southeast.

ssh. A common Middle English form of sch, now sh.

S. S. W. An abbreviation of south-southwest.

st. An abbreviation: (a) [cap.] of saint; (b) [cap. or l. c.] of street; (c) [cap. or l. c.] of strait; (d) of stanza; (e) of stet; (f) of statute.

'st, interj. Same as hist[1].

-st[1]. See -est[1].

-st[2]. See -est[2].

stab (stab), v.; pret. and pp. stabbed, ppr. stabbing. [‹ ME. stabben* (found in the noun); perhaps ‹ Ir. Gael. stob, thrust, push, stab, fix a stake in the ground, ‹ stob, a stake, pointed iron or stick, stub; cf. staff.] I. trans. 1. To puncture, pierce, or wound with or as with a pointed weapon, especially with a knife or dagger.

> I fear I wrong the honourable men > Whose daggers have stabb'd Cæsar.
> Shak., J. C., iii. 2. 157.

> He was not to be torn in pieces by a mob, or stabbed in the back by an assassin. Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

2. To thrust or plunge, as a pointed weapon. [Rare.]

> If we should recount
> Our baleful news, . . .
> Stab poniards in our flesh till all were told,
> The words would add more anguish than the wounds.
> Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 1. 98.

3. Figuratively, to pierce or penetrate; inflict keen or severe pain upon; injure secretly, as by slander or malicious falsehoods: as, to stab one in the back (that is, to slander one behind his back).

> Her silence stabbed his conscience through and through.
> Lowell, A Legend of Brittany, ii. 24.

4. In masonry, to pick (a brick wall) so as to make it rough, and thereby afford a hold for plaster.—To stab arms†. See arm[1].—To stab out, to cut a continuous incision in with a sharp edge like that of a chisel, by making one cut in line with and in continuation of another, the first guiding the second, and so on.

II. intrans. 1. To aim a blow with a dagger or other pointed weapon, either literally or figuratively: as, to stab at a person.

> None shall dare
> With shortened sword to stab in closer war.
> Dryden, Pal. and Arc., iii. 509.

2. To wound; be extremely cutting.

> She speaks poniards, and every word stabs.
> Shak., Much Ado, ii. 1. 255.

stab (stab), n. [‹ stab, v.] 1. A thrust or blow with the point of a weapon, especially a dagger.

> Hee neuer reuengeth with lesse than the stab.
> Nashe, Pierce Penilesse, p. 25.

> To fall beneath a base assassin's stab.
> Rowe, Ambitious Step-Mother, ii. 2.

2. A wound made with a sharp-pointed weapon.

> His gash'd stabs look'd like a breach in nature
> For ruin's wasteful entrance.
> Shak., Macbeth, ii. 3. 119.

3. A wound given in the dark; a treacherous injury.

> This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt.
> Shak., Rich. III., iii. 2. 89.

Stabat Mater (stā'bat mā'tėr). [So called from the first words of the Latin text, Stabat mater, 'The mother (sc. of Jesus) was standing': L. stabat, 3d pers. sing. imperf. ind. of stare, stand (see stand); mater = Gr. μήτηρ = E. mother: see mother.] 1. In the Rom. Cath. liturgy, a sequence on the Virgin Mary at the crucifixion, written about 1300 by Jacobus de Benedictis (Jacopone da Todi). It has also been ascribed to Innocent III. and others, and was probably modeled on older hymns such as the staurotheotokia of the Greek Church. It is sung after the Epistle on the Feasts of the Seven Dolours of the Blessed Virgin Mary on the Friday before Good Friday and on the third Sunday in September.

2. A musical setting of this sequence. Famous examples have been written by Palestrina, Pergolesi, Rossini, Dvořák, and others.

stabber (stab'ėr), n. [‹ stab + -er[1].] 1. One who stabs; one who murders by stabbing.

> A lurking, waylaying coward, and a stabber in the dark.
> Dennis (?), True Character of Mr. Pope (1716).

2. A pricker. (a) Naut., a three-cornered awl used by sailmakers to make holes in canvas. (b) A leather-workers' pegging-awl. (c) An awl used in needlework to make holes for eyelets.

stabbing (stab'ing), n. [Verbal n. of stab, v.] In bookbinding, the making of perforations in the inner margins of pamphlets for the insertion of binding-thread or wire. Also called, in England, holing.

stabbingly (stab'ing-li), adv. In a stabbing manner; with intent to do an act of secret malice.

stabbing-machine (stab'ing-ma-shēn″), n. In bookbinding, a machine for perforating the inner margins of gathered pamphlets by means of stout steel needles operated by a treadle.

stabbing-press (stab'ing-pres), n. In bookbinding, same as stabbing-machine.

stabelyt, adv. An old spelling of stably.

stabilify (stā-bil'i-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. stabilified, ppr. stabilifying. [‹ L. stabilis, steadfast, steady (see stable[2]), + facere, make.] To render stable, fixed, or firm; establish. [Rare.]

> Render solid and stabilify mankind.
> Browning. (Imp. Dict.) stabilimentt (stā-bil'i-ment), n. [‹ L. stabilimentum, a stay, support, ‹ stabilire, make firm, fix: see stable[2], v.] 1. Stablishment; establishment. [Rare.]

> If the apostolate, in the first stabiliment, was this eminency of power, then it must be so.
> Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 32.

2. Support; prop. [Rare.]

> They serve for stabiliment, propagation, and shade.
> Derham.

stabilisation, stabilise. See stabilization, stabilize.

stabilitate (stā-bil'i-tāt), v. t. [‹ L. stabilita(t-)s, steadfastness, firmness (see stability), + -ate[2].] To make stable; establish.

> The soul about it self circumgyrates
> Her various forms, and what she most doth love
> She oft before her self stabilitates.
> Dr. H. More, Psychathanasia, I. ii. 43.

The work reserved for him who shall come to stabilitate our empire in the East, if ever he comes at all.
W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 180.

stability (stā-bil'i-ti), n. [In ME. stabilte, stablete; < OF. stablete, F. stabilité = Sp. estabilidad = Pg. estabilidade = It. stabilità, < L. stabilita(t-)s, firmness, steadfastness, < stabilis, firm, steadfast: see stable[2].] 1. The state or property of being stable or firm; strength to stand and resist overthrow or change; stableness; firmness: as, the stability of a building, of a government, or of a system.

Take myn herte in-to thi ward,
And sette thou me in stabilte!
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 26.

What I see in England, in America, in Switzerland, is stability, the power to make changes, when change is needed, without pulling the whole political fabric down on the heads of the reformers.
E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 396.

2. Steadiness or firmness, as of purpose or resolution; fixity of character; steadfastness: the opposite of fickleness and inconstancy.

The natural generation and process of all things receiveth order of proceeding from the settled stability of divine understanding. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 3.

3. Fixedness, as opposed to fluidity.

Fluidness and stability are contrary qualities. Boyle.

4. Continuance in the same state; permanence; specifically, an additional or fourth vow of continuance in the same profession, and residence for life in the same monastery, imposed upon monks by the Benedictine rule.—5. That character of equilibrium, or of a body in equilibrium, in virtue of which, if the position is disturbed, it tends to be restored. The term is especially used in this sense with reference to ships and floating bodies, in which the distance of the center of gravity below the metacenter is the measure of the stability. This may be considered as the difference between the distance of the center of flotation from the metacenter, called the stability of figure, and the distance of the center of gravity from the metacenter, called the stability of load. The stability under sail is also considered.—Moment of stability. See moment.=Syn. 1 and 2. Immobility, permanence. See stable[2].

stabilization (stab″il-i-zā'shọn), n. [< stabilize + -ation.] The act of rendering stable; stablishment. Also spelled stabilisation.

The transformation of "stable" matter into "unstable" that takes place during the assimilation of food is necessary, because, during the activity of the organism, forces are constantly becoming "fixed," and with this "fixation of force" goes "the stabilisation of matter."
Mind, XII. 602.

stabilize (stab'il-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. stabilized, ppr. stabilizing. [< L. stabilis, firm (see stable[2]), + -ize.] To render stable. Also spelled stabilise.

A written literature, the habit of recording and reading, the prevalence of actual instruction, work yet more powerfully in the same direction; and when such forces have reached the degree of strength which they show in our modern enlightened communities, they fairly dominate the history of speech. The language is stabilized, especially as regards all those alterations which proceed from inaccuracy. Whitney, Life and Growth of Lang., p. 158.

stabilte†, n. A Middle English form of stability.

stable[1] (stā'bl), n. [< ME. stable, stabul, < OF. estable, F. étable = Pr. estable = Sp. establo = Pg. estabulo = It. stabbio, a stable, stall, < L. stabulum, a standing-place, abode, habitation, usually in the particular senses, an inclosure for animals, as for cows (a stall), sheep (a fold), birds (an aviary), bees (a beehive), etc., also poet. a flock, herd, also a public house, tavern; < stare, stand: see stand. Cf. stall[1]. The word exists also in constable.] 1. A building or an inclosure in which horses, cattle, and other domestic animals are lodged, and which is furnished with stalls, troughs, racks, and bins to contain their food and necessary equipments; in a restricted sense, such a building for horses and cows only; in a still narrower and now the most usual sense, such a building for horses only.

And undre theise Stages ben Stables wel y vowted for the Emperours Hors. Mandeville, Travels, p. 17.

The chambres and the stables weren wyde,
And wel we weren esed atte beste.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 29.

If your husband have stables enough, you'll see he shall lack no barns. Shak., Much Ado, iii. 4. 48.

2. In racing slang, the horses belonging to a particular racing stable.—Augean stable. See Augean.

stable[1] (stā'bl), r.; pret. and pp. stabled, ppr. stabling. [< ME. stablen, < OF. establer, < L. stabulare, lodge, house, stable, in pass. be lodged, stable, kennel, roost, < stabulum, an abode, stable: see stable[1], n.] I. trans. To put or keep in a stable, as horses.

Elizer was besy to serue sir Gawein and stable Gringalet, and helped him to vn-arme. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 555.

Here, stable me these steeds, and see them well bedded.
Scott, Monastery, xiv.

II. intrans. To dwell or lodge in or as in a stable, as beasts.

In their palaces,
Where luxury late reign'd, sea-monsters whelp'd
And stabled. Milton, P. L., xi. 752.

stable[2] (stā'bl), a. [< ME. stable, < OF. stable, estable, F. stable = Sp. estable = Pg. estavel = It. stabile, < L. stabilis, firm, steadfast, < stare, stand: see stand.] 1. Firm; firmly fixed, settled, or established; that cannot be easily moved, shaken, or overthrown; steadfast: as, a stable structure; a stable government.

But the gode Cristene men that ben stable in the Feythe entren welle withouten perile. Mandeville, Travels, p. 282.

That all States should be stable in proportion as they are just, and in proportion as they administer justly, is what might be asserted. R. Choate, Addresses, p. 162.

2. Fixed; steady; constant; permanent.

Withe stable Eye loke vpone theym rihte.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 3.

I have a stable Home-Employment proffered me by my Lord Scroop, Lord President of the North.
Howell, Letters, I. iv. 26.

3. Fixed or firm in resolution or purpose; not wavering, fickle, or easily diverted: as, a man of stable character; also formerly, in a bad sense, obstinate; pertinacious.

Stable and abydyng yn malyce, pervicax, pertinax.
Prompt. Parv., p. 471.

Stable equilibrium, flotation, etc. See the nouns. =Syn. 1 and 2. Durable, Permanent, etc. See lasting.

stable[2]† (stā'bl), v. [< ME. stablen, stabelen, stabullen, < OF. establir, F. établir = OSp. establir = It. stabilire, < L. stabilire, make firm or steadfast, establish, confirm, cause to rest, < stabilis, firm, steadfast: see stable[2], a. Cf. stablish, establish.] I. trans. 1. To make stable; establish; ordain.

Be hit ordeynyd and stablyd by the M. and Wardens.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 328.

This book bore this title, Articles devised by the King's highness to stable Christian quietness and unity among the people. Strype, Abp. Cranmer, i. 12.

2. To make steady, firm, or sure; support.

When thou ministers at the heghe autere,
With bothe hondes thou serue tho prest in fere,
The ton to stabulle the tother
Lest thou fayle, my dere brother.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 304.

3†. To fix or hold fast, as in mire; mire; stall.

When they the peril that do not forecast
In the stiff mud are quickly stabled fast.
Drayton, Moon-Calf.

II. intrans. To stand firm; be confirmed.

Of alegeaunce now lerneth a lesson other tweyne,
Wher-by it standith and stablithe moste.
Richard the Redeless, I. 10.

stable-boy (stā'bl-boi), n. A boy who is employed about a stable.

stable-call (stā'bl-kâl), n. A trumpet-signal in the cavalry and light artillery services, to assemble the troop or battery for the purpose of watering and grooming the horses; hence, the assembling of a troop for this purpose.

Will you go down to stable-call and pick out a mount?
The Century, XXXVII. 900.

stable-fly (stā'bl-flī), n. 1. The biting housefly, Stomoxys calcitrans, common to Europe and North America. It much resembles the common housefly, Musca domestica, but bites severely and is often very troublesome. As it enters houses before storms, it has given rise to the expression "flies bite before a storm." 2. Another fly, Cyrtoneura stabulans, common to Europe and North America.

stablelyt, adv. A Middle English form of stably.

stable-man (stā'bl-man), n. A man who attends in a stable; an ostler; a groom.

stableness (stā'bl-nes), n. [< ME. stablenesse, stabilnes, stabulnesse; < stable[2] + -ness.] The state, character, or property of being stable, in any sense of the word.

stabler (stā'blėr), n. [< ME. stabler, stabyller, < OF. stablier = Sp. establero, a stable-boy, < L. stabularius, a stable-boy, also a host, a taverner, landlord, prop. adj., pertaining to a stable or to a public house, < stabulum, a stable, a public house: see stable[1].] A person who stables horses, or furnishes accommodations and food for them.

There came a man to the stabler (so they call the people at Edinburgh that take in horses to keep), and wanted to know if he could hear of any returned horses for England. Defoe, Col. Jack, p. 240. (Davies.) stable-room (stā'bl-röm), n. Room in a stable; room for stables.

stable-stand (stā'bl-stand), n. In old Eng. law, the position of a man who is found at his place in the forest with a crossbow bent, or with a long-bow, ready to let fly at a deer, or standing near a tree with greyhounds in a leash ready to slip. This is one of the four presumptions that a man intends stealing the king's deer.

stabletet†, n. A Middle English form of stability.

stabling (stā'bling), n. [Verbal n. of stable[1], v.] 1. The act of putting horses or other beasts into a stable.—2. Stable accommodation; shelter for horses and other beasts; stables.

Her terrour once on Afric's tawny shore,
Now smok'd in dust, a stabling now for wolves.
Thomson, Liberty, iii. 372.

The villas look dreary and lonesome, . . . with their high garden walls, their long, low piles of stabling, and the passée indecency of their nymphs and fauns.
Howells, Venetian Life, xxi.

stablish (stab'lish), v. t. [< ME. stablischen, stablisshen, stablissen, < OF. establiss-, stem of certain parts of establir, F. établir, < L. stabilire, make firm or steadfast: see stable[2], v. Cf. establish.] To make stable or firm; establish; set up; ordain. [Archaic.]

Devyne thowht . . . stablyssyth many manere gyses to thinges that ben to done. Chaucer, Boëthius, iv. prose 6.

To stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And stablish quietness on every side.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 1. 10.

Let a man stablish himself in those courses he approves.
Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 238.

stablishment (stab'lish-ment), n. [< stablish + -ment. Cf. establishment.] Establishment.

For stint of strife and stablishment of rest.
Spenser, F. Q., V. viii. 21.

stably (stā'bli), adv. [< ME. stabely, stablely; < stable[2] + -ly[2].] In a stable manner; firmly; fixedly; securely.

God disponith in his purvyaunce syngulerly and stablely the thinges that ben to done.
Chaucer, Boëthius, iv. prose 6.

Thay salde a sterne, with lemys bright,
Owte of the Eest shulde stabely stande.
York Plays, p. 126.

stabulation†, (stab-ū-lā'shọn), n. [< L. stabulatio(n-), a place where cattle are housed, < stabulari, pp. stabulatus, stable, lodge: see stable[1], r.] 1. The act of stabling beasts.—2. A place or room for stabling beasts.

stabwort†, (stab'wėrt), n. The wood-sorrel, Oxalis Acetosella: so called as being considered good for wounds.

stabylle†. A Middle English form of stable[1], stable[2].

stacca (stak'ä), n. A Welsh dry measure, equal to three Winchester bushels.

staccatissimo (ståk-kå-tis'i-mō), a. [It., superl. of staccato, detached: see staccato.] In music, very staccato.

staccato (ståk-kä'tō), a. [< It. staccato, pp. of staccare, for distaccare, separate, detach: see detach.] In music, detached; disconnected; abrupt; separated from one another by slight pauses: used both of single tones in a melody and of chords: opposed to legato. Three grades of staccato are sometimes recognized—the slightest being marked by dots over or under the notes with a sweeping curve (a), the next by dots without the curve (b), and the greatest by pointed strokes instead of dots (c). In each case something is subtracted from the duration of each note, and given to a rest or silence. On keyboard-instruments like the pianoforte and organ, a staccato effect is produced by a variation of the usual touch in the action either of the fingers, of the wrist, or of the forearm; in bow-instruments like the violin, by an abrupt detached motion of the bow, or by a springing bow; in wind-instruments, by stopping the mouthpiece with the tongue (sometimes called tonguing); and in the voice, either by a detached action of the breath or by a closing of the glottis. The word is also used sometimes to note an abrupt emphatic style of speaking or writing.—Staccato mark, in musical notation, a dot or pointed stroke added over or under a note to indicate a staccato rendering.—Staccato touch, in playing the pianoforte or organ, a touch designed to produce a clear and musical staccato effect.

stacher (staċh'ėr), v. i. A Scotch form of stacker[1].

Stachydeæ (stā-kid'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham, 1836), < Stachys (assumed stem Stachyd-) + -eæ.] A tribe of gamopetalous plants, of the order Labiatæ. It is characterized by a five- or ten-nerved or -veined calyx, a corolla with the upper lip erect, concave, and commonly galeate or arched, the lower lip three-cleft and spreading, four perfect ascending or included stamens, with the forward pair longer, and a four-parted ovary forming in fruit four dry nutlets fixed by a small basal or slightly oblique scar. It includes 36 genera (of which Stachys is the type), classed in the subtribes Scutellarieæ, Melitteæ, Marrubieæ, and Lamieæ; other important genera are Physostegia, Brunella (Prunella), Phlomis, Sideritis, Ballota, Galeopsis, Lamium, Leonurus, and Moluccella. See cut under self-heal.

Stachys (stā'kis), n. [NL. (Rivinus, 1690), < L. stachys, < Gr. στάχυς, a plant, woundwort, Stachys arvensis, so called from the spiked flowers; a particular use of στάχυς, an ear of corn, a spike, in gen. a plant.] A genus of plants, of the order Labiatæ, type of the tribe Stachydeæ. It is characterized by flowers with the five calyx-teeth equal or the posterior larger, the corolla-tube somewhat cylindrical and either included in or exserted from the calyx, the upper lip usually entire and arched, the anther-cells usually diverging, and the ovary forming nutlets which are obtuse or rounded at the top. Over 200 species have been described, of which about 170 are now thought to be distinct. They are widely dispersed through the temperate zones, occur within the tropics on mountains, and extend in a few cases into frigid and subalpine regions. They are lacking in Australia and New Zealand, and nearly so in Chili and in South Africa. Sixteen species occur in the United States; 5 are eastern, of which S. aspera is the most common, and S. palustris the most widely diffused. Several species, especially S. sylvatica of Europe, are known as hedge-nettle, and several others as woundwort, particularly S. Germanica. For S. Betonica see betony, and for S. palustris see clown-heal. Several species are occasionally cultivated for ornament, as S. lanata, a woolly-leafed plant much used for edgings. S. affinis (S. tuberifera), an esculent recently introduced from Japan, cultivated in France under the name of crosnes, produces numerous small white tubers which may be eaten boiled or fried or prepared as a preserve. The tubers are said to decay rapidly if exposed to the air, and are kept in the ground or packed in sand; their taste is compared to that of the sweet potato, followed by a peculiar piquant flavor.

Stachytarpheta (stak″i-tär-fē'tä), n. [NL. (Vahl, 1804), so called from the thick flower-spikes; prob. an error for Stachytarpheia,* < Gr. στάχυς, a spike, + ταρφειός, thick, dense, < τρέφειν, thicken.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Verbenaceæ and tribe Verbeneæ. It is characterized by sessile spiked flowers with a narrow five-ribbed five-nerved calyx, a corolla with five spreading lobes, two perfect stamens with divaricate anther-cells, and a two-celled ovary ripening into two hard dry oblong or linear one-seeded nutlets. There are about 45 species, natives of tropical and subtropical America, with one species, S. Indica, also dispersed through tropical Africa and Asia. They are herbs or shrubs bearing opposite or alternate toothed and commonly rugose leaves. The flowers are white, blue, purple, or scarlet, solitary in the axils of bracts, and sessile or half-immersed in the axis of the more or less densely crowded termioal spikes. The species are sometimes called bastard or false vervain. S. Jamaicensis (now identified with S. Indica) is the gervao (which see), from its use sometimes called Brazilian tea. This and other species, as S. mutabilis, a handsome ever-blooming shrub, are occasionally cultivated under glass.

stack[1] (stak), n. [< ME. stack, stacke, stakke, stak, stac, < Icel. stakkr, a stack of hay (cf. stakka, a stump), = Sw. stack = Dan. stak, a stack, pile of hay; allied to stake[1], and ult. from the root of stick[1]. Hence staggard[2].] 1. A pile of grain in the sheaf, or of hay, straw, pease, etc., gathered into a circular or rectangular form, often, when of large size, coming to a point or ridge at the top, and thatched to protect it from the weather.

> The whole prairie was covered with yellow wheat stacks.
> Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 531.

2. A pile of sticks, billets, poles, or cordwood; formerly, also, a pyre, or burial pile.

> Against every pillar was a stack of billets above a man's height, which the watermen that bring wood down the Seine . . . laid there. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 249.

3. A pile or group of other objects in orderly position. (a) In printing, a flat pile of paper, printed or unprinted, in a press-room or bindery. (b) Mil., the pyramidal group formed by a number of muskets with fixed bayonets when stacked. (c) In paper-making, four or more calendering-rolls in position. (d) In libraries, a set of book-shelves one above the other, whether placed against a wall or standing in the middle of a room.

4. A number of funnels or chimneys standing together.—5. A single chimney or passage-way for smoke; the chimney or funnel of a locomotive or steam-vessel: also called smoke-stack. See cuts under passenger-engine and puddling-furnace.—6. A high detached rock; a columnar rock; a precipitous rock rising out of the sea. The use of the word stack with this meaning is very common on the coast of Scotland and the adjacent islands (especially the Orkneys), and is almost exclusively limited to that region.

> Here [in Shetland] also, near 200 yards from the shore, stands the Stack of Snalda, a grand perpendicular column of rock, at least sixty, but more probably eighty, feet high, on the summit of which the eagle has annually nested from time immemorial. Shirreff, Shetland, p. 5.

7. A customary unit of volume for fire-wood and coal, generally 4 cubic yards (108 cubic feet). The three-quarter stack in parts of Derbyshire is said to be 105 or 106 cubic feet.—8. pl. A large quantity; "lots": as, stacks of money. [Slang.]—Syn. 1. Shock, etc. See sheaf[1].

stack[1] (stak), v. t. [< ME. stakken (= Sw. stacka = Dan. stakke), stack; from the noun.] 1. To pile or build in the form of a stack; make into a regularly formed pile: as, to stack grain.

> Your hay is well brought in, and better stacked than usual. Swift, To Dr. Sheridan, Sept. 19, 1725.

2. To make up (cards) in a designed manner, so as to secure an unfair advantage; pack.—To stack arms, to stand together muskets or rifles with fixed bayonets in definite numbers, as four or six together, so that they form a tent-shaped group.

stack[2] (stak). An obsolete or dialectal preterit of stick[1] (and stick[2]).

stackage (stak'āj), n. [< stack[1] + -age.] 1. Grain, hay, etc., put up in stacks. [Rare.] Imp. Dict.—2. A tax on things stacked. Imp. Dict.

stack-borer (stak'bōr″ėr), n. An instrument for piercing stacks of hay, to admit air, where the hay is in danger of damage from heating.

stacken-cloud† (stak'n-kloud), n. A cumulus cloud.

> The rapid formation and disappearance of small cumuli is a process constantly going on in particular kinds of weather. These little stacken-clouds seem to form out of the atmosphere, and to be resolved again as rapidly into it. Forster, Atmospheric Phenomena, p. 58.

stacker[1] (stak'ėr), v. i. [Sc. also stakker, stacker; < ME. stakeren, also stakelen, < Icel. stakra, push, stagger, freq. of staka, push, punt; cf. stjaka, punt, push with a stake (stjaki, a punt-pole), = Dan. stage = Sw. staka, push, punt with a stake, = MD. staken, stacken, set stakes, dam up with stakes, give up work, = E. stake[1]: see stake[1], v. Doublet of stagger.] 1. To stagger. [Prov. Eng.]

> She rist her up, and stakereth heer and ther.
> Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2687.

2†. To stammer. Prompt. Parv., p. 471.

stacker[2] (stak'ėr), n. [< stack[1] + -er[1].] An attachment to a threshing-machine for raising and delivering the straw from the machine, either upon a wagon or upon a stack. It consists of an endless-belt elevator running in a trough that can be placed at any angle, the whole being mounted on wheels, and connected by belting with the thresher, or with the engine or other motor. Also called straw- or hay-elevator, and stacking-machine. Another form of stacker consists of a portable derrick used with a hay-fork, and commonly called a stacking-derrick.

stacket (stak'et), n. [< G. stacket, a palisade, stockade; appar. connected with stack[1].] A stockade. Scott.

stack-funnel (stak'fun″el), n. A pyramidal open frame of wood in the center of a stack. Its object is to allow the air to circulate through the stack, and prevent the heating of the grain. See stack-stand.

stack-guard (stak'gärd), n. A covering for a haystack or rick, whether for the top or the exposed side. Sometimes it is suspended from posts temporarily set up.

Stackhousia (stak-hou'si-ä), n. [NL. (Sir J. E. Smith, 1798), named after John Stackhouse, an English botanist (died 1819).] A genus of plants, type of the order Stackhousieæ. It consists of about 20 species, all Australian except 2, which are natives, one of New Zealand, the other of the Philippine Islands. They are small herbs with a perennial herbaceous or woody rootstock, producing unbranched or slightly divided flower-bearing stems and alternate linear or spatulate leaves, which are entire and slightly fleshy or coriaceous. The flowers are white or yellow, borne in spikes terminating the branches, or in clusters along the main stem. Each flower consists of a small three-bracted calyx, an elongated often gamopetalous corolla with five included stamens, a thin disk, and a free ovary with from two to five styles or style-branches.

Stackhousieæ (stak-hou-sī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (H. G. L. Reichenbach, 1828), < Stackhousia + -eæ.] An order of plants, of the polypetalous series Discifloræ and cohort Celastrales. It is characterized by a hemispherical calyx-tube, having five imbricated lobes, five erect imbricated and often united petals, and as many alternate stamens. From the related orders Celastrineæ and Rhamnaceæ it is especially distinguished by its lobed ovary, which is sessile, roundish, and from two- to five-celled, and ripens from two to five indehiscent globose or angled one-seeded carpels, which are smooth, reticulated, or broadly winged. It consists of the genus Stackhousia and the monotypic Australian genus Macgregoria. Also Stackhousiaceæ.

stacking-band (stak'ing-band), n. A band or rope used in binding thatch or straw on a stack.

stacking-belt (stak'ing-belt), n. Same as stacking-band.

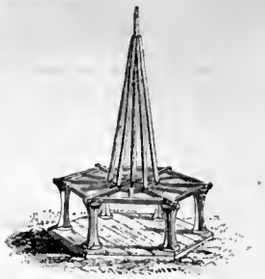
stacking-stage (stak'ing-stāj), n. A scaffold or stage used in building stacks.

stack-room (stak'röm), n. In libraries, a room devoted to stacks of book-shelves; a book-room.

stack-stand (stak'stand), n. A basement of timber or masonry, sometimes of iron, raised on props and placed in a stack-yard, on which to build a stack. Its object is to keep the lower part of the stack dry, and exclude vermin. Such stands are more common in European countries than in the United States.



Stack-stand with Stack-funnel.

stack-yard (stak'-yärd), n. [< stack[1] + yard[2]. Cf. stag-gard[2].] A yard or inclosure for stacks of hay or grain.

stacte (stak'tē), n. [< L. stacte, stacta, < Gr. στακτή, the oil that trickles from fresh myrrh or cinnamon, fem. of στακτός, dropping, oozing out, < στάζειν, drop, let fall drop by drop.] One of the sweet spices which composed the holy incense of the ancient Jews. Two kinds have been described—one, the fresh gum of the myrrh-tree, Balsamodendron Myrrha, mixed with water and squeezed out through a press; the other, the resin of the storax, Styrax officinale, mixed with wax and fat.

> Take unto thee sweet spices, stacte, and onycha, and galbanum. Ex. xxx. 34.

stactometer (stak-tom'e-tėr), n. [Also staktometer; < Gr. στακτός, dropping, oozing out (see stacte), + μέτρον, a measure.] A glass tube having a bulb in the middle, and tapering to a fine orifice at one end, used for ascertaining the number of drops in equal bulks of different liquids. Also called stalagmometer.

stad†. A Middle English form of the past participle of stead.

stadda (stad'ä), n. [Origin obscure.] A double-bladed hand-saw, used for cutting comb-teeth. Also called steady.

staddle (stad'l), n. [Also stadle, and more orig. stathel, Sc. staithle, contr. stail, stale, < ME. stathel, < AS. stathol, stathul, stathel, a foundation, base, seat, site, position, firmament (= OS. stadal = OFries. stathul = MLG. stadel = OHG. stadal, MHG. G. stadel, a stall, shed, = Icel. stöd-hull = Norw. stödul, stodul, contr. sto'ul, staul, stöil, stul, usually stöl, a milking-shed); with formative -thol (-dle) (akin to L. stabulum, a stable, stall, with formative -bulum), from the root sta of stand: see stand, and cf. stead. See stalworth.] 1†. A prop or support; a staff; a crutch.

> His weake steps governing
> And aged limbs on cypresse stadle stout.
> Spenser, F. Q., I. vi. 14.

2. The frame or support of a stack of hay or grain; a stack-stand.

> Oak looked under the staddles and found a fork.
> T. Hardy, Far from the Madding Crowd, xxxvi.

3. A young or small tree left uncut when others are cut down.

> It is commonlie seene that those yoong staddles which we leaue standing at one & twentie yeeres fall are vsuallie at the next sale cut downe without any danger of the statute, and serue for fire bote, if it please the owner to burne them.
> W. Harrison, Descrip. of England, ii. 22. (Holinshed.)

> At the edge of the woods a rude structure had been hastily thrown up, of staddles interlaced with boughs.
> S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 5.

4. In agri., one of the separate plots into which a cock of hay is shaken out for the purpose of drying.

staddle (stad'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. staddled, ppr. staddling. [Also stadle; < staddle, n.] 1. To leave the staddles in, as a wood when it is cut.

> First see it well fenced, ere hewers begin,
> Then see it well stadled, without and within.
> Tusser, April's Husbandry.

2. To form into staddles, as hay.

staddle-roof (stad'l-röf), n. The roof or covering of a stack.

stade[1] (stād), n. Same as stathe.

stade[2] (stād), n. [In ME. stadie, q. v.; = F. stade = Sp. estadio = Pg. estadio = It. stadio, < L. stadium, a furlong: see stadium.] A furlong; a stadium.

> The greatness of the town, by that we could judge, stretcheth in circuit some forty stades.
> Donne, Hist. Septuagint (1633), p. 71. (Latham.) stadholder (stad'hōl″dėr), n. [Also spelled stadtholder (= F. statthouder); a partial accommodation of MD. stadhouder, a deputy, legate, vicar, substitute, lieutenant, esp. a viceroy, a governor of a province, esp. in Holland, in later use (D. stadhouder = G. statthalter), a governor, a chief magistrate, lit. 'stead-holder,' lieutenant, "locum-tenens" (Kilian); < MD. stad, stede, D. stede, stee (= OHG. MHG. stat, G. statt, place, = AS. stede, E. stead, place), + houder = G. halter = E. holder: see stead and holder. In another view, reflected in the false spelling stadtholder, the first element is supposed to be D. stad = G. stadt, a town, city (a particular use of the preceding); but this is an error, due to the fact that D. stad, in its lit. sense 'place,' is now obsolete; moreover, a stadholder is not the 'keeper of a city.'] Formerly, in the Netherlands, (a) the governor or lieutenant-governor of a province; (b) the chief magistrate of the United Provinces of the Netherlands.

stadholderate (stad'hōl″dėr-āt), n. [Also spelled stadtholderate (= F. stathoudérat); < stadholder + -ate[3].] The office of a stadholder. The Academy, July 20, 1889, p. 32.

stadholdership (stad'hōl″dėr-ship), n. [Also spelled stadtholdership; < stadholder + -ship.] Same as stadholderate.

stadia (stā'di-ą), n. [< ML. stadia, a station, a fem. form, orig. pl. of the neut. stadium, a stage, station, stadium: see stadium.] 1. A station temporarily occupied in surveying.—2. An instrument for measuring distances by means of the angle subtended by an object of known dimensions. The instrument commonly so called, intended for rough military work in action, consists of a small glass plate with figures of horsemen and foot-soldiers as they appear at marked distances, or with two lines nearly horizontal but converging, crossed by vertical lines marked with the distances at which a man appears of the height between the first lines.

3. In civil and topographical engin., the method or the instruments by which what are called stadia measurements are made. This use is almost exclusively limited to the United States, where this method of measuring distances is extensively employed. Stadia measurements are based on the geometrical principle that the lengths of parallel lines subtending an angle are proportioned to their distances from the apex of that angle. The essential appliances for this kind of work are a pair of fine horizontal wires (which are usually of platinum, but which may be spider-webs, or even lines ruled or photographed on the glass), in addition to the ordinary horizontal and vertical wires in the diaphragm of a telescope, and a staff or graduated rod (the stadia rod)—these giving the means of measuring with considerable precision the angle subtended by the whole or any part of a vertical staff, and thus furnishing the data for determining the distance of the rod from the point of sight. This may be accomplished by making the subtending angle variable (that is, by making the wires movable) and the space on the staff fixed in length, or by having the angle constant (that is, the wires fixed in position) and reading off a varying length on the staff; the latter is the method now most generally used. The wires may be applied to the telescope of any suitable instrument, as a theodolite or transit-theodolite; but the method is specially well adapted for use in plane-tabling, the wires being inserted in the telescope of the alidade. This arrangement has been extensively used in the United States, and has given excellent results. The intervals between the wires are frequently arranged so that at a distance of 100 feet a space of one foot shall be intercepted on the rod; but there are also instruments made in which the number of wires is increased, the method of reading varying accordingly.

stadiet, n. [ME., < L. stadium, a race-course, a furlong: see stade[2], stadium.] A race-course; a stadium.

Yif a man renneth in the stadie or in the forlonge for the corone, than lieth the mede in the corone for whiche he renneth. Chaucer, Boëthius, iv. prose 3.

stadiometer (stā-di-om'e-tėr), n. [< Gr. στάδιον (see stadium) + μέτρον, measure.] A modified theodolite in which the directions are not read off, but marked upon a small sheet, which is changed at each station. The distances as read on the telemeter can also be laid down. The stadiometer differs from the plane-table in that the alidade cannot be moved relatively to the sheet.

stadium (stā'di-um), n.; pl. stadia (-ą). [< L. stadium, < Gr. στάδιον, a fixed standard of length, specifically 600 Greek feet (see def. 1), a furlong (nearly), hence a race-course of this length, lit. 'that which stands fast,' < ἱστάναι (√ στα), stand: see stand. Cf. stade[2], stadie.] 1. A Greek itinerary unit, originally the distance between successive stations of the shouters and runners employed to estimate distances. The stadium of Eratosthenes seems to have been short of 520 English feet; but the stadium at the race-course at Athens has been found to be between 603 and 610 English feet. The Roman stadium was about the same length, being one eighth of a Roman mile.

Hence—2. A Greek course for foot-races, disposed on a level, with sloping banks or tiers of seats for spectators rising along its two sides and at one end, which was typically of semicircular plan. The course proper was exactly a stadium in length. The most celebrated stadia were those of Olympia and Athens.

3. A stage; period; in med., a stage or period of a disease, especially of an intermittent disease.

Mohammed was now free once more; but he no longer thought of carrying on his polemic against the Meccans or of seeking to influence them at all. In his relations to them three stadia can be distinguished, although it is easier to determine their character than their chronology. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 550.

stadlet, n. An obsolete form of staddle.

Stadmannia (stad-man'i-ą), n. [NL. (Lamarck, 1823), named after Stadmann, a German botanical traveler.] A genus of trees, of the order Sapindaceæ and tribe Nephelieæ. It is distinguished from the nearly related genus Nephelium (which see) by the absence of petala and by a somewhat spherical calyx with five broad obtuse teeth, by warty branches, and by small velvety plum-like berries. The only species, S. Sideroxylon, is a native of Mauritius and Bourbon. It has alternate abruptly pinnate leaves with from three to six pairs of oblong obtuse leaflets, oblique at the base, each leaflet narrow, entire, smooth, and finely reticulated. The small pedicelled flowers form axillary branching panicles, with conspicuous long-exserted erect stamens. It is known as Bourbon ironwood. See Macassar oil, under oil.

stadtholder, stadtholderate (stat'hōl″dėr, -āt), etc. Erroneous spellings of stadholder, etc.

staff (stȧf), n.; pl. staves, staffs (stāvz, stȧfs). [< ME. staff, staffe, staf (gen. stavcs, dat. stave, pl. staves), < AS. stæf, in a very early form staeb, pl. stafas, a stick, staff, twig, letter (see etym. of book), = OS. staf = OFries. stef = D. staf = MLG. LG. staf = OHG. MHG. stap (stab-), G. stab, a staff, = Icel. stafr, a staff, post, stick, stave of a cask, a letter, = Sw. staf, a staff, = Dan. stav, a staff, stick (also stab, a staff (body of assistants), an astragal (of a cannon), < G.), = Goth. stafs (stab-), element, rudiment (not recorded in the orig. senses 'letter' and 'stick'); = OBulg. stapŭ, shtapŭ = OServ. stŭpĭ, Serv. stap, shtap = Hung. istáp, a staff, = Lith. stebas, a staff, stábas, stóbras, a pillar; cf. Gael. stob, a stake, stump; prob. related to OHG. stabēn, be stiff, from an extended form of the root sta of stand: see stand. Not connected with L. stipes, a stock, post, which is cognate with E. stiff. Hence stave, q. v.] 1. A stick or pole. Specifically—(a) A stick used as a walking-stick, especially one five or six feet long used as a support in walking or climbing.

In his hand a staf. Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 495.

He [the pilgrim] had a long staffe in his hand with a nobbe in the middle, according to the fashion of those Pilgrims staffes. Coryat, Crudities, I. 20.

(b) A stick used as a weapon, as that used at quarter-staff; a club; a cudgel.

A god to-hande staffe therowt he hent,
Befor Roben he lepe.
Robin Hood and the Potter (Child's Ballads, V. 20).

The wars are doubtful;
And on our horsemen's staves Death looks as grimly
As on your keen-edg'd swords.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, i. 1.

(c) A stick used as an ensign of authority; a baton or scepter. Compare baton, club[1], mace[1].

The Earl of Worcester
Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship.
Shak., Rich. II., ii. 2. 59.

(d) A post fixed in the ground; a stake.

The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., v. 1. 203.

(e) A pole on which to hoist and display a flag: as, a flag-staff; an ensign-staff; a jack-staff.

The flag of Norway and the cross of St. George floated from separate staffs on the lawn.
B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 295.

(f†) The pole of a vehicle; a carriage-pole.

His newe lady holdeth him so narowe
Up by the brydel, at the staves ende,
That every word he dred it as an arowe.
Chaucer, Anelida and Arcite, l. 184.

(g) The long handle of certain weapons, as a spear, a halberd, or a poleax.

There stuck no plume in any English crest
That is removed by a staff of France.
Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 318.

Their staves upon their rests they lay.
Drayton, Nymphidia.

(h) A straight-edge for testing or truing a line or surface: as, the proof-staff used in testing the face of the stone in a grind-mill. (i) In surv., a graduated stick, used in leveling. See cross-staff, Jacob's-staff, and cut under leveling-staff. (j) One of several instruments formerly used in taking the sun's altitude at sea: as, the fore-staff, back-staff, cross-staff. See these words. (k) In ship-building, a measuring and spacing rule. (l) The stilt of a plow.

2. In surg., a grooved steel instrument having a curvature, used to guide the knife or gorget through the urethra into the bladder in the operation of lithotomy.—3. In arch., same as rudenture.—4. Something which upholds or supports; a support; a prop.

He is a stafe of stedfastnes bothe erly & latte
To chastes siche kaytifes as don ayenst the lawe.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 3.

The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 2. 70.

Bread is the staff of life. Swift, Tale of a Tub, iv.

5†. A round of a ladder. Latham.—6. A body of assistants or executive officers. (a) Milit., a body of officers who are not in command of troops, but who act as the assistants of an officer in high command, sometimes including that officer himself. Thus, the regimental staff consists of the colonel, lieutenant-colonel, major, and adjutant, or the officers corresponding to these ranks; the brigade staff and division staff are composed of aides-de-camp, commissaries, quartermasters, and the like; and the staff of a general commanding an army-corps, or an army composed of several army-corps, includes these last-named officers and also a chief of staff, a chief of artillery, a chief engineer, and the like. The general staff is a body of officers forming the central office of the army of a nation, and it acts, in a sense, as the personal staff of the commander-in-chief, or of the king or other chief ruler. In the United States navy, staff-officers are the non-combatants, comprising the medical corps, the pay-corps, the steam-engineering corps, and chaplains, of those who go to sea, as well as civil engineers, naval constructors, and professors of mathematics. (b) A body of executive officers attached to any establishment for the carrying out of its designs, or a number of persons, considered as one body, intrusted with the execution of any undertaking: as, the editorial and reporting staff of a newspaper; the staff of the Geological Survey; a hospital staff.

The Archbishop [Becket] had amongst his chaplains a staff of professors on a small scale.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 143.

7†. A letter of the alphabet. See etymology of book.

The firrste staff iss nemmnedd I. Ormulum, l. 4312.

8†. A line; a verse; also, a stanza.

Nerehande stafe by staf, by gret diligence, Sauyng that I most metre apply to;
The wourdes meue, and sett here & ther.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 6555.

If we consider well the forme of this Poeticall staffe, we shall finde it to be a certaine number of verses allowed to go altogether and ioyne without any intermission, and doe or should finish vp all the sentences of the same with a full period. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 54.

I can sing but one staff of the ditty neither.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, ii. 1.

Cowley found out that no kind of staff is proper for a heroic poem, as being all too lyrical. Dryden.

9. In musical notation, a set of five horizontal lines on which notes are placed so as to indicate the pitch of intended tones. Both the lines and the spaces between them are significant, and are called degrees: they are numbered from below upward. When the nine degrees of the staff are not sufficient for the notation of a melody or chord, it is extended by means of added or leger lines above or below. In general, the successive degrees of the staff are understood to correspond to the successive degrees of the scale or to the successive white keys of the keyboard, irrespective of the fact that the intervals thus indicated are not equal to each other. An absolute pitch for the staff-degrees is indicated by a clef placed at the beginning. (See clef.) Gregorian music is customarily written on a staff of four lines, and the only clef used is the C clef. The staff with its appropriate notation is a development from the early medieval neumes, which were originally dots, dashes, or compound marks, whose relative position or shape indicated the relative pitch of successive tones. To make this notation more precise a horizontal line was drawn across the page to mark the pitch of some given tone, as C or F, and the neumes were arranged above or below this line. Later, a second line was added, and then others, only the lines being at first regarded as significant. What was called the great or grand staff was such a staff of eleven lines. In harmonic or concerted music, two or more staffs are used together, and are connected by a brace. See brace[1], 5, and score[1], 9. Also stave, especially in Great Britain.

10. In her., same as fissure, 5.—Bishop's staff. See crozier, 1.—Cantoral staff, cantor's staff, the official staff of a cantor or precentor: it is primarily the baton with which he beats time, but is often large, and elaborately ornamented, becoming a mere badge of office. Also called baton.—David's staff, a kind of quadrant formerly used in navigation.—Episcopal staff, in her., the representation of a bishop's or pastoral staff, usually entwined with a banderole which is secured to the shaft below the head. See cut under banderole.—Foliiferous staff. See foliiferous.—Jeddart staff, a form of battle-ax used by mounted men-at-arms: so named from the town of Jedburgh, in Scotland, the arms of which bear such a weapon. Also called Jedwood ax. Fairholt.—Marshal's staff. See marshal.—Northern staff, a quarter-staff.—Palmer's staff, in her., same as bourdon[1], 3.—Papal staff, in her., a staff topped with the papal cross of three cross-bars.—Pastoral staff, a staff borne as an emblem of episcopal authority by or before bishops, archbishops, abbots, and abbesses. In the Western Church it is usually headed with a volute, suggesting a shepherd's crook, and in the Greek Church it generally has a T-shaped head, often curved upward and inward at the ends; in the Roman Catholic and some other churches it bears a cross in the case of an archbishop, and a double cross in the case of a patriarch. See cambuca, crozier, pateressa, sudarium.—Pilgrim's staff. See pilgrim.—Red staff, in milling, a straight-edge used to test the dress of a millstone. It is so called because it is rubbed with red chalk or ocher, by means of which inequalities on the surface of the stone are detected.—Ring-and-staff investiture. See ecclesiastical investiture, under investiture.—Short staff, the cudgel used in ordinary cudgel-play, similar to the modern single-stick as distinguished from quarter-staff.—Staff raguly, in her., either a pallet couped raguly, or the representation of a trunk of a tree with short projections on the opposite sides, as of limbs sawed off.—

To argue from the staff to the corner†, to raise some other question than that under discussion. Abp. Bramhall, Works, II. 94. (Davies.)—To break a staff. Same as to break a lance (which see, under break).

A pulsny tilter, that . . . breaks his staff like a noble goose. Shak., As you Like it, iii. 4. 47.

To go to sticks and staves. See *stick*3.—To have the better or worse end of the staff, to be getting the best or worst of a matter.

And so now ours seem to have the better end of the staff. Court and Times of Charles I., II. 94.

To set down (or up) one's staff†, to stop and rest, as a traveler at an inn; abide for a time. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 185. (Davies.)=Syn. 1. A staff is a substantial support for one who is in motion; a stay or prop would ordinarily be used to support a thing in its place, but figuratively might be a support to a person. A cane or stick is ornamental or defensive. See definitions of crook, crozier, *crutch*1.

staff-angle (stȧf'ang″gl), n. In plastering, a square rod of wood, standing flush with the wall on each of its sides, at the external angles of plastering, to protect them from injury.

Staff-bead.

staff-bead (stȧf'bēd), n. In arch., an angle-bead.

staff-captain (stȧf'kap″tān), n. The senior grade in the navigating branch of the British navy.

staff-commander (stȧf'kọ-mȧn″dėr), n. The second grade in the navigating branch of the British navy. See *master*1, 1 (b).

staff-degree (stȧf'dē-grē″), n. In musical notation, a degree of a staff, whether line or space.

staff-duty (stȧf'dū″ti), n. The occupation or employment of an officer who serves on a staff, especially of one who, not originally a staff-officer, has been detached from his regiment, and attached to a staff.

staffed (stȧft), a. [< staff + *-ed*2.] 1. In her., surrounded or combined with staffs: as, an annulet staffed, a ring from which staffs or scepters radiate.—2. Provided with a staff or body of officers; officered. [Recent.]

A powerful church of the new type, staffed by friends and pupils of Pusey, rose in the centre of R——.
Mrs. Humphry Ward, Robert Elsmere, xxxiii.

staffelite (staf'e-līt), n. [< Staffel (see def.) + *-ite*2.] A somewhat altered apatite, occurring in botryoidal reniform shapes of a green color, incrusting the phosphorite found at Staffel, near the Lahn, in Prussia.

staff-herding (stȧf'hėr″ding), n. In old Eng. forest law, the grazing of cattle in charge of a herdsman. This was restrained or forbidden as more injurious to the herds of deer than if there were no herdsman to drive away the deer, and the cattle had to find their own feeding-ground.

staff-hole (stȧf'hōl), n. In metal., a small hole in a puddling-furnace through which the puddler heats his staff. Weale.

staffier† (staf'iėr), n. [= D. staffier, an attendant, < OF. estaffier, a lackey, footboy that runs by the stirrup, etc., < It. staffiere, staffiero, a lackey, footboy, < staffa, a stirrup (ML. staffa) (> dim. stafetta, a little stirrup, a courier, > Sp. Pg. estafeta = F. estafette, > D. estafette = G. staffette = Sw. stafett = Dan. stafet, a courier), < OHG. stapfo, staffo, MHG. G. stapfe, a footstep (also a stirrup?), < OHG. MHG. stepfen, also OHG. staphōn, MHG. stapfen, step, tread, = E. step: see step, and cf. OBulg. stopa, a spur. The notion reflected on the def. as given in most dictionaries, that staffier means a 'staff-bearer,' and is connected with staff, is erroneous.] A footman; an attendant.

Before the dame, and round about,
March'd whifflers and staffiers on foot,
With lackies, grooms, valets, and pages,
In fit and proper equipages.
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. ii. 650.

staffish† (stȧf'ish), a. [In Sc. corruptly staffage; < staff + *-ish*1.] Like a staff; rigid; hence, intractable. Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. 1864), p. 111.

staff-man (stȧf'man), n. A workman employed in silk-throwing.

staff-notation (stȧf'nō-tā″shọn), n. In musical notation, the entire system of signs used in connection with the staff: opposed, for example, to the tonic sol-fa notation, in which no staff is used.

staff-officer (stȧf'of″i-sėr), n. An officer forming part of the staff of a regiment, brigade, army, or the like; in the United States navy, an officer not exercising military command.

staff-sergeant (stȧf'sär″jent), n. A non-commissioned officer having no position in the ranks of a company, but attached to the staff of a regiment. In the United States service the staff-sergeants are the sergeant-major, ordnance-sergeant, hospital-steward, quartermaster-sergeant, and commissary-sergeant.

staff-sling† (stȧf'sling), n. [ME. staffeslynge, stafslinge; < staff + *sling*1.] A weapon consisting of a sling combined with a short staff. The staff was held with both hands and whirled around. The weapon seems to have thrown larger missiles than the ordinary sling and with greater force. Distinguished from cord-sling. Also called fustibale, fustibalus.

Staff-sling, about the 10th century. (From Viollet-le-Duc's "Dict. du Mobilier français.")

This geannt at him stones caste
Out of a fel staf-slinge.
Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 118.

staff-stone (stȧf'stōn), n. Same as baculite.

staff-striker† (stȧf'strī″kėr), n. A sturdy beggar; a tramp.

Many became staf-strikers, . . . and wandered in parties of two, three, and four from village to village. R. Eden, quoted in Ribton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 53.

staff-surgeon (stȧf'sėr″jọn), n. A senior grade of surgeons in the British navy.

staff-tree (stȧf'trē), n. A vine or tree of the genus Celastrus. The best-known species is the American C. scandens, a twiner with ornamental fruit, otherwise named climbing bittersweet, waxwork, staff-vine, and fevertwig (see the last, and cut under bittersweet). The seeds of the East Indian C. paniculata have long been in repute among Hindu physicians for their stimulating and acrid properties, and are applied externally or internally for the relief of rheumatism, etc. They yield an expressed oil, also an empyreumatic, known as oleum nigrum.

staff-vine (stȧf'vīn), n. See staff-tree.

stag (stag), n. [E. dial. also steg, Sc. also staig; early mod. E. stagg, stagge; < ME. steg, stagge, < Icel. steggr, steggi, a male animal (a male fox, cat, a gander, drake, etc.), lit. 'mounter,' < stīga = AS. stīgan, mount: see *sty*1. Hence *staggard*1, staggon.] 1. The male of various animals, especially of the deer tribe. Specifically—(a) The male red-deer or a deer of other large species of the genus Cervus in a restricted sense; a hart, of which the female is a hind; and particularly the adult hart, at least five years old, with antlers fully developed (compare *staggard*1, and see cuts under antler); in heraldry, a horned deer with branched antlers. The stag of Europe is Cervus elaphus, now found wild in Great Britain only in the Highlands of Scotland. It is a magnificent animal, standing 4 feet high at the shoulder, with the antlers 3 feet long, having sometimes ten points and palmated at the crown: sometimes known as a stag of ten. The hind is hornless and smaller. The corresponding animal in North America is the wapiti, there called elk (Cervus canadensis), larger than the European stag, with much-branched antlers sometimes upward of 4 feet long, not palmated at the end. (See cut under wapiti.) There are several Asiatic stags, among them the rusine deer (see *Rusa*1, sambur). (b) A bull castrated when half-grown or full-grown; a bull-stag; a bull-segg. (c) A male fox; a dog-fox. (d) A young horse; a colt (sometimes a filly). (e) A gander. (f) A drake. (g) A pit or exhibition game-cock less than one year old; the cockerel of the game-fowl. (h) A turkey-cock. (i) The wren. [Local, Eng.] (j) A stag-beetle. [In most of these uses prov. Eng.]

2. In com. slang: (a) An outside irregular dealer in stocks, not a member of the exchange. (b) A person who applies for the allotment of shares in a joint-stock company, not because he wishes to hold the shares, but because he hopes to sell the allotment at a premium. If he fails in this he forbears to pay the deposit, and the allotment is forfeited.—3. A romping girl; a hoyden. [Prov. Eng.]—4†. The color of the stag; a red dirty-brown color.

Come, my Cub, doe not scorne mee because I go in Stag, in Buffe; heer's velvet too; thou seest I am worth thus much in bare velvet.
Dekker, Satiromastix, I. 220 (ed. Pearson).

Royal stag, a stag that has antlers terminating in twelve or more points.

stag (stag), v.; pret. and pp. stagged, ppr. stagging. [< stag, n.] I. intrans. In com. slang, to act as a stag on the stock exchange. See stag, n., 2.

II. trans. To follow warily, as a deer-stalker does a deer; dog; watch. [Slang.]

So you've been stagging this gentleman and me, and listening, have you?
H. Kingsley, Geoffry Hamlyn, v. (Davies.)

stagart†, n. An obsolete spelling of *staggard*1.

stag-beetle (stag'bē″tl), n. A lamellicorn coleopterous insect of the genus Lucanus or restricted family Lucanidæ (which see), the males of which have branched mandibles resembling the antlers of a stag. L. cervus is the common stag-beetle of England, and L. elaphus is the stag-beetle of the United States. The former is one of the largest of British beetles, distinguished by the enormous size of the horny and toothed mandibles in the male, and by the rather long elbowed antennæ, which end in a perfoliated club, and are composed of ten joints, the first being very long. It is common in some localities in the neighborhood of London, and is often 2 inches long, of a black color. Other species are numerous in various parts of the world. See also cut under Platycerus.

Stag-beetle (Lucanus cervus), one half natural size.

stag-bush (stag'bůsh), n. The black haw, Viburnum prunifolium.

stag-dance (stag'dȧns), n. A dance performed by men only. [Colloq., U. S.]

stage (stāj), n. [< ME. stage, < OF. estage, estaige, estauge, astage, etc., a story, floor, stage, a dwelling-house, F. étage, story, stage, floor, loft, = Pr. estatge, a stage, = It. staggio, a stake, prop, banisters (ML. reflex stagium, cstagium), < ML. staticum*, lit. 'a place of standing,' or (as in It. staggio) 'that which stands,' < L. stare, pp. status, stand: see state, stand. Cf. étagère. In the sense of 'the distance between two points,' the word was prob. confused with OF. estage, < L. stadium, < Gr. στάδιον, a measure of distance: see stadium, *stade*2, stadie.] 1†. A floor or story of a house.

The Erle aseended into this tour quickly,
As sone as he myght to hiest stage came.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 4925.

Litul John stode at a window in the mornynge,
And lokid forth at a stage.
Robin Hood and the Monk (Child's Ballads, V. 8).

2†. A house; building.

Ther buth aerianne in the stage
That aereth the maidenes of parage.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 58.

3. In arch., the portion between a projection and the retreat next above it in a medieval buttress; also, one of the horizontal divisions of a window separated by transoms.—4. A floor or platform elevated above the ground or common surface, for the exhibition of a play or spectacle, for public speakers or performers, or for convenience of view, use, or access: as, a stage for a mountebank; a stage for speakers in public.

Give order that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 389.

Specifically—(a) A floor elevated for the convenience of performing mechanical work and the like; a scaffold; a staging: as, seamen use floating stages, and stages suspended by the side of a ship, for calking and repairing. (b) In printing, a low platform on which stacks of paper are piled. (c) A shelf or horizontal compartment, as one of the steps of a court-cupboard.

The number of stages in the buffet or sideboard indicates the rank of the owner.
S. K. Handbook, Corporation and College Plate.

(d) The platform on which an object is placed to be viewed through a microscope. (e) A wooden structure on a beach to assist in landing; a landing-place at a quay or pier. It sometimes rises and falls with the tide, or is lowered or raised to suit the varying height of the water.

Getting ye starte of ye ships that came to the plantation, they tooke away their stage, & other necessary provisions that they had made for fishing at Cap-Anne ye year before.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 196.

(f) A raised platform on which theatrical performances are exhibited; the flooring in a theater on which the actors perform. In modern theaters the stage includes not only the part which can be seen from the auditorium, but also the spaces on each side, behind the proscenium-arch, which are used for shifting the wings or side-scenes, and are themselves called the wings. The part extending back from the orchestra to the proscenium-arch is called the proscenium. That side of the stage which is on the extreme left of the spectator is called the prompt-side, because in theaters which have no prompt-box the prompter stands there. The corresponding position to the spectator's right is called the opposite-prompt-side (or, briefly, o.-p.-side). Half-way between the center and the prompt-side is the prompt-center, the corresponding position to the right being called the opposite-prompt-center (or, briefly, o.-p.-center). The stage is thus divided laterally into five parts, called in order the prompt-side, the prompt-center, the center, the o.-p.-center, and the o.-p.-side, and these designations extend through the whole depth of the stage, as well as up into the flies: thus the five ropes by which a drop-scene is raised or lowered are known as the prompt-side rope, prompt-center rope, center-rope, etc. As regards depth, the stage is divided into entrances varying in number according to the number of the wings or side-scenes. That between the proscenium and the first wing is called on one side the first prompt-entrance, and on the other the first o.-p.-entrance. From the first wing to the next is the second prompt- or second o.-p.-entrance, and so on. Everything above the stage from the top of the proscenium-arch upward is called the flies, and includes the borders, border-lights, all needed ropes, pulleys, and cleats, the beams to which these are attached, and the fly-galleries, from the lowest of which the drop-scenes are worked. The ancient Greek theater in its original form, as developed in the fifth century B. C., had no raised stage, the actors appearing in the orchestra amid the chorus.

Floor-plan of Stage.

A, proscenium; B, C, D, first, second, and third prompt-entrances respectively; B′, C′, D′, first, second, and third opposite-prompt-entrances respectively; E, wings; a a, center; b b, prompt-side; c c, o.-p.-side; d d, prompt-center; e e, o.-p.-center.

Section of Stage, as seen from Prompt-side.
A, proscenium; f, f, border-lights; g, g', fly-galleries; h, proscenium-arch; i, j, curtains; k, asbestos fire-proof curtain.

All the world 's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7. 139.

Mirth. Pray you help us to some stools here.
Pro. Where, on the stage, ladies?
Mirth. Yes, on the stage; we are persons of quality, I assure you, and women of fashion, and come to see and to be seen. B. Jonson, Staple of News, Ind.

Hence—5. With the definite article, the theater; the drama as acted or exhibited, or the profession of representing dramatic compositions: as, to take to the stage; to regard the stage as a school of elocution.

There were also Poets that wrote onely for the stage, I meane playes and interludes, to recreate the people with matters of disporte.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 20.

Lo! where the stage, the poor degraded stage,
Holds its warped mirror to a gaping age.
Sprague, Curiosity.

6. A place where anything is publicly exhibited; a field for action; the scene of any noted action or career; the spot where any remarkable affair occurs.

When we are born, we cry that we are come
To this great stage of fools. Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 187.

7. A place of rest on a journey, or where a relay of horses is taken, or where a stage-coach changes horses; a station.

I have this morning good news from Gibson; three letters from three several stages, that he was safe last night as far as Roystou, at between nine and ten at night.
Pepys, Diary, June 14, 1667.

Hence—8. The distance between two places of rest on a road: in some countries a regular unit.

'Tis strange a man cannot ride a stage
Or two, to breathe himself, without a warrant.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, ii. 4.

Our whole Stage this day was about five hours, our Course a little Southerly of the West.
Maundrell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 2.

9. A single step of a gradual process; degree of advance or of progression, either in increase or decrease, in rising or falling, or in any change of state: as, stages of growth in an animal or a plant; the stages of a disease; in biol., a state or condition of being, as one of several successive steps in a course of development: as, the larval, pupal, and imaginal stages of an insect; several stages of an embryo.

A blysful lyf thou saya I lede,
Thou woldez knaw ther-of the stage.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), i. 410.

These three be the true stages of knowledge.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii.

Our education is in a manner wholly in the hands of ecclesiastics, and in all stages from infancy to manhood.
Burke, Rev. in France.

They were in widely different stages of civilization.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

10. [Abbr. of stage-coach.] Same as stage-coach; also [U. S.], an omnibus.

A parcel sent you by the stage.
Cowper, Conversation, l. 305.

I went in the six-penny stage. Swift.

Law of the three stages. See three.—Lyric stage. See lyric.—Mechanical stage. See microscope, 1.—To go on the stage. See go.—To run the stage. See run.

stage (stāj), v.; pret. and pp. staged, ppr. staging. [< stage, n.] I. trans. 1. To represent in a play or on the stage; exhibit on the stage.

I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes.
Shak., M. for M., i. 1. 69.

Frippery. Some poet must assist us.
Goldstone. Poet?
You'll take the direct line to have us stag'd.
Middleton, Your Five Gallants, iv. 8.

An you stage me, stinkard, your mansions shall sweat for 't. B. Jonson, Poetaster, iii. 1.

2. To place or put on the stage; mount, as a play.

The manager who, in staging a play, suggests judicious modifications, is in the position of a critic, nothing more.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 819.

II. intrans. To travel by stage-coach: sometimes with indefinite it.

He seasons pleasure with profit; he stages (if I may say so) into politicks, and rides post into business.
Gentleman Instructed, p. 546. (Davies.) stage-box (stāj'boks), n. A proscenium-box.

stage-carriage (stāj'kar″āj), n. A stage-coach.

In 1866 Gladstone was able to reduce the mileage for all stage-carriages to one farthing.
S. Dowell, Taxes in England, III. 56.

stage-coach (stāj'kōch), n. A coach that runs by stages; a coach that runs regularly every day or on stated days between two places, for the conveyance of passengers. Also stage.

stage-craft (stāj'kräft), n. 1. The art of dramatic composition.

The fact that their author so willingly leaned upon the plot of a predecessor indicates his weak point—the lack of that stage-craft which seems to be still one of the rarest gifts of Englishmen. A. Dobson, Introd. to Steele, p. xliv.

2. Knowledge and skill in putting a play on the stage.

stage-direction (stāj'di-rek″shon), n. A written or printed instruction as to action, etc., which accompanies the text of a play.

stage-door (stāj'dōr), n. The door giving access to the stage and the parts behind it in a theater; the actors' and workmen's entrance to a theater.

stage-effect (stāj'e-fekt″), n. Theatrical effect; effect produced artificially and designedly.

stage-fever (stāj'fē″vėr), n. A strong desire to go on the stage, or to be an actor or actress. [Colloq.]

He was intended for the Church, but he caught stage-fever, ran away from school at the age of 17, and joined the theater at Dublin.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 21.

stage-forceps (stāj'fôr″seps), n. A clamp for holding an object on the stage of a compound microscope. E. H. Knight.

stage-fright (stāj'frīt), n. Nervousness experienced on facing an audience, especially for the first time.

stage-hand (stāj'hand), n. A man employed to move scenery, etc.

stage-house (stāj'hous), n. A house, as an inn, at which a coach stops regularly for passengers or to change horses.

stagely† (stāj'li), a. [< stage + -ly[1].] Pertaining to the stage; befitting the theater; theatrical. Jer. Taylor (?), Artif. Handsomeness, p. 168.

stageman† (stāj'man), n. An actor. T. Brabine, 1589 (prefixed to Greene's "Menaphon"). (Davies.) stage-manager (stāj'man″āj-ėr), n. In theaters, one who superintends the production and performance of a play, and who regulates all matters behind the curtain.

stage-micrometer (stāj'mī-krom″e-tėr), n. In microscopy, a micrometer attached to the stage, and used to measure the size of an object under examination.

stage-plate (stāj'plāt), n. A glass plate with a narrow ledge along one edge, used on the stage of a microscope to hold an object when the microscope is inclined, and sometimes as the bottom plate of a growing-slide. E. H. Knight.

stage-play (stāj'plā), n. Originally, a dramatic performance; hence, a play or drama adapted for representation on the stage, as distinguished from a reading- or closet-play.

If the devil, or his instruments, should then tell him [a dying man] of a cup of sack, of merry company, of a stage-play, or a morris-dance, do you think he would then be so taken with the motion? Baxter, Saints' Rest, iv. 3.

stage-player (stāj'plā″ėr), n. An actor on the stage; one whose occupation is to represent characters on the stage.

Among slaves who exercised polite arts none sold so dear as stageplayers or actors. Arbuthnot, Ancient Coins.

stager (stā'jėr), n. [< stage + -er[1].] 1†. A player.

Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage-wrights too (your peers).
B. Jonson, Just Indignation of the Author.

2. One who has long acted on the stage of life; a person of experience, or of skill derived from long experience: usually with old.

Here let me, as an old stager upon the theatre of the world, suggest one consideration to you.
Chesterfield, To his Son, Dec. 20, O. S. 1748.

3. A horse used for drawing a stage-coach.

stage-right (stāj'rīt), n. The proprietary right of the author of a dramatic composition in respect to its performance; the exclusive right to perform or authorize the performance of a particular drama. Compare copyright.

stageritet, n. [< stager + -ite[2]; with a pun on Stagirite.] A stage-player. [Humorous.]

Thou hast forgot how thou amblest . . . by a play-wagon, in the high way, and took'at mad Jeronimoes part, to get service among the Mimickes; and when the Stagerites banish't thee into the Isle of Doga, thou turn'dst Bandog. Dekker, Satiromastix, I. 229 (ed. Pearson).

stagery† (stā'jėr-i), n. [< stage + -ery.] Exhibition on the stage.

Likening those grave controversies to a piece of Stagery, or Scene-worke. Milton, An Apology, etc.

stage-setter (stāj'set″ėr), n. One who attends to the proper setting of a play on the stage.

M. Sardou is a born stage-setter, but with a leaning to "great machines," numbers of figurants, and magnificence. The Century, XXXV. 544.

stage-struck (stāj'struk), a. Smitten with a love for the stage; possessed by a passion for the drama; seized by a passionate desire to become an actor.

"You are a precious fool, Jack Bunce," said Cleveland, half angry, and, in despite of himself, half diverted by the false tones and exaggerated gesture of the stagestruck pirate. Scott, Pirate, xxxix.

stag-evil (stag'ē″vl), n. Tetanus or lockjaw of the horse.

stage-wagon (stāj'wag″on), n. 1. A wagon for conveying goods and passengers, by stages, at regularly appointed times.—2†. A stage-coach.

stage-wait (stāj'wāt), n. A delay in a theatrical performance, due to dilatoriness of an actor or carpenter, or to any like cause. [Colloq.]

stage-whisper (stāj'hwis″pėr), n. A loud whisper used in by-play by an actor in a theater; an aside; hence, a whisper meant to be heard by those to whom it is not professedly addressed.

stagewright (stāj'rīt), n. A dramatic author; a playwright. See the quotation under stager, 1. [Rare.]

stagey, stageyness. See stagy, staginess, 1.

staggard[1], staggart (stag'ärd, -ärt), n. [Formerly also stagart; < stag + -ard, -art.] A stag in his fourth year, and therefore not quite full grown.

staggard[2] (stag'ärd), n. Same as staggarth.

staggarth (stag'ärth), n. [Also staggard; a reduction of stack-garth*, < stack + garth[1]. Cf. equiv. dial. haggarth, haggard, 'hay-garth'.] An inclosure within which stacks of hay and grain are kept. Cath. Ang., p. 358. [Prov. Eng.]

stagger (stag'ėr), v. [A var. of stacker, after MD. staggeren, stagger as a drunken man (appar. a var. of stackeren* = Icel. stakra, stagger): see stacker[1].] I. intrans. 1. To walk or stand unsteadily; reel; totter.

A violent exertion, which made the King stagger backward into the hall. Scott, Quentin Durward, x.

My sight staggers; the walls shake; he must be — do angels ever come hither?
Landor, Imag. Conv., Galileo, Milton, and a Dominican.

2. To hesitate; begin to doubt or waver in purpose; falter; become less confident or determined; waver; vacillate.

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief. Rom. iv. 20.

It was long since resolved on,
Nor must I stagger now in 't.
Massinger, Unnatural Combat, ii. 1.

The enterprise of the . . . newspapers stops at no expense, staggers at no difficulties.
Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 687.

=Syn. 1. Totter, etc. See reel[2].

II. trans. 1. To cause to reel, totter, falter, or be unsteady; shake.

I have seen enough to stagger my obedience.
Fletcher, Valentinian, iii. 1.

Strikes and lock-outs occur, which stagger the prosperity, not of the business merely, but of the state.
N. A. Rev., CXXXIX. 515.

2. To cause to hesitate, waver, or doubt; fill with doubts or misgivings; make less steady, determined, or confident.

The question did at first so stagger me.
Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 4. 212.

'Tis not to die, sir,
But to die unreveng'd, that staggers me.
Fletcher, Double Marriage, iv. 1.

3. To arrange in a zigzag order; specifically, in wheel-making, to set (the spokes) in the hub alternately inside and outside (or more or less to one side of) a line drawn round the hub. The mortise-holes in such a hub are said to be dodging. A wheel made in this manner is called a staggered wheel. The objects sought in this system of construction are increased strength and stiffness in the wheel.

stagger (stag'ėr), n. [< stagger, v.] 1. A sudden tottering motion, swing, or reel of the body as if one were about to fall, as through tripping, giddiness, or intoxication.

Their trepidations are more shaking than cold ague-fits; their staggers worse than a drunkard's.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 127.

The individual . . . advanced with a motion that alternated between a reel and a stagger.
G. A. Sala, Dutch Pictures, The Ship-Chandler. (Latham.)

2. pl. One of various forms of functional and organic disease of the brain and spinal cord in domesticated animals, especially horses and cattle: more fully called blind staggers. A kind of staggers (see also gid[1] and sturdy[2]) affecting sheep is specifically the disease resulting from a larval brain-worm. (See cœnure and Tænia.) Other forms are due to disturbance of the circulation in the brain, and others again to digestive derangements. See stomach-staggers.

How now! my galloway nag the staggers, ha!
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iv. 3.

Hence — 3. pl. A feeling of giddiness, reeling, or unsteadiness; a sensation which causes reeling.

Johp. And a kind of whimsie — Mere. Here in my head, that puts me to the staggers.
B. Jonson, Fortunate Isles.

4. pl. Perplexities; doubts; bewilderment; confusion.

I will throw thee from my care for ever,
Into the staggers and the careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance.
Shak., All's Well, iii. 3. 170.

Blind staggers. See def. 2, above. — Grass-staggers, the loco-disease in horses. See loco, 2, and loco-weed.

Stagger-bush (Andromeda Mariana). 1, flowering branch; 2, the fruits.

stagger-bush (stag'ėr-bůsh), n. The shrub Andromeda (Pieris) Mariana of the middle and southern United States, whose leaves have been supposed to give the staggers to animals. Its fascicles of waxy pure-white or pinkish urn-shaped flowers are very beautiful, the habit of the bush less so. See cut in preceding column.

staggerer (stag'ėr-ėr), n. [< stagger + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which staggers. — 2. A statement or argument that staggers; a poser; whatever causes one to stagger, falter, hesitate, or doubt. [Colloq.]

This was a staggerer for Dive's literary "gent," and it took him nearly six weeks to get over it and frame a reply.
Athenæum, Oct. 26, 1889, p. 560.

stagger-grass (stag'ėr-grȧs), n. The atamascolily, Zephyranthes Atamasco: so called as supposed to cause staggers in horses.

staggeringly (stag'ėr-ing-li), adv. In a staggering or reeling manner; with hesitation or doubt. Imp. Dict.

staggerwort (stag'ėr-wėrt), n. Same as staverwort: so called as supposed to cure the staggers, or, as Prior thinks, from its application to newly castrated bulls, called stags.

staggon† (stag'on), n. [Also stagon (ML. staggon); < stag + -on, a suffix of F. origin.] A staggard. Halinshed.

Called in the fourth [year] a stagon.
Stanihurst, Descrip. of Eng., iii. 4.

stag-headed (stag'hed$^{\prime}$ed), a. Having the upper branches dead: said of a tree.

They were made of particular parts of the growth of certain very old oaks, which had grown for ages, and had at length become stag-headed and half-dead.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 787.

stag-horn (stag'hôrn), n. 1. A common club-moss, Lycopodium clavatum. Also stag's-horn.

Or with that plant which in our dale
We call stag-horn, or fox's tail.
Wordsworth, Idle Shepherd-Boys.

2. A madrepore coral, Madrepora cervicornis and related species, used for ornament. See cut under Madreporæ. — Stag-horn fern, a fern of the genus Platycerium, but especially P. alcicorne: so called from the fact that the fertile fronds are dichotomously forked like a stag's horn. The genus is small but widely diffused. The name is also sometimes applied to certain species of Ophioglossum. — Stag-horn moss. Same as stag-horn, 1. — Stag-horn sumac. See sumac.

stag-horned (stag'hôrnd), a. Having long serrate antennæ, as the longicorn beetle Acanthophorus serraticornis.

staghound (stag'hound), n. A hunting-dog able to overtake and cope with a stag. (a) The Scotch deerhound or wolf-dog, of great speed, strength, and courage, standing 28 inches or more, with a shaggy or wiry coat, usually some shade of gray. They hunt chiefly by sight, and are used in stalking the red deer, for running down the game. (b) A large kind of fox-hound, about 25 inches high, trained to hunt deer by scent.

staginess (stā'ji-nes), n. [< stagy + -ness.] 1. Stagy or exaggerated character or style; conventional theatricality. Also stageyness. — 2. A certain stage or state of an animal; by implication, that stage when the animal is out of condition, as when a fur-bearing animal is shedding. [Colloq.]

Those signs of shedding and staginess so marked in the seal.
Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 488.

staging (stā'jing), n. [Verbal n. of stage, v.] 1. A temporary structure of posts and boards for support, as in building; scaffolding. — 2. The business of running or managing stage-coaches, or the act of traveling in them.

stagiont, n. [Appar. an altered form of staging, simulating station (ME. staeion, < OF. stacion, estaçon, estachon, estagon, etc.): see station.] Stage; a staging; a pier.

In these tydes there must be lost no iot of time, for, if you arriue not at the stagions before the tyde be spent, you must turne backe from whence you came.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 234.

Stagirite (staj'i-rīt), n. [Also, erroneously, Stagyrite; = F. Stagyrite = Sp. Pg. Estagirita = It. Stagirita, < L. Stagirites, Stagerites, < Gr. Σταγειρίτης, an inhabitant or a native of Stagira (applied esp. to Aristotle), < Στάγειρα, Στάγειρος (L. Stagira), a city of Macedonia.] A native or an inhabitant of Stagira, a city of Macedonia (Chalcidice), situated on the Strymonic Gulf; specifically, Aristotle, the "prince of philosophers" (384–322 B. C.), who was born there, and is frequently referred to as "the Stagirite."

The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore, Spread all his sails, and durst the deep explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mæonian star.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 645.

stagnancy (stag'nan-si), n. [< stagnan(t) + -cy.] 1. The state of being stagnant or without motion, flow, or circulation, as a fluid; stagnation.

There is nowhere stillness and stagnancy.
The Century, XXVII. 174.

2. Pl. stagnancies (-siz). Anything stagnant; a stagnant pool.

Though the country people are so wise
To call these rivers, they're but stagnancies,
Left by the flood.
Cotton, Wonders of the Peaks (1681), p. 55.

stagnant (stag'nant), a. [< F. stagnant = It. stagnante, < L. stagnan(t-)s, ppr. of stagnare, form a pool of standing water, cause to stand: see stagnate.] 1. Standing; motionless, as the water of a pool or lake; without current or motion, ebb or flow: as, stagnant water; stagnant pools.

Where the water is stopped in a stagnant pond
Danced over by the midge.
Browning, By the Fireside.

2. Inert; inactive; sluggish; torpid; dull; not brisk: as, business is stagnant.

The gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul. Johnson.

stagnantly (stag'nant-li), adv. In a stagnant or still, motionless, inactive manner.

stagnate (stag'nāt), v. i.; pret. and pp. stagnated, ppr. stagnating. [< L. stagnatus, pp. of stagnare (> It. stagnare = F. stagner), form a pool of standing water, stagnate, be overflowed, < stagnum, a pool, swamp. Cf. stank[1].] 1. To cease to run or flow; be or become motionless; have no current.

I am fifty winters old;
Blood then stagnates and grows cold.
Cotton, Anacreontic.

In this flat country, large rivers, that scarce had declivity enough to run, crept slowly along, through meadows of fat black earth, stagnating in many places as they went.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 372.

2. To cease to be brisk or active; become dull, inactive, or inert: as, business stagnates.

Ready-witted tenderness . . . never stagnates in vain lamentations while there is room for hope. Scott.

stagnate† (stag'nāt), a. [< L. stagnatus, pp.: see the verb.] Stagnant.

To drain the stagnate fen.
Somerville, The Chase, iii. 440.

stagnation (stag-nā'shon), n. [= F. stagnation; as stagnate + -ion.] 1. The condition of being stagnant; the cessation of flow or circulation in a fluid; the state of being without flow, or of being motionless.

Th' icy touch
Of unprolific winter has impress'd
A cold stagnation on th' intestine tide.
Cowper, Task, vi. 139.

In . . . [suffocation] life is extinguished by stagnation of non-arterialized blood in the capillaries of the lungs, and by the changes that result from the failure of the function of the pulmonic system.
J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 396.

2. Lack or absence of briskness or activity; inertness; dullness.

The decay of my faculties is a stagnation of my life.
Steele, Spectator, No. 260.

stagnicolous (stag-nik'ō-lus), a. [< L. stagnum, a pool, + colere, inhabit.] Living in stagnant water; inhabiting swamps or fens; paludicole, as a bird.

stagont, n. See staggon.

stag-party (stag'pär$^{\prime}$ti), n. A party or entertainment to which men only are invited. [Slang, U. S.]

stag's-horn (stagz'hôrn), n. Same as stag-horn, 1.

stag-tick (stag'tik), n. A parasitic dipterous insect, Lepteptena cervi, of the family Hippoboscidæ, which infests the stag and other animals, and resembles a tick in being usually wingless.

stag-worm (stag'wėrm), n. The larva of one of several bot-flies which infest the stag. There are 12 species, 6 of which (all of the genus Hypoderma) inhabit the subcutaneous tissue of the back and loins; the others (belonging to the genera Cephenomyia and Pharyngomyia) infest the nose and throat.

stagy (stā'ji), a. [Also stagey; < stage + -y[1].] Savoring of the stage; theatrical; conventional in manner: in a depreciatory sense.

Mr. Lewes . . . is keenly alive to everything stagey in physiognomy and gesture.
George Eliot, in Cross's Life, II. xiii.

The general tone of his thought and expression never rose above the ceremonious, stagy, and theatrical character of the 18th century. Encyc. Brit., XII. 97.

Stagyrite, n. An erroneous spelling of Stagirite.

Stahlian (stä'lian), a. and n. [< Stahl (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to G. E. Stahl, a German chemist (1660–1734), or his doctrines.

II. n. A believer in or supporter of Stahlianism or animism.

Stahlianism (stä'lian-izm), n. [< Stahlian + -ism.] Same as animism, 2.

Stahlism (stä'lizm), n. [< Stahl (see Stahlian) + -ism.] Same as animism, 2.

stahlspiel (stäl'spēl), n. [G., < stahl, steel, + spiel, play.] Same as lyre[1], 1 (c).

staid (stād). A mode of spelling the preterit and past participle of stay[2].

staid (stād), a. [Formerly also stayed; an adj. use of staid, pp.] Sober; grave; steady; sedate; regular; not wild, volatile, flighty, or fanciful: as, a staid elderly person.

Put thyself
Into a haviour of less fear, ere wildness Vanquish my staider senses.
Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 4. 10.

The tall fair person, and the still staid mien.
Crabbe, Works, IV. 143.

staidly (stād'li), adv. [Formerly also stayedly.] In a staid manner; calmly; soberly.

'Tis well you have manners.
That curt'sy again, and hold your countenance staidly.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, iv. 2.

staidness (stād'nes), n. [Formerly also stayedness; < staid + -ness.] The state or character of being staid; sobriety; gravity; sedateness; steadiness: as, staidness and sobriety of age.

The love of things ancient doth argue staydedness, but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 7.

Brought up among Quakers, although not one herself, she admired and respected the staidness and outward peacefulness common among the young women of that sect.
Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xxxii.

staig (stāg), n. [A var. of stag.] A young horse; a stallion. [Scotch.]

stail (stāl), n. A spelling of stale[2].

stain (stān), v. [< ME. steinen, steynen (> Icel. steina), by apheresis from disteinen, disteignen, distcynen, desteinen, E. distain: see distain.] I. trans. 1. To discolor, as by the application of some foreign matter; make foul; spot: as, to stain the hand with dye, or with tobacco-juice; to stain the clothes.

An image like thyself, all stain'd with gore.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 664.

2. To soil or sully with guilt or infamy; tarnish; bring reproach on; corrupt; deprave: as, to stain the character; stained with guilt.

Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
To leave for nothing all my sum of good.
Shak., Sonnets, cix.

3†. To deface; disfigure; impair, as shape, beauty, or excellence.

But he 's something stain'd
With grief that's beauty's canker, thou mightst call him
A goodly person. Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 414.

We were all a little stained last night, sprinkled with a cup or two. B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, i. 1.

4. To color by a process other than painting or coating or covering the surface. (a) To color (as glass) by something which combines chemically with the substance to be colored. (b) To color by the use of a thin liquid which penetrates the material, as in dyeing cloth or staining wood. (c) In microscopy, to impregnate with a substance whose chemical reaction on the tissue so treated gives it a particular color. The great value of staining for this purpose results from the fact that some tissues are stainable by a certain reagent to which others respond but feebly or not at all, so that some points, as the nucleus of cells, etc., may be more distinctly seen by the contrast in color. Many different preparations are used for the purpose in different cases.

5. To print colors upon (especially upon paper-hangings). [Eng.]—6†. To darken; dim; obscure.

Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun.
Shak., Sonnets, xxxv.

Hence—7†. To eclipse; excel.

O voyce that doth the thrush in shrilness stain.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

Her beauty shin'd most bright,
Far staining every other brave and comely dame
That did appear in sight.
Patient Grissel (Child's Ballads, IV. 209).

Stained cloth. Same as painted cloth (which see, under cloth).—Stained glass. See glass.

II. intrans. 1. To cause a stain or discoloration.

As the berry breaks before it staineth.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 460.

2. To take stains; become stained, soiled, or sullied; grow dim; be obscured.

The only soil of his fair virtue's gloss,
If virtue's gloss will stain with any soil,
Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a will.
Shak., L. L. L., ii. 1. 48.

stain (stān), n. [< stain, v.] 1. A spot; a discoloration, especially a discoloration produced by contact with foreign matter by external causes or influences: as, mildew-stains.

You do remember
This stain [a mole] upon her?
Shak., Cymbeline, ii. 4. 139.

Swift trouts, diversified with crimson stains.
Pope, Windsor Forest, l. 145.

2. A blot; a blemish; a cause of reproach or disgrace: as, a stain on one's character.

Hereby I will lead her that is the praise and yet the stain of all womankind. Sir P. Sidney.

I say you are the man who denounced to my uncle this miserable stain upon the birth of my betrothed.
L. W. M. Lockhart, Fair to See, xxii.

3. In entom., a well-defined spot of color which appears to be semi-transparent, so that it merely modifies the ground-color: it may be produced by very fine dots, as on a butterfly's wing. —4. Taint; tarnish; evil or corrupting effect: as, the stain of sin.—5†. Slight trace; tinge; tincture.

You have some stain of soldier in you; let me ask you a question. Shak., All's Well, i. 1. 122.

6. Coloring matter; a liquid used to color wood, ivory, etc., by absorption.

The ivory is invariably again placed in cold water that has been boiled, before it is transferred to the stain.
Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 234.

Diffuse stains, those dyes which stain all parts of the tissue more or less uniformly.—Nuclear stains, those stains which set upon the nuclei, and which stain not at all or feebly the protoplasm of the cells.—Oyster-shell stains, in photog. See oyster-shell.

stainable (stā'na-bl), a. [< stain + -able.] Capable of being stained, as objects for the microscope. See stain, v., 4 (c). Encyc. Brit., XIX. 833.

stainchel (stān'chel), n. A Scotch form of stanchel[1].

stainer (stā'nėr), n. [< stain + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which stains, blots, or tarnishes.—2. One who stains or colors; especially, in the trades, a workman whose employment is staining wood, etc. See paper-stainer.—3. A tincture or coloring matter used in staining.

stainless (stān'les), a. [< stain + -less.] Free from spot or stain, whether physical or moral; unblemished; immaculate; untarnished: literally or figuratively.

stainlessly (stān'les-li), adv. In a stainless manner; with freedom from stain.

stair (stār), n. [< ME. staire, stayre, stayer, steir, steire, steyre, steyer, < AS. stǣger, a step, stair (= MD. steygher, steegher, stegher, D. steiger, a stair, step, quay, pier, scaffold), < stigan = D. stijgen, etc., mount, climb; see sty[1], v., and cf. stile[1], sty[1], n., from the same verb.] 1†. A step; a degree.

He [Mars] passeth but oo steyre in dayes two.
Chaucer, Complaint of Mars, l. 129.

Forthy she standeth on the highest stayre
Of th' honorable stage of womanhead.
Spenser, F. Q., III. v. 54.

2. One of a series of steps to mount by: as, a flight of stairs.

The qween bar furst the cros afturward,
To fecche folk from helleward,
On holy stayers to steyen vpward
And regne with God vr lorde.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 148.

The stairs, as he treads on them, kiss his feet.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 330.

3. A flight or succession of flights of steps, arranged one behind and above the other in such a way as to afford passage from a lower to a higher level, or vice versa: as, a winding stair; the back stair: often used in the plural in the same sense.

Romynge outward, fast it gonne biholde,
Downward a steyre, into an herber grene.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1705.

Below stairs, in the basement or lower part of a house.—Close-string stairs, a dog-legged stairs without an open newel, and with the steps housed into the strings.—Down stairs, in the lower part of a house.—Flight of stairs, a succession of steps in a continuous line or from one landing to another.—Geometrical stairs. See geometric.—Pair of stairs, a set or flight of steps or stairs. See pair[1], 5.—Up stairs, in the upper part of a house.

stairbeak (stār'bēk), n. A bird of the genus Xenops, having the upper mandible straight and the gonys ascending to the tip. See cut under Xenops.

staircase (stār'kās), n. [< stair + case[2].] The part of a building which contains the stairs: also often used for stairs or flight of stairs. Staircases are straight or winding. The straight are technically called fliers or direct fliers.

Though the figure of the house without be very extraordinary good, yet the stayre-case is exceeding poor.
Pepys, Diary, III. 267.

Corkscrew staircase or stair, a winding staircase having a solid newel.

From her warm bed, and up the corkscrew stair,
With hand and rope we haled the groaning sow.
Tennyson, Walking to the Mail.

staircase-shell (stār'kās-shel), n. A shell of the genus Solarium; any member of the Solariidæ. See cut under Solarium.

stair-foot (stār'fůt), n. The bottom of a stair.
Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 123.

stair-head (stār'hed), n. The top of a stair.

I lodge with another sweep which is better off nor I am, and pay him 2*s.* 9*d.* a week for a little stair-head place with a bed in it.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 428.

stair-rod (stār'rod), n. A rod or a strip of thin metal, sometimes folded and corrugated to give it stiffness, used to hold a stair-carpet in place. It is secured across the width of the step by rings or staples into which it is slipped, and in other ways; by extension, something not a rod answering the same purpose.

stairway (stār'wā), n. A staircase. Moore. (Imp. Dict.) stair-wire (stār'wīr), n. A slender stair-rod of metal.

The banisters were beeswaxed, and the very stair-wires made your eyes wink, they were so glittering.
Dickens, Sketches, Tales, i. 1.

stairy† (stār'i), a. [Early mod. E. stayry; < stair + -y[1].] Stair-like. Nashe, Lenten Stuffe. (Davies.) staith, staithman. See stathe, statheman.

staithwort (stāth'wėrt), n. Same as colewort.

staiver, v. i. See staver.

stak†. An obsolete preterit of stick[1], stick[2].

stake[1] (stāk), n. [< ME. stake, < AS. staca, a stake, a pin, = OFries. stake = MD. stake, staecke, staeck, D. staak, a stake, post, = MLG. stake, a stake, post, pillory, prison, LG. stake, > G. staken, a stake, = Icel. stjaki, a stake, pole, eandlestiek, = Sw. stake, a stake, a candlestick, = Dan. stage, a stake (Scand. forms appar. < LG.); cf. OHG. stachulla, stacchulla, MHG. G. stachel, a sting; from the root of stick (AS. stecan,* pret. stæc*): see stick[1], v., and cf. stick[3], n., stack. Cf. OF. estake, estaque, estacke, estueque, stake, also estache, estaiche, stache, etc., a stake, prop, bar, etc., = Sp. Pg. estaca, a stake, = It. stacca, a hook, < Teut.] 1. A stick of wood sharpened at one end and set in the ground, or prepared to be set in the ground, as part of a fence, as a boundary-mark, as a post to tether an animal to, or as a support for something, as a hedge, a vine, a tent, or a fishing-net.

Here hetd and here kyng haldyng with no partie,
Bote stande as a stake that styketh in a muyre
By-twyne two londes for a trewe marke.
Piers Plowman (C), iv. 384.

Sharp stakes pluck'd out of hedges
They pitched in the ground.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 1. 117.

Was never salmon yet that shone so fair
Among the stakes on Dee.
Kingsley, The Sands of Dee.

Specifically—2. The post to which a person condemned to death by burning is bound: as, condemned to the stake; burned at the stake; also, a post to which a bear to be baited is tied.

Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
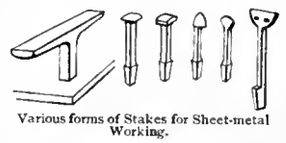
And baited it with all the unmuzzled thoughts
That tyrannous heart can think?
Shak., T. N., iii. 1. 129.

3. In leather-manuf., a post on which a skin is stretched for currying or graining. E. H. Knight.—4. A vertical bar fixed in a socket or in staples on the edge of the bed of a platform railway-car or of a vehicle, to secure the load from rolling off, or, when a loose substance, as gravel, etc., is carried, to hold in place boards which retain the load.—5. A small anvil used for working in thin metal, as by tinsmiths: it appears to be so called because stuck into the bench by a sharp vertical prop pointed at the end.



Various forms of Stakes for Sheet-metal Working.

The stake is a small anvil, which stands upon a small iron foot on the workbench, to remove as occasion offers.
J. Moxon, Mechanical Exercises.

Stake-and-rider fence. Same as snake fence (which see, under fence).

stake[1] (stāk), v. t.; pret. and pp. staked, ppr. staking. [< ME. staken = MD. MLG. staken (= OF. estachier = Sp. estacar), stake; from the noun.] 1. To fasten to a stake; tether; also, to impale.

Stake him to the ground, like a man that had hang'd himself. Shirley, Love Tricks, ii. 1.

'Twas pitty that such a delicate inventive witt should be staked in an obscure corner.
Aubrey, Lives (Francis Potter).

His mind was so airy and volatile he could not have kept his chamber, if he must needs be there, staked down purely to the drudgery of the law.
Roger North, Lord Guilford, I. 15. (Davies.)

2. To support with stakes; provide with supporting stakes or poles: as, to stake vines.—3. To defend, barricade, or bar with stakes or piles.

Then caus'd his ships the river up to stake,
That none with victual should the town relieve.
Drayton, Battle of Agincourt, st. 89.

4. To divide or lay off and mark with stakes or posts: with out or off: as, to stake off a site for a school-house; to stake out oyster-beds.

The modest Northerners who have got hold of it [Florida], and staked it all out into city lots, seem to want to keep it all to themselves.
C. D. Warner, Their Pilgrimage, p. 49.

When, therefore, M. Naville disbanded his men at the close of the fourth week, he had not only found a large number of very precious monuments in a surprisingly short space of time, but he left the ground chronologically staked out.
The Century, XXXIX. 333.

5. To stretch, scrape, and smooth (skins) by friction against the blunt edge of a semicircular knife fixed to the top of a short beam or post set upright.

The [calf-]skins . . . are staked by drawing them to and fro over a blunt knife fixed on the top of a post.
Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 367.

stake[2] (stāk), n. [= MD. staeck, a stake for which one plays; a particular use of stake, a stake, pole, appar. as 'that which is fixed or put up': see stake[1], stick[3].] 1. That which is placed at hazard as a wager; the sum of money or other valuable consideration which is deposited as a pledge or wager to be lost or won according to the issue of a contest or contingency.

'Tis time short Pleasures now to take,
Of little Life the best to make,
And manage wisely the last Stake.
Cowley, Anacreontics, v.

Whose game was empires, and whose stakes were thrones.
Byron, Age of Bronze, iii.

2. The prize in a contest of strength, skill, speed, or the like.

From the king's hand must Douglas take A silver dart, the archer's stake.
Scott, L. of the L., v. 22.

3. An interest; something to gain or lose.

Both had the air of men pretending to aristocracy — an old world air of respectability and stake in the country, and Church-and-Stateism.
Bulwer, My Novel, xi. 2.

4. The state of being laid or pledged as a wager; the state of being at hazard or in peril: preceded by at: as, his honor is at stake.

Now begins the Game of Faction to be play'd, wherein the whole State of Queen Elizabeth lies at stake.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 329.

I have more than Life at Stake on your Fidelity.
Steele, Conscious Lovers, ii. 1.

5. The see or jurisdiction of a Mormon bishop. [A forced use.]

Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not, . . . the sin be upon the heads of the parents.
Doctrine and Covenants, lxviii. 25.

Maiden stakes. See maiden.—The Oaks stakes. See oak.

stake[2] (stāk), v. t.; pret. and pp. staked, ppr. staking. [< stake[2], n.] To wager; put at hazard or risk upon a future contingency; venture.

'Tis against all Rule of Play that I should lose to one who has not wherewithal to stake.
Congreve, Way of the World, iii. 18.

Like an inspired and desperate alchemist,
Staking his very life on some dark hope.
Shelley, Alastor.

stake[3]†, n. A Middle English form of stack.

stake[4] (stāk), n. The ling. [Prov. Eng.]

stake-boat (stāk'bōt), n. A moored boat used to mark the end of a course or a turning-point in a regatta or boat-race.

Each boat to go fairly round the stake-boats or mark-buoys without touching the same.
Qualtrough, Boat Sailer's Manual, p. 141.

stake-driver (stāk'drī″vėr), n. The American bittern, Botaurus mugitans or lentiginosus: so called from its cry, which is likened to driving a stake into the ground with a mallet. Also pile-driver, pump-thunder, thunder-pumper, etc.

stake-head (stāk'hed), n. In rope-making, one of several cross-bars set on stakes, used in a rope-walk to support the cords while twisting.

stake-holder (stāk'hōl″dėr), n. 1. One who holds the stakes, or with whom the bets are deposited when a wager is laid.—2. In law, one holding a fund which two or more claim adversely to each other.

stake-hook (stāk'hůk), n. On a railway platform-car, a hook, loop, or clevis on the side of the bed, to receive an upright stake.

stake-iron (stāk'ī″ėrn), n. The metallic strap or armature of a railway- or wagon-stake.

stake-net (stāk'net), n. A kind of fishing-net, consisting of netting vertically hung on stakes driven into the ground, usually with special contrivances for entrapping or securing the fish. See gill-net, and cut under pound-net.

stake-netter (stāk'net″ėr), n. One who uses a stake-net or pound; a pounder.

stake-pocket (stāk'pok″et), n. A socket of cast-iron fixed to the side of the bed of a flat or platform-car to receive the end of a stake.

stake-puller (stāk'půl″ėr), n. A machine, consisting of a hinged lever with a gripping device, for pulling stakes or posts from the ground; a post-puller.

staker[1]†, v. i. A Middle English spelling of stacker[1].

staker[2] (stā'kėr), n. [< stake[2] + -er[1].] One who stakes money, or makes a wager or bet.

stake-rest (stāk'rest), n. On a railway platform-car, a device for supporting a stake when turned down horizontally.

stakket, n. and v. An old spelling of stack.

stakker†, v. i. An obsolete spelling of stacker[1].

staktometer, n. See stactometer.

stalt. An obsolete preterit of steal[1].

stalactic (stā-lak'tik), a. [< Gr. σταλακτικός, dropping, dripping, < σταλακτός, verbal adj. of σταλάσσειν, σταλάζειν, σταλᾶν, drop, drip, let fall drop by drop, appar. extended forms of στάζειν, drop, let fall by drops.] Pertaining to or resembling stalactite or a stalactite; stalactitic.

stalactical (stā-lak'ti-kạl), a. [< stalactic + -al.] Same as stalactic.

This sparry, stalactical substance.
Derham, Physico-Theology, iii. 1.

stalactiform (stā-lak'ti-fôrm), a. [< stalact(ite) + L. forma, form.] Having the form of a stalactite; like stalactite; stalactical.

stalactite (stā-lak'tīt), n. [= F. stalactite, < NL. stalactites, < Gr. σταλακτός, dropping, oozing out in drops: see stalactic.] 1. A deposit of carbonate of lime, usually resembling in form a huge icicle, which hangs from the roof of a cave or subterranean rock-opening, where it has been slowly formed by deposition from calcareous water trickling downward through cracks or openings in the rocks above. Water containing carbonic acid in solution, which it has gained in filtering through the overlying soil, has the power of dissolving carbonate of lime, which it deposits again upon evaporation; stalactites are hence common in regions of limestone rocks. They are sometimes white, and nearly transparent, showing the broad cleavage-surfaces of the calcite, as those of the cave near Matanzas in Cuba; but commonly they have a granular structure with concentric bands of pale-yellow to brown colors. In some caverns the stalactites are very numerous and large, and of great beauty in their endless variety of form, especially in connection with the stalagmites, the corresponding depositions accumulated beneath the stalactites upon the floor of the caverns. The caves of Adelsberg in Carniola and of Luray in Virginia are among the most celebrated for the beauty of their stalactites.

The grotto is perfectly dry, and there are no petrifications or stalactites in it.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 41.

2. A similar form of some other mineral species, such as are occasionally observed, for example, of chalcedony, limonite, etc., but only sparingly and on a small scale.—3. A like form of lava sometimes observed in connection with volcanic outflows. Lava stalactites have been noted hanging from the roofs of lava caverns in the crater of Kilauea in Hawaii; and slender forms of a nearly uniform diameter of one fourth of an inch, and from a few inches to 20 or 30 inches in length, ornament the roofs of caverns in the lava stream which descended from Mauna Loa in the same island in 1881. Stalagmites of lava rise from the lava floor beneath.

stalactited (stā-lak'tī-ted), a. [< stalactite + -ed[2].] Covered with stalactites; also, formed in more or less semblance of stalactites. — Stalactited work. See rustic work, under rustic.

Stalactitic Structure of Limonite.

stalactitic (stal-ak-tit'ik), a. [< stalactite + -ic.] Containing stalactites; having the form of stalactites: as, in mineralogy, the stalactitic structure of limonite, chalcedony, and other species.

stalactitical (stal-ak-tit'i-kạl), a. [< stalactitic + -al.] Same as stalactitic.

stalactitiform (stā-lak'tī-ti-fôrm), a. [< NL. stalactites + L. forma, form.] Same as stalactiform.

stalagmite (stā-lag'mīt), n. [< F. stalagmite, < Gr. σταλαγμός, dropping or dripping, στάλαγμα, that which drops, < σταλάζειν, drop, let fall drop by drop: see stalactic.] Carbonate of lime deposited on the floor of a cavern. See stalactite.

stalagmitic (stal-ag-mit'ik), a. [< stalagmite + -ic.] Composed of stalagmite, or having its character.

stalagmitical (stal-ag-mit'i-kạl), a. [< stalagmitic + -al.] Stalagmitic in character or formation.

stalagmitically (stal-ag-mit'i-kạl-i), adv. In the form or manner of stalagmite.

stalagmometer (stal-ag-mom'e-tėr), n. [< Gr. σταλαγμός, a dropping or dripping (see stalagmite), + μέτρον, a measure.] Same as stactometer.

stalder† (stâl'dėr), n. [Prob. < Icel. stallr, a stall, pedestal, shelf, = Dan. stald, a stall: see stall[1].] A wooden frame to set casks on.

stale[1] (stāl), n. [Sc. also staill, steill, stall; < ME. stale, theft, a trap, < AS. stalu, theft (in comp. stæl-, as in stæl-hrān, a decoy reindeer, stælgæst, a thievish guest, stælhere, a predatory army) (= D. stal*, in dief-stal, theft, = G. stahl*, in dieb-stahl, theft), < stelan (pret. stæl), steal: see steal[1]. Cf. stalk[1].] 1†. Theft; stealing; pilfering.

Ine thcse heste is uorbode roberie, thiefthe, stale and gauel, and bargayn wyth othren.
Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 9.

2†. Stealth; stealthy movement. Old Eng. Homilies, I. 249.—3†. Concealment; ambush.

He stode in a stale to lie in waite for the relefe thst myght come from Calleis. Hall, Chron., Hen. IV., an. 12.

4†. A trap, gin, or snare.

Still as he went he crafty stales did lay,
With cunning traynes him to entrap unwares.
Spenser, F. Q., II. i. 4.

5†. An allurement; a bait; a decoy; a stool-pigeon: as, a stale for a foist or pickpocket.

Her ivory front, her pretty chin,
Were stales that drew me on to sin.
Greene, Penitent Palmer's Ode.

Why, thou wert but the bait to fish with, not
The prey; the stale to catch another bird with.
Beau. and Fl., Wit at Several Weapons, ii. 2.

They [the Bishops] suffer'd themselvs to be the common stales to countenance with their prostituted Gravities every Politick Fetch that was then on foot.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

6. An object of deception, scorn, derision, merriment, ridicule, or the like; a dupe; a laughing-stock. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Yon have another mistresse, go to her,
I will not be her stale.
The Shepheards Holyday, sig. G. i. (Halliwell.)

I pray you, sir, is it your will
To make a stale of me amongst these mates?
Shak., T. of the S., I. 1. 58.

A subject fit
To be the stale of laughter!
Ford, Love's Sacrifice, ii. 1.

stale[2] (stāl), n. [Also stail; also, with a pron. now different, steal, rarely steel, early mod. E. stele; < ME. stale, stele, < AS. stæl, stel, stalk, stem, = MD. stele, steel, stael, D. steel, stalk, stem, handle, = MLG. stel, stēl, a stalk, handle, LG. stale, a round of a ladder, = OHG. MHG. stil, G. stiel, a handle, broomstick, stalk; cf. L. stilus, a stake, pale, pointed instrument, stalk, stem, etc. (see style[2]); Gr. στελεόν, στειλειόν, a handle or helve of an ax, σταλίς, στήλη, an upright or standing slab (see stele[3]); akin to στέλλειν, set, place, and ult. to stall[1] and still[1], from the root of stand: see stand. Hence stalk[1].] 1†. A stalk; stem.

Weede hem wel, so wol thai wex(en) fele.
But forto hede hem greet trede downe the stele.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 209.

The stalke or steale thereof [of barley] is smaller than the wheat stalk, taller and stronger.
B. Gouge's Heresbachius, fol. 28.

2. The stem of an arrow.

A shaft [in archery] hath three principal parts, the stele, the feathers, and the head.
Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. 1864), p. 117.

3. A handle; especially, a long handle, as that of a rake, ladle, etc. [Prov. Eng.]

A ladel bygge with a long stele.
Piers Plowman (C), xxii. 279.

"Thereof," quod Absolon, "be as be may," . . .
And caughte the kultour by the colde stele.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 599.

4†. A round or rung of a ladder; a step.

This ilke laddre (that may to hevene leste) is charite,
The stales gode theawis.
Quoted in Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), Gloss., p. 196.

Wymmen vnwytté that wale ne conthe
That on hande fro that other, for alle this hyge worlde, Bitwene the stele and the stayre disserne nogt cunen.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), iii. 513.

stale[3] (stāl), a. and n. [< ME. stale, stale (applied to ale and beer); < OF. estale (Kilian), < MD. stel, old, ancient, applied to old and purified beer and to old urine (stel bier, stele pisse, Kilian; later written as compound, stelbier, stel-pisse, Hexham); origin uncertain; perhaps lit. 'still,' same as MD. stel, var. of stil, still (cf. still wine, etc.): see still[1]. According to Skéat, who associates the adj. with stale, urine, "stale is that which reminds one of the stable, tainted, etc."; he also suggests that stale in one sense may be 'too long exposed to sale,' < OF. estaler, display wares on stalls, < estal, a stall: see stall[1]. This explanation, however, fails to satisfy the conditions.] I. a. 1†. Old (and therefore strong): said of malt liquors, which in this condition were more in demand.

And notemnge to putte in ale,
Whether it be moyste or stale.
Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 53.

Nappy ale, good and stale, in a browne bowle.
The King and Miller of Mansfield (Child's Ballads, VIII. 36).

Two barrels of ale, both stout and stale,
To pledge that health was spent.
The Kings Disguise (Child's Ballads, V. 379).

2. Old and lifeless; the worse for age or for keeping; partially spoiled. (a) Insipid, flat, or sour; having lost its sparkle or life, especially from exposure to air: as, stale beer, etc. (b) Dry and crumbling; musty: as, stale bread.

That stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese.
Shak., T. and C., v. 4. 11.

3. Old and trite; lacking in novelty or freshness; hackneyed: as, stale news; a stale jest.

Fast bind, fast find;
A proverb never stale in thrifty mind.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 5. 55.

Your cold hypocrisy 'a a stale device.
Addison, Cato, i. 3.

4. In athletics, overtrained; injured by overtraining: noting the person or his condition. =Syn. 3. Time-worn, threadbare.

II. n. 1†. That which has become flat and tasteless, or spoiled by use or exposure, as stale beer. Hence—2†. A prostitute.

I stand dishonour'd, that have gone about
To link my dear friend to a common stale.
Shak., Much Ado, iv. 1. 67.

3. A stalemate.

Doe you not foresee, into what importable head-tearings and heart-searchings you will be ingulfed, when the Parliament shall give you a mate, though but a Stale?
N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 61.

stale[3] (stāl), v. t.; pret. and pp. staled, ppr. staling. [ME. stalen; < stale[3], a.] To render stale, flat, or insipid; deprive of freshness, attraction, or interest; make common or cheap.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety. Shak., A. and C., ii. 2. 240.

I'll go tell all the argument of his play afore-hand, and so stale his invention. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Ind.

Not content
To stale himself in all societies,
He makes my house here common as a mart.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. 1.

An imperial abdication was an event which had not, in the sixteenth century, been staled by custom.
Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 96.

stale[4] (stāl), v. i.; pret. and pp. staled, ppr. staling. [Appar. < D. G. stallen = Sw. stalla = Dan. stalle, urinate (said of horses and cattle); appar. a neuter use, lit. 'stand in stall,' parallel with the trans. use, D. G. stallen = Sw. stalla = Dan. stalle, put into a stall; from the noun, D. stal = G. stall = Sw. stall = Dan. stald, stall: see stall[1], n. The form is appar. irreg. (for stall*), and is perhaps due to confusion with stale[3], a., as applied to urine.] To make water; urinate: said of horses and cattle.

In that Moschee or Temple at Theke Thioi is a fountaine of water, which they say sprang vp of the staling of Chederles horse. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 311.

stale[4] (stāl), n. [See stale[4], v.] Urine of horses and cattle.

stale[5]†. An old preterit of steal[1].

stalely (stāl'li), adv. [< stale[3] + -ly[2].] In a stale, commonplace, or hackneyed manner; so as to seem flat or tedious.

Come, I will not sue stalely to be your servant,
But, a new term, will you be my refuge?
B. Jonson, Case is Altered, ii. 3.

stalemate (stāl'māt), n. [Prob. < stale[3] (but the first element is doubtful) + mate[3].] In chess, a position in which a player, having to move in his turn, and his king not being in check, has no move available with any piece: in such a case the game is drawn; figuratively, any position in which no action can be taken.

It would be disgraceful indeed if a great country like Russia should have run herself into such a stale-mate position. Contemporary Rev., L. 444.

stalemate (stāl'māt), v. t.; pret. and pp. stalemated, ppr. stalemating. [< stalemate, n.] 1. In chess, to subject to a stalemate: usually said of one's self, not of one's adversary: as, white is stalemated. Hence—2. To bring to a standstill; nonplus.

I had regularly stalemated him.
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. xviii.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said Fred, . . . "I like neither Bulstrode nor speculation." He spoke rather sulkily, feeling himself stalemated. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xli.

staleness (stāl'nes), n. The state of being stale, in any sense.

stalk[1] (stâk), v. [< ME. stalken, < AS. stælcan, stealcian, walk warily, = Dan. stalke, stalk: (a) lit. walk stealthily, steal along; with formative -k, from the root of stelan (pret. stæl), steal: see steal[1], and cf. stale[1], n. (b) In another view the AS. stælcan, stealcian, is connected with steale, high, and means 'walk high,' i. e. on tiptoe, being referred ult. to the same source as stalk[2], and perhaps stilt. For the form stalk as related to stale[1] (and steal[1]), cf. talk as related to tale (and tell).] I. intrans. 1. To walk cautiously or stealthily; steal along; creep.

In the night ful theefly gan he stalke.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1781.

The shadows of familiar things about him stalked like ghosts through the haunted chambers of his soul.
Longfellow, Hyperion, iv. 3.

2. To steal up to game under cover of something else; hunt game by approaching stealthily and warily behind a cover.

The king [James] alighted out of his coach, and crept under the shoulder of his led horse. And when some asked his Majesty what he meant, I must stalk (said he), for yonder town is shy and flies me.
Bacon, Apophthegms, published by Dr. Tenison in the [Baconiana, xl.

Dull stupid Lentulus,
My stale, with whom I stalk.
B. Jonson, Catiline, iii. 3.

3. To walk with slow, dignified strides; pace in a lofty, imposing manner.

Here stalks me by a proud and spangled sir,
That looks three handfuls [palms] higher than his foretop.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iii. 4.

II. trans. In sporting, to pursue stealthily, or behind a cover; follow warily for the purpose of killing, as game.

When a lion is very hungry, and lying in wait, the sight of an animal may make him commence stalking it.
Livingstone. (Imp. Dict.)

There came three men outside the hedge, . . . not walking carelessly, but following down the hedge-trough, as if to stalk some enemy.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xxxviii.

stalk[1] (stâk), n. [< stalk[1], v.] 1. The pursuit of game by stealthy approach or under cover.

I took up the trail of a large bull elk, and, though after a while I lost the track, in the end I ran across the animal itself, and after a short stalk got a shot at the noble-looking fellow. The Century, XXX. 224.

2. A high, proud, stately step or walk.

Twice before, and jump at this dead hour,
With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 1. 66.

But Milton next, with high and haughty stalks,
Unfettered in majestic numbers walks.
Addison, The Greatest English Poets, l. 56.

stalk[2] (stâk), n. [< ME. stalke; prob. a var. (due to association with the related stale[2]?) of stelk*, < Ieel. stilkr = Sw. stjelk = Dan. stilk, a stalk (cf. Gr. στέλεχος, the stem of a tree); with formative -k, from the simple form appearing in AS. stæl, stel, a handle, stale: see stale[2].] 1. The stem or main axis of a plant; that part of a plant which rises directly from the root, and which usually supports the leaves, flowers, and fruit: as, a stalk of wheat or hemp.

I had sometimes the curiosity to consider beans and peas pulled up out of the ground by the stalks, in order to an inquiry into their germination. Boyle, Works, III. 310.

Some naked Stalk, not quite decay'd,
To yield a fresh and friendly Bud essay'd.
Congreve, Tears of Amaryllis.

2. The pedicel of a flower or the peduncle of a flower-cluster (flower-stalk), the petiole of a leaf (leafstalk), the stipe of an ovary, etc., or any similar supporting organ; in mosses, a seta. —3†. A straw.

He kan wel in myn eye seen a stalke,
But in his owene he kan nat seen a balke.
Chaucer, Prol. to Reeve's Tale, l. 65.

4. In arch., an ornament in the Corinthian capital which resembles the stalk of a plant, and is sometimes fluted. From it the volutes or helices spring. Compare caulis and cauliculus. —5†. One of the upright side-pieces of a ladder, in which the rounds or steps are placed.

His owene hande made laddres thre
To clymben by the ronges and the stalkes
Into the tubbes, hangynge in the balkes.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 439.

6. The shaft or handle of anything, especially when slender, likened to the stalk of a plant; the stem: as, the stalk of a wine-glass; the stalk of a tobacco-pipe.—7. In zoöl., some part or organ like a stalk; a stem; a stipe. (a) A pedicel or peduncle; a footstalk; a supporting part: as, the stalk of some barnacles. (b) An eyestalk, as of various crustaceans and mollusks; an ophthalmite or ommatophore. (c) The petiole of the abdomen of many insects, especially hymenopters, as wasps and ants. (d) The stem, shaft, or rachis of a feather. (e) The stem of a fixed crinoid and of various other animals of plant-like habit, as rooted zoöphytes. 8. A tall chimney, as of a furnace, factory, or laboratory.

Twisted stalks of chimneys of heavy stonework.
Scott, Kenilworth, iii.

9. In founding, an iron rod armed with spikes, used to form the nucleus of a core. E. H. Knight.—Optic stalk. See optic.

stalk-borer (stâk'bōr*ˀ*ėr), n. The larva of Gortyna nitela, a noctuid moth of North America, which is noted as a pest to potato, corn, tomato, and a number of other plants. The larvæ bore into the stalks, killing them, and when full-grown leave the plant and pupate below ground.

stalk-cutter (stâk'kut*ˀ*ėr), n. In agri., a horse-power machine for cutting off old corn-stalks in the field preparatory to plowing. It consists of a series of revolving cylindrical cutters mounted in a suitable frame on wheels, and operated by means of gearing from the axles.

stalked (stâkt), a. [< stalk[2] + -ed[2].] Having a stalk or stem: as, a stalked barnacle or crinoid.

Innumerable crabs make a sound almost like the murmuring of water. Some are very large, with prodigious stalked eyes, and claws white as ivory.
Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 628.

stalker (stâ'kėr), n. [< stalk[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who stalks: as, a deer-stalker.—2. A kind of fishing-net.—3. pl. In ornith., specifically, the Gradatores.

stalk-eyed (stâk'īd), a. Having stalked eyes; podophthalmous, as a crustacean: opposed to a, a, the long eye-stalks.

A Stalk-eyed Crustacean (Ocypoda dilatata).

sessile-eyed. See also cuts under Podophthalmia, Gelasimus, Megalops, and schizopod-stage.

They all have their eyes set upon movable stalks, are termed the Podophthalmia, or stalk-eyed Crustacea.
Huxley, Crayfish, p. 279.

stalking (stâ'king), n. [Verbal n. of stalk[1], v.] In sporting, the act or method of approaching game quietly and warily or under cover, taking advantage of the inequalities of the ground, etc., as in deer-stalking.

stalking-horse (stâ'king-hôrs), n. 1. A horse, or a horse-like figure, behind which a fowler conceals himself on approaching game.

The stalking-horse, originally, was a horse trained for the purpose and covered with trappings, so as to conceal the sportsman from the game he intended to shoot at.
Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 98.

Hence—2. Anything put forward to conceal a more important object; a mask; a pretense.

Flattery is
The stalking-horse of policy.
Shirley, Maid's Revenge, ii. 3.

France suffered all the evils which exist when a despotic ruler is but the stalking-horse behind which stands the irresponsible power. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 826.

stalkless (stâk'les), a. [< stalk[2] + -less.] Having no stalk.

stalklet (stâk'let), n. [< stalk[2] + -let.] A diminutive stalk; especially, in bot., a secondary stalk; a pedicel or petiolule.

stalkoes (stâ'kōz), n. pl. [Cf. Ir. stalcaire, a lusty, robust fellow, a bully, also a fowler.] See the quotation.

Soft Simon had reduced himself to the lowest class of stalkoes, or walking gentlemen, as they are termed; men who have nothing to do, and no fortune to support them, but who style themselves esquire.
Miss Edgeworth, Rosanna, iii. (Davies.)

stalky (stâ'ki), a. [< stalk[2] + -y[1].] Formed like a stalk; resembling a stalk. Imp. Dict. [Rare.]

At the top [it] bears a great stalky head. Mortimer.

stall[1] (stâl), n. [< ME. stal, stall, stalle, stale, steal, < AS. steal (steall-), stæl, a station, stall, = OFries. stal, MD. D. MLG. stal = OHG. MHG. stal (stall-), G. stall = Icel. stallr = Sw. stall = Dan. stald (cf. It. stallo, stalla = OSp. estalo = OF. estal, F. étal, a stall, étau, a viec, = Pr. estal, < ML. stallum, a stall, < Teut.), a place, stall; akin to stool, stale[1], etc., and to Gr. στέλλειν, place, set, ult. from the root of stand, L. stare, Gr. ἱστάναι, Skt. √ sthā, stand: see stand. Hence stall[1], v., and ult. stale[4], stallion, etc., as well as stell: see these words.] 1†. A standing-place; station; position; place; room.

Gaheries . . . threwe down and slowgh and kepte at stall [kept his ground] a longe while, but in the fyn he mote yeve grounde a litill, ffor than the saisnes be-gonne to recover londe vpon hem. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 286.

Robyne Hode is euer bond to him,
Bothe in strete and stalle [that is, both outdoors and in].
Robin Hood and the Monk (Child's Ballads, V. 16).

2. A standing-place for horses or cattle; a stable or cattle-shed; also, a division of a stable, cow-house, or cattle-shed, for the accommodation of one horse or ox; the stand or place in a stable where a horse or an ox is kept and fed: as, the stable contains eight stalls.

But hye God som tyme senden can
His grace into a litel oxes stall.
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 251.

At last he found a stall where oxen stood.
Dryden, Cock and Fox, l. 223.

They bind their horses to the stall,
For forage, food, and firing call,
And various clamour fills the hall.
Scott, Marmion, iii. 2.

3. A booth, either in the open air or in a building, in which merchandise is exposed for sale, or in which some business or occupation is carried on: as, a buteher's stall.

"Vnkynde and vnknowing!" quath Crist, and with a rop smot hem,
And ouer-turnede in the temple here tables and here stalles. Piers Plowman (C), xix. 157.

4. A bench or table on which things are exposed for sale: as, a book-stall.

They are nature's coarser wares that lie on the stall, exposed to the transient view of every common eye.
Glanville.

5†. A seat or throne; a bench.

Thar als a god he sat in stall,
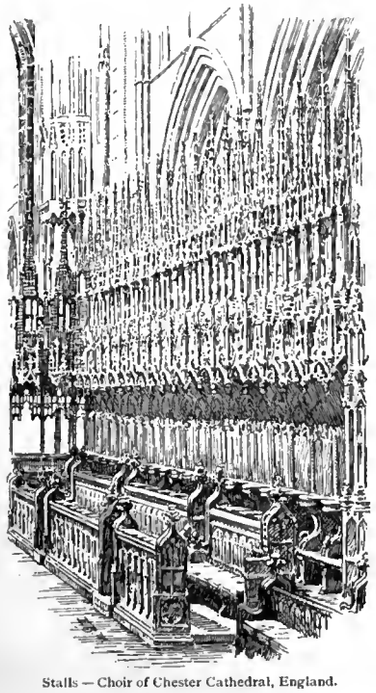
And so he had men suld him call.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 124.



Stalls — Choir of Chester Cathedral, England.

6. One of a range of fixed seats inclosed either wholly or in part at the back and sides, in the choir or chancel of a cathedral or church, and often surmounted by a richly sculptured canopy (see cut in preceding column): mostly appropriated for the clergy: as, a canon's stall; a dean's stall; hence, the position or dignity of canon.

New figures sat in the oaken stalls,
New voices chanted in the choir.
Longfellow, Golden Legend.

The choir is fitted up with a range of splendid cinquecento stalls. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 129.

7. In a theater, originally, a seat separated from others by arms or rails; now, usually, one of the seats in the front division of the parquet (sometimes called orchestra stalls); but the application of the term is variable. [Eng.]

The price of seats has enormously gone up. Where there were two rows of stalls at the same price as the dress circle — namely, four shillings — there are now a dozen at the price of half a guinea.
W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 126.

8. In metal., a chamber or compartment in which ores are roasted. See roast-stall.—9. A working-place in a coal-mine, varying in size and shape according to the system adopted. Also called chamber, room, breast, etc.—Post and stall, pillar and stall. Same as pillar and breast (which see, under pillar).—Prebendal stall. See prebendal.

stall[1] (stâl), v. [< ME. stallen, < AS. steallian, place, set, = Sw. stalla, put into a stall, = Dan. stalde, stall-feed, fatten, = MHG. G. stallen, stable, stall; from the noun. Cf. stell. Hence forestall, install, installation, etc.] I. trans. 1†. To place; set; fix; install.

Among foles of rigt he may he stallyd.
Book of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 83.

Stall this in your bosom. Shak., All's Well, i. 3. 131.

2. To place in an office with the customary formalities; induet into office; install.

And see another, as I see thee now,
Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 3. 206.

But in his State yer he [Josua] be stall'd (almost),
Set in the midst of God's beloved Hoast,
He thus dilates.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Captaines.

3. To put into or keep in a stall or stable: as, to stall a horse.

Where king Latinus then his oxen stall'd.
Dryden, Æneid, ix. 526.

4. To set fast in the mire; cause to stick in the mud; mire: as, to stall horses or a carriage.

Yet many times in many wordes haue been so stall'd and stabled as such sticking made me blushinglie confesse my ignorance. Florio, Ital. Dict., Epis. Ded., p. [5].

To pray alone, and reject ordinary meanes, is to do like him in Æsop, that when his cart was stalled, lay flat on his back, and cried aloud, Help, Hercules.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 222.

Mathematics he [the general artist] moderately studieth, to his great contentment. — Using it as ballast for his soul; yet to fix it, not to stall it.
Fuller, Holy State, II. vii. 6.

5. To corner; bring to bay; secure.

When as thine eye hath chose the dame,
And stall'd the deer that thou shouldst strike.
Shak., Passionate Pilgrim, l. 300.

6†. To forestall.

We are not pleased in this sad accident,
That thus hath stalled and abused our mercy,
Intended to preserve thee. B. Jonson, Sejanus, iii. 1.

7†. To fatten; fatten with stall-feeding.

It is tyme to stall your oxyn that you entend to sel after Ester. Palsgrave. (Halliwell.)

Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith. Prov. xv. 17.

8†. To postpone the payment of; forbear to claim payment for a time; allow to be paid by instalments.

That he might not be stuck on ground, he petition'd that his Majesty would stall his fine, and take it up, as his estate would bear it, by a thousand pounds a year.
Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, ii. 128. (Davies.)

To be stalled to the rogue†, to be formally received into the order of rogues; be installed or initiated as a rogue.

This done, the Grand Signior called for a Gage of Bowse, which belike signified a quart of drinke, for presently, a pot of Ale being put into his hand, hee made the yong Squire kneele downe, and powring the full pot on his pate, vttered these wordes: I doe stall thee to the Rogue by vertue of this soueraigne English liquor, so that henceforth it shall be lawfull for thee to Cant — that is to say, to be a Vagabond and Beg. Dekker, Belman of London (1608).

II. intrans. 1†. To come to a stand; take up a position.

And ther thei stalleden and foughten the ton vpon the tother till thei were bothe wery for travaile.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 161.

2†. To live as in a stall; dwell; inhabit.

We could not stall together
In the whole world. Shak., A. and C., v. 1. 39.

3. To stick or be set fast in the mire.—4. To kennel, as dogs. Johnson.—5. To be tired of eating, as cattle. Imp. Dict.

stall[2] (stâl), n. [A var. of stale[1], a decoy, etc., appar. confused with stall[1].] 1†. An ambush.

The great Prince Bias, . . . when he happened to fall into the stall of his enimies, and his souldiours beganne to crie What shall we dee? he made aunswere: that you make reporte to those that are aline that I die fighting, and I will say there to the dead that you scapte flying.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 42.

2†. A stale; a stalking-horse; cover; mark; pretext.

This tyranny
Is strange, to take mine ears up by commission (Whether I will or no), and make them stalls
To his lewd solecisms and worded trash.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, iii. 1.

3. A stool-pigeon; a thief's (especially a pickpocket's) assistant, whose rôle it is to divert the attention of the victim while the thief operates, to conceal the crime, assist the escape of the thief, make off with the booty, or perform similar offices. He is called fore-stall or back-stall according to his position before or behind the victim.

stallage (stâ'lāj), n. [Formerly also (Sc.) stallenge, < ME. stallage (?) (ML. stallagium, estallagium), < OF. estallage, estalage, < estal, stall: see stall[1], n., and -age. Cf. stallinger.] 1. The right of erecting stalls at fairs; rent paid for a stall.

The citizens of Hereford fined, in the second year of Henry III., in a hundred marks and two palfreys, to have the king's charter, . . . that they might be quit throughout England of toll and lastage, of passage, pontage, and stallage, and of leve, and danegeld, and gaywite, and all other customs and exactions.
S. Dowell, Taxes in England, I. 26.

2†. Laystall; dung; compost.

stallandt, stallantt, n. Early modern English forms of stallion.

stallangert, n. Same as stallinger.

stallationt (stâ-lā'shon), n. [< ML. stallatio(n-)*, < stallare, install, < stallum, place, stall: see stall[1], n. Cf. installation.] Installation.

As for dilapidacion, I vnderstond the house [Abbey of Hulme] was endetted at the tyme of his stallacion in grete somes of mony.
Duke of Suffolk, To Cardinal Wolsey, in Ellis's Hist. Letters, 3d ser., I. 201.

stall-board (stâl'bōrd), n. One of a series of floors upon which soil or ore is pitched successively in excavating.

staller (stâ'lèr), n. [< OF. estallier, estalier, estaillier, one who keeps a stall, < estal, a stall: see stall[1].] 1. A hostler; a master of the horse.

The King's dish-thegn, his bower-thegn, his horse-thegn or staller, all became great dignitaries of the Kingdom. E. A. Freeman, Norman Conquest, I. 60.

2†. A standard-bearer.

Tovy, a man of great wealth and authority, as being the king's staller (that is, standard-bearer), first founded this town. Fuller, Waltham Abbey, i. § 5.

stall-fed (stâl'fed), a. Fattened, as oxen, by feeding in a stable or on dry fodder.

You shall have stall-fed doctors, crammed divines.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, i. 2.

stall-feed (stâl'fēd), v. t. To feed and fatten in a stall or stable, or on dry fodder.

If you were for the fair, you should be stall-fed, and want no weal.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 112.

stalling (stâ'ling), n. [Verbal n. of stall[1], v.] Stabling.

Hire us some fair chamber for the night,
And stalling for the horses. Tennyson, Geraint.

stallinger (stâ'lin-jèr), n. [Formerly also stallanger (ML. stallangiarius); with intrusive n, < stallage + -er[1]. Cf. passenger, messenger, wharfinger, etc.] One who keeps a stall. [Local, Eng. or Scotch.]

Vacancies among the Stallingers are filled up in like manner from the inhabitants of the town.
Municip. Corp. Report, 1835, p. 1734.

stalling-kent (stâ'ling-ken), n. A house for receiving stolen goods. Dekker. [Old slang.]

A Stawling-ken that is knowne of purpose to be trusty, yea and that in the night too, least they be notified and suspected to be scandalizing of the profession.
Rowlands, Hist. Rogues, quoted in Ribton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 585.

stallion (stal'yon), n. [Early mod. E. also stalion, stallon*, stalland, stallant, stalant, stalon; < ME. stalyone, stalon, stalun, < OF. estalon, F. étalon = It. stallone (ML. reflex stalonus), a stallion, in ML. also called equus ad stallum, 'a horse at stall,' so called because kept in a stall, < stallum, a stall, stable: see stall[1].] The male of the horse; an entire horse; a horse kept for breeding purposes.

stallman (stâl′măn), n.; pl. stallmen (-men). [< stall[1] + man.] A man who keeps a stall, as for the sale of meat, books, or other commodities.

The stallman saw my father had [a strong fancy] for the book the moment he laid his hands upon it.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iii. 35. (Latham.)

stallon†, n. [< ME. stalon, < OF. estalon, estallon, estelon, estolon, a stick, post, staddle, stander, appar. < L. stolo(n-), a shoot, twig, branch, scion, sucker.] A slip; a cutting; a scion. Holinshed.

In stalons forth thei sette
Her seede, and best for hem is solute lande.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 113.

stall-plate (stâl′plāt), n. A plate of gilded copper upon which are engraved the arms of a Knight of the Garter (see garter-plate), or of a Knight or Esquire (Companion) of the Bath.

The stall-plates of the Knights of the Bath are fixed in the upper row of stalls in the Chapel of Henry VII. at Westminster, and those of the Esquires of the Bath in the lower row.

stall-reader (stâl′rē″dėr), n. One who reads books at the stall where they are sold.

Cries the stall-reader, "Bless us! what a word on stalon[1]†, n. A Middle English form of stallion.
A title page is this!" Milton, Sonnets, vi.

stalon[2]†, n. An old spelling of stallon.

stalwart (stâl′wart), a. and n. [Prop. a Sc. form of stalworth, with assimilation of the vowel of the second element to that of the first, and an alteration, perhaps orig. dialectal, of the orig. final sequence -rth to -rt (as, conversely, orig. -rt changes to -rth in swarth, swarthy): see stalworth.] I. a. 1. Stout; strong: applied to inanimate objects. [Scotch.]—2. Hard; severe. [Scotch.]—3. Stormy; tempestuous. [Scotch.]—4. Stout; sturdy; strong; bold; brave. See stalworth. [Scotch; now also the form regularly used in Eng. and U. S.]

It's neer be said, my stalwart feres,
We kill'd him whan a sleiping.
Sir James the Rose (Child's Ballads, III. 75).

Of the European sailors, by far the most reliable were five stalwart A. B.s. Chambers's Journal, No. 627.

5. Sturdy and steadfast in partizanship: in U. S. politics [cap.], noting various sections of the Republican party. See the phrase.

The epithet Stalwart as applied to a class of politicians was first used by Mr. Blaine in 1877 to designate those Republicans who were unwilling to give up hostility and distrust of the South as a political motive. In the present contest at Albany it has by a curious transformation been appropriated by the followers of Mr. Conkling to distinguish politicians faithful to his Machine.
The Nation, June 16, 1881.

Stalwart Republican, in U. S. hist., a decided or thorough-going member of the Republican party; specifically, a member of that wing of the Republican party in the State of New York which in 1880 advocated the renomination of Grant as President for a third term and in 1881 supported Roscoe Conkling in his opposition to the administration of Garfield, and antagonized the "Half-Breeds" in 1881 and following years.=Syn. 4. Stout, Sturdy, etc. (see robust), sinewy, brawny, muscular, strapping, powerful, valorous, resolute.

II. n. 1. A strong or sturdy person.

His opinion is not favourable, Emin's stalwarts, whose praises had been so loudly trumpeted in Europe, proving to be for the most part brutal ruffians and abject cravens in the presence of danger. The Academy, Jan. 3, 1891.

2. A stout and steadfast partizan; specifically [cap.], same as Stalwart Republican. See above.

stalwarth†, a. Same as stalworth, stalwart.

stalwartism (stâl′wart-izm), n. [< stalwart + -ism.] In U. S. politics, the principles or policy of the Stalwarts; partizan devotion. The Nation, Nov. 27, 1879, p. 355.

stalwartly (stâl′wart-li), adv. [< stalwart + -ly[2]. Cf. stalworthly.] In a stalwart manner; stoutly; bravely.

stalwartness (stâl′wart-nes), n. Stalwart character or quality; stnrdiness; stoutness; strength. Athenæum, Jan. 14, 1888, p. 57.

stalworth (stâl′wėrth), a. [Early mod. E. also stalwoorth, stalworthe; < ME. stalworth, stalword, stalworthe, stalwurthe, staleworthe, stalewurthe, stelewurthe, stealewurthe, also stalworthy, stawurthy (see stalworthy), < AS. stælwyrthe, found only once, in pl. stælwyrthe, in the sense 'good' or 'serviceable,' applied to ships; a compound peculiar to AS.: (a) prob. a contraction of statholwyrthe*, lit. 'steadfast,' 'well-based,' 'firm-set,' etc., hence 'stout,' < stathol, stathel, foundation, base, seat, site, position, E. staddle, Sc. also contracted stale, stail (cf. AS. stælan, contracted from statholian, found, establish), + wyrthe, weorth, wurth, good, excellent, worth: see staddle and worth[2]. Cf. the equiv. statholfæst, steadfast, firm, stable (< stathol, foundation, + fæst, firm, fast), and stedefæst, E. steadfast (the AS. weorth and fæst as the second element of adj. compounds being used rather as adj. formatives than as independent words). Such contraction is not common in AS., and the form stælwyrthe has generally been otherwise explained: (b) < stalu (in comp. stæl-), stealing, theft, + weorth, wurth, worth, worthy (see stale[1] and worth[2]), but the sense 'worthy of theft,' 'worth stealing,' hence 'worth taking for use' ("captu dignæ," Gibson), cannot apply to men, and the sense 'good at stealing,' suggested by some, even if it were etymologically admissible, could not apply to ships. (c) In another view, lit. 'worthy of place,' i. e. fit for its place or use, serviceable, < AS. steal, steall, also sometimes, esp. in comp., stæl, a place, stall, + weorth, wurth, worth, worthy (see stall[1] and worth[2]). The full form stall- occurs in ME. stallworthely, a var. of stalworthly, and in the mod. surname Stallworthy. In any view, the ME. forms staleworth, stalewurthe, stelewurthe, stealewurthe, with medial e, must be regarded as irregular. In fact the orig. meaning of the compound appears to have been lost, and the ME. variations must be due to simulation of one or other of the words above considered. Hence, by further variation, stalwarth, and now stalwart, which is no longer regarded as a compound.] 1†. Steadfast; firm-based.

That stalworthe sted [Constantinople] so strong was founded,
Philip hoped that holde with his help to wynne.
Alisaunder of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 1230.

Steken the 3ates stonharde with stalworth barrer.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 884.

2. Stout; strong; sturdy: used of things and men or animals, in a merely physical sense. [Archaic.]

A hoge hathel for the nonez & of hyghe elde; . . .
Sturne stif on the stryththe on stalworth schonkez [shanks].
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 847.

And his strengthe schal be maad stalworthe [et roborabitur fortitudo ejus, Vulg.]. Wyclif, Dan. viii. 24.

His stalworth steed the champion stout bestrode.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, vii. 27. (Nares.)

3. Stout; sturdy; brave; bold: noting men, with reference to strength and courage. [Archaic.]

A man that es yhang and light,
Be he never swa stalworth and wyght.
Hampole, Prick of Conscience, l. 689.

Well by his visage you might know
He was a stalworth knight, and keen.
Scott, Marmion, i. 5.

stalworthhead†, n. [ME. stalworthhede; < stalworth + -head.] Same as stalworthness.

stalworthly†, adv. [< ME. stalworthly, stallworthly, stalwurthly; < stalworth + -ly[2].] Stoutly; sturdily; strongly.

Scho strenyde me so stallworthely [var. stalleworthely, Halliwell] that I had no mouthe to speke, ne no hande to styrre. Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 6.

I rede we ryde to Newe Castell,
So styll and stalwurthlye.
Battle of Otterbourne (Percy's Reliques, I. i. 2).

stalworthness† (stâl′wėrth-nes), n. [< ME. stalworthnes; < stalworth + -ness.] Sturdiness; stalwartness.

The sexte vertue es strengthe or stalworthness noghte onely of body but of herte, and wille evynly to suffre the wele and the waa, welthe or wandrethe, whethire so betyde. MS. Lincoln, A. i. 17, f. 217. (Halliwell, s. v. wandrethe.) stalworthy†, a. [< ME. stalworthy, stawurthy: see stalworth.] Same as stalworth.

stalwurthet, stalwurthly†. See stalworth, stalworthly.

stam[1]†, n. An obsolete form of stem[1].

stam[2] (stam), v. t.; pret. and pp. stammed, ppr. stamming. [Cf. stem[3].] To amaze; confound. [Prov. Eng.]

stam[2] (stam), n. [< stam[2], v.] Confusion.

O, then, in what a stam
Was theevish, barb'rous, love-sicke, angrie minde.
Lisle's Historie of Heliodorus (1638). (Nares.)

stamber (stam′bėr), r. A dialectal form of stammer.

stambha (stam′bä), n. [Skt., a prop, post, column, < √ stambh, make firm, prop: see stamp.] Same as lat[6].

One or two stambhas stood in front of or beside each gateway of every great tope, and one or two in front of each chaitya hall. J. Fergusson, Hist. Indian Arch., p. 55.

stamel†, n. Same as stammel.

stamen (stā′men), n.; pl. stamens (stā′menz) (only, in the fourth sense) or (in the other three senses) stamina (stam′i-nä). [< L. stamen, the warp in the (npright) loom, a thread hanging from the distaff, in gen. a thread, string, fiber, a stamen of a flower (cf. MGr. στῆμα, a stamen, Gr. στήμων, the warp in the loom, a thread as spun); < stare = Gr. ἱστασθαι (στῆναι), stand: see stand. Cf. stamen[2], stamin.] 1. The warp in the ancient upright loom at which the weaver stood upright instead of sitting; a thread of the warp; a thread.—2. pl. The supports or mainstays of a body; the fixed, firm part of a body, which supports it or gives it its strength and solidity: as, the bones are the stamina of animal bodies; the ligneous parts of trees are stamina which constitute their strength.

Some few of the main stamina, or chief lines, were taken care of from the first, and made up the first creeds.
Waterland, Works, IV. 309.

Hence—3. [Pl. stamina, now sometimes used as sing.] Whatever constitutes the principal strength or support of anything; power of endurance; staying power; lasting strength or vigor.

I indeed think her stamina could not last much longer; when I saw her she could take no nourishment.
Swift, To Dr. Sheridan, July 27, 1726.

Old English half pint bumpers, my dear—Zounds, sir! they try a fellow's stamina at once.
Macklin, Man of the World, iii. 1.

She had run through all the stamina of constitution nature had allotted her, and died of old-age, in youth.
Sydney Smith, To Lady Holland, Feb. 2, 1816.

4. In bot., the male or fertilizing organ of flowering plants. It is situated immediately within the inner circle of floral envelops, or petals when they are present, and consists of two parts, the filament, which is the stalk or support, and the anther, which is a double Stamens.

1 Of Isopyrum biternatum (a, the anther; c, the connective; f, the filament). 2. Of Oryza sativa. 3. Of Liriodendron Tulipifera. 4. Of Allium Porrum. 5. Of Rosmarinus officinalis. 6. Of Berberis Canadensis. 7. Of Vaccinium Myrtillus. 8. Syngenesious stamens of Carduus crispus. 9. Monadelphous stamens of Nopæa dioica. 10. Diadelphous stamens of Genista tinctoria. 11. Tetradynamous stamens of Erysimum cheiranthoides. 12. Didynamous stamens of Thymus Serpyllum. 13. Stamen in gynandrous flower of Epipactis palustris. 14 Transverse section of the anther of Isopyrum, showing the dehiscence and the pollen-grains.

sac or body of two cells placed side by side and filled with a powdery substance, the pollen. This pollen, when mature, is discharged from the anther through various openings or pores. Theoretically the stamen is the homologue of a leaf, in which the two cells of the anther represent the infolded halves of the blade, while the connective represents the midrib and the filament the petiole of the leaf. The pollen represents the parenchyma of the leaf. The stamens of a flower are collectively called the androecium. When both stamens and pistils are present in the same flower it is said to be hermaphrodite or perfect; when only stamens are present the flower is said to be staminate or male. The number of stamens varies in different plants from one to one hundred or more, but is generally constant for the same species, and forms an important element in the system of classification. The classes in the Linnean sexnal system were based upon the number and position of the stamens; and in the natural system they are still an important factor. In regard to their insertion, stamens may be hypogynous, epigynous, or perigynous, or the flower may be gynandrous (see these words). See also cuts under anther, anthophore, diadelphous, epigynous, extrorse, introrse, and many plant-names.—Barren stamen. Same as sterile stamen.—Included stamens. See include.—Stamina of reason, first truths.—Sterile stamen, in bot., an organ or body which belongs to the series of stamens, or androecium, but which does not produce pollen; an imperfect stamen, as that produced by certain plants of the family Scrophulariaceæ; a staminodium.

The Unequal Stamens of Lagerstræmia Indica, the flower cut longitudinally.

stamened (stā′mend), a. [< stamen + -ed[2].] Furnished with stamens.

stamin[1]†, staminet (stam′in), n. [< ME. stamin, stamyn, < OF. estamine, F. étamine, < ML. stamina, staminea, stamineum (also stamina, after OF.), a woolen cloth, bolting-cloth, < L. stamineus, consisting of threads, < stamen, a thread, fiber (> OF. estame = It. stame, yarn, worsted): see stamen. Hence, by irreg. variation, stammel, tamin, tamine, taminy, tammy, tamis.] A woolen cloth, or linsey-woolsey. It is mentioned as a cloth for common wear; but its cost was not so low as to indicate the coarsest kind of cloth. In the quotation apparently a tapestry.

She had ywoven in a stamin [var. stames] large
How she was broght from Athenes in a barge.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2360.

stamin[2]†, n. [ME. stamyne, appar. a var. of stem[1], < AS. stemn = Icel. stafn, stamn, a post, post of the prow or stem; cf. It. stamine, the upright ribs or pieces of timber of the inside of a ship; perhaps < L. stamen (stamin-), the warp of a loom, etc. (see stamen, stamin[1]), otherwise < G. stamm, etc., stem: see stem[1].] The stem of a vessel. Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3659.

stamina, n. Latin plural of stamen, sometimes used as a singular (see stamen, 3).

staminal (stam'i-nal), a. [< L. stamen (-in-), a stamen, + -al.] Same as staminean.

staminate (stam'i-nāt), a. [< L. staminatus, consisting of threads (NL. furnished with stamens), < stamen, a thread, stamen: see stamen.] In bot.: (a) Furnished with or producing stamens. (b) Producing stamens, but no pistils: said of certain flowers.

staminate (stam'i-nāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. staminated, ppr. staminating. [< L. stamen (stamin-), fiber (see stamen), + -ate[2].] To endue with stamina.

staminet†, n. See stamin[1].

stamineal (stā-min'ē-al), a. [< L. stamineus, full of threads (see staminean), + -al.] Same as staminean.

staminean (stā-min'ē-us), a. [< L. stamineus, full of threads, thready, < stamen (-in-), a thread, stamen: see stamen.] Consisting of, bearing, or pertaining to a stamen or stamens.

staminidium† (stam-i-nid'i-um), n.; pl. staminidia (-ä). [NL., < L. stamen (-in-), a thread, stamen, + Gr. dim. -ίδιον.] The antheridium, an organ in cryptogamic plants corresponding to a stamen.

staminiferous (stam-i-nif'ē-rus), a. [< L. stamen (-in-), a thread, stamen, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Bearing or having stamens. A staminiferous flower is one which has stamens without a pistil. A staminiferous nectary is one that has stamens growing on it.

staminigerous (stam-i-nij'ē-rus), a. [< L. stamen (-in-), a thread, stamen, + gerere, carry.] Same as staminiferous.

staminode (stam'i-nōd), n. [< NL. staminodium.] Same as staminodium.

staminodium (stam-i-nō'di-um), n. [NL., < L. stamen (-in-), a thread, stamen, + Gr. εἶδος, form.] A sterile or abortive stamen, or an organ resembling an abortive stamen. Also called parastemon.

The Flower of Scrophularia nodosa, laid open to show the staminodium (St). a, the staminodium.

staminody (stam'i-nō-di), n. [< NL. staminodia*, < L. stamen, a thread, stamen, + εἶδος, form.] In bot., a condition, frequent in flowers, in which various organs are metamorphosed into stamens. Bracts, sepals, petals, and pistils may be thus transformed. Compare sepalody, petalody, pistilody. See metamorphosis, 4.

stamm (stam), n. [Origin obscure.] In the game of solo, a pool of sixteen chips. The American Hoyle.

stammel[1]† (stam'el), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also stamel, stamell; a var. of stamin[1].] I. n. 1. A kind of woolen cloth, of a red color: red linsey-woolsey: probably same as stamin[1].

In sommer vse to were a scarlet petyeote made of stamell or lynse wolse. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 248.

Now in satin,
To-morrow next in stammel.
Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, ii. 1.

Hence—2. The color of stammel: a red inferior in brilliancy to scarlet.

Karsies of all orient colours, specially of stamell.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 440.

The Violet's purple, the sweet Rose's stammell,
The Lillie's snowe, and Pansey's various ammell.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 3.

II. a. Of or pertaining to stammel or its hue; red; made of stammel.

But the wench in the stammel waistcoat is stopping too, Adam . . . they are going to dance! Frieze-jacket wants to dance with stammel-waistcoat, but she is coy and recusant. Scott, Abbot, xix.

stammel[2] (stam'el), n. [Origin obscure.] A large, clumsy horse. Wright. [Prov. Eng.]

stammer (stam'ėr), v. [E. dial. also stamber; < ME. stameren = D. stameren, stamelen = OHG. stammalōn, stamalōn, MHG. stameln, stammeln, G. stammern, stammeln, stammer; a freq. verb, associated with AS. stamer, stamor, stamur, stomer = OHG. stamal, stammal, adj., stammering, and equiv. to the simple verb, Icel. Sw. stamma, Dan. stamme, stammer, from the adj. appearing in OHG. stam, G. stumm, mute, = Icel. stamr = Goth. stamms, stammering; perhaps connected with stem[3], obstruct, etc.: see stem[3], and cf. stam[2]. Cf. also stumble.] I. intrans. 1. To hesitate or falter in speaking; hence, to speak with involuntary breaks and pauses.

His hew shal falewen,
& his tonge shal stameren, other famelen.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 224.

The Psythian grape we dry: Lagean juice
Will stammering tongues and staggering feet produce.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, ii. 133.

The new strong wine of love,
That made my tongue so stammer and trip.
Tennyson, Maud, vi.

2. To stumble or stagger. [Prov. Eng.]

Stamerynge in goyng, idem quod stakerynge, waverynge.
Prompt. Parv., p. 472.

=Syn. 1. Falter, Stammer, Stutter. He who falters weakens or breaks more or less completely in utterance; the act is occasional, not habitual, and for reasons that are primarily moral, belong to the occasion, and may be various. He who stammers has great difficulty in uttering anything; the act may be occasional or habitual; the cause is confusion, shyness, timidity, or actual fear; the result is broken and inarticulate sounds that seem to stick in the mouth, and sometimes complete suppression of voice. He who stutters makes sounds that are not what he desires to make; the act is almost always habitual, especially in its worst forms; the cause is often excitement; the result is a quick repetition of some one sound that is initial in a word that the person desires to utter, as c-c-c-e-catch.—Stammering bladder, a bladder whose muscles act irregularly and spasmodically, causing painful urination. Paget.

II. trans. To utter or pronounce with hesitation or imperfectly; especially, to utter with involuntary breaks or catches: frequently with out.

His pale lips faintly stammered out a "No."
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xxxiii.

stammer (stam'ėr), n. [< stammer, v.] Defective utterance; a stutter: as, to be troubled with a stammer. See stammering.

stammerer (stam'ėr-ėr), n. [< stammer + -er[1].] One who stammers or stutters in speaking.

stammering (stam'ėr-ing), n. [< ME. stamerynge; verbal n. of stammer, v.] Hesitating speech; imperfect articulation; stuttering.

stammeringly (stam'ėr-ing-li), adv. With stammering; with stops or hesitation in speaking.

stamnos (stam'nos), n.; pl. stamnoi (-noi). [< Gr. στάμνος (see def.), < ἱστάναι, cause to stand, ἱστασθαι, stand: see stand.] In Gr. archæol., a large water- or wine-vase closely resembling the hydria, but generally with a shorter neck, and provided merely with the two small handles on the sides of the paunch, the larger handle behind being absent. Sometimes called olla.—Apulian stamnos, in Gr. archæol., a type of stamnos of peculiar shape, having the handles on the shoulders prolonged upward in large volutes, and the cover often surmounted by a vase of the same shape. It is called Apulian from the province or region where most examples are found. Often called, less correctly, Apulian crater.

Typical form of Stamnos.

Apulian Stamnos, in the Museo Nazionale, Naples.

stamp (stamp), v. [Also dial. stomp; < ME. stampen, a var. (due to LG. or Scand. influence) of stempen*, < AS. stempan = MD. stempen, stampen, D. stampen = MLG. stampen = OHG. stampfōn, MHG. stampfen, G. stampfen = Icel. stappa (for stampa*) = Sw. stampa = Dan. stampe (cf. It. stampare = Sp. Pg. estampar = OF. estamper, F. étamper, < Teut.), stamp, = Gr. στέμβειν, stamp, shake, agitate, misuse (akin to στείβειν, stamp on, tread, στέμφυλον, olives or grapes from which the oil or juice has been pressed), = Skt. √stambh, make firm or steady, prop.] I. trans. 1. To crush or bruise with or as with a pestle; pound or bray as in a mortar; pound; bruise; crush: as, to stamp ores in a stamping-mill.

Thise cokes, how they stampe and streyne and grynde!
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale, l. 76.

They put the water into large jarres of stone, stirring it about with a few stampt Almonds.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 78.

2. To strike or beat with a forcible downward thrust of the foot.

Under my feet I stamp thy cardinal's hat.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 3. 49.

He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., i. 446.

3. To cause to strike the ground with a sudden or impetuous downward thrust.

Red Battle stamps his foot, and nations feel the shock.
Byron, Childe Harold, i. 38.

4. To impress a design or distinctive mark or figure upon; mark with an impression or design: as, to stamp plate with arms; to stamp letters; to stamp butter.

The Romanes were wont heretofore to stampe their coynes of gold and silver in this city.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 59.

Egmont dined at the Regent's table, . . . in a camlet doublet, with hanging sleeves, and buttons stamped with the bundle of arrows. Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 403.

Hence—5. To certify and give validity or currency to by marking with some mark or impression; coin; mint.

We pay . . . for it with stamped coin, not stabbing steel.
Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 747.

6. Figuratively, to brand or stigmatize as being of a specified character; declare to be.

Dares stamp nothing false where he finds nothing sure.
M. Arnold, Empedocles on Etna.

7. To imprint; impress; fix deeply: as, to stamp one's name on a book; an event stamped on one's memory.

If ever I an Hope admit Without thy Image stampt on it.
Cowley, The Mistress, The Soul.

God has stamped no original characters on our minds wherein we may read his being. Locke.

8. To characterize; mark.

They [Macaulay's articles] are characterized by many of the qualities of heart and mind which stamp the productions of an Edinburgh reviewer.
Whipple, Ess. and Rev., I. 12.

9. To affix a stamp (as a postage- or receipt-stamp) to: as, to stamp a letter or a newspaper.—10. To cut, or cut into various forms, with a stamp: in this sense often with out: as, to stamp out circles and diamonds from a sheet of metal.—Stamped envelop. See envelop.—Stamped in the blind. See blind[1].—Stamped velvet, velvet or velveteen upon which a pattern has been impressed by hot irons which leave a surface more or less lowered from the pile according to the amount of pressure applied, etc. In some cases the surface of the impressed pattern is brought to a smooth gloss. This material is used chiefly for upholstery.—Stamped ware. Same as sigillated ware (which see, under sigillated). Solon, The Old Eng. Potter, p. xiii.—Stamped work, metal-work decorated by means of dies and punches.—To stamp out, to extinguish, as fire, by stamping on with the foot; hence, to extirpate; eradicate by resorting to vigorous measures; suppress entirely; exterminate: as, to stamp out disease which has broken out among cattle by killing the whole herd; to stamp out an insurrection.

II. intrans. To strike the foot forcibly downward.

A ramping fool, to brag and stamp and swear.
Shak., K. John, iii. 1. 122.

stamp (stamp), n. [OHG. stampf, stampf, MHG. stampf, a stamping-instrument, a stamp (> F. estampe = It. stampa, a stamp); in dim. form, MLG. LG. stempel = OHG. stempfil, MHG. stempfel, G. (after LG.) stempel = Sw. stämpel = Dan. stempel, a stamp; from the verb.] 1. An instrument for crushing, bruising, or pounding; specifically, in metal., that part of the machinery of a stamp-mill which rises and falls, and which delivers the blow by which the ore is reduced to the necessary fineness for being further treated for the separation of the valuable portion; by extension, the mill itself. The stamp consists of head and stem, the latter having upon it the tappet by which, through the agency of the cam or wiper which projects from an axis turned by steam- or water-power, it is raised.

There are 340 stamps in operation at Butte, and the amount of ore treated every day amounts to 500 tons.
Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 596.

2. An instrument for making impressions on other bodies; an engraved block, die, or the like, by which a mark may be made or delivered by pressure; specifically, a plate upon which is cut the design for the sides or back of a book.—3. A hand-tool for cutting blanks from paper, leather, etc., in various patterns, according to the shape of the cutting-edges. It operates by pressure or a direct blow, or is laid on the material and struck with a hammer. Hand-stamps are used for canceling, bating, embossing, eyeleting, and similar work.

4. A forcible or impetuous downward thrust or blow: as, he emphasized his order with a stamp of the foot.—5. An impression or mark made with a stamp; an impressed or embossed mark or pattern; particularly, an impressed mark used to certify something, or give validity or currency to it: as, the stamp on a coin; the stamp on a certified check.

> What boots it to be coin'd
> With Heav'n's own stamp?
> Quarles, Emblems, v. 12.

That sacred name [the king's] gives ornament and grace; And, like his stamp, makes basest metals pass.
Dryden, Prol. at Opening of the New House, l. 33.

The rank is but the guinea stamp. Burns, For a' that.

Specifically—(a) An official mark set upon a thing chargeable with duty or tax showing that the duty or tax is paid. (b) The impression of a public mark or seal required by the British government for revenue purposes to be made by its officers upon the paper or parchment on which deeds, legal instruments, bills of exchange, receipts, checks, insurance policies, etc., are written, the fee for the stamp or stamped paper varying with the nature of the instrument or the amount involved. (See stamp-duty.) For receipts, foreign bills of exchange, and agreements, adhesive stamps may be used, but in general the stamp must be embossed or impressed. (c) A small piece of paper having a certain figure or design impressed upon it, sold by the government to be attached to goods, papers, letters, documents, etc., subject to duty, or to some charge as for postage, in order to show that such duty or charge has been paid: as, postage-stamps; receipt-stamps; internal-revenue stamps.

6. pl. Stamp-duties: as, the receiver of stamps and taxes. See stamp-duty.—7. pl. Money: so called in allusion to the use of postage-stamps and small paper notes ("shinplasters") as money. [Slang, U. S.]—8†. That which is marked; a thing stamped; a medal.

> Hanging a golden stamp about their necks.
> Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3. 153.

9†. A coin, especially one of small value.

> Ric. Oh, cruel, merciless woman,
> To talk of law, and know I have no money.
> Val. I will consume myself to the last stamp,
> Before thou gett'st me.
> Middleton (and others), The Widow, ii. 1.

10†. A picture cut in wood or metal, or made by impression; an engraving; a plate or cliché.

He that will not onely reade, but in manner see, the most of these exploits of the Hollanders, with other rarities of the Indies, may resort to Theodoricke and Israel de Bry, who haue in liuely stampes expressed these Nauigations. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 463.

When I was at Venice, they were putting out very curious stamps of the several edifices which are most famous for their beauty or magnificence.
Addison, Remarks on Italy (Works, ed. Bohn, I. 388).

11. Sanction; value derived from suffrage or attestation; authority.

The common people do not judge of vice or virtue by the morality or the immorality so much as by the stamp that is set upon it by men of figure. Sir R. L'Estrange.

12. Distinguishing mark; imprint; sign; indication; evidence.

If ever there was a work which carried with it the stamp of originality in all its parts, it is that of John Bunyan's!
Southey, Bunyan, p. 70.

13. Make; cast; form; character; sort; kind; brand.

Those he hath . . . predestinated to be of our stamp or character, which is the image of his own Son, in whom, for that cause, they are said to be chosen.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v., App. 1.

He had wantonly involved himself in a number of small book-debts of this stamp. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, i. 12.

14. In leather-manuf., a machine for softening hides by pounding them in a vat. E. H. Knight.—15. Same as nobblin.

In the production of "charcoal plates" (for tinplate making), the first rough forged slabs are cut into pieces termed stamps. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 319.

16. pl. Legs. [Old slang.]—Atmospheric stamp. See atmospheric.—Ball stamp, a peculiar form of stamp (so named from the inventor) in use at the mines on Lake Superior. It is a direct-action stamp, the stem of the stamp being the continuation of the piston-rod of the steam-engine which is the motive power.—Leavitt stamp, an improved form of Ball stamp, used chiefly in the Lake Superior mines. One head is capable of crushing 250 tons of ore in 24 hours. This stamp works like the Nasmyth hammer, the force of gravity being aided by steam-pressure.—Stamp Act, an act imposing or regulating the imposition of stamp-duties; in American colonial history, an act, also known as Grenville's Stamp Act, passed by the British Parliament in 1765, providing for the raising of revenue in the American colonies by the sale of stamps and stamped paper for commercial transactions, real-estate transfers, lawsuits, marriage licenses, inheritances, etc.: it also provided that the royal forces in America should be billeted on the people. The act was to go into effect November 1st, 1765, but it aroused intense opposition, led by the assemblies of Virginia, Massachusetts, and other colonies. A "Stamp Act Congress," with delegates from many of the colonies, met at New York in October, 1765, and a petition against this and other repressive measures was sent to England. The Stamp Act was repealed in March, 1766, but the agitation was one of the leading causes in effecting the revolution.—To put to stamp†, to put to press; begin printing. Hall, Hen. VIII., an. 25.

stampage (stam′pāj), n. [< stamp + -age.] An impression; a squeeze.

No copy [of the rock inscription] was obtained until October, 1838, when the traveller Masson most carefully and perseveringly made a calico stampage and an eye-copy.
Encyc. Brit., XIII. 118.

stamp-album (stamp′al″bum), n. A blank book or album used by collectors for the classification and display of postage- and revenue-stamps.

stamp-battery (stamp′bat″ėr-i), n. A series of stamps in a machine for comminuting ores. E. H. Knight.

stamp-block (stamp′blok), n. A hollow wooden block in which mealies are pounded before being cooked. [South Africa.]

stamp-collecting (stamp′kọ-lek″ting), n. The act or practice of collecting postage- or revenue-stamps. See philately.

stamp-collector (stamp′kọ-lek″tor), n. 1. A collector or receiver of stamp-duties.—2. One who collects postage- or revenue-stamps as articles of interest or curiosity; a philatelist.

stamp-distributer (stamp′dis-trib″ū-tėr), n. An official who issues or distributes government stamps.

stamp-duty (stamp′dū″ti), n. A tax or duty imposed on the sheets of parchment or paper on which specified kinds of legal instruments are written. Stamp-duties on legal instruments, such as conveyances and deeds, are chiefly secured by prohibiting the reception of them in evidence unless they bear the stamp required by the law. Stamp-duties were first levied in England in the reign of William and Mary.

stampede (stam-pēd′), n. [Formerly also stampedo; < Amer. Sp. estampida, a stampede, a particular use of Sp. estampida, estampido (= Pg. estampido), a crack, crash, loud report; connected with estampar, stamp: see stamp, v.] 1. A sudden fright seizing upon large bodies of cattle or horses, and causing them to run for long distances; a sudden scattering of a herd of cattle or horses; hence, any sudden flight or general movement, as of an army, in consequence of a panic.

With every herd this stampede occurs; and, watching the proceedings, I hold that a drover ought to have rather more patience than Job.
Mortimer Collins, Thoughts in my Garden, II. 131.

2. Any sudden unconcerted movement of a number of persons actuated by a common impulse: as, a stampede in a political convention for a candidate who seems likely to win. Stampedes in American politics have been common since the Democratic convention of 1844.

At the first ring of the bell a general stampede took place; some twenty hungry souls rushed to the dining-room. L. M. Alcott, Hospital Sketches, p. 63.

stampede (stam-pēd′), v.; pret. and pp. stampeded, ppr. stampeding. [< stampede, n.] I. intrans. 1. To become generally panic-stricken; take suddenly to flight, as if under the influence of a panic; scamper off in fright: said of herds or droves.—2. To move together, or take the same line of conduct, under the influence of any sudden and common impulse. See stampede, n., 2.

II. trans. 1. To cause to break and run as if panic-stricken; disperse or drive off suddenly through panic or terror.

Those most trying times when . . . the cattle are stampeded by a thunder-storm at night.
T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 7.

2. To cause to move or act in a mass through some sudden common impulse: as, to stampede a political convention for a candidate.

stampedo† (stam-pē′dō), n. Same as stampede.

A sudden stampedo or rush of horses. Irving.

stamper (stam′pėr), n. [< stamp + -er[1].] 1. One who stamps: as, a stamper in the post-office.—2. An instrument for stamping; a stamp.—3. pl. The feet; also, shoes. [Old slang.]

> Strike up, Piper, a merry, merry dance,
> That we on our stampers may foot it and prance.
> Brome, Jovial Crew, i.

4. A stamping-machine. (a) A machine for cleaning textile fabrics, consisting of a tub revolving horizontally, and a series of wooden stamps or pestles operated by suitable machinery. (b) In gunpowder-manuf., a machine used in small mills, consisting of ten or twelve stamps of hard wood, arranged in a row, each stamp having a bronze shoe. The material to be pulverized is placed in cavities in a block of solid oak. (c) In porcelain-manuf., a mill for pulverizing calcined flints preparatory to treatment in the grinding-vat.

5. pl. In ornith., the Calcatores.

stamp-hammer (stamp′ham″ėr), n. A direct-acting hammer where the hammer-block is lifted vertically, either by cams or friction-rollers, or, as is more commonly the case, by steam- or water-pressure acting on a piston in a closed cylinder. Percy.

stamp-head (stamp′hed), n. In a stamp, the rectangular or cylindrical mass of iron at the end of the stamp-stem, which by its weight gives force to the blow. To the lower end of the stamp-head is attached the shoe, a thinner piece of chilled iron or steel, which can easily be replaced, when too much worn for service, without the necessity of replacing the whole stamp-head.

stamping (stam′ping), n. [< ME. stampynge; verbal n. of stamp, v.] 1. The act of pounding, beating, or impressing as with a stamp.—2. Something stamped, or made by stamping-machinery.

Groups of U-shaped soft iron stampings.
Electrical Rev., XXII. 174.

3. Same as blocking, 1 (a).

stamping-ground (stam′ping-ground), n. A place of habitual resort; a customary haunt. [Slang, U. S.]

It's with them fellows as it is with wild animals. You can just keep clear of them if you want, stay far out of their stamping-ground, hold yourself aloof all the time.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 176.

stamping-machine (stam′ping-ma-shēn″), n. A machine for forming articles of hard materials, as metal, whether for the first rough shaping, or for decorative finishing.

stamping-mill (stam′ping-mil), n. Same as stamp-mill, 1.

stamping-press (stam′ping-pres), n. 1. In sheet-metal work, a power-machine for making hollow ware, as pans, bowls, kitchen-utensils, etc. Machines of this class are a development of the earlier stamping-machines, the direct blow or stamp having been replaced in many instances by a continuous pressure. The essential features of the machine are two dies brought one over the other by a direct blow or by pressure. Where a continuous pressure is used by the employment of a screw, cam, toggle-joint, or eccentric, forcing one die slowly upon the other, the sheet of metal is pressed and stretched into shape. The dies are often compound—one part cutting out the blank from the sheet and another part compressing it gradually into shape—or so arranged that one part takes the blank, and holds it firmly by the edges, while a central part stretches it to the required shape. In some forms of these machines a series of dies are used successively, the blanks being pressed in part, then annealed and re-pressed until the final shape is secured. Also called stamping-machine.

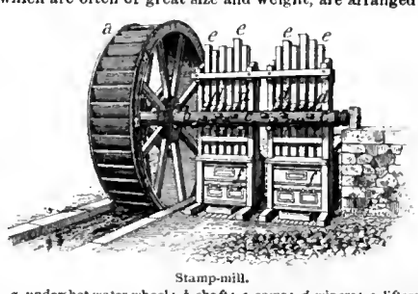
Die used in a Stamping-press.
a, vertical section of die for forming a spoon; b, plan of upper die; c, side view of lower die.

2. A small hand-press or seal-press used by public officials and others for impressing stamps upon or affixing them to documents, either in obedience to legal requirement or as a matter of convenience or custom. Compare seal-press.—3. Same as blocking-press. See also arming-press.

stamp-machine (stamp′ma-shēn″), n. In paper-manuf., a machine for beating rags, etc., into pulp. It consists of a number of rods fixed into a stout oak beam, and working alternately with a set below, the water passing off through an opening covered with a fine sieve. The machine is of German origin, and is used only in small factories.

stamp-mill (stamp′mil), n. 1. In metal., a crushing-mill employing stamps or pestles to crush ores or rock to powder preparatory to treatment for extracting metals. The stamps, which are often of great size and weight, are arranged in a row, and are usually raised by means of wipers and cams on a revolving shaft turned by steam- or water-power. The cams release the stamps in turn, and they fall on the ore placed in chambers below, the sides of these chambers being perforated to allow the escape of the crushed mate-



Stamp-mill.
a, undershot water-wheel; b, shaft; c, cams; d, wipers; e, lifters of pine, beach, or oak, with chilled cast-iron stamps; f, kofers (otherwise called mortars or battery-boxes) which receive the "stuff" or broken ore and retain it until reduced to the required degree of fineness. The ore is fed to the stamps from an inclined platform at the rear of the kofers.

rial as soon as reduced to the required fineness, while a stream of water sweeps the slimes away as they are produced. Such a row of stamps is also called a stamp-battery. In another form of stamp-mill the stamp is placed at the end of the piston-rod of a steam-cylinder, on the principle of the steam-hammer. Also called stamping-mill.

2. An oil-mill employing a pestle or pestles to crush seeds and fruits.

stamp-note (stamp'nōt), n. In com., a memorandum delivered by a shipper of goods to the searcher, which, when stamped by him, allows the goods to be sent off by lighter to the ship, and is the captain's authority for receiving them on board. Simmonds.

stamp-office (stamp'of″is), n. An office where government stamps are issued, and stamp-duties and taxes are received.

stance (stans), n. [Early mod. E. also staunce; < OF. stance, estance, a station, situation, condition, also a stanchion, = Pr. estansa, station, condition, = Sp. Pg. estancia, a dwelling, = It. stanza, a station, stanza, etc., < ML. stantia, a chamber, a house, lit. a standing, < L. stan(t-)s, ppr. of stare, stand: see stand. Cf. stanza.] 1. A station; a site; an area for building; a position; a stand. [Scotch.]

He fetched a gambol upon one foot, and, turning to the left hand, failed not to carry his body perfectly round, just into its former stance.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 35. (Davies.)

The boy answered his invitation with the utmost confidence, and danced down from his stance with a galliard sort of step. Scott, Kenilworth, x.

2†. Space; gap; distance.

Since I can do no better, I will set such a staunce between him and Pasiphalo that all this town shall not make them friends.
Gascoigne, tr. of Ariosto's Supposes, ii. 3.

3†. A stave or stanza.

The other voices sung to other music the third stance.
Chapman, Mask of Middle Temple and Lincoln's Inn.

stance† (stans), v. t. [< stance, n.] To station; place.

He ne'er advane'd from the place he was stanc'd.
Battle of Sheriff-Muir (Child's Ballads, VII. 162).

stanch[1], staunch[1] (stänch, stänch), v. [< ME. stanchen, staunchen, stawnchen, stonchen, < OF. estancher, estanchier, stanchier, etc., cause to cease flowing, stop, stanch, F. étancher, stanch, = Pr. Sp. Pg. estancar = It. stancare (ML. stancare), stanch, < L. stagnare, stagnate, cause to cease flowing, make stagnant, ML. also stanch (blood), L. stagnare, cease flowing, become stagnant, < stagnum, a pool, standing water: see stagnant, stagnate. Cf. stank[1], staunch[2], stanchion.] I. trans. 1. To cause to cease flowing; check the flow of.

I will staunche his floudes, and the great waters shal be restrayned. Bible of 1551, Ezek. xxxi.

Over each wound the balm he drew,
And with cobweb lint he stanched the blood.
J. R. Drake, Culprit Fay, p. 34.

2. To stop a flow from; dry, as a wound, by the application of a styptic.

Then came the hermit out and bare him in,
There stanch'd his wound.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

3. To quench; allay; assuage. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Al weere it that a riche coveytos man hadde a ryver fletynge al of gold, yit sholde it never staunchen his coveytise. Chaucer, Boëthius, iii. meter 3.

Let my tears stanch the earth's dry appetite.
Shak., Tit. And., iii. 1. 14.

I stanch with ice my burning breast,
With silence balm my whirling brain.
M. Arnold, Saint Brandan.

4†. To free; relieve: with of.

Yf two brether be at debate,
Loke nother thou forther in hor hate,
But helpe to staunche hom of malice.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 307.

II. intrans. 1. To stop flowing; be stanched. [Rare.]

Immediately her issue of blood stanched. Luke viii. 44.

2†. To stop; cease.

And the wynde stonchede and blew no more,
And the meyst trunde into a bryght cloude.
Chron. Vilodun., p. 127. (Halliwell.) stanch[1]†, staunch[1]† (stänch, stänch), n. [< stanch[1], staunch[1], v.] That which stanches; that which quenches or allays.

O frendship, flour of flowers, O lively sprite of lyfe,
O sacred bond of blissful peace, the stalworth stanch of strife.
Poems of Vncertaine Auctors, On Frendship. (Richardson.)

stanch[2] (stänch), n. [An assibilated form of stank[1]; < OF. estanche, a pool, fish-pond, etc.: see stank[1].] A flood-gate in a river for accumulating a head of water to float boats over shallows; a weir. See stank[1]. E. H. Knight.

Formerly rivers used to be penned in by a series of stanches near shoal places, which held up the water, and, when several boats were collected in the pool above a stanch, it was suddenly opened, and the sudden rush of water floated the boats over the shallows below.
Encyc. Brit., XX. 573.

stanch[3], staunch[2] (stänch, stänch), a. [< ME. staunche, < OF. estanc, fem. estanche, estenc, estenk, estain, dried, dry, exhausted, wearied, tired, vanquished, F. étanche, staneh, watertight, = Pr. estanc, still, unchangeable, = Sp. estanco = Pg. estanque, staneh, water-tight, = It. stanco, tired; from the verb shown under stanch[1], staunch[1]. Cf. stank[2], the same word.] 1. Dry; free from water; water-tight; sound: said of a vessel.

Now, good son, thyne ypocras is made parfite & welle; y wold than ye put it in staunche & a clene vesselle.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 128.

If I knew
What hoop should hold us stanch, from edge to edge
O' the world I would pursue it.
Shak., A. and C., ii. 2. 117.

Our provisions held out well, our ship was stanch, and our crew all in good health. Swift, Gulliver's Travels, ii. 1.

2. Strong; firm.

You will lose their love. This is to be kept very staunch and carefully to be watched. Locke, Education, § 107.

3. Sound and trustworthy; true: applied to hounds with reference to their keeping the scent.

If some staunch hound, with his authentic voice,
Avow the recent trail, the justling tribe Attend his call. Somerville, The Chase, ii. 125.

4. Sound or firm in principle; loyal; hearty; trustworthy.

Standing absurdities, without the belief of which no man is reckoned a stanch churchman, are that there is a calves-head club; . . . and that all who talk against Popery are Presbyterians in their hearts. Addison, Freeholder, No. 7.

You are staunch indeed in learning's cause.
Cowper, Tirocinium, l. 492.

=Syn. 4. Stout, steadfast, resolute, stable, unwavering.

stanchel[1] (stan'chel), n. [Formerly also stanchell, stanchil, Se. stainchel, stenchil, etc.; cf. stanchion.] Same as stanchion. [Obsolete or prov. Eng. or Scotch.]

Round about the said tomb-stone, both at the sides and at either end, were set up neat stanchells of wood, joyned so close that one could not put in his hand betwixt one and the other.
Davies, Ancient Rites (ed. 1672), p. 118. (Halliwell.) stanchel[2] (stan'chel), n. Same as staniel.

stancher, stauncher (stän'chėr, stän'chėr), n. [< stanch[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which stanches; specifically, a styptic.

stanchion (stan'shọn), n. [Early mod. E. also stancheon, stanchon, staunchon; < OF. estançon, estauson, F. étançon, a prop, staff, dim. of OF. estance, a stanchion, prop, support, lit. a station: see stance. Cf. stauchel[1].] A post, pillar, or beam used for a support, as a piece of timber supporting one of the main parts of a roof; a prop. Specifically—(a) One of the upright iron bars passing through the eyes of the saddle-bars and forming part of the armature steadying the lead lights of a large window-bay.

He did him to the wire-window,
As fast as he could gang;
Says, "Wae to the hands put in the stancheons,
For out we'll never win."
Fire of Frendraught (Child's Ballads, VI. 180).

(b) One of the upright bars in a stall for cattle. (c) In ship-building, an upright post or beam of different forms, used to support the deck, the rails, the nettings, awnings, etc. (d) pl. In milit. engin., one of the upright side-pieces of a gallery-frame.

stanchion (stän'shọn), v. t. [< stanchion, n.] To fasten to or by a stanchion.

The cows tied, or stanchioned, as in their winter feeding.
New Amer. Farm Book, p. 380.

stanchion-gun (stan'shọn-gun), n. A pivot-gun; a boat-gun for wild-duck shooting.

stanchless, staunchless (stänch'les, stänch'-les), a. [< stanch[1] + -less.] Incapable of being stanched or stopped; unquenchable; insatiable.

There grows
In my most ill-composed affection . . .
A stanchless avarice. Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3. 78.

And thrust her down his throat into his stanchless maw.
Drayton, Polyolbion, vii. 791. (Nares.) stanchly, staunchly (stänch'li, stänch'li), adv. In a stanch manner; soundly; firmly.

stanchness, staunchness (stänch'nes, stänch'-nes), n. The state or quality of being stanch, in any sense. Boyle, Works, III. 184.

stanck†. See stank[1], stank[2].

stand (stand), v.; pret. and pp. stood, ppr. standing. [< ME. standen, stonden (pres. ind. 3d pers. standeth, stondeth, contr. stant, stont, pret. stood, stod, pp. stonden, standen), < AS. standan, stondan (pret. stōd (for stond*), pp. standen, stonden) = OS. standan = OFries. stonda = OHG. stantan, MHG. standen (rare) = Icel. standa = Sw. stanna, stadna = Goth. standan (pret. stōth, pp. stōthans for standans*), stand; a secondary or extended form, Teut. √ stand (perhaps orig. based on the orig. ppr., OHG. stānt-er, stēnt-er, etc., = L. stan(t-)s, standing), parallel with a simpler form, namely, OS. stān = OFries. stān = MD. staen, D. staan = MLG. stān, LG. staan = OHG. MHG. stān (also with altered vowel (prob. due to association with the contrasted verb OHG. gēn, G. gehen, go), OHG. MHG. (and OS.) stēn, G. stehen) = Sw. stå = Dan. staae, stand (whence E. dial. staw, stand), Teut. √ stai (not found in AS., Icel., or Goth., and not found at all in pret. and pp., which are supplied by the pret. and pp. of standan, √ stand), orig. √ stā = L. stare (redupl. perf. steti, pp. status) = Gr. ἱστάναι, cause to stand, set up, mid. and pass. ἱστασθαι, stand, 2d aor. στῆναι, stand, = OBulg. stati = Serv. stati = Russ. stati, etc., also OBulg. stoyati = Serv. stayati = Bohem. státi = Russ. stoyatĭ, etc. (Slavic √ sta and √ sti, with numerous derivatives), = Skt. √ sthā, stand. By reason of the fundamental nature of the notion 'stand' and its innumerable phases, and of the phonetic stability of the syllable sta, this root has produced an immense number of derivatives, which are in E. chiefly from the L. source—namely, from the E., stand, n., perstand, etc., understand, withstand, etc.; from Scand., staw[1]; from the L. (from inf. stare), stable[1] (with constable, etc.), stable[2], stablish, establish, stage, stamen, stamin (tamin, etc.), stay[2] (staid, etc.), cost[2], rest[2], contrast, obstacle, obstetric, etc.; (from the pp. status) state, estate, status, station, statist, statue, statute, armistice, interstice, solstice, etc.; constitute, substitute, etc., superstition; (from the ppr. stan(t-)s) stance, stanchion, stanza, circumstance, constant, distant, extant, substantive, etc.; (from sistere, causal of stare) sist, assist, consist, desist, exist, insist, persist, subsist, etc.; while from various derivatives or extensions of the L. √ sta are ult. E. stagnate, stanch, stank[1], tank, stank[2], stolid, sterile, destine, obstinate, etc.; from the Gr., stasis, static, apostate, ecstasy, metastasis, system, epistle, apostle, etc. To the same ult. √ sta, Teut. or other, may be referred, with more or less plausibility, many E. words having a root or base appar. extended from sta, namely (< √ stap or staf), staff, stave, stem[1], stem[2], step, stope, stoop[3], stamp, stub, stump, stiff, stifle; (< √ stal) stall[1], stale[2], steal[2], stalk[2], stell, still[1], stilt, stool, stout, etc.; (< √ stam) stammer, stumble, stem[3]; (< √ stad) stead, stud[1], steed, stithy, stathe, etc.; and see also standard, stare[1], steer[1], steer[2], stud[2], steel, stow, store[3], story[2], etc. The list, however, is elastic, and may be indefinitely increased or diminished. See the words mentioned. The L. verb has also passed into Sp. Pg. as the substantive verb estar, be.] I. intrans. 1. To be upright; be set upright; take or maintain an upright position. (a) To place one's self or hold one's self in an upright position on the feet with the legs straight, as distinguished from sitting, lying, or kneeling: said of men or beasts.

And thanne commandethe the same Philosophre azen Stondethe up. Mandeville, Travels, p. 235.

Stands he, or sits he?
Or does he walk? Shak., A. and C., i. 5. 19.

Ida, . . . rising slowly from me, stood Erect and silent. Tennyson, Princess, vi.

(b) To be set on end; be or become erect or upright.

Fro the erthe up til heuene ben,
A leddre stonden, and thor-on Angeles dun-cumen and up-gon.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 1607.

Comb down his hair; look, look! it stands upright.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 3. 15.

To the south of the church stand up two great pillars.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 66.

2. To stop moving; come to or be at a standstill; halt; alight; more generally, to cease action of any kind; be or become motionless, inactive, or idle; be or become stagnant.

Foulis fayre and bright, . . .
With fedrys fayre to frast ther flight fro stede to stede where thai will stande. York Plays, p. 12.

Deepe was the wey, for whiche the carte stood.
Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 261.

I'll tell you who Time ambles withal, . . . who Time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal.
Shak., As you Like It, iii. 2. 329.

Stand!
If thou advance an inch, thou art dead.
Fletcher (and another?), Prophetess, ii. 2.

3. Specifically, in hunting, to point: said of dogs. See pointer, setter[1].

To point, set, or stand (which are different names for the same act). Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 234.

4. To rest as on a support; be upheld or sustained, literally or figuratively; depend: followed by on, upon, or rarely by.

This Ymage stont upon a Pylere of Marble at Costantynoble. Mandeville, Travels, p. 9.

This reply standeth all by conjectures. Whitgift.

They stood upon their own bottom, without their main dependance on the royal nod.
Milton, Church-Government, ii., Concl.

No friendship will abide the test,
That stands on sordid interest,
Or mean self-love erected.
Cowper, Friendship.

5. To be placed; be situated; lie.

"Now," quod Selgramor, "telle vs what wey stondeth Camelot." Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 260.

In this King's [William I.] sixteenth Year, his Brother Duke Robert, being sent against the Scots, builded a Fort, where at this Day standeth New-Castle upon Tyne.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 29.

A nest of houses and trees at the mountain's foot, standing so invitingly as to make the traveller wish for a longer sojourn. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 191.

6. To continue in place; maintain one's position or ground; hold one's own; avoid falling, failing, or retreating.

The Saisnes were so many that they myght not be perced lightly thourgh, but stode stiffly a-gein the Crysten.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 215.

Take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand. Eph. vi. 13.

Who, not content that former worth stand fast,
Looks forward, persevering to the last.
Wordsworth, The Happy Warrior.

7. To continue in being; resist change, decay, or destruction; endure; last.

He tolde vs also that the clerkes ne knew not the cause why that youre tour may not stonde; but he shall telle yow apertly. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 35.

His living temples, built by faith to stand.
Milton, P. L., xii. 527.

I reach into the dark,
Feel what I cannot see, and still faith stands.
Browning, Ring and Book, II. 209.

It [most of the black Indian ink] blots when a damp brush is passed over it; or, as draughtsmen say, "it does not stand." Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 336.

8. To continue in force; remain valid; hold good.

The resumpsion, men truste, shall forthe, and my Lordes of Yorkes first power of protectorship stande.
Paston Letters, I. 378.

My covenant shall stand fast with him. Ps. lxxxix. 28.

No conditions of our peace can stand.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 1. 184.

9. To take a particular attitude with respect to others or to some general question; adopt a certain course, as of adherence, support, opposition, or resistance; take sides; specifically, to make a stand.

Y tryste in God that he schalle me spede,
He standyth wyth the ryght.
MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 79. (Halliwell.)

I'll stand to-day for thee and me and Troy.
Shak., T. and C., v. 3. 36.

Godwin Earl of Kent, and the West-Saxons with him, stood for Hardecnute. Milton, Hist. Eng., vi.

Instructed by events, after the quarrel began, the Americans took higher ground, and stood for political independence. Emerson, Address, Soldiers' Monument, Concord.

10. To become a candidate for office or dignity: usually with for.

How many stand for consulships? Shak., Cor., ii. 2. 2.

The Town of Richmond in Richmondshire hath made choice of me for their Burgess, tho' Master Christopher Wandesford, and other powerful Men, and more deserving than I, stood for it. Howell, Letters, I. v. 3.

It had just been suggested to him at the Reform Club that he should stand for the Irish borough of Loughshane. . . . What! he stand for Parliament, twenty-four years old! Trollope, Phineas Finn, i.

11. To continue in a specified state, frame of mind, train of thought, course of action or argument, etc.; keep on; persevere; persist.

But this so plain to be lawful by God's word, and examples of holy men, that I need not to stand in it.
Ridley, Works (Parker Soc.), p. 63.

One that stands in no opinion because it is his owne, but suspects it, rather, because it is his owne, and is confuted, and thankes you.
Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Modest Man.

Never lie before a king, or a great person; nor stand in a lie when thou art accused; but modestly be ashamed of it, ask pardon, and make amends.
Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, ii. § 5.

12. To be pertinacious or obstinate; be insistent or punctilious; hence, to be overexacting: generally followed by on or upon, rarely by in or with. Compare to stand upon (e).

Stand not in an evil thing. Eccles. viii. 3.

Well, I will not stand with thee; give me the money.
Marlowe, Faustus, iv. 5.

13. To hold back; scruple; hesitate; demur.

To have his will, he stood not to doe things never so much below him. Milton, Eikonoklastes, iii.

An I had asked him to oblige me in a thing, though it had been to cost his hanging, he wadna hae stude twice about it. Scott, Old Mortality, x.

14. To be placed relatively to other things; have a particular place as regards class, order, rank, or relations.

Amongst Liquids endued with this Quality of relaxing, warm Water stands first.
Arbuthnot, Aliments, v. prop. 4, § 9.

Amphioxus stands alone among vertebrated animals in having a cæcal diverticulum of the intestine for a liver.
Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 79.

Faith and scepticism stand to each other much in the relation of poetry and criticism.
H. N. Oxenham, Short Studies, p. 263.

15. To be at a certain degree, as in a scale of measurement or valuation: as, the mercury (or the thermometer) stands at 80°.

In 1791 the corn law was changed by Pitt. When the price of wheat stood at 54*s.* the quarter, or above that price, wheat might be imported at a duty of 6*d*.
S. Dowell, Taxes in England, IV. 10.

16. To have a specified height when standing.

He . . . stood four feet six inches and three-quarters in his socks. Dickens, Sketches, Tales, x. 1.

17. To be in a particular position of affairs; be in a particular state or condition: often in the sense of be, as a mere copula or auxiliary verb: as, to stand prepared; to stand in awe of a person; to stand one's friend.

Alas, Fadyr, how standis this case,
That ye bene in this peynes stronge?
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 99.

In pity I stand bound to counsel him.
Massinger, Bashful Lover, i. 1.

He stood in good terms with the state of France, and also with the company. Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 130.

I do not know how the laws stand in this particular.
Steele, Tatler, No. 135.

Wonder not that the great duke [Buckingham] bore him out, and all stood mum.
Court and Times of Charles I., I. 96.

18. To occupy the place of another; be a representative, equivalent, or symbol: followed by for.

I speak this to you in the name of Rome,
For whom you stand. B. Jonson, Catiline, v. 6.

Definition being nothing but making another understand by words what idea the term defined stands for.
Locke, Human Understanding, III. iii. 10.

The ideal truth stands for the real truth, but expresses it in its own ideal forms.
G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, II. ii. § 56.

19†. To consist; be comprised or inherent: with in.

No man's life standeth in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.
Latimer, 2d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

Faith standeth not in disputing.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 121.

20. To be consistent; be in accordance; agree: followed by with, except in the phrases to stand to reason and to stand together.

It cannot stand with God's mercy that so many should be damned. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 634.

The great Turke hearing Musitians so long a tuning, he thought it stood not with his state to wait for what would follow. N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 40.

How an evasive indirect reply will stand with your reputation . . . is worth your consideration.
Junius, Letters, No. 68.

21. With an implication of motion (from or to a certain point) contained in an accompanying adverb or preposition, to step, move, advance, retire, come or go, in a manner specified: noting actual motion, or rest after motion: as, to stand back; to stand aside; to stand off; to stand out.

The place also liked . . . me wondrously well, it being a point of land standing into a cornfield.
R. Knox (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 386).

As things stood, he was glad to have his money repayed him and stand out.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 280.

So he was bid stand by.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 158.

Our nearest friends begin to stand aloof, as if they were half-ashamed to own us. Swift, Tale of a Tub, i.

Stand off, approach not, but thy purpose tell.
Pope, Iliad, x. 93.

The flowerage
That stood from out a stiff brocade.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

Trieste stands forth as a rival of Venice.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 71.

22. Specifically (naut.), to hold a course at sea; sail; steer: said of a ship or its crew: followed by an adverb or preposition of direction.

No sooner were they entered into that resolution but they descried a saile standing in for the shore.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 125.

We did not stand over towards Sumatra, but coasted along nearest the Malacca shore.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 171.

They tacked about, and stood that way so far that they were fain to stand off again for fear of the shore.
Court and Times of Charles I., I. 266.

The ship . . . filled away again, and stood out, being bound up the coast to San Francisco.
R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 68.

23†. To put up with something; forbear.

But stonde he moste unto his owene harm,
For when he spak he was anon bore doun
With hende Nicolas and Alisoun.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 644.

Covenant to stand seized to uses. See covenant.—To stand abeigh. See abeigh.—To stand bluff†. See bluff[1].—To stand by. (a) [By, prep.] (1) To side with; aid; uphold; sustain.

I would stand by him against her and all the world.
Swift, Story of the Injured Lady.

Well said, Jack, and I'll stand by you, my boy.
Sheridan, The Rivals, v. 3.

(2) To adhere to; abide by; maintain: as, to stand by an agreement or a promise.

Thy lyf is sauf, for I wol stonde therby,
Upon my lyf, the queene wol seye as I.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 159.

If Tom did make a mistake of that sort, he espoused it, and stood by it. George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 7.

(3) Naut., to take hold or be ready to take hold of, or to act in regard to: as, to stand by a halyard; to stand by the anchor. (b) [By, adv.] To make ready; stand in a position of readiness to seize upon something; be ready to perform some act when a subsequent command or signal is given: used principally in the imperative, as a word of command. Originally a nautical term, it has come to be used quite commonly in its original sense.—To stand for, from, in, off, or over (naut.). See def. 22.—To stand forth†, to persist.

To stonde forth in such duresse
Is cruelte and wikkidnesse.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 3547.

To stand from under, to beware of objects falling from aloft.—To stand good. See good.—To stand high, in printing, to exceed the standard height of eleven twelfths of an inch: said of a type or an engraving.—To stand in. (a) To cost: followed by a personal object in the dative: sometimes used without in: as, it stood me [in] five dollars.

As every bushel of wheat-meal stood us in fourteen shillings. Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 55.

His wife is more zealous, and therefore more costly, and he hates her in tyres what she stands him in Religion.
Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Church Papist.

(b) To be associated; make terms: as, to stand in with the politicians; the police stand in with them for the profits. [Slang, U. S.]—To stand in hand, to be on hand; be ready for use or service; be of advantage: usually with an indirect personal object: as, it will stand us in hand to be cautious.

Well, my Lady, I stand in hand to side with you always. A. E. Barr, Friend Olivia, xvii.

To stand in one's own light. See light[1].—To stand in stead, to be serviceable; serve one's turn: with an indirect personal object.

My legs and arms stood me in more stead than either my gentle kin or my book-lear.
Scott, Legend of Montrose, ii.

To stand in the gap. See gap.—To stand in the gate. See gate[1].—To stand low, in printing, to fall short of the standard height of eleven twelfths of an inch: said of a type or an engraving.—To stand mute. See mute[1].—To stand off. (a) See def. 21. (b) To stand out; show.

The truth of it stands off as gross
As black and white. Shak., Hen. V., ii. 2. 103.

Picture is best when it standeth off as if it were carved.
Sir H. Wotton, Elem. of Architecture, ii.

To stand off and on, to sail away from the shore and then toward it, repeatedly, so as to keep a certain point in sight.—To stand on. (a) See to stand upon. (b) Naut., to continue on the same course or tack.—To stand on compliment, on scruple, etc. See the nouns.—To stand out. (a) To hold out, especially in a struggle; persist in opposition or resistance; refuse to yield.

His spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church.
Shak., K. John, v. 2. 71.

Of their own Accord the Princes of the Countrey came in, and submitted themselves unto him, only Rodorick King of Connaught stood out. Baker, Chronicles, p. 56.

(b) To project, or seem to project; be prominent or in relief; show conspicuously. See def. 21.

Their eyes stand out with fatness. Ps. lxxiii. 7.

In the history of their [the princes'] dynasty the name of the city chiefly stands out as the chosen place for the execution of princes whom it was convenient to put out of the way. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 111.

The heavy, irregular arches of the bridge, and the tall, square mass of the tower, stand out against the red sky, and are reflected in the rapid water.
C. E. Norton, Travel and Study in Italy, p. 11.

To stand sam for one. See *sam*2.—To stand to. (a) [To, adv.] To fall to; work.

I will stand to and feed,
Although my last. Shak., Tempest, iii. 3. 49.

(b) [To, prep.] (1) To stand by; sustain; help.

Give them leave to fly that will not stay;
And call them pillars that will stand to us.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 51.

(2) To adhere to; abide by; uphold.

Stand strongly to your vow, and do not faint.
Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, ii. 2.

(3) To await and submit to; take the chance or risk of; abide.

Troilus will stand to the proof.
Shak., T. and C., i. 2. 142.

[They] fled into the woods, and there rather desired to end their daies then stand to their trials and the enent of Instice. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 122.

(4) To take to; have recourse to; keep to; apply one's self to resolutely.

Their sentinell caled, "Arme, arme"; so they bestired them & stood to their armes.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 84.

But Mr. Sampson stood to his guns, notwithstanding, and fired away, now upon the enemy, and now upon the dust which he had raised. Scott, Guy Mannering, xlvi.

To stand to a child, to be sponsor for a child. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—To stand together, to be consistent; agree.—To stand to it. (a) To stand one's ground; hold one's own, as in a struggle; hold out.

Their lives and fortunes were put in safety, and protected, whether they stood to it or ran away.
Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 145.

I do not think . . . that my brother stood to it so lustily as he makes his brags for.
Middleton, Blurt, Master-Constable, i. 1.

(b) To persist, as in an opinion; maintain.

Now I'll stand to it, the pancakes were naught.
Shak., As you Like it, i. 2. 69.

To stand to reason, to be reasonable.

This stands to reason indeed.
Brome, Sparagus Garden, ii. 3.

To stand under, to bear the weight or burden of: as, I stand under heavy obligations.—To stand up for, to defend the cause of; contend for; support; uphold.

He meant to stand up for every change that the economical condition of the country required.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, viii.

Ye see I stood up for ye, Mr. Avery, but I thought 't would n't do no harm to kind o' let ye know what folks is sayin'. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 488.

To stand upon or on. (a) To rely upon; trust to.

We stand upon the same defence that St. Paul did; we appeal to Scripture, and the best and purest Antiquity.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. i.

So, standing only on his good Behaviour,
He 's very civil, and entreats your Favour.
Congreve, Old Batchelor, Prol.

(b) To be dependent or contingent upon; hinge upon.

Your fortune stood upon the casket there.
Shak., M. of V., iii. 2. 203.

(c) To concern; affect; involve.

Consider how it stands upon my credit.
Shak., C. of E., iv. 1. 68.

I pray God move your heart to be very careful, for it stands upon their lives.
Quoted in Winthrop's Hist. New England, I. 56.

(d) To dwell on; linger over, as a subject of thought.

Since the Authors of most of our Sciences were the Romans, and before them the Greekes, let vs a little stand vppon their authorities. Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie.

The third point . . . deserveth to be a little stood upon, and not to be lightly passed over.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i.

(e) To insist upon; make much of; hence, to pride one's self upon; presume upon.

This widow is the strangest thing, the stateliest,
And stands so much upon her excellencies!
Fletcher, Wit without Money, ii. 2.

Nor stand so much on your gentility.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 1.

Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once. Shak., Macbeth, iii. 4. 119.

I must say that of you Women of Quality, if there is but Money enough, you stand not upon Birth or Reputation in either Sex. Mrs. Centlivre, The Basset-Table, ii.

(f†) To be incumbent upon: in the form to stand one upon.

It stands me much upon,
To stop all hopes whose growth may damage me.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 2. 59.

Does it not stand them upon to examine upon what grounds they presume it to be a revelation from God?
Locke.

To stand upon one's pantables†, to stand upon points, etc. See pantable, *point*1, etc.—To stand upon one's rest†. See to set up one's rest (a), under *set*1.—To stand up to, to make a stand against; confront or face boldly.

He stood up to the Banbury man for three minutes, and polished him off in four rounds.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxxiv.

To stand up with. (a) To take one's place with (a partner) for a dance; hence, to dance with. [Colloq.]

If you want to dance, Fanny, I will stand up with you.
Jane Austen, Mansfield Park, xii.

(b) To act as groomsman or bridesmaid to: as, I stood up with him at his wedding. [Colloq.]—To stand with. See def. 20.

II. trans. 1. To cause to stand; specifically, to set upright.

"And as concerning the nests and the drawers," said Sloppy, after measuring the handle on his sleeve, and softly standing the stick aside against the wall, "why, it would be a real pleasure to me."
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, iv. 16.

2†. To abide by; keep to; be true to.

These men, stondynge the charge and the bonde which thei haue takene, wille leve vtterly the besynes of the world, . . . and hooly yeve hem to contemplatife liffe.
Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 24.

3. To undergo; endure; bear; more loosely, to endure without succumbing or complaining; tolerate; put up with; be resigned to; be equal to.

I am sorry you are so poor, so weak a gentleman,
Able to stand no fortune.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, iv. 2.

I should never be able to stand Noll's jokes; so I'd have him think, Lord forgive me! that we are a very happy couple. Sheridan, School for Scandal, i. 2.

The business of their dramatic characters will not stand the moral test. Lamb, Artificial Comedy.

She did not mind death, but she could not stand pinching.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 271.

4. To await and submit to; abide: as, to stand trial.

Bid him disband his legions, . . .
And stand the judgment of a Roman senate.
Addison, Cato, ii. 2.

5†. To withstand; resist; oppose; confront.

Valiant Talbot above human thought Enacted wonders with his sword and lance;
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 123.

Not for Fame, but Virtue's better end,
He stood the furious foe.
Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 343.

The rebels, who fled from him after their victory, and durst not attack him when so much exposed to them at his passage of the Spey, now stood him, they seven thousand, he ten. Walpole, Letters, II. 19.

6. To be important or advantageous to; be incumbent upon; behoove.

He knew that it depended solely on his own wit whether or no he could throw the joke back upon the lady. He knew that it stood him to do so if he possibly could.
Trollope, Barchester Towers, xlvi.

7. To be at the expense of; pay for: as, to stand treat. [Colloq.]

Asked whether he would stand a bottle of champagne for the company, he consented.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, liii.

To stand a watch (naut.), to perform the duties of a starboard or port watch for a specified time.—To stand buff†. See *buff*3.—To stand fire, to receive the fire of an enemy without giving way.—To stand off, to keep off; hold at a distance: as, to stand off a creditor or a dun.—To stand one's ground. See *ground*1.—To stand out. (a) To endure or suffer to the end.

Jesus fled from the persecution; as he did not stand it out, so he did not stand out against it.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 78.

(b) To persist; insist; maintain; contend.

It were only yesterday at e'en she were standing out that he liked her better than you.
Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xxxix.

To stand pad. See *pad*1.—To stand shot. See *shot*2.

stand (stand), n. [< ME. stand = D. stand = MLG. stant, stänt = MHG. stant (stand-), G. stand = Dan. (> Icel.) stand, standing, stand, station, etc.; also, in some mechanical senses, E. dial. stond, stound, < ME. stonde, < AS. stand = MD. stande = MLG. LG. stande, a tub, = OHG. stante, MHG. G. stande, a tub, stand, a stand, jack, support, etc. (the Gael. stanna, a tub, vat, is from E.); all from the verb.] 1. The act of standing. (a) A coming to a stop; a cessation from progress, motion, or activity; a halt; a rest; stoppage.

He stalks up and down like a peacock—a stride and a stand. Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 252.

Lead, if thou think'st we are right.
Why dost thou make
These often stands? thou said'st thou knew'st the way.
Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, v. 1.

(b) The act of taking a decided attitude, as in aid or resistance; a determined effort for or against something; specifically, milit., a halt for the purpose of checking the advance of an enemy.

Breathe you, my friends; well fought; we are come off
Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire. Shak., Cor., i. 6. 2.

All we have to ask is whether a man 's a Tory, and will make a stand for the good of the country?
George Eliot, Felix Holt, vii.

2. A state of rest or inaction; a standstill; hence, a state of hesitation, embarrassment, or perplexity.

The sight of him put me to a stand in my mind whether I should go on or stop.
T. Ellwood, Life (ed. Howells), p. 256.

Here, then, poor Rip was brought to a stand.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 56.

3. The place where a person or an object stands; a position, site, or station; a post or place.

At every halfe houre one from the Corps du guard doth hollow, shaking his lips with his finger betweene them; vnto whom every Sentinell doth answer round from his stand. Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 143.

The knight then asked me if I had seen Prince Eugene, and made me promise to get him a stand in some convenient place where he might have a full sight of that extraordinary man. Addison, Spectator, No. 269

Amid that area wide they took their stand.
Pope, Dunciad, ii. 27.

A salmon is said to be swimming when he is moving up the river from pool to pool. At other times he is usually resting in his "stand" or "lie," or at most shifting from one stand in a pool to another.
Quarterly Rev., CXXVI. 359, note.

Specifically—(a) The place where a witness stands to testify in court. (b) A rostrum; a pulpit.

Sometimes, indeed, very unseemly scenes take place, when several deputies [in the French Chamber], all equally eager to mount the coveted stand, reach its narrow steps at the same moment and contest the privilege of precedence. W. Wilson, Cong. Gov., ii.

(c) A stall in a stable. Halliwell.

4. Comparative position; standing, as in a scale of measurement; rank.

Nay, father, since your fortune did attain
So high a stand, I mean not to descend.
Daniel, Civil Wars, iv. 90.

5. A table, set of shelves, or the like, upon which articles may be placed for safety or exhibition; also, a platform on which persons may place themselves. Specifically—(a) A small light table, such as is moved easily from place to place.

A stand between them supported a second candle.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxviii.

(b) A stall for the sale of goods; any erection or station where business is carried on: as, a fruit-stand; a news-stand; a carriage-stand.

The Chief of Police [of Racine, Wisconsin], acting under instructions from the Mayor, has notified the proprietors of every cigar-store, soda-fountain, ice-cream stand, and confectionery shop to close on Sunday.
New York Evening Post, June 28, 1889.

(c) A rack, as for umbrellas and canes. (d) In museums, the support for a mounted specimen of natural history; especially, a perch for mounted birds, consisting of an upright and cross-bar of turned wood, usually painted or varnished. Stands are also made in many ways, in imitation of natural objects upon which birds perch or rest. Stands for mammals are usually flat boards of suitable size, rectangular or oval, and with turned border. (e) In a microscope, the frame or support which holds the essential parts of the instrument as well as the object under examination. It includes the tube with the coarse and fine adjustments, the stage and its accessories, the mirror, etc. See microscope. (f) In printing, same as composing-stand. (g) A platform or other structure, usually raised, as for spectators at an open-air gathering, or for a band or other group of performers: as, the grand stand on a race-course.

A large wooden shed, called "The Stand," without floor or weather-boarding, capable of covering, say, four thousand persons, stood near the centre [of a camp-meeting ground]. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 902.

The stand-buildings for the accommodation of the patrons of the course are four or five in number, and are three stories high. T. C. Crawford, English Life, p. 28.

6. A standing growth, as of grass, wheat, Indian corn, etc.

By the middle of April there should be a good stand of the young sprouts [of sugar-cane].
The Century, XXXV. 111.

7. (a) A tree growing from its own root, in distinction from one produced from a scion set in a stock of either the same or another kind of tree. (b) A young tree, usually one reserved when other trees are cut. See standel.—8. Ductility; lack of elasticity.

Leather may have the quality known as Stand—that is to say, may be strongly stretched in either length or breadth without springing back.
Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 372.

9. In com., a weight of from 2½ to 3 cwt. of pitch.—10†. A company; a troop.

A stand of six hundred pikes, consisting of knights and gentlemen as had been officers in the armies of his late Majesty. England's Joy (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 30).

11. A complete set or suit; an outfit. See stand of arms, below.

Proclamation was made . . . to furnish out to General Lesly's army, and to ilk soldier thereof, their share of a stand of gray cloaths, two shirts, and two pair of shoes.
Spalding, Hist. Troubles in Scotland, I. 289. (Jamieson.)

A stand o' claes was nae great matter to an Osbaldistone (be praised for 't!). Scott, Rob Roy, xxxvi.

12. A tub, vat, or cask, or the quantity it contains. A stand of ale is said in the seventeenth century to correspond with a hogshead of beer.

First dip me in a stand o' milk,
And then in a stand o' water.
The Young Tamlane (Child's Ballads, I. 122).

Here, Will Perkins, take my purse, fetch me
A stand of ale, and set in the market-place,
That all may drink that are athirst this day.
Greene, George-a-Greene (Works, ed. Dyce, II. 200).

Band-stand, a balcony or raised platform in a hall or park for the accommodation of a band or company of musicians.—Brazier-stand, a stand, usually consisting of a ring mounted on three feet, to support a brazier.—Conducting-stand, a rack or frame of wood or metal for holding a score for the conductor of a chorus or an orchestra.—Grand stand, in any place of public resort, the principal stand from which spectators view races, games, or any other spectacle.

We . . . will follow Mr. Egremont to the grand stand, where ladies now sit in their private boxes much as they sat some eighteen hundred years ago to smile on the dying gladiator in the amphitheatres.
Whyte Melville, White Rose, II. iv.

Stand of ammunition. See ammunition.—Stand of armor, stand of arms, a suit of armor and weapons taken together, or, in modern times, the arms and accoutrements sufficient for one man. See *arm*², n.—Stand of colors, a single color or flag. Wilhelm.—To be at a stand, to be brought to a standstill; be checked and prevented from motion or action.—To get a stand. See the quotation.

Occasionally these panic fits . . . make them [buffalo] run together and stand still in a stupid, frightened manner. . . . When they are made to act thus it is called in hunters' parlance getting a stand on them; and often thirty or forty have been killed in one such stand, the hunter hardly shifting his position the whole time.
T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 274.

To make a stand. (a) To come to a stop; stand still.

When I beheld this hill, and how it hangs over the way, I suddenly made a stand, lest it should fall on my head.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 95.

(b) To take a position for defense or resistance; stop and fight.—To put to a stand, to stop; arrest by obstacles or difficulties: as, he was put to a stand for want of men and money.

standage† (stan′dāj), n. [< stand + -age.] 1†. A stall.

Such strawe is to bee given to the draughte oxen and cattell at the standaxe [read standage] or the barnedores.
Archæologia, XIII. 383.

2. In mining, a place underground for water to stand or accumulate in; a lodge or sump.

standard¹ (stan′därd), n. [Early mod. E. also standerd; < ME. standard, standerd, stondard, < late AS. standard (= MD. standaerd, D. standaard = MLG. stanthart, LG. standare = MHG. standert, stanthart, G. standarte (perhaps < It.) = Sw. standar = Dan. standart), < OF. estandart, estendard, an ensign, standard, a point of rallying, F. étendard, an ensign, standard, flag, = Pr. estandard, estandart = Sp. estandarte = It. stendardo, an ensign, standard (cf. OF. estandal, estandeille, standale = It. stendale, an ensign); ML. standardum, an ensign, standard (cf. standardus, a stronghold, a receptacle of water): (a) either < OHG. stantan (MHG. standen), stand, = E. stand, etc., + -art, or (b) < ML. stendere* (It. stendere = OF. estendre, etc.), < L. extendere, spread out, extend: see extend. The connection with stand is certain in the other uses: see *standard*², *standard*³.] 1. Milit., a distinctive flag; an ensign. Specifically—(a) The principal ensign of an army, of a military organization such as a legion, or of a military chieftain of high rank. In this sense it may be either a flag or a solid object carried on a pole, as the Roman eagle, or the dragon shown in the Bayeux Tapestry, or a combination of a flag with such an object. (b) A large flag, long in the fly in proportion to its hoist, carried before princes and nobles of high rank, especially when in military command or on occasions of ceremony. A standard of Edward III. was shaped like a long pennon, swallow-tailed, and bearing the royal arms at the hoist, the rest of the pennon being covered with fleurs-de-lis and lions semé. A standard of the Earl of Warwick, carried during the Wars of the Roses, had a cross of St. George, with the rest of the flag covered with small copies of the badge of the Nevilles, a bear and ragged staff. At the present time the word is used loosely. The so-called royal standard of Great Britain, though a standard in function, is properly a banner in form. The flags of the British cavalry regiments are called standards, to distinguish them from the colors of the infantry regiments. In the United States army a silk standard goes to every mounted regiment; it bears the national arms on a blue ground, with the number and name of the regiment underneath the eagle. See cut under labarum.

2. In bot., same as banner, 5.—3. In ornith.: (a) Same as vexillum. (b) A feather suggesting a standard by its shape or position. See cuts under Semioptera and standard-bearer.—4†. A standard-bearer; an ensign or ancient. [Rare.]

Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.
Shak., Tempest, iii. 2. 18.

To slope the standard. See slope.

standard² (stan′därd), n. and a. [< ME. standard*, < OF. estandart, estendard, also (AF.) estander, ML. (AL.) standardum, standard of weight and measure; appar. a particular use in England of OF. estandart, etc., an ensign, standard, as 'that to which one turns,' or, as in *standard*³, 'that which is set up': see *standard*¹, *standard*³.] I. n. 1. A weight, measure, or instrument by comparison with which the accuracy of others is determined; especially, an original standard or prototype, one the weight or measure of which is the definition of a unit of weight or measure, so that all standards of the same denomination are copies of it. The only original standard of the United States is a troy pound. See pound, yard, meter.

It is . . . necessary to have recourse to some visible, palpable, material standard, by forming a comparison with which all weights and measures may be reduced to one uniform size. Blackstone, Com., I. vii.

2. In coinage, the proportion of weight of fine metal and alloy established by authority. The standard of gold coins in Great Britain is at present 22 carats—that is, 22 parts of fine gold and 2 of alloy; and the sovereign should weigh 123.274 grains troy. The standard of silver coins is 11 ounces 2 pennyweights of pure silver and 18 pennyweights of alloy, making together 1 pound troy; and the shilling should weigh 87.273 grains. The gold and silver coins in current use in the United States are all of the fineness 900 parts of the precious metal in 1,000, the gold dollar weighing 25.8 grains, and the silver dollar 412.5 grains.

That precise weight and fineness, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the standard. Locke, Considerations concerning Raising [the Value of Money.

3. That which is set up as a unit of reference; a form, type, example, instance, or combination of conditions accepted as correct and perfect, and hence as a basis of comparison; a criterion established by custom, public opinion, or general consent; a model.

Let the judgment of the judicious be the standard of thy merit. Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., ii. 8.

Let the French and Italians value themselves on their regularity; strength and elevation are our standard.
Dryden, Epic Poetry.

The degree of differentiation and specialization of the parts in all organic beings, when arrived at maturity, is the best standard as yet suggested of their degree of perfection or highness. Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 313.

[The respiratory act] ranging, during the successive periods of life, from 44 respirations per minute in the infant soon after birth, to the average standard of 18 respiratory acts in the adult aged from thirty to sixty years.
J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 126.

Measuring other persons' actions by the standards our own thoughts and feelings furnish often causes misconstruction. H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 114.

4. A grade; a rank; specifically, in British elementary schools, one of the grades or degrees of attainment according to which the pupils are classified. The amount of the parliamentary grant to a school depends on the number of children who pass the examination conducted by government inspectors—the rate per pupil differing in the different standards.

Every boy in the seventh and sixth standards would have held out his hand, as they had been well drilled on that subject. N. and Q., 7th ser., VIII. 51.

Average standard, in copper-mining. See *average*².—Double standard, a monetary standard based upon both gold and silver as the materials of the circulating medium, as distinguished from a single standard based upon either gold or silver.—Dutch standard, a set of samples of sugar put up in bottles bearing the official seal and label of the Dutch government (whence the name), and recognized as the standard of the commercial world in fixing the quality of sugars. The set comprises 16 different grades, numbered, according to the different colors of the samples, from 5 (the darkest color) to 20 (the most refined) inclusive. The quality of the sugar to be tested is determined by comparison with the samples or the standard, and the sugar is named accordingly as No. 10, 13, etc., Dutch standard.—Gold standard, a monetary standard based upon gold as the material of the unit of value.—Metallic standard, a gold or silver standard.—Multiple standard, a monetary standard representing a considerable number of important articles in frequent use, the fluctuations in their value neutralizing one another and thus causing a substantial uniformity of value among them.—Mural standard, any standard set up on a wall, as, for instance, a standard of measurement for convenience in testing rules, tapes, measuring-chains, etc.—Photometric standard. See photometric.—Silver standard, a monetary standard based upon silver as the material of the monetary unit.—Single standard. See double standard.—Tabular standard. Same as multiple standard.

II. a. Serving as a standard or authority; regarded as a type or model; hence, of the highest order; of great worth or excellence.

In comely Rank call ev'ry Merit forth;
Imprint on every Act its Standard Worth.
Prior, Carmen Seculare for the Year 1700.

The proved discovery of the forgery of Ingulf's History of Crowland Abbey was a fact that necessitated the revision of every standard book on early English History.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 46.

Latimer-Clark standard cell. See cell, 8.—Standard arrow, an arrow used in the latter part of the fifteenth century, and probably the heavier arrow conformed to certain regulations: it is distinguished from the flight-arrow.—Standard battery, a battery in which the electromotive force is perfectly constant, so that it can be used as a standard.—Standard compass. See compass.—Standard pitch. See *pitch*¹, 3.—Standard solution, a standardized solution (which see, under solution).—Standard star, a star whose position and proper motion is particularly well known, and on that account is recommended for use in determining the positions of other stars, instrumental constants, time, latitude, and the like.—Standard time, the reckoning of time according to the local mean time on the nearest or other conventionally adopted meridian just an even number of hours from the Greenwich Royal Observatory. See time.

standard² (stan′därd), v. t. [< *standard*², n.] To bring into conformity with a standard; regulate according to a standard.

To standard gold or silver is to convert the gross weight of either metal, whose fineness differs from the standard, into its equivalent weight of standard metal.
Bithell, Counting-House Dict. (Encyc. Dict.) standard³ (stan′därd), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also standerd, standert; < ME. standard* (?), < MD. standaerd, a post, pillar, column, mill-post, trophy (cf. OF. estandart, a kind of torch, < D.); a var., conformed to standaerd, an ensign, etc., of stander, a post, mill-post, etc.: see stander. The E. *standard*³ is thus a var. of stander, with various senses, mostly modern. It has been more or less confused with *standard*¹ and *standard*².] I. n. 1. An upright; a small post or pillar; an upright stem constituting the support or the main part of a utensil. Specifically—(a) The upright support or stem of a lamp or candlestick; hence, also, a candlestick; especially, a candelabrum resting on the floor in a church.

Doppione, a great torch of waxe, which we call a standard, or a quarrier. Florio (ed. 1611).

Beneath a quaint iron standard containing an oil-lamp he saw the Abbé again. J. H. Shorthouse, Countess Eve, lv.

(b) In carp., any upright in a framing, as the quarters of partitions, or the frame of a door. (c) In ship-building, an inverted knee placed on the deck instead of beneath it. (d) That part of a plow to which the mold-board is attached. (e) In a vehicle: (1) A support for the hammercloth, or a support for the footman's board. See cut under coach. (2) An upright rising from the end of the bolster to hold the body laterally. E. H. Knight.

2. In hort.: (a) A tree or shrub which stands alone, without being attached to any wall or support, as distinguished from an espalier or a cordon.

The espaliers and the standards all
Are thine; the range of lawn and park.
Tennyson, The Blackbird.

(b) A shrub, as a rose, grafted on an upright stem, or trained to a single stem in tree form.

Standards of little bushes pricked upon their top, . . . the standards to be roses, juniper, holly, berberries.
Bacon, Gardens (ed. 1887).

3. A stand or frame; a horse. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—4†. A large chest, generally used for carrying plate, jewels, and articles of value, but sometimes for linen.

Item, the said Anne shall have two standard-chestes delivered unto her for the keeping of the said diaper, the one to keep the cleane stuff, and th' other to keep the stuff that hath been occupied.
Ordinances and Regulations, p. 215. (Halliwell.)

The Standard, which was of mason work, costly made with images and angels, costly gilt with gold and azure, with other colours, and divers sorts of [coats of] arms costly set out, shall there continue and remain; and within the Standard a vice with a chime.
Coronation of Queen Anne, Wife of Henry VIII., in Arber's [Eng. Garner, II. 49.

5. A standing cup; a large drinking-cup.

Frolic, my lords; let all the standards walk;
Ply it, till every man hath ta'en his load.
Greene and Lodge, Looking Glass for Lond. and Eng.

6†. The chief dish at a meal.

For a standard, venson rost, kyd, favne, or cony.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 165.

7†. A suit; a set. Compare stand, n., 11.

The lady had commanded a standard of her own best apparel to be brought down. B. Jonson, New Inn, Arg.

8†. One who stands or continues in a place; one who is in permanent residence, membership, or service.

The ficklenesse and fugitivenesse of such servants justly addeth a valuation to their constancy who are standards in a family, and know when they have met with a good master. Fuller, General Worthies, xi.

Gas-standard, a gas-fixture standing erect and of considerable size, as one which stands on the floor, common in the lighting of churches, public halls, etc.

II. a. Standing; upright; specifically, in hort., standing alone; not trained upon a wall or other support: as, standard roses.

Rich gardens, studded with standard fruit-trees, . . . clothe the glacis to its topmost edge.
Kingsley, Two Years Ago, xxiii.

Standard lamp. See *lamp*¹.

standard-bearer (stan′därd-bār″ėr), n. 1. An officer or soldier of an army, company, or troop who bears a standard: used loosely and rhetorically: as, the standard-bearer of a political party.

King James, notwithstanding, maintained a Fight still with great Resolution, till Sir Adam Forman his Standard-bearer was beaten down. Baker, Chronicles, p. 260.

2. An African caprimulgine bird of either of the genera Macrodipteryx and Cosmetornis; a pennant-winged goatsucker. M. longipennis has one flight-feather of each wing extraordinarily prolonged as a hare shaft bearing a racket at the end. C. rexillarius has a less lengthened lance-linear feather, chiefly white, and in other respects resembles the common night-hawk of the United States. Also called four-wings.

Standard-bearer (Macrodipteryx longipennis).

standard-bred (stan′dȧrd-bred), a. Bred up to some standard of excellence agreed upon by some association.

standard-grass (stan′dȧrd-gràs), n. Same as stander-grass.

standardization (stan#dȧr-di-zā′shon), n. [< standardize + -ation.] The act of standardizing, or the state of being standardized. Also spelled standardisation.

standardize (stan′dȧr-dīz), r. t.; pret. and pp. standardized, ppr. standardizing. [< standard[2] + -ize.] To conform to or compare with a standard; regulate by a standard; constitute or recognize as a standard; specifically, in chemical analysis, to determine accurately in order to use what is so determined as a standard of comparison: said of the strength of a solution, or the quantity of a certain reagent contained in a given volume of it. Also spelled standardise.

They [electrical measuring-instruments] will be useful for standardizing the ordinary forms of voltmeter and ammeter. Science, XI. 237.

standardizer (stan′dȧr-dī-zėr). n. [< standardize + -er[1].] One who or that which standardizes. Also spelled standardiser.

The absolute values of the polarization . . . should of course have been identical, but according to the standardizer they were always markedly different.
Philosophical Mag., XXVII. 86.

standard-knee (stan′dȧrd-nē), n. Same as standard[3], 1 (c).

standardwing (stan′dȧrd-wing), n. Wallace's bird of paradise. See cut under Semioptera.

stand-by (stand′bī), n. One who or that which stands by one. (a) A supporter or adherent. (b) That upon which one relies; especially, a ready, timely resource.

The Texan cowboys become very expert in the use of the revolver, their invariable standby.
T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXVI. 840.

(c) A nautical signal to be in readiness. See stand by (b), under stand.

standel† (stan′del), n. [< stand + -el; equiv. to stander.] A tree reserved for growth as timber; specifically, in law, a young oak-tree, twelve of which were to be left in every acre of wood at the felling thereof.

standelwort† (stan′del-wėrt), n. [< standel, equiv. to stander, + wort[1]. Cf. equiv. MD. standelkruyd.] Same as stander-grass.

stander (stan′dėr), n. [= MD. stander, a post, mill-post, axletree, D. stander, an axletree, = OHG. stanter, MHG. stander, stender, G. ständer, a tub; as stand + -er[1]. Cf. standard[3] and standel.] 1. One who or that which stands. (a) One who keeps an upright position, resting on the feet.

They fall, as being slippery standers.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 84.

(b) One who or that which remains in a specified place, situation, state, condition, etc.; specifically, a tree left for growth when other trees are felled. Compare standel.

They [the Dutch] are the longest standers here by many years: for the English are but newly removed hither from Hean, where they resided altogether before.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 49.

(c) A supporter; an adherent. [Rare.]

Our young proficients . . . do far outgo the old standers and professors of the sect. Berkeley, Alciphron, ii. § 7.

(d) A sentinel; a picket. [Thieves' slang.]

And so was faine to liue among the wicked, sometimes a stander for the padder.
Rowlands, Hist. Rogues, quoted in Ribton-Turner's [Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 583.

2. pl. In the early church, the highest class of penitents: a mistranslation of consistentes (συνεστῶτες), properly 'bystanders.'

Standers, who might remain throughout the entire rite, but were not suffered to communicate.
Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 456.

stander-by (stan′dėr-bī′), n. One who is present; a mere spectator; a bystander.

When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers-by to curtail his oaths. Shak., Cymbeline, ii. 1. 12.

stander-grass (stan′dėr-gràs), n. The Orchis mascula and various plants of this and allied genera. See cullion, 2. Also standard-grass, standelwort, standerwort.

standerwort (stan′dėr-wėrt), n. Same as stander-grass.

stand-far-off† (stand′fär-ôf′). n. A kind of coarse cloth. Compare stand-further-off.

In my childhood there was one [kind of cloth] called Stand-far-off (the emblem of Hypocrisy), which seemed pretty at competent distance, but discovered its coarseness when nearer to the eye.
Fuller, Worthies, Norwich, II. 488. (Davies.) stand-further (stand′fėr#ᵀʜėr), n. A quarrel: a dissension. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stand-further-off† (stand′fėr#ᵀʜėr-ôf′), n. A kind of coarse cloth. Compare stand-far-off.

Certaine sonnets, in praise of Mr. Thomas the deceased; fashioned of divers stuffs, as mockado, lustian, stand-further-off, and motly, all which the author dedicates to the immortall memory of the famous Odcombian traveller.
John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

stand-gall (stand′gȧl). n. Same as staniel.

standing (stan′ding), n. [Verbal n. of stand, r.] 1. The act of one who stands, in any sense.

I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing.
Ps. lxix. 2.

He cursed him in sitting, in standing, in lying.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 212.

2. The time at, in, or during which one stands. (a†) The point in time at which anything comes to a stand: specifically, of the sun, the solstice.

Brasik is sowe atte stondyng of the Sonne.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 180.

(b) The interval during which one keeps, or is supposed to keep, an upright or standing position. Compare sitting, n.

They [Perch] may be, at one standing, all catched one after another. I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 157.

Hence — (c) Duration: continuance: practice.

One of the commendadors of Alcantara, a gentleman of long standing. Middleton and Rowley, Spanish Gypsy, ii. 1.

I know less geography than a schoolboy of six weeks' standing. Lamb, Old and New Schoolmaster.

3. A standing-place: a position or post; a stand.

You, sirrah, get a standing for your mistress,
The best in all the city.
Middleton, Women Beware Women, i. 3.

4. Relative position; degree; rank; consideration; social, professional, or commercial reputation; specifically, high rank: as, a member in full standing (of a church, society, club, or other organization); a committee composed of men of good standing.

Of all the causes which contribute to form the character of a people, those by which power, influence, and standing in the government are most certainly and readily obtained are by far the most powerful.
Calhoun, Works, I. 59.

standing (stan′ding), p. a. 1. Having an erect position; upright; perpendicular; hence, rising or raised; high.

Look how you see a field of standing corn, . . .
Rising in waves, how it doth come and go Forward and backward. Drayton, Battle of Agincourt.

Wear standing collars, were they made of tin!
O. W. Holmes, Urania.

2. Involving the attitude or position of one who stands; performed while standing: as, a standing jump.

Wide was spread
That war and various; sometimes on firm ground
A standing fight; then, soaring on main wing, Tormented all the air. Milton, P. L., vi. 243.

3. Remaining at rest; motionless; inactive: specifically, of water, stagnant.

And thonghe so be it is called a see, in very dede it is but a stondynge water.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 49.

The Garigliano had converted the whole country into a mere quagmire, or rather standing pool.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 14.

4. Permanent; lasting; fixed; not transient, transitory, or occasional: as, a standing rule; a standing order.

A standing evidence of the care that was had in those times to prevent the growth of errours.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 155.

Yes, yes, I think being a standing jest for all one's acquaintance a very happy situation.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, v. 2.

5. In printing, remaining for further use: noting composed types, printed or unprinted, which are reserved from distribution. — Standing army. See army[2]. — Standing bed†, standing bedstead†, the large or high bedstead, as distinguished from the trundle-bed which rolled in and out under it.

There 's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing-bed and truckle-bed. Shak., M. W. of W., iv. 5. 7.

Standing bevel or beveling. See bevel, 1. — Standing block. See block[1], 11. — Standing bowl. Same as standing cup.

Here, say we drink this standing-bowl of wine to him.
Shak., Pericles, ii. 3. 65.

Standing bowsprit, committee, cup, galley, matter. See the nouns. — Standing nut, a cup made of a nutshell mounted in silver or the like: examples remain dating from the sixteenth century or earlier, made most commonly of cocoanut-shells. — Standing orders. (a) The permanent orders made by a legislative or deliberative assembly respecting the manner in which its business shall be conducted. (b) In a military organization, those orders which are always in force. — Standing panel. See panel. — Standing part of a tackle, the part of the rope made fast to the strap of a block or any fixed point. — Standing piece†. Same as standing cup. MS. Arundel, 249, f. 89. (Halliwell.) — Standing rigging (naut.). See rigging[2]. — Standing salt-cellar, shield, etc. See the nouns. — Standing stone, in archæol., a translation of the French pierre levée, a menhir. E. B. Tylor. — Standing table, a permanent table, fixed in its place, or of such size and solidity that it cannot easily be moved, as the table for meals in the old English hall.

standing-cypress (stan′ding-sī#′pres), n. A common biennial garden-flower, Gilia coronopifolia (Ipomopsis elegans), native in the southern United States. In its tubular scarlet flowers and finely dissected leaves it resembles the cypress-vine; but it is of an erect wand-like habit.

standing-ground (stan′ding-ground), n. Place or ground on which to stand; especially, that on which one rests, in a figurative sense; a basis of operations or of argument; a fundamental principle. W. Wilson, The State, § 204.

standing-press (stan′ding-pres), n. See press[1].

standing-room (stan′ding-röm), n. Space sufficient only for standing, as in a theater where all the seats have been taken.

standing-stool (stan′ding-stöl), n. A small frame or machine moving on wheels, used to support a child when learning to walk.

The elf dares peep abroad, the pretty foole
Can wag without a truckling standing-stoole.
Fletcher, Poems, p. 130. (Halliwell.) standish (stan′dish), n. [A reduction of stand-dish*, < stand + dish.] An inkstand: also, a case for writing-materials.

Standish of Decorated Pottery, 18th century.
From "L'Art pour Tous."

In which agonie tormenting my selfe a long time, I grew by degrees to a milde dis-content; and, pausing a while ouer my standish, I resolued in verse to paynt forth my passion. Nashe, Pierce Penilesse, p. 5.

Here is another letter of Niccolini that has lain in my standish this fortnight. Walpole, Letters, II. 75.

stand-off (stand′ôf), n. [< stand off: see stand, r.] A holding or keeping off; a counteraction. [Colloq.]

The preferences of other clients, perhaps equal in number and value, who are fighting with Fabian tactics, make a complete stand-off. The Atlantic, LXVI. 672.

stand-off (stand′ôf), a. [< stand off: see stand, r.] Holding others off; distant; reserved. [Colloq.]

You always talk . . . as if there were no one but Catherine. People generally like the other two much better. Catherine is so stand-off.
Mrs. Humphry Ward, Robert Elsmere, i. 2.

stand-offish (stand′ôf#′ish), a. [< stand off + -ish.] Same as stand-off. [Colloq.]

If the "landed gentry" were stand-offish, and . . . did not put themselves out of the way to cultivate Miss Shaldon's acquaintance, that young lady was all the more grateful for their reserve.
F. W. Robinson, Her Face was her Fortune, v.

stand-offishness (stand′ôf#′ish-nes), n. The character of being repellent; the disposition or tendency to hold others at a distance. [Colloq.]

I told him I did not like this pride and stand-offishness between man and man, and added that if a duke were to speak to me I should try to treat him civilly.
D. C. Murray, Weaker Vessel, xxxii.

stand-pipe (stand′pīp), n. 1. A vertical pipe erected at a well or reservoir, into which water is forced by mechanical means in order to obtain a head-pressure sufficient to convey it to a distance.—2. A small pipe inserted into an opening in a water-main.—3. An upright gas-pipe connecting the retort and the hydraulic main.—4. In a steam-engine, a boiler supply-pipe elevated enough to cause water to flow into the boiler in spite of the pressure of steam.—5. A pipe on the eduction-pipe of a steam-pump to absorb the concussions due to the pulsation and irregularities caused by the necessary use of bends and changes in the direction of pipes.—6. An upright pipe, open at the top, used in connection with a hot-water heating system to allow room for the expansion of the water when heated; an expansion-pipe.—7. A portable pipe used to afford a high head of water at fires. One section of a pipe is secured to trunnions, while other sections are kept in a rack, and attached when required. When the hose is coupled, the long pipe is raised by means of a wheel, and the lower end is connected with the water-supply. Another more recent form is a derrick, elevated by two cylinders and pistons analogous in construction to these parts in a steam-engine; but the pistons are moved by the pressure of carbonic acid gas, generated, immediately as wanted, from the reaction of sulphuric acid upon a solution of sodium bicarbonate in a suitable generator. The pipe is elevated above the derrick by a wire rope, pulleys, and a hand-winch. A movable butt or nozle, which can be inclined to any desired angle up or down, or turned in any direction horizontally, is controlled by a man on the lower platform of the derrick, and a copious stream can thus be poured into or upon the top of a tall building. Also called water-tower.

standpoint (stand′point), n. [Tr. G. standpunkt; as stand + point[1]: a word objected to by purists.] The point at which one stands; especially, the position from which one's observations are taken and one's opinions formed or delivered; the point of view; the mental situation.

The attraction of different speakers from Sunday to Sunday stimulates thought, each treating his theme from his own standpoint. A. B. Alcott, Table-Talk, p. 91.

The great snare of the psychologist is the confusion of his own standpoint with that of the mental fact about which he is making his report.
W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 196.

stand-rest (stand′rest), n. A stool, bracket, or the like serving to support a person in an almost upright position, as the miserere in medieval stalls: applied especially to a contrivance like a high stool, but with the top or seat sloping instead of horizontal.

standstill (stand′stil), n. and a. [< stand still: see stand, v., and still[1], a.] I. n. A halt; a pause; a stop, especially in consequence of obstruction, exhaustion, or perplexity.

In consequence of this fancy the whole business was at a stand-still. Greville, Memoirs, Nov. 29, 1823.

II. a. Deficient in progress or advancement; unprogressive: as, a standstill policy.

stand-up (stand′up), a. 1. Standing; erect; upright; high.

He was a tall youth now; . . . he wore his tail-coat and his stand-up collars, and watched the down on his lip with eager impatience. George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, ii. 7.

2. Specifically, in pugilism, noting a fair boxing-match, where the combatants stand manfully to each other, without false falls: as, a fair stand-up fight.

His face marked with strong manly furrows, records of hard thinking and square stand-up fights with life.
O. W. Holmes, Poet at the Breakfast Table, i.

stane (stān), n. An obsolete and dialectal (Scotch) form of stone.

stane-raw (stān′râ), n. [Also staniraw, steinraw, stancy-rag, rock-liverwort, appar. < stane, stone, + raw (origin obscure).] A foliaceous lichen, Parmelia saxatilis, used in the Scotch Highlands for dyeing brown; black crottles. [Orkney.]

stang[1] (stang), n. [< ME. stange (prob. in part < Scand.), < AS. stæng, steng, stenge, a pole, rod, bar, stick, stake, = MD. stanghe, D. stang = MLG. stange = OHG. stanga, MHG. stange, G. stange, a pole, = Icel. stöng (stang-) = Sw. stång = Dan. stang, a pole, stang (cf. It. stanga, a bar, spar, < G.); < stingan (pret. stang), pierce, sting: see sting[1]. Cf. stang[2].] 1. A wooden bar; a pole. [Obsolete or prov. Eng. or Scotch.]

He halchez al hole the haluez to-geder, & sythen on a slit stange stoutly hem henges.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1614.

"Ye strake ower hard, Steenie—I doubt ye foundered the chield." "Ne'er a bit," said Steenie, laughing; "he has braw broad shouthers, and I just took the measure o' them wi' the stang." Scott, Antiquary, xxvi.

2†. The bar of a door. Florio.—3. A rod, pole, or perch used in the measurement of land. Swift, Gulliver's Travels, i. 2. [Prov. Eng.]—Riding the stang, in Scotland and the north of England, a mode of punishing brutal or unfaithful (or, sometimes, henpecked) husbands, or other offenders, by carrying them mounted on a stang through the town, with an accompaniment of jeers and rough music. The culprits have sometimes suffered by proxy, or, latterly, only in effigy.

stang[1] (stang), v. t. [< stang[1], n.] To cause to ride on a stang.

This Word Stang, says Ray, is still used in some Colleges in the University of Cambridge, to stang Scholars in Christmass Time being to cause them to ride on a Colt-staff or Pole, for missing of Chapel.
Bourne's Pop. Antiq. (1777), p. 410.

stang[2] (stang), n. [< ME. stange, a sting; < sting (pret. stang), sting: see sting[1].] 1. A sting. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

Quen the stanged mugt se
The nedder on the tree ther hange, Thal ware al warisht of their stange.
Holy Rood (ed. Morris), p. 117.

My curse upon thy venom'd stang,
That shoots my tortured gums alang.
Burns, Address to the Toothache.

2. The weever, a fish. Also stangster. [Prov.]

stang[2] (stang), v. [< Icel. stanga, sting, goad, < stöng, a pole, stake: see stang[2], n., and cf. stang[1].] I. trans. To sting.

The nedderes that ware fel Stanged the folk of Israel.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 117.

II. intrans. 1. To throb with pain; sting. Halliwell.—2. To cause a sharp, sudden pain; inflict a sting.

But for how lang the flee may stang,
Let inclination law that.
Burns, Jolly Beggars.

[Obsolete or dialectal in all uses.]

stang[3]. An obsolete or dialectal preterit of sting[1].

stang[4]†, n. An obsolete form of stank[1].

Stangeria (stan-jē′ri-ạ), n. [NL. (T. Moore, 1853), named after Dr. Stanger of Natal, one of the first to collect specimens of the plant.] A genus of gymnospermous plants, of the order Cycadaceæ and tribe Zamieæ, made by some a tribe Stangerieæ. It is characterized by a strobile with scales imbricated in alternating series, a thick naked napiform caudex, and leaf-segments with a strong midrib and numerous unbranched or forking nerves. There are one or two species, natives of Natal. They are singular plants with the smooth irregular trunk only about a foot high or nearly subterranean, from which rise a few coarse long-stalked pinnate fern-like leaves, inflexed in the bud, the leaflets straight in the bud, linear-lanceolate, scalioped, spiny-toothed or cleft, and traversed by parallel forking veins. The fruit, a thick downy strobile or cone, is borne on a stalk surrounded by circular concave woolly bracts overlapping in two or three ranks. The male plants bear cylindrical cones with numerous stamens on the under side of their compound scales. S. paradoxa, in allusion to its thick, round caudex, is called Hottentot's-head; small articles, as necklaces and snuff-boxes, are sometimes made from its seeds.

stanhope (stan′hōp), n. [So called after a Mr. Stanhope, for whom it was orig. contrived.] A light two-wheeled carriage without a top.

When the carriages met again, he stood up in his stanhope, . . . ready to doff his hat.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xix.

Stanhopea (stan-hō′pē-ạ), n. [NL. (Frost, 1829), named after Philip Henry, Earl Stanhope, president of the London Medico-botanical Society.] A genus of orchids, of the tribe Vandeæ, type of the subtribe Stanhopieæ. It is characterized by a loose raceme of a few large flowers with spreading and nearly equal sepals, a thick fleshy lip which is commonly wavy or twisted, a straight erect or incurved column usually prolonged and two-winged above, and pollinia with flattened stalks and scale-shaped glands. The peculiar lip is highly polymorphous and complex, bearing lateral lobes which are often thickened into a solid mass forming a spherical, oblong, or saccate hypochilum, a middle lobe or epichilium which is itself often three-lobed and attached by a distinct joint, and sometimes at its base other appendages, lobes or horns—the metachilium. There are about 20 species, natives of tropical America from Brazil to Mexico. They are epiphytes with very short stems bearing many sheaths and a single large plicate leaf. The stem soon thickens into a fleshy pseudobulb, from the base of which the flower-stem proceeds. The flowers are very remarkable for their structure, size, and rich colorings, usually brown-spotted, yellow, or purple; for their great fragrance, whence the recently introduced perfume called stanhopea; and for their growth downward, not upward as in ordinary plants—a habit first discovered by the accidental breaking of a flower-pot in which the blossoms had buried themselves in the earth. They are now cultivated under glass in hard-wood baskets with interstices through which the flowers protrude.

Stanhope lens, press. See lens, press[1].

stanhoscope (stan′hō-skōp), n. [< Stanho(pe lens) + Gr. σκοπεῖν, view.] A form of simple magnifying-glass, a modification of the Stanhope lens, in which the surface away from the eye is plane instead of convex.

staniel (stan′yel), n. [Also stanyel, stannyel, also (with the consonant i or y following n assimilated to n) stannel, formerly stanncll, or assibilated to ch, stanchel, stanchil; < ME. staniel, stanyel, earlier stangelle*, < AS. stāngella, stāngilla, a kestrel (erroneously used to gloss L. pellicanus) (= G. steingall, a staniel), < stān, stone, rock, + gella*, gilla*, < gellan, gillan, giellan, yell, scream, a secondary form related to galan, sing: see stone and yell, gale[1]. The word is thus nearly similar in its second element to nightingale[1]. The E. form stone-gall is partly from the AS. with the long vowel retained, and partly (as to the 2d element) due to the G. form; the form standgall, with the same terminal syllable, simulates stand, and the form standgale (as if equiv. to windhover) is a simulated form, as if < stand + gale[1].] The kestrel or windhover, Falco tinnunculus or Tinnunculus alaudarius. See cut under Tinnunculus.

Fab. What a dish o' poison has she dressed him!
Sir To. And with what wing the staniel checks at it!
Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 124.

stanielry (stan′yel-ri), n. [< staniel + -ry.] The act or practice of hawking with staniels; ignoble falconry. Lady Allmony, sig. I. 4. (Nares.) stank[1] (stangk), n. [E. dial. also assibilated stanch (see stanch[2]); < ME. stank, stanc, staunke, stang, < OF. estang, F. étang (Walloon estank, stanke) = Pr. estanc = Sp. estanque = Pg. tanque (ML. stanca), a dam to hem in water, < L. stagnum, a pool of stagnant water: see stagnate, stagnant. Cf. stanch[1]; also cf. tank.] 1. A body of standing water; a pool; a pond. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

And alle be it that men clepen it a See, zit is it nouther See ne Arm of the See; for it is but a Stank of fresche Watir, that is in lengthe 100 Furlonges.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 115.

Seint John seith that avowtiers shullen been in helle in a stank brennynge of fyr and of brymston.
Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

2. A tank; a ditch. [Prov. Eng. or Scotch.]

stank[1] (stangk), v. t. [< stank[1], n., or perhaps an unassibilated form of the related verb stanch[1], q. v.] To dam up. Fletcher, Poems, p. 154. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

stank[2]† (stangk), a. [Early mod. E. also staunck, stanke; < OF. estanc, tired, = Pr. estanc, still, immovable, = It. stanco, tired; cf. Sp. estanco, = Pg. estanque, water-tight, stanch: see stanch[3]. staunch[2], a doublet of stank[2].] Exhausted; weary. Florio; Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

stank[3]† (stangk). Old preterit of stink.

stank-hen (stangk′hen), n. [< stank[1] + hen[1].] The moor-hen or gallinule, Gallinula chloropus. [Scotch.]

stankie (stang′ki), n. Same as stank-hen. [Scotch.]

stannaburrow (stan′ạ-bur″ō), n. [Prep. stannerburrow, < stanner + burrow[2], 1, 2.] See the quotation (the etymology there suggested is erroneous).

Leaving the stream a little to the right, we shall notice several small heaps of stones placed at intervals along the slope. These little mounds, which are met with in various parts of Dartmoor, are called by the moor-men stannaburrows, which name is probably derived from the same root as the word stannary, and they were probably tin bounds set up by the miners.
W. Crossing, Ancient Crosses of Dartmoor, p. 69, quoted [in N. and Q., 7th ser., V. 45.

stannary (stan′ạ-ri), a. and n. [Also stannery; < ML. stannaria, a tin-mine, < L. stannum, tin: see stannum.] I. a. Relating to tin, tin-mines, or the working of tin: as, "stannary courts," Blackstone, Com., III. vi.—Stannary court, a court instituted at a very early period in English history for the purpose of regulating the affairs of the tin-mines and tin-miners of Cornwall.

II. n.; pl. stannaries (-riz). A region or district in which tin is mined: the English form of the Latin stannaria (or stammaria, as written in a charter of the third year of King John, 1201). The miners themselves were called stannatores or (rarely) stammatores.

For they wrongfully claim all the County of Devon to be their Stannary.
Petition to Parliament, 1 Ed. III., MS. in Rec. Office, [quoted in De La Beche's Geol. Rep. on Cornwall.

If by public laws the mint were ordained to be onely supplied by our stannaries, how currently would they pass for more precious than silver mines!
Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 17.

stannate (stan′āt), n. [< stann(ic) + -ate[1].] A salt of stannic acid.

stannel (stan′el), n. See staniel.

stanner (stan′ėr), n. [Origin obscure.] A small stone; in the plural, gravel. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

stannery[1], a. and n. See stannary.

stannery[2] (stan'ėr-i), a. [ME. stann[e]ry; < stanner + -y[1].] Gravelly; stony. Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 86. [Obsolete or Scoteh.]

stannic (stan'ik), a. [= F. stannique; < L. stannum, tin, + -ic.] Of or pertaining to tin; procured from tin: speeifically applied to those compounds in whieh tin appears as a quadrivalent atom: as, stannic acid, $SnO(OH)_2$, a hydrate obtained from stannous oxid, which unites with bases to form salts ealled stannates.

stanniferous (sta-nif'ẹ-rus), a. [< L. stannum, tin, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Containing or affording tin.

stannine (stan'in), n. [< L. stannum, tin, + -ine[2].] A brittle steel-gray or iron-blaek ore of tin, of a metallic luster, eonsisting of the sulphids of tin, copper, and iron, and generally zinc, found in Cornwall; tin pyrites. Also ealled, from its eolor, bell-metal ore.

stannite (stan'it), n. [< L. stannum, tin, + -ite[2].] Same as stannine.

stannotype (stan'ō-tīp), n. [< L. stannum, tin, + Gr. τυπος, type.] In photog., a pieture taken on a tin plate; a tin-type or ferrotype. Imp. Diet.

stannous (stan'us), a. [< L. stannum, tin, + -ous.] Of, pertaining to, or eontaining tin: speeifically applied to those compounds in which tin appears as a bivalent atom: as, stannous oxid, or protoxid of tin (SnO).

stannum (stan'um), n. [L. stannum, stagnum, tin, also an alloy of silver and lead (> It. stagno = Sp. estaño = Pg. estanho = Pr. estanh = F. étain, tain, tin); perhaps the same as L. stagnum, pool, applied to a mass of fluid metal: see stank[1], stagnate. Cf. Bret. steañ = Corn. steañ = W. ystaen = Gael. staoin = Manx stainney, tin (< L. ?): see tin.] Tin.

stannyel, n. See staniel.

stant[1]†. A eontraeted form of standeth, third person singular present indicative of stand.

stant[2] (stant), n. Same as stent[2].

stantion† (stan'shọn), n. [Appar. a var. of stanchion.] Same as stemson.

stanza (stan'zä), n. [Formerly also stanzo, stanze (= Sp. estancia = G. stanze = F. stance), in def. 2; < It. stanza, Olt. stantia, prop. an abode, lodging, chamber, dwelling, stanee, also a stanza (so called from the stop or pause at the end of it), < ML. stantia, an abode: see stance.] 1. Pl. stanze (-ze). In arch., an apartment or division in a building; a room or chamber: as, the stanze of Raphael in the Vatiean.—2. In versification, a series of lines arranged in a fixed order of sequenee as regards their length, metrical form, or rimes, and constituting a typical group, or one of a number of similar groups, composing a poem or part of a poem. Stanza is often used interchangeably with strophe — strophe, however, being used preferably of ancient or quantitative, and stanza of modern or accentual and rimed poetry. In the latter the stanza often consists of lines identical in form throughout, the arrangement of rimes alone defining the group of lines. Such a stanza is not properly a strophe. A couplet is not regarded as a stanza, and a triplet is rarely so designated. Compare verse. Abbreviated st.

> Horace . . . confines himself strictly to one sort of verse, or stanza, in every Ode. Dryden, Misc., Pref.

stanzaed (stan'zạd), a. [< stanza + -ed[2].] Having stanzas; consisting of stanzas: as, a two-stanzaed poem.

stanzaic (stan-zā'ik), a. [< stanza + -ic.] Consisting of or relating to stanzas; arranged as a stanza. E. C. Stedman, Viet. Poets, p. 381.

stanzic (stan'zik), a. [< stanz-a + -ic.] Same as stanzaic. E. Wadham, Eng. Versifieation, p. 92.

stanzo† (stan'zō), n. An obsolete form of stanza. Shak., As you Liko it, ii. 5. 18.

stapet, a. See stapen.

stapedial (stā-pē'di-ạl), a. [< NL. stapedius + -al.] 1. Stirrup-shaped: as, the stapedial bone of the ear.—2. Pertaining to the stapes or its representative, whatever its form.—Stapedial ligament, the annular ligament of the stapes, connecting the foot or base of the stirrup with the margin of the fenestra ovalis.—Stapedial muscle, the stapedius.—Stapedial nerve, a tympanic branch of the facial which innervates the stapedial muscle.

Stapedifera (stap-ẹ-dif'ẹ-rä), n. pl. [NL. (Thaeher, 1877), neut. pl. of stapedifer: see stapediferous.] Those animals whieh have a stapes, as mammals, birds, reptiles, and amphibians; all vertebrates above fishes.

stapediferous (stap-ẹ-dif'ẹ-rus), a. [< NL. stapedifer, < ML. stapes, a stirrup, + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] Having a stapes; of or pertaining to the Stapedifera.

stapedius (stā-pē'di-us), n.; pl. stapedii (-ī). [NL., < ML. stapes, a stirrup: see stapes.] The stapedial muscle; a muscle of the tympanum actuating the stapes of some animals. In man the stapedius arises from a cavity hollowed out in the pyramid of the petrosal bone; its tendon passes out of a little hole in the apex of the pyramid, and is inserted into the neck of the stapes. Its action draws the head of the stapes backward, and also causes the stapes to rotate a little on a vertical axis drawn through its own center. The name is correlated with incudius and malleus. See cut under hyoid.

Stapelia (stā-pē'li-ạ), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), named after J. B. van Stapel, a Dutch physician and botanist (died 1636).] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Asclepiadaceæ, type of the tribe Stapelieæ. It is characterized by flowers with a wheel-shaped or reflexed corolla without appendages between the five valvate lobes, and with the tube short and broadly bell-shaped or almost wanting, and by a double corona, the outer of five horizontally spreading lobes alternate with the anthers, the inner of five scales produced into erect or arching horns. There are over 70 species, natives of South Africa. Their short fleshy leafless stems are produced into four prominent angles, which are coarsely toothed, sometimes bearing transient rudiments of leaves at the apex of the new growths. Numerous dark tubercles give the stems a grotesque appearance. Some are cultivated under glass for their beautiful and varied flowers, which are commonly very large, some reaching 12 inches (S. gigantea sometimes 14 inches) in diameter, of singular structure and often exquisitely marbled or dotted. In other species they are dingy or unattractive, usually coarse, thick, fleshy, and short-lived, and in most species exhale transiently a fetid odor as of carrion, attracting flies, which deposit their eggs upon them in large quantities. Their colors are largely the livid-purple and lurid-reddish, yellow, and brownish hues which are associated with disagreeable odors also in Rafflesia, Aristolochia, Amorphophallus, and others of the largest flowers. They are sometimes called carrion-flowers; S. bufonia is known, from its blotches, as toad-flower; and S. Asterias, from its spreading narrow-parted corolla, as starfish-flower.

Stapelia variegata.

Stapelieæ (stap-ẹ-lī'ẹ-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Stapelia + -eæ.] A tribe of gamopetalous plants, of the order Asclepiadaceæ. It is characterized by valvate and commonly fleshy corollalobes, waxy erect or laterally placed pollen-masses solitary in each anther-cell, and obtuse or retuse unappendaged anthers, closely incumbent over the disk of the stigma or partly immersed in it. The 16 genera are plants commonly with short, thick, fleshy stems, coarsely angled or tubercled, without leaves except in the East Indian genus Frerea; one genus, Boucerosia, extends into Europe in Spain and Sicily; the others, as Stapelia, the type, are mostly South African.

stapen†, stapet, a. Stepped; advanced. Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 270.

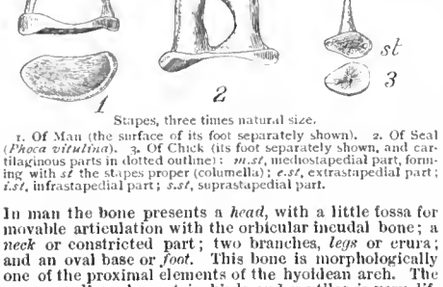
stapes (stā'pēz), n. [NL., < ML. stapes, a stirrup, < OHG. stapf, staph = D. stap, etc., a step: see step, and cf. staffier.] In zoöl. and anat., the inmost one of the three auditory ossicles of man and other mammals, situated in the tympanum, or middle ear. The stapes is connected on the one hand with the incus, and on the other with the fenestra ovalis, and is moved by a small muscle called the stapedius. The name is derived from the close resemblance in shape of the human stapes to a stirrup.



Stapes, three times natural size.

1. Of Man (the surface of its foot separately shown). 2. Of Seal (Phoca vitulina). 3. Of Chick (its foot separately shown, and cartilaginous parts in dotted outline): m.st, mediostapedial part, forming with st the stapes proper (columella); e.st, extrastapedial part; i.st, infrastapedial part; s.st, suprastapedial part.

In man the bone presents a head, with a little fossa for movable articulation with the orbicular incudal bone; a neck or constricted part; two branches, legs or crura; and an oval base or foot. This bone is morphologically one of the proximal elements of the hyoidean arch. The corresponding element in birds and reptiles is very differently shaped, and is sometimes called stapes, oftener columella. It is rod-like or columellar, with an expanded base fitting the fenestra ovalis, the other end usually showing a cross-bar. Parts of such a stapes are distinguished as mediostapedial, the main shaft; extrastapedial, the part beyond the cross-bar; infrastapedial, the lower arm of the cross-bar; and suprastapedial, the upper arm of the cross-bar — the last being supposed to represent the incus of mammals. Some of these parts may be wanting, or only represented by a ligament, or coalesced with a part of the mandibular arch. The stapes or columella furnishes the primitive actual or virtual connection of the hyoidean arch with the perlotic capsule. See stapedial, columella, 3 (b), and cuts under hyoid, Pythonidæ, and tympanic.—Annular ligament of the stapes. See ligament and stapedial.

Staphisagria (staf-i-sag'ri-ạ), n. [NL. (Tragus, 1546), < ML. staphisagria, staphysagria, stafisagria, etc.; prop. two words, staphis agria, < Gr. as if σταφὶς ἀγρία*: σταφίς, a dried grape, a raisin, also (in L. staphis) the plant staves-acre; ἀγρία, fem. of ἄγριος, wild, < ἀγρός, a field, the country. The E. form of the name is stavesacre, q. v.] A former genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Ranunculaceæ. It is now classed as a section of the genus Delphinium, and as such distinguished by a short spur, from three to five ovaries forming bladdery few-seeded capsules, and biennial habit. See Delphinium and stavesacre, also ointment of stavesacre (under ointment).

staphisagric (staf-i-sag'rik), a. [< Staphisagria + -ic.] Contained in or derived from Staphisagria. Eneye. Diet.

staphisagrine (staf-i-sag'rin), n. [< Staphisagria + -ine[2].] A poisonous amorphous alkaloid, soluble in ether and in water, obtained from Delphinium Staphisagria, or stavesaere.

staphyle (staf'i-lē), n. [NL., < Gr. σταφυλή, a bunch of grapes, also the uvula when swollen.] The uvula.

Staphylea (staf-i-lē'ạ), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), abridged from Staphylodendron (Tournefort, 1700), < L. staphylodendron, a shrub thought to have been S. pinnata; prob. so named from its clustered fruit, < Gr. σταφυλή, a bunch of grapes, + δένδρον, a tree.] A genus of polypetalous plants, type of the order Staphyleaceæ. It is characterized by an ovary which is two- or three-parted to the base, contains numerous biseriate ovules, and ripens into an inflated and bladdery membranous capsule, discharging its few seeds at the apex of the two or three lobes. There are 4 species, natives of Europe, the Himalayas, Japan, and North America. They are shrubs with numerous roundish branches, bearing opposite stipulate leaves, each composed of from three to five leaflets, which are involute in the bud and are furnished with stipels. The white flowers, with five erect petals, hang from nodding panicles or racemes. The large and peculiar fruit is the source of the common name bladder-nut. (See cut under nectary.) S. pinnata, also called bay-nut, common in hedgerows and thickets in Europe, bears hard smooth nuts sometimes used for rosaries.

Staphyleaceæ (staf'i-lē-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1825), < Staphylea + -aceæ.] An order of polypetalous plants, of the cohort Sapindales, long classed as a suborder of the Sapindaceæ, from which it is distinguished by its regular bisexual flowers with the five stamens inserted outside of the base of the disk, by albuminous and sometimes arillate seeds with a straight embryo, and by opposite simple or compound leaves. It includes 16 species, of 4 genera, of which Staphylea is the type; of the others, Turpinia includes a number of small trees and shrubs with roundish berry-like fruit, mostly of tropical Asia and America, and Euscaphis a few Japanese shrubs bearing coriaceous follicles. See cut under bladder-nut.

staphyline (staf'i-lin), a. [< Gr. σταφύϊνος, of or pertaining to a bunch of grapes, < σταφυλή, a bunch of grapes, also the uvula.] 1. Having the form of a bunch of grapes; botryoidal.—2. Pertaining to the uvula or to the entire palate.—Staphyline glands, palatine glands.

staphylinid (staf-i-lin'id), n. and a. I. n. A rove-beetle, as a member of the Staphylinidæ.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the family Staphylinidæ; staphylinine.

Staphylinidæ (staf-i-lin'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Leach, 1817), < Staphylinus + -idæ.] A large and important family of brachelytrous clavicorn beetles, commonly ealled rove-beetles. They resemble the Pselaphidæ in having short elytra, but differ in having the abdomen flexible and consisting of eight ventral segments. The antennæ are generally eleven-jointed, the labial palpi three-jointed, and the maxillary four-jointed. The short truncate elytra usually leave most of the abdomen exposed, and this, when the beetles are disturbed, is turned up over the back, as if the insects were about to sting. A familiar example is the Ocypus olens, known as the cocktail and devil's coach-horse. (See Goerius, and cut under devil.) Some species discharge an odorous fluid from the tip of the abdomen. The larvæ resemble the adults, and are found under bark, in fungi, decaying plants, and the excrement of animals, in ants' nests, hornets' nests, and the nests of certain birds. It is one of the largest and most wide-spread of the families of Coleoptera. About 1,000 species are known in America north of Mexico, and about 5,000 in the whole world. Also Staphilinides, Staphylini, Staphyliniæ, Staphylinida, Staphylinii, Staphylinites. See cuts under Homalium and rove-beetle.

staphyliniform (staf-i-lin'i-fôrm), a. [< NL. Staphylinus, q. v., + L. forma, form.] Resembling a rove-beetle; related to the Staphylinidæ.

staphylinine (staf-i-lin'in), a. Of or pertaining to the Staphylinidæ.

Staphylinus (staf-i-lī′nus), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1758), < Gr. σταφυλῖνος, a kind of insect, < σταφυλή, a bunch of grapes.] The typical genus of the family Staphylinidæ, formerly corresponding to that family in a broad sense. Used with various limitations, it is now made type of the restricted family, and characterized by having the maxillary palpi with the fourth joint equal to or longer than the third, the marginal lines of the thorax united near the apex, the ligula emarginate, the middle coxæ slightly separate, and the abdomen narrowed at the tip. The species are numerous, and among them are the largest forms in the family. Twenty-one are known in America north of Mexico, and about 100 in the whole world.

staphylion (stā-fil′i-on), n. [NL., < Gr. σταφύλιον, dim. of σταφυλή, the uvula: see staphyle.] The median point of the posterior nasal spine. Török.

staphylitis (staf-i-lī′tis), n. [< staphyle, the uvula, + -itis.] Uvulitis.

staphyloma (staf-i-lō′mä), n.; pl. staphylomata (-ma-tä). [NL., < Gr. σταφίλωμα, a defect in the eye, < σταφυλή, a bunch of grapes.] A name given to certain local bulgings of the eyeball. —Staphyloma corneæ, a protrusion involving more or less of the corneæ, such as may result from preceding ulceration. Also called anterior staphyloma.—Staphyloma corneæ pellucidum, conical cornea. Also called staphyloma pellucidum.—Staphyloma posticum, posterior staphyloma; sclerochoroiditis in the back part of the eye, resulting in a thinning of the coats and consequent bulging and progressive myopia.

staphylomatic (staf″i-lō-mat′ik), a. [< staphyloma(t-) + -ic.] Characterized or affected by staphyloma.

staphylomatous (staf-i-lom′a-tus), a. [< staphyloma(t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to or of the nature of staphyloma.

staphyloplasty (staf′i-lō-plas″ti), n. [< Gr. σταφυλή, the uvula, + πλάσσειν, form, shape: see plastic.] In surg., an operation for restoring the soft palate when it is defective.

staphylorrhaphy (staf-i-lor′a-fi), n. [< Gr. σταφυλή, the uvula, + ῥαφή, a sewing.] In surg., the plastic operation for cleft palate, consisting in uniting the mucous membrane across the cleft. Also called cionorrhaphia, palatorrhaphy.

staphylotome (staf′i-lō-tōm), n. [< Gr. σταφυλοτόμον, a knife for excising the uvula, < σταφυλή, the uvula, + τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] In surg., a knife for operating upon the uvula or the palate.

staphylotomy (staf-i-lot′ō-mi), n. [< Gr. σταφυλοτομία, the excision of the uvula, < σταφυλή, the uvula, + -τομία, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut: see -tomy.] In surg., amputation of the uvula.

staple[1] (stā′pl), n. [< ME. stapel, stapil, stapylle, stapul, < AS. stapel, stupol, stapul, a prop, post (= OS. stapal = OFries. stapul, stapel = MD. stapel, D. stapel, a prop, foot-rest, a seat, pile, heap, = MLG. LG. stapel (> G. stapel), a pile, staple, stocks, = OHG. staffal, staphal, MHG. staffel, stapfel, G. staffel, a step, = Sw. stapel, a pile, heap, stocks, = Dan. stabel, a pile, stack, stocks (on which a ship is built), hinge), < stapan, step: see step. Cf. staple[2].] 1†. A post; a prop; a support.

> Under ech stapel of his bed,
> That he niste, four thai hid.
> The Seryn Sages, 201. (Halliwell.)

2. A loop of metal, or a bar or wire bent and formed with two points, to be driven into wood to hold a hook, pin, or bolt.

> Massy staples,
> And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts.
> Shak., T. and C., Prol., l. 17.

3. In founding, a piece of nail-iron with a flat disk riveted to the head, and pointed below, used in a mold to hold a core in position. E. H. Knight.—4. Of a lock, same as box[2], 13.—5. In musical instruments of the oboe class, the metallic tube to which the reeds are fastened, and through which the tone is conveyed from them into the wooden body of the instrument.—6. In coal-mining, a shallow shaft within a mine. [North. Eng.]—Seizin by hasp and staple. See hasp.—Staple of a press, the frame or uprights of a hand printing-press. C. T. Jacobi, Printers' Vocab.

staple[1] (stā′pl), v. t.; pret. and pp. stapled, ppr. stapling. [< staple[1], n.] To support, attach, or fix by means of a staple or staples. Eleet. Rev., XVI. 5.

staple[2] (stā′pl), n. and a. [Early mod. E. staple; < OF. estaple, estape, F. étape (ML. stapula), a market, store, store-house, = G. stapel (Sw. stapel, Dan. stabel, in comp.), < MD. stapel = MLG. LG. stapel, a market, emporium, appar. a particular use of stapel, a pile, heap: see staple[1].] I. n. 1. A settled mart or market; an emporium; a town where certain commodities are chiefly taken for sale. In England, formerly, the king's staple was established in certain ports or towns, and certain goods could not be exported without being first brought to these ports to be rated and charged with the duty payable to the king or the public. The principal commodities on which customs were levied were wool, skins, and leather, and these were originally the staple commodities.

> The first ordination of a Staple, or of one onely setled Mart-towne for the vttering of English woolls & woollen fells, instituted by the sayd K. Edward.
> Hakluyt's Voyages, To the Reader.

Hence—2. A general market or exchange.

> Tho. O sir, a Staple of News! or the New Staple, which you please.
> P. Jun. What 's that?
> Fash. An office, sir, a brave young office act up. . . .
> P. Jun. For what?
> Tho. To enter all the News, sir, of the time.
> Fash. And vent it as occasion serves.
> B. Jonson, Staple of News, I. 1.

3. A commercial monopoly formed by a combination of merchants acting under the sanction of the royal privilege of fairs and markets. Foreign staple was the system of trade carried on by this monopoly on the continent; home staple was the business organized by it in leading towns in England.

> Their ayme in this ediet is, if possible, to draw for the loue of currents the staple of diuers merchandise to that citty. Sir Thomas Roe, Negotiations (London, 1740).

4. The principal commodity grown or manufactured in a locality, either for exportation or home consumption—that is, originally, the merchandise which was sold at a staple or mart.

> The prices of bread-stuffs and provisions, the staples of the North, and of cotton and tobacco, the staples of the South, were high, not only absolutely, but relatively.
> Taussig, Tariff History, p. 19.

5. The principal element of or ingredient in anything; the chief constituent; the chief item.

> He has two very great faults, which are the staple of his bad side. Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, vi.

> Politics, theology, history, education, public improvements, personal matters, are conversational staples.
> Harper's Mag., LXXX. 466.

6. The material or substance of anything; raw or unmanufactured material.—7. The fiber of any material used for spinning, used in a general sense and as expressive of the character of the material: as, wool of short staple; cotton of long staple, etc.—Corrector of the staple†. See corrector.—Merchant of the staple†. See merchant.—Ordinance of Staple. Same as Statute of Staple.—Staple of land, the particular nature and quality of land.—Statute of Staple, or Ordinance of Staple, an English statute of 1353 (27 Edw. III., st. 2), recognizing the ancient custom of staple, and confirming the rights and privileges of merchants under it.—Statute staple. See statute.

II. a. 1. Pertaining to or being a mart or staple for commodities: as, a staple town.

> Flanders is Staple, as men tell mee,
> To all nations of Christianitie.
> Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 189.

2. Mainly occupying commercial enterprise; established in commerce: as, a staple trade.—3. According to the laws of commerce; marketable; fit to be sold.

> Will take off their ware at their own rates, and trouble not themselves to examine whether it be staple or no.
> Swift.

4. Chief; principal; regularly produced or made for market: as, staple commodities.

staple[2] (stā′pl), v.; pret. and pp. stapled, ppr. stapling. [< staple[2], n.] I. intrans. To erect a staple; form a monopoly of production and sale; establish a mart for such purpose. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 437. [Rare.]

II. trans. 1. To furnish or provide with a staple or staples.

> Fleeces stapled with such wool
> As Lemnster cannot yield more finer stuff.
> Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay.

2. To sort or classify according to the length of the fiber: as, to staple wool.

staple-house (stā′pl-hous), n. [MD. stapelhuys; as staple[2] + house[1].] A warehouse where commodities chargeable with export duties were stored. See staple[2], n., 1.

> In their large staple-house on the Thames . . . were stored the collections of raw produce—wool, tin, and hides the chief of them—which England sent away to foreign countries. F. Martin, Hist. of Lloyd's, p. 2.

staple-punch (stā′pl-punch), n. A bifurcated punch used for pricking holes in blind-slats and rods for the reception of staples.

stapler (stā′plėr), n. [< staple[2] + -er[1].] 1†. A merchant of the staple; a monopolist. See staple[2], 3.

> You merchants were wont to be merchant staplers.
> Middleton, Family of Love, I. 3.

2. One employed in assorting wool according to its staple.

> Mr. Glegg retired from active business as a wool-stapler.
> George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, I. 12.

staple-right (stā′pl-rīt), n. A right, possessed by municipalities of the Netherlands, and thence introduced into the New Netherlands (New York), of compelling passing vessels either to stop and offer their merchandise for sale first of all in the market-place of the town, or to pay a duty.

star[1] (stär), n. [(a) < ME. starre, sterre, storre, steorre (pl. starres, sterres, steores, sterren, steorren), < AS. steorra = OS. sterro = OFries. stera = MD. sterre, starre, D. ster, star = MLG. sterre = OHG. sterro, MHG. sterre, a star; with formative -ra (perhaps orig. -na, -r-na being assimilated to -r-ra, the word being then orig. ult. identical with the next). (b) E. dial. starn, stern, < ME. stern, sterne (perhaps < Scand.) = MD. sterne = MLG. sterne, stern, LG. steern = OHG. sterno, MHG. sterne (also OHG. MHG. stern), G. stern, < Icel. stjarna = Sw. stjerna = Dan. stjerne = Goth. stairno, a star; with a formative -na, -no (seen also in the orig. forms of sun and moon), from a base ster*; cf. L. stella (for sterula*) (> It. stella = Sp. Pg. estrella = OF. estoile, F. étoile), star, = Gr. ἀστήρ (ἀστερ-), a star, ἄστρον (> L. astrum), usually in pl. ἄστρα, the stars (with prothetic a-), = Corn. Bret. steren = W. seren (for steren*) = Skt. tārā (for stārā*), a star, star, pl., the stars, = Zend star, star; root unknown. If, as has been often conjectured, star has a connection with √star, strew, it must be rather as 'strown' or 'sprinkled' over the sky than as 'sprinkler' of light.] 1. Any celestial body which appears as a luminous point. In ordinary modern language star is frequently limited to mean a fixed star (see below). In astrology the stars, especially the planets, are supposed to exercise an influence upon human destinies.

> Hise eyen twynkled in his heed aryght,
> As doon the sterres in the frosty nyght.
> Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 268.

> There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars. Luke xxi. 25.

> The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
> But in ourselves, that we are underlings.
> Shak., J. C., i. 2. 140.

> You are, thanks to your stars, in mighty credit.
> Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 114.

Hence—2. Destiny. [Rare.]

> I was not born unto riches, neither is it, I think, my star to be wealthy. Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 13.

3. Anything which resembles a star.

> His charger trampling many a prickly star
> Of sprouted thistle on the broken stones.
> Tennyson, Geraint.

Specifically—(a) A star-shaped figure made of silver, gold, or both, sometimes set with jewels, worn usually upon the breast as one of the insignia of a higher class of an honorary order. See insignia, and cuts under bath, garter, and Order of St. Michael (under order).

> While peers, and dukes, and all their sweeping train,
> And garters, stars, and coronets appear.
> Pope, R. of the L., i. 85.

(b) The asterisk (*). See asterisk. (c) In pyrotechny, a small piece of inflammable composition, which burns high in air with a colored flame, and presents the appearance of a star. (d) A group of cracks or flaws radiating from a center.

> Three times slipping from the outer edge,
> I bump'd the ice into three several stars.
> Tennyson, The Epic.

(e) A spot of white or light color on the forehead of an animal.

> Onward, caballito mio,
> With the white star in thy forehead!
> Longfellow, Spanish Student, iii. 6.

(f) In zoöl.: (1) A star-animal; a starfish, or other echinoderm of obviously radiate figure, as a brittle-star, feather-star, lily-star, sand-star, or sun-star. See the compounds. (2) A stellate sponge-spicule; an aster. (g) In a copper-plate or lithographic printing-press, the radial spokes on the roller, which serve as handles. E. H. Knight.

4. Figuratively, a person of brilliant or attractive qualities; one who shines preëminently; specifically, the chief and preëminent actor or actress of a dramatic or operatic company.

> Sole star of all that place and time,
> I saw him—in his golden prime,
> The Good Haroun Alraschid.
> Tennyson, Arabian Nights.

> If I were now to receive a message from the planet Mars offering me a star engagement, I could not be more astonished than I was on that day. J. Jefferson, Autobiog., iii.

5. In her., same as estoile.—6. In fort., a small fort having five or more points, or salient and reëntering angles flanking one another. Also called star-fort.—7. An additional life bought by a player in the game of pool. [Eng.]

> Only one star is allowed in a pool; and when there are only two players left in, no star can be purchased.
> Encyc. Brit., III. 677.

Aberration of a star. See aberration, 5.—Apparent place of a star. See apparent.—Binary star. See multiple star.—Blazing star. See blazing-star and Aletris.—Circumpolar star. See circumpolar.—Complement of a star. See complement.—Diurnal accelera- tion of the fixed stars. See acceleration.—Double star. See multiple star.—Equestrian star. See Hippeastrum.—Evening star. See evening.—Falling star. See falling-star.—Fixed star, a self-luminous body at so vast a distance from the earth as to appear a point of light, almost motionless except for the diurnal revolution of the heavens. To the naked eye the brighter stars appear to have radiating lines of light; but these are due to imperfections of vision, and are different for different observers. All the fixed stars twinkle (see twinkling). In a good telescope on a fine night a star shows a minute round disk surrounded by concentric rings; but these phenomena are mere effects of diffraction, and no instrument yet constructed can enable the eye to detect a fixed star's real breadth. The stars differ in brilliancy, and in this respect are said to have different magnitudes (see magnitude, 5). These in many cases are changeable (see variable star). The number of stars in the whole heavens brighter than a given magnitude m may be approximately calculated by the formula $(3.3)^{1.05+m}$. The stars are very irregularly distributed in the heavens, being greatly concentrated toward the Milky Way. This is particularly true of first-magnitude stars, and again of faint telescopic stars. There are many clusters of stars, among which the Pleiades, the Hyades, Præsepe, Coma Berenices, and the cluster in the sword-handle of Perseus are visible to the naked eye. Other stars are associated in systems of two, three, or more. (See multiple star.) To most eyes the stars appear yellow, but some are relatively pale, others chromatic yellow, and still others ruddy. There are many ruddy stars in the part of the Galaxy near Lyra. L. M. Rutherfurd of New York first showed that in reference to their spectral lines the fixed stars fall under several distinct types. Type I, according to the usual nomenclature, embraces spectra showing strong hydrogen-lines, all others being very faint. These belong without exception to pale stars, such as Sirius, Vega, Procyon, Altair, Spica, Fomalhaut, Regulus, Castor. Type II embraces spectra showing many strong metallic lines, like the sun. Almost all such stars are chrome, as Arcturus, Capella, Aldebaran, Pollux; but a few are pale, as Deneb and Elwald, and a few ruddy. Type III consists of banded spectra, the bands shading away toward the red. These stars are all ruddy, and probably all variable. They embrace Betelgeuze, Antares, Mira Ceti, Sheat, Menkar, Pishpai, Rasalgethi. Type IV consists of spectra having three broad bands shaded away toward the blue end. These all belong to very ruddy stars, of which none are bright, and none seem to be variable. Type V consists of spectra showing bright lines. Such stars are few; their magnitudes and colors are variable. Upon careful comparison of the spectra of stars with those of the chemical elements they contain, it is found that the lines are shifted a little along the spectrum toward one end or the other, according as the star is receding from or approaching the earth. The apparent places of the fixed stars are affected in recognized ways by diurnal motion, precession, nutation, aberration, and refraction. In addition, each star has a very slow motion of its own, called its proper motion. There are very few cases in which this is so great as to have carried the star over the breadth of the moon's disk since the beginning of the Christian era. Many stars in one neighborhood of the heavens show, in many cases, like proper motions—a phenomenon first remarked by R. A. Proctor, and termed by him star-drift. But the average proper motion of the stars is away from a radiant under the left hand of Hercules, showing that the solar system has a relative motion toward that point. This is sufficient to carry a sixth-magnitude star 4.″4 in a century. The parallax (that is to say, the amount by which the angle at the earth between the star and the sun falls short of 90° when the angle at the sun between the star and the earth is equal to 90°) has been measured only for a few stars, and these few have been selected with a view of finding the largest parallaxes. That of α Centauri, which is the largest, is nearly a second of arc. It is so difficult to measure parallax otherwise than relatively, and to free its absolute amount from variations of latitude, diurnal nutation, refraction, etc., that very little can be said to be known of the smaller parallaxes. It appears, however, that small stars have nearly as great parallaxes as bright ones where the proper motions are not large. The various methods of ascertaining the distances of the stars depend upon three independent principles. The first method is from the parallax, by means of which the distance of the star is calculated by trigonometry. The second method depends on the ascertaining of the speed at which the star is really moving by the shifting of the spectral lines, and then observing its angular motion. In the case of a double star, its motion in the line of sight at elongation can be measured with the spectroscope; and from this, its orbit being known, its rate of motion at conjunction can be deduced. The third method supposes the ratio of the amount of light emitted by the star to that emitted by the sun to be known in some way, whereupon the ratio of apparent light will show the relative distances. All these methods show that even the nearest stars are hundreds of thousands of times as remote as the sun. In order to reach more exact results it may be necessary to combine two methods so as to determine and eliminate the constant of space, or the amount by which the sum of the angles of a triangle of unit area differs from two right angles. For the present, no decisive result has been reached. The distances of stars having been ascertained, the weights of double stars may be deduced from their elongations and periods. These weights seem to be of the same order of magnitude as that of the sun, not enormously greater or smaller.—French stars, three asterisks arranged in this form ⁂, used as a mark of division between different articles in print.—Gloaming, golden, informed, lunar, Medicean star. See the adjectives.—Lone Star State, the State of Texas.—Meridian altitude of a star. See altitude.—Morning star, a planet, as Jupiter or Venus, when it rises after midnight. Compare evening star.—Multiple star, a group of two to six fixed stars within a circle of 15″ radius; in a few cases, however, stars distant a minute or more from one another are considered to form a double star. Thus, ε and 5 Lyræ, distant from one another upward of 3′, and separable by the naked eye, each of these consisting of two components distant about 3½″ from one another, with some other stars between them, are sometimes called collectively a multiple star. The multiple stars are distinguished as double [tr. of Gr. ἀστὴρ διπλοῦς], triple, quadruple, quintuple, and sextuple. Many of the double stars are merely the one in range of the other, without having any physical connection, and these are called optical doubles. The components of other double stars revolve the one round the other, apparently under the influence of gravitation, forming systems known as binary stars. The orbits of about forty of these are known. Thus, the two stars of α Centauri, distant from one another by 17.″5, revolve in about 80 years. In many cases the two components of a double star have complementary colors.—Nebulous star. See nebula.—North star, the north polar star. See pole-star, 1.—Order of the Star of India (in the full style The Most Exalted Order of the Star of India), an order for the British Possessions in India, founded in 1861. The motto is, "Heaven's light our guide." The ribbon is light-blue with white stripes near the edge.—Periodic star, a variable star of class II, IV, or V.—Polar star. Same as pole-star, 1.—Shooting star, a meteor in a state of incandescence seen suddenly darting along some part of the sky. See aërolite, meteor, 2, and meteoric.—Standard stars. See *standard*².—Star coral, cucumber, cut, route. See coral, cucumber, etc.—Star-jelly, a name for certain gelatinous algæ, as Nostoc commune: so called originally in the belief that they are the remains of fallen stars.—Star of Bethlehem. (a) A pilgrim's sign having the form of a star, sometimes like a heraldic mullet with six straight rays, sometimes like an estoile with wavy rays. (b) See star-of-Bethlehem.—Stars and bars, the flag adopted by the Confederate States of America, consisting of two broad bars of red separated by one of white, with a blue union marked with white stars equal in number to the Confederate States.—Stars and stripes, the flag of the United States, consisting of thirteen stripes, equal to the number of the original States, alternately red and white, with a blue union marked with white stars equal to the whole number of States.—Star service. See star route, under route.—Stone mountain star, a name proposed by Meehan for the composite plant Gymnolomia Porteri, found only on Stone Mountain in Georgia.—The seven stars†. See seven.—The watery star†, the moon, as governing the tides. Shak., W. T., i. 2. 1.—To bless one's stars. See *bless*¹.—To see stars, to have a sensation as of flashes of light, produced by a sudden jarring of the head, as by a direct blow.—Variable star, a fixed star whose brightness goes through changes. These stars are of five classes. Class I comprises the "new" or temporary stars, about a dozen in number, which have suddenly appeared very bright, in several cases far outshining Sirius, and after a few months have faded almost entirely away. All these stars have appeared upon the borders of the following semicircle of the Milky Way. They show bright lines in their spectra, indicating incandescent hydrogen. Such was the star which appeared 133 B. C. in Scorpio, and led Hipparchus to the study of astronomy, thus inaugurating sound physical science; others appeared in 1572, 1604, and 1866. Class II embraces stars which go through a cycle of changes, more or less regular, in from four to eighteen months, most of them being at least a hundred times as bright at their maxima as at their minima. These stars are for the most part ruddy. Class III embraces irregularly variable stars, without any definite periods, and commonly undergoing very moderate changes. Class IV embraces stars which in a few days, or a month at most, go through changes of one or two magnitudes, sometimes with two maxima and two minima. Class V embraces stars which remain of constant brightness for some time, and then almost suddenly, at regular intervals, are nearly extinguished, afterward as quickly regaining their former brilliancy.

star¹ (stär), v.; pret. and pp. starred, ppr. starring. [< *star*¹, n.] I. trans. 1. (a) To set with stars, literally or figuratively.

> Budding, blown, or odour-faded blooms,
> Which star the winds with points of coloured light.
> Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, iii. 3.

> Fresh green turf, starred with dandelions.
> B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 231.

Hence—(b) To set with small bright bodies, as gems, spangles, or the like. (c) To set with figures of stars forming a sowing or sprinkle.—2. To transform into a star or stars; set in a constellation. [Rare.]

> Or that starr'd Ethiop queen that strove
> To set her beauty's praise above
> The Sea-Nymphs, and their powers offended.
> Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 19.

3. To affix a star or asterisk to (a written or printed word) for a distinctive purpose, especially, in a list, to distinguish the name of a deceased person. [Colloq.]—4. To crack so as to produce a group of radiating lines.—To star a glaze, to cut out a pane of glass. Tufts, Glossary, 1798. [Thieves' jargon.]

II. intrans. 1. To shine as a star; be brilliant or prominent; shine above others; specifically (theat.), to appear as a star actor.

> Doggett . . . had been playing for a week [1699] at the above [Lincoln's Inn Fields] theatre for the sum of £30. This is the first instance I know of the starring system.
> Doran, Annals of the Stage, I. 186.

2. In the game of pool, to buy an additional life or lives. Encyc. Brit., III. 677. [Eng.]—To star it (theat.), to appear as a star, especially in a provincial tour.

star² (stär), n. [Also starr; Heb. (Chal.) shetar, shtar, a writing, deed, or contract, < shāṭar, cut in, grave, write.] An ancient name for all deeds, releases, or obligations of the Jews, and also for a schedule or inventory. See star-chamber. Also spelled starr.

star-animal (stär'an″i-mal), n. A radiate, especially a starfish.

star-anise (stär'an″is), n. 1. The aromatic fruit of a Chinese shrub or small tree long supposed to be the Illicium anisatum of Linnæus, but recently determined to be a distinct species, I. verum (named by J. D. Hooker). The fruit is a stellate capsule of commonly eight carpels, each of which contains a single brown shining seed. The seeds contain four per cent. of a volatile oil with the odor and flavor of aniseed, or rather of fennel. Star-anise is used in China as a condiment and spice, and in continental Europe to flavor liquors. Also Chinese anise.

Star-apple (Chrysophyllum Cainito).
a, the fruit, transverse section.

2. The tree which yields star-anise.—Star-anise oil, the aromatic essential oil of star-anise seed. The commercial anise-oil is chiefly obtained from the star-anise.

star-apple (stär'ap′l), n. The fruit of the West Indian Chrysophyllum Cainito, or the tree which produces it. The fruit is edible and pleasant, of the size of an apple, a berry in structure, having ten or eight cells, which, when cut across before maturity, give the figure of a star. Also called cainito.

starbeam (stär'bēm), n. A ray of light emitted by a star. Watts, Two Happy Rivals. [Rare.]

star-bearer (stär'bār″ėr), n. Same as Bethlehemite, 3 (a).

star-blasting (stär'blās″ting), n. The pernicious influence of the stars. Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 60.

starblind (stär'blīnd), a. [< ME. starblind,* < AS. stærblind (= OFries. starblind, stareblind, starublind = MD. D. sterblind = MLG. starblint = OHG. starablint, MHG. starblint, G. starblind = Icel. starblindr* (in starblinda, blindness) = Sw. starrblind = Dan. starblind, stærblind), < stær (= MD. ster = MLG. star = OHG. stara, MHG. stare, star, G. staar = Sw. starr = Dan. stær), cataract of the eyes, + blind, blind: see *stare*¹ and blind.] Seeing obscurely, as from cataract; purblind; blinking.

starboard (stär'bōrd or -bėrd), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also starboord, steereboord; < ME. sterebourde, stereburde, < AS. steórbord (= MD. stierboord, stuyrboord, D. stuurboord = MHG. stiurbort, G. steuerbord = Icel. stjörnbordhi = Sw. Dan. styrbord), < steór, a rudder, paddle, + bord, side: see *steer*¹, n., and board, n. Hence (< Teut.) OF. estribord, striborde, F. tribord = Sp. estribord, estribor = Pg. estibordo = It. stribordo, starboard.] I. n. Naut., that side of a vessel which is on the right when one faces the bow: opposed to port (larboard). See *port*⁴.

> He tooke his voyage directly North along the coast, hauing vpon his steereboord alwayes the desert land, and vpon the leereboord the maine Ocean. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 4.

II. a. Naut., pertaining to the right-hand side, or being or lying on the right side, of a vessel.

starboard (stär'bōrd or -bėrd), v. t. [< starboard, n.] To turn or put to the right or starboard side of a vessel: as, to starboard the helm (when it is desired to have the vessel's head go to port).

starboard (stär'bōrd or -bėrd), adv. [< starboard, a.] Toward the right-hand or starboard side. Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Trophies.

starbowline† (stär'bō″linz), n. pl. Naut., the men of the starboard watch.

starbright (stär'brīt), a. Brilliant; bright as a star. Emerson, The Day's Ration.

star-bush (stär'bůsh), n. A middle-sized South African evergreen, Grewia occidentalis.

star-buzzard (stär'buz″ärd), n. An American buteonine hawk of the genus Asturina, having a system of coloration similar to that of the goshawks or sparhawks, but the form and proportions of the buzzards. The star-buzzards are a small group of handsome hawks peculiar to America. The gray star-buzzard, Asturina plagiata, is found in the United States.

Gray Star-buzzard (Asturina plagiata).

star-capsicum (stär'kap″si-kum), n. See Solanum.

star-catalogue (stär'kat″a-log), n. An extended list of fixed stars, as complete as possible within specified limits of magnitude, place, etc., with their places and magnitudes.

starch[1] (stärch), a. [< ME. starche, sterch*, assibilated form of stark, sterk, strong, stiff: see stark[1].] 1†. Strong; hard; tough.

Nis non so strong, ne sterch, ne kene,
That mai ago deathes wither blench.
MS. Cott. Calig., A. ix. f. 243. (Halliwell.)

2. Rigid; hence, precise.

When tall Susannah, maiden starch, stalk'd in.
Crabbe, Works, IV. 85.

starch[2] (stärch), n. [< ME. starche (= MHG. sterke, G. stärke), starch; so called from its use in stiffening; < starch[1], a., stiff: see starch[1], a.] 1. A proximate principle of plants, having the formula $C_6H_{10}O_5$, or a multiple of that formula. It is a white opaque glistening powder, odorless, tasteless, and insoluble in cold water, alcohol, or ether. Aqueous solutions containing free iodine impart to starch an intense and very characteristic blue color. It is not crystalline, but occurs naturally in fine granules, which are always made up of fine concentric layers. Whether the grains contain a small quantity of another chemical body, allied to but not identical with starch, called starch cellulose or farinose, is a disputed question. When heated with water to 60°–70° C., starch swells up and forms a paste or jelly. When heated in the dry state to 150°–200° C., it is converted into dextrine, a soluble gum-like body much used as a cheap substitute for gum arabic. Heated with dilute mineral acids, or digested with saliva, pancreatic juice, diastase, or certain other enzyms, starch dissolves, and is resolved into a number of products, which are chiefly dextrine, maltose, and dextrose—the last two being fermentable sugars. The malting of barley by brewers effects this change in the starch of the grain, and so prepares it for vinous fermentation. Starch is widely distributed, being formed in all vegetable cells containing chlorophyl-grains under the action of sunlight, and deposited in all parts of the plant which serve as a reserve store of plant-food. Hence grains and seeds contain an abundance of it, also numerous tubers and rhizomes, as the potato and the arrowroot, and the stem and pith of many plants, as the sago-plant. The chief commercial sources of supply are wheat, corn, and potatoes. From these it is manufactured on an extensive scale, being used in the arts, for laundry purposes, sizing, finishing calicos, thickening colors and mordants in calico-printing, and for other purposes. Starch forms the greatest part of all farinaceous substances, particularly of wheat-flour.

Cells of Potato (Solanum tuberosum) filled with starch-grannles; a, a, granules. (All greatly magnified.)

2. A preparation of commercial starch with boiling (or less frequently cold) water, used in the laundry or factory for stiffening linen or cotton fabrics before ironing. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries the starch used for ruffs, cuffs, etc., was frequently colored, yellow being at one time extremely fashionable. Blue starch was affected by the Puritans.

A certaine kinde of liquide matter which they call starch, wherein the devill hath willed them to wash and dive their ruffes, which, when they be dry, will then stand stiffe and inflexible about their necks. Stubbes, Anat. of Abuses.

3. A stiff, formal manner; starchedness. [Colloq.]

This professor is to give the society their stiffening, and infuse into their manners that beautiful political starch which may qualify them for levees, conferences, visits.
Addison, Spectator, No. 305.

The free-born Westerner thinks the blamed Yankee puts on a yard too much style — the Boys don't approve of style — and suavely proposes to take the starch out of him. Great American Language, Cornhill Mag., Oct., 1888, p. 375.

Animal starch. Same as glycogen, 1.—Glycerite of starch, one part of starch and nine of glycerin, triturated into a smooth mixture.—Poland starch, blue starch.—Starch bandage, a bandage stiffened, after application, with starch.—Starch bath, a hot-water bath containing starch, used in eczema.

starch[2] (stärch), v. t. [< starch[2], n.] To stiffen with starch.

She made her wash, she made her starch.
Queen Eleanor's Fall (Child's Ballads, VII. 296).

star-chamber (stär'chām″bėr), n. [Early mod. E. starre-chamber (poetically chamber of starres (Skelton), late AF. chambre des estoylles), < late ME. sterre-chambre (Rolls of Parliament, 1450–1460, cited by Oliphant, in "New English," I. 293), also sterred chamber, i. e. 'starred chamber' (ML. camera stellata); so called because the roof was orig. ornamented with stars, or for some other reason not now definitely known (see the quot. from Minsheu); < star[1] + chamber. The statement, made doubtfully by Blackstone and more confidently by other writers (as by J. R. Green, "Short Hist. of the Eng. People," p. 115), that the chamber was so called because it was made the depository of Jewish bonds called stars or starrs (< Heb. shetar) rests on no ME. evidence, and is inconsistent with the ME. and ML. forms of the name; it is appar. due to the tendency of some writers to reject etymologies that are obvious, on the unacknowledged ground that being obvious they must be "popular" and therefore erroneous.] 1. [cap.] In Eng. hist., a court of civil and criminal jurisdiction at Westminster, constituted in view of offenses and controversies most frequent at the royal court or affecting the interests of the crown, such as maintenance, fraud, libel, conspiracy, riots resulting from faction or oppression, but freely taking jurisdiction of other crimes and misdemeanors also, and administering justice by arbitrary authority instead of according to the common law. Such a jurisdiction was exercised at least as early as the reign of Henry VI., the tribunal then consisting of the Privy Council. A statute of 3 Henry VII. authorized a committee of the council to exercise such a jurisdiction, and this tribunal grew in power (although successive statutes from the time of Edward IV. were enacted to restrain it) until it fell into disuse in the latter part of the reign of Henry VIII. In 31 Henry VIII., c. 8, a statute declared that the king's proclamation should have the force of law, and that offenders might be punished by the ordinary members of the council sitting with certain bishops and judges "in the Sterr Chamber at Westm. or elsewhere." In 1640 the court of Star Chamber was abolished by an act of 16 Charles I., c. 10, reciting that "the reasons and motives inducing the erection and continuance of that court [of Star Chamber] do now cease." As early as the reign of Edward III. a hall in the palace at Westminster, known as the "Chambre des Estoyer" (or "Etoilles"), was occupied by the king's council; and about the reign of Henry VII. appear records of "the Lords sitting in the Star Chamber," or "the Council in the Star Chamber," from which time it seems to have been regarded as the court of the Star Chamber. There is a difference of opinion whether the tribunal sitting under the act of 3 Henry VII. should be deemed the same court or not.

Starre-chamber, Camera stellata, is a Chamber at the one end of Westminster Hall, so called, as Sir Thomas Smith conjecture th, lib. 2. cap. 4, either because it is so full of windowes, or because at the first all the roofe thereof was decked with Images of guilded starres. The latter reason is the likelier, because Anno 25. H[en]. 8. cap. I. it is written the sterred chamber. Now it hath the signe of a Starre ouer the doore, as you one way enter therein.
Minsheu (1617).

2. Any tribunal or committee which proceeds by secret, arbitrary, or unfair methods: also used attributively: as, star-chamber proceedings; star-chamber methods.

starch-cellulose (stärch'sel″ū-lōs), n. See cellulose[2].

starch-corn† (stärch'kôrn), n. Spelt.

starched (stärcht or stär'ched), p. a. [< starch[2] + -ed[2].] 1. Stiffened with starch.—2†. Stiffened, as with fright; stiff.

Some with black terrors his faint conscience haited,
That wide he star'd, and starched hair did stand.
P. Fletcher, Purple Island, vii.

3. Stiff; precise; formal.

Look with a good starched face, and ruffle your brow like a new boot. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, i. 1.

starchedly (stär'ched-li), adv. Stiffly; as if starched. Stormonth.

starchedness (stär'ched-nes), n. The state of being starched; stiffness in manners; formality. L. Addison, West Barbary, p. 105.

starcher (stär'chėr), n. [< starch[2] + -er[1].] One who starches, or whose occupation it is to starch: as, a clear-starcher. Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange.

starch-gum (stärch'gum), n. Same as dextrine.

starch-hyacinth (stärch'hī″a-sinth), n. See hyacinth, 2.

starchiness (stär'chi-nes), n. The quality of being starchy, or of abounding in starch.

starchly (stärch'li), adv. [< starch[1] + -ly[2].] In a starchy manner; with stiffness of manner; formally.

I might . . . talk starchly, and affect ignorance of what you would be at. Swift, To Rev. Dr. Tisdall, April 20, 1704.

starchness (stärch'nes), n. Stiffness of manner; preciseness. Imp. Dict.

starchroot (stärch'röt), n. See starchwort.

starch-star (stärch'stär), n. In Characeæ, a bulblet produced by certain species of Chara for propagative purposes: it is an underground node.

starch-sugar (stärch'shug″ăr), n. Same as dextrose.

starchwoman† (stärch'wum″an), n. A woman who sold starch for the stiffening of the great ruffs worn in the sixteenth century. The starch-woman was a favorite go-between in intrigues. See the quotation.

The honest plain-dealing jewel her husband sent out a boy to call her (not bawd by her right name, but starch-woman); into the shop she came, making a low counterfeit curtsey, of whom the mistress demanded if the starch were pure gear, and would be stiff in her ruff.
Middleton, Father Hubbard's Tales.

starchwort† (stärch'wėrt), n. The wake-robin, Arum maculatum, whose root yields a starch once used for fine laundry purposes, later prepared as a delicate food under the name of English or Portland arrowroot. This was chiefly produced in the Isle of Portland, where the plant is called starchroot. See cuts under Araceæ and Arum.

starchy[1] (stär'chi), a. [< starch[1] + -y[1].] Stiff; precise; formal in manner.

Nothing like these starchy doctors for vanity! . . . He cared much less for her portrait than his own.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, xxii.

starchy[2] (stär'chi), a. [< starch[2] + -y[1].] Consisting of starch; resembling starch.

star-clerk† (stär'klėrk), n. One learned in the stars; an astronomer. [Rare.]

If, at the least, Star-Clarks be credit worth.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 3.

star-cluster (stär'klus″tėr), n. A compressed group of six or more fixed stars; but most of the collections so called contain a hundred stars or more.

star-conner† (stär'kon″ėr), n. [< star[1] + conner[1].] A star-gazer. Gascoigne, Fruites of Warre.

starcraft (stär'kraft), n. Astrology. Tennyson, Lover's Tale, i.; O. Cockayne, Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft of Early England [title]. [Rare.]

star-cross† (stär'krôs), a. Same as star-crossed. Middleton, Family of Love, iv. 4.

star-crossed (stär'krôst), a. Born under a malignant star; ill-fated. Shak., R. and J., Prol., l. 6.

star-diamond (stär'dī″a-mond), n. A diamond that exhibits asterism.

star-drift (stär'drift), n. A common proper motion of a number of fixed stars in the same part of the heavens. See fixed star, under star[1].

star-dust (stär'dust), n. Same as cosmic dust (which see, under cosmic).

Mud gathers on the floor of these abysses [of the ocean] . . . so slowly that the very star-dust which falls from outer space forms an appreciable part of it.
A. Geikie, Geological Sketches, xiii.

stare[1] (stâr), v.; pret. and pp. stared, ppr. staring. [< ME. staren, < AS. starian = OHG. starēn, MHG. staren, G. starren, stare, = Icel. stara, stare (cf. G. stieren = Icel. stira = Sw. stirra = Dan. stirre, stare); connected with starblind, and perhaps with D. staar = G. starr, fixed, rigid (cf. G. stier, storr, stiff, fixed); cf. Gr. στερεός, fixed, solid, Skt. sthira, fixed, firm.] I. intrans. 1. To gaze steadily with the eyes wide open; fasten an earnest and continued look on some object; gaze, as in admiration, wonder, surprise, stupidity, horror, fright, impudence, etc.

This monk bigan upon this wyf to stare.
Chaucer, Shipman's Tale, l. 124.

Look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret.
Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 230.

To blink and stare,
Like wild things of the wood about a fire.
Lowell, Agassiz, ii. 1.

2. To stand out stiffly, as hair; be prominent; be stiff; stand on end; bristle.

And her faire locks up stared stiffe on end.
Spenser, F. Q., III. xii. 36.

The winter has commenced; . . . even the coats of the hard-worked omnibus horses stare, as the jockeys say.
The New Mirror, II. 255 (1843).

3†. To shine; glitter; be brilliant.

A [as?] stremande sternez quen strothe men slepe
Staren in welkyn in wynter nygt.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), i. 115.

Thei ben y-sewed with whigt silk, . . .
Y-stongen with stiches that stareth as silner.
Piers Plowman's Creed (E. E. T. S.), l. 553.

Her fyrie eyes with furious sparkes did stare.
Spenser, F. Q., III. vii. 39.

4. To be unduly conspicuous or prominent, as by excess of color or by ugliness. Compare staring, 3.

The homeliness of the sentiment stares through the fantastic encumbrance of its fine language, like a clown in one of the new uniforms! Sheridan, The Critic, i. 1.

=Syn. 1. Gaze, Gape, Stare, Gloat. Gaze is the only one of these words that may be used in an elevated sense. Gaze represents a fixed and prolonged look, with the mind absorbed in that which is looked at. To gape is in this connection to look with open mouth, and hence with the bumpkin's idle curiosity, listlessness, or ignorant wonder: one may gape at a single thing, or only gape about. Stare expresses the intent look of surprise, of mental weakness, or of insolence; it implies fixedness, whether momentary or continued. Gloat has now almost lost the meaning of looking with the natural eye, and has gone over into the meaning of mental attention; in either sense it means looking with ardor or even rapture, often the delight of possession, as when the miser gloats over his wealth.

II. trans. To affect or influence in some specified way by staring; look earnestly or fixedly at; hence, to look at with either a bold or a vacant expression.

I will stare him out of his wits.
Shak., M. W. of W., ll. 2. 291.

To stare one in the face, figuratively, to be before one's eyes, or undeniably evident to one.

They stare you still in the face.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

stare[1] (stãr), n. [< stare[1], v.] The act of one who stares; a fixed look with eyes wide open, usually suggesting amazement, vacancy, or insolence.

stare[2] (stãr), n. [< (a) ME. stare, ster, < AS. stær = OHG. stara, MHG. star, G. star, staar, stahr = Icel. starri, stari = Sw. stare = Dan. stær; (b) also AS. stearn = G. dial. starn, staren, storn = L. sturnus (> It. storno, storo), dim. sturnellus (> OF. estournel, F. étourneau), sturninus (> Sp. estornino = Pg. estorninho), starling; cf. Gr. ψάρ, NGr. ψαρόνι, ψαρόνιον, starling.] A starling.

The stare [var. starling] that the counsel can hewrye.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowles, l. 348.

And, as a falcon frays
A flock of stares or caddesses, such fear brought his assays Amongst the Trojans and their friends.
Chapman, Iliad, xvi. 541.

Cape stare, cockscomb-stare, silk stare. See Cape starling, etc., under starling[1].—Ceylonese stare. See Trachycomus.

stare[3] (stãr), a. [Cf. D. staar = G. starr, stiff: see stare[1].] Stiff; weary. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stare[4] (stãr), n. [Formerly also starr; origin obscure.] The marram or matweed, Ammophila arundinacea: same as halm, 3; also applied to species of Carex. [Prov. Eng.]

stareblind†, a. See starblind.

staree (stãr-ē′), n. [< stare[1] + -ee[1].] One who is stared at. [Rare.]

I as starer, and she as staree.
Miss Edgeworth, Belinda, iii. (Davies.)

starer (stãr′ėr), n. [< stare[1] + -er[1].] One who stares or gazes. Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 256.

starf†. An obsolete preterit of starve.

star-facet (stär′fas″et), n. One of the small triangular facets, eight in number, surrounding the table on a brilliant-cut stone. See brilliant.

starfinch (stär′finch), n. The redstart, Ruticilla phœnicura. See first cut under redstart.

starfish (stär′fish), n. 1. An echinoderm with five or more arms radiating from a central disk: applied to all the members of the Asteroidea and Ophiuroidea (see these words). These belong to the phylum Echinodermata, which contains also the sea-urchins, holothurians, crinoids, etc., though these are not usually called starfishes. In some of the asteroids or starfishes proper the disk is enlarged so as to take in nearly or quite the whole length of the rays, so that the resulting figure is a pentagon, or even a circle; but in such cases the stellate structure is evident on examination. Such are known as cushion-stars. In the ophiurians the reverse extreme occurs, the body being reduced to a small circular central disk, with extremely long slender rays, which in some, as the euryaleans, are branched into several thousand ramifications. (See cut under basket-fish.) The commonest type of starfish has five rays; whence such are popularly known as five-fingered jack or fivefingers. (See cuts under Asterias and Echinaster.) Those with more than five rays are often called sun-starfish or sun-stars. (See Heliaster, and cuts under Brisinga and Solaster.) The skin of starfishes is tough and leathery, and usually indurated with calcareous plates, tubercles, spines, etc. It is so brittle that starfishes readily break to pieces, sometimes shivering like glass into many fragments. This fragility is at an extreme in the ophiurians, sometimes, on this account, called brittle-stars. (See cut under Astrophyton.) Lost arms are readily replaced by a new growth, if the body of the starfish is not broken. On the under side of the animal's rays may be observed rows of small holes; these are the ambulacra, through which protrude many small soft, fleshy processes—the pedicels, tube-feet, or ambulacral feet—by means of which the creatures crawl about. The ambulacra converge to a central point on the under side, where is the oral opening or mouth. The animals are extremely voracious, and do great damage to oyster-beds. They abound in all seas at various depths, and some of them are familiar objects on every sea-coast. Some of the free crinoids of stellate figure are included under the name starfishes, though they are usually called lily-stars or feather-stars. Encrinites are fossil starfishes of this kind. (See cuts under Comatulidæ and encrinite.) Very different as are the appearances superficially presented by a starfish, a sea-urchin, a holothurian, and a crinoid, their fundamental unity of structure may be easily shown. If, for instance, a common five-fingered jack should have its arms bent up over its back till they came to a center opposite the mouth, and then soldered together in that position by plates filling the spaces between the arms, it would make the globular or oblate spheroid figure of a sea-urchin. If a starfish should turn over on its back, and have a stem grow from the center, and then have its arms come together like the petals of a lily, it would represent a crinoid. If, again, the starfish should have its arms reduced to mere rudiments, or to tentacular appendages of an elongated leathery body, it would represent a holothurian, sea-slug, or trepang. These are the principal types of echinoderms—in fact less unlike one another than are the several stages they undergo in development, for which see Asteroidea, Bipinnaria, Brachiolaria, echinopædium, and pluteus.

Brittle Starfish (Luidia clathrata).

2. The butter-fish or dollar-fish.—3. In her., a bearing representing a five-pointed star, the rays surrounded by short waving flames or the like, and having a small circle in the center.—Brittle starfish, a brittle-star; any ophiurian.—Cushion starfish, a cushion-star, as Ctenodiscus crispatus.—Serpent-starfish. Same as serpent-star.—Starfish-flower. See Stapelia.

star-flower (stär′flou″ėr), n. A plant with bright stellate flowers. (a) Species of Trientalis, especially T. Americana, the chickweed-wintergreen. (b) Species of the liliaceous genus Brodiæa, formerly classed as Triteleia, of which B. uniflora, a delicately colored free-blooming early flower from Brazil, is the spring star-flower. (c) Species of Sternbergia. (d) Any one of a few other plants.

star-fort (stär′fôrt), n. Same as star[1], 8.

star-fruit (stär′frōt), n. A smooth tufted water-plant, Damasonium stellatum, of southern Europe and eastern Asia: so called from the long-pointed radiating carpels. Another name is thrumwort.

star-gage (stär′gāj), n. See under gage[2].

star-gaze (stär′gāz), v. i. To gaze at the stars; especially, to make astronomical or astrological observations: used chiefly in the present participle.

Struck dead with ladies' eyes!—I could star-gaze
For ever thus. Shirley, Maid's Revenge, i. 2.

star-gazer (stär′gā″zėr), n. 1. One who gazes at the stars; especially, an astrologer, or, humorously, an astronomer.

Let now the astrologers, the stargazers, the monthly prognosticators, stand up, and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee. Isa. xlvii. 13.

2. A book-name of fishes of the family Uranoscopidæ: so called from the vertical eyes. The Naked Star-gazer (Astroscopus guttatus).

name originally designated Uranoscopus europæus. Astroscopus guttatus is a common stargazer of the United States.

star-gazing (stär′gā″zing), a. Given to the observation and study of the stars.

star-gazing (stär′gā″zing), n. Attentive observation and study of the stars; astrology or astronomy. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 63.

star-gooseberry (stär′gös″ber-i), n. The fruit of a moderate-sized tree, Phyllanthus (Cicca) distichus, native in Java and Madagascar, and cultivated throughout India. It is a globose drupe, three- to five-lobed, acid, and eaten raw, cooked, or pickled.

star-grass (stär′grȧs), n. A name of various grass-like plants with starry flowers, or other radiate feature. Such are species of Aletris, Hypoxis, and Rhynchospora; also Callitriche, more often water-starwort, so called from its stellate tufts of leaves. See the genus names, and cut under Hypoxis.

star-hawk† (stär′hȧk), n. A goshawk; a hawk of the genus Astur: so called from the stellate markings of the adult birds. See goshawk, and cut under Astur.

star-head (stär′hed), n. A plant of the genus Scabiosa, section Asteracephalus.

star-hyacinth (stär′hī″a-sinth), n. A species of squill, Scilla amœna, a very early garden-flower with indigo-blue petals and a conspicuous yellowish-green ovary.

starier†, n. [ME., appar. for starrier*, irreg. < starre, sterre, a star.] An astronomer.

Without any maner of nicite of starieres imaginacion.
Testament of Love, iii.

starik (star′ik), n. [< Russ. starikŭ, the fulmar, lit. 'an old man': so called from its gray head.] An auklet or murrelet; one of several small birds of the family Alcidæ, inhabiting the North Pacific. The name was originally applied to the ancient auk or murrelet, Synthliborhamphus antiquus, and thence extended to various related aukletes of the genus Simorhynchus and others, as the crested starik, S. cristatellus. See cuts under auklet and Synthliborhamphus.

staring (stãr′ing), p. a. 1. Standing out prominently and fixedly, or fixed and wide open, as eyes; gazing fixedly or intently; fixed.

He cast on me a staring loke, with colour pale as death.
Surrey, Complaint of a Dying Lover.

How gaunt the Creature is—how lean
And sharp his staring bones!
Wordsworth, Peter Bell.

2. Bristling, as hair; standing stiffly or on end; harsh or rough, as pelage.—3. Striking the eye too strongly; conspicuous; glaring; gaudy: as, staring colors.

Starynge or achynyng aa gaye thyngys. Rutilana.
Prompt. Parv., p. 472.

The staring red was exchanged for a tone of colouring every way pleasing to the eye.
B. Hall, Travels in N. A., I. 282.

staringly (stãr′ing-li), adv. In a staring manner; with fixed look. Imp. Dict.

stark[1] (stärk), a. [< ME. stark, starc, sterk, sterc, stearc, < AS. stearc, strong, stiff, = OS. stark = OFries. sterk, sterik = D. sterk = MLG. stark, sterk, LG. sterk = OHG. starc, starch, MHG. starc, G. stark = Icel. sterkr = Sw. stark = Dan. stærk, strong, orig. stiff, rigid; cf. OHG. storchanên, become rigid, Icel. storkna = Dan. störkne, coagulate, Goth. ga-staurknan, dry up; Lith. stregti, become rigid. Hence starch[1], starch[2].] 1. Stiff; rigid, as in death.

For fyre doth aryfle and doth drye vp a mannes blode, and doth make sterke the synewes and ioyntes of man.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 244.

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff
Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 3. 42.

2. Stubborn; stiff; severe.

She that helmed was in starke stourea.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 380.

He is only debonair to those
That follow where he leads, but stark as death
To those that cross him. Tennyson, Harold, ii. 2.

3. Stout; stalwart; strong; powerful.

Me caryinge in his clawes starke
As lightly as I were a larke.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 545.

Stark heer, boy, stout and strong beer!
Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, iii. 1.

King James shall mark
If age haa tamed these sinews stark.
Scott, L. of the L., v. 20.

4†. Great; long.

Kay smote Sonygrenx so that he fill from his horse that he lay a starke while with-oute sterynge of hande or foote.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 214.

5. Entire; perfect; utter; downright; sheer; pure; mere.

Consider, first, the stark security
The commonwealth is in now.
B. Jonson, Catiline, i. 1.

What e're they may vnto the world professe—
All their best wisdome is starke foolishnesse.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 147.

Ha! ha! ha! a silly wise rogue would make one laugh more than a stark fool. Wycherley, Country Wife, ii. 1.

stark[1] (stärk), adv. [< ME. stark, used appar. first in stark ded, lit. 'stiff dead,' 'dead and stiff'; being stark[1], a., taken in a quasi-adverbial sense, and extended later to a few other adjectives describing a person's condition (rarely in other uses): as, stark blind, stark drunk, stark mad, etc.] Wholly; entirely; absolutely: used with a few particular adjectives, as stark dead, stark blind, stark drunk, stark mad, stark naked, rarely with other adjectives.

With the same cours he smote a-nother that he fill stark deed, and plonged in depe a-monge hem.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 514.

In the enening it grew starke calme.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's True Travels, II. 134.

I drank stark drunk, and, waking, found myself
Cloath'd in this farmer's suit, as in the morning.
Tomkis (?), Albumazar, v. 9.

He was 86 years of age, stark blind, deafe, and memory lost, after having ben a person of admirable parts and learning. Evelyn, Diary, May, 1704.

I'll never forgive you if you don't come back stark mad with rapture and impatience—if you don't, egad, I'll marry the girl myself. Sheridan, The Rivals, iii. 1.

The captain had not a guess of whither we were blown; he was stark ignorant of his trade.
R. L. Stevenson, Master of Ballantrae, ii.

stark[1] (stärk), v. t. [< stark[1], a.] To make stark, stiff, or rigid, as in death. Sir H. Taylor, St. Clement's Eve, v. 5.

stark[2] (stärk), a. [Abbr. of stark-naked.] Naked; bare.

There is a court dress to be instituted (to thin the drawing-rooms), stiff-bodied gowns and bare shoulders. What dreadful discoveries will be made both on fat and lean! I recommend to you the idea of Mrs. C. when half-stark.
Walpole, Letters (1762), II. 346. (Davies.)

The apple and pear were still unclothed and stark.
H. W. Preston, Year in Eden, i.

starken (stär'kn), v. t. [< stark[1] + -en[1].] To make unbending or inflexible; stiffen; make obstinate. Sir H. Taylor, Edwin the Fair, iv. 4.

Starkey's soap. See soap.

starkly (stärk'li), adv. In a stark manner; stiffly; strongly; rigidly. Shak., M. for M., iv. 2. 70.

stark-naked (stärk'nā'ked), a. See stark[1], adv., and start-naked.

starkness (stärk'nes), n. Stiffness; rigidity; strength; grossness.

How should wee have yeelded to his heavenly call, had we beene taken, as they were, in the starknes of our ignorance? Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

starless (stär'les), a. [< star[1] + -less.] Having no stars visible, or no starlight: as, a starless night.

starlet (stär'let), n. [< star[1] + -let.] 1. A small star.

Nebulæ may be comparatively near, though the starlets of which they are made up appear extremely minute.
H. Spencer.

2. A kind of small starfish.

starlight (stär'līt), n. and a. [< star[1] + light[1].]

I. n. 1. The light proceeding from the stars.

Nor walk by moon
Or glittering starlight without thee is sweet.
Milton, P. L., iv. 656.

Hence — 2. A faint or feeble light.

Scripture only, and not any star-light of man's reason.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iii. 11.

II. a. Lighted by the stars, or by the stars only.

A starlight evening, and a morning fair.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, i. 548.

starlike (stär'līk), a. [< star[1] + like[2].] 1. Resembling a star; stellated; radiated like a star: as, starlike flowers. — 2. Bright; lustrous; shining; luminous: as, starlike eyes.

starling[1] (stär'ling), n. [< ME. starling, sterling, sterlynge; < stare (< AS. stær), a stare, starling (see stare[2]), + -ling[1].] 1. An oscine passerine bird, of the family Sturnidæ and genus Sturnus, as S. vulgaris of Europe. The common starling or stare is one of the best-known of British birds. It is 8½ inches long when adult; black, of metallic luster, iridescing dark-green on some parts, and steel-blue, purplish, or violet on others, and variegated nearly throughout with pale-buff or whitish tips of the feathers. The wings and tail are duller-black, the exposed parts of the feathers frosted or silvered, with velvety-black and buff edgings. The bill is yellowish, and the feet are reddish. Immature, winter, and female birds are less lustrous, and more varicgated with the ochery- or tawny-brown, and have the bill dark-colored. Starlings live much about buildings, and nest in holes of walls, crannies of rock, openings in hollow trees, etc. They are sociable and gregarious, sometimes going in large flocks. They are often caged, readily tamed, and may be taught to whistle tunes, and even to articulate words. The name starling is extended to all birds of the family Sturnidæ, and some others of the sturnoid series; also, erroneously, to the American birds of the family Icteridæ, sometimes known collectively as American starlings. The last belong to a different series, having only nine primaries, etc. The bird with which the name is specially connected in this sense is Agelæus phœniceus, the common marsh-blackbird, often called red-winged starling. The name of meadow-starling is often applied to Sturnella magna. See also cuts under Agelæinæ and meadow-lark.

Common European Starling (Sturnus vulgaris).

Looking up, I saw . . . a starling hung in a little cage. "I can't get out — I can't get out," said the starling.
Sterne, Sentimental Journey (The Passport).

2. One of a breed of domestic pigeons which in color resemble the starling. — 3. Same as rock-trout, 2. — American starlings. See def. 1. — Black starling, a melanistic variety of the common starling. — Cape starling or stare (Latham, 1783), the black and white Indian starling of Edwards (1751), the contra from Bengal of Albin (1740), Sturnopastor contra: so called as erroneously described from the Cape of Good Hope (as l'étourneau du Cap de Bonne Espérance of Brisson, 1760), but found chiefly in India. It is 9 inches long; the ground-color of the plumage is black, much glossed with greenish and bronze tints and varied with white; the bill and a bare space above the eyes are orange. — Chinese starling (Edwards, 1743), the so-called crested grackle (Latham, 1783), Acridotheres cristatellus of central and southern China, and also the Philippine island Luzon (where it is supposed to have been introduced). It is 10½ inches long; the bill is yellow with rose-colored base; the feet and eyes are orange; the plumage is glossy-black with various sheen, and also varied with white; and the head is crested. — Cockscomb-starling or -stare (Latham, 1783), a remarkable African and Arabian starling, Dilophus carunculatus, having in the adult male the head mostly bare, with two erect caruncles or combs on the crown, and a pendent wattle on each side of the face; the plumage is chiefly isabelline gray, with black wings and tail, the former varied with white. — Glossy starlings, various birds, chiefly African, forming a subfamily Lamprotornithinæ (or Juidinæ) of the family

Glossy Starling (Spreo bicolor).

Sturnidæ, as of the genera Lamprotornis, Lamprocolius, Spreo (or Notauges). Of the last-named there are several species, as S. bicolor of South Africa and S. pulchra of West Africa. They are mainly of extremely iridescent plumage. — Meadow-starling. See def. 1. — Red-winged starling. See def. 1. — Rose or rose-colored starling, a bird of the genus Pastor, as P. roseus, which used to be called rose or carnation ouzel, rose-colored thrush, etc. See cut under pastor. — Silk starling (Brown, 1776), or stare (Latham, 1783), the Chinese Poliopsar sericeus, 8 inches long, the bill bright-red tipped with white, the feet orange, the eyes black, the plumage ashy-gray varied with black, white, green, brown, purplish, etc. — Talking starling, one of several different starnoid birds of India, etc.; a religious grackle; a mina. See mina[2], Acridotheres, and cut under Eulabes.

starling[2] (stär'ling), n. [Also sterling; cf. Sw. Dan. stör, a pole, stake, prop; Sw. störa, prop up with stieks or poles, = Dan. stære, put corn on poles to dry.] 1. In hydraul. engin., an inclosure like a coffer-dam, formed of piles driven closely together, before any work or structure as a protection against the wash of the waves. A supplementary structure of the same kind placed before a starling to resist ice is called a fore-starling. See cut under ice-apron.

2. One of the piles used in forming such a breakwater.

starling[3]†, n. An obsolete form of sterling[2].

starlit (stär'lit), a. [< star[1] + lit.] Lighted by stars: as, a starlit night.

star-lizard (stär'liz″ärd), n. A lizard of the genus Stellio; a stellion. See cut under Stellio.

star-map (stär'map), n. A projection of part or all of the heavens, showing the fixed stars as they appear from the earth.

star-molding (stär'mōl″ding), n. In arch., a Norman molding ornamented with rayed or pointed figures representing stars.

Star-molding, Romanesque. — Aunay (Charente), France.

starmonger† (stär'mung″gėr), n. An astrologer: used contemptuously. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iii. 2.

star-mouthed (stär'mouthd), a. Having a stellate or radiate arrangement of mouth-parts. — Star-mouthed worms, the Strongylidæ.

starn[1] (stärn), n. [Early mod. E. also dial. stern; < ME. stern, sterne = MD. sterne = MLG. sterne, stern, LG. steern = OHG. sterno, stern, MHG. sterne, G. stern = Goth. stairnō, a star: see star[1].] A star. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Thar es na corrupcion, but cler ayre
And the planettes and sternes shonand.
Hampole, Prick of Conscience, l. 995.

A royall sterne . . . rose or day
Before vs on the firmament.
York Plays, p. 127.

starn[2] (stärn), n. [< ME. stern*, < AS. stearn, stærn, a stare, starling: see stare[2].] The starling. [Prov. Eng.]

starn[3] (stärn), n. A dialectal form of stern[2].

Starna (stär'nä), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1838), < It. starna, a kind of partridge.] Same as Perdix.

starnel (stär'nel), n. [Also starnill; < starn[2] + dim. -el.] The starling. [Prov. Eng.]

star-netting (stär'net″ing), n. A kind of netting used for the filling or background of a design: it produces a pattern of four-pointed stars connected by their points.

Starnœnadinæ (stär-nē-nạ-dī'nē), n. pl. [NL. (Coues, 1884), < Starnœnas (-ad-) + -inæ.] A subfamily of Columbidæ, represented by the genus Starnœnas, grading toward gallinaceous birds in structure, habits, and general appearance; the quail-doves. The feet are large and stout, with short and not completely insistent hallux; the tarsi are long, entirely naked, and reticulated with hexagonal scales. There are cæca, but no oil-gland nor ambiens, the reverse of the case of Zenaidinæ, the group of ground-doves with which the genus Starnœnas has usually been associated.

Starnœnas (stär-nē'nas), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1838), < Starna + Gr. οἰνάς, a wild pigeon of the color of ripening grapes, < οἰνη, the vine, οἶνος, wine.] A genus of West Indian and Floridian quail-doves, typical of the subfamily Starnœnadinæ. The bill is short and stout; the frontal feathers project in a point on the culmen; the wings are short, broad, rounded, and vaulted, with reduced first primary; and the tail is short, broad, and nearly even. The only species is S. cyanocephalus, the blue-headed quail-dove, of olivaceous and purplish-red or chocolate shades, the throat black bordered with white, the crown rich-blue, and a white mark along the side of the head, meeting its fellow on the chin. It is about 11 inches long.

starnose (stär'nōz), n. The star-nosed mole, Condylura cristata.

star-nosed (stär'nōzd), a. Having a circlet of fleshy processes radiating from the end of the snout in the form of a star, as some moles: specifically noting Condylura cristata. See cut under Condylura. Also button-nosed.

star-of-Bethlehem (stär'ọv-beth'lē-ėm), n. 1. A plant of the genus Ornithogalum, particularly O. umbellatum: so called from its star-like flowers, which are pure-white within. This species is native from France and the Netherlands to the Caucasus; it is common in gardens and often runs wild, in some parts of America too freely. In Palestine its bulbs are cooked and eaten, and they are thought by some to have been the "dove's dung" of 2 Kings vi. 25. Some other species are desirable hardy garden-bulbs, as O. nutans and O. Narbonense (O. pyramidale), the latter 3 feet high with a pyramidal cluster. O. caudatum, with long leaves drying like tails at the end, and with watery-looking bulbs, is a species from the Cape of Good Hope, sometimes called onion-lily, remarkably tenacious of life except in cold. It has a flower-scape 2 or 3 feet high, and continues blooming a long time.

2. One of a few plants of other genera, as Stellaria Holostea and Hypericum calycinum. [Prov. Eng.] See also Hypoxis and Gagea. [In the name of all these plants there is reference to the star of Mat. ii., which guided the wise men to Bethlehem.]

star-of-Jerusalem† (stär'ọv-jē-rō'sạ-lėm), n. The goat's-beard, Tragopogon pratensis. Prior ascribes the name to the salsify, T. porrifolius. See cut under salsify.

star-of-night (stär'ọv-nīt'), n. A large-flowered tree, Clusia rosea, of tropical America. See Clusia. [West Indies.]

star-of-the-earth (stär'ọv-thē-ėrth'), n. See Plantago.

starost (star'ost), n. [< Pol. starosta (= Russ. starosta, a bailiff, steward), lit. elder, senior, < stary, old, = Russ. staro-, old.] 1. In Poland, a nobleman possessed of a castle or domain called a starosty. — 2. In Russia, the head man of a mir or commune.

starosty (star'os-ti), n.; pl. starosties (-tiz). [< Pol. starostwo (= Russ. starostvo), < starosta, a starost: see starost.] In Poland, a name given to castles and domains conferred on noblemen for life by the crown.

star-pagoda (stär'pa-gō″dä), n. A variety of the pagoda, an Indian gold coin, so called from its being marked with a star.

star-pepper (stär'pep″ėr), n. See pepper.

star-pile (stär'pīl), n. A thermopile whose elements are arranged in the form of a star.

star-pine (stär'pīn), n. Same as cluster-pine (which see, under pine[1]).

star-proof (stär'prōf), a. Impervious to the light of the stars. Milton, Areades, l. 89.

starr†, n. An obsolete spelling of stare[4].

star-read† (stär'rēd), n. [Early mod. E. also star-rede; < star[1] + read[1], n.] Knowledge of the stars; astronomy. [Rare.]

Ægyptian wisards old,
Which in Star-read were wont have best insight.
Spenser, F. Q., V., Prol.

starred (stärd), p. a. [< ME. sterred, stirrede (also sterned = D. gestarnd, gesternd = OHG. gestirnōt, MHG. gestirnet), starred; as star[1] + -ed[2].] 1. Studded, decorated, or adorned with stars.—2. Influenced by the stars: usually in composition: as, ill-starred.

My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is . . .
Haled out to murder. Shak., W. T., iii. 2. 100.

3. Cracked, with many rays proceeding from a central point: as, a starred pane of glass; a starred mirror.—4. Marked or distinguished with a star or asterisk.—Starred corals, the Caryophyllidæ.

star-reed (stär'rēd), n. [Tr. Sp. bejueo de la estrella.] A plant, Aristolochia fragrantissima, highly esteemed in Peru as a remedy against dysentery, malignant inflammatory fevers, etc. Lindley.

starrify† (stär'i-fī), v. t. [< star[1] + -i-fy.] To mark with a star. Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Handy-Crafts. [Rare.]

starriness (stär'i-nes), n. The state of being starry.

star-rowel (stär'rou″el), n. See rowel.

star-ruby (stär'rö″bi), n. A ruby exhibiting asterism, like the more common star-sapphire or asteria.

starry (stär'i), a. [< ME. sterry, sterri; < star[1] + -y[1].] 1. Abounding with stars; adorned with stars.

But see! where Daphne wond'ring mounts on high,
Above the clouds, above the starry sky!
Pope, Winter, l. 70.

2. Consisting of or proceeding from stars; stellar; stellary: as, starry light; starry flame.

The starry influences. Scott.

3. Shining like stars; resembling stars: as, starry eyes.—4. Stellate or stelliform; radiate; having parts radiately arranged.—5. Pertaining to or in some way associated with the stars.

The starry Galileo, with his woes.
Byron, Childe Harold, iv. 54.

Were 't not much trouble to your starry employments,
I a poor mortal would entreat your furtherance
In a terrestrial business. Tomkis (?), Albumazar, i. 5.

Starry campion, a species of catch-fly, Silene stellata, found in the eastern United States. It has a slender stem 3 feet high, leaves partly in whorls (whence the name), and a loose panicle of white flowers with a bell-shaped calyx and fringed petals.—Starry hummer, a hummingbird of the genus Stellula, as S. calliope.—Starry puffball. Same as earth-star.—Starry ray. See ray[2].

star-sapphire (stär'saf″īr), n. Same as asteriated sapphire (see sapphire) and asteria.

star-saxifrage (stär'sak″si-frāj), n. A small saxifrage, Saxifraga stellaris, found northward in both hemispheres, having white starry flowers.

star-scaled (stär'skāld), a. Having stellate scales, as a fish: as, the star-scaled dolphins, fishes of the family Astrodermidæ.

star-shake (stär'shāk), n. See shake, n., 7.

star-shell (stär'shel), n. Milit., a thin iron shell for light muzzle-loading guns, filled with stars, and fired to light up an enemy's position at night.

starshine (stär'shīn), n. The shine or light of stars; starlight. [Rare.]

By star-shine and by moonlight. Tennyson, Oriana.

star-shoot, star-shot (stär'shöt, stär'shot), n. A gelatinous substance often found in wet meadows, and formerly supposed to be the extinguished residuum of a shooting-star. It is, however, of vegetable origin, being the common nostoc.

I have seen a good quantity of that jelly that is sometimes found on the ground, and by the vulgar called a star-shoot, as if it remained upon the extinction of a falling star. Boyle, Works, I. 244.

star-slough (stär'sluf), n. Same as star-shoot.

star-spangled (stär'spang″gld), a. Spotted or spangled with stars: as, the star-spangled banner, the national flag of the United States.

Thou, friendly Night,
That wide o'er Heaven's star-spangled plain Holdest thy awful reign.
Potter, tr. of Æschylus (ed. 1779), II. 333. (Jodrell.)

The star-spangled banner, O long may it wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!
F. S. Key, The Star-Spangled Banner.

star-spotted (stär'spot″ed), a. Spotted or studded with stars.

star-stone (stär'stōn), n. 1. Same as asteriated sapphire (see sapphire) and asteria.—2. A cut and polished piece of the trunk of a petrified tree-fern. See Psaronius.

start[1] (stärt), v. [E. dial. also stert, sturt; < ME. starten, sterten, stirten, styrten (pret. sterte, stirte, sturte, storte, stert, later start, pp. stert, stirt, y-stert), prob. < AS. styrtan* (not found) = MD. D. storten = MLG. störten = OHG. sturzan, MHG. G. stürzen, fall, start, = Sw. störta (Sw. dial. stjärta, run wildly about) = Dan. styrte, cast down, ruin, fall dead; root unknown. The explanation given by Skeat, that the word meant orig. 'turn tail,' or 'show the tail,' hence turn over suddenly, < AS. steort, etc., a tail (see start[2]), is untenable. Hence startle.] I. intrans. 1. To move with a sudden involuntary jerk or twitch, as from a shock of surprise, fear, pain, or the like; give sudden involuntary expression to or indication of surprise, pain, fright, or any sudden emotion, by a quick convulsive movement of the body: as, he started at the sight.

The sesoun priketh every gentil herte,
And maketh him out of his slepe to sterte.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 186.

He is now grown wondrous sad, weeps often too,
Talks of his brother to himself, starts strangely.
Fletcher, Mad Lover, v. 2.

With trial fire touch me his finger-end;
. . . but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 90.

2. To make a sudden or unexpected change of place or position; rise abruptly or quickly; spring; leap, dart, or rush with sudden quickness: as, to start aside, backward, forward, out, or up; to start from one's seat.

Up stirte the pardoner and that anon.
Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 163.

Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 5. 17.

The Captain started up suddenly, his Hair standing at an End. Howell, Letters, I. iv. 28.

3. To set out; begin or enter upon action, course, career, or pursuit, as a journey or a race.

At once they start, advancing in a line.
Dryden, Æneid, v. 183.

All being ready, we started in a caique very early in the morning. R. Curzon, Monast. in the Levant, p. 294.

4†. To run; escape; get away.

Ac thre thynges ther beoth that doth a man to sterte
Out of his owene hous as holy writ sheweth.
Piers Plowman (C), xx. 297.

When I have them,
I'll place those guards upon them, that they start not.
B. Jonson, Catiline, iv. 6.

5. To lose hold; give way; swerve aside; be dislocated or moved from an intended position or direction; spring: as, the ship's timbers started.

The best how may start,
And the hand vary.
B. Jonson, New Inn, ii. 2.

6. To fall off or out; loosen and come away, as the baleen of a dead whale through decomposition, or hair from a soured pelt.—To start after, to set out in pursuit of.—To start against, to become engaged in opposition to; oppose.—To start in, to begin. [Colloq., U. S.]—To start out. (a) To set forth, as on a journey or enterprise. (b) To begin; set out: as, he started out to be a lawyer.—To start up. (a) To rise suddenly, as from a seat or couch; come suddenly into notice or importance.

The mind very often sets itself on work in search of some hidden idea, . . . though sometimes too they start up in our minds of their own accord.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. x. 7.

(b) To begin operation or business: as, the factory will start up to-morrow. [Colloq.]

II. trans. 1. To rouse suddenly into action, motion, or flight, as a beast from its lair, a hare or rabbit from its form, or a bird from its nest; cause to come suddenly into view, action, play, flight, or the like: as, to start game; to start the detectives.

Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar.
Shak., J. C., i. 2. 147.

She had aimed . . . at Philip, but had started quite other game. J. Hawthorne, Dust, p. 168.

2. To originate; begin; set in motion; set going; give the first or a new impulse to: as, to start a fire; to start a newspaper, a school, or a new business; to start a controversy.

One of our society of the Trumpet . . . started last night a notion which I thought had reason in it.
Steele, Tatler, No. 202.

Kindly conversation could not be sustained between us, because whatever topic I started immediately received from her a turn at once coarse and trite, perverse and imbecile. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxvii.

In 1798, Canning and his friends started, as a weekly paper, the "Anti-Jacobin," which had a brilliant career of eight months. H. Morley, English Writers, etc., I. 110.

3. To cause to set out, or to provide the means or take the steps necessary to enable (one) to set out or embark, as on an errand, a journey, enterprise, career, etc.: as, to start one's son in business; to start a party on an expedition.—4. To loosen, or cause to loosen or lose hold; cause to move from its place: as, to start a plank; to start a tooth; to start an anchor.—5. To set flowing, as liquor from a cask; pour out: as, to start wine into another cask.—6. To alarm; disturb suddenly; startle.

You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts you.
Shak., All's Well, v. 3. 232.

The queen, being a little started hereat, said, "À moi femme et parler ainsi?" "To me a woman and say so?"
Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Life (ed. Howells), p. 162.

To start a butt. See butt[2].—To start a tack or a sheet, to slack it off a little.—To start a vessel from the stump, to begin to build a vessel; build an entirely new vessel, as distinguished from repairing an old one; hence, to furnish or outfit a vessel completely.

start[1] (stärt), n. [< ME. stert; < start[1], v.] 1. A sudden involuntary spring, jerk, or twitch, such as may be caused by sudden surprise, fear, pain, or other emotion.

The fright awaken'd Arcite with a start.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., I. 555.

The exaggerated start it gives us to have an insect unexpectedly pass over our skin or a cat noiselessly come and sniffle about our hand. W. James, Mind, XII. 189.

2. A spring or recoil, as of an elastic body; spring; jerk.

In strings, the more they are wound up and strained, and thereby give a more quick start back, the more treble is the sound. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 179.

3. A sudden burst or gleam; a sally; a flash.

To check the starts and sallies of the soul.
Addison, Cato, I. 4.

A certain gravity . . . much above the little gratification received from starts of humour and fancy.
Steele, Tatler, No. 82.

4. A sudden bound or stroke of action; a brief, impulsive, intermittent, or spasmodic effort or movement; spasm: as, to work by fits and starts.

For she did speak in starts distractedly.
Shak., T. N., ii. 2. 22.

All men have wandering impulses, fits and starts of generosity. Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 236.

5. A sudden voluntary movement; a dash; a rush; a run.

When I commend you, you hug me for that truth; when I speak your faults, you make a start, and fly the hearing.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, i. 1.

"Shall I go for the police?" inquired Miss Jenny, with a nimble start toward the door.
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, iv. 8.

6. A starting or setting out in some course, action, enterprise, or the like; beginning; outset; departure.

You stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shak., Hen. V., iii. 1. 23.

In the progress of social evolution new starts or variations occur. Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 150.

7. Lead or advantage in starting or setting out, as in a race or contest; advantage in the beginning or first stage of something: as, to have the start in a competition for a prize.—8. Impulse, impetus, or first movement in some direction or course; send-off: as, to get a good start in life.

How much I had to do to calm his rage!
Now fear I this will give it start again.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 194.

Who can but magnify the endeavours of Aristotle, and the noble start which learning had under him?
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., ii. 5.

9. A part that has started; a loosened or broken part; a break or opening.

There [under a ship's keel], instead of a start, as they call an opening in the copper, I found something sticking in the hull. St. Nicholas, XVII. 586.

10†. Distance.

Being a great start from Athens to England.
Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 223.

At a start†, at a bound; in an instant.

At a stert he was betwix hem two.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 847.

To get or have the start, to be beforehand (with); gain the lead or advantage; get ahead: generally with of.

It doth amaze me
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the majestic world
And bear the palm alone. Shak., J. C., i. 2. 130.

start[2] (stärt), n. [Early mod. E. also stert; < ME. start, stert, stirt, steort, < AS. steort = OFries. stert, stirt = MD. steert, D. staart = MLG. LG. stert, steert, staart, steerd = MHG. G. sterz = Icel. stertr = Sw. Dan. stjert, tail; root unknown; some derive it from the root of start[1], in the sense 'project' or 'turn'; others compare Gr. στόρθυγξ, MGr. στόρθη, a point, tine, tag of hair, etc.] 1†. A tail; the tail of an animal: thus, red*start* is literally red*tail*.—2. Something resembling a tail; a handle: as, a plow-start (or plow-tail).—3. The sharp point of a young stag's horn. E. Phillips (under broach).—4. In mining, the beam or lever to which the horse is attached in a horse-whim or gin. [North. Eng.]—5. In an overshot water-wheel, one of the partitions which determine the form of the bucket. E. H. Knight.—6†. A stalk, as of an apple. Palsgrave.

startail (stär'tāl), n. A sailors' name for the tropic-bird. See cut under Phaëthon.

They also call it by the name of star-tail, on account of the long projecting tail feathers.
J. G. Wood, Illust. Nat. Hist., II. 756.

starter (stär'tėr), n. [< start[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which starts. (a) One who shrinks from his purpose; one who suddenly brings forward a question or an objection. (b) One who takes to flight or runs away; a runaway.

Nay, nay, you need not bolt and lock so fast;
She is no starter.
Heywood, If you Know not Me (Works, ed. Pearson, I. 213).

(c) One who sets out on a journey, a pursuit, a race, or the like.

We are early starters in the dawn, even when we have the luck to have good beds to sleep in.
Scott, Rob Roy, xxxv.

(d) One who or that which sets persons or things in motion, as a person who gives the signal for a race, or for the starting of a coach, car, boat, or other conveyance, or a lever or rod for setting an engine or a machine in motion.

There is one starter, . . . who, either by word or by pistol-report, starts each race. The Century, XL. 205.

(e) A dog that starts game; a springer; a cocker.—Bung starter. See bung-starter.

startful (stärt'fůl), a. [< start[1] + -ful.] Apt to start; easily startled or frightened; skittish. [Rare.]

Say, virgin, where dost thou delight to dwell?
With maids of honour, startful virgin? tell.
Wolcot (P. Pindar), Ode to Affectation.

startfulness (stärt'fůl-nes), n. The quality or state of being startful, or easily startled. [Rare.]

star-thistle (stär'this[ɫ]l), n. A low spreading weed, Centaurea Calcitrapa, with small heads of purple flowers, the involucral bracts ending in stiff spines, the leaves also spiny: in one form called mouse-thorn. According to Prior the name (by him applied to C. solstitialis, a more erect plant with yellow flowers, sometimes named yellow star-thistle) arises

a

The Upper Part of the Stem with the Heads of Star-thistle (Centaurea Calcitrapa).
a, one of the involucral scales.

from the resemblance of the spiny involucre to the weapon called a morning-star. Both of these plants are sparingly naturalized in the United States, the former on the eastern, the latter on the western coast. The name is extended to the genus, of which one species, C. Cyanus, is the blue-bottle or corn-flower (the Kornblume of the Germans, with whom it has patriotic associations), another is the blessed thistle (see thistle), and others are called centaury, knapweed, and sultan. See these names and Centaurea.

starthroat (stär'thrōt), n. A humming-bird of the genus Heliomaster, having the throat spangled with the scales of the gorget, like many other hummers.

starting-bar (stär'ting-bär), n. A hand-lever for moving the valves in starting a steam-engine.

starting-bolt (stär'ting-bōlt), n. A rod or bolt used to drive out another; a drift-bolt. E. H. Knight.

starting-engine (stär'ting-en[ɣ]jin), n. A small low-pressure engine sometimes connected with a large marine engine, and used to start it. Sometimes called starting steam-cylinder.

starting-hole† (stär'ting-hōl), n. [Early mod. E. sterting-hole; < starting + hole[1].] A loophole; evasion; subterfuge; dodge; refuge.

Some, which seke for sterting-holes to mainteine their vices, will objecte. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, ii. 9.

What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent shame? Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 4. 290.

startingly (stär'ting-li), adv. By fits and starts; impetuously; intemperately. Shak., Othello, iii. 4. 79.

starting-place (stär'ting-plās), n. A place at which a start or beginning is made; a place from which one starts or sets out.

Asham'd, when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my first starting-place.
Sir J. Denham, Old Age, i.

starting-point (stär'ting-point), n. The point from which any one or anything starts; point of departure.

starting-post (stär'ting-pōst), n. The point or line, marked out by a post or otherwise, from which competitors start in a race or contest.

starting-valve (stär'ting-valv), n. A small valve sometimes introduced for moving the main valves of a steam-engine in starting it.

starting-wheel (stär'ting-hwēl), n. A wheel which actuates the valves that start an engine.

startish (stär'tish), a. [< start[1] + -ish[1].] Apt to start; skittish; shy: said of horses. [Colloq.]

startle (stär'tl), v.; pret. and pp. startled, ppr. startling. [< ME. startlen, stertlen, stertyllen; freq. of start[1].] I. intrans. 1. To start; manifest fear, alarm, surprise, pain, or similar emotion by a sudden involuntary start.

At first she startles, then she stands amaz'd;
At last with terror she from thence doth fly.
Sir J. Davies, Immortal. of Soul, Iot.

She changed colour and startled at everything she heard.
Addison, Spectator, No. 3.

2. To wince; shrink.

Physic, or mathematics, . . .
She will endure, and never startle.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, iv. 1.

3. To move suddenly, as if surprised or frightened.

Stertling from hir traunce,
I wil reuenge (quoth she).
Gascoigne, Complaint of Philomene.

If a dead leaf startle behind me,
I think 'tis your garment's hem.
Lowell, The Broken Tryst.

4. To take to flight, as in panic; stampede, as cattle.

And the heerd starteled, and ran hedlyng into the see.
Tyndale, Mark v. 13.

5. To take departure; depart; set out. [Obsolete or provincial.]

A gret stertling he mycht haiff seyne Off schippys. Barbour, Bruce, iii. 170.

Or by Madrid he takes the route, . . .
Or down Italian vista startles.
Burns, The Twa Dogs.

II. trans. 1. To cause to start; excite by sudden surprise, alarm, apprehension, or other emotion; scare; shock.

I confess I have perused them all, and can discover nothing that may startle a discreet belief.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 21.

Like the inhabitants of a city who have been just startled by some strange and alarming news.
Scott, Kenilworth, xl.

2. To rouse suddenly; cause to start, as from a place of concealment or from a state of repose or security.

Let me thy vigils keep 'Mongst boughs pavilioned, where the deer's swift leap Startles the wild bee from the foxglove bell.
Keats, Sonnets, iv.

The garrison, startled from sleep, found the enemy already masters of the towers. Irving, Granada, p. 31.

startle (stär'tl), n. [< startle, v.] A sudden movement or shock caused by surprise, alarm, or apprehension of danger; a start.

After having recovered from my first startle, I was very well pleased with the accident. Spectator.

startler (stärt'lėr), n. [< startle + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which starts or is startled. [Rare.]

When, dazzled by the eastern glow,
Such startler cast his glance below,
And saw unmeasured depth around.
Scott, L. of the L., ii. 31.

2. That which startles: as, that was a startler. [Colloq.]

startling (stärt'ling), p. a. [Ppr. of startle, v.] 1. That startles or that excites sudden surprise, apprehension, fear, or like emotion; that rouses or suddenly and forcibly attracts attention: as, startling news; a startling discovery.

It was startling to hear all at once the sound of voices singing a solemn hymn.
B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 42.

2†. Easily startled or alarmed; skittish; shying.

Ther was also the lorde of the white tour, that was a noble knyght and an hardy, with vij hundred knyghtes vpon startelinge stedes. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 257.

The Tyranny of Prelates under the name of Bishops have made our eares tender and startling.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

startlingly (stärt'ling-li), adv. In a startling manner; surprisingly.

But who could this be, to whom mere human sympathy was so startlingly sweet? Curtis, Prue and I, p. 155.

startlish (stärt'lish), a. [< startle + -ish[1].] Apt to start; skittish. [Colloq.]

star-trap (stär'trap), n. A trap-door on the stage of a theater for the disappearance of gymnastic characters. It consists of five or more pointed pieces which part when pressure is applied to the center.

start-up[1]† (stärt'up), a. and n. [< start up: see start[1], v.] I. a. Upstart.

Two junior start-up societies. Swift, Tale of a Tub, i.

Whoever weds Isabella, it shall not be Father Falconara's start-up son. Walpole, Castle of Otranto, iv.

II. n. One who comes suddenly into notice; an upstart.

That young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow.
Shak., Much Ado, i. 3. 69.

startup[2]† (stärt'up), n. [Usually in pl. start-ups, also sometimes startopes; origin uncertain.] A half-boot or buskin, described in the sixteenth century as laced above the ankle.

Guestres [gaiters], startups; high shooes, or gamashes for countrey folks. Cotgrave.

Her neat fit startups of green Velvet bee,
Flourisht with silver; and beneath the knee,
Moon-like, indented; hutt'ned down the side
With Orient Pearls as big as Ellberd's pride.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Decay.

A stupid lout . . . in a grey jerkin, with his head bare, his hose about his heels, and huge startupe upon his feet.
Scott, Kenilworth, xxiv.

starvation (stär-vā'shọn), n. [< starve + -ation. The word is noted as one of the first (flirtation being another) to be formed directly from a native E. verb with the L. term. -ation. It was first used or brought into notice by Henry Dundas, first Viscount Melville (hence called "Starvation Dundas"), in a speech on American affairs, in 1775.] The state of starving or being starved; extreme suffering from cold or hunger; hence, deprivation of any element essential to nutrition or the proper discharge of the bodily functions: often used figuratively of mental or spiritual needs.

Starvation Dundas, whose pious policy suggested that the devil of rebellion could be expelled only by fasting.
Walpole, To Rev. W. Mason, April 25, 1781.

Starvation was an epithet applied to Mr. Dundas, the word being, for the first time, introduced into our language by him, in a speech, in 1775, in an American debate, and thenceforward became a nickname: . . . "I shall not wait for the advent of starvation from Edinburgh to settle my judgment." Mitford, in Walpole's Letters (ed. Cunningham), VIII. 30, note.

Whether an animal be herbivorous or carnivorous, it begins to starve from the moment its vital food-stuffs consist of pure amyloids, or fats, or any mixture of them. It suffers from what may be called nitrogen starvation.
Huxley and Youmans, Physiol., § 170.

starve (stärv), v.; pret. and pp. starved, ppr. starving. [Early mod. E. also sterve; < ME. sterven, steorven (pret. starf, sterf, pp. starven, storven, i-storve, y-storve), < AS. steorfan (pret. stearf, pl. sturfon, pp. storfen), die, = OS. sterbhan = OFries. sterva = D. sterven = MLG. sterven, LG. starven, sterven = OHG. sterban, MHG. G. sterben, die; not found in Goth. or Scand., except as in the derived Icel. starf, trouble, labor, toil, work, starfa, toil, work, stjarfi, epilepsy (= AS. steorfa, E. dial. starf, a plague), which indicate that the verb orig. meant 'labor, be in trouble'; cf. Gr. οἱ καμόντες, the dead, lit. 'those who have labored,' < κάμνειν, labor, toil.] I. intrans. 1†. To die; perish.

She starf for wo neigh whan she wente.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1419.

He starf in grete age disherited, as the story witnesseth.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 401.

Specifically—2. To perish from lack of food or nourishment; die of hunger; also, to suffer from lack of food; pine with hunger; famish; suffer extreme poverty.

Starves in the midst of nature's bounty curst,
And in the loaden vineyard dies for thirst.
Addison, Letter from Italy.

3. To perish with cold; die from cold or exposure; suffer from cold. [Now chiefly Eng.]

Starving with cold as well as hunger.
Irving. (Imp. Dict.)

4. To suffer for lack of anything that is needed or much desired; suffer mental or spiritual want; pine.

Though our soules doe sterve
For want of knowledge, we doe little care.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 15.

I . . . starve for a merry look. Shak., C. of E., ii. 1. 88.

II. trans. 1. To cause to perish with hunger; afflict or distress with hunger; famish; hence, to kill, subdue, or bring to terms by withholding food or by the cutting off of supplies: as, to starve a garrison into surrender.

Whilst I have meat and drink, love cannot starve me.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, i. 3.

2. To cause to perish with cold; distress or affect severely with cold; benumb utterly; chill. [Now chiefly Eng.]

Alle the mete he sayes at on bare worde,
The potage fyrst with brede y-coruyn,
Coueryś hom agayn lest they ben storuyn.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 324.

That kiss is comfortless
As frozen water to a starved snake.
Shak., Tit. And., iii. 1. 252.

From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth. Milton, P. L., ii. 600.

What a sad fire we have got, and I dare say you are both starved with cold. Jane Austen, Mansfield Park, xxxviii.

3. To cause to perish through lack of any kind; deprive of life, vigor, or force through want; exhaust; stunt.

If the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but, where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

The powers of their minds are starved by disuse. Locke.

Starved rat, a pika, Lagomys princeps. See cony, 4, and cut under Lagomys. [Local, U. S.]

starve-acre (stärv'ā″kėr), n. [< starve + obj. acre.] One of the crowfoots, Ranunculus arvensis: so called as impoverishing the soil or indicating a poor one. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names. [Prov. Eng.]

starved (stärvd), p. a. In her., stripped of its leaves; without leaves or blossoms: noting a branch of a tree used as a bearing.

starveling (stärv'ling), n. and a. [Formerly also starvling; < starve + -ling[1].] I. n. A starving or starved person; an animal or a plant that is made thin or lean and weak through want of nourishment.

Such a meagre troop, such thin-chapp'd starvelings,
Their barking stomachs hardly could refrain
From swallowing up the foe ere they had slain him.
Randolph, Jealous Lovers, iii. 4.

II.† a. Starving (from hunger or cold); hungry; lean; pining with want.

Sending heards of souls starvling to Hell, while they feast and riot upon the labours of hireling Curats.
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

starvent†. An obsolete past participle of starve. Daniel (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 587).

starver (stär'vėr), n. One who starves or causes starvation. J. S. Mill, On Liberty, iii.

starward (stär'wärd), adv. [< star[1] + -ward.] To or toward the stars. Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, ii. 6.

starward (stär'wärd), a. [< starward, adv.] Pointing or reaching to the stars. Blackie, Lays of Highlands, etc., p. 92. (Encyc. Dict.) [Rare.]

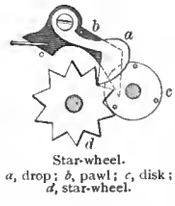
star-wheel (stär'hwēl), n. A spur-wheel the teeth of which are V-shaped, with an angle of 60°. Such wheels are now little used, except (a) in the winding-mechanism of the cloth-beams in some kinds of looms, where their teeth are engaged by clicks; (b) for some other special purposes, as in modifications of the Geneva movement, etc.; and (c) in clock-motions, the teeth of the star-wheel engaging with a pin on the hour-wheel, by which the star-wheel is intermittently turned along one tooth for every revolution of the hour-wheel: this movement is used in repeating-clocks, and also in registering-mechanism, adding-machines, etc. —Star-wheel and jumper, in horol., an arrangement of a star-wheel in relation with a pin on the minute-wheel, by which the snail is caused to move in an intermittent manner, or by jumps.



Star-wheel.
a, drop; b, pawl; c, disk; d, star-wheel.

star-worm (stär'wėrm), n. A gephyrean worm; any one of the Gephyrea.

starwort (stär'wėrt), n. [< star[1] + wort[1].] 1. Any plant of the genus Stellaria, the species of which have white starry flowers; chickweed. See cut under Stellaria.—2. Any species of the genus Aster, the name alluding to the stellate rays of the heads. Specifically, in England, A. Tripolium, the sea-starwort, a salt-marsh species. The Italian starwort is A. Amellus, of central and southern Europe. 3. The genus Callitriche, more properly water-starwort. Also star-grass.—Drooping starwort, the blazing-star, Chamælirium Carolinianum.—Mealy starwort, the colic-root, Aletris farinosa. It is tonic, and in larger doses narcotic, emetic, and cathartic.—Yellow starwort, the elecampane.

stasidion (sta-sid'i-on), n.; pl. stasidia (-ä). [< MGr. στασίδιον, a stall, dim. of στάσις, a standing-place.] In the Gr. Ch., a stall in a church, as of a patriarch, hegumen, or monk. Originally the stasidia seem to have been places for standing only (whence the name).

stasimon (stas'i-mon), n.; pl. stasima (-mä). [< Gr. στάσιμον (see def.), < στάσις, a standing, station.] In anc. Gr. lit., any song of the chorus in a drama after the parodos. The parabasis of a comedy is not, however, called a stasimon. Some authorities limit the use of the term to tragedy. The name is derived not, as stated by scholiasts, from the chorus's standing still during a stasimon (which cannot have been the case), but from the fact that it was sung after they had taken their station in the orchestra.

stasimorphy (sta'si-môr-fi), n. [< Gr. στάσις, standing, + μορφή, form.] Deviation of form arising from arrest of growth. Cooke, Manual.

stasis (stā'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. στάσις, a standing, a stoppage, < ἱστάναι, mid. and pass. ἵστασθαι, stand: see stand.] 1. In pathol., a stopping of the blood in some part of the circulation, as in a part of an inflamed area.—2. Pl. staseis or stases. In the Gr. Ch., one of the sections (regularly three) of a cathisma, or portion of the psalter. At the end of each stasis Gloria Patri and Alleluia are said. The name probably comes from the pause (στάσις) in the psalmody so made. A stasis usually contains two or three psalms. See cathisma (a).

stassfurtite (stas'fėrt-īt), n. [< Stassfurt (see def.) + -ite[2].] A massive variety of boracite, found at Stassfurt in Prussia. It resembles in appearance a fine-grained white marble.

stat. An abbreviation of statute or statutes: as, Rev. Stat. (Revised Statutes).

statable (stā'ta-bl), a. [< state + -able.] Capable of being stated or expressed.

statal (stā'tal), a. [< state + -al.] Of, pertaining to, or considered in relation to a particular State; state, as distinguished from national. [Rare, U. S.]

statant (stā'tant), a. [< heraldic F. statant, equiv. to OF. estant, standing, < L. stan(t-)s*, ppr. of stare, stand: see stand.] In her., standing still with all four feet on the ground.—Statant affronté. See at gaze (b), under gaze.

Lion statant gardant.

statarian (stā-tā'ri-an), a. [< L. statarius, stationary, steady (status, standing), + -an.] Steady; well-disciplined. [Rare.]

A detachment of your statarian soldiers.
A. Tucker, Light of Nature, II. ii. 23.

statarianly (stā-tā'ri-an-li), adv. [< statarian + -ly[2].] In a statarian manner. [Rare.]

My statarianly disciplined battalion.
A. Tucker, Light of Nature, II. ii. 23.

statary (stā'ta-ri), a. [< L. statarius, stationary, steady, < stare, stand.] Stated; fixed; settled. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., v. 23.

state (stāt), n. and a. [< ME. stat, staat, state, condition, existence, also estat, < OF. estat. esta, F. état = Sp. Pg. estado = It. stato = MD. staet, D. staat = MLG. stāt = G. staat = Sw. Dan. stat, state, the state, < L. status (statu-), manner of standing, attitude, position, carriage, manner, dress, apparel; also a position, place; situation, condition, circumstances, position in society, rank; condition of society, public order, public affairs, the commonwealth, the state, government, constitution, etc.; in ML. in numerous other uses; < stare (pp. status, used only as pp. of the transitive form sistere), stand: see stand. The noun is in part (def. 15) appar. from the verb. Doublet of estate, status.] I. n. 1. Mode or form of existence; position; posture; situation; condition: as, the state of one's health; the state of the roads; a state of uncertainty or of excitement; the present unsatisfactory state of affairs.

Nor shall he smile at thee in secret thought,
Nor laugh with his companions at thy state.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1066.

O see how fickle is their state
That doe on fates depend!
The Legend of King Arthur (Child's Ballads, I. 54).

Keep the state of the question in your eye. Boyle.

The solitude of such a mind is its state of highest enjoyment. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 29.

The present conscious state, when I say "I feel tired," is not the direct state of tire; when I say "I feel angry," it is not the direct state of anger.
W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 190.

2. Political or social position or status; station; standing in the world or the community; rank; condition; quality.

These Italian bookes are made English, to bryng mischief enough openly and boldly to all states, greate and meane, yong and old, euery where.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 81.

A train which well beseem'd his state,
But all unarm'd, around him wait.
Scott, Marmion, iv. 7.

3. A class or order: same as estate, 9.

We hold that God's clergy are a state which hath been, and will be as long as there is a Church upon earth, necessary by the plain word of God himself.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iii. 11.

4. Style of living; mode of life; especially, the dignity and pomp befitting a person of high degree or large wealth.

Do you know, sir,
What state she carries? what great obedience
Waits at her beck continually?
Fletcher, Mad Lover, i. 1.

5. Stateliness; dignity.

The Abbess, seeing strife was vain, Assumed her wonted state again—
For much of state she had.
Scott, Marmion, v. 31.

6†. A person of high rank; a noble; a personage of distinction.

The twelve Peeres or States of the Kingdome of France. 1660. Hexham.
Quoted in Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), Index, p. 120.

First you shall see the men in order set,
States and their Pawns.
Middleton, Game at Chess, Prol.

7†. A seat of dignity; a dais; a chair of state, usually on a raised platform, with or without a canopy; also, this canopy itself.

The state . . . was placed in the upper end of the hall.
B. Jonson, Mask of Blackness.

It is your seat; which, with a general suffrage, [Offering Timoleon the state.
As to the supreme magistrate, Sicily tenders.
Massinger, Bondman, i. 3.

The Queene Consort sat under a state on a black footcloth, to entertain the circle.
Evelyn, Diary, March 5, 1685.

8†. The crisis, or culminating point, as of a disease; that point in the growth or course of a thing at which decline begins.

Tumours have their several degrees and times; as beginning, augment, state, and declination.
Wiseman, Surgery.

9. Continuance of existence; stability.

By a man of understanding and knowledge the state thereof [of a land] shall be prolonged. Prov. xxviii. 2.

10†. Estate; income; possession.

I judge them, first, to have their states confiscate.
B. Jonson, Catiline, v. 8.

11. The whole people of one body politic; the commonwealth: usually with the definite article; in a particular sense, a civil and self-governing community; a commonwealth.

In Aleppo once,
Where a malignant and a turban'd Turk
Beat a Venetian and traduced the state.
Shak., Othello, v. 2. 354.

A State is a community of persons living within certain limits of territory, under a permanent organization, which aims to secure the prevalence of justice by self-imposed law. Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 36.

12. The power wielded by the government of a country; the civil power, often as contrasted with the ecclesiastical: as, the union of church and state.—13. One of the commonwealths or bodies politic which together make up a federal republic, which stand in certain specified relations with the central or national government, and as regards internal affairs are more or less independent. In this sense the word state is used chiefly with reference to the several States (generally cap.) of the American Union, the United States of America. The relations between the individual states and the national or central government of Mexico, Brazil, and various other republics of the American continent are formed more or less closely on the model of the United States. Current designations or epithets of the States of the American Union are the following: Badger State, Wisconsin; Bay State, Massachusetts; Bayou State, Mississippi; Bear State, Arkansas, California, Kentucky; Big-bend State, Tennessee; Blue-hen State, Delaware; Blue-law State, Connecticut; Buckeye State, Ohio; Bullion State, Missouri; Centennial State, Colorado; Corn-cracker State, Kentucky; Cracker State, Georgia; Creole State, Louisiana; Dark and Bloody Ground, Kentucky; Diamond State, Delaware; Empire State, New York; Empire State of the South, Georgia; Excelsior State, New York; Freestone State, Connecticut; Garden State, Kansas; Golden State, California; Gopher State, Minnesota; Granite State, New Hampshire; Green Mountain State, Vermont; Gulf State, Florida; Hawkeye

State, Iowa; Hoosier State, Indiana; Keyatone State, Pennsylvania; Lake State, Michigan; Land of Steady Habits, Connecticut; Little Rhody, Rhode Island; Lone-star State, Texas; Lumber State, Maine; Mother of Presidents, Virginia; Mother of States, Virginia; Mudcat State, Mississippi; New England of the West, Minnesota; Old Colony, Massachusetts; Old Dominion, Virginia; Old-line State, Maryland; Old North State, North Carolina; Palmetto State, South Carolina; Pan-handle State, West Virginia; Pelican State, Louisiana; Peninsula State, Florida; Pine-tree State, Maine; Prairie State, Illinois; Sage-hen State, Nevada; Silver State, Nevada; Squatter State, Kansas; Sucker State, Illinois; Turpentine State, North Carolina; Web-foot State, Oregon; Wolverine State, Michigan; Wooden Nutmeg State, Connecticut.

14. pl. [cap.] The legislative body in the island of Jersey. It consists of the bailiff, jurats of the royal court, constables, rectors of the parishes, and fourteen deputies. The lieutenant-governor has the veto power. Guernsey has a similar body, the Deliberative States, and a more popular assembly, the Elective States.

15†. A statement; a document containing a statement, or showing the state or condition of something at a given time; an account (or the like) stated.—16. In engraving, an impression taken from an engraved plate in some particular stage of its progress, recognized by certain distinctive marks not seen on previous impressions or on any made subsequently unless coupled with fresh details. There may be seven, eight, or more states from one plate.—17. In bot., a form or phase of a particular plant.

> Sticta limita . . . was recognized as occurring in the United States by Delise, . . . and Dr. Nylander (Syn., p. 353) speaks of a state from Arctic America.
> Tuckerman, Genera Lichenum, p. 35.

Border State, in U. S. hist., one of those slave States which bordered upon the free States. They were Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri.—Cap of state, in her., a bearing representing the head-dress worn in the middle ages by the lord mayor of London on his installation, like a short cone with a ring, as of fur, around the head.—Chair of state. See chair.—Civil state. See civil.—Cloth of state. See cloth.—Commissioner for the State of, etc. See commissioner.—Confederate States of America, construct state, cotton States. See the qualifying words.—Council of State. See council.—Cretinoid state, myxedema.—Department of State. See department.—Doctrine of States' rights, in U. S. hist., the doctrine that to the separate States of the Union belong all rights and privileges not specially delegated by the Constitution to the general government; the doctrine of strict construction of the Constitution. In this form the doctrine has always been and is still held as one of the distinctive principles of the Democratic party. Before the civil war the more radical believers in the doctrine of States' rights held that the separate States possessed all the powers and rights of sovereignty, and that the Union was only a federation from which each of the States had a right to secede.—Ecclesiastical state†, free States. See the adjectives.—In a state of nature. See nature.—Intermediate, maritime state. See the adjectives.—Middle States. See middle.—Military state, that branch of the government of a state or nation by which its military power is exercised, including all who by reason of their service therein are under military authority and regulation.—Puree of state, in her. See purse.—Reason of state. See reason.—Slave State. See slave[2].—Southern States, the States in the southern part of the United States, generally regarded as the same as the former slave States.—Sovereign state. See sovereign.—State of facts, in law, a technical term sometimes used of a written statement of facts in the nature of or a substitute for pleadings, or evidence, or both.—State of progress. See progress.—State's evidence. See king's evidence, under evidence.—States of the Church, or Papal States, the former temporal dominions of the Pope. They were principally in central Italy, and extended from about Ravenna and Ancona on the Adriatic to the Mediterranean, including Rome. Their origin dates from a grant made by Pepin the Short in the middle of the eighth century. The territory was greatly reduced in 1860, and the remainder was annexed in 1870 to the kingdom of Italy (with a few small exceptions, including the Vatican and its dependencies).—The States. (a) The Netherlands. (b) The United States of America: as, he has sailed from Liverpool for the States. [Great Britain and her colonies.]—To keep state, to assume the pomp, dignity, and reserve of a person of high rank or degree; act or conduct one's self with pompous dignity; hence, to be difficult of access.

> Seated in thy silver chair,
> State in wonted manner keep.
> B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

To lie in state, to be placed on view in some public place, surrounded with ceremonious pomp and solemnity: said of a dead person.—Syn. 1 and 2. See situation.

II. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the community or body politic; public: as, state affairs; state policy; a state paper.

> To send the state prisoners on board of a man of war which lay off Leith. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., V. 31.

2. Used on or intended for occasions of great pomp or ceremony: as, a state carriage.—3. Of or pertaining to one of the commonwealths which make up a federal republic: opposed to national: as, state rights; a state prison; state legislatures.—State banks. See bank[2], 4.—State carriage. See carriage.—State church. See established church, under church.—State criminal, one who commits an offense against the state, as treason; a political offender.—State domain, gallantry, law. See the nouns.—State lands, lands granted to or owned by a state, for internal improvements, educational purposes, etc.—State paper. (a) A paper prepared under the direction of a state, and relating to its political interests or government. (b) A newspaper selected, by or pursuant to law, for the publication of official or legal notices.—State prison. (a) A jail for political offenders only. (b) A prison maintained by a State for the regular confinement of felons under sentence to imprisonment: distinguished from county and city jails, in which are confined misdemeanants, and felons awaiting trial, or awaiting execution of the death penalty, and from reformatories, etc. [U. S.]—State prisoner, sword, etc. See the nouns.

state (stāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. stated, ppr. stating. [< state, n.] 1. To set; fix; settle; establish; stablish: as, to state a day: chiefly used in the past participle.

> And you be stated in a double hope.
> B. Jonson, Volpone, iii. 6.

2†. To settle as a possession upon; bestow or settle upon.

> You boast to me
> Of a great revenue, a large substance,
> Wherein you would endow and state my daughter.
> Middleton and Rowley, Fair Quarrel, i. 1.

3. To express the particulars of; set down in detail or in gross; represent fully in words; make known specifically; explain particularly; narrate; recite: as, to state an opinion; to state the particulars of a case.

> I pretended not fully to state, much less demonstrate, the truth contained in the text. Atterbury.

4. In law, to aver or allege. Thus, stating a case to be within the purview of a statute is simply alleging that it is; while showing it to be so consists in a disclosure of the facts which bring it within the statute.—Account stated. See account.—Case stated. See case agreed, under case[1].—To state it†, to keep state. See state, n.

> Wolsey began to state it at York as high as ever.
> Fuller, Ch. Hist., V. ii. 4. (Davies.)

=Syn. 3. Speak, Tell, etc. (see say[1]), specify, set forth.

state† (stāt), a. [Irreg. used for stately.] Stately. Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

statecraft (stāt'kraft), n. The art of conducting state affairs; state management; statesmanship.

stated (stā'ted), p. a. Settled; established; regular; occurring at regular intervals; appointed or given regularly.

> It was his manner to use stated hours and places for exercises of devotion. Steele, Englishman, No. 26.
>
> The stated and unquestionable fee of his office.
> Addison.

Stated clerk, the principal clerk of Presbyterian church courts in the United States, usually associated in the superior courts with an official called a permanent clerk. The stated clerk of the General Assembly is the custodian of all the books, records, and papers of the court, and has charge of the printing and distribution of the minutes and other documents as ordered by the Assembly.

statedly (stā'ted-li), adv. At stated or settled times; regularly; at certain intervals; not occasionally. Imp. Dict.

stateful† (stāt'fūl), a. [< state + -ful.] Full of state; stately.

> A statefull silence in his presence.
> Marston and Webster, Malcontent, i. 5.

statehood (stāt'hūd), n. [< state + -hood.] The condition or status of a state.

state-house (stāt'hous), n. The public building in which the legislature of a State holds its sittings; the capitol of a State. [U. S.]

stateless (stāt'les), a. [< state + -less.] Without state or pomp.

statelily (stāt'li-li), adv. In a stately manner. Sir H. Taylor, Philip van Artevelde, I., v. 9. [Rare.]

stateliness (stāt'li-nes), n. The character or quality of being stately; loftiness of mien or manner; majestic appearance; dignity.

stately (stāt'li), a. [< ME. statly, estatlich = MD. staetelick, D. statelijk = MLG. statelich, statlich = Dan. statelig, stately; appar. confused in MLG., etc., with MHG. statelich*, G. stattlich, stately, excellent, important, seeming; cf. the adv. OHG. statelicho, properly (< stat, opportunity, etc.; akin to E. stead, place: see stead), MHG. stateliche, statlich, properly, moderately, G. stattlich, magnificently, excellently, etc.; as state + -ly[1].] Grand, lofty, or majestic in proportions, bearing, manner, or the like; dignified; elevated: applied to persons or to things.

> These regions have abundance of high cedars, and other stately trees casting a shade. Raleigh, Hist. World.
>
> The veneration and respect it [the picture of the Duchess of Ormond] fills me with . . . will make those who come to visit me think I am grown on the sudden wonderful stately and reserved.
> Swift, To the Duchess of Ormond, Dec. 20, 1712.

=Syn. August, etc. (see majestic), imperial, princely, royal, palatial, pompous, ceremonious, formal.

stately (stāt'li), adv. [< stately, a.] In a stately manner.

> Ye that walk
> The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep.
> Milton, P. L., v. 201.

statement (stāt'ment), n. [< state + -ment.] 1. The act of stating, reciting, or presenting verbally or on paper.—2. That which is stated; a formal embodiment in language of facts or opinions; a narrative; a recital; the expression of a fact or of an opinion; account; report: as, a verbal statement; a written statement; a bank statement; a doctrinal statement.—Calculus of equivalent statements. See calculus.

state-monger (stāt'mung[g]ėr), n. One who is versed in politics, or dabbles in state affairs. Imp. Dict.

stater[1] (stā'tėr), n. [< state + -er[1].] One who states.

stater[2] (stā'tėr), n. [< L. stater, < Gr. στατήρ, a standard of weight or money, a Persian gold coin, also a silver (or sometimes gold) coin of certain Greek states, < ἱστάναι, mid. and pass. ἵστασθαι, stand.] A general name for the principal or standard coin of various cities and states of ancient Greece. The common signification is a gold coin equal in weight to two drachmæ of Attic standard, or about 132.6 grains, and in value to twenty drachmæ. There were also in various states staters of Euboic and Æginetan standards. The oldest staters, those of Lydia, said to have been first coined by Crœsus, were struck in the pale gold called electrum. At the period of Greek decline the silver tetradrachm was called stater. This coin is the "piece of money" (equivalent to a Jewish shekel) of Mat. xvii. 27. As a general term for a standard of weight, the name stater was given to the Attic mina and the Sicilian litra.

state-room (stāt'rōm), n. 1. A room or an apartment of state in a palace or great house.—2. In the United States navy, an officer's sleeping-apartment (called cabin in the British navy).—3. A small private sleeping-apartment, generally with accommodation for two persons, on a passenger-steamer. Compare cabin, 3.—4. A similar apartment in a sleeping-car. [U. S.]

states-general (stāts'jen'ė-ral), n. pl. The bodies that constitute the legislature of a country, in contradistinction to the assemblies of provinces; specifically [cap.], the name given to the legislative assemblies of France before the revolution of 1789, and to those of the Netherlands.

statesman (stāts'man), n.; pl. statesmen (-men). [= D. staatsman = G. staatsmann = Sw. statsman = Dan. statsmand; as state's, poss. of state, + man.] 1. A man who is versed in the art of government, and exhibits conspicuous ability and sagacity in the direction and management of public affairs; a politician in the highest sense of the term.

> It is a weakness which attends high and low: the statesman who holds the helm, as well as the peasant who holds the plough. South.
>
> The Eastern politicians never do anything without the opinion of the astrologers on the fortunate moment. . . . Statesmen of a more judicious prescience look for the fortunate moment too; but they seek it, not in the conjunctions and oppositions of planets, but in the conjunctions and oppositions of men and things.
> Burke, Letter to a Member of the Nat. Assembly, 1791.

2. One who occupies his own estate; a small landholder. [Prov. Eng.]

> The old statesmen or peasant proprietors of the valley had for the most part succumbed to various destructive influences, some social, some economical, added to a certain amount of corrosion from within.
> Mrs. Humphry Ward, Robert Elsmere, I. ii.

=Syn. 1. See politician.

statesmanlike (stāts'man-līk), a. [< statesman + like.] Having the manner or the wisdom of statesmen; worthy of or befitting a statesman: as, a statesmanlike measure.

statesmanly (stāts'man-li), a. Relating to or befitting a statesman; statesmanlike. De Quincey.

statesmanship (stāts'man-ship), n. [< statesman + -ship.] The qualifications or employments of a statesman; political skill, in the higher sense.

> The petty craft so often mistaken for statesmanship by minds grown narrow in habits of intrigue, jobbing, and official etiquette. Macaulay, Mill on Government.

state-socialism (stāt'sō'shal-izm), n. A scheme of government which favors the enlargement of the functions of the state as the best way to introduce the reforms urged by socialists for the amelioration of the poorer classes, as the nationalization of land, state banks where credit shall be given to laboring men, etc.

state-socialist (stāt'sō'shal-ist), n. A believer in the principles of state-socialism; one who favors the introduction of socialistic innovations through the agency of the state.

stateswoman (stāts'wum'an), n.; pl. stateswomen (-wim'en). [< state's, poss. of state, + woman.] A woman who is versed in or meddles with public affairs, or who gives evidence of political shrewdness or ability. [Rare.]

How she was in debt, and where she meant
To raise fresh sums: she 's a great stateswoman!
B. Jonson.

stathe (stāth), n. [Also staith, staithe; early mod. E. also stayth, stcyth; < ME. stathe (AF. stathe), < AS. stæth, later steth, bank, shore, = Icel. stöðh, a harbor, roadstead, port, landing; akin to AS. stede, stead: see stead.] A landing-place; a wharf. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

stathmograph (stath'mō-gràf), n. [< Gr. σταθμός, measure, + γράφειν, write.] An instrument for indicating and registering the velocity of railroad-trains: a form of velocimeter. E. H. Knight.

static (stat'ik), a. [< Gr. στατικός, causing to stand, pertaining to standing, < στατός, verbal adj. of ἱστάναι, mid. and pass. ἵστασθαι, stand: see stasis, stand.] 1†. Pertaining to weight and the theory of weight.—2. Same as statical.—Static ataxia, inability to stand without falling or excessive swaying, especially with closed eyes, as in tabes.—Static gangrene, gangrene resulting from mechanical obstruction to the return of blood from a part.—Static refraction. See refraction.

statical (stat'i-kal), a. [< static + -al.] 1. Pertaining to bodies at rest or to forces in equilibrium.—2. Acting by mere weight without producing motion: as, statical pressure.—Statical electricity. See electricity.—Statical induction. See induction, 6.—Statical manometer. See manometer.

statically (stat'i-kal-i), adv. In a statical manner; according to statics.

Statice (stat'i-sē), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), < Gr. στατική, an astringent herb, fem. of στατικός, causing to stand: see static.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Plumbagincæ, type of the tribe Staticeæ. It is characterized by its acaulescent or tufted herbaceous or somewhat shrubby habit, flat alternate leaves, inflorescence commonly cymose and composed of one-sided spikes, stamens but slightly united to the petals, and styles distinct to the angles of the ovary, with capitate, oblong, or linear stigmas. Over 120 species have been described, natives of the sea-shore and of desert sands, mostly of the Old World, and of the northern hemisphere, especially of the Mediterranean region. A smaller number occur in America, South Africa, tropical Asia, and Australia. They are usually perennials; a few are diminutive loosely branched shrubs. They are smooth or covered with scurf or dust. The leaves vary from linear to obovate, and from entire to pinnatifid or dissected; they form a rosette at the root, or are crowded or scattered upon the branches. The short-pedicelled corolla consists of five nearly or quite distinct petals with long claws, and is commonly surrounded by a funnel-shaped calyx which is ten-ribbed below, and scarious, plicate, and colored above, but usually of a different color from the corolla, which is often white with a purple or lavender calyx and purplish-brown pedicel. They are known in general as sea-lavender. The common European S. Limonium is also sometimes called marsh-beet from its purplish root; it is the red behen of the old apothecaries. Its American variety, Caroliniana, the marsh-rosemary of the coast from Newfoundland to Texas, is also known as canker-root, from the use as an astringent of its large bitter fleshy root, which also contains tannic acid (whence its name ink-root). The very large roots of S. latifolia are used for tanning in Russia and Spain, and those of S. mucronata as a nervine in Morocco under the name of safrifa. Other species also form valued remedies, as S. Brasiliensis, the guaycura of Brazil and southward. Many species are cultivated for their beauty, as S. latifolia, and S. arborescens, a shrub from the Canaries. In Afghanistan, where several species grow in desert regions, they form a source of fuel.

Flowering Plant of Statice Limonium, var. Caroliniana.
a, the flower with its bracts.

Staticeæ (stā-tis'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Statice + -cæ.] A tribe of plants, of the order Plumbaginæ, distinguished from the other tribe (Plumbagæ) by flowers with a commonly spreading, scarious, and colored calyx-border, stamens united to the petals at the base or higher, and styles distinct to the middle or the base. It includes 5 genera, of which Statice is the type. They are commonly acaulescent plants, very largely maritime, and of the Mediterranean region.

statics (stat'iks), n. [Pl. of static (see -ics). Cf. F. statique, < Gr. στατική, the art of weighing, fem. of στατικός, causing to stand: see static.] That branch of mechanics which treats of the relations of strains and stresses, or of the figures of bodies in equilibrium and of the magnitudes and directions of the pressures.—Chemical, graphical, social statics. See the adjectives.

station (stā'shon), n. [< ME. stacion, < OF. station, stacion, estaçon, estachon, estaisun, etc., F. station = Sp. estacion = Pg. estação = It. stazione = D. G. Sw. Dan. station, < L. statio(n-), a standing, place of standing, station, a post, abode, dwelling, position, office, etc., < stare, stand: see state, stand.] 1. A standing still; a state of rest or inactivity. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Her motion and her station are as one.
Shak., A. and C., iii. 3. 22.

Man's life is a progress, and not a station.
Emerson, Compensation.

2. Manner of standing; attitude; pose: rare except in the specific uses.

An eye like Mars to threaten and command;
A station like the herald Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4. 58.

Specifically—(a) In med., the steadiness (freedom from swaying) with which one stands. (b) The manner of standing or the attitude of live stock, particularly of exhibition game fowls: as, a duckwing game-cock of standard high station.

3. The spot or place where anything habitually stands or exists; particularly, the place to which a person is appointed and which he occupies for the performance of some duty; assigned post: as, a life-boat station; an observing-station; the station of a sentinel; the several stations of the officers and crew of a ship when the fire-signal is sounded.

If that service ye now do want,
What station will ye be?
Blanchefleur and Jellyflorice (Child's Ballads, IV. 297).

One of our companions took his station as sentinel upon the tomb of the little mosque. O'Donovan, Merv, xx.

4. The place where the police force of any district is assembled when not on duty; a district or branch police office. See police station, under police.—5. The place where the British officers of a district in India, or the officers of a garrison, reside; also, the aggregate of society in such a place: as, to ask the station to dinner. Yule and Burnell, Anglo-Indian Glossary.

The little bills done by the rich bunneahs, the small and great pecuniary relations between the station and the bazaar. W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 194.

6. The condition or position of an animal or a plant in its habitat, or its relation to its environment: often used synonymously with habitat (but habitat is simply the place where an animal or plant lives, station the condition under which it lives there).

The males and females of the same species of butterfly are known in several cases to inhabit different stations, the former commonly basking in the sunshine, the latter haunting gloomy forests.
Darwin, Descent of Man, I. 391.

7. In surv.: (a) The place selected for planting the instrument with which an observation is to be made. (b) A fixed uniform distance (usually the length of a chain of 100 feet, or 66 feet, or half the length of a twenty-meter chain) into which a line of survey is divided. The stations are consecutively numbered.—8. A stock-farm. [Australia.]—9. A regular stopping-place. (a) One of the stages or regular stopping-places at which pilgrims to Rome or other holy place were wont to stop and rest, as a church or the tomb of a martyr. (b) One of the places at which ecclesiastical processions pause for the performance of an act of devotion, as a church, the tomb of a martyr, or some similar sacred spot. Hence—(c) The religious procession to and from or the service of devotion at these places. (d) One of the representations of the successive stages of Christ's passion which are often placed round the naves of churches, and by the sides of the way leading to sacred edifices, and which are visited in rotation. (e) In the early church, the place appointed at church for each class of worshipers, more especially for each grade of penitents; hence, the status, condition, or class so indicated. (f) A place where railway-trains regularly stop for the taking on of passengers or freight; hence, the buildings erected at such a place for railway business; a depot.

10. Eccles.: (a) In the early church, an assembly of the faithful in the church, especially for the celebration of the eucharist. (b) The fast and service on Wednesday and Friday (except between Easter and Pentecost), in memory of the council which condemned Christ, and of his passion. These are still maintained by the Greek Church, but the fast of Wednesday in the Western Church has been abrogated. (c) Among Roman Catholics, a church where indulgences are to be obtained on certain days.—11. Situation; position.

The head has the most beautiful appearance, as well as the highest station, in a human figure.
Addison, Spectator, No. 98.

12. Status; rank; standing; specifically, rank or standing in life; social state or position; condition of life; hence, high rank or standing.

They in France of the best rank and station.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 3. 73.

He never courted men in station.
Swift, Death of Dr. Swift.

Content may dwell in all stations.
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., i. 27.

Given as a tonic, but not worthy an officinal station.
Dunglison, Med. Dict.

13. In mining, an enlargement made in a shaft, level, or gangway to receive a pump, bob, tank, or machinery of any kind.—False station, in surv. See false.—Life-saving station, a station on a sea-coast furnished with life-boats and other apparatus for saving life from shipwreck.—Military station, a place where troops are regularly kept in garrison.—Naval station, a safe and commodious shelter or harbor for the warlike or commercial ships of a nation, where there is a dock-yard and everything requisite for the repair of ships.—Outside station. See outside.—Syn. 9 (f). See depot.

station (stā'shon), v. t. [< station, n.] To assign a station or position to: as, to station troops on the right or left of an army; to station a sentinel on a rampart; to station one's self at a door.

Not less one glance he caught
Thro' open doors of Ida station'd there Unshaken, clinging to her purpose.
Tennyson, Princess, v.

stational (stā'shon-al), a. [< L. stationalis, standing still, fixed, < statio(n-), a standing still, a post: see station.] Of or pertaining to a station.

stationariness (stā'shon-ā-ri-nes), n. Stationary character or quality; fixity: as, the stationariness of the barometer; the stationariness of rents. J. S. Mill, On Liberty, iii.

stationary (stā'shon-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. stationnaire = Sp. Pg. estacionario = It. stazionario, < L. stationarius, pertaining to a post or station, < statio(n-), a post, station: see station.] I. a. 1. Having a particular station or place; remaining in a certain place; not movable, or not intended to be moved; not moving, or appearing not to move; technically, without velocity, whether this condition is only instantaneous, or whether the body spoken of remains motionless for an interval of time. A planet is said to be stationary at a turning-point of its motion, when its longitude is neither increasing nor diminishing. The sun is said to be stationary when it reaches one of the tropics and begins to turn toward the equinoctial.

2. Remaining in the same condition or state; making no progress; without change; with neither increase nor decrease of symptoms, intensity, etc.: as, a stationary temperature.

The ancient philosophy disdained to be useful, and was content to be stationary. Macaulay, Bacon.

Stationary air, the amount of air which remains constantly in the lungs in ordinary respiration.—Stationary contact, diseasea, engine. See the nouns.—Stationary motion, such a motion of a system that no particle continually departs further and further from its original position, nor does its velocity continually increase or diminish. Clausius.—Stationary point, on a curve, a point where the point generating the curve is stationary and turns back; a cusp; a binode whose two tangents coincide.—Stationary tangent of a curve, a tangent where the moving tangent generating the curve is stationary and turns back; an inflection.—Stationary tangent plane of a surface, a tangent plane which has stationary contact with the surface.

II. n.: pl. stationaries (-riz). 1. A person or thing which remains or continues in the same place or condition; specifically, one of a force of permanent or stationary troops.

The stationaries are mine already. So are the soldiery all the way up the Nile. Kingsley, Hypatia, xx.

Then they are stationaries in their houses, which be in the middle points of the latitudes, which they call ecliptic ticks. Holland, tr. of Pliny, ii. 16.

2. One who wishes to stay as or where he is; one who opposes or resists progress; an extreme conservatist.

Divided between the party of movement and that of resistance—the progressives and the stationaries.
Huc, Travels (trans. 1852), II. 129.

station-bill (stā'shon-bil), n. Naut., a list containing the appointed posts of the ship's company for all evolutions.

station-calendar (stā'shon-kal″en-där), n. On a railroad, a station-indicator.

stationer (stā'shon-ėr), n. [Early mod. E. stationer; < ME. stacyonere, < ML. stationarius, stacionarius, a resident, resident canon, vender of books, < L. statio(n-), a station, stall: see station.] 1†. A bookseller.

Any scurrile pamphlet is welcome to our mercenary stationers in English.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 23.

Anterior to the invention of printing, there flourished a craft or trade who were denominated stationers; they were scribes and limners, and dealers in manuscript copies, and in parchment and paper, and other literary wares.
I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 432.

2. One who sells the materials used in writing, as paper, pens, pencils, ink, etc.—Stationers' Hall, a building in London belonging to the gild called the "Company of Stationers," in which a book is kept for the registration of copyrights.—Stationers' rule. See rule[1].—Walking, running, or flying stationer, a hawker of ballads, chap-books, pamphlets, and other kinds of cheap popular literature. Compare running patterer, under patterer. Tatler, No. 4.

stationery (stā'shon-ėr-i), n. and a. [< stationer + -y[3] (see -ery).] I. n. The articles usually sold by stationers; the various materials employed in writing, such as paper, pens, pencils, and ink.—Stationery office, an office in London which is the medium through which all government offices, both at home and abroad, are supplied with writing-materials. It also contracts for the printing of reports, etc. Imp. Dict.

II. a. Relating to writing, or consisting of writing-materials: as, stationery goods.

station-house (stā'shon-hous), n. 1. A police-station.—2. The building containing the office, waiting-rooms, etc., of a railway-station. The Century, XXXV. 89.

station-indicator (stā'shon-in″di-kā-tor), n. On a railway: (a) A bulletin-board at a station on which are exhibited the time of departure of trains and the stations at which they will stop. (b) A device in a car for exhibiting in succession the names of the stations where stops are to be made.

station-master (stā'shon-mās″tėr), n. The official in charge of a station; specifically, the person in charge of a railway-station.

station-meter (stā'shon-mē″tėr), n. A meter of large size used in gas-works to measure the flow of gas. Such meters are made with various attachments, as water-line, pressure, and overflow gages, register-clock, and telltale indicators of the rate of flow. E. H. Knight.

station-pointer (stā'shon-poin″tėr), n. In surv., an instrument for expeditiously laying down on a chart the position of a place from which the angles subtended by three distant objects, whose positions are known, have been measured; a three-armed protractor.

station-pole, station-staff (stā'shon-pōl, -stáf), n. In surv., same as leveling-staff, 1.

statism (stā'tizm), n. [< state + -ism.] The art of government; hence, in a depreciative sense, policy. [Rare.]

Hence it is that the enemies of God take occasion to blaspheme, and call our religion statism.
South, Sermons, I. iv.

statist (stā'tist), n. [= G. statist = Sw. statist, a statesman, politician, = Sp. Pg. estadista, a statesman, politician, also a statistician. = It. statista, a statesman; as state (L. status) + -ist.] 1. A statesman; a politician; one skilled in government. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Next is your statist's face, a serious, solemn, and supercilious face, full of formal and square gravity.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

2. A statistician.

The keen statist reckons by tens and hundreds; the genial man is interested in every slipper that comes into the assembly. Emerson, Success.

statistic (stā-tis'tik), a. and n. [I. a. = F. statistique = Sp. estadistico = Pg. estadistico = It. statistico (cf. G. statistisch = Sw. Dan. statistisk), lit. pertaining to a statist or to matters of the state; as statist + -ic. II. n. = F. statistique = Sp. estadistica = Pg. estadistica = It. statistica, statistics, = G. statistik, political science, statistics, = Sw. Dan. statistik, statistics; from the adj.] I. a. Statistical.

II. n. 1. Same as statistics.—2. A statistical statement.—3†. A statistician.

Henley said you were the best statistic in Europe.
Southey, 1804, in Robberd's Mem. of Taylor of Norwich, [I. 508.

statistical (stā-tis'ti-kal), a. [< statistic + -al.] Of or pertaining to statistics; consisting of facts and calculations or such matters: as, statistical tables; statistical information.—Primary statistical number, the number of a class ascertained by direct counting.—Statistical inference. See inference.—Statistical method, a scientific method in which results are deduced from averages as data. Political economy, the kinetic theory of gases, and Darwinian evolutionism pursue statistical methods, which are also now applied to psychology.—Statistical proposition. See proposition.—Statistical ratio, the number of one class of things which are found associated upon the average with each one of another class of things: thus, the number of children per family is a statistical ratio; so is the average duration of life.

statistically (stā-tis'ti-kal-i), adv. In a statistical manner; by the use of statistics; from a statistical point of view.

statistician (stat-is-tish'an), n. [= F. statisticien; as statistic + -ian.] One who is versed in or collects statistics.

statistics (stā-tis'tiks), n. [Pl. of statistic (see -ics).] 1. A systematic collection of numbers relating to the enumeration of great classes, or to ratios of quantities connected with such classes, and ascertained by direct enumeration. Thus, a table of the populations of the different States of the American Union is called a table of statistics; so is a table showing the percentages of farms in different parts of the country that are mortgaged, provided these percentages have been ascertained from direct sampling, and not calculated by dividing the number of mortgaged farms by the total number of farms.

The word statistics, as the name of a peculiar science, was first engrafted into our language by Sir John Sinclair. It comprehends, according to the practice of the German writers, from whom it was adopted, all those topics of inquiry which interest the statesman.
Monthly Rev., 1796, App., p. 553 (N. and Q., 6th ser., XI. [404).

2. The study of any subject, especially sociology, by means of extensive enumerations; the science of human society, so far as deduced from enumerations.—Bureau of Statistics. See bureau.—Vital statistics, a collection of statistical ratios relating to the average course of life, including the death-rates at different ages, liability to different diseases, etc.

statistology (stā-tis-tol'ō-ji), n. [Irreg. < statist(ics) + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] A discourse or treatise on statistics.

stative (stā'tiv), a. [= OF. statif, < L. stativus, standing still, < stare, stand: see state.] 1. Pertaining to a fixed camp or military post or quarters.—2. In Heb. gram., indicating a physical state, or mental, intransitive, or reflexive action: said of certain verbs.

statize† (stā'tīz), v. i. [< state + -ize. Cf. statist.] To meddle in state affairs. Davies.

Secular . . . mysteries are for the knowledge of statizing Jesuits. Rev. T. Adams, Works, II. 168.

statlich†, a. A Middle English form of stately.

statoblast (stat'ō-blást), n. [< Gr. στατός, standing, fixed (see static), + βλαστός, a bud, germ.] One of the peculiar internal asexual buds developed in the body-cavity of the fresh-water or phylactolæmatous polyzoans, comparable to the gemmules of the fresh-water sponges, and serving for reproduction. These germs of new individuals to be reproduced agamogenetically by internal gemmation are formed in the funiculus or mesentery of the polyzoan; on the death of the parent organism, they are ruptured, and give exit to a young animal essentially like the parent. The fact that statoblasts contain no germinal vesicle, and never exhibit the phenomena of segmentation or yelk-cleavage, is conclusive against their being ova or eggs; and, moreover, an ovary producing ova occurs elsewhere in the same individual that produces statoblasts. Also called winter bud. See cut under Plumatella.

statoblastic (stat-ō-blas'tik), a. [< statoblast + -ic.] 1. Having the character or nature of a statoblast; of or pertaining to statoblasts: as, statoblastic capsules; statoblastic reproduction.—2. Giving rise to statoblasts; reproduced by means of statoblasts: as, a statoblastic polyzoan.

statocracy (stā-tok'ra-si), n. [< state + -ocracy, after aristocracy, etc.] Government or rule by the state alone, uncontrolled by ecclesiastical power.

statoscope (stat'ō-skōp), n. [< Gr. στατός, standing, fixed (see static), + σκοπεῖν, view.] A form of aneroid barometer for registering minute variations of atmospheric pressure. It consists of a sensitive metallic diaphragm exposed on the outside to the changes of atmospheric pressure, and connecting on the inside with a closed reservoir of air, of four or five liters capacity, protected from temperature-changes by non-conducting walls filled with felt and wool. Registration is effected by a long index-needle on the cylinder of a chronograph. At the beginning of observation the index is brought to zero of the scale by opening a stop-cock connecting the reservoir with the outside air, and the absolute pressure at the moment is observed with a mercurial barometer. The stop-cock is then closed, and the index-needle shows variations of pressure as small as .01 millimeter of mercury. The total limit of change that can be registered is about 5 millimeters; for pressures beyond this the instrument must be reset.

statosphere (stat'ō-sfēr), n. [< Gr. στατός, standing, fixed, + σφαῖρα, a globe.] The globose, chitinous, spiculiferous envelop of the protoplasm of the winter or resting stage of the fresh-water sponges. J. A. Ryder.

statospore (stat'ō-spōr), n. [NL., < Gr. στατός, standing, fixed, + σπορά, seed: see spore[2].] In bot., a motionless or resting spore; a hypnospore.

statua† (stat'ū-ą), n. [< L. statua, an image, a statue: see statue.] A statue.

Even at the base of Pompey's statua,
Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell.
Shak., J. C., iii. 2. 192.

Behold the Statuas which wise Vulcan plac'd
Under the altar of Olympian Jove,
And gave to them an artificial life.
Beaumont, Masque of Inner Temple and Gray's Inn.

statuary (stat'ū-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. statuaire = Sp. Pg. estatuario = It. statuario, < L. statuarius, of or pertaining to statues (statuaria, sc. ars, the statuary art), < statua, a statue: see statue.] I. a. Of or pertaining to a statue or statuary.

What connoisseurs call statuary grace, by which is meant elegance unconnected with motion.
Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 2.

Statuary marble, fine-grained white marble, especially sought for monumenta, busts, etc.

II. n.; pl. statuaries (-riz). 1. One who makes statues; a sculptor; specifically, one who makes statues in metal, a bronze-caster, or one who makes copies of statues designed by another artist.

Statuaries could
By the feet of Hercules set down punctually
His whole dimensions.
Massinger, Emperor of the East, ii. 1.

Burst the gates, and burn the palaces, break the works of the statuary. Tennyson, Experiments, Boädicea.

2. The art of carving or making statues or figures in the round representing persons, animals, etc.: a main branch of sculpture.

The northern nations . . . were too barbarous to preserve the remains of learning more carefully than they did those of statuary or architecture or civility.
Sir W. Temple, Ancient and Modern Learning.

3. Statues collectively.

statue (stat'ū), n. [< ME. statue, < OF. statue, F. statue = Sp. Pg. estatua = It. statua, < L. statua, an image set up, a statue, pillar, < statuere, set up: see statute.] 1. A figure of a person or an animal, made of some solid substance, as marble, bronze, iron, or wood, or of any substance of solid appearance; a sculptured, cast, or molded figure, properly of some size (as distinguished from a statuette or figurine) and in the round (as distinguished from a relief or an intaglio).

This proude king let make a statue of golde
Sixty cubytes long. Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 169.

Within the area of the foundation walls, and all round them, were lying heads and bodies of many statues, which had once stood within the temple on bases still in position in three parallel rows.
C. T. Newton, Art and Archæol., p. 306.

2†. A picture.

The rede statue of Mars with spere and targe
So shyneth in his whyte baner large
That alle the feeldes glitteren up and doun.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 117.

Sir John. Your nieces, ere they put to sea, crave humbly, Though absent in their bodies, they may take leave
Of their late suitors' statues.
Luke. There they hang. Massinger, City Madam, v. 3.

Equestrian statue, a statue in which the figure is represented as seated on horseback.—Plinth of a statue. See plinth.

statue (stat'ū), v. t.; pret. and pp. statued, ppr. statuing. [< statue, n.] To place as a statue; form a statue of.

The whole man becomes as if statued into stone and earth. Feltham, Resolves, I. 36.

statued (stat'ūd), a. [< statue + -ed[2].] Furnished with statues; having the form of a statue; consisting of a statue or of statues.

Pacing in sable robes the statued hall.
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Falcon of Federigo.

Sometimes he encountered an imperial column; sometimes he came to an arcadian square flooded with light, and resonant with the fall of statued fountains.
Disraeli, Lothair, lxix.

statue-dress (stat'ū-dres), n. Theat., a dress for the body and legs, made in one piece, worn in representations of statuary.

statuesque (stat-ū-esk'), a. [< statue + -esque.] Like a statue; having the formal dignity or beauty of a statue.

The statuesque attitudes exhibited in the ballets at the opera-house. De Quincey, English Opium-Eater.

statuesquely (stat-ū-esk'li), adv. In a statuesque manner; in the manner of a statue; as a statue. Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 97.

statuesqueness (stat-ū-esk'nes), n. Statuesque character or appearance. The Academy, No. 904, p. 141.

statuette (stat-ū-et'), n. [F., dim. of statue, a statue: see statue.] A small statue; a statue or image in the round much smaller than nature; a figurine.

Most of the figures do not much exceed life-size, and many were small statuettes.
C. T. Newton, Art and Archæol., p. 307.

statuize (stat'ū-īz), v. t. [< statue + -ize.] To commemorate by a statue. [Rare.]

James II. did also statueize himself in copper.
Misson, Travels in Eng., p. 309. (Davies.)

statuminate† (stā-tū'mi-nāt), v. t. [< L. statuminatus, pp. of statuminare, prop up, support, < statumen (-min-), a prop, stay, < statuere, cause to stand, set up, fix upright: see statue.] To prop; support.

I will statuminate and under-prop thee.
B. Jonson, New Inn, ii. 2.

stature (stat′ūr), n. [< ME. stature, < OF. (and F.) stature = Sp. Pg. estatura = It. statura, < L. statura, height or size of the body, stature, size, growth, < statuere, cause to stand, set up: see statute.] 1. The natural height of an animal body; bodily tallness; sometimes, full height: generally used of the human body.

The Lond of Pigmaus, where that the folk ben of litylle Stature that ben but 3 Span long.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 211.

Unto stature this damsel was grown.
Catskin's Garland (Child's Ballads, VIII. 174).

2†. A statue. [An erroneous use, due to confusion with statue.]

And then before her [Diana's] stature straight he told Devoutly all his whole petition there.
Mir. for Mags., I. 29.

In the second house there is the stature of a man of siluer. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 236.

statured (stat′ūrd), a. [< stature + *-ed*².] 1†. Of the height or stature of.

Were thy dimension but a stride,
Nay, wert thou statur'd but a span,
She'll make thee Mimas. Quarles, Emblems, ii. 6.

2. Of or arrived at full stature. The Century, XXXIII. 48. [Rare.]—3†. Conditioned; circumstanced.

They [Tusser and Churchyard] being mark'd alike in their poeticall parts, living in the same time, and statur'd alike in their estates. Fuller, Worthies, Essex, I. 519.

status (stā′tus), n. [< L. status, standing, position, attitude, state: see state.] 1. Standing or position as regards rank or condition.—2. Position of affairs.—3. In law, the standing of a person before the law in the class of persons indicated by his or her legal qualities; the relation fixed by law in which a person stands toward others or the state. Different writers vary much in the extent of meaning implied, but in the best usage it includes liberty, citizenship, and marriage, infancy and majority and wardship or tutelage, and mental capacity or incapacity according to legal tests. It is rarely if ever used of any of those relations which are terminable by consent, such as partnership.—Status quo, the condition in which (the thing or things were at first or are now). Compare in statu quo.

statutable (stat′ū-ta-bl), a. [< statute + -able.] 1. Made, required, or imposed by statute; statutory: as, a statutable punishment.—2. Allowed by the rules; standard.

I met with one the other day who was at least three inches above five foot, which you know is the statutable measure of that club. Addison, Spectator, No. 108.

statutably (stat′ū-ta-bli), adv. In a manner agreeable to statute; as required or provided by statute.

statute (stat′ūt), n. [< ME. statut, < OF. statut, estatut, statu, F. statut = Pr. statut = Sp. Pg. estatuto = It. statuto, statuto = D. statuut = G. Sw. Dan. statut, < LL. statutum, a statute, prop. neut. of L. statutus, pp. of statuere, set up, establish: see stand.] 1. An ordinance or law; specifically, a law promulgated in writing by a legislative body; an enactment by a legislature; in the United States, an act of Congress or of a State or Territorial legislature passed and promulgated according to constitutional requirements; in Great Britain, an act of Parliament made by the Sovereign by and with the advice of the Lords and Commons. Some early statutes are in the form of charters or ordinances, proceeding from the crown, the consent of the Lords and Commons not being expressed. Statutes are either public or private (in the latter case affecting an individual or a company); but the term is usually restricted to public acts of a general and permanent character. Strictly speaking, an ordinance established by either house of the legislature, or by both, without the assent of the executive, as a resolution, or joint resolution, is not a statute. The word has sometimes, however, been interpreted to include municipal ordinances. See also act, article, *bill*³, by-law, charter, code, decree, edict, law, ordinance, petition, provision.

Ac whiles Hunger was her maister there wolde none of hem chyde,
Ne stryue aʒelnes his statut so sterneliche he loked.
Piers Plowman (B), vi. 321.

The statutes of the Lord are right. Ps. xix. 8.

Girded with frumps and curtall gibes, by one who makes sentences by the Statute, as if all above three inches long were confiscat. Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

What are called in England constitutional statutes, such as Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights, the Act of Settlement, the Acts of Union with Scotland and Ireland, are merely ordinary laws, which could be repealed by Parliament at any moment in exactly the same way as it can repeal a highway act or lower the duty on tobacco.
J. Bryce, American Commonwealth, I. 237.

2. The act of a corporation or of its founder, intended as a permanent rule or law: as, the statutes of a university.—3. In foreign and civil law, any particular municipal law or usage, though not resting for its authority on judicial decisions or the practice of nations. Burrill; Worcester.—4. A statute-fair. [Prov. Eng.]—Bloody statute, an occasional name of the Act of the Six Articles. See the Six Articles, under article.—Declaratory statute. See declaratory.—Directory statute. See directory.—Enabling statute, a statute which confers a power upon a person or body that did not previously possess it.—Enlarging statute, a statute which increases a power that already existed.—Equity of a statute. See equity.—Estate by statute, more fully estate by statute merchant, or estate by statute staple, in Eng. law, the estate or tenancy which a creditor acquired in the lands of his debtor by their seizure on judgments by confession in forms now obsolete. See statute merchant and statute staple, below.—General statute, a statute which relates directly to the government or the general public interest, or to all the people of the state or of a particular class, condition, or district therein. See legislation, also public statute and local statute.—Local statute. See local legislation, under local.—Mandatory statute. See mandatory.—Penal statutes. See penal.—Private statutes. (a) See private acts, under private. (b) Same as special statute.—Public statutes. See public acts, under public.—Remedial statutes, statutes the main object of which appears directly beneficent, by supplying some defect in the law or removing inconveniences, as distinguished from those the immediate aspect of which is to impose punishment or penalty, which are called penal statutes. Some statutes partake of both characters, for a statute which is penal as against an offender may be remedial as toward those whom it is intended to protect.—Retroactive statute. See retroactive.—Special or private statute, a statute which the courts will not notice unless pleaded and proved like any other fact; also, a particular or peculiar statute: as, there is a special statute regulating chattel mortgages on canal-boats.—Statute against benevolences, an English statute of 1483–4 (1 Rich. III., c. 2) abolishing the peculiar system of raising money by solicitation, called benevolences, and declaring that such exactions should not be taken for precedent.—Statute cap. See *cap*¹.—Statute de Donis, more fully Statute de Donis Conditionalibus, an English statute of 1285 (13 Edw. I., being the Statute of Westminster, ii. c. 1) intended to put an end to the common-law doctrine that under a gift to a man and the heirs of his body he acquired absolute title by having issue, even though none should survive. The act prescribed instead that the condition stated by the giver of reversion in failure of issue should be carried into effect. Also sometimes called statute of entail.—Statute labor. See *labor*¹.—Statute lace†. See lace.—Statute law, a law or rule of action prescribed or enacted by the legislative power, and promulgated and recorded in writing; also, collectively, the enactments of a legislative assembly, in contradistinction to common law. See *law*¹.—Statute merchant, in law, a bond of record, now obsolete, acknowledged before the chief magistrate of some trading town, on which, if not paid at the day, an execution might be awarded against the body, lands, and goods of the obligor. See pocket-judgment.

A certaine blinde retayler, called the Diuell, vsed to lend money vpon pawnes or anie thing, and would let one for a need haue a thousand pounds vpon a statute-merchant of his soule. Nashe, Pierce Penilesse, p. 9.

Statute of bread and ale. See *bread*¹.—Statute of charitable uses, an English statute of 1601 (43 Eliz., c. 4), sometimes called the statute of Elizabeth, for the protection of property devoted to charities. It authorized the lord chancellor to appoint commissioners to inquire into the management of such property, with power to correct abuses.—Statute of Circumspecte Agatis, an English statute of 1285 (13 Edw. I.), in the form of a writ addressed to the judges: so named from its first two words. It directed that the king's prohibition should not lie in spiritual matters, and that the jurisdiction of the spiritual courts should be exercised in cases of demands by a parson for tithes, mortuaries, pensions, etc., notwithstanding such prohibition.—Statute of false pretenses, an English statute of 1757 (30 Geo. II., c. 24) which defines and punishes the crime of false pretenses.—Statute of fraudulent conveyances, sometimes called the statute of Elizabeth. (a) An English statute of 1571 (13 Eliz., c. 5), reënacted in nearly all of the United States, which declares all conveyances of property with intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors to be void as against such creditors. (b) An English statute of 1585 (27 Eliz., c. 4) making void all conveyances of land made with intent to deceive purchasers.—Statute of Gloucester, an English statute of 1278 (6 Edw. I.), passed at Gloucester, and relating to local franchises and judicature, damages to real property, waste, trespass, etc.—Statute of laborers, an English statute of 1349 (23 Edw. III.) designed to compel workmen and servants to work for the wages commonly paid in the year 1346: enacted because the pestilence had seriously decreased the number of servants, and the survivors demanded exorbitant wages.—Statute of Lincoln, an English statute of 1315–16 (9 Edw. II., st. 2), so called because the Parliament sat at Lincoln. It prescribed the qualifications of sheriffs. Also known as the statute of sheriffs.—Statute of Marlborough (Marleberge, Marlbridge), an English statute of 1267 (52 Hen. III.), so called because made at Marlborough, containing twenty-nine chapters or sections relating principally to distress suits, landlord and tenant, courts, writs, etc. It is one of the earliest written laws, after the Great Charter, and is said to have been intended to defeat attempts to evade feudal dues on succession at death made by gifts inter vivos.—Statute of merchants (also known as the statute of Acton Burnell, from the place of its enactment). (a) An English statute or ordinance of 1283 (11 Edw. I.) for the collection of debts. (b) Another of 1285 (13 Edw. I.) for the same purpose.—Statute of Merton. Same as provisions of Merton (which see, under provision).—Statute of military tenures. See military.—Statute of monopolies. Same as Monopoly Act (which see, under monopoly).—Statute of Northampton, an English statute of 1328 (2 Edw. III.) relating to felonies, sheriffs, etc.—Statute of Quia Emptores, an English statute of 1289, 1290 (18 Edw. I.), which, because purchasers of land had evaded their feudal dues to the chief lord by claiming to hold under the seller as their lord, provided that upon all sales or feoffments of land in fee simple the feoffee should hold, not of his immediate feoffor, but of the next lord paramount of whom the feoffor himself held, and by the same services, thus putting an end to subinfeudation for several centuries.—Statute of Rageman, an English statute of 1276 (4 Edw. I.) requiring justices to "go throughout the land" to try suits for trespasses.—Statute of Rutland, Ruddlan, or Rothlan, an English royal ordinance of 1284 (12 Edw. I.), made at Rutland, which, among other things, forbade suits in the Exchequer except such as concerned the king and his officers, and referred to the keeping of the rolls, etc. Also called provisions made in the Exchequer.—Statute of sheriffs. Same as statute of Lincoln.—Statute of Stamford, an English statute of 1309 (3 Edw. II.) which confirmed an act of 28 Edw. I. abolishing the taking of goods, etc., by the king when on a journey except upon payment, and also abolished certain customs duties.—Statute of Winchester or Winton, an English statute of 1285 (13 Edw. I.) containing police regulations such as concern lesser crimes and the hue and cry, and prohibiting fairs and markets in churchyards.—Statute of York, an English statute of 1318 (12 Edw. II.) which relates to the administration of justice.—Statutes of liveries, English statutes, the first of which were in 1377 (1 Rich. II., c. 7), 1392–3 (16 Rich. II., c. 4), and 1396–7 (20 Rich. II., cc. 1 and 2), for the better preservation of the peace: so called because directed against the practice of giving distinctive liveries to retainers and partizans, whereby confederacies and hostile parties were engendered.—Statutes of Westminster, early English statutes, so called because made at Westminster. "The first" (1275), comprising fifty-one chapters, relates to freedom of elections, amercements, bail, extortion by officers, aid taken by lords, etc. "The second" (1285), including fifty chapters, relates to gifts, writs, pleas, court-proceedings, etc. Also known as Statute de Donis (which see, above). "The third" was the statute "Quia Emptores" (which see, above).—Statute staple, in law, a bond of record, now obsolete, acknowledged before the mayor of the staple or town constituting a grand mart, by virtue of which the creditor might forthwith have execution against the body, lands, and goods of the debtor on non-payment.

There is not one gentleman amongst twenty but his land be engaged in twenty statutes-staple.
Middleton, Family of Love, i. 3.

The Great Statute, an English code of customs law of 1660 (12 Car. II., c. 4.) imposing duties which were termed the "old subsidy." (As to noted statutes on particular subjects, such as statute of distributions, statute of enrolment, statute of fines, statute of frauds, statutes of jeofail, statute of Jewry, statute of limitations, statutes of mortmain, statute of murders, statute of non-claim, statute of præmunire, statute of provisors, statute of staple, statute of tillage, statute of uses, statute of wills, see the word characterizing the statute.) = Syn. 1. Enactment, Ordinance, etc. See *law*¹.

statute† (stat′ūt), v. t. [< statute, n.] To ordain; enact; decree or establish.

The king hath ordeined and statuted that all and singular strangers . . . shall apply and come to his Towne of Northberne. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 186.

statute-book (stat′ūt-bůk), n. A register of statutes, laws, or legislative acts: a generic term commonly used to comprehend all the volumes in which the statute law of a state or nation is authoritatively promulgated.

statute-fair (stat′ūt-fâr), n. A fair held by regular legal appointment, in contradistinction to one authorized only by use and wont. See *mop*³, 4.

statute-roll (stat′ūt-rōl), n. 1. A statute as enrolled or engrossed.—2. A collection of statutes; a statute-book.

His [Edward IV.'s] statute-roll contains no acts for securing or increasing public liberties.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 373.

statutory (stat′ū-tō-ri), a. [< statute + -ory.] Enacted, required, or imposed by statute; depending on statute for its authority: as, a statutory provision or remedy; statutory fines.

The first duty of the Muse is to be delightful, and it is an injury done to all of us when we are put in the wrong by a kind of statutory affirmation on the part of the critics of something to which our judgment will not consent, and from which our taste revolts.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 132.

The reduction of the number of public-houses to a statutory minimum.
Sir C. W. Dilke, Probs. of Greater Britain, vi. 6.

On the first day of July, 1885, . . . the regular statutory duties were imposed. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 429.

Statutory foreclosure. See foreclosure.—Statutory guardian. See guardian, 2.—Statutory law. Same as statute law (which see, under statute).

statuvolence (stā-tū′vō-lens), n. [< statuvolen(t) + -ce.] A peculiar state or condition into which a person may throw himself by the exercise of the will, independent of extraneous conditions; a kind of self-induced clairvoyance. It is brought about by self-mesmerization, and closely resembles that hypnotic or somnambulic condition which may be produced by the will of another in suitable subjects. W. B. Fahnestock. [Recent.]

statuvolent (stā-tū′vō-lent), a. [< L. status, a state or condition, + volen(t-)s, ppr. of velle, will.] Inducing statuvolence; affected by statuvolence, or being in that state. [Rare.]

statuvolic (stat-ū-vol′ik), a. [< statuvol(ent) + -ic.] Pertaining in any way to statuvolence: as, the statuvolic state; a statuvolic process. [Rare.]

statuvolism (stā-tū′vọ-lizm), n. [< statuvol(ent) + -ism.] Same as statuvolence. F. W. Hayes.

staumrel (stâm′rel), a. [Cf. stammer.] Stupid; half-witted; blundering. Burns, Brigs of Ayr. [Scotch.] staunch, stauncher, etc. See stanch, etc.

Staunton's opening. In chess-playing. See opening, 9.

stauracin (stâ′ra-sin), n. [< ML. stauracinus, < MGr. σταυρακινόν*, neut. of σταυρακινός*, pertaining to small crosses, < σταυράκιον, dim. of Gr. σταυρός, a cross.] A silken stuff figured with small crosses, in use at the Byzantine court, and as a material for ecclesiastical vestments elsewhere, in the early middle ages.

stauraxonia (stâ-rak-sō′ni-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + ἀξων, an axis.] In promorphology, stauraxonial organic forms, as pyramids. Stauraxonia homopola are figures with equal poles, whose stereometric figure is a double pyramid (two pyramids base to base). Stauraxonia heteropola are single pyramids with dissimilar, usually anal and oral, poles. When these have regular bases, they are stauraxonia homostaura; when irregular, stauraxonia heterostaura.

stauraxonial (stâ-rak-sō′ni-ạl), a. [< stauraxonia + -al.] Having a main axis and a definite number of secondary axes at right angles therewith, so that the stereometric figure is fundamentally a pyramid: correlated with centraxonial.

stauri, n. Plural of staurus.

Stauria (stâ′ri-ạ), n. [NL. (Edwards and Haime, 1850), < Gr. σταυρός, a cross, a stake.] The typical genus of Stauriidæ, having a compound astræiform corallum growing by ealicular gemmation, four cruciate primitive septa, and no columella.

staurian (stâ′ri-an), a. [< Stauria + -an.] Resembling or related to the genus Stauria; of or pertaining to the Stauriidæ.

Stauriidæ (stâ-rī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stauria + -idæ.] A family of fossil rugose stone-corals, typified by the genus Stauria. The wall is well developed; the septa are complete, lamellar, and conspicuously tetramerous. The interseptal loculi are crossed by endotheeal dissepiments, and there is a central tabulate area. The genera besides Stauria are Holocystis, Polycœlia, Conosmilia, and Metriophyllum. Usually Stauridæ.

staurolite (stâ′rọ-līt), n. [< Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + λίθος, a stone.] A silieate of aluminium and iron occurring in reddish- to yellowish-brown or brownish-black prismatie crystals. These crystals are often twins, in the form of a cross, whence it is called cross-stone. Also staurotide, grenatite.—Staurolite-slate, a mica-slate through which are scattered crystals of staurolite. Rocks of this character have been found in Scotland, the Pyrenees, and New England.

staurolitic (stâ-rọ-lit′ik), a. [< staurolite + -ic.] Pertaining to, resembling, or characterized by the presence of staurolite.

Stauromedusæ (stâ″rọ-mē-dū′sē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + NL. Medusæ, q. v.] In Haeckel's classification, a subfamily of Scyphomedusæ, having four pairs of adradial gonads or four simple interradial gonads in the subumbral wall, four large perradial gastral pouches, and no special sense-organs.

stauromedusan (stâ″rọ-mē-dū′san), a. and n. [< Stauromedusæ + -an.] I. a. Pertaining to the Stauromedusæ, or having their characters.

II. n. A member of the Stauromedusæ.

Stauropus (stâ′rọ-pus), n. [NL. (Germar, 1813), < Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + ποῦς = E. foot.] 1. A genus of bombyeid moths, of the family Notodontidæ, having the thorax woolly, the fore wings rather broad and sinuate on the hind margins, hind wings rounded, tongue weak, and the abdomen slightly tufted above. The larvæ have fourteen legs, and are naked, with humps on the middle segments and two short anal projections; the legs on the third and fourth segments are exceedingly long. When at rest they raise the large head and enlarged anal segments, and it is from their extraordinary appearance that the only European species, S. fagi, derives its English name of lobster-moth. Its larva is of a brown color, and feeds on oak, birch, beech, and apple. The only other known species is Asiatic.

2. A genus of melandryid beetles, erected by Fairmaire and Germain in 1863 on a single South American species.

stauroscope (stâ′rọ-skōp), n. [< Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An optical instrument, invented by Von Kobell of Munich, for examining sections of crystals, and determining the position in them of the planes of light-vibration.

stauroscopic (stâ-rọ-skop′ik), a. [< stauroscope + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or made by means of the stauroscope: as, stauroscopic examination. Spottiswoode, Polarisation, p. 113.

stauroscopically (stâ-rọ-skop′i-kal-i), adv. By means of the stauroscope: as, stauroscopically determined systems of crystallization.

staurotide (stâ′rọ-tid), n. [< Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + -t- + -ide[2].] Same as staurolite.

Staurotypidæ (stâ-rọ-tip′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Staurotypus + -idæ.] A family of tropical Amerieau cryptodirous tortoises, represented by the genera Staurotypus and Claudius. They have nine plastral bones, the carapace with epidermal scutes, the nuchal bone with a short costiform process, and caudal vertebræ procœlous. Also Staurotypina, as a group of Chelydridæ.

staurotypous (stâ′rọ-tī-pus), a. [< Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + τύπος, type.] In mineral., having mackles or spots in the form of a cross.

Staurotypus (stâ-rot′i-pus), n. [NL., < Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + τύπος, type.] A genus of tortoises with a cruciform plastron, typical of the group Staurotypina or family Staurotypidæ.

staurus (stâ′rus), n.; pl. stauri (-rī). [NL., < Gr. σταυρός, a stake, pile, pale, cross.] A form of sexradiate sponge-spicule, resulting from the suppression of both the distal and the proximal ray. Sollas.

stave (stāv), n. [< ME. stæf, staf, stave, pl. staves, steves, < AS. stæf, pl. stafas, a staff: see staff. Stave is another form of staff, arising from the ME. oblique and plural forms. In the sense of 'stanza' the word is prob. due to the collateral form, Icel. stef, a stave, refrain.] 1. A pole or piece of wood of some length; a staff. Specifically—(a) In cooperage, one of the thin, narrow pieces of wood, grooved for the bottom, the head, etc., which compose a barrel, cask, tub, or the like. (b) One of the boards joined laterally to form a hollow cylinder, a curb for a well or shaft, the curved bed for the intrados of an arch, etc. (c) A spar or round of a rack to contain hay in stables for feeding horses; the rung of a ladder; the spoke of a wheel; etc.

2. A stanza; a verse; a metrical division.

Of eleuen and twelue I find none ordinary staues vsed in any vulgar language.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 54.

Chant me now some wicked stave,
Till thy drooping courage rise.
Tennyson, Vision of Sin.

3. Specifically, same as staff, 9.

stave (stāv), v.; pret. and pp. staved or stove, ppr. staving. [< stave, n., or directly < staff (with the usual change of f when medial to v; ef. strive, < strife, live, < life, wive, < wife, etc.). The proper pret. and pp. is staved; stove, like rove for reeved, conforms to the supposed analogy of drove, etc.] I. trans. 1. To break in a stave or staves of; knock a hole in; break: burst: as, the boat is stove.

They burnt their wigwams, and all their matts, and some corn, and staved seven canoes, and departed.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 232.

2. To cause or suffer to be lost by breaking the eask; hence, to spill; pour out.

And Mahomet the third . . . commanded, on paine of death, all such in Constantinople and Pera as had wine to bring it out and staue it, (except Embassadors onely,) so that the streets ranne therewith.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 294.

3. To furnish with staves or rnndles.—4. To make firm by compression; shorten or compact, as a heated rod or bar by endwise blows, or as lead in the socket-joints of pipes.—To stave and tail, a phrase current in bear-baiting, to stave being to check the bear with a staff, and to tail to hold baek the dog by the tail; hence, to cause a cessation or stoppage.

So lawyers . . .
Do stave and tail with writs of error,
Reverse of judgment, and demurrer.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. ii. 163.

To stave it out, to fight it out with staves; fight till a decisive result is attained. S. Butler, Hudibras, I. iii. 88. —To stave off, to beat or ward off with or as with a staff; keep back; delay; prevent the approsch or occurrence of.

Two dogs upon me?
And the old bearward will not succour me,
I'll stave 'em off myself.
Middleton, Anything for a Quiet Life, ii. 2.

It staved off the quarrelsome discussion as to whether she should or should not leave Miss Matty's service.
Mrs. Gaskell, Cranford, xiv.

II. intrans. To go or rush along recklessly or regardless of everything, as one in a rage; work energetically; drive. [Colloq.]

He . . . went staving down the street as if afraid to look behind him. The Century, XXXVIII. 41.

stave-jointer (stāv′join″tèr), n. See jointer[1].

staver[1] (stā′vèr), n. [< stave + -er[1].] An active, energetic person. [New Eng.]

Miss Asphyxia's reputation in the region was perfectly established. She was spoken of with applause under such titles as "a staver," "a pealer," "a roarer to work."
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 117.

staver[2] (stā′vèr), v. i. [Also staiver; < Dan. stavre, trudge, stumble.] To stagger; totter.

He [Cariyle] slept badly from overwork, "gaeing staver-ing aboot the hoose at night," as the Scotch maid said.
Froude, Carlyle (Life in London, I. iii.).

stave-rime (stāv′rīm), n. Alliteration; an alliterative word: used especially in treating of Anglo-Saxon and other ancient Germanic poetry. The Academy, Jan. 14, 1888, p. 27.

stavers (stā′vèrz), n. pl. [< staver[2].] The staggers, a disease of horses. See stagger, 2.

staverwort (stā′vèr-wèrt), n. The ragwort, Senecio Jacobæa: so called as being supposed to eure the stavers or staggers in horses. Also staggerwort.

staves, n. A plural of staff and the plural of stave.

stavesacre (stāvz′ā″kèr), n. [Early mod. E. also stavesaker; < ME. staphisagre, < OF. staves-aigre, < ML. staphisagria, staphysagria, stafisagria, stafisagra, etc., < Gr. as if σταφὶς ἀγρία*, stavesacre: σταφίς, ἀσταφίς, dried grapes; ἀγρία, fem. of ἄγριος, wild. Cf. Staphisagria.] A species of larkspur, Delphinium Staphisagria, native in southern Europe and Asia Minor. It is an erect downy herb, a foot or two high, with bluish or purple flowers in terminal racemes. Its seeds contain a poisonous principle, delphinine, and are used in a powder or ointment against vermin on man and beast, also in tincture as an application for rheumatism. They were formerly employed as a purgative, but found too violent. See delphinine[2] and lousewort, 2.

stave-tankard (stāv′tang″kärd), n. A drinking-cup formed of staves of wood, hooped with either wood or metal, the bottom being generally wood also. One preserved in Exeter, England, is 5 inches high and 4 inches in diameter at the bottom. It is formed of fourteen staves of boxwood, the fifteenth, of oak, forming the handle, and is bound with brass hoops. Also called sapling-tankard.

stavewood (stāv′wůd), n. [< stave + wood[1].] 1. See quassia, 2.—2. A tall stout tree, Sterculia fœtida, of the East Indies, eastern Africa, and Australia. The wood is soft, and thought to be of little value.

staving (stā′ving), n. [< stave + -ing[1].] 1. Staves collectively, as those which form the curb about a turbine water-wheel.—2. In forging, a method of shortening or compacting a heated bar by striking blows on its end.

staw[1] (stâ), v. [< Dan. stau = Sw. stå = D. stuan = OHG. MHG. stān, stand, stay, = L. stare = Gr. ἱστάναι = Skt. √ sthā, stand: see stand, where the relation of the orig. root sta to stand is explained.] I. intrans. To stand still; become stalled or mired, as a eart; be fixed or set. [North. Eng.]

II. trans. 1. To put to a standstill.—2. To clog; glut; surfeit; disgust. Burns, To a Haggis. [Scoteh.]

staw[2] (stâ). A preterit of steal. [Scoteh.]

My fause lover staw the rose.
Burns, Ye Banks and Brses.

stay[1] (stā), n. [< ME. stay*, < AS. stæg = D. G. Icel. Dan. Sw. stag, a stay (in naut. sense); ef. OF. estay, F. étai = Sp. estay = Pg. estay, estai (pl. estaes), also ostais, a stay (< Teut.); origin uncertain; by some supposed to be named from being used to elimb up by, being derived, in this view, like stair, stile[1], stag, etc., from the root of AS. stīgan (pret. stāh) = D. stijgen = G. steigen, etc., climb, ascend: see sty[1]. The word has been confused with stay[2], a prop, etc.] 1. Naut., a strong rope used to support a mast, and leading from the head of one mast down to some other, or to some part of the vessel. Those stays which lead forward are called fore-and-aft stays, and those which lead down to the vessel's sides backstays. See cut under ship.

2. A rope used for a similar purpose; a guy supporting the mast of a derriek, a telegraph-pole, or the like.—3. In a chain-cable, the transverse piece in a link.—In stays, or hove in stays (naut.), in the act of going about from one tack to the other.—Martingale stays. See martingale.—Slack in stays. See slack[1].—Spring-stay, a smaller stay parallel to and assisting the regular one.—To heave in stays. See heave.—To miss stays. See miss[1].—To put a ship in stays, to bring her head to the wind; heave her to.—To ride down a stay. See ride.—Triatic stay (naut.), an arrangement of pendants to hook stay-tackles to for hoisting out or in boats or other heavy weights. One pendant is lashed at the foremast- or foretopmast-head, and one at the mainmast- or maintopmast-head. These pendants have a span at their lower ends to keep them in place, and a large thimble is spliced into the lower end of each, into which the stay-tackles are hooked.

stay[1] (stā), v. [< stay[1], n.] I. trans. Naut.: (a) To incline forward, aft, or to one side by means of stays: as, to stay a mast. (b) To tack; put on the other tack: as, to stay ship.

II. intrans. Naut., to change tack; go about; be in stays, as a ship.

stay[2] (stā), n. [< ME. staye*, < OF. estaie, estaye, f., F. étai, m., a prop, stay, < MD. staeye, later staey, a prop, stay, also a contracted form of staede, stade, a prop, stay, help, aid; cf. D. stede, steé, a place, = AS. stede, E. stead, a place: see stead, and cf. stathe. The word stay[1] has been confused to some extent with stay[2]. The noun is by some derived from the verb. In the later senses it is so derived: see stay[2], v.] 1. A prop; a support.

There were stays on either side on the place of the seat [of Solomon's throne], and two lions stood beside the stays.
1 Ki. x. 19.

See we not plainly that obedience of creatures unto the law of nature is the stay of the whole world?
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 3.

Specifically — (a) In building, a piece performing the office of a brace, to prevent the swerving or lateral deviation of the piece to which it is applied. (b) In steam-enginea: (1) A rod, bar, bolt, or gusset in a boiler, to hold two parts together against the pressure of steam: as, a tube-stay; a water-space stay. (2) One of the sling-rods connecting a locomotive-boiler to its frame. (3) A rod, beneath the boiler, supporting the inside bearings of the crank-axle of a locomotive. (c) In mining, a piece of wood used to secure the pump to an engine-shaft. (d) In some hollow castings, a spindle which forms a support for the core. (e) In anat. and zoöl., technically, a prop or support: as, the bony stay of the operculum of a mail-cheeked fish, or cottoid. This is an enlarged suborbital bone which crosses the cheek and articulates with the præopercnlum in the mail-cheeked fishes. See Cottoidea, Scleropariæ.

2. pl. A kind of waistcoat, stiffened with whalebone or other material, now worn chiefly by women and girls to support and give shape to the body, but formerly worn also by men. (Hall, Satires.) Stays were originally, as at present, made in two pieces laced together: hence the plural form. In composition the singular is always used: as, *stay*lace, *stay*maker. See corset, 3.

They could not ken her middle sae jimp, . . .
The stays o' gowd were ao well laced.
The Bonny Bows o' London (Child's Ballads, II. 361).

3†. A fastening for a garment; hence, a hook; a elasp; anything to hang another thing on. Cotgrave.

To my dear daughter Philippa, queen of Portugal, my second best stay of gold, and a gold eup and eover.
Test. Vetust., p. 142, quoted in Halliwell.

4. That whieh holds or restrains; obstaele; eheek; hindranee; restraint.

The presence of the Governour is (as you say) a great stay and bridle unto them that are ill disposed.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

5. A stop; a halt; a break or cessation of action, motion, or progression: as, the court granted a stay.

They make many stayes by the way.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 427.

They were able to read good authors without any stay, if the book were not false.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

Works adjourn'd have many stays.
Long demurs breed new delays.
Southwell, Loss in Delay.

6†. A standstill; a state of rest; entire eessation of motion or progress: used chiefly in the phrase at a stay.

In bashfulness the spirits do a little go and come — but with bold men upon a like occasion they stand at a stay.
Bacon, Boldness (ed. 1887).

7. A fixed state; fixedness; stability; permanenee.

Alas! what stay is there in human state? Dryden.

8. Continuanee in a plaee; abode for an indefinite time; sojourn: as, you make a short stay in the eity.

Your stay with him may not be long.
Shak., M. for M., iii. 1. 256.

9†. A station or fixed anchorage for vessels. Sir P. Sidney. (Imp. Dict.) — 10. State; fixed condition. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Amonge the Utopians, where all thinges be sett in a good ordre, and the common wealthe in a good staye, it very seldom channeeth that they cheuse a newe plotte to buyld an house vpon.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 4.

Man . . . cometh up and is eut down like a flower; he fleeth as it were a shadow, and never continueth in one stay [in eodem statu (Sarum dirge)].
Book of Common Prayer, Burial of the Dead.

He alone continueth in one stay.
Lamb, Decay of Beggars.

11†. Restraint of passion; prudenee; moderation; caution; steadiness; sobriety.

With prudent stay he long deferr'd
The rough contention. Philips, Blenheim, l. 276.

Axle-guard stays, queen-post stay, etc. See the qualifying words. — Stay of proceedings, in law, a suspension of proceedings, as till some direction is complied with or till some appeal is decided; sometimes, in England, an entire discontinuance or dismission of the action. =Syn. 1. See staff. — 5. Pause, etc. See stop[1].

stay[2] (stā), v.; pret. and pp. stayed, staid, ppr. staying. [< ME. stayen, steyen* (pp. staid), < OF. estayer, F. étayer, prop, stay, < estaye, a prop, stay: see stay[2], n. By some derived < OF. esteir, ester, estre, F. être, be, remain, continue; but this derivation is on both phonetic and historieal grounds untenable. There is a eonnection felt between stay and staud; it is, however, very remote.] I. trans. 1. To prop; support; sustain; hold up; steady.

And Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side. Ex. xvii. 12.

A young head, not so well stayed as I would it were, . . . having many, many fancies begotten in it, if it had not been in some way delivered, would have grown a monster. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, Ded.

Let that stay and comfort thy heart.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 442.

2. To stop. (a) To detain; keep back; delay; hinder.

Your ships are stay'd at Venice.
Shak., T. of the S., iv. 2. 83.

If I could stay this letter an hour, I should send you something of Savoy. Donne, Letters, xlix.

This businesse staide me in London almost a weeke.
Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 14, 1671.

(b) To restrain; withhold; check; stop.

If I can hereby either prouoke the good or staye the ill, I shall thinke my writing herein well imployed.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 70.

Why do you look so strangely, fearfully,
Or stay your deathful hand?
Fletcher (and another), Queen of Corinth, iv. 3.

Its trench had stayed full many a rock,
Hurled by primeval earthquake shock.
Scott, L. of the L., iii. 26.

(c) To put off; defer; postpone; delay; keep back: as, to stay judgment.

The cardinal did entreat his holiness
To stay the judgement o' the divorce.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iii. 2. 33.

We'll stay
The sentence till another day.
Northern Lord and Cruel Jew (Child's Ballads, VIII. 282).

(d) To hold the attention of.

For the sound of some sillable stayd the eare a great while, and others slid away so quickly, as if they had not bene pronounced. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 56.

3. To stand; undergo; abide; hold out during.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor bide the encounter of assailing eyes.
Shak., R. and J., i. 1. 218.

Doubts are also entertained concerning her ability to stay the course.
Daily Telegraph, Nov. 11, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.)

4. To wait for; await.

Let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.
Shak., As you Like it, iii. 2. 221.

His Lord was gone to Amiens, where they would stay his coming. Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 3.

There were a hundred and forty people, and most stayed supper. Walpole, Letters, II. 369.

To stay the stomach, to appease the cravings of hunger; quiet the appetite temporarily; stave off hunger or faintness: also used figuratively.

A piece of gingerbread, to be merry withal,
And stay your stomach, lest you faint with fasting.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, iii. 2.

II. intrans. 1. To rest; depend; rely.

Because ye deapise this word, and trust in oppression and perverseness, and stay thereon. Isa. xxx. 12.

I stay here on my bond. Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 242.

2. To stop. (a) To come to a stand or stop.

She would command the hasty sun to stay.
Spenser, F. Q., I. x. 20.

Stay, you come on too fast; your pace is too impetuous.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iii. 3.

(b) To come to an end; cease.

An 't please your grace, here my commission stays.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., ii. 4. 76.

(c) To delay; linger; tarry; wait.

Fourscore pound: can you send for bail, sir? or what will you do? we cannot stay.
Webster and Dekker, Northward Hoe, i. 2.

(d) To make a stand; stand.

Give them leave to fly that will not stay.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 50.

3. To hold out, as in a race or contest; last or persevere to the end. [Colloq.]

He won at Lincoln, . . . and would stay better than Pizarro. Daily Telegraph, Sept. 14, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.)

4. To remain; especially, to remain in a plaee for an indefinite time; abide; sojourn; dwell; reside.

I understand, by some Merchants to-day upon the Exchange, that the King of Denmark is at Gluckstadt, and stays there all this Summer. Howell, Letters, I. v. 41.

They staid in the royal court,
And liv'd wi' mirth and glee.
Young Akin (Child's Ballads, I. 188).

5. To wait; rest in patienee or in expectation.

If I receive money for your tobacco before Mr. Randall go, I will send you something else; otherwise you must be content to stay till I can.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 424.

For present deliverance, they do not much expect it; for they stay for their glory, and then they shall have it, when their Prince comes in his, and the glory of the angels.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 127.

6. To wait as an attendant; give eeremonious or submissive attendanee: with on or upon.

I have a servant comes with me along,
That stays upon me. Shak., M. for M., iv. 1. 47.

To stay put, to remain where placed; remain fixed. [Colloq.] =Syn. 4. To rest, lodge, delay.

stay-at-home (stā'at-hōm'), n. One who is not given to roaming, gadding about, or traveling; one who keeps at home, either through choice or of necessity: also used adjectively: as, a stay-at-home man.

"Cold!" said her father; "what do ye stay-at-homes know about cold, a should like to know."
Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, ix.

stay-bar (stā'bär), n. 1. In arch., a horizontal iron bar extending in one piece from jamb to jamb through the mullions of a traeeried window. Seo saddle-bar. — 2. Same as stay-rod, 2.

Its sectional area should be three or four times that of a stay bar. Rankine, Steam Engine, § 66.

stay-bolt (stā'bōlt), n. In mach., a bolt or rod binding together opposite plates to enable them to sustain each other against internal pressure.

staybusk (stā'busk), n. Seo busk[4], 2.

stay-chain (stā'ehān), n. In a vehiele, one of the ehains by which the ends of the doubletree are attaehed to the fore axle. They serve to limit the swing of the doubletree.

staycord (stā'kôrd), n. Same as staylace.

stayed†, stayedly†, stayedness†. Old spellings of staid, staidly, staidness.

stay-end (stā'end), n. In a carriage, one of the ends of a backstay, bolted or clipped either to the perch or to the hind axle. — Stay-end tie, in a vehicle, a rod forming a connection between the stay-end on the reach and that on the axle.

stayer (stā'ėr), n. [< stay[2] + -er[1].] 1. One who supports or upholds; a supporter; a baeker.

Thou, Jupiter, whom we do eall the Stayer
Both of this city and this empire.
B. Jonson, Catiline, iv. 2.

2. One who or that which stops or restrains. — 3. One who stays or remains: as, a stayer at home. — 4. One who has sufficient endurance to hold out to the end; a person or an animal of staying qualities, as in racing or any kind of eontest; one who does not readily give in through weakness or lack of perseverance. [Colloq.]

stay-foot (stā'fůt), n. In shoe-manuf., a device attached to the presser-bar of a sewing-machine to guide a seam-stay in some kinds of light work.

stay-gage (stā'gāj), n. In a sewing-machine, an adjustable device serewed to the cloth-plate to guide a strip over the goods in such a way as to cover and conceal a seam.

stay-hole† (stā'hōl), n. A hole in a staysail through which it is seized to the hanks of the stay.

stay-hook (stā'hůk), n. A small hook formerly worn on the front of the bodice to hang a watch upon. Fairholt.

staylace (stā'lās), n. [< stay[2] + lace.] A laee used to draw together the parts of a woman's stays in order to give them the form required.

stayless (stā'les), a. [Early mod. E. staiiesse; < stay[2] + -less.] 1. Without stop or delay; ceaseless. [Rare.]

They made me muse, to see how fast they striu'd,
With staiiesse steppes, ech one his life to shield.
Mir. for Mags., p. 187.

2. Unsupported by stays or corsets.

stay-light (stā'līt), n. Same as riding-light.

staymaker (stā'mā'kėr), n. [< stay[2] + maker.] A maker of stays or corsets.

Our ladies choose to be shaped by the staymaker.
J. Spence, Crito.

stay-pile (stā'pīl), n. A pile eonneeted or anehored by land-ties with the main piles in the faee of piled work. See eut under pilework.

stay-plow (stā'plou), n. A European plant: same as rest-harrow.

stay-rod (stā'rod), n. 1. In steam-engines: (a) One of the rods supporting the boiler-plate whieh forms the top of the fire-box, to keep the top from being bulged down by the pressure of steam. (b) Any rod in a boiler which supports plates by connecting parts exposed to rupture in eontrary directious. (c) A tension-rod in a marine steam-engine. — 2. A tie-rod in a building, etc., which prevents the spreading asunder of the parts connected.

staysail (stā′sāl or -sl), n. Any sail which hoists upon a stay. See stay[1], 1.

stay-tackle (stā′tak′l), n. A tackle hanging amidships for hoisting in or out heavy weights, and formerly secured to the forestay or mainstay, but now generally attached to a pendant from the topmast-head.

stay-wedge (stā′wej), n. In locomotives, a wedge fitted to the inside bearings of the driving-axles to keep them in their proper position.

S. T. D. An abbreviation of the Latin Sacræ or Sacrosanctæ Theologiæ Doctor, Doctor of Sacred Theology.

stead (sted), n. [Early mod. E. also sted; < ME. sted, stid, stud, stede, stude, < (a) AS. stede = OS. stad = OFries. sted, stid, steth, steith = MD. stede, stad, D. stede, steé = MHG. stede = OHG. MHG. stat, G. statt = Icel. stadha = Sw. stad = Dan. sted = Goth. staths, place; (b) also, in a restricted sense and now partly differentiated spelling, MD. stede, stad, D. stad = MHG. stat, G. stadt = Sw. Dan. stad (< D. or G.?), a town, city (esp. common as the final element in names of towns); (c) cf. MD. stade, stacde, fit time, opportunity, = OHG. stata, f., MHG. state (esp. in phrase, OHG. zi statu, MHG. ze staten, G. zu statten), fit place or time; (d) AS. stæth = Icel. stöth, port, harbor, etc. (see stathe)—all these forms, which have been more or less confused with one another, being derived from the root of stand, in its more orig. form (OHG. MHG. stān, stēn, G. stehen, etc.): see stand, stair. Cf. bedstead, farmstead, homestead, roadstead, etc., instead. Cf. L. statio(n-), a standing, station (see station), Gr. στάσις, a placing (see stasis), from the same ult. root. The phrase in stead, now written as one word, instead, except when a qualifying word intervenes, was in ME. in stede, in stide, on stede, or in the stede, etc. The mod. dial. pron. instid, often aphetically stid, rests on the ME. variant stid, stide.] 1†. A place; place in general.

I leue the saying and gyfe stede to hym.
Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 19.

Every kyndly thing that is Hath a kyndly sted ther he May best in hit conserved be.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 731.

Fly therefore, fly this fearefull stead anon.
Spenser, F. Q., II. iv. 42.

The souldier may not move from watchfull sted.
Spenser, F. Q., I. ix. 41.

2. Place or room which another had or might have: preceded by in: as, David died, and Solomon reigned in his stead. Hence instead.

And everyche of hem bringethe a Braunche of the Bayes or of Olyve, in here Bekes, in stede of Offrynge.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 59.

I buried her like my own sweet child,
And put my child in her stead.
Tennyson, Lady Clare.

3†. Space of time; while; moment.

Rest a little stead. Spenser, F. Q., VI. vii. 40.

4. The frame on which a bed is laid: now rarely used except in the compound bedstead.

But in the gloomy court was rais'd a bed,
Stuff'd with black plumes, and on an ebon stead.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., x. 293.

5†. A steading.—6†. Position or situation of affairs; state; condition; plight.

She was my solas, my ioy in ech stede,
My plesaunce, my comfort, my delite to!
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 2886.

He staggered to and fro in doubtfull sted.
Spenser, F. Q., V. xii. 23.

7. Assistance; service; use; benefit; advantage; avail: usually in the phrases to stand in stead, to do stead (to render service).

Here our dogs pottage stood vs in good stead, for we had nothing els. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 90.

The Duke of Savoy felt that the time had at last arrived when an adroit diplomacy might stand him in stead.
Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 200.

A devil's advocate may indeed urge that his [Thiers's] egotism and almost gasconading temperament stood him in stead in the trying circumstances of his negotiations with the powers and with Prince Bismarck—but this is not really to his discredit. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 305.

Stead of†, instead of. Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 48.—To do stead, to do service; help. Milton, Comus, l. 611. [Rare.]—To stand in stead. See stand. [Stead occurs as the second element in many topographical names, as Hamp*stead*, Win*sted*.]

stead (sted), v. [< ME. steden (pp. steded, stedd, sted, stad) = Icel. stedhja, place (pp. staddr, placed in a specified position, circumstanced, etc.); from the noun.] I. trans. 1†. To place; put; set.

Lorde God! that all goode has by-gonne,
And all may ende both goode and euyll,
That made for man both mone and sonne,
And stedde yone aterne to stande atille.
York Plays, p. 127.

2†. To place or put in a position of danger, difficulty, hardship, or the like; press; bestead.

The bargayne I made thare,
That rewes me nowe full sare,
So am I straytely sted. York Plays, p. 103.

O father, we are cruelly sted between God's laws and man's laws—What shall we do?—What can we do?
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xix.

3†. With up: to replace; fill.

We shall advise this wronged maid to stead up your appointment, go in your place. Shak., M. for M., iii. 1. 260.

4. To avail; assist; benefit; serve; be of service, advantage, or use to.

We are . . . neither in skill nor ability of power greatly to stead you. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

In my dealing with my child, my Latin and Greek, my accomplishments and my money, stead me nothing; but as much soul as I have avails. Emerson, The Over-Soul.

II.† intrans. To stop; stay.

I shalle not sted Tille I have theym theder led.
Towneley Mysteries, p. 6.

steadable† (sted′ạ-bl), a. [< stead + -able.] Serviceable.

I have succoured and supplied him with men, money, friendship, and counsel, upon any occasion wherein I could be steadable for the improvement of his good.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 28. (Davies.) steadfast, stedfast (sted′fȧst), a. [< ME. stedfast, stedefast, stidefast, stedevest, studevest, < AS. stedefæst (= MD. stedevast = Icel. stathfastr), firm in its place (cf. Sw. stadfästa = Dan. stadfæste, confirm, ratify), < stede, place, stead, + fæst, fast.] 1. Firm; firmly fixed or established in place or position.

"Yea, yea," quod he, "this is the case,
Your lee is euer stedfast in on place."
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2772.

Ye fleeting streams last long, outliving many a day;
But on more stedfast things Time makes the strongest prey. Drayton, Polyolbion, ii. 148.

2. Firm; unyielding; unwavering; constant; resolute.

Heavenly grace doth him uphold,
And stedfast truth acquite him out of all.
Spenser, F. Q., I. viii. 1.

Stedfast in the faith. 1 Pet. v 9.

Through all his [Warren Hastings's] disasters and perils, his brethren stood by him with steadfast loyalty.
Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

3. Steady; unwavering; concentered.

He loked fast on to hym in stede fast wise,
And thought alway his sonne that he shuld be.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 414.

The homely villain court'sies to her low;
And, blushing on her, with a steadfast eye
Receives the scroll without or yea or no.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1339.

=Syn. 2. Stanch, stable, unflinching.

steadfastly, stedfastly (sted′fȧst-li), adv. [< ME. stedfastly, stedefæstlice; < steadfast + -ly[2].] In a steadfast manner. (a) Steadily; firmly; confidently; resolutely.

Hesiod maketh him [Orion] the sonne of Neptune and Euriale; to whom his father gaue that vertue, to walk as stedfastly vpon the sea as the land.
Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 177.

(b) Steadily; fixedly; intently.

Look on me stedfastly, and, whatsoe'er I say to you,
Move not, nor alter in your face.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, iv. 2.

(c) Assuredly; certainly.

Your woful mooder wende stedfastly
That cruel houndes or som foul vermyne Hadde eten yow. Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 1038.

steadfastness, stedfastness (sted′fȧst-nes), n. [< ME. stedfastnesse, stedefastnesse, stidefastnesse; < steadfast + -ness.] 1. Firmness; strength.

Ryht softe as the marye [marrow] is, that is alwey hidd in the feete al withinne, and that is defendid fro withowte by the stidefastnesse of wode.
Chaucer, Boëthius, iii. prose 11.

2. Stability and firmness; fixedness in place or position.

Forward did the mighty waters press,
As though they loved the green earth's steadfastness.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 173.

3. Stability of mind or purpose; resolution; constancy; faithfulness; endurance.

What coude a sturdy housbond more devyse
To preve hir wyfhod and hir stedfastnesse?
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 643.

steadier (sted′i-ėr), n. One who or that which steadies: as, he uses his cane for a steadier.

steadily (sted′i-li), adv. In a steady manner; firmly; fixedly; steadfastly; intently; without wavering or flinching; without intermission, deviation, or irregularity; uniformly.

steadiness (sted′i-nes), n. Steady character, quality, or condition. (a) Firmness in position; stability: as, the steadiness of a rock. (b) Freedom from tottering, swaying, or staggering motion: as, he walked with great steadiness; freedom from jolting, rolling, pitching, or other irregular motion: as, the steadiness of the great ocean steamers. (c) Freedom from irregularity of any kind; uniformity: as, prices increased with great steadiness. (d) Firmness of mind or purpose; constancy; resolution: as, steadiness in the pursuit of an object. (e) Fortitude; endurance; staying power.

steading (sted′ing), n. [< stead + -ing[1].] A farm-house and offices—that is, barns, stables, cattle-sheds, etc.; a farmstead; a homestead. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

steady[1] (sted′i), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also stedy, steddy; < ME. stede, stedi, stidiz, < AS. stæththig (also stædig*, stedig*, Lye) (= Icel. stöthugr = Sw. Dan. stadig), steady, stable, < stæth, stead, bank: see stathe. Cf. MD. stedigh = OHG. stati, MHG. stæte, stætee(g), G. stätig, stetig, continual, < statt, etc., a place: see stead, to which steady is now referred.] I. a. 1. Firmly fixed in place or position; unmoved.

The knight gan fayrely couch his steady apeare.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xi. 16.

And how the dull Earth's prop-less massie Ball Stands steddy still, lust in the midst of All.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 7.

2. Firm or unfaltering in action; resolute: as, a steady stroke; a steady purpose.

All the Foot now dis-embark't, and got together in som order on firm ground, with a more steddy charge put the Britans to flight. Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

With steady step he held his way
O'er shadowy vale and gleaming height.
Bryant, Two Travellers.

In this sense much used elliptically in command, for 'keep' or 'hold steady': (a) Naut., an order to the helmsman to keep the ship straight on her course. (b) In hunting, an order to a dog to be wary and careful.

3. Free from irregularity or unevenness, or from tendency to irregular motion; regular; constant; undeviating; uniform: as, steady motion; a steady light; a steady course; a steady breeze; a steady gait.—4. Constant in mind, purpose, or pursuit; not fickle, changeable, or wavering; not easily moved or persuaded to relinquish a purpose: as, to be steady in the pursuit of an object; steady conduct.

A clear sight keeps the understanding steady. Locke.

To keep us steady in our conduct, he hath fortified us with natural laws and principles, which are preventive of many aberrations. Kames, Elem. of Crit., I. x.

Hence—5. Sober; industrious; persevering: as, a steady workman.—Steady motion, a motion of a fluid such that the velocity at each point remains constant in magnitude and direction.—Steady pin. See pin[1].

II. n. 1. In mach., some device for steadying or holding a piece of work. Specifically, in button-manuf., a hand-support for a button-blank, upon which, used in conjunction with another implement called a grip, the blank is held between the alined rotating spindles carrying cutters for shaping it into the required form. 2. In stone-cutting, a support for blocking up a stone to be dressed, cut, or broken.—3. Same as stadda.

steady[1] (sted′i), v.; pret. and pp. steadied, ppr. steadying. [< steady[1], a.] I. trans. 1. To make steady; hold or keep from shaking, staggering, swaying, reeling, or falling; support; make or keep firm: as, to steady the hand.

Thus steadied, it [the house-martin] works and plasters the materials into the face of the brick or stone.
Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. Selborne, To D. Barrington, xvi.

Hence—2. To make regular and persevering in character and conduct: as, trouble and disappointment had steadied him.

II. intrans. To become steady; regain or maintain an upright or stable position or condition; move steadily.

She steadies with upright keel!
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, iii.

steady[2] (sted′i), n. A dialectal form of stithy.

Job saith, Stetit cor ejus sicut incus: His heart stood as a steady. Bp. Jewell, Works, I. 523. (Davies.) steady-going (sted′i-gō′ing), a. Of steady habits; consistently uniform and regular in action; that steadily pursues a reasonable and consistent way: as, a steady-going fellow.

Sir George Burns appears to have been too steadygoing through the whole of his long life for it to be marked by any of the exciting incidents that make the charm of biography. Athenæum, No. 3287, p. 545.

steady-rest (sted′i-rest), n. Same as back-rest.

steak (stāk), n. [< ME. steike, steyke, < Icel. steik, a steak, = Sw. stek = Dan. steg, roast meat, < Icel. steikja (= Sw. steka = Dan. stege), roast on a spit (cf. stikua, be roasted or scorched), akin to stika, a stick: see stick[1], stick[3].] 1. A slice of flesh, as beef, pork, venison, or halibut, broiled or fried, or cut for broiling or frying.

Steke of flesshe — charbonnee. Palsgrave, p. 275.

Fair ladies, number five,
Who, in your merry freaks,
With little Tom contrive
To feast on ale and steaks.
Swift, Five Ladies at Sot's Hole.

2†. A slash or panel in a garment.

Is that your lackey yonder, in the steaks of velvet?
Middleton, Phœnix, i. 5.

Hamburg steak, raw beef, chopped fine, seasoned with onions, etc., formed into a cake, and cooked in a close frying-pan.—Porter-house steak. See porter-house.—Round steak, a steak from the round.—Rump steak. See rump-steak.—Tenderloin steak. See tenderloin.

steak-crusher (stāk'krush″ėr), n. A kitchen utensil for pounding, rolling, or otherwise crushing a steak before cooking, to make it tender.

steal[1] (stēl), v.; pret. stole, pp. stolen (formerly stole), ppr. stealing. [< ME. stelen, steolen (pret. stal, stale, stel, pp. stolen, stoolen, stole, i-stolen), < AS. stelan (pret. stæl, pl. stǣlon, pp. stolen) = OS. stelan = OFries. stela = D. stelen = MLG. LG. stelen = OHG. stelan, MHG. steln, G. stehlen = Icel. stela = Sw. stjäla = Dan. stjæle = Goth. stilan, steal. Connection with Gr. στερίσκειν, στερεῖν, deprive of, is doubtful. Hence ult. stale[1], stealth. For another word for 'steal,' with L. and Gr. connections, see tift[3].] I. trans. 1. To take feloniously; take and carry off clandestinely, and without right or leave; appropriate to one's own uses dishonestly, or without right, permission, or authority: as applied to persons, to kidnap; abduct: as, to steal some one's purse; to steal cattle; to steal a child.

Whan Grisandol saugh he was on slepe, she and hir felowes com as softely as thei myght, and stale awey his staffe. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 425.

How then should we steal out of thy lord's house silver or gold? Gen. xliv. 8.

2. To remove, withdraw, or abstract secretly or stealthily.

And from beneath his Head, at dawning Day,
With softest Care have stoln my Arm away.
Prior, Solomon, ii.

3†. To smuggle, literally or figuratively.

Pray Walsh to steal you in, as I hope he will do.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 187.

All the Spicea and drugs that are brought to Mecca are stollen from thence as Contrabanda.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 223.

4. To take or assume without right.

Oh, that deceit should steal such gentle shapes,
And with a virtuous vizard hide foul guile!
Shak., Rich. III., ii. 2. 27.

5. To obtain surreptitiously, or by stealth or surprise: as, to steal a kiss.

What sought these lovers then, by day, by night,
But stolen moments of disturb'd delight?
Crabbe, Works, I. 48.

6. To entice or win by insidious arts or secret means.

How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stol'n from mine eye!
Shak., Sonnets, xxxi.

Thou hast discovered some enchantment old Whose spells have stolen my spirit as I slept.
Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, ii. 1.

7. To perform, procure, or effect in a stealthy or underhand way; perform secretly; conceal the doing, performance, or accomplishment of.

And than lough Arthur, and seide to the kynge Ban that this mariage wolde he haue stole hadde no Merlin i-be.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 363.

I went this evening to visit a friend, with a design to rally him upon a story I had heard of his intending to steal a marriage without the privity of us his intimate friends and acquaintance. Steele, Spectator, No. 133.

8. To move furtively and slyly: as, she stole her hand into his.

The 'prentice speaks his disrespect by an extended finger, and the porter by stealing out his tongue.
Steele, Spectator, No. 354.

9. In base-ball, to secure, as a base or run, without an error by one's opponents or a base-hit by the batter; to run successfully to, as from one base to the next, in spite of the efforts of one's opponents: as, to steal second base: sometimes used intransitively with to: as, to steal to second base.—10. In netting, to take away (a mesh) by netting into two meshes of the preceding row at once. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 359.—To steal a by. See by[1].—To steal a march, to march secretly; anticipate or forestall, or otherwise gain an advantage stealthily, or by address.—To steal over†, to smuggle.

In the Flushing and Low Country's troubleasome disorders, some few (by stealing over of victuals and other things from this commonwealth) have made themselves privately rich. Dr. J. Dee (Arber's Eng. Garner, II. 69).

=Syn. 1. To filch, pilfer, purloin, embezzle. See pillage, n.

II. intrans. 1. To practise or be guilty of theft.

Thou shalt not steal. Ex. xx. 15.

2. To move stealthily or secretly; creep softly; pass, approach, or withdraw surreptitiously and unperceived; go or come furtively; slip or creep along insidiously, silently, or unperceived; make insinuating approach: as, to steal into the house at dusk; the fox stole away: sometimes used reflexively.

Age is so on me stoolen that y mote to god me zilde.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 72.

Fix'd of mind . . . to fly all company, one night she stole away. Sir P. Sidney.

He will steal himself into a man's favour, and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries.
Shak., All's Well, iii. 6. 98.

But what has made Sir Peter steal off? I thought he had been with you. Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 3.

Ever does natural beauty steal in like air, and envelop great actions. Emerson, Misc., p. 25.

steal[1] (stēl), n. [< steal[1], v.] An act or a case of theft: as, an official steal; specifically, in base-ball, a stolen or furtive run from one base to another: as, a steal to third base. See steal[1], v. t., 9.

steal[2] (stēl), n. Same as stale[2].

stealer (stē'lėr), n. [< steal[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who steals, in any sense; especially, a thief: as, a cattle-stealer.

The trangression is in the stealer.
Shak., Much Ado, ii. 1. 233.

Specifically—2. In ship-building, the foremost or aftmost plank in a strake, which is dropped short of the stem or stern-post and butts against a notch or jog in another plank. Also called stealing-strake.

When the girth of the ship at the midship section is so much in excess of each or either of those at the extremities as to cause the plates to be very narrow if the same number were retained right fore and aft, it becomes necessary to introduce stealers—that is to say, to cause certain plates to stop somewhere between the extremities and midships, and thus reduce the number of strakes which end on the stem and stern post.
Thearle, Naval Arch., § 138.

stealing (stē'ling), n. [Verbal n. of steal[1], v.] 1. The act of one who steals; theft.

Men are apt to condemn whatever they hear called stealing as an ill action, disagreeing with the rule of right.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxviii. 16.

2. That which is stolen; stolen property: used chiefly in the plural: as, his stealings amounted to thousands of dollars.

stealingly (stē'ling-li), adv. [< ME. stelendlich; < stealing, ppr., + -ly[2].] By stealing; slyly; secretly. [Rare.]

stealing-strake (stē'ling-strāk), n. Same as stealer, 2.

stealth (stelth), n. [Early mod. E. also stelth; < ME. stelthe, stalthe (= Icel. stuldr = Sw. stöld), stealth, with abstract formative -th, < AS. stēlan, steal: see steal[1]. Another form, from the Scand., is stouth. The older noun was stale[1]. Cf. health, heal[1], wealth, weal.] 1†. The act of stealing; theft.

Yf that Licurgus should have made it death for the Lacedemonians to steale, they being a people which naturally delighted in stealth, . . . there should have bene few Lacedemonians then left. Spenser, State of Ireland.

2†. A thing stolen.

On his backe a heavy load he bare
Of nightly stelths, and pillage severall.
Spenser, F. Q., I. iii. 16.

3. A secret or clandestine method or proceeding; means secretly employed to gain an object; surreptitious way or manner: used in a good or a bad sense.

Yet it were oon that wolde assay hym-self in eny straunge turnement by stelthe vnknowen whan thei were disgised that thei wolde not he knowe till thei hadde renomee of grete prowesse. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 502.

Let humble Allen, with an awkward shame,
Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame.
Pope, Epil. to Satires, i. 136.

4†. A secret going; a stolen or clandestine visit.

I told him of your stealth unto this wood.
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 310.

stealthful† (stelth'fûl), a. [< stealth + -ful.] Given to stealth; bent on stealing; stealthy. Chapman, tr. of Homer's Hymn to Hermes, l. 369.

stealthfully† (stelth'fûl-i), adv. By stealing; stealthily.

stealthfulness† (stelth'fûl-nes), n. Stealthiness.

stealthily (stel'thi-li), adv. In a stealthy manner; by stealth.

stealthiness (stel'thi-nes), n. Stealthy character or action.

stealthy (stel'thi), a. Acting by stealth; sly; secretive in act or manner; employing concealed methods: as, a stealthy foe; characterized by concealment; furtive: as, a stealthy proceeding; a stealthy movement.

Murder . . . with his stealthy pace.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 1. 54.

Footfalls of stealthy men he seemed to hear.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 321.

See where the stealthy panther left his tracks!
O. W. Holmes, A Family Record.

steam (stēm), n. [< ME. steem, stem, < AS. steám, vapor, smell, smoke, = Fries. stoame = D. stoom, steam; origin unknown.] 1. Vapor; a rising vapor; an exhalation.

Fough! what a steam of brimstone
Is here! B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, v. 4.

2. Water in a gaseous state; the gas or vapor of water, especially at temperatures above 100° C. It has a specific gravity of .625 as compared with air under the same pressure. It liquefies at 100° C. (212° F.), under a pressure of 14.7 pounds upon a square inch, or the mean pressure of the atmosphere at the sea-level. The temperature at which it liquefies diminishes with the pressure. Steam constantly rises from the surface of liquid water when not obstructed by impervious inclosures or covered by another gas already saturated with it. Its total latent heat of vaporization for 1 pound weight under a pressure of 76 centimeters of mercury (or 14.7 pounds to the square inch) is 965.7 British thermal units, or 536.5 calories for each kilogram. Its specific heat under constant pressure is .4805. (Regnault.) It is decomposed into oxygen and hydrogen at temperatures between 1,000° and 2,000° C. (Deville.) In addition to the surface evaporation of water, the change from the liquid to the gaseous state takes place beneath the surface (the gas escaping with ebullition) whenever the temperature of the liquid is raised without a corresponding increase of pressure upon it. The temperature at which this occurs under any particular pressure is the boiling-point for that pressure. The boiling-point of water under the atmospheric pressure at the sea-level is 100° C. or 212° F. Saturated steam has the physical properties common to all gases whose temperatures are near those of their liquefying-points, or the boiling-points of their liquids. Saturated steam when isolated, and superheated at temperatures from 100° to 110° C., and under constant pressure, expands with a given increase of temperature about five times as much as air, and at 186° C. about twice as much as air; and it must be raised to a temperature much higher than this before it will expand uniformly like air. The large quantity of latent heat in steam, its great elasticity, and the ease with which it may be condensed have rendered its use in engines more practicable than that of any other gaseous medium for the generation and application of mechanical power.

3. Water in a visible vesicular condition produced by the condensation of vapor of water in air.—4. Figuratively, force; energy. [Colloq.]

5†. A flame or blaze; a ray of light.

Steem, or lowe of fyre. Flamma. Prompt. Parv., p. 473.

Absolute steam-pressure. See pressure.—Dead steam. Same as exhaust-steam.—Dry steam, saturated steam without any admixture of mechanically suspended water.—High-pressure steam, low-pressure steam. See pressure.—Live steam, steam which has performed no work, or only part of its work, or which is or might be available for the performance of work in an engine.—Saturated steam, steam in contact with water at the same temperature. In this condition the steam is always at its condensing-point, which is also the boiling-point of the water with which it is in contact. In this it differs from superheated steam of equal tension, which has a temperature higher than its condensing-point at that tension, and higher than the boiling-point of water under the same pressure.—Specific steam-volume, in thermodynamics, the volume which a unit of weight of steam assumes under specific conditions of temperature and pressure.—Steam fire-engine. See fire-engine, 2.—Steam jet-pump. See pump[1].—Steam vacuum-pump. See vacuum-pump.—Superheated steam, steam which at any stated pressure has a higher temperature, and for any particular weight of it a greater volume, than saturated steam (which see, above) at the same pressure. Also called steam-gas.—Total heat of steam. Same as steam-heat, 1.—Wet steam, steam holding water mechanically suspended, the water being in the form of spray or vesicles, or both.

steam (stēm), v. [Early mod. E. also steem; < ME. stemen, < AS. stēman, stȳman (= D. stoomen), steam, < steam, vapor, steam: see steam, n.] I. intrans. 1. To give out steam or vapor; exhale any kind of fume or vapor.

Ye mists, . . . that . . . rise
From hill or steaming lake.
Milton, P. L., v. 186.

2. To rise in a vaporous form; pass off in visible vapor.

When the last deadly smoke aloft did steeme.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xii. 2.

3. To move or travel by the agency of steam: as, the vessel steamed into port.

We steamed quietly on, past . . . the crowds of yachts at Ryde, and dropped anchor off Cowes.
Lady Brassey, Voyage of Sunbeam, I. i.

4†. To flame or blaze up.

His eyen steepe and rollyng in his heede,
That stemede as a forneys of a leede.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 202.

Stemyn, or lowyn vp. Flammo. Prompt. Parv., p. 473.

Two stemynge eyes. Wyatt, Satires, i. 53.

II. trans. 1. To exhale; evaporate. [Rare.]

In slouthfull sleepe his molten hart to steme.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vi. 27.

2. To treat with steam; expose to steam; apply steam to for any purpose: as, to steam cloth; to steam potatoes instead of boiling them; to steam food for cattle; steamed bread.

steamboat (stēm′bōt), n. A vessel propelled by steam-power.

steamboat-bug (stēm′bōt-bug), n. A water-beetle of large size, or otherwise conspicuous. [Local, U. S.]

steamboat-coal (stēm′bōt-kōl), n. Coal broken small enough to pass between bars set from 6 to 8 inches apart, but too large to pass between bars less than 5 inches apart. This is the variation of size in different collieries in the Pennsylvania anthracite regions, where this size of coal is rarely prepared except to fill special orders, and where alone this term is in use.

steamboating (stēm′bō″ting), n. 1. The business of operating steamboats.—2. Undue hurrying and slighting of work. [Colloq.]—3. A method of cutting many boards for book-covers at one operation, instead of cutting them singly.

steamboat-rolls (stēm′bōt-rōlz), n. pl. The largest rolls used in breaking coal for the market. Also called crushers and crusher-rolls. See steamboat-coal. [Pennsylvania anthracite regions.]

steam-boiler (stēm′boi″lėr), n. A receptacle or vessel in which water is heated and boiled to generate steam; particularly, a receptacle or vessel in which the water is confined, or isolated from the external air, in order to generate steam under a pressure equal to or exceeding that of the atmosphere, for the conversion of its expansive force into work in a steam-motor or -engine, or for heating purposes. The kinds of steam-boilers in use are very numerous and may be variously classified. In some the parts are rigidly joined together by rivets, bolts, stays, tubes expanded into heads, etc.; in others the parts are easily detachable one from the other, as in what are known as sectional boilers. Another division may be made, with reference to the treatment of the contained water, which in one class of steam-boilers is heated principally in a single mass of considerable cubic capacity, and in another is distributed in small spaces connected with each other and with the steam-space, as in what are known as sectional safety-boilers. A third ground of classification is the mode of applying heat. (See cylindrical steam-boiler, return-flue boiler, horizontal tubular boiler, fire-tube boiler, etc., below.) Boilers are made of wrought-iron or steel plates and tubes, or of cast-iron, or partly of wrought-iron or steel and of cast-iron. Steel of moderate tensile strength has lately been much used for boilers in which high pressures are maintained; and the present tendency of engineering in power-boilers is toward the use of as high pressures as is compatible with good lubrication, or the use of steam at as high a temperature as can be employed without decomposition of lubricants. Sectional boilers are often made partly or wholly of cast-iron, the sections being bolted or screwed together; and cast-iron is also very largely employed for low-pressure boilers used for steam-heating.—Circulating steam-boiler, a compound boiler in which the connected parts are unequally heated, the water rising in the more intensely heated parts, and descending in the cooler parts, to insure a rapid circulation of the water constantly in one direction.—Compound steam-boiler. (a) A battery of two or more single steam-boilers having their steam- and water-spaces connected, and acting together to supply steam to a heating-apparatus or a steam-engine. (b) A single boiler, or a battery of boilers, combined with other apparatus, as a feed-water heater or a superheater, for facilitating the production or for the superheating of steam. (c) A sectional boiler.—Cornish steam-boiler, the cylindrical flue-boiler invented by Smeaton. See return-flue steam-boiler.—Corrugated furnace steam-boiler, a boiler in which the plates exposed to the direct radiation from the fire and to the hot gases in the furnace are corrugated to give increased strength and to present a more extended heating-surface to the fire.—Cylindrical steam-boiler, a boiler with an exterior cylindrical shell, having flanged heads of much thicker iron fastened to the shell by rivets.—Fire-tube steam-boiler, a boiler in which the heat of the furnace is partly or wholly applied to the interior of tubes which pass through the water-space of the boiler.—Flue steam-boiler, a general name for all steam-boilers with an internal flue or flues, whether vertical, horizontal, or of other construction.—Horizontal flue steam-boiler, a horizontal steam-boiler with one or more flues through its length. (Also called return-flue boiler.) If cylindrical also, it is a horizontal cylindrical flue or return-flue boiler.—Horizontal steam-boiler, a steam-boiler in which the flues or tubes are in a horizontal position.—Horizontal tubular steam-boiler, a horizontal boiler with fire-tubes, through which the gases of combustion pass in a manner analogous to their passage through flues, for which the tubes are substitutes, presenting a greater extent of heating-surface than can be obtained in the same space by flues, and effectively tying the heads of the boiler together. A modern form of this boiler is shown in the cuts, which also show the method of setting it in brickwork. a is the shell; b, b, saddles for supporting the boiler in the masonry c; d, the furnace-door; e, ash-pit door; f, clean-out door in the boiler-front f′, by which the tubes are reached for cleaning; g, ash-pit; h, grate; i, steam-dome; j, safety-valve; k, steam-pipe; l, bridge-wall; m, combuation-chamber; n, back connection for passage of Horizontal Cylindrical Tubular Steam-boiler.

A, vertical longitudinal section; B, vertical cross-section.

the gases of combustion into the rear ends of the tubes; o, flue in the masonry; o′, uptake; p, flanged head; q, tnbea; r, side-bars which support the masonry; s, dead-air spaces in the masonwork in which the air acts as a heat-insulator. The course of the gases of combustion is indicated by arrows.—Locomotive steam-boiler, a tubular boiler which has a contained furnace and ash-pit, and in which the gases of combustion pass from the furnace directly into horizontal interior tubes (instead of passing first under the boiler, as in the horizontal cylindrical tubular boiler), and after passing through the tubes are conveyed directly into the smoke-box at the opposite end of the tubes. The name is derived from the use of such boilers on locomotive engines, but it is typical in its application to all boilers having the construction described, and used for generating steam for stationary or portable engines, as well as for locomotives.—Marine steam-boiler, a boiler specially designed and adapted for supplying steam to marine engines. Compactness, as little weight as is consistent with strength, effective steaming capacity, and economy in consumption of fuel are the prime requisites of marine boilers. They are usually tubular, and short in proportion to their width, and have water-legs at the sides and water-spaces below and at the backs of their furnaces—that is, their furnaces are entirely surrounded by water-spaces except at the openings for the doors. Marine boilers are now sometimes used with forced draft—that is, air is forced from the outside into the boiler- or fire-rooms (which are sometimes made air-tight) or immediately into the fires by powerful blowers.—Return-flue steam-boiler, a horizontal flue-boiler with one or more interior flues through which the gases of combustion are returned to the front end of the boiler after having passed to the rear from the furnace over the bridge-wall and under the bottom of the shell.—Rotary tubular steam-boiler. See rotary.—Sectional safety steam-boiler, a sectional boiler in which the water is divided into numerous small masses connected with one another by passages large enough for free circulation from one to the other, but not large enough to permit so sudden a release of pressure, in case of rupture of one of the sections, as to cause an explosion.—Tubular steam-boiler, a boiler a prominent feature of which is a series of either fire- or water-tubes.—Vertical steam-boiler, a steam-boiler in which the heating-surface of the tubes or flues is in a vertical position. When constructed with fire-tubes, it is called a vertical tubular boiler.

steam-box (stēm′bɔks), n. A reservoir for steam above a boiler; a steam-chest.

steam-brake (stēm′brāk), n. A brake applied by the action of steam admitted to a steam-cylinder the piston of which is connected by rods to the levers which apply the brake-shoes.

steam-car (stēm′kär), n. A car drawn or driven by steam-power; a railway-car. [U. S.]

steam-carriage (stēm′kar″āj), n. A road-carriage driven by steam-power.

steam-case (stēm′kās), n. Same as steam-chest.

steam-chamber (stēm′chām″bėr), n. 1. A box or chamber in which articles are placed to be steamed.—2. A steam-chest.—3. A steam-dome.—4. The steam-room or steam-space in a boiler or engine.

steam-chest (stēm′chest), n. 1. The chamber in which the slide-valve of a steam-engine works. See cuts under passenger-engine, rock-drill, and slide-valve.—2. In calico-printing, a metallic vessel or tank in which printed cloths are steamed to fix their colors.

steam-chimney (stēm′chim″ni), n. An annular chamber around the chimney of a boiler-furnace for superheating steam.

steam-cock (stēm′kɔk), n. A faucet or valve in a steam-pipe.

steam-coil (stēm′koil), n. A coil of pipe, either made up flat with return bends or in spiral form, used to impart heat to a room or other inclosed space or to a liquid, or, by exposure of its exterior surface to air-currents or contact of cold water, to act as a condenser.

steam-color (stēm′kul″or), n. In dyeing, a color which is developed and fixed by the action of steam after the cloth is printed.

steam-crane (stēm′krān), n. A crane worked by steam, frequently carrying the steam-engine upon the same frame.

steam-cutter (stēm′knt″ėr), n. A ship's boat, smaller than a launch, propelled by steam.

steam-cylinder (stēm′sil″in-dėr), n. The cylinder in which the piston of a steam-engine reciprocates.—Starting steam-cylinder. Same as starting-engine.

steam-dome (stēm′dōm), n. A chamber connected with the steam-space and projecting above the top of a steam-boiler. From it the steam passes to the cylinder of a steam-engine, or to steam-heating apparatus. See cut under steam-boiler.

steam-dredger (stēm′drej″ėr), n. A dredging-machine operated by steam.

steam-engine (stēm′en″jin), n. An engine in which the mechanical force arising from the elasticity and expansive action of steam, or from its property of rapid condensation, or from the combination of the two, is made available as a motive power. The invention of the steam-engine has been ascribed by the English to the Marquis of Worcester, who published an account of it about the middle of the seventeenth century. By the French the invention has been ascribed to Papin, toward the close of the same century. Papin's plan contained the earliest suggestion of a vacuum under a piston by the agency of steam. The first actual working steam-engine of which there is any record was invented and constructed by Captain Savery, an Englishman, to whom a patent was granted for it in 1698. This engine was employed to raise water by the expansion and condensation of steam. The steam-engine received great improvements from the hands of Newcomen, Beighton, and others. Still it was imperfect and rude in its construction, and was chiefly applied to the draining of mines or the raising of water. Up to this time it was properly an atmospheric engine (see atmospheric), for the actual moving power was the pressure of the atmosphere, the steam only producing a vacuum under the piston. The steam-engine was brought to a high state of perfection by James Watt about the year 1782. The numerous and vital improvements introduced by him, both in the combination of its mechanism and in the economy of its management, have rendered the steam-engine at once the most powerful, the most easily applied and regulated, and generally speaking the least expensive of all prime movers for impelling machinery of every description. The steam-engine is properly a heat-engine, and the total work L is expressed theoretically by the equation in which Q represents the total heat converted into work per unit of weight, G weight of steam, and A the thermal equivalent of a unit of work, while T_1 and T are respectively the higher and lower limits of temperature between which the steam is worked, T, being the absolute temperature at which the steam is inducted to the engine, and T the absolute temperature at which it is exhausted from it. Inspection of the equation shows that the work performed must vary directly as the factor $(T_1 - T)$ varies—that is, the greater the difference which can be maintained between the temperature of induction and that of eduction the greater is the amount of work performed by any given weight of steam. It is in accordance with this law that much higher steam-pressures are now adopted than were formerly employed. The factor $(T_1 - T)$ is commonly called the temperature range or fall. The varieties of steam-engines are extremely numerous. (For names of various types, with explanations of their characteristic features, see below.) The specific differences between steam-engines of the same type of construction consist chiefly in their valve-gear. (See valve-gear, governor, 6, regulator, n., slide-valve (with cut), and piston-valve.) Of the total steam-power employed in modern industry on land, that supplied by steam-engines of the horizontal type far exceeds that furnished by steam-engines of all Steam-engine (Corliss Engine).

$$L = QG\,(T_1 - T)/AT_1,$$

(The upper figure is a front view, the under a rear view.)

The steam-valve A and exhaust-valve A′ are independent of each other, and have cylindrical bearing-surfaces. An oscillatory motion is given to them by rods H, connecting with an oscillating disk C (wrist-plate) upon the side of the steam-cylinder, which is worked by an intermediate rock-lever D, driven by the eccentric-rod E, connected with an eccentric upon the main shaft. The motions of the exhaust-valves are positive, but those of the inlet-valve are varied by means of spring-catches a, which are adjustable to determine the points of opening and the range of motion of the valves, and are also controlled in their disengagement of the valve-stems by the governor F, rock-lever G, connecting-rods H, and rock-levers i, all connected together in such manner that an extremely small increase or decrease of speed in the rotation of the fly-wheel shaft causes the inlet-valves to be released and to close correspondingly earlier or later in the stroke. The closing is performed by exterior weights suspended from short levers on the valve-stems by the rods k, the motion of closing being controlled by dash-pots at d, only the covers of which are shown. The other parts of the engine, which are common to most reciprocating engines, are 1, the bed-plate; 2, cylinder; 3, piston; 4, piston-rod; 5, stuffing-box; 6, sliding-block or cross-head; 7, connecting-rod or pitman; 8, rod-end fitted to 9, the crank-wrist; 10, fly-wheel; 11, crank keyed to 12, the crank-shaft; 13, centrifugal lubricating tube; 14, steam-pipe; 15, lubricator; 16, exhaust-pipe.

other types put together. Vertical direct-acting engines of large size are little used, but small engines of this type are much employed. Steam-engines of the rotary type are scarcely used except for some kinds of steam hoisting-engines. Double, triple, and quadruple expansion steam-engines are now largely used in marine engineering. Many double expansion stationary engines are in use, and the economical value of the compound system has been demonstrated both theoretically and practically.—Agricultural steam-engine, a portable engine with a boiler, often specially adapted to burn light fuel, as chaff or straw, either by itself or in connection with wood or coal.—Annular steam-engine, a steam-engine having an annular piston working in an annular steam-cylinder, and having two diametrically placed piston-rods connected with the cross-head, the latter also being connected by rods to a guide-block working in the hollow cylinder forming the center of the annular steam-cylinder, this guide-block being connected with the crank by a pitman.—Atmospheric steam-engine. See atmospheric engine, under atmospheric.—Beam steam-engine, an engine in which a working-beam connects the connecting-rod with the crank-pitman, and transmits power from one to the other. See beam-engine.—Compound steam-engine, a steam-engine having two steam-cylinders of unequal size, from the smaller of which the steam, after use, passes into the larger cylinder, and completes its work by expanding against the piston in the latter.—Concentric steam-engine. Same as rotary steam-engine.—Condensing steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the exhaust-steam is condensed, for the purpose of removing the back-pressure of the atmosphere from the exhaust, and also to economize fuel by saving heat otherwise wasted. See condenser, and cut under pulsometer.—Cornish steam-engine, a single-acting condensing steam pumping-engine, first used in the mines of Cornwall. It is also used as a pumping-engine for supplying water to cities. Steam-pressure is not used to raise the water, but to lift a long loaded pump-rod, whose weight in its descent is the power employed to force up the water. The motion is regulated by a kind of hydraulic regulator invented by Smeaton, and called a cataract.—Direct-acting steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the power of the piston is transmitted to the crank without the intervention of levers, side-beams, or a working-beam.—Disk steam-engine, a form of rotary engine in which the steam-pistons act successively against a revolving disk set at an angle to the plane of rotation, thus imparting a gyratory motion to a central shaft upon which the disk is mounted, the end of this shaft being connected with a crank turning in the plane of rotation.—Double-acting steam-engine, the ordinary form of steam-engine, in which the steam acts upon both sides of the piston.—Double-cylinder steam-engine, a steam-engine having two steam-cylinders acting in combination with each other. See compound steam-engine.—Double expansion steam-engine. (a) A double-cylinder steam-engine in which steam is used expansively. (b) A compound steam-engine.—Double steam-engine, a steam-engine having two cylinders in which the pistons make either simultaneous or alternate strokes and are connected with the same crank-shaft.—Duplex steam-engine. Same as double steam-engine.—High-pressure steam-engine. See high pressure, under pressure.—High-speed steam-engine, a somewhat indefinite name for a reciprocating engine working at a high speed as compared with the much slower speed of engines with the Corliss and other types of valve-gears. In general it may be said that engines of considerable power, making one hundred turns per minute and upward, are high-speed engines.—Horizontal steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the piston works horizontally.—Inclined-cylinder steam-engine, a form of marine engine having cylinders inclined to the horizontal.—Inverted-cylinder steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the cross-head is placed below the cylinder. This construction is much used for marine engines, and to some extent for stationary engines.—Low-pressure steam-engine. See low pressure, under pressure.—Marine steam-engine, a steam-engine specially designed for marine propulsion. The best modern types are condensing, short-stroke, double, triple, or quadruple expansion-engines of the inverted-cylinder type. Marine engines for steam-tugs are for the most part single and often non-condensing. See cut in next column.—Non-condensing steam-engine, an engine that exhausts its steam without condensation. See non-condensing.—Oscillating steam-engine, a steam-engine whose cylinder oscillates on trunnions and has its piston-rod directly connected with the crank. Double engines of this type have been considerably used for marine propulsion, and some are still employed.—Overhead steam-engine. See overhead.—Quadruple expansion steam-engine, a steam-engine which, taking its steam at high pressure, expands it in four different operations successively, and in four distinct and separate steam-cylinders. The pistons of the cylinders are connected by piston-rods, cross-heads, and connecting-rods with cranks attached to a common shaft, to which rotary motion is imparted by the coacting pistons.—Reciprocating steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the power of steam is applied to a reciprocating piston.—Revolving-cylinder steam-engine, a steam-engine of which the cylinder is so mounted that it is caused to rotate by the reciprocation of the piston. Compare rotary steam-engine.—Rotary steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the piston rotates in the cylinder, or the cylinder upon the Double Expansion Marine Steam-engine.

High-speed Steam-engine.

a, high-pressure cylinder; b, low-pressure cylinder; c, induction- and eduction-valve for a in position of exhaust from lower end and of induction to upper end of cylinder; d, passage for steam from a to b; e, induction- and eduction-valve for b; f, f', balance-plates for valves of a and b; g, g', pistons; h, h', piston-rods; i, i', cross-heads; j, j', slipper-guides for cross-heads; k, k', connecting-rods; l, l', cranks; m, crank-shaft; n, shaft which drives feed-pump o and also bilge-pump (not shown) on the opposite side; p, worm on main shaft gearing into worm-wheel q on the shaft n, and actuating pump-plungers by crank and pitman connection; r, r', eccentrics; s, s', eccentric-rods; t, t', links connected by link-blocks with valve-stems u, u'; v, crank-lever which turns a segmental worm-gear, keyed to the rock-shaft w carrying the rocker-arms x, x', for reversing high-pressure and low-pressure valves respectively; y, bed-plate; z, columns supporting the cylinders; z', tie-rods for stiffening the columns; a', exhaust from low-pressure cylinder to the condenser (not shown); a'', butterfly throttle-valve; b', gear for operating throttle-valve; c', relief-valves.

piston. The name is sometimes given to reciprocating engines which have a fly-wheel and crank-shaft. E. H. Knight.—Rotatory steam-engine. Same as rotary steam-engine.—Semi-portable steam-engine, a steam-engine which is movable with its foundation-plate, as distinguished from an engine mounted on wheels, and from one resting on a fixed foundation.—Triple expansion steam-engine, a steam-engine that expands its steam in three successive stages and in three separate and distinct cylinders, one taking its steam from the boiler, and each of the others taking its steam from the exhaust of the cylinder working at the next higher pressure. This type of marine engine is found at the present time on many of the swiftest steamships, but may be in turn superseded by the quadruple expansion-engine.—Vertical steam-engine, a steam-engine whose piston reciprocates vertically.

steamer (stē′mėr), n. [< steam + -er[1].] One who or that which steams, in any sense. Specifically—(a) A steam-box. (b) A person employed in steaming oysters in shucking them for canning. (c) In calico-printing, one who steams printed cloth for fixing steam-colors. (d) One who steams wood for bending, etc. (e) A steam-generator or -boiler: as, the boiler is an excellent steamer. (f) Especially, a vessel propelled by steam; a steamship. (g) A fire-engine the pumps of which are worked by steam. (h) A vessel in which articles are subjected to the action of steam, as in washing or cookery. See steam-chest, 2. (1) In paper-making, a vessel in which old paper, fiber, etc., are treated in order to soften them. (2) An apparatus for steaming grain preparatory to grinding. (i) A locomotive for roads. See road-steamer.

steamer-cap (stē′mėr-kap), n. Same as fore-and-aft, 2.

steamer-duck (stē′mėr-duk), n. A South American duck of the genus Micropterus (or Tachyeres); a race-horse. See Micropterus, 2. This duck becomes when adult incapable of flight, but swims very rapidly, with a movement which has suggested the action of a side-wheel steamboat (whence the name).

steam-excavator (stēm′eks″kā-vā-tọr), n. Same as navvy[2], 3.

steam-fountain (stēm′foun″tān), n. See fountain.

steam-gage (stēm′gāj), n. An attachment to a boiler to indicate the pressure of steam; a pressure-gage. There are many forms. One of the older is a bent tube partially filled with mercury, one end of which connects with the boiler, so that the steam raises a, hollow bent tube attached to case at a', and receiving condensed water or steam under pressure through the opening at f; b, link connecting end of tube a with short arm of rock-lever c, which has at the upper end a small rack intermeshing with a pinion on the spindle of the index d; e, small coiled spring which acts upon the spindle of the index or pointer in a direction opposed to the action of the rack and pinion; g, dial, on which the figures indicate pressures (in pounds) above the atmospheric pressure.

Steam-gage (Ashcroft's).

the mercury according to the amount of pressure. A very common form of gage is that known as Bourdon's, which consists essentially of a flattened metal tube, closed at one end and bent circularly, into which the steam is admitted. As such a tube tends to straighten itself out by the force of the steam, the amount of pressure can easily be ascertained by an attached index-apparatus.—Electric steam-gage, an attachment to a steam-boiler for indicating at a distance the pressure of the steam. One form consists of a bent tube filled with mercury, which, as it rises under the pressure, closes a series of electrical circuits after the manner of a thermostat. Another form employs the expansion or movement of an ordinary steam-gage diaphragm as a circuit-closer. The closing of the circuit in each case serves to sound an alarm.

steam-gas (stēm′gas), n. Same as superheated steam (which see, under steam).

steam-generator (stēm′jen″ė-rā-tọr), n. A steam-boiler.

steam-governor (stēm′guv″ėr-nọr), n. See governor, 6.

steam-gun (stēm′gun), n. A gun the projectile force of which is derived from the expansion of steam issuing through the shotted tube.

steam-hammer (stēm′ham″ėr), n. A forging-hammer operated by steam-power. It has assumed several forms, but now consists of a vertical and inverted steam-cylinder with piston and piston-rod (the rod passing through the lower cylinder-head and carrying at the end a mass of metal which forms the hammer), an anvil directly beneath the hammer and cylinder, a supporting framework, and suitable valves for the control of the steam. Steam is used to raise and may also be used to drive down the hammer. By means of the valve-system, steam is admitted below the piston to raise the hammer and to sustain it while the metal to be forged is placed on the anvil. To deliver a blow, the steam is exhausted below the piston, and the hammer is allowed to fall by its own weight. To augment the blow, live steam may be admitted above the piston to assist in driving it downward. To deliver a gentle blow, the exhaust-steam below the piston may be retained to act as a cushion. Blows can be delivered at any point of the stroke, quickly or slowly, lightly or with the full power of the combined weight of the hammer and force of steam-pressure; or the machine may be used as a vise or squeezer. All modern steam-hammers of the type described are modifications of the original Nasmyth steam-hammer illustrated in the cut. Steam-Steam-hammer (Nasmyth's).

a, anvil; b, frame; c, hammer-head; d, guides; e, piston-rod; f, valve-chests containing valves that control induction of steam to and eduction from the cylinder h; h', steam-pipe; g, rock-lever (moved by the rod i) connected with the valve-stems and moving the valves; j, tripping-mechanism by which the hammer is caused to descend from any part of the upstroke, the adjusting-gear k being manipulated by a workman standing on the platform l.

hammers of the largest class have been made with hammers weighing eighty tons. Another type of steam-hammer consists of two horizontal steam-cylinders placed in line, the hammers meeting over an anvil on which the forging rests.

steam-heat (stēm′hēt), n. 1. In thermodynamics, the total heat required to produce steam at any tension from water at 0° C. or 32° F. It is the sum of the sensible heat and the latent heat expressed in thermal units.—2. Heat imparted by the condensation of steam in coils, pipes, or radiators.

steam-hoist (stēm′hoist), n. A lift or elevator operated by a steam-engine.

steam-house (stēm′hous), n. In oyster-canning, a house or room where oysters are steamed.

steaminess (stē′mi-nes), n. Steamy or vaporous character or quality; mistiness.

steam-jacket (stēm′jak″et), n. An inclosure adapted for receiving steam, and applying the heat of the steam to a kettle, tank, steam-cylinder, etc., surrounded by such inclosure.

steam-jet (stēm′jet), n. A blast of steam caused to issue from a nozle.

steam-joint (stēm′joint), n. A joint that is steam-tight.

steam-kettle (stēm′ket″l), n. A vessel heated by steam, and used for various purposes. The steam for heating is usually applied by induction to a steam-jacket surrounding the sides and inclosing the bottom of the kettle.

steam-kitchen (stēm'kich″en), n. An apparatus for cooking by steam.

steam-launch (stēm'länch), n. See launch.

steam-motor (stēm'mō″tor), n. A steam-engine.

steam-navigation (stēm'nav-i-gā″shon), n. The art of applying the power of steam to the propulsion of boats and vessels; the art of navigating steam-vessels.

steam-navvy (stēm'nav″i), n. A digging-machine or excavator actuated by steam.

steam-organ (stēm'ôr″gan), n. Same as calliope, 2.

steam-oven (stēm'uv″n), n. An oven heated by steam at high pressure.

steam-packet (stēm'pak″et), n. A packet propelled by steam. Compare packet, n., 2.

steam-pan (stēm'pan), n. A vessel with a double bottom forming a steam-chamber. See vacuum-pan.

steam-pipe (stēm'pīp), n. Any pipe in which steam is conveyed. Specifically—(a) A pipe which leads from a boiler to an engine, pan, tank, etc., or from the boiler to a condenser or to the open air. (b) In a steam-heating or -drying apparatus or system, a name given to any one of the steam-supply pipes, in contradistinction to the corresponding return-pipe through which water of condensation is returned to the boiler.

steam-plow (stēm'plou), n. A gang-plow designed to be drawn by a wire rope, and operated by steam-power. Such a plow has usually eight shares arranged in a frame, four pointing in one direction and four in the other. The frame is balanced on a pair of wheels in the center, and forms an angle in the middle, so that when one half the plows are in use the others are raised above the ground. Steam-plows are used with either one or two engines. If with two engines, the plow is drawn forward and backward between them, each engine being advanced the width of the furrows after each passage of the plow. If one engine only is used, snatch-blocks and movable anchors are employed to hold the rope, the anchors being automatically advanced after each passage of the plow. Traction-engines also have been used to drag plows. See anchor, *porter*2, and plow.

steam-port (stēm'pōrt), n. 1. In a slide-valve steam-engine, the name given to each of two oblong passages from the steam-chest to the inside of the cylinder, which afford passage to the steam to and from the cylinder, and act alternately as an induction-port and an eduction-port. See cut under slide-valve.—2. A passage for steam into or out of any inclosure.

steam-power (stēm'pou″er), n. The power of steam applied to move machinery or produce any other result.

steam-press (stēm'pres), n. A press actuated by steam-power acting directly or intermediately; specifically, a printing-press worked by steam.

steam-printing (stēm'prin″ting), n. Printing done by machinery moved by steam, as opposed to printing by hand-labor on hand-presses.

steam-propeller (stēm'prō-pel″er), n. Same as screw propeller (which see, under *screw*1).

steam-pump (stēm'pump), n. See *pump*1 and vacuum-pump.

steam-radiator (stēm'rā″di-ā-tor), n. A nest or collection of iron pipes in ranks or coils, through which steam is passed to heat a room, etc. See cuts under radiator.

steam-ram (stēm'ram), n. See *ram*2, 2.

steam-regulator (stēm'reg″ū-lā-tor), n. See regulator, 2.

steam-room (stēm'röm), n. In a steam-engine, etc., the space which is occupied by steam.

steamship (stēm'ship), n. A ship propelled by steam.

steam-space (stēm'spās), n. A space occupied, or designed to be occupied, by steam only; particularly, in a steam-boiler, the space allowed above the water-line for holding a quantity of steam.

steam-table (stēm'tā″bl), n. 1. A bench or table fitted with shallow steam-tight tanks: used in restaurants, etc., to keep cooked dishes warm.—2. A tabular arrangement of data relating to steam-pressures, temperatures, and quantities of heat.

steam-tank (stēm'tangk), n. A chamber or inclosed vessel in which materials of any kind are treated either by direct contact with steam or with steam-heat by means of pipes coiled in the tank or a steam-jacket. Such tanks are used in many industries, and are made in many forms, as for steaming wood, paper-stock, lard, etc. See rendering-tank.

steam-tight (stēm'tit), a. Capable of resisting the passage of steam, as a joint in a steam-pipe.

steam-toe (stēm'tō), n. In a steam-engine, a projection on a lifting-rod, which is raised by it through the action of a cam, tappet, or wiper.

steam-trap (stēm'trap), n. A contrivance for permitting the passage of water of condensation out of pipes, radiators, steam-engine cylinders, etc., while preventing that of steam.

steam-tug (stēm'tug), n. A steamer used for towing ships, boats, rafts, fishing-nets, oyster-dredges, etc. Such vessels are furnished with engines very powerful in proportion to the size of their hulls, and usually carry only sufficient coal for short trips.—Steam-tug heart-murmur, the combination of an aortic regurgitant with an aortic obstructive murmur.

steam-valve (stēm'valv), n. A valve which controls the opening of a steam-pipe or steam-port.

steam-vessel (stēm'ves″el), n. Same as steamship.

steam-wagon (stēm'wag″on), n. Same as steam-carriage.

steam-wheel (stēm'hwēl), n. A rotary steam-engine. See steam-engine.

steam-whistle (stēm'hwis″l), n. A sounding device connected with the boiler of a steam-Steam-whistles.

Fig. 1 is the simplest form of steam-whistle, with adjustable lever v, which acts on the valve x, its motion being limited by a stop-pin at w. Steam passes through a pipe connected at t when the valve x is opened. The steam issues through openings in the base y, and, passing over the lower edge of the bell u, causes a powerful vibration producing the sound, the pitch of which depends upon the length of the bell. Fig. 2 is a chime-whistle consisting of three bells, i, j, k, tuned to emit the common chord or some inversion of it. It receives steam at l, and by branches m, n, together with l, distributes it to the several bases y. Fig. 3 is a piston-whistle. Its base y and bell r operate as described for the other whistles, the steam entering at p. The tone of the whistle is changed by moving up and down the piston s by means of the stem q.

engine, either stationary, locomotive, or marine, for the purpose of announcing hours of work, signaling, etc.

steam-winch (stēm'winch), n. A form of winch or hoisting-apparatus in which rotatory motion is imparted to the winding axle from the piston-rod of a steam-engine, directly, or indirectly by means of bevel-gearing, the direct action giving most rapidity, the indirect most power.

steam-worm (stēm'wėrm), n. A spiral steam-coil. Such coils are used in tanks for heating liquids, as tan-liquor in tanneries, water in laundries, dye-works, etc., the liquid being placed in the tank enveloping the coil, while steam is passed through the latter. They are also used in some forms of calorimeter.

steamy (stē'mi), a. [< steam + *-y*1.] Consisting of or abounding in steam; resembling steam; vaporous; misty.

> The bubbling and loud hissing urn > Throws up a steamy column. Cowper, Task, iv. 39.
>
> I found an evening hour in the steamy heat of the Haram equal to half a dozen afternoons.
> R. F. Burton, El-Medinah, p. 272.

steam-yacht (stēm'yot), n. A yacht propelled by steam, or by steam and sails.

stean. See *steen*1, *steen*2, stone.

steaning, n. See steening.

steapsin (stēp'sin), n. A ferment of the pancreatic secretion which to some extent resolves fats into fatty acids and glycerin.

stearate (stē'a-rāt), n. [< stear(ic) + *-ate*1.] A salt of stearic acid. The neutral stearates of the alkalis are soaps.

stearic (stē-ar'ik), a. [Irreg. for steatic*, < Gr. στέαρ (στεαρ-), stiff fat, tallow, suet: see steatite.] Of or pertaining to suet or fat; obtained from stearin.—Stearic acid, $C_{18}H_{36}O_2$, a monobasic acid, forming brilliant white scaly crystals. It is inodorous, tasteless, insoluble in water, but soluble in alcohol and ether. It burns like wax, and is used for making candles. Its compounds with the alkalis, earths, and metallic oxids are called stearates. Stearic acid exists in combination with glycerin as stearin, in beef- and mutton-fat, and in several vegetable fats, such as the butter of cacao. It is obtained from stearin by saponification and decomposition by an acid of the soap formed, and also from mutton-suet by a similar process.

stearin (stē'a-riu), n. [< stear(ie) + *-in*2.] 1. An ether or glyceride, $C_3H_5O_3(C_{18}H_{35}O_2)_3$, formed by the combination of stearic acid and glycerin. When crystallized it forms white pearly scales, soft to the touch but not greasy, and odorless and tasteless when pure. It is insoluble in water, but soluble in hot alcohol and ether. When treated with superheated steam it is separated into stearic acid and glycerin, and when boiled with alkalis is saponified—that is, the stearic acid combines with the alkali, forming soap, and glycerin is separated. When melted it resembles wax. There are three stearins, which may all be regarded as derivatives of glycerin in which one, two, or three OH groups are replaced by the radical stearyl. Natural stearin is the tristearyl derivative of glycerin. It is the chief ingredient in suet, tallow, and the harder fats, and may be prepared by repeated solution in ether and crystallization. Candle-pitch, chandlers' gum, or residuary gum, used in the manufacture of roofing-cements, is a by-product of this manufacture. 2. A popular name for stearic acid as used in making candles.—Lard-stearin, the residue left after the expression of the oil from lard.

stearinery (stē'a-rin-ėr-i), n. [< stearin + -ery.] The process of making stearin from animal or vegetable fats; the manufacture of stearin or stearin products.

stearone (stē'a-rōn), n. [< stear(ic) + -one.] A substance ($C_{35}H_{70}O$) obtained by the partial decomposition of stearic acid. It is a volatile liquid, and seems to be stearic acid deprived of two equivalents of carbonic acid.

stearoptene (stē-a-rop'tēn), n. [Irreg. < Gr. στέαρ, stiff fat, tallow, suet, + πτηνός, winged (volatile).] The solid crystalline substance separated from any volatile oil on long standing or at low temperatures. See elæoptene.

stearyl (stē'a-ril), n. [< stear(ie) + -yl.] The radical of stearic acid ($C_{18}H_{35}O$).

steatin (stē'a-tin), n. Same as steatinum.

steatinum (stē-a-tī'num), n. [NL., < Gr. στεάτινον, neut. of στεάτινος, of or pertaining to tallow or suet, < στέαρ (στεαρ-), stiff fat, tallow, suet: see steatite.] A name given to certain pharmaceutical preparations similar to cerates, but containing considerable tallow.—Steatinum iodoformi, steatinum composed of mutton-tallow 18 parts, expressed oil of nutmeg 2 parts, powdered iodoform 1 part.

steatite (stē'a-tīt), n. [= F. stéatite, < L. steatitis, < Gr. στεατίτης, used only as equiv. to στεάτινος, σταίτινος, of dough made of flour of spelt, < στέαρ (στεαρ-), also στεῖαρ, also contr. στῆρ (with rare gen. στῆρος, also σταιτ-), stiff fat, tallow, suet, also dough made of flour of spelt, prob. < ἱστάναι (√ στα), cause to stand, fix: see stand.] Soapstone: an impure massive variety of talc. Also called potstone.

steatitic (stē-a-tit'ik), a. [< steatite + -ic.] Of or pertaining to steatite or soapstone; made of steatite.

steatogenous (stē-a-toj'e-nus), a. [< Gr. στέαρ (στεαρ-), fat, + -γενής, producing: see -genous.] Tending to produce steatosis (see steatosis, 2): as, steatogenous processes.

steatoma (stē-a-tō'mä), n.; pl. steatomata (-ma-tä). [< Gr. στεάτωμα, a kind of fatty tumor, < στέαρ (στεαρ-), fat, tallow, suet.] A lipoma.

steatomatous (stē-a-tom'a-tus), a. [< steatoma(t-) + -ous.] Of the nature of a steatoma.

steatopyga (stē″a-tō-pī'gä), n. [NL., < Gr. στέαρ (στεαρ-), fat, tallow, suet, + πυγή, the rump.] An accumulation of fat on the buttocks of certain Africans, especially Hottentot women.

steatopygous (stē″a-tō-pī'gus), a. [< NL. steatopyga + -ous.] Affected with or characterized by steatopyga; having enormously fat buttocks. R. F. Burton, El-Medinah, p. 60.

steatopygy (stē'a-tō-pī-ji), n. [< steatopyg-ous + *-y*3.] The development of steatopyga, or the state of being steatopygous. Jour. Anthrop. Inst., XVIII. 17.

Steatornis (stē-a-tôr'nis), n. [NL. (Humboldt, 1817), < Gr. στέαρ (στεαρ-), fat, tallow, suet, + ὄρνις, a bird.] The representative genus of Steatornithidæ. The only species is S. caripensis, the guacharo or oil-bird of South America, found from Venezuela to Peru, and also in Trinidad, of frugivorous and nocturnal habits. The bird resembles and is usually classed with the goatsuckers. It is so fat that the natives prepare from it a kind of oil used for butter. See cut under guacharo.

steatornithic (stē″a-tôr-nith'ik), a. Having the characters of Steatornis.

Steatornithidæ (stē″a-tôr-nith'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Steatornis (-ornith-) + -idæ.] A family of picarian birds, represented by the genus Steatornis. It is related to the Caprimulgidæ, and is often associated with them, but differs in many important characters, and in some respects approaches the owls. The sternum has a single notch on each side behind. The palate is desmognathous, with united maxillopalatines and peculiarly shaped palatines. There are basipterygoid processes, and the rostrum of the skull is compressed. The second pectoral muscle is small, and the femorocaudal is wanting. The syrinx is entirely bronchial, and hence paired. The oil-gland is very large. The plumage is not aftershafted, and the rectrices are ten. There is only one genus and one species. See cut under guacharo.

steatornithine (stē-a-tôr′ni-thin), a. [< Steatornis (-ornith-) + *-ine*².] Steatornithic; of or pertaining to the Steatornithidæ.

steatorrhea, steatorrhœa (stē″a-tō-rē′ä), n. [NL., < Gr. στέαρ (στεατ-), fat, suet, tallow, + ῥοία, a flow, < ῥεῖν, flow.] 1. Seborrhea.—2. The passage of fatty stools.

steatosis (stē-a-tō′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. στέαρ (στεατ-), fat, tallow, suet, + -osis.] 1. Fatty degeneration or infiltration.—2. Any disease of the sebaceous glands. Also called steatopathia.

Steatozoön (stē″a-tō-zō′on), n. Same as Demodex.

sted†, n. An obsolete form of stead.

stedfast, stedfastly, etc. See steadfast, etc.

steed (stēd), n. [< ME. stede, < AS. stēda, a stud-horse, stallion, war-horse (cf. gestēd-hors, stud-horse; Icel. stedda for stœdda*, a mare; Sw. sto, a mare), < stōd, a stud: see *stud*¹. Cf. *stot*¹, stote, *stoat*¹.] A horse: now chiefly poetical.

> The kyng alȝte of his stede.
> King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 2.

> The fiend, . . . like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on, steedless (stēd′les), a. [< steed + -less.] Having no steeds or horses. Whittier, The Norsemen.
> Champing his iron curb. Milton, P. L., iv. 858.

steedyokes†, n. pl. Reins; thongs. [Rare.]

> Sorrowful Hector . . .
> Harryed in steedyocks as of earst.
> Stanihurst, Æneid, ii.

steek (stēk), v. [Also steik; obs. or dial. (Sc.) form of *stick*¹.] I. trans. 1. To pierce with a sharp-pointed instrument; stitch or sew with a needle.—2. To close or shut: as, to steek one's eyes. Burns. [Obsolete or Scotch in both uses.]

> But doors were steek'd, and windows bar'd,
> And nane wad let him in.
> Willie and May Margaret (Child's Ballads, II. 172).

II. intrans. To close; shut.

> It es calléde cloyster for it closys and steskys, and warely sall be lokked. Religious Pieces (E. E. T. S.), p. 50.

steek (stēk), n. [Also steik; a dial. (Sc.) form of stitch.] The act of stitching with a needle; a stitch. [Scotch.]

steel¹ (stēl), n. and a. [< ME. steel, stel, stiel, stil, < AS. stēle*, stȳle, earliest forms stēli, stǣli = MD. staeel, D. staal = MLG. stāl, LG. staal = OHG. stahal, stāl, MHG. stahel, staehel, stāl, G. stahl = Icel. stāl = Sw. stål = Dan. staal = Goth. stahla* = OPruss. stakla, steel; root unknown. The words gold and silver also have no L. or Gr. or other cognate terms outside of Teut. and Slavic.] I. n. 1. A modified form of iron, not occurring in nature, but known and manufactured from very early times, and at the present time of the highest importance in its various applications to the wants of man. For certain purposes, and especially for the manufacture of tools and weapons, there is no metal or metallic alloy which could take the place of steel. The most essential features of steel as compared with iron are elasticity and hardness, and these qualities can be varied in amount to a very extraordinary degree, in the same piece of steel, by slight changes in the manipulation. Steel can be hardened so as to cut glass, by rapid cooling after being strongly heated, and it can be tempered, by reheating after hardening, so as permanently to take the precise degree of hardness best adapted to the use to which it is to be applied. (See temper.) Steel has been known from very early times, but where and how first manufactured is not known. That it has long been in use in India, and that it is still manufactured in that country by methods precisely similar to those in use long ago are well-known facts. (See wootz.) It is thought by some to have been known to the pyramid-builders; but this has not yet been demonstrated, and the same is true of the ancient Semites. The words translated 'steel' in the authorized version of the Old Testament signify 'copper' or 'bronze,' and are usually rendered 'brass,' 'brazen.' That steel was clearly recognized as something distinct from iron by the author or authors of the Homeric poems cannot be proved. The earliest known and simplest method of reducing iron from its ore—the so-called "direct process"—is capable also of furnishing steel, although a sufficiently homogeneous product cannot be easily obtained by this method. This would explain how steel became known at an early period, and why it was so long before it became an article of general use, with well-established methods of manufacture. Steel is a form of iron in which the amount of carbon is intermediate between that in wrought- and that in cast-iron, and this carbon does not exist in the steel in the form of graphite, but is either combined with or dissolved in it; but the subject of the relation of carbon to iron is one of difficulty, and is now undergoing investigation at the hands of various skilled metallurgical chemists. Other ingredients besides carbon are also present in steel—namely, silicon, manganese, sulphur, and phosphorus. Of these the two first mentioned are probably never entirely wanting, and they are not especially undesirable or injurious, as is the case with the two others, of which only traces can be permitted in the best quality of steel. They are all, however, different from carbon, which latter is regarded as an essential element of steel, while the others may be looked upon as being more or less of the nature of impurities. The quality of steel varies with the amount of carbon present, and the effect of this latter element varies with the amount of impurity (silicon, etc.) present in the steel. The larger the amount of impurity, the larger is the quantity of carbon required to give to the iron the character of steel. In the case of the best bar-iron, a little over 0.3 per cent. of carbon is sufficient to give it a steely character; from 0.5 to 0.65 per cent. of carbon, according to the purity of the iron, gives a steel which can be hardened so as to strike fire with flint. Iron containing from 1 to 1.5 per cent. of carbon gives steel which, after tempering, combines the maximum hardness with the maximum tenacity. One per cent. of carbon gives, on the whole, the most generally useful steel. With more than 1.5 per cent. of carbon the tenacity and weldability of the steel are diminished, although the hardness may be increased. With more than 1.74 per cent. of carbon the steel ceases to be weldable, and is with difficulty drawn out under the hammer; and from 1.8 to 2.0 per cent. is usually considered as the limit between steel and cast-iron, the steel with that amount breaking when hammered after softening by heat. Since steel is intermediate between wrought- and cast-iron in the amount of carbon which it contains, it is evident that it might be made either by carburizing the former or decarburizing the latter. The method of carburization, or cementation as it is generally called, is one of the oldest, perhaps the most ancient, as, although differing greatly in the details, in the essentials it is the same as the process by which the Indian wootz is manufactured. The cementation process was described in detail by Réaumur in a work published in 1722. By this method blister-steel is obtained, and this is further worked up into spring-, shear-, and double-shear steel by one or more processes of faggoting, welding, and hammering or rolling, the object of this being to give the metal greater homogeneity. A great addition to the value of this process was the invention by Huntsman, in 1740, of cast-steel, the product of the fusion in crucibles, under suitable manipulation, of blister-steel, which process is still in use as first arranged almost without change. By this method, when iron of a sufficiently high grade is used, the finest quality of steel is produced, and it is only steel manufactured in this way which can be used for the best tools, weapons, and cutting instruments of all kinds. The methods of producing steel by the decarburization of pig-iron are numerous and varied. The Styrian method of decarburization in the open-hearth finery, whereby a material called raw steel is produced, was once of very considerable importance, but is now little used. The method of decarburizing pig-iron by puddling, which is similar in principle to the ordinary puddling process used for converting pig- into wrought-iron, is also somewhat extensively employed, especially on the continent of Europe, the product being called puddled steel, this being drawn into bars, which are cut up and remelted, as is done with blister-steel in manufacturing cast-steel. There are various methods for producing steel by fusing pig-iron with iron ores, or with wrought-iron, or with both together. The Uchatius process belongs to this class of processes, but is of comparatively small importance; but the processes known as the "Siemens," the "Martin," and the "Siemens-Martin" are extensively employed. The steel made by any of these processes is generally called open-hearth steel, as the work of decarburizing the pig is done in the open-hearth regenerative furnace. The difference between these processes is simply that in the first-named the pig-iron is treated with certain iron ores without the addition of wrought-iron (scrap-iron); in the second the pig is melted with scrap-iron; and in the third both scrap and ore are used together: hence the names by which the first two of these modifications of what is essentially the same process are known—pig-and-ore, pig-and-scrap—the third, or the "Siemens-Martin," being the most commonly employed. By far the most important of all steel-producing processes, if only the amount of the metal produced is considered, is the "pneumatic" or "Bessemer" process, invented by Sir Henry Bessemer about 1856, which consists in blowing air through molten pig-iron in a "converter," or vessel of iron lined with a refractory material—the oxidation of the carbon and silicon which the pig contains, together with a small part of the iron itself, furnishing sufficient heat to keep the material in a fluid state while the operation of decarburization goes on. After complete decarburization of the iron, a certain amount of carbon is restored to the metal by the introduction of spiegeleisen or ferromanganese; this extremely important addition to the Bessemer process, without which it would hardly have been a success, was contributed by R. F. Mushet. The Bessemer process, as conducted in a converter lined with the ordinary silicious or "acid" material, is suited only for working iron which is practically free from phosphorus and sulphur, or such as is made from ore like that of Lake Superior, from which all, or nearly all, the Bessemer steel made in the United States is manufactured. By the so-called "basic" or "Thomas-Gilchrist" process, the converter having a basic (calcined dolomite) lining, iron containing a considerable amount of phosphorus is treated, and a fair quality of steel produced, the phosphorus passing into the slag during the operation, as is the case in puddling. The metal produced by the Bessemer process is generally called Bessemer steel, but some consider it more correct to call it ingot-iron. It can be produced of various grades by varying the amount of carbon which it contains, and is a material of the highest value for structural purposes—as being cheaper, and having more durability, than wrought-iron made by puddling—although of no value for the purposes for which the older higher-class steels are employed. Its principal use is for rails, and during the past few years from seventy to eighty per cent. of the Bessemer steel made in the United States has been used for that purpose.

> Gold, ne seolver, ne iren, ne stel. Ancren Riwle, p. 160.

> The day,
> Descending, struck athwart the hall, and shot
> A flying splendour out of brass and steel.
> Tennyson, Princess, vi.

A single span of the Forth Bridge is nearly as long as two Eiffel Towers turned horizontally and tied together in the middle, and the whole forms a complicated steel structure weighing 15,000 tons, erected without the possibility of any intermediate support, the lace-like fabric of the bridge soaring as high as the top of St. Paul's. The steel of which the compression members of the structure are composed contains $\frac{25}{100}$ of carbon and $\frac{6}{100}$ of manganese. The parts subjected to extension do not contain more than $\frac{1}{100}$ of carbon. W. C. Roberts-Austen, Nature, XLI. 36.

2. Something made of steel. Specifically—(a) A cutting or piercing weapon; especially, a sword. Compare cold steel, below.

> Shall I Sir Pandarus of Troy become,
> And by my side wear steel?
> Shak., M. W. of W., i. 3. 83.

(b) A piece of steel for striking sparks from flint to ignite tinder or match. (c†) A mirror.

> We spake of armour,
> She straight replies, Send in your steel combs, with
> The steel you see your faces in.
> Cartwright's Lady Errant (1651). (Nares.)

(d) A cylindrical or slightly tapering rod of steel, sometimes having fine parallel longitudinal lines, used for sharpening carving-knives, etc. (e) A strip of steel used to stiffen a corset, or to expand a woman's skirt.—Berard steel, steel made by adding hydrogen gas to the air-blast in the Bessemer process, to remove arsenic, sulphur, and phosphorus.—Bessemer steel, steel made by the Bessemer process. See def. 1.—Blistered steel. Same as blister-steel.—Carbon steel, ordinary steel; not "special steel," but steel in which carbon is clearly the element which gives the iron those peculiar properties which justify its designation by the term steel.—Chrome steel, steel alloyed with a small amount of chromium. Various alloys called by the name of chrome or chromium steel have been introduced, but none have come into general use. They are said to be hard and malleable, and to possess great strength, but to oxidize on exposure more readily than ordinary steel.—Cold steel, a cutting- and thrusting-weapon; a weapon or weapons for close quarters, as distinguished from firearms.—Compressed steel, steel which is made more dense, tenacious, and free from blow-holes by being condensed by pressure while in a fluid state. This pressure is produced in various ways, as by hydraulic machinery, by steam, by centrifugal force, by the use of liquefied carbonic acid, etc.—Crinoline-steels. See crinoline.—Crucible steel. Same as cast-steel.—Damask steel. See damask.—Garb of steel. See *garb*².—German steel, steel from Germany. The phrase has now no definite meaning other than geographical. It formerly meant steel made in the finery from spathic ore.—Homogeneous steel. Same as cast-steel.—Indian steel. Same as wootz.—Manganese steel, a variety of special steel made by the addition of manganese, which element is present in various manganese steels which have been analyzed in quantity ranging from less than 1 per cent. to over 21 per cent. The qualities vary greatly with its composition.—Mask of steel, See *mask*³.—Mild steel, steel containing a small amount of carbon (Bessemer steel is frequently so designated); a metal which has some of the qualities of steel, but does not admit of being tempered, or only imperfectly so. See def. 1.—Native steel, the name sometimes given to small masses or buttons of steel, steely iron, or iron which has occasionally been formed by the ignition of coal-seams adjacent to deposits of iron ore.—Nickel steel, a variety of special steel recently introduced, and thought by some to surpass the best carbon steel in certain important respects. It has not yet been sufficiently tried to justify a decided statement as to its value. The high price of nickel, and the small likelihood of any considerable reduction in the price of this metal, would seem to bear heavily against the chances of the general introduction of an alloy of which it should form any considerable part.—Run steel, a trade-mark name (in England) of various small articles, such as bridle-bits and stirrups, made of cast-iron which has been to a certain extent rendered malleable by partial decarburization by cementation. The method is one which has been long known, but which has not come into extensive use till comparatively modern times. Also called malleable cast-iron. Silicon steel, a variety of special steel which has been experimented with to some extent, but which has not yet become of importance.—Special steel, steel in which the element which gives the iron its peculiar qualities, or what distinguishes it from iron, is not carbon, but some other substance. The principal special steels are chrome, manganese, nickel, silicon, titanium, and tungsten steels, all of which have been much experimented with in recent years. While some authorities appear to maintain that the carbon in special steels is so overpowered by the special element used that its effects are entirely neutralized, others believe that some carbon is absolutely necessary that iron may become converted into what can properly be called steel.—Styrian special steel, steel from Styria; steel made by the Styrian process, which closely resembles the Styrian process of making malleable iron in the finery.—Tungsten steel, a variety of special steel, now largely employed in the manufacture of the harder grades of crucible steel. "Mushet's," "special," "imperial," and "crescent-hardened" are brands of tungsten steel now sold in the American markets. Steel may contain a much larger proportion of tungsten than it can of carbon without losing its power of being forged. In a table of thirteen analyses of tungsten steel given by H. M. Howe in his "Metallurgy of Steel" (1891), the tungsten ranges from 1.94 to 11.03 per cent.; the carbon, from 0.38 to 2.15; the manganese, from a trace to 2.66; the silicon, from .05 to .82. Tungsten steel is exceedingly hard and very brittle; it is used chiefly for the tools of lathes and planers designed for heavy work.

II. a. 1. Made of steel: as, a steel plate or buckle.

> The average strength [of the Bessemer steel used in building the Forth Bridge] is one-half greater than that of the best wrought iron, and the ductility of the steel plates is fully three times that of corresponding iron plates. Sir John Fowler and Benjamin Baker, Nineteenth Century, July, 1889, p. 39.

2. Hard as steel; inflexible; unyielding.

> Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward.
> Shak., Sonnets, cxxxiii.

Smart as a steel trap. See *smart*¹.—Steel bonnet, a head-piece made of a Scotch bonnet lined with steel, as with a skeleton cap. Compare secret, 9.—Steel bronze.

See bronze, 1.—Steel hat. Same as chapel-de-fer.—Steel rail. See rail[1].—Steel saddle, the saddle of the man-at-arms in the middle ages, having the bow and sometimes the pommel guarded with steel.—Steel toys, among manufacturers, small articles, such as corkscrews, buckles, button-hooks, and boot-hooks, when made of polished steel.—Steel trap. See trap[1].

steel[1] (stēl), v. t. [< ME. stelen, stilen, < AS. stȳlan* (= D. stalen = MLG. stalen, stelen = G. stählen = Icel. stæla), make hard like steel; from the noun.] 1. To fit with steel, as by pointing, edging, overlaying, electroplating, or the like.

> Believe her not, her glass diffuses > False portraitures; . . .
> Her crystal 'a falsely steel'd; it scatters
> Deceitful beams; believe her not, she flatters.
> Quarles, Emblems, ii. 6.

> Give me my steeled coat. I'll fight for France.
> Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 1. 85.

2. To iron (clothes). Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] —3. To make hard as steel; render strong, rigid, inflexible, determined, etc.; make firm or stubborn.

> Thy resolution would steel a coward.
> Beau. and Fl., Little French Lawyer, i. 2.

> Ximenes'a heart had been steeled by too stern a discipline to be moved by the fascinations of pleasure.
> Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 5.

4. To cause to resemble steel in smoothness or polish.

> Lo! these waters, steeled
> By breezeless air to smoothest polish.
> Wordsworth, Sonnets Dedicated to Liberty, ii. 5.

steel[2]†, n. An obsolete form of steal[2], stale[2].

steel-blue (stēl'blö), a. and n. I. a. Of a lustrous dark-bluish color, resembling steel tempered blue.

II. n. A lustrous dark-bluish color; a darker shade than Berlin blue and less chromatic, but nearly of the same hue. See blue.

steel-bow (stēl'bou), a. [Origin and distinctive sense obscure.] See the phrase.—Steel-bow goods, in Scots law, corn, cattle, straw, and implements of husbandry, delivered by the landlord to his tenant, by means of which the tenant is enabled to stock and labor the farm, and in consideration of which he becomes bound to return articles equal in quantity and quality at the expiration of the lease.

steelboy (stēl'boi), n. [Prob. < steel[1] in the phrase "hearts of steel," used by the insurgents in a remonstrance entitled "Petition of the Hearts of Steel" (Record Office, London).] A member of a band of insurgents in Ulster, Ireland, who committed various agrarian and other outrages about 1772–4. Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xvi.

steel-clad (stēl'klad), a. Clothed in armor of steel.

steelent, a. [< ME. stelen, < AS. stȳlen (= D. stalen, stelen), < stȳle, stēle*, steel: see steel[1] and -en[2].] Of steel; made of steel.

> The stelene brond. Layamon, l. 7634.

steel-engraving (stēl'en-grā"ving), n. 1. The art of engraving on steel plates for the purpose of producing prints or impressions in ink on paper and other substances.—2. The design engraved on the steel plate.—3. An impression or print taken from the engraved steel plate.

steel-finch (stēl'finch), n. A book-name of the small finch-like birds of the genus Hypochæra.

steelhead (stēl'hed), n. 1. The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida: so called from the steel-blue of the head, or perhaps for the same reason that it is called hardhead, hickory-head, and tough-head. See cut under Erismatura. [Maryland.] —2. The rainbow-trout, Salmo irideus. See cut under rainbow-trout. [Local, U. S.]

steel-head† (stēl'hed), a. Tipped with steel. Spenser, F. Q., III. ix. 16.

steelification (stē"li-fi-kā'shon), n. The process of converting iron into steel. Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXV. 304.

steelify (stē'li-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. steelified, ppr. steelifying. [< steel[1] + -i-fy.] To convert into steel. Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXV. 304.

steeliness (stē'li-nes), n. The state or character of being steely.

steeling (stē'ling), n. [Verbal n. of steel[1], v.] 1. The process of welding a piece of steel on that part of a cutting-instrument which is to receive the edge.—2. The process of depositing a film of iron on engraved copperplates. The plates are placed in a bath of sulphate of iron and ammonium chlorid, a plate of iron submerged in the solution being connected to the copper pole of the battery, and the engraved copperplate to the zinc pole. From such steeled plates from 5,000 to 15,000 impressions can be taken. The same method has been successfully applied to stereotype plates.

steelmaster (stēl'mas"tėr), n. A manufacturer of steel. The Engineer, LXIX. 343.

steel-mill (stēl'mil), n. A contrivance for giving light, in use previous to the invention of the safety-lamp, in English coal-mines infested with fire-damp. It consisted of a disk of steel which was made to revolve rapidly, a flint being held against it, from which a shower of sparks was given off and a feeble light furnished. This method of obtaining light was for a time quite popular.

steel-ore (stēl'ōr), n. A name given to various iron ores, and especially to spathic iron (siderite), because that ore was supposed to be particularly well adapted for making steel. Much of the so-called German steel was in fact formerly made from that ore.

steel-press (stēl'pres), n. A special form of press designed for compressing molten steel to form sound and dense castings.

steel-saw (stēl'sâ), n. A disk of soft iron, revolving with great rapidity, used for cutting cold steel.

steelware (stēl'wâr), n. Articles, collectively, made of steel. The Engineer, LXVIII. 642.

steelwork (stēl'wėrk), n. Steel articles or objects, or such parts of any work as are made of steel. The Engineer, LXIX. 191.

steel-worker (stēl'wėr"kėr), n. One who works in steel.

steel-works (stēl'wėrks), n. pl. or sing. A furnace or other establishment where iron is converted into steel. The Engineer, LXV. 38.

steely (stē'li), a. [< steel[1] + -y[1].] 1. Consisting of steel; made of steel.

> Full ill (we know, & every man may see)
> A steely helme & Cardnals cap agree.
> Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 120.

> A steely hammer crushes 'em to pieces.
> Ford, Perkin Warbeck, i. 1.

2. Resembling steel in some of its essential properties; hard; firm; stubborn.

> When hee can beat it [Truth] off with most steely prowesse, he thinkes himselfe the bravest man; when in truth it is nothing but exsanguine feeble exility of Spirit.
> N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 74.

> That steely heart [of Judas] yet relents not.
> Bp. Hall, Contemplations, iv. 27.

3. Resembling steel in color, metallic luster, or general appearance; having more or less imperfectly the qualities or composition of steel: as, steely iron.

> The heating of the steely sea.
> W. Morris, Earthly Paradise, Apology.

Steely iron, a mixture of iron and steel; imperfect steel. Bloxam and Huntington, Metals, p. 109.

Steelyard[1] (stēl'yärd, colloq. stil'yärd), n. [Early mod. E. also Stilyard, Stilliard, Steeliard, Steleard, Styliard, and as two words Steel yard, Stele yarde (also Steel house, Stele house); explained as orig. "the yard in London where steel was sold by German merchants," as if < steel[1] + yard[2]; but in fact an imperfect translation of the MD. staelhof, later staalhof, = MLG. stalhof, an office or hall where cloth was marked with a leaden seal as being properly dyed, < MD. stael, a specimen, sample, test of dyeing, D. staal, a sample, = MLG. stale, LG. stal, > G. dial. stahl, a sample, pattern (hence MD. staelen = MLG. stalen, mark cloth with a leaden seal as being properly dyed) (connected with MD. staelen, stallen = MLG. stallen (OF. estaler, etaler), expose for sale on a stall, display or show on a stall, < MD. stal, etc., a stall: see stall[1]), + hof, yard, court: see hove[1]. The notion that the MD. staelhof is a contraction of stapelhof* (which, moreover, does not occur; cf. stapelhuys, E. staple-house) is untenable.] A place in London, comprising great warehouses called before the reign of Edward IV. Gildhalla Teutonicorum, 'Gildhall of the Germans,' where, until expelled in 1597, the merchants of the Hanseatic League had their English headquarters; also, the company of merchants themselves. The merchants of the Steelyard were bound by almost monastic gild-rules, under a separate jurisdiction from the rest of London, were exempt from many exactions and restrictions, and for centuries controlled most of the foreign trade of England.

> This yere corn was verie dere, & had ben dearer if marchuntes of ye styliarde had not been & Dutche shippes restrined, & an abstinaūce of warre betwene Englande & Flaunders. Fabyan, Chron., an. 1528–9.

> From him come I, to entreat you . . . to meet him this afternoon at the Rhenish wine-house i' the Stilliard.
> Webster, Westward Ho, ii. 1.

steelyard[2] (stēl'yärd or stil'yärd), n. [Early mod. E. stilyard, stiliard, stilliard; appar. lit. 'a rod of steel,' < steel[1] + yard[1]; but prob. an altered form, due to popular etymology, of the equiv. early mod. E. stelleere, supposed to stand for stiller or steller* (= G. steller, regulator): see stiller[1]. The word seems to have been confused with Steelyard[1], and is generally explained, without evidence, as orig. the balance or weight used by the merchants of the Steelyard.] A kind of balance with two unequal arms, consisting of a lever in the form of a slender iron bar with a, rectangular bar, graduated both above and below; b, adjustable counterpoising weight; c, hook for supporting articles to be weighed (this can be turned easily over the end of the bar at c'); d and d', hooks for support of the steelyard, according as one or other of the graduations is turned to the upper side for use in weighing.

Steelyard.

one arm very short, the other divided by equidistant notches, having a small crosspiece as fulcrum, to which a bearing for suspension is attached, usually a book at the short end, and a weight moving upon the long arm. It is very portable, without liability to become separated, and the process of weighing is very expeditious. It is much used for cheap commodities, but owing to its simple construction it is liable to be so made as to give false indications. Often used in the plural. Also called Roman balance or beam. Compare Danish balance (sometimes called Danish steelyard), under balance.

> Crochet, a small hook. . . . A Romane beame or stelleere, a beame of yron or wood, full of nickes or notches, along which a certaine peize of lead, &c., playing, and at length setling towards the one end, shewes the just weight of a commoditie hanging by a hooke at the other end.
> Cotgrave.

> A pair of steelyards and a wooden sword.
> Halleck, Fanny.

steemt, n. An old form of steam. Prompt. Parv.

steen[1] (stēn), v. t. [Also stean, Sc. stein; < ME. stenen, cast stones, < AS. stēnan (= OHG. steinōn = Goth. stainjan), stone, < stān, stone: see stone, n. Cf. stone, v., of which steen[1] is a doublet.] 1. To stone; pelt with stones.

> Te stones thet me [men] stenede him mide.
> Ancren Riwle, p. 122.

2. To fit with stones; mend, line, pave, etc., with stones. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch in both senses.]

steen[1] (stēn), n. [Also stean; a dial. var. of stone, due to the verb steen[1].] A stone. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

steen[2] (stēn), n. [Also stean, stein; < ME. steene, stene, a stone jar, < AS. stēna (= OHG. steinna), a stone crock (cf. stēnen, of stone: see stonen), < stān, stone: see stone.] 1. A kind of jar or urn of baked clay or of stone, of the general type of the sepulchral urns of the Romans. Jour. Brit. Archæol. Ass., XXXV. 105.

> Neuerthelatre ther weren not maad of the same monee the stenys [hydriæ, Vulgate] of the temple of the Lord.
> Wyclif, 4 Kl. [2 Kl.] xii. 13.

> Upon an huge great Earth-pot steane be stood.
> Spenser, F. Q., VII. vii. 42.

2. A large box of stones used for pressing cheese in making it. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

steenbok (stān'- or stēn'bok), n. [< D. steenbok = G. steinbock, the wild goat, < D. steen, = G. stein = E. stone, + D. bok = G. bock = E. buck: see stone and buck[1].] One of several small African Steenbok (Nanotragus tragulus).

can antelopes of the genus Nanotragus, fond of rocky places (whence the name). The common steenbok is N. tragulus, generally distributed in South Africa, about 3 feet long and 20 inches tall, with straight horns about 4 inches long in the male, none in the female, large ears, and no false hoofs. It is of a general reddish-brown color, white below. The gray steenbok is N. melanotis. N. oreotragus is the klip-springer (which see, with cut). Also steenbock, steinbock. Compare steinbock and stonebuck.

steening (stē′ning), n. [Also steaning; verbal n. of steen[1], v.] 1. Any kind of path or road paved with small round stones. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. In arch., the brick or stone wall or lining of a well or cesspool, the use of which is to prevent the irruption of the surrounding soil. Also steining.

steenkirk (stēn′kėrk), n. [Also, less prop., steinkirk; so called in allusion to the battle fought in 1692 near Steenkerke, F. Steinkerque (lit. 'stone church'), a town in Belgium.] A name brought into fashion, after the battle of Steenkirk, for several articles, especially of dress, as wigs, buckles, large neckties, and powder; especially, a cravat of fine lace, loosely and negligently knotted, with long hanging ends, one of which was often passed through a buttonhole.

Mrs. Calico. I hope your Lordship is pleased with your Steenkirk.
Lord F. In love with it, stap my vitals! Bring your Bill; you shall be paid to-marrow. Vanbrugh, The Relapse, i. 3.

I had yielded up my cravat (a smart Steinkirk, by the way, and richly laced). Scott, Rob Roy, xxxi.

Ladies also wore them [neckcloths], as in "The Careless Husband" Lady Easy takes her Steinkirk from her Neck and lays it gently over his Head.
Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 148.

steenstrupine (stēn′strup-in), n. [Named after K. J. V. Steenstrup, a Danish naturalist.] A rare mineral occurring in massive forms and rhombohedral crystals of a brown color in the sodalite syenite of Greenland. It is a silicate of the rare metals of the cerium group, also thorium, and other elements.

steep[1] (stēp), a. and n. [< ME. stepe, step, stēp, steap, < AS. stēap, steep, high, = OFries. stāp, steep; cf. Icel. steypthr, steep, lofty; Norw. stup, a steep cliff; akin to stoop: see stoop[1], and cf. steep[2], steeple.] I. a. 1. Having an almost perpendicular slope; precipitous; sheer.

Two of these Ilands are steepe and vpright as any wall, that it is not possible to climbe them.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 748.

Thus far our ascent was easy; but now it began to grow more steep, and difficult.
Maundrell, Aleppo to Jernsalem, p. 119.

2†. Elevated; high; lofty.

To a room they came,
Steep and of state. Chapman. (Imp. Dict.)

3. Excessive; difficult; forbidding: as, a steep undertaking; a steep price. [Colloq.]

Perhaps if we should meet Shakspeare we should not be conscious of any steep inferiority.
Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 302.

Neither priest nor squire was able to establish any steep difference in outward advantages between himself and the commons among whom he lived. Froude, Sketches, p. 164.

4†. Bright; glittering; fiery.

His eyen steepe and rollynge in his heede.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 201.

His Ene [eyes] leuenaund with light as a low fyn,
With stremys [gleams] full stithe in his stepe loke.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7724.

II. n. A steep or precipitous place; an abrupt ascent or descent; a precipice.

Suddenly a splendor like the morn
Pervaded all the beetling gloomy steeps.
Keats, Hyperion, ii.

Yet up the radiant steeps that I survey Death never climbed. Bryant, To the Apennines.

steep[2] (stēp), v. [< ME. stepen, < Icel. steypa, cast down, overturn, pour out, cast (metals), refl. tumble down, = Sw. stöpa = Dan. stöbe, cast (metals), steep (corn); causal of Icel. stūpa = Sw. stupa, fall, stoop: see stoop[1], and cf. steep[1].] I. trans. 1. To tilt (a barrel). Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To soak in a liquid; macerate: as, to steep barley; to steep herbs.

A day afore her [almonds'] setting, hem to stepe
In meeth is goode.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 54.

The Gordons good, in English blood
They steep'd their hose and shoon.
Battle of Otterbourne (Child's Ballads, VII. 24).

The prudent Sibyl had before prepared
A sop in honey steeped to charm the guard.
Dryden, Æneid, vi. 567.

3. To bathe with a liquid; wet; moisten.

Then she with liquors strong his eies did steepe,
That nothing should him hastily awake.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vi. 18.

His coursers, steep'd in sweat and stain'd with gore,
The Greeks' preserver, great Machaon, bore.
Pope, Iliad, xi. 728.

4. To imbue or impregnate as with a specified influence; cause to become permeated or pervaded (with): followed by in.

Is this a time to steep
Thy brains in wasteful slumbers?
Quarles, Emblems, i. 7.

Thou art so steep'd in misery,
Surely 'twere better not to be.
Tennyson, The Two Voices.

The habitual criminal, steeped in vice and used to ignominy, cares very little for disgrace, and accepts punishment as an incident in his career.
Bibliotheca Sacra, XLVII. 594.

II. intrans. To be bathed in a liquid; soak.

And now the midnight draught of sleep,
Where wine and spices richly steep,
In massive bowl of silver deep,
The page presents on knee.
Scott, Marmion, i. 30.

steep[2] (stēp), n. [< steep[2], v.] 1. The process of steeping; the state of being steeped, soaked, or permeated: used chiefly in the phrase in steep.

Strait to each house she hasted, and sweet sleepe
Pour'd on each wooer; which so laid in steepe
Their drowsie temples that each brow did nod.
Chapman, Odyssey, ii. 578.

Whilst the barley is in steep it is ganged by the excise officers, to prevent fraud. Encyc. Brit., IV. 267.

2. That in which anything is steeped; specifically, a fertilizing liquid in which seeds are soaked to quicken germination.

When taken from the white bath, the skins, after washing in water, are allowed to ferment in a bran steep for some time in order to extract a considerable portion of the alum and salt. C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 665.

3. Rennet: so called from being steeped before it is used. [Prov. Eng.]—Rot's steep, in bleaching cotton goods, the process of thoroughly saturating the cloth. The name is due to the former practice of allowing the flour or size with which the goods were impregnated to ferment and putrefy. Also called wetting-out steep.

steep-down (stēp′doun), a. Having a sheer descent; precipitous.

Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!
Shak., Othello, v. 2. 280.

You see Him till into the steep-down West
He throws his course. J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 14.

steepen (stē′pn), v. i. [< steep[1] + -en[1].] To become steep.

As the way steepened, . . . I could detect in the hollow of the hill some traces of the old path.
Hugh Miller. (Imp. Dict.)

steeper (stē′pėr), n. [< steep[2] + -er[1].] A vessel, vat, or cistern in which things are steeped; specifically, a vat in which the indigo-plant is steeped to macerate it before it is soaked in the beating-vat.

steepful† (stēp′fůl), a. [< steep[1] + -ful.] Steep; precipitous.

Anon he stalks about a steepfull Rock,
Where som, to shun Death's (never shunned) stroak,
Had clambred vp.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Vocation.

steep-grass (stēp′grȧs), n. The butterwort, Pinguicula vulgaris: so called because used like rennet. Also steepweed, steepwort. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names.

steepiness (stē′pi-nes), n. The state or quality of being steepy or steep; steepness. [Rare.]

The cragginess and steepiness of places up and down . . . makes them inaccessible. Howell, Forreine Travell, p. 132.

steeple (stē′pl), n. [< ME. steple, stepel, stepylle, stepul, < AS. stēpel, stȳpel, a steeple, < stēap, steep, high: see steep[1].] 1. A typically lofty structure attached to a church, town-house, or other public edifice, and generally intended to contain the bells of such edifice. Steeple is a general term applied to every secondary structure of this description, whether in the form of a simple tower, or, as is usual, of a tower surmounted by a spire.

Ydeleblisse is the grete wynd that thrauth doun the greate toura and the hege steples and the greate beches ine wodes thrauth to grounde.
Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 23.

Lod. What does he ith middle looke like?
Asto. Troth, like a spire steeple in a Country Village ouerpeering so many thatcht houses.
Dekker and Middleton, Honest Whore, ii. 1.

At Paris all steeples are clangouring not for sermon.
Carlyle, French Rev., III. i. 4.

2. A lofty head-dress worn by women in the fourteenth century. See hennin.

Some of the more popular of these strange varieties of head-gear have been distinguished as the "horned," the "mitre," the "steeple"—in France known as the "hennin"—and the "butterfly." Encyc. Brit., VI. 469.

3. A pyramidal pile or stack of fish set to dry. Also called pack. See the quotation under pack[1], 10 (b).

steeplebush (stō′pl-bůsh), n. The hardhack; also, Spiræa salicifolia. See Spiræa.

steeplechase (stē′pl-chās), n. A horse-race across a tract of country in which ditches, hedges, and other obstacles must be jumped as they come in the way. The name is supposed to be originally due to any conspicuous object, such as a church-steeple, having been chosen as a goal, toward which those taking part in the race were allowed to take any course they chose. The limits of the steeplechase-course are now marked out by flags.

steeplechaser (stē′pl-chā″sėr), n. 1. One who rides in steeplechases.—2. A horse running or trained to run in a steeplechase.

"If you do not like hunting, you are to affect to," says Mamma. "You must listen to Captain Breakneck's stories at dinner, laugh in the right places, and ask intelligent questions about his steeplechasers."
Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 780.

steeplechasing (stē′pl-chā″sing), n. [< steeplechase + -ing.] The act or sport of riding in a steeplechase.

steeple-crown† (stē′pl-kroun), n. A steeple-crowned hat.

And on their heads old steeple-crowns.
Hudibras Redivivus (1706). (Nares.)

steeple-crowned (stē′pl-krownd), a. Having a high peaked crown resembling a steeple: noting various articles of head-gear.

The women wearing the old country steeple-crowned hat and simply made gowns.
Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 138.

steepled (stē′pld), a. [< steeple + -ed[2].] 1. Furnished or adorned with a steeple or steeples.

As we neared the provincial city [Worcester], we saw the steepled mass of the cathedral, long and high, rise far into the cloud-freckled blue. H. James, Jr., Pass. Pilgrim, p. 44.

2. Having the form of a steeple; peaked; towering.

Steepled hattes.
Wright, Passions of the Mind (ed. 1621), p. 330. (Halliwell.)

A steepled turbant on her head she wore. Fairfax.

steeple-engine (stē′pl-en″jin), n. 1. A form of marine steam-engine used on side-wheel boats, in which the working-beam is the highest part, and the connecting-rod is above the crank-shaft.—2. A direct-acting engine in which the crank-shaft is located between the cylinder and the sliding-block or cross-head, the piston-rod is connected with the latter by two branches or limbs which straddle the crank-shaft and crank, and the connecting-rod or pitman plays between the limbs of the piston-rod. It is used for steam-pumps and donkey-engines, being very compact in form.

steeple-fair†, n. [Supposed to be a corruption, simulating steeple (as if 'a church-fair' or 'kermess'), of "staple-fair, < staple[2], market, + fair[2].] A common fair or mart.

These youths, in art, purse, and attire most bare,
Give their attendance at each steeple faire;
Being once hir'd he'l not displease his lord.
Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

steeple-hat (stē′pl-hat), n. A steeple-crowned hat.

An old doublet and a steeple hat. Browning, Strafford.

steeple-house† (stē′pl-hous), n. A church edifice: so called by the early members of the Society of Friends, who maintained that the word church applies properly only to the body of believers.

The reason why I would not go into their steeple-house was because I was to bear my testimony against it, and to bring all off from such places to the Spirit of God, that they might know their bodies to be the temples of the Holy Ghost. George Fox, Journal (Phila.), p. 167.

There are steeple houses on every hand,
And pulpits that bless and ban;
And the Lord will not grudge the single church
That is set apart for man.
Whittier, The Old South.

steeple-hunting (stē′pl-hun″ting), n. Same as steeplechasing. Carlyle, Sterling, v.

steeple-jack (stē′pl-jak), n. A man who climbs steeples and tall chimneys to make repairs, or to erect scaffolding.

A steeple-jack of Sheffield . . . met with a shocking accident. St. James's Gazette, May 11, 1887. (Encyc. Dict.) steepletop (stē′pl-top), n. The bowhead, or great polar whale (Balæna mysticetus): so called from the spout-holes terminating in a sort of cone: a whalers' name. C. M. Scammon.

steeplewise (stē′pl-wīz), adv. In the manner of a steeple; like a steeple.

Thin his haire,
Besides, disordered and vnkembd, his crowne Picked, made steeple-wise; . . . bald he was beside.
Heywood, Dialogues (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 120).

steeply (stē′pli), adv. In a steep manner; with steepness; with precipitous declivity: as, a height rising steeply.

At this point it [the highway] steeply overtops the fields on one side. Howells, Indian Summer, xx.

steepness (stēp′nes), n. The state of being steep, in any sense; precipitousness: as, the steepness of a hill or a roof.

steep-to (stēp′tö), a. Abruptly steep: noting a bold shore having navigable water close in to land. [Colloq.]

The pans [pan-ice] rise over all the low lying parts of the Islands, grinding and polishing exposed shores, and rasping those that are steep-to. Amer. Nat., XXII. 230.

steep-tub (stēp′tub), n. A tub in which salt beef and salt pork are soaked before cooking.

steep-up (stēp′up), a. Ascending steeply.

Her stand she takes upon a steep-up hill.
Shak., Passionate Pilgrim, l. 121.

steep-water (stēp′wâ″tėr), n. Water used as a steep, or suitable for steeping; specifically, a steep for flax.

The most celebrated steep-water in the world is the river Lys, which rises in the north of France, and flows through the west of Belgium. Ure, Dict., II. 409.

steepweed, steepwort (stēp′wēd, -wėrt), n. Same as steep-grass.

steepy (stē′pi), a. [< steep[1] + -y[1].] Steep; precipitous.

Ever to rear his tumbling stone upright
Upon the steepy mountain's lofty height.
Marston, Satires, v. 78.

steer[1] (stēr), v. [< ME. steeren, steren, stiren, sturen, steoren, < AS. steóran, stiéran, stȳran = OFries. stiura, stiora = MD. stuyren, stueren, stieren, D. sturen, stieren = MLG. sturen, LG. stieren = OHG. stiuran, stiurran, MHG. stiuren, stiuwern, direct, control, support, G. steuern, control, steer, pilot, = Icel. stȳra = Dan. styre = Sw. styra, steer; cf. Goth. stiurjan, establish, confirm; partly from the noun, AS. steór, etc., a rudder (see steer[1], n.), but in part, as more particularly appears in the Goth., prob. an orig. verb, 'establish' (hence 'direct,' 'steer'), connected with OHG. stiuri, strong, large; cf. Goth. usstiuriba, unbridled, Skt. sthūrara, fixed, stable, etc. The ME. forms are partly confused with the ME. forms of stir.] I. trans. 1. To guide by the movements of a rudder or helm; direct and govern, as a ship on her course.

The two brether were abidyng bothe in a shippe
That was stird with the storme streght out of warde;
Rut on a Rocke, rof all to peces.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3709.

You yourself shall steer the happy helm.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., i. 3. 103.

No merchant wittingly
Has steered his keel unto this luckless sea.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 399.

2. To pursue in a specified direction; direct: as, to steer one's way or course.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air.
Milton, P. L., i. 225.

3. To guide; manage; control; govern.

Fyr so wood, it mighte nat be stered,
In al the noble tour of Ilioun.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 935.

I have a soul
Is full of grateful duty, nor will suffer me
Further dispute your precept; you have power
To steer me as you please.
Shirley, Bird in a Cage, i. 1.

4†. To plan; contrive.

Trewely, myn owene lady deere,
Tho sleighte, yit that I have herd yow steere,
Ful shapely ben to faylen alle yfeere.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1451.

5. To lead; conduct; draw: as, a bunko-man steers his victim to a bunko-joint. See bunko-steerer.—Steering balloon. See balloon[1].—Steering committee, a small body of men, generally members of a legislative body, engaged in directing the course of legislation. [Slang, U. S.]—To steer a trick at the wheel, to take one's turn in steering a vessel.

II. intrans. 1. To direct and govern a vessel in its course.

Jason . . . the bote tok,
Stird ouer the streame streght to the lond.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 957.

Some of their men were starued, the rest all so weake that onely one could lie along vpon the Helm and sterre.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 745.

2. To direct one's course at sea; sail in a specified direction: as, the ship steers southward; he steered for Liverpool.

The Ottomites, . . .
Steering . . . towards the isle of Rhodes,
Have there injointed them with an after fleet.
Shak., Othello, i. 3. 34.

3. To answer the helm: as, the vessel steers with ease.—4. Figuratively, to take or pursue a course or way; hence, to direct one's conduct; conduct one's self.

Well-born, and wealthy, wanting no support,
You steer betwixt the country and the court.
Dryden, To his kinsman, John Dryden, l. 128.

He relieved her of her burden, and steered along the street by her side, carrying her baked mutton and potatoes safely home. Mrs. Gaskell, Cranford, ii.

To steer clear of, to keep away from; avoid.

It requires great skill, and a particular felicity, to steer clear of Scylla and Charybdis.
Bacon, Physical Fables, vi., Expl.

To steer roomer. See room[1], adv.—To steer small, to steer with little movement of the helm, and consequently with but slight deviation of the ship's head from the assigned course.—To steer with a small helm, to keep the course accurately, with but slight shifting of the helm in either direction.

steer[1] (stēr), n. [< ME. steere, stere, ster, steor, < AS. steór = MD. stuer, stier, D. stuur = MLG. stur, sture, LG. stūr = OHG. stiura, f., MHG. stiure, stiuwer, G. steuer, n., = Icel. stjōri = Sw. Dan. styr, a rudder, a steering-oar, prob. orig. a pole (applied to a steering-oar); cf. Icel. staurr, a post, stake, = Gr. σταυρός, a pole, stake, cross (see staurus): see steer[1], v., and cf. steer[2]. Hence ult. stern[2].] 1†. A rudder; a helm.

With a wawe [wave] brosten was his stere.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2416.

2†. A helmsman; a pilot.

He that is lord of fortune be thy stere.
Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale, l. 350.

3†. A guide; a director; a governor; a ruler.

My lady dere,
Syn God hath wroght me for I shal yow serve,
As thus I mene ye wol yet be my stere
To do me lyve, if that yow list, or sterve.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1291.

Commodity is the steer of all their actions.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 198.

4†. Guidance; direction; government; control.

For whanne I my lady here,
My wit with that bath loste his stere.
Gower, Conf. Amant., i.

To give one a steer, to give one a useful hint; give one a point or tip. [Slang, U. S.]

steer[2] (stēr), n. [< ME. steer, ster, steor, < AS. steór = D. stier = OLG. stier, MLG. stēr = OHG. stior, MHG. G. stier = Icel. stjörr = Goth. stiur, a bull, steer; also without initial s, Icel. thjörr = Sw. tjur = Dan. tyr, a steer; cf. L. taurus (> It. Sp. toro = Pg. touro = F. dim. taureau), < Gr. ταῦρος = OBulg. turŭ = Bohem. Pol. tur = Russ. turŭ = W. tarw = Ir. Gael. tarbh, a bull, steer; prob. akin to OHG. stūri, stiuri, strong, Skt. sthūrin, a pack-horse, sthūla, great, large, powerful, sthūra, a man, sthāvara, fixed, stable, Gr. σταυρός, a pole, stake, etc. (see staurus). Cf. steer[1], ult. from the same root; cf. also stirk, and Taurus.] A young male of the ox kind; a bullock, especially one which has been castrated and is raised for beef. In the United States the term is extended to male beef-cattle of any age.

Juvencus is a yonge oxe whan he is no lenger a calf, and he is then callyd a steere whan he begynneth to be helpfull unto the profit of man in eringe the erth.
Dialogues of Creatures Moralysed, p. 228. (Halliwell.)

Laocoön . . .
With solemn pomp then sacrificed a steer.
Dryden, Æneid, ii. 268.

steer[2] (stēr), v. t. [< steer[2], n.] To make a steer of; castrate (a young bull or bull-calf). [Rare.]

The male calves are steered and converted to beef.
Daily Telegraph, Oct. 18, 1886. (Encyc. Dict.)

steer[3] (stēr), r. and n. An obsolete or dialectal variant of stir[1].

What 's a' the steer, kimmer?
What 's a' the steer?
Charlie he is landed,
An, haith, he'll soon be here.
Jacobite song.

steerable (stēr′a-bl), a. [< steer[1] + -able.] Capable of being steered: as, a steerable balloon.

steerage (stēr′āj), n. [Early mod. E. also steeridge, stirrage; < steer[1] + -age.] 1. The act, practice, or method of steering; guidance; direction; control; specifically, the direction or control of a ship in her course.

By reason of the evil stirrage of the other ship, we had almost boorded each other. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 110.

But He that hath the steerage of my course Direct my sail! Shak., R. and J., i. 4. 112.

2. That by which a course is steered or directed. [Rare.]

Inscribed to Phœbus, here he hung on high
The steerage [remigium] of his wings.
Dryden, Æneid, vi. 24.

3. Naut., the effect of the helm on a ship; the manner in which the ship is affected by the helm: as, she was going nine knots, with easy steerage.—4. A course steered; a path or way; a course of conduct, or a way of life.

He bore his steerage true in every part,
Led by the compass of a noble heart.
Webster and Rowley, Cure for a Cuckold, iv. 2.

Let our Governors beware in time, lest . . . they shipwrack themselves, as others have don before them, in the cours wherin God was dirreeting the Steerage to a Free Commonwealth. Milton, Free Commonwealth.

5. A rudder; a helm; apparatus for steering; hence, a place of government or control.

This day the William was hald a ground, because she was somewhat leake, and to mend her steerage.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 446.

While they who at the steerage stood
And reap'd the profit sought his blood.
Swift, Death of Dr. Swift.

6†. The part of a ship where the tiller traverses; the stern.

I was much surprized, and ran into the steeridge to look on the compass. Dampier, Voyages, an. 1688.

7. In passenger-ships, the part of the ship allotted to the passengers who travel at the cheapest rate, hence called steerage passengers: generally, except in the newest type of passenger-steamers, not in the stern, as might be supposed, but in the bow; in a man-of-war, the part of the berth-deck just forward of the ward-room: it is generally divided into two apartments, one on each side, called the starboard and port steerages, which are assigned to midshipmen, clerks, and others.

It being necessary for me to observe strict economy, I took my passage in the steerage.
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xvii.

Steerage country (naut.). See country.

steerageway (stēr′āj-wā), n. Naut., that degree of forward movement or headway of a ship which renders her subject to the helm.

steerer (stēr′ėr), n. [< steer[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which steers; a steersman.

And I will be the steerer o't,
To row you o'er the sea.
Young Bekie (Child's Ballads, IV. 13).

2. In a tricycle, the rod and small wheel by which the machine is turned about and guided: called front steerer or back steerer according to its place on the machine.—3. In bunko swindling, one who steers or leads his victim to the rendezvous; a bunko-steerer. [Slang.]—Boat-steerer, in whaling, the second man in rank in a boat's crew, whose duty it is to act as bow-oarsman while going on to the whale, to harpoon or bomb the whale if he is so instructed by the officer, and to steer the boat after the whale has been struck, having shifted ends with the officer. The duties of the boat-steerer, or harpooner or slewer as he is also called, are the most important intrusted to the crew.

steering-compass (stēr′ing-kum″pas), n. See compass.

steering-gear (stēr′ing-gēr), n. Naut., the machinery by which the rudder is managed. In large ships steam-power has come into very general use for this purpose—a wheel, turned by the helmsman in the same manner as when steering by hand, by its action admitting steam to the engines which move the helm.

steering-sail (stēr′ing-sāl), n. Same as studdingsail.

steering-wheel (stēr′ing-hwēl), n. The wheel by which the rudder of a ship is shifted and the ship steered.

steerless† (stēr′les), a. [< ME. stereles, < AS. stéorléas, having no rudder, < steór, a rudder, + -léas, E. -less; < steer[1], n., + -less.] Having no rudder.

Al stereless withinne a hoot am I.
Chaucer, Troilus, i. 416.

Like to the steerless boat that swerves with every wind.
Surrey, Eccl. iii.

steerling (stēr′ling), n. [< steer[2] + -ling[1].] A young steer.

To get thy steerling, onee again
I'le play such another strain.
Herrick, A Beucolick, or Discourse of Neatherds.

steerman† (stēr′man), n. [< ME. sterman, steorman, < AS. steórman (= D. stuurman = MLG. sturman, stureman = MHG. stiurman, G. steuermann, steersman, = Icel. stȳrimathr, stjörnarmathr = Sw. styrman = Dan. styrmand, a mate), < steór, rudder, + man, man: see steer[1] and man.] Same as steersman.

Their Star the Bible; Steer-man th' Holy-Ghost.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 1.

steersman (stērz′man), n.; pl. steersmen (-men). [< ME. steresman, < AS. steóresman, steersman, < steóres, gen. of steór, a rudder, + man, man.] One who steers. (a) The steerer of a boat; a helmsman; a pilot.

How the tempest al began,
And how he lost his steresman.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 436.

Through it the joyful steersman clears his way,
And comes to anchor in his inmost bay. Dryden.

(bt) A governor; a ruler.

> Ile of the .v. steres-men
> Vnder hem welden in stere tgen [ten].
> Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 3417.

steersmanship (stērz'man-ship), n. [< steersman + -ship.] The office or art of a steersman; skill in steering.

> They praised my steersmanship.
> J. Burroughs, Pepacton, p. 19.

steersmate (stērz'māt), n. [< steer's, poss. of steer[1], + mate[1].] A mate or assistant in steering. [Rare.]

> What pilot so expert but needs must wreck, > Imbark'd with such a steers-mate at the helm?
> Milton, S. A., l. 1045.

steer-staff†, n. [ME. steerstaf; < steer[1] + staff.] Same as steer-tree. Wyclif, Prov. xxiii. 34.

steer-tree† (stēr'trē), n. [Early mod. E. also steretre, stertree, stertre; < ME. steretre; < steer[1] + tree.] 1. A rudder.

> Wife, tent the stere-tre, and I shalle asay
> The depnes of the see that we bere, if I may.
> Towneley Mysteries, p. 31. (Halliwell.)

2. The handle of a plow. Cath. Ang., p. 361, note.

steery (stēr'i), n. [< steer[3] + -y[3].] A stir; a bustle; a tumult. [Scotch.]

> "Where's the younger womankind?" said the Antiquary. "Indeed, brother, amang a' the steery, Marla wadna be guided by me—she set away to the Halket-craig-head."
> Scott, Antiquary, ix.

steeve[1] (stēv), a. [Sc., also stieve, stive, a var. of stiff, prob. due to Dan. stiv, stiff: see stiff.] Stiff; firm; unbending or unyielding.

> A filly buirdly, steeve, an' swank,
> An' set weel down a shapely shank
> As e'er tread yird.
> Burns, Auld Farmer's Salutation to his Auld Mare.

steeve[1] (stēv), v. t.; pret. and pp. steeved, ppr. steeving. [Also stieve; a var. of stive[1], v. Cf. steeve[1], a.] To stiffen: as, to be steeved with cold. Grose. [Prov. Eng.]

steeve[2] (stēv), v.; pret. and pp. steered, ppr. steering. [Appar. orig. 'be stiff' (a steeving bowsprit "being fixed stiff or firmly and immovably in the vessel, a horizontal one being movable"): see steeve[2]. Cf. Dan. stiver, a prop, stay, stivebjælke, a beam to prop with.] I. intrans. Naut., to project from the bows at an angle instead of horizontally: said of a bowsprit.

> The bowsprit is said to steeve more or less, as the outer end is raised or drooped. Totten, Naval Dict., p. 417.

II. trans. Naut., to give a certain angle of elevation to: as, to steeve a bowsprit.

steeve[2] (stēv), n. [< steeve[2], v.] Naut., the angle of elevation which the bowsprit makes with the horizon.

steeve[3] (stēv), v. t.; pret. and pp. steeved, ppr. steeving. [Also steve; a var. of stive[2], < OF. estiver, stuff, cram (OF. estive, the loading of a ship): see stive[2].] 1. To stuff; cram; pack firmly and tightly. Jamieson. [Scotch.]—2. Naut., to stow, as cargo in a vessel's hold, by means of a steeve or a jack-screw. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 306.

steeve[3] (stēv), n. [< steeve[3], v.] A long derrick or spar, with a block at one end, used in stowing cargo. Hamersly, Naval Encyc., p. 777.

steevely (stēv'li), adv. [< steeve[1] + -ly[2].] Firmly; stoutly. Jamieson. Also stievely. [Scotch.]

steeving[1] (stē'ving), n. [Verbal n. of steeve[2], v.] Naut., the angle of elevation which a ship's bowsprit makes with the horizon; a steeve.

steeving[2] (stē'ving), n. [Verbal n. of steere[3], v.] The operation of stowing certain kinds of cargo, as cotton, wool, or hides, in a vessel's hold with a steeve or a jack-screw. See steeve[3], v. t., 2.

steg (steg), n. Same as stag (in various senses). [Prov. Eng.]

steganographist† (steg-a-nog'ra-fist), n. [< steganograph-y + -ist.] One who practises the art of writing in cipher. Bailey, 1727.

steganography† (steg-a-nog'ra-fi), n. [= F. stéganographie, < Gr. στεγανός, covered (< στέγειν, cover), + γράφειν, write, mark.] The art of writing in cipher, or in characters which are not intelligible except to the persons who correspond with each other; cryptography. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 498.

> The Art of Stenographie, . . . wherevnto is annexed a very easie Direction for Steganographie, or Secret Writing, printed at London in 1602 for Cuthbert Burbie.
> Title, quoted in Encyc. Brit., XXI. 836, note.

Steganophthalmata (steg″a-nof-thal'ma-tä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of steganophthalmatus: see steganophthalmatous.] The covered-eyed acalephs, a division containing those jellyfishes whose sensory tentaculicysts are covered with flaps or lappets proceeding from the margin of the disk: contrasted with Gymnophthalmata. This division contains some of the commonest jellyfishes, as Aurelia aurita; it corresponds to Discophora in a usual sense, more exactly to Discophoræ phanerocarpæ, or Scyphomedusæ. Also called Steganophthalmia. See also cut under Aurelia.

Under view of a segment of the disk of Aurelia aurita: m, a lithocyst with its protective hood, a usual character of Steganophthalmata; c, the arrangement of the radiating canals; g, the aperture of a genital chamber, with plaited genital membrane.

steganophthalmate (steg″a-nof-thal'māt), a. and n. [< NL. steganophthalmatus*, < Gr. στεγανός, covered, + ὀφθαλμός, eye.] I. a. Covered-eyed or hidden-eyed, as a hydromedusan; not gymnophthalmate. Also steganophthalmatous, steganophthalmic, steganophthalmous.

II. n. A member of the Steganophthalmata.

steganophthalmatous (steg″a-nof-thal'ma-tus), a. [< NL. steganophthalmatus*: see steganophthalmate.] Same as steganophthalmate.

Steganophthalmia (steg″a-nof-thal'mi-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στεγανός, covered, + ὀφθαλμός, eye.] Same as Steganophthalmata.

steganophthalmic (steg″a-nof-thal'mik), a. [< steganophthalm-ate + -ic.] Same as steganophthalmate.

steganophthalmous (steg″a-nof-thal'mus), a. [< Gr. στεγανός, covered, + ὀφθαλμός, eye.] Same as steganophthalmate.

steganopod (steg'a-nō-pod), a. and n. [< NL. steganopus (-pod-), < Gr. στεγανόπους (-ποδ-), web-footed, < στεγανός, covered, + ποίς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] I. a. In ornith., having all four toes webbed; totipalmate.

II. n. A member of the Steganopodes.

Steganopoda† (steg-a-nop'ō-dä), n. pl. [NL.: see steganopod.] An Aristotelian group of birds, approximately equivalent to the Linnean Anseres, or web-footed birds collectively.

steganopodan (steg-a-nop'ō-dan), a. [< steganopod + -an.] In ornith., totipalmate; steganopod.

Steganopodes (steg-a-nop'ō-dēz), n. pl. [NL.: see steganopod.] An order of natatorial birds, consisting of those which have all four toes webbed and a more or less developed gular pouch; the Totipalmatæ. It is now usually divided into six families, Sulidæ, Pelecanidæ, Phalacrocoracidæ, Plotidæ, Tachypetidæ, and Phaethontidæ, respectively represented by the gannets, pelicans, cormorants, darters, frigates, and tropic-birds. Dysporomorphæ, Pinnipedes, and Piscatores are synonyms. See cuts under anhinga, cormorant, frigate-bird, gannet, pelican, Phaëthon, rough-billed, and totipalmate.

steganopodous (steg-a-nop'ō-dus), a. [< steganopod + -ous.] Same as steganopod.

Steganopus (ste-gan'ō-pus), n. [NL. (Vieillot, 1818): see steganopod.] A genus of phalaropes, having the toes margined with an even membrane, and the bill very long and slender.

Wilson's Phalarope (Steganopus wilsoni).

It includes Wilson's phalarope, S. wilsoni, a North American species, the largest and handsomest of the family. This genus has nothing to do with the order of birds that appears, from the term Steganopodes, to be named from it.

Stegocarpi (steg-ō-kär'pī), n. pl. [NL.: see stegocarpous.] A division of bryaceous mosses in which the capsule opens in the upper part by a deciduous lid or operculum. It embraces the larger part of the true mosses.

stegocarpous (steg-ō-kär'pus), a. [< NL. stegocarpus*, < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + καρπός, fruit.] In bot., of or belonging to the Stegocarpi; having an operculate capsule.

Stegocephala (steg-ō-sef'a-lä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of stegocephalus*: see stegocephalous.] Same as Labyrinthodontia. Also Stegocephali.

stegocephalian (steg″ō-se-fā'li-an), a. and n. [< Stegocephala + -ian.] I. a. Stegocephalous.

II. n. A member of the Stegocephala.

stegocephalous (steg-ō-sef'a-lus), a. [< NL. stegocephalus*, < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + κεφαλή, the head.] Having the head mailed, loricate, or cataphract, as a labyrinthodont; having the characters of, or pertaining to, the Stegocephala.

Stegodon (steg'ō-don), n. [NL. (Falconer, 1857), < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] 1. A genus of fossil elephants of the Tertiaries of India, intermediate in their dental characters between the existing elephants and the mastodons. They are, however, most nearly related to the former, belonging to the same subfamily, Elephantinæ. S. insignis is an example.

2. [l. c.] An elephant of this genus.

stegognathous (ste-gog'nā-thus), a. [< Gr. στέγειν, cover, + γνάθος, jaw.] In conch., having a jaw composed of imbricated plates: noting the Bulimulidæ.

Stegopterat (ste-gop'te-rä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of stegopterus*: see stegopterous.] An order of neuropterous insects; the roof-winged insects. It included the Panorpidæ or scorpion-flies, the Raphidiidæ or snake-flies, the Mantispidæ or mantis-flies, the Myrmeleontidæ or ant-lions, the Hemerobiidæ or lacewings, the Sialidæ or May-flies, and the Phryganeidæ or caddis-flies. The order is now broken up.

stegopterous (ste-gop'te-rus), a. [< NL. stegopterus*, < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + πτερόν, wing, = E. feather.] In entom., roof-winged; holding the wings deflexed when at rest; of or pertaining to the Stegoptera.

Stegosauria (steg-ō-sâ'ri-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + σαῦρος, a lizard.] An order or suborder of dinosaurs, represented by the families Stegosauridæ and Scelidosauridæ.

stegosaurian (steg-ō-sâ'ri-an), a. and n. [< Stegosauria + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Stegosauria, or having their characters.

II. n. A dinosaur of the order Stegosauria.

Stegosauridæ (steg-ō-sâ'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stegosaurus + -idæ.] A family of herbivorous dinosaurs, typified by the genus Stegosaurus, with biconcave vertebræ, ischia retrorse and meeting in mid-line, the astragalus coalesced with the tibia, and the metatarsals short. They were Jurassic reptiles of great size.

stegosauroid (steg-ō-sâ'roid), n. and a. [< Stegosaurus + -oid.] Same as stegosaurian.

Stegosaurus (steg-ō-sâ'rus), n. [NL. (Marsh, 1877), < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + σαῦρος, a lizard.] 1. The typical genus of Stegosauridæ. It contained species some 30 feet long, mailed with enormous bucklers and spines.—2. [l. c.] A dinosaur of this genus.

steik, v. t. See steek.

steill†, n. An obsolete Scotch spelling of stale[1].

steint, v. and n. An obsolete Scotch spelling of steen[1], steen[2].

Steinberger (stīn'bėr-gėr), n. A white wine grown on the Rhine, near Wiesbaden in Prussia. The vineyard belongs to the Prussian national domain. Steinberger ranks in estimation second only to the Johannisberger, and in some years is considered better by connoisseurs.

steinbock (stīn'bok), n. [G.: see steenbok.] 1. The ibex.—2. Same as steenbok.

Steinerian (stī-nē'ri-an), a. and n. [Named by Cremona from Steiner (see def.).] I. a. Pertaining to the discoveries of the German geometer Jacob Steiner (1796–1863).—Steinerian polygon. See polygon.

II. n. In math., the locus of points whose first polars with respect to a given curve have double points.

Steiner's surface. See surface.

steing, n. Same as sting[2].

steinheilite (stīn'hī-līt), n. A variety of iolite.

steining (stī'ning), n. Same as steening, 2.

Steinitz gambit. See gambit.

steinkirk (stīn'kėrk), n. See steenkirk.

steinmannite (stīn'man-īt), n. [Named after Steinmann, a German mineralogist.] A variety of galena containing some arsenic and antimony. It commonly occurs in octahedral crystals.

steirk, n. See stirk.

steive, v. A variant of stive[2].

steket, v. An obsolete form of stiek[1].

stelt. An obsolete form of steel[1], steal[2], stale[2], etc.

stela (stē'lä), n. Same as stele[3].

stele[1]†. An old spelling of steal[1], steal[2].

stele[2]†, n. An obsolete form of stale[2].

stele[3] (stē'lē, sometimes stēl), n.; pl. stelæ or stelai. [= F. stèle, < L. stela, < Gr. στήλη, an upright slab or pillar, < ἱστάναι, stand, set: see stand and stool.] In archæol.: (a) An upright slab or pillar, often crowned with a rich anthemion, and sometimes bearing more or less Sculptured Stele.—Monument of the Knight Dexileos (who fell before Corinth 394 B. C.), on the Sacred Way, Athens.

elaborate sculpture or a painted scene, commonly used among the ancient Greeks as a gravestone. (b) A similar slab or pillar serving as a milestone, to bear an inscription in some public place, or for a like purpose.

stelechite (stel'e-kīt), n. [= F. stéléchite, < Gr. στέλεχος, the crown of the root of a tree, stump, block, log, the trunk, + -ite[2].] A fine kind of storax, in larger pieces than the calamite. Also, erroneously, stelochite.

Stelgidopteryx (stel-ji-dop'te-riks), n. [NL. (S. F. Baird, 1858), < Gr. στελγίς (στελγιδ-), a scraper, + πτέρυξ, a wing.] A genus of Hirundinidæ, having the outer web of the first primary serrate by conversion of the barbs into a series of recurved hooks; the rough-winged swallows. S. serripennis is the common rough-winged swallow of the United States, of plain brownish coloration, greatly resembling the bank-swallow. Several others inhabit Central and South America. See cut under rough-winged.

stell (stel), v. t. [< ME. stellen, < AS. stellan (= MD. D. MLG. LG. OHG. MHG. G. stellen), set up, place, fix, < steall (= MD. D. stal = MLG. stal, LG. stall = OHG. MHG. stal, G. stall), a place, stall: see stall[1].] To set; place; fix. [Obsolete or dialectal.]

> Mine eye hath play'd the painter, and hath stell'd
> Thy beauty's form in table of my heart.
> Shak., Sonnets, xxiv.

stell (stel), n. [A var. of stall[1], after stell, v.] 1†. A place; a station.

> The said stell of Plessis.
> Danet's Comines, sig. V 5. (Nares.)

2. A stall; a fold for cattle. Halliwell; Jamieson. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

stella (stel'ä), n.; pl. stellæ (-ē). [NL., < L. stella, a star: see star[1].] A stellate spongespicule; an aster; a stellate.

stellar (stel'är), a. [= F. stellaire = Sp. estrellar = It. stellare, < LL. stellaris, pertaining to a star, starry, < L. stella, a star: see stella.] Of or pertaining to stars; astral: as, stellar worlds; stellar space; stellar regions.

> These soft fires
> Not only enlighten, but . . . shed down
> Their stellar virtue on all kinds that grow.
> Milton, P. L., iv. 671.

Stellaria (ste-lā'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), name transferred, on account of the star-like blossoms, from a Corispermum so named by Dillenius (1719); < L. stella, a star.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Caryophyllaceæ and tribe Alsineæ. It is characterized by the absence of stipules, by flowers usually with five deeply two-cleft petals and three styles, and by a one-celled globose or oblong capsule which commonly splits into three two-cleft or completely parted valves. There are about 85 species, scattered throughout the world; in the tropics they occur only on mountains. Seven species occur in England and about 20 in North America, of which 7 are natives of the northeastern United States. They are commonly diffuse herbs, with weak, smooth, or hairy stems, loosely ascending or growing in matted tufts. Their flowers are usually white, and form terminal panicled cymes, sometimes mixed with leaves. Several species are known as chickweed, and several others as starwort or stitchwort, especially S. Holostea (see stitchwort), a common English species, bearing such local names as allbone, breakbones, shirt-buttons, snap-jack. S. longifolia, the long-leafed stitchwort, frequent in the Northern Atlantic States, forms delicate tangled masses of light green overtopped by numerous small white flowers. S. pubera, the great chickweed or starwort, the most showy Atlantic species, forms conspicuous dark-green tufts along shaded banks in earliest spring, from Pennsylvania southward. See also cut under ovary.

Great Chickweed (Stellaria pubera).

stellary (stel'ä-ri), a. Same as stellar.

stellate (stel'āt), a. and n. [< L. stellatus, pp. of stellare, set or cover with stars, < stella, star: see stella.] I. a. Star-like in form; star-shaped; arranged in the form of a conventional star; radiating from a common center like the rays or points of a star: as, stellate leaves; the stellate groups of natrolite crystals.—Stellate bristle or hair, a bristle or hair which branches at the end in a star-shaped manner. See cut under hair, 4.—Stellate fracture, a fracture, occurring usually in a flat bone, in which several fissures radiate from the central point of injury.—Stellate leaves, leaves, more than two in number, surrounding the stem in a whorl, or radiating like the spokes of a wheel or the points of a star. Also called verticillate leaves. See cut under pipsissewa.—Stellate ligament, a costovertebral ligament; the anterior costocentral ligament uniting the head of a rib with the body of a vertebra: so called from the radiated figure in man.—Stellate spicule, an aster; a stellate.—Stellate veins, very minute venous radicles situated just under the capsule of the kidney, arranged in a radiating or stellate manner.

II. n. A stellate microsclere, or flesh-spicule in the form of a star. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 417.

stellated (stel'ā-ted), a. [< stellate + -ed[2].] Same as stellate.—Stellated polygon, polyhedron, etc. See the nouns.

stellately (stel'āt-li), adv. Radiately; like a star; in a stellate manner.

stellate-pilose (stel'āt-pī'lōs), a. In bot., pilose with stellate hairs.

stellation† (ste-lā'shon), n. [< ML. stellatio(n-) (?), < L. stella, a star: see stellate.] 1. The act or process of becoming a star or a constellation.

> The skaly Scorpion 's fixt amongst the rest, . . .
> The cause of it's stellation to enquire,
> And why so beautify'd with heauenly fire,
> Comes next in course.
> Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 138.

2. Same as constellation.

> Stars, and stellations of the heavens.
> Rev. T. Adams, Works, II. 4.

stellature (stel'ä-tūr), n. [< ML. stellatura*, irreg. taken as equiv. to stellionatus: see stellionate.] Same as stellionate.

> Extortion and cozenage is proverbially called crimen stellionatus, the sin of stellature.
> Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 79.

stelled† (steld), p. a. [Pp. of stell: see stell, and cf. stalled, pp. of stall.] Fixed.

> The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
> In hell-black night endured, would have buoy'd up,
> And quench'd the stelled fires. Shak., Lear, iii. 7. 61.

[Some commentators define the word as 'stellated,' 'starry.'] stelleer†, stelleere†, n. [See steelyard[2].] Same as steelyard[2]. Colgrave.

Stelleria (ste-lē'ri-ä), n. [NL., named after G. W. Steller: see stellerine.] In ornith., a genus of sea-ducks, the type of which is Steller's eider, S. dispar, usually called Polysticta stelleri. Bonaparte, 1838.

Stellerida (ste-ler'i-dä), n. pl. [NL., prop. Stellarida, < stellaris, starry, + -ida.] A class or other large group of echinoderms of obviously radiate figure; the starfishes and brittle-stars: synonymous with Asteroidea, 2. stelleridan (ste-ler'i-dan), a. and n. [< Stellerida + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Stellerida.

II. n. A member of the Stellerida, as a starfish or brittle-star.

stelleridean (stel-e-rid'ē-an), n. Same as stelleridan.

stellerine (stel'e-rin), n. [Named after G. W. Steller, the traveler (1709–45).] The arctic or Steller's sea-cow, Rhytina stelleri. See sea-cow, 2, and cut under Rhytina.

Steller's eider. See Polysticta, 1, and Stelleria.

Steller's jay. A jay of northwestern North America, Cyanocitta stelleri, crested like the common blue jay, but chiefly of a blackish color, shading into dull blue on some parts.

Steller's sea-cow. See sea-cow, 2, and cut under Rhytina.

Steller's sea-lion. The northern sea-lion. See Eumetopias (with cut).

stellet†, n. An obsolete form of stylet, 1. Dalyell, Frag. of Scottish History.

stelliferous (ste-lif'e-rus), a. [< L. stellifer, starry, < stella, a star, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Having or abounding with stars.

stelliform (stel'i-fôrm), a. [< L. stella, a star, + forma, form.] Star-like in shape; stellate in form; asteroid; radiated. stellify† (stel'i-fī), v. t. [< ME. stellifyen, < OF. stellifier, < ML. stellificare, place among the stars, convert into a constellation, < L. stella, a star, + facere, make, do (see -fy).] To turn into or cause to resemble a star; convert into a constellation; make glorious; glorify.

> No wonder is thogh Jove her stellifye.
> Chaucer, Good Women, l. 525.
>
> Some thinke this flood to be Nilus, which is also Gyon; and therefore stellified, because it directeth his course from the Meridian. It consisteth of many stars, and lieth iust beneath the star called Canopus, or Ptolomæa.
> Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 176.

Stellio (stel'i-ō), n. [NL., < L. stellio(n-), a lizard: see stellion.] 1. A genus of agamoid lizards, giving name to the Stellionidæ. They have acrodont dentition, naked tympanum, no pores, and Common Stellion (Stellio vulgaris).

the scales of the tail disposed in whorls or verticils. There are several species, ranging from countries bordering the Mediterranean to India. The common stellion or starlizard, the hardim of the Arabs, S. vulgaris, is abundant in ruins. S. tuberculatus is an Indian species.

2. [l. c.] A lizard of this genus.

stellion (stel'yon), n. [< L. stellio, a newt, a lizard marked with star-like spots, also a crafty, knavish person (cf. stellionate), < stella, a star: see stella.] An agamoid lizard of the genus Stellio or family Stellionidæ; a star-lizard.

> When the stellion hath cast his skin, he greedily devours it again. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 79.

stellionate (stel'yon-āt), n. [< LL. stellionatus, cozenage, trickery, < L. stellio(n-), a crafty, knavish person, lit. a newt, lizard: see stellion.] In Scots and civil law, a word used to denote all such crimes in which fraud is an ingredient as have no special names to distinguish them, and are not defined by any written law.

Stellionidæ (stel-i-on'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stellio(n-) + -idæ.] A family of Old World acrodont agamoid lizards, named from the genus Stellio, properly merged in Agamidæ; the stellions or star-lizards. See cut under Stellio.

stellular (stel'ū-lär), a. [< L. stellula, a little star, dim. of stella, a star: see stella.] Finely or numerously stellated, as if spangled with little stars; stelliferous, as the surface of a coral; shaped like a little star; resembling little stars; small and stelliform in figure or appearance. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 370.

stellulate (stel'ū-lāt), a. [< L. stellula, a little star (see stellular), + -ate[1].] Resembling little stars or a little star; stellular.

Stellwag's symptom. See symptom.

Stelmatopoda (stel-ma-top'ō-dä), n. pl. A division of Polyzoa or Bryozoa, corresponding to the Gymnolæmata: contrasted with Lophopoda.

stelochite (stel′ō-kīt), n. See steleehite.

stelography (stē-log′ra-fi), n. [< LGr. στηλογραφία, an inscription on a stele or upright slab, < Gr. στήλη, a stele (see stele[3]), + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The practice of writing or inscribing on steles or pillars.

Jacob's pillar . . . thus engraved . . . gave probably the origin to the invention of stelography.
Stackhouse, Hist. Bible, p. 323.

stem[1] (stem), n. [< ME. stem, stam, < AS. stemn, stefn, stæfn, also stofn (> E. dial. stovin), stem, trunk (of a tree), = D. stam, stem, trunk, stock (of a tree or family), = MLG. stam, stamme, stem, stock, = OHG. MHG. stam (stamm-), G. stamm, stem (of a tree), trunk, tree, stock, race, = Icel. stofn, stomn, stem, trunk of a tree, = Sw. stam = Dan. stamme (in comp. stam-), stem, trunk, stock (of a tree), stock, race, family (also with some variation of form in a particular sense, 'the prow of a vessel': see stem[2]); = OIr. tamon, Ir. tamhān (for stamon*), stem, trunk; cf. Gr. στάμνος, an earthen jar; with formative -mn-, < √ sta, stand: see stand. Not related to staff, except remotely.] 1. The body of a tree, shrub, or plant; the firm part which supports the branches; the stock; the stalk; technically, the ascending axis, which ordinarily grows in an opposite direction to the root or descending axis. The stem is composed of fibrous, spiral, and cellular tissues, arranged in various ways; it typically assumes a cylindrical form and a perpendicular position, and bears upon it the remaining aërial parts of the plant. Its form and direction, however, are subject to much variation in particular cases. In regard to internal structure, there are three principal modifications of stems characteristic of three of the great natural classes into which the vegetable kingdom is divided — namely, exogens, endogens, and acrogens. Stems are herbaceous or woody, solid or hollow, jointed or unjointed, branched or simple. Sometimes they are so weak as to be procumbent, although more generally firm and erect; sometimes weak stems are upheld by twining or by other methods of climbing. In some plants the stem is so short as to seem to be wanting, the leaves and flower-stalks appearing to spring from the top of the root. There are also stems, such as the rhizome and tuber, which, being subterranean, have been mistaken for roots. See cuts under baobab, esparto, internode, pipsissewa, snakeroot, rhizome, and tuber.

2. The stalk which supports the flower or the fruit of a plant; the peduncle of the fructification, or the pedicel of a flower; the petiole or leaf-stem. See cuts under pedicel, peduncle, and petiole.

Two lovely berries moulded on one stem.
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 211.

For I maun crush amang the stoure Thy slender stem.
Burns, To a Mountain Daisy.

3. The stock of a family; a race; ancestry.

Ye may all, that are of noble stem,
Approach, and kiss her sacred vesture's hem.
Milton, Arcades, l. 82.

4. A branch of a family; an offshoot.

Richard Plantagenet, . . .
Sweet stem from York's great stock.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 41.

5. Anything resembling the stem of a plant. Specifically — (a) The handle of a tool. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] (b) That part of a vase, cup, or goblet which unites the body to the foot or base, in examples where the body is not immediately set upon the latter.

Wine-glasses or goblets are classified by the nature of their stems, or by the nature of their feet.
H. J. Powell, Glass-Making, p. 61.

(c) In type-founding, the thick stroke or body-mark of a roman or italic letter. See cut under type. (d) In a vehicle, a bar to which the bow of a falling hood is hinged. (e) The projecting rod of a reciprocating valve, serving to guide it in its action. See cut under slide-valve. (f) In zoöl. and anat., any slender, especially axial, part like the stem of a plant; a stalk, stipe, rachis, footstalk, etc. (g) In ornith., the whole shaft of a feather. (h) In entom., the base of a clavate antenna, including all the joints except the enlarged outer ones: used especially in descriptions of the Lepidoptera.

6. In musical notation, a vertical line added to the head of certain kinds of notes. Of the kinds of note now in use, all but two, the breve and the semibreve, have stems. It may be directed either upward or downward, thus,  . When two voice-parts are written on the same staff, the stems of the notes belonging to the upper part are often directed upward, and those of the lower part downward, particularly when the parts cross, or both use the same note (see figure). The latter note is said to have a double stem. See note[1], 13. Also called tail.

7. In philol., a derivative from a root, having itself inflected forms, whether of declension or of conjugation, made from it; the unchanged part in a series of inflectional forms, from which the forms are viewed as made by additions; base; crude form. — Aërial stem, the above-ground axis of a plant, as opposed to the rootstock or other subterranean form of the stem. — Ancipital, compound, erect, herbaceous, pituitary, secondary, etc., stem. See the adjectives.

stem[1] (stem), v. t.; pret. and pp. stemmed, ppr. stemming. [< stem[1], n.] To remove the stem of; separate from the stem: as, to stem tobacco.

stem[2] (stem), n. [< ME. stem, stam,* < AS. stemn, stefn,* stæfn,* also stefna, stæfna, the prow of a ship (steórstefn, the poop, lit. 'steer-stem'), = OS. stamn = D. steven = MLG. LG. steven, prow of a ship (> G. steven, stem (vorder-steven, 'fore stem,' prow, hinter-steven, 'hind stem,' stern-post)), = Icel. stafn, stamn, also stefni, stemni, stem of a ship (prow or stern), = Dan. stevn, stavn = Sw. stäf, prow (fram-stam, 'fore stem,' prow, bakstam, 'back stem,' stem); a particular use, with variations of form, of AS. stemn, stefn, E. stem[1], etc., stem, trunk, post: see stem[1]. The naut. use in E. is prob. in part of Scand. origin.] 1. A curved piece of timber or metal to which the two sides of a ship are united at the foremost end. The lower end of it is scarfed or riveted to the keel, and the bowsprit, when present, rests on its upper end. In wooden ships it is frequently called the main stem, to distinguish it from the false stem, or cutwater. The outside of the stem is usually marked with a scale showing the perpendicular height from the keel, for indicating the draft of water forward. See also cut under forecastle.

Stem and allied parts.
S, stem; K, keel; A, apron; D, deadwood; Ss, stemson; DH, deck-hooks; BH, breast-hooks; SP, stem-piece, or independent piece; MP, main piece, or lace-piece; BP, bobstay-piece; BWS, bowsprit; G, gripe; F, false keel. (The dotted lines show bolts.)

Pretious jewells fecht from far
By Italian marchants that with Russian stemes Plous up huge forrowes in the Terren Maine.
The Taming of the Shrew, p. 22. (Halliwell.)

2. The forward part of a vessel; the bow.

Turnynge therfore the stemmes of his shyppes towarde the Easte, he affyrmed that he had founde the Ilande of Ophir. Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on [America, ed. Arber, p. 66).

False stem, a stem fitted closely to the forward side of the main stem, generally sharp, and introduced for the purpose of decreasing a vessel's resistance and increasing her speed; a cutwater. — From stem to stern, from one end of the ship to the other, or through the whole length.

They skip
From stem to stern; the boatswain whistles.
Shak., Pericles, iv. 1. 64.

stem[2] (stem), v.; pret. and pp. stemmed, ppr. stemming. [< stem[2], n.] I. trans. 1. To dash against with the stem (of a vessel).

They stood off again, and, returning with a good gale, they stemmed her upon the quarter, and almost overset her. Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 226.

2†. To keep (a vessel) on its course; steer.

He is the master of true courage that all the time sedately stems the ship.
Cornelius Nepos in English (1723), Ded. (Encyc. Dict.)

3. To make headway against by sailing or swimming, as a tide or current; hence, in general, to make headway against (opposition of any kind).

The breathless Muse awhile her wearied wings shall ease,
To get her strength to stem the rough Sabrinian seas.
Drayton, Polyolbion, iii. 434.

II. intrans. 1. To make headway (as a ship); especially, to make progress in opposition to some obstruction, as a current of water or the wind.

They on the trading flood,
Through the wide Æthiopian to the Cape,
Ply, stemming nightly toward the pole.
Milton, P. L., ii. 642.

2. To head; advance head on.

At first we could scarce lie S. W., but, being got a degree to the Southward of the Line, the Wind veer'd most Easterly, and then we stemmed S. W. by S.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 79.

stem[3] (stem), v. t.; pret. and pp. stemmed, ppr. stemming. [< ME. stemmen; < Icel. stemma = Sw. stämma = Dan. stemme, stem, = OHG. MHG. stemmen, stemen, G. stemmen, stämmen, stop, stem, dam; < √ stam in stau[2], stammer, etc.: see stammer. Not connected with stem[1] or stem[2].] 1. To stop; check; dam up, as a stream.

And loke ȝe stemme no stepe [step], bot strechez on faste, Til ȝe reche to areset [stopping-place], rest ȝe neuer.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 905.

The best way is, ever, not to attempt to stem a torrent, but to divert it.
A. Hamilton, To Washington (Works, I. 345).

He who stems a stream with sand.
Scott, L. of the L., iii. 28.

He sat down to his milk-porridge, which it was his old frugal habit to stem his morning hunger with.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, I. 12.

2. To tamp; make tight, as a joint, with a lute or cement.

stem[4]†, n. and v. An old spelling of steam.

stemapod (stem′a-pod), n. [< Gr. στῆμα, filament (see stamen[1]), + ποίς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] One of the caudal filaments of the caterpillars of certain moths, as Cerura and Heteroeampa, whose last pair of legs are thus modified into deterrent or repugnatorial organs. A. S. Packard.

stem-character (stem′kar″ak-tėr), n. In gram., same as characteristic letter (which see, under characteristic).

stem-clasping (stem′klȧs″ping), a. Embracing the stem with its base; amplexicaul, as a leaf or petiole.

stem-climber (stem′klī″mėr), n. In bot., see climber[1], 2.

stemet, v. t. A Middle English form of steam.

stem-eelworm (stem′ēl″wėrm), n. A minute nematoid, Tylenchus devastatrix, which causes stem-sickness in certain plants. See Tylenchus.

stem-end (stem′end), n. That part or point in a fruit which is attached to the stem: opposed to the blossom-end, which frequently bears the remains of the calyx, as in a pear or an apple. The stem-end is usually inferior to the blossom-end in sweetness and flavor.

stem-head (stem′hed), n. In ship-building, the top of the stem, or continuation of the forward extreme of the keel.

stem-knee (stem′nē), n. In ship-building, a knee uniting the stem with the keel.

stem-leaf (stem′lēf), n. A leaf growing from the stem; a cauline leaf.

stemless (stem′les), a. [< stem[1] + -less.] Having no stem; having the stem so little developed as to appear to be wanting; acauleseent. — Stemless lady's-slipper, thistle, violet. See the nouns.

stemlet (stem′let), n. [< stem[1] + -let.] A little stem or stalk; a young stem.

Gives insertion to two multiarticulate stemlets.
English Cyc., Nat. Hist. Division (1855), III. 87.

stemma (stem′ȧ), n.; pl. stemmata (-a-tȧ). [< L. stemma, < Gr. στέμμα, a wreath, garland. < στέφειν, put around, encircle, wreathe, crown.] 1. A family tree, or pedigree; specifically, such a pedigree made more or less decorative with heraldic or other ornaments; also, pedigree in general; order of descent; family: as, a man of the stemma of the Cecils. — 2. The simple as distinguished from the compound eye of an invertebrate; an ocellus: always sessile and immovable. — 3. One of the facets or corneules of a compound eye. — 4. In entom., the tubercle from which an antenna arises. — Spurious stemma, a small flat space, covered with semi-transparent membrane, above the bases of the antennæ of certain Orthoptera: it has been supposed to represent a stemma, or simple eye, in a rudimentary form.

Stemmatopteris (stem-a-top′te-ris), n. [NL., < Gr. στέμμα(τ-), a wreath, + πτερίς, a fern.] A genus of fossil plants, established by Corda, under which various stems or trunks of tree-ferns have been grouped, but little being known in regard to them, except the form of the scars or impressions marking the points of attachment of the petioles. Lesquereux describes remains of this kind under the names of Stemmatopteris, Caulopteris, Megaphyton, and Psaronius; but, as he remarks, they could all have been described without inconvenience under the name of Caulopteris. These fossil remains are common in the coal-measures. See Caulopteris.

stemmatous (stem′ȧ-tus), a. [< stemma(t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to a stemma, or having its character; ocellar.

stemmed (stemd), a. [< stem[1] + -ed[2].] Furnished with or bearing a stem: used chiefly in composition: as, a straight-stemmed plant.

stemmer (stem′ėr), n. [< stem[3] + -er[1].] 1. Same as blasting-needle. [Eng.] — 2. An implement used in making joints tight by means of cement.

stemmery (stem′ėr-i), n.; pl. stemmeries (-iz). [< stem[1] + -ery.] A factory where tobacco is stripped from the stem. New York Herald, July 17, 1884. [Local, U. S.]

stemming (stem′ing), n. [Verbal n. of stem[3], v.] 1. The operation of tamping. — 2. The material used in tamping. [Eng. in both uses.]

Stemodia (stē-mō′di-ȧ), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1763), shortened from Stemodiacra (P. Browne, 1756), so called from the two-forked stamens; < Gr. στήμων, taken for 'stamen' (see stamen[1]), + δίς, δι-, two-, + ἄκρον, a point, tip.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Scrophulariaceæ and tribe Gratioleæ, type of a subtribe Stemodieæ. It is characterized by flowers with five nearly equal calyx-lobes, and four perfect didynamous stamens included within the corolla-tube, and by a capsule splitting partly or completely into four valves, the two placentæ separating or remaining united in a column. There are about 30 species, mostly tropical, occurring in all continents except Europe. They are glandular-hairy or downy herbs, sometimes shrubby and often aromatic. They bear opposite or whorled leaves and solitary or spiked and crowded, usually bluish flowers, sometimes with bracted pedicels. S. maritima is known in Jamaica as bastard or seaside germander, and S. durantifolia as goatweed; the latter, a low clammy plant with purplish spiked flowers, extends also from southern Arizona to Brazil.

Stemona (stē′mō-nä), n. [NL. (Loureiro, 1790), so called from the peculiar stamens; < Gr. στήμων, taken for 'stamen.'] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, type of the order Stemonaceæ. It is distinguished by erect ovules and seeds, and stamens with very short filaments more or less united into a ring, having linear erect anthers with a thickened connective, continued above into an erect appendage. There are 4 or 5 species, natives of India, Malaysia, and tropical Australia. They are smooth, lofty-climbing twiners, growing from a fusiform tuberous root, and bearing shining alternate leaves which are cordate, ovate, or narrower, with three or more nerves and numerous cross-veinlets. The flowers form racemes, or are few or solitary in the axils; the perianth-segments are rather large, distinct, and erect, marked by many nerves. Formerly called Roxburghia.

Stemonaceæ (stē-mō-nā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Durand, 1888), < Stemona + -aceæ.] A small order of monocotyledonous plants, of the series Coronarieæ, by many formerly called Roxburghiaceæ. It is characterized by regular bisexual flowers with a four-parted perianth of two rows, with four stamens and a one-celled ovary which contains two or more ovules and ripens into a two-valved capsule. It includes 8 species, belonging to 3 genera, of which Stichoneuron and Stemona (the type) are largely Indian; the other genus, Croomia, includes one species in Japan, and another, C. pauciflora, in Florida and adjacent States.

Stemonitaceæ (stē″mō-ni-tā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Stemonitis + -aceæ.] A family of myxomycetous fungi, belonging, according to the classification of Rostafinski, to the order Amaurochætieæ, which has a single sporangium or æthalium, without the peculiar deposits of lime carbonate that characterize the fructification of other orders, and the spores, capillitium, and columella usually uniformly black, or rarely brownish-violet.

Stemonitis (stē-mō-nī′tis), n. [NL. (Gleditsch), < Gr. στήμων, taken for 'stamen.'] A genus of myxomycetous fungi, giving name to the family Stemonitaceæ.

stem-pessary (stem′pes″a-ri), n. A pessary with a rod or stem which is passed into the cervix uteri.

stem-piece (stem′pēs), n. In ship-building, a piece between the stem and the chocks, also called independent piece. See cut under *stem*2.

stemple (stem′pl), n. [Cf. D. stempel = MHG. stempfel, G. stempel (< D.), a mark, stamp: see stamp.] In mining, a small timber used to support the ground by being laid across the stulls, or in other ways: in some mining districts of England nearly the same as laeing or lagging.

stem-sickness (stem′sik″nes), n. A disease of clover in England. It is caused by a nematoid worm, Tylenchus devastatrix, known as the stem-eelworm, and brings about first a stunted condition and finally the death of the plant.

stemson (stem′son), n. [Perhaps a var. of stanchion, confused with *stem*2. Cf. keelson, sternson.] In ship-building, a piece of curved timber fixed on the after part of the apron inside. The lower end is scarfed into the keelson, and receives the scarf of the stem, through which it is bolted.

stem-stitch (stem′stich), n. In pillow-lace making, a stitch by which a thick braid-like stripe is produced: used for the stems of flowers and sprigs, tendrils, etc.

stem-winder (stem′wīn″dėr), n. A watch which is wound up or regulated by means of a contrivance connected with the stem, and not by a key.

sten, v. and n. See stend.

stench[1] (stench), n. [< ME. stench, stunch, < AS. stenc (= OHG. stanc, stanch, MHG. stanc, stenke, G. stank = Sw. Dan. stank), a smell, odor (pleasant or unpleasant), < stincan, smell: see stink, v., and cf. stink, n. Cf. Icel. stækja, a stench.] An ill smell; an offensive odor.

In our way to Tivoli I saw the rivulet of Salforata, formerly called Albula, and smelt the stench that arises from its waters some time before I saw them.
Addison, Remarks on Italy (Bohn), I. 482.

=Syn. Stink, etc. See smell.

stench[1]† (stench), v. t. [< stench[1], n.] To cause to emit a stench; cause to stink.

Dead barda stench every coast.
Young, Resignation, i. 24.

stench[2]† (stench), v. t. An obsolete variant of stanch[1]. Harvey.

stenchful† (stench′fůl), a. [< stench[1] + -ful.] Full of bad odors. Rev. T. Adams, Works, II. 56.

stenchil (sten′chil), n. A Scotch form of stanchel[1] for stanchion.

stench-pipe (stench′pīp), n. In plumbing, an extension of a soil-pipe through and above the roof of a house, to allow foul gases to escape.

stench-trap (stench′trap), n. In a drain, a depression or hollow in which water lies, introduced to prevent the reflex passage of foul air or gas.

stenchy (sten′chi), a. [< stench[1] + -y[1].] Having a stench or offensive smell. Dyer, The Fleece, i.

stencil[1] (sten′sil), v. t.; pret. and pp. stenciled, stencilled, ppr. stenciling, stencilling. [Origin uncertain: (a) According to Skeat, prob. < OF. estinceller (for escinteller*), cover with stars, powder (used in heraldry), lit. 'sparkle,' F. étinceler, sparkle, < L. scintillare, sparkle: see scintillate. Cf. tinsel. (b) In another view, orig. as a noun, identical with stencil[2], a dial. var. of stanchel[1], var. of stanchion, ult. < OF. estance, a support: see stance and stanchion.] To mark out or paint by means of a stencil.

stencil[1] (sten′sil), n. [Seo stencil[1], v.] 1. A thin plate or sheet of any substance in which a figure, letter, or pattern is formed by cutting through the plate. If the plate thus cut is placed upon a surface and rubbed with color or ink, the pattern or figure will be marked on the underlying substance. For many purposes, the letters, etc., are cut through completely; for transferring a pattern, as in embroidery, the lines of the pattern are often indicated by small holes. In wall-decoration, etc., both these plans are employed. Different stencils are often used in the same design, each for a different color.

2. The coloring matter used in marking with a stencil-plate. C. T. Davis, Bricks and Tiles, p. 90.—3. In ecram., a preparation laid upon the biscuit to keep the oil used in transfer-printing or enameling from adhering to the surface; hence, the pattern traced by this preparation, reserving a panel or medallion of the unaltered color of the biscuit.

stencil[2] (sten′sil), n. [A var. of stanchel[1].] A door-post; a stanchion. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] stenciler, stenciller (sten′sil-ėr), n. [< stencil[1] + -er[1].] One who works with a stencil, especially a decorative painter who applies patterns with a stencil.

stencil-pen (sten′sil-pen), n. A pricking-machine for perforating paper to form a stencil. It consists of a hollow stylus carrying a needle having a reciprocating motion. See electric pen, under pen[2].

stencil-plate (sten′sil-plāt), n. A stencil.

stend (stend), v. i. [< OF. estendre, F. étendre = It. stendere, < L. extendere, stretch forth, extend: see extend.] 1. To extend. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To walk with long steps.—3. To leap; bound; rear; spring. Also sten. [Scotch and prov. Eng.]

stend (stend), n. [< stend, v.] A leap; a spring; a long step or stride. Also sten. Burns, Tam Glen. [Scotch and prov. Eng.]

Stenelytra (stē-nel′i-trä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of stenelytrus*: see stenelytrous.] In entom., in Latreille's system, the third family of heteromerous Coleoptera, divided into 5 tribes, corresponding to the old genera Helops, Cistela, Dircæa, Œdemera, and Mycterus.

stenelytrous (stē-nel′i-trus), a. [< NL. stenelytros*, < Gr. στενός, narrow, strait, + ἔλυτρον, a cover: see elytrum.] Having narrow elytra; of or pertaining to the Stenelytra.

Stenobothrus (sten-ō-both′rus), n. [NL. (Fischer, 1853), < Gr. στενός, narrow, strait, Stenobothrus maculipennis.

a, mature insect; b, pupa; c, larva. (All natural size.)

close, + βόθρος, a hole.] A notable genus of grasshoppers, of the family Acrididæ, containing such species as S. maculipennis. This is a common grasshopper in most parts of the United States, and resembles the hateful grasshopper or Rocky Mountain locust (Melanoplus spretus) so closely that it has often been mistaken for the latter.

stenocardia (sten-ō-kär′di-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. στενός, narrow, + καρδία, the heart.] Angina pectoris.

Stenocarpus (sten-ō-kär′pus), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1810), so called from the usually narrow fruit; < Gr. στενός, narrow, + καρπός, fruit.] A genus of apetalous trees, of the order Proteaceæ and tribe Embothricæ. It is characterized by umbellate flowers, and numerous ovules downwardly imbricated and ripening into seeds which are winged below. There are 14 species, 11 of which are natives of New Caledonia and 3 of Australia. They are trees with alternate or scattered leaves, which are entire or deeply divided into a few pinnate segments, and mostly yellow or red flowers with a somewhat irregular perianth-tube and a nearly globular recurved and at length divided border, disposed in terminal or axillary umbels which are solitary or clustered in a short raceme or a compound umbel, and are followed by coriaceous stalked follicles. S. sinuatus is known in Queensland as tulip-tree and fire-tree. S. salignus, native of the same regions, is known as beefwood, silky oak, and meleyn.

stenocephalous (sten-ō-sef′a-lus), a. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + κεφαλή, head.] Narrow-headed.

stenochromy (sten′ō-krō-mi), n. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + χρῶμα, color.] The art of printing several colors at one impression. This is accomplished by various methods: (1) by dividing the ink-fountain of a printing-press into compartments, one for each color, and allowing the rollers to blend the inks on the distributing-table; (2) by cutting or trimming the rollers of a printing-press in such a way that only the desired parts may take and distribute ink—a different color for each roller or set of rollers; (3) by lithographic methods.

stenocoronine (sten″ō-kō-rō′nin), a. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + κορώνη, a crow, also a crown.] Having narrow-crowned molars: noting the hippopotamine type of dentition, as distinguished from the euryeoronine or dinotherian. Falconer.

stenoderm (sten′ō-dėrm), n. [< Stenoderma.] A bat of the genus Stenoderma; a stenodermine. —Spectacled stenoderm, Stenoderma perspicillatum, a tropical American bat marked about the eyes as if wearing spectacles. Also called spectacled vampire.

Stenoderma (sten-ō-dėr′mä), n. [NL. (Geoffroy), < Gr. στενός, narrow, + δέρμα, skin, hide.] A genus of American phyllostomine bats, of the subfamily Phyllostomatinæ, having a short, broad, obtuse muzzle, short but distinct noseleaf, no tail, and the interfemoral membrane concave behind. S. achradophilum of the West Indies is so called from its fondness for the berries of Achras sapota, the naseberry.

Stenodermata (sten-ō-dėr′ma-tä), n. pl. [NL.: see Stenoderma.] A section of phyllostomine bats, of which the genera Stenoderma, Artibeus, and Centurio are leading forms. It includes about 20 species, of 9 genera, of Neotropical bats. See cut under Centurio.

stenodermatous (sten-ō-dėr′ma-tus), a. Pertaining to the Stenodermata, or having their characters; resembling a stenoderm.

stenodermine (sten-ō-dėr′min), a. and n. [< Stenoderma + -ine[1].] I. a. Having a contracted wing-membrane, as a bat; of or pertaining to the Stenodermata.

II. n. A stenodermine bat; a stenoderm.

Stenodus (sten′ō-dus), n. [NL. (Richardson, 1836), < Gr. στενός, narrow, + ὀδούς = E. tooth.] A genus of salmonoid fishes, related both to Salmo and to Coregonus, having an elongate body, projecting lower jaw, and weak teeth. The inconnu, or Mackenzie river salmon, is S. mackenzii, attaining a weight of 20 pounds or more, esteemed as a food-fish. See cut under inconnu.

stenograph (sten′ō-gråf), n. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + γράφειν, write.] 1. A character used in stenography; a writing, especially any note or memorandum, in shorthand.

I saw the reporters' room, in which they redact their hasty stenographs. Emerson, Eng. Traits, p. 265.

2. A stenographic machine; a form of typewriter in which signs and marks of various kinds—dots, dashes, etc.—are used in place of ordinary letters. A number of different machines have been made, essentially type-writers operated by means of a keyboard.

stenograph (sten′ō-gråf), v. i. [< stenograph, n.] To write or represent by stenography. Ill. London News. [Rare.]

stenographer (stē-nog′ra-fėr), n. [< stenograph(y) + -er[1].] One who writes shorthand.

stenographic (sten-ō-graf′ik), a. [= F. sténographique; as stenograph-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to stenography; shorthand.—Stenographic machine. Same as stenograph, 2.

stenographical (sten-ō-graf′i-kal), a. [< stenographic + -al.] Same as stenographic.

stenographically (sten-ō-graf'i-kal-i), adv. In shorthand; by means of stenography.

stenographist (stē-nog'ra-fist), n. [< stenograph-y + -ist.] A stenographer; a shorthand-writer.

stenography (stē-nog'ra-fi), n. [= F. sténographie, < Gr. στενός, narrow, close, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The art of writing by means of brief signs which represent single sounds, groups of sounds, whole words, or groups of words; shorthand; brachygraphy: a generic term embraeing all systems of shorthand, or brief writing.

> The cradle age
> Did throng the Seates, the Boxes, and the Stage
> So much that some by Stenography drew
> The plot: put it in print.
> Heywood, If you Know not Me (Works, ed. Pearson, I. 191).

Sure 'tis Stenographie, everie Character a word, and here and there one for a whole sentence.
Brome, Northern Lass, iii. 2.

Stenonian duct. See Stenson's duct.

stenopaic, stenopæic (sten-ō-pā'ik, -pē'ik), a. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + ὀπή, an opening, + -ic.] Having a small or narrow opening.—Stenopaic slit, a narrow slit in an opaque lamina, placed before an eye to test the degree of its astigmatism by determining the difference of its refraction in different meridians.—Stenopaic spectacles, spectacles having an oval metal plate with a small central aperture.

Stenopelmatus (sten-ō-pel'ma-tus), n. [NL. (Burmeister, 1838), < Gr. στενός, narrow, + πέλμα, the sole of the foot.] A eurious genus of Locustidæ, eontainiug forms known in the western United States as sand-criekets. They are fierce-looking insects with large head and jaws, and live under stones or in burrows in the sand. They are carnivorous, and in New Mexico are commonly but erroneously reputed to be poisonous. Several species are known in the western Sand-cricket (Stenopelmatus fasciatus), about half natural size.

United States, of which S. fasciatus is the commonest. The genus is also represented in Mexico, South America, and Australia.

stenopetalous (sten-ō-pet'a-lus), a. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + πέταλον, a leaf (petal): see petal.] In bot., having narrow petals; narrow-petaled.

stenophyllous (sten-ō-fil'us), a. [< Gr. στενόφυλλος, narrow-leaved, < στενός, narrow, close, + φύλλον, a leaf.] In bot., having narrow leaves.

Stenopsis (stē-nop'sis), n. [NL. (John Cassin, 1851), < Gr. στενός, narrow, + ὄψις, look, appearance.] A genus of South American setirostral goatsuckers, of the family Caprimulgidæ, containing numerous species, as S. cayennensis.

Stenorhynchinæ (sten-ō-ring-kī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Stenorhynchus + -inæ.] A subfamily of Phocidæ, or seals, typified by the genus Stenorhynchus (or Ogmorhinus); the sterrincks. These seals exclusively inhabit southern seas, for Monachus, sometimes considered stenorhynchine, does not belong here. The only genera besides the type are Lobodon, Leptonychotes (or Leptonyx of Gray, not of Swainson), and Ommatophoca. As explained under sea-leopard, the current name is untenable. See cut under sea-leopard.

stenorhynchine (sten-ō-ring'kin), a. [< Stenorhynchus + -ine[1].] Of or pertaining to the Stenorhynchinæ.

stenorhynchous (sten-ō-ring'kus), a. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + ῥύγχος, snout.] In ornith., narrow-billed; having a compressed beak.

Stenorhynchus (sten-ō-ring'kus), n. [NL., < Gr. στενός, narrow, + ῥύγχος, snout.] In zoöl.: (a) A genus of crabs, containing the British spider-crab, S. phalangium: same as Macropodia. Latreille, 1819. (b) A genus of seals. See Stenorhynchinæ. F. Cuvier, 1826. (c) A name of other genera, of birds, reptiles, and insects respectively.

Steno's duct. See Stenson's duct.

stenosed (stē-nōst'), a. [< stenosis + -ed[2].] Characterized by stenosis; morbidly narrowed.

stenosis (stē-nō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. στένωσις, a straitening, < στενοῦν, make narrow, straiten, < στενός, narrow, strait, close.] The pathological narrowing of a passage.

Stenostomata (sten-ō-stō'ma-tä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στενός, narrow, + στόμα(τ-), mouth.] A suborder of ctenophorans, containing the saecate, lobate, and teniate comb-jellies, collectively contrasted with the Eurystomata (which see). Most of the comb-bearers belong to this division.

stenostomatous (sten-ō-stom'a-tus), a. [NL., < Gr. στενός, narrow, + στόμα(τ-), mouth.] Having a small, narrow, or contracted mouth; not eurystomatous. Also stenostomous.

Stenotaphrum (sten-ō-taf'rum), n. [NL. (Trinius, 1820), so called in allusion to the alternate notches of the rachis, in which the flowers are embedded; < Gr. στενός, narrow, + τάφρος, a ditch or trench.] A genus of grasses, of the tribe Paniceæ. It is characterized by flowers with only three glumes or with a fourth smaller one, the spikelets acute, borne in small fascicles sessile or half-immersed in excavations along a flattened or angled rachis. There are 3 or 4 species, very widely dispersed along sea-shores of tropical regions, and most frequent on the islands of the Indian and South Pacific Oceans. They are creeping grasses sending up short ascending and often compressed branches with spreading, flat, or convolute leaves, and a terminal spike of flowers. S. Americanum, locally known as buffalo-grass, is valued as a means of covering shifting sands with a firm turf, and has proved useful as a fodder-plant, especially on Ascension Island. See St. Augustine grass (under saint[1]), and cut under petiole.

stenotelegraphy (sten″ō-tē-leg'ra-fi), n. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + E. telegraphy.] A rapid telegraphic transmission of words and sentenees by a system of shorthand.

stenoterous (stē-not'e-rus), a. [< Gr. στενότερος, compar. of στενός, narrow, strait, close.] Becoming more and more contracted from the center to the circumference, relatively to the radii represented.—Stenoterous map-projection. See projection.

stenotic (stē-not'ik), a. [< stenosis (-ot-) + -ic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of stenosis.

Stenotomus (stē-not'ō-mus), n. [NL. (Gill, 1865), < Gr. στενός, narrow, + τόμος, a cut, slice.] A genus of sparoid fishes, or a section of Diplodus, having the incisor teeth very narrow and entire. The type is S. argyriops, the common scup, scuppaug, or porgy. See cut under scup.

stenotype (sten'ō-tīp), n. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + τύπος, type.] An ordinary type-letter—capital, lower-case, or italic—used to denote a shorthand character or outline. J. E. Munson, Dict. of Phonography, Int.

stenotypic (sten-ō-tip'ik), a. [< stenotype + -ic.] Of or pertaining to stenotypy; printed according to the rules of stenotypy.

stenotypy (sten'ō-tī-pi), n. [< stenotype + -y[3].] A method of representing or describing shorthand characters and outlines by ordinary type-letters. It is used for illustrating phonographic text-books and literature, and also as a system of shorthand for typewriters. Capital letters are used to represent stems; small or lower-case letters stand for adjuncts; and an inverted period shows where a vowel-sound or -sign comes in.

Stenson's duct. 1. The duct of the parotid gland (see parotid): so named from Nil Stenson, or Nicolaus Stenonianus, of Copenhagen (1638–86). Also Stenonian duct, Steno's duct.—2. See duets or canals of Stenson, under duel.

stent[1] (stent), v. and n. An obsolete or dialectal variant of stint.

stent[2] (stent), v. t. [A var. of stend, ult. of extend, after the noun stent[2].] 1. To stretch.—2. To straiten.—3. To confine. [Scoteh in all senses.]

stent[3] (stent), n. [A var. of stend, in def. 2 of extent: see stend, n., stent[2], v., and extent.] 1. A stretcher; a stenter (which see).—2. Extent; limit; in some English mining districts, the limits of a piteh or bargain.

stent[3] (stent), n. [Se. also stant; < ME. stente, estent, taxation, valuation, < ML. extenta, valuation: see extent.] In Scots law, a valuation of property in order to taxation; a taxation; a tax.

stent[3] (stent), v. t. [< stent[3], n.] In Scots law, to assess; tax at a certain rate.

stent[4]† (stent), n. [ME. stent, stopping-place. Cf. Dan. stente, a stile; ult. < stand, v.] A stopping-place.

stent[5] (stent), n. [Origin obscure.] In mining, same as attle[1]. [Rare, Eng.]

stenter (sten'tèr), n. [< stent[2] + -er[1].] A machine or apparatus for stretching or stentering muslins and other thin fabries. Also called stenter-hook.

stenter (sten'tèr), v. t. [< stenter, n.] To operate upon (thin eotton fabries, as book-muslins, etc.) in a manner to impart to them a so-called elastic finish. This work as originally performed by hand was executed by holding the fabric edgewise by the selvages, and pulling it backward and forward while it was subjected to the action of heated air. The various modern machines and frames now employed are designed to produce the same effect upon the goods by an analogous movement and treatment in a current of heated air.

stenting (sten'ting), n. Same as stenton.

stent-master (stent'màs″tèr), n. A person appointed to alloeate the stent or tax on the persons liable. [Scoteh.]

stenton (sten'ton), n. A short heading at right angles to a cross-cut. [North of England coal-fields.]

stentor (sten'tor), n. [< L. Stentor, < Gr. Στέντωρ, a Greek herald in the Trojan war, who, aeeording to Homer, had a voiee as loud as that of fifty other men together.] 1. A person having a very powerful voiee.

> Brutish noises
> (For gain, lust, honour, in litigious prose),
> Are bellow'd out, and cracke the barbarous voices
> Of Turkish stentors.
> Chapman, Iliad, To the Reader, l. 222.

2. In mammal.: (a) The ursino howler, Mycetes ursinus, a platyrrhine monkey of South America; an alouate; any speeies of Mycetes. See cut under howler. (b) [cap.] The genus of howlers: same as Mycetes[1]. Geoffroy, 1812.—3. In Protozoa: (a) A trumpet-animaleule, or so-called funnel-like polyp. (b) [cap.] The typieal genus of Stentoridæ, of elongate, trumpet-like, or infundibuliform figure, with rounded peristome. They are of large size, often brilliant color, social habits, and wide distribution, among the longest- and best-known of infusorians. They were formerly mistaken for or classed with polyps. S. polymorphus is a leading species; S. niger is another. See also cut under Infusoria.

Stentor polymorphus, twenty times natural size.

stentorian (sten-tō'ri-an), a. [< stentor + -i-an. Cf. LL. Stentoreus, Stentorian.] 1. Resembling the voice of Stentor (see stentor, etymology); extremely loud or powerful in sound.

> They echo forth in stentorian clamours.
> Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 326.
>
> He had a stentorian voice, and thundered it out.
> Aubrey, Lives (Ralph Kettle).

2. Able to utter a very loud sound: as, stentorian lungs.

Stentoridæ (sten-tor'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stentor + -idæ.] The trumpet-animaleules or funnel-like infusorians, a family of heterotrichous Infusoria, typified by the genus Stentor.

stentorin (sten'tō-rin), n. [< Stentor + -in[2].] The blue pigment or coloring matter of infusorians of the genus Stentor. E. R. Lankester, 1873.

stentorine (sten'tō-rin), a. [< Stentor + -ine[1].] Of or pertaining to the Stentoridæ.

stentorious† (sten-tō'ri-us), a. [< stentor + -i-ous. Cf. L. Stentoreus, < Gr. Στεντόρειος, pertaining to Stentor, < Στέντωρ, Stentor.] Stentorian. Fuller, Ch. Hist., X. iv. 61.

stentorophonic (sten″tō-rō-fon'ik), a. [< Gr. στεντορόφωνος, loud-voiced like Stentor, < Στέντωρ, Stentor (see stentor), + φωνή, voiee.] Speaking or sounding very loud. S. Butler, Hudibras, III. i. 252.

stent-roll (stent'rōl), n. The eess-roll. [Scotch.]

Stenus (stē'nus), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1796), < Gr. στενός, narrow, strait.] A large and eosmopolitan genus of coleopterous insects, typical of the old family Stenidæ, which is now included in the Staphylinidæ. More than 200 speeies are known, all of small size and active habits, found usually on the banks of streams or ponds.

step (step), v.; pret. and pp. stepped or stept, ppr. stepping. [< (a) ME. steppen, stappen, < AS. steppan, stæppan = OFries. steppa = MD. stepen, stippen, stappen, D. stappen = MLG. stapen = OHG. stephan, stephen, steffen, stepfen, MHG. stepfen, also OHG. staphōn, MHG. staphen, staffen, stapfen, go, step; secondary forms (in part from the noun) of (b) ME. stapen, < AS. stapan* (not found in the inf., for which appears the form steppan or stæppan, above, which has the same pret. stōp, pp. stapen) = OS. stapan = OFries. stapa = MLG. stapen, go, advanee; Teut. √ stap, appearing nasalized in stamp, q. v.; cf. Russ. stopa, footstep, sole of the foot; Skt. √ stambh, prop, make firm; ult. < √ sta, stand: see stand.] I. intrans. 1. To move the legs and feet as in walking; advance or recede by a movement of the foot or feet: as, to step forward; to step backward; to step up or down.

> Alayn, for Goddes banes,
> Stepe on thy feet; com out, man, al at anes.
> Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 154.
>
> He pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on. Shak., T. N., iii. 4. 306.
>
> 'Tis done—he steps into the welcome chaise.
> Cowper, Retirement, l. 391.

2. To go; walk; march; especially, to go a short distance: as, to step to a neighbor's house.

> He myghte nother stappe ne stonde tyl he a staf hadde.
> Piers Plowman (C), vii. 463.

Pray you, let 's step in, and see a friend of mine.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, iv. 6.

O, if you please, miss, would you step and speak to Mr. Jarndyce?
Dickens, Bleak House, xlv.

3. To advance as if by chance or suddenly; come (in).

By whose death he 's stepp'd
Into a great estate. Shak., T. of A., ii. 2. 232.

The old poets step in to the assistance of the medalist.
Addison, Ancient Medals, i.

4. To walk slowly, gravely, or with dignity.

The meteor of a splendid season, she . . .
Stept thro' the stately minuet of those days.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

5. To go in imagination; advance or recede mentally: as, to step back to the England of Elizabeth.

They are stepping almost three thousand years backward into the remotest antiquity. Pope, Iliad, Pref.

To step aside. (a) To walk to a little distance; retire for the occasion. (b) To deviate from the right path; err.

To step aside is human. Burns, To the Unco Guid.

To step awry. See awry.—To step out, to increase the length of the step and the rapidity of motion.

Jack or Donald marches away, . . . stepping out briskly to the tune of "The Girl I left behind me."
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxx.

II. trans. 1. To set; plant, as in stepping: as, step your foot on this thwart; he has never stepped foot in the city. [Familiar.]—2. To measure by stepping: as, to step off the distance.—3. To perform by stepping, as a dance: as, he stepped a stately galliard.—4. To place or set (two or more cutting-tools) in a tool-post or -rest in such manner that they simultaneously make successive cuts each respectively deeper than the preceding one, so that these cuts present the appearance of a series of ledges or steps.—5. Naut., to fix the foot of (a mast) in its step, as in readiness for setting sail.

step (step), n. [< ME. steppe, < AS. stæpe, a step, footstep, = MD. stuppe, steppe, stap, step, D. stap = OHG. stapfo, staffo, MHG. G. stapfe (> It. staffa, a stirrup, > ult. E. staffier), a footstep, footprint; from the verb.] 1. A pace; a completed movement made in raising the foot and setting it down again, as in walking, running, or dancing.

I'll . . . turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shak., M. of V., iii. 4. 67.

An inadvertent step may crush the snail.
Cowper, Task, vi. 564.

Hence—2. In the plural, walk; passage; course or direction in which one goes by walking.

Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree
In this deep forest. Dryden, Æneid, vi. 276.

But not by thee my steps shall be,
For ever and for ever.
Tennyson, A Farewell.

3. A support for the foot in ascending or descending: as, steps cut in a glacier; a structure or an appliance used to facilitate mounting from one level to another, whether alone or as one of a series: as, a stone step (a block of stone having a horizontal surface for the foot); a step of a staircase (one of the gradients composed of the tread and riser taken together); the step of a ladder (one of the rungs or rounds, or one of the treads or foot-pieces in a step-ladder).

The breadth of every single step or stair [should] be never less than one foot. Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 36.

An hundred winding steps convey That conclave to the upper day.
Scott, Marmion, ii. 33.

On the step of the altar, in front of the railing, were kneeling a band of the Fratres Penitentiæ.
C. E. Norton, Travel and Study in Italy, p. 6.

Specifically—(a) pl. A step-ladder. Also called pair of steps and set of steps. (b) A foot-piece for entering or alighting from a vehicle.

4. The space passed over or measured by one movement of the foot, as in walking; the distance between the feet in walking when both feet are on the ground; a half-pace.

If you move a step
Beyond this ground you tread on, you are lost.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, v. 3.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace. Arbuthnot.

5. An inconsiderable space; a short distance; a distance easily walked.

'Tis but a step, sir, just at the street's end.
Cowper, To Joseph Hill, Esq.

It is but a step from here to the Wells, and we can walk there. Thackeray, Book of Snobs, xxxv.

6. Gradation; degree.

The Turkes . . . studie their prophane Diuinitie and Law, and haue among them nine seuerall steps or degrees vnto the highest dignitie. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 313.

7. Degree in progress or advance; particularly, a forward move; gain or advantage; promotion; rise; a grade, as of rank.

Every age makes a step unto the end of all things.
Sir T. Browne, To a Friend.

To earn a garter or a step in the peerage.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xxii.

"General Tufto . . . and I were both shot in the same leg at Talavera." "Where you got your step," said George [punning]. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxviii.

The Silver Bill of 1890 . . . was declared to be a long step toward the goal of free coinage of silver.
New York Times, Jan. 15, 1891.

8. Print or impression of the foot; footprint; footstep; track.

And zit apperen the Steppes of the Asses feet, in 3 places of the Degrees, that ben of fulle harde Ston.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 81.

He seigh the steppes brode of a leoun.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 829.

9. Gait; manner of walking; sound of the step; foot; footfall: as, to hear a step at the door.

A foot more light, a step more true,
Ne'er from the heath-flower dash'd the dew.
Scott, L. of the L., i. 18.

10. A proceeding, or one of a series of proceedings; measure; action: as, a rash step; to take prompt steps to prevent something.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath deprived me of your grace and favour.
Shak., Lear, i. 1. 231.

Beware of desp'rate steps. The darkest day,
Live till to-morrow, will have pass'd away.
Cowper, The Needless Alarm.

11. Naut., a socket of wood or metal, or, in large ships, a solid platform on the keelson, supporting the heel of a mast.—12. In carp., any piece of timber having the foot of another fixed upright in it.—13. In mach.: (a) The lower brass of a journal-box or pillow-block. (b) A socket or bearing for the lower pivot of a spindle or vertical shaft.—14. In music: (a) Same as degree, whether of the scale or of the staff. (b) The interval between two successive degrees of the scale, degrees of the staff, or keys of the keyboard. In the scale, a whole step is a major second, or tone, and a half-step a minor second, or semitone; and the same nomenclature is transferred to the staff and the keyboard. The successive steps between the normal tones of a scale, whether whole or half, are collectively called diatonic; while intervals involving other tones are called chromatic.—Out of step, not keeping step.—Pair of steps, set of steps, a step-ladder, especially one for indoor use.—Step by step, (a) By gradual and regular process. Locke, Human Understanding, ii. 9. (b) With equal pace; at the same rate of progress. Shak., Tempest, iii. 3. 78.—To break step. See break.—To keep step, to walk or march in unison; put the right and left foot forward alternately at the same moment with the corresponding foot of another person; often followed by with.—To keep step to, to walk, march, or dance in time to; as, to keep step to the music.—To take a step, or to take steps, to make a movement in a certain direction, either actually or as beginning any business; take initiatory measures; institute proceedings.

Steps in Timber-work.

step- (step). [< ME. step-, < AS. steóp-, as in steóp-bearn, stepchild (-bairn), steóp-cild, stepchild, steóp-fæder, stepfather, steóp-mōdor, stepmother, etc., = OFries. stiap-, stiep- = D. stief- = MLG. stēf-, LG. steef- = OHG. stiuf-, stiof-, MHG. G. stief- = Icel. stjūp- = Sw. stjuf-, styf- = Dan. stif-, stiv-, sted-: prob. lit. 'orphaned,' as in AS. steópcild, steópbearn, stepchild, steópsunu, stepson, etc., which are prob. the oldest compounds, the correlative compounds, steópfæder, stepfather, etc., being formed later, when the prefix steóp- was taken appar. in some such sense as 'subsequent,' 'nominal,' or 'in law'; < steópan*, found only as in comp., and in the secondary weak form, in comp. ā-stȳpan*, āstēpan*, in pp. pl. āsteápte, āstēpte, orphaned, = OHG. stiufan, ar-stiufan, bi-stiufan, deprive of parents, orphan.] A prefix used in composition before father, mother, son, daughter, brother, sister, child, etc., to indicate that the person spoken of is a connection only by the marriage of a parent.

step-back (step'bak), a. [Irreg. < step- + back[1].] Noting the relationship a deceased person bears to his widow's child by a second marriage. [Rare.]

Richard is Henry's step-back father.
The Nation, Aug. 23, 1888, p. 153.

stepbairn (step'bārn), n. [< ME. steopbern, < AS. steópbearn (= Icel. stjūpbarn = Sw. styfbarn = Dan. stifbarn), < steóp-, step-, + bearn, child: see step- and barn[2], bairn.] A stepchild. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

step-bit (step'bit), n. A notched key-bit.

step-box (step'boks), n. A box or casing to inclose the base of an upright spindle or shaft-step, to retain the shaft in place and furnish a bearing, and to hold the lubricant.

stepbrother (step'bruᵺ'ėr), n. [< ME. stepbrother, stepbroder, < AS. steópbrōthor* (= D. stiefbroeder = MHG. stiefbruoder, G. stiefbruder = Sw. styfbroder = Dan. stifbroder), < steóp-, step-, + brōthor, brother: see step- and brother.] One's stepfather's or stepmother's son by a former marriage.

stepchild (step'chīld), n. [< ME. stepchild, < AS. steópcild (= OFries. steifkind = D. stiefkind = OHG. stiufchint, MHG. stiefkint, G. stiefkind), < steóp-, step-, + cild, child: see step- and child.] The child of one's husband or wife by a former marriage.

step-country (step'kunᵛtri), n. A country that rears or receives and protects one born in another country. The speaker in the following quotation is an Italian brought up in Sweden:

Farewell, my father—farewell, my step-country.
Disraeli, Contarini Fleming, ii. 4.

step-cover (step'kuvᵛėr), n. On a vehicle, a lid or protecting cover over a step. It is usually so fitted that the opening of the door moves the cover to one side and uncovers the step, or causes it, by a hinge or other device, to turn back out of the way.

step-cut (step'kut), n. Same as trap-cut (which see, under cut).

stepdame (step'dām), n. [Formerly also stepdam; < step- + dame.] A stepmother.

Phryxus . . . with his sister Helle fled from their cruell stepdam Ino. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 341.

step-dance (step'dâns), n. A dance marked by originality, variety, or difficulty in the steps; a dance in which the steps are more important than the figure, as a hornpipe or a clog-dance: usually a pas seul.

Orth'ris began rowlin' his eyes an' crackin' his fingers an' dancin' a step-dance for to impress the Headman.
Rudyard Kipling, The Taking of Lungtungpen.

stepdaughter (step'dâᵛtėr), n. [< ME. stepdoughter, stepdoghter, stepdongter, stepdowter, < AS. steópdohtor (= D. stiefdochter = MLG. stēfdoechter = MHG. stiuftochter, G. stieftochter = Icel. stjūpdōttir = Sw. styfdotter = Dan. stifdatter), < steóp-, step-, + dohtor, daughter: see step- and daughter.] A daughter of one's husband or wife by a former marriage.

After hir com the stepdoughter of Cleodalis, that hight also Gomore. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 453.

stepet, a. A Middle English form of steep[1].

stepfather (step'fäᵛᵺėr), n. [< ME. stepfader, stepfadyr, corruptly stifadre, < AS. steópfæder (= OFries. stiapfeder, stiepfader = D. stiefvader = MLG. stēfvadere = OHG. stiuffater, stioffater, MHG. G. stiefvater = Icel. stjūpfadir = Sw. styffader = Dan. stiffader), < steóp-, step-, + fæder, father: see step- and father.] A man who is the husband of one's mother, but is not one's father.

I schel the telle altogadre, Betcn Ichaue me stifadre.
Beves of Hamtoun, l. 464.

"He was delighted at his mother's marriage." "Odd, for he knew already what a stepfather was."
Jean Ingelow, Off the Skelligs, xvii.

step-fault (step'fâlt), n. One of a series of small, nearly parallel faults by which strata have been dislocated so as to occupy a position resembling a series of steps or stairs.

step-gage (step'gāj), n. A gage, arranged in the form of steps, for testing and correcting fixed caliper-gages, etc. See cut under gage[2].

step-grate (step'grāt), n. See grate[2].

stephane (stef'a-nē), n. [< Gr. στεφάνη, the brim of a helmet, a stephane (see def.), crown. Cf. στέφανος, a wreath, garland, crown: see stephanos.] In Gr. archæol., a head-dress or ornament consisting of a band or coronet typically high in the middle, over the brow, and diminishing toward either side of the head. It is characteristic of the goddess Hera, though often represented as worn by other goddesses, as well as by mortals, and is frequently ornamented with an anthemion, as in the example figured on the following page.

stephanial (ste-fā'ni-al), a. [< stephanion + -al.] Of or pertaining to the stephanion: as, a stephanial point.

stephanic (ste-fan'ik), a. [< Gr. στέφανος, a wreath, crown: see stephanos.] Same as stephanial.

Hera Ludovisi, wearing Stephane.

The arch of the top of the cranium is markedly flat, giving the stephanic region a somewhat angular appearance.
H. O. Forbes, Eastern Archipelago, p. 262.

stephanion (ste-fā′ni-on), n.; pl. stephania (-ä). [NL., < Gr. στεφάνιον, dim. of στέφανος, a wreath: see stephanos.] In craniom., the point where the coronal suture crosses the temporal ridge. An upper stephanion and a lower are distinguished, corresponding to the upper and lower temporal ridges. See cut under craniometry.

stephanite (stef′an-īt), n. [Named after Stephan, Archduke of Austria.] A native sulphid of silver and antimony, a mineral of iron-black color and metallic luster. It crystallizes in the orthorhombic system, and is often pseudohexagonal through twinning. Also called black silver or brittle silver ore.

stephanome (stef′a-nōm), n. [For stephanonome*, < Gr. στέφανος, crown (corona), + νέμειν, take, νόμος, law.] An instrument for measuring the angular dimensions of fog-bows—for example, as observed at mountain observatories. See the quotation.

This instrument, named a stephanome, consists of a graduated bar, at one end of which the eye is placed, and in which slides a cross-bar carrying certain projections. With its aid faint objects, for which a sextant would be useless, may be measured to within 5 minutes.
Phil. Mag., 5th ser., XXIX. 454.

Stephanophorus (stef-a-nof′ō-rus), n. [NL. (Strickland, 1841), < Gr. στεφανοφόρος, < στέφανος, crown, + φέρειν = E. bear[1].] 1. In ornith., a monotypic Neotropical genus of tanagers, having a short, turgid, almost pyrrhuline bill. S. leucocephalus is bluish-black, with the lesser wing-coverts blue, the vertical crest crimson, the hindhead silky-white, the forehead, lores, and chin black. The length is seven inches. The bird is confined to southern Brazil, Paraguay, Uruguay, and northern parts of the Argentine Republic.

Stephanophorus leucocephalus.

2. In entom., a genus of coleopterous insects. Chevrolat, 1873.

stephanos (stef′a-nos), n.; pl. stephanoi (-noi). [< Gr. στέφανος, a wreath, crown, < στέφειν, put around, encircle, wreathe, crown. Cf. stemma.] In Gr. archæol.: (a) A wreath awarded as a prize to the victor in a public contest, or as a token of honor, especially in recognition of some public service. Such wreaths were sometimes of natural leaves, as of the olive, laurel, oak, parsley, or pine, and sometimes of leaves of metal, as gold, and their award was a very usual distinction among the Greeks. In this sense very commonly expressed by the translators as 'crown,' as in the famous oration "On the Crown" of Demosthenes. (b) A head-ornament or crown akin to the stephane, from which it differs in that it preserves the same height all round, instead of diminishing toward the sides. See cut in preceding column.

Stephanos (b).
Head of Hera on Silver Stater of Elis; 5th century B.C.

Stephanotis (stef-a-nō′tis), n. [NL. (Thouars, 1806), so called in allusion to the corona of five flattish petaloid bodies or auricles; < Gr. στέφανος, a crown, + οὖς (ὠτ-), ear.] 1. A genus of asclepiadaceous plants, of the tribe Marsdenieæ, distinguished from Marsdenia by its large white salver-shaped or funnelform corolla. There are about 14 species, of which 5 are natives of Madagascar, 5 of the Malay archipelago and southern China, 3 of Cuba, and 1 of Peru. They are smooth shrubby twiners, often high-climbing, bearing opposite deep-green fleshy or coriaceous leaves, and beautiful fragrant waxy flowers in umbelliform cymes between the petioles. The cylindrical corolla-tube is dilated at the base and often again at the throat, and spreads into five overlapping oblique lobes. The fruit consists of two thick horizontal follicles, with numerous comose seeds. S. floribunda is a favorite evergreen greenhouse climber, commonly known by its generic name stephanotis, also as waxflower, and sometimes, from its native country, as Madagascar jasmine or chaplet-flower.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

step-ladder (step′lad″ėr), n. A ladder having flat steps, or treads, in place of rungs, and usually provided with an adjustable supporting frame.

stepmother (step′muтн″ėr), n. [< ME. stepmoder, stepmodyr, < AS. stēopmōdor (= OFries. stiepmoder = D. stiefmoeder = MLG. stēfmoder = OHG. stiufmuoter, MHG. stiefmuoter, G. stiefmutter = Icel. stjūpmōdhir = Sw. styfmoder = Dan. stifmoder), < steóp-, step-, + mōdor, mother.] 1. A woman who is the wife of one's father, but is not one's mother.

> No, be assured you shall not find me, daughter,
> After the slander of most stepmothers,
> Evil-eyed unto you. Shak., Cymbeline, i. 1. 71.

2. A horny filament shooting up by the side of the nail. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—3. The pansy. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names. [Prov. Eng.]—Stepmother's blessing, a hangnail. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stepmotherly (step′muтн″ėr-li), a. [< stepmother + -ly[1].] Pertaining to or befitting a stepmother; hence, figuratively, harsh or neglectful: in allusion to the behavior popularly attributed to stepmothers.

step-parent (step′pâr″ent), n. A stepfather or stepmother.

steppe (step), n. [= F. D. G. Dan. steppe = Sw. stepp, < Russ. stepĭ, a waste, heath, steppe.] A more or less level tract devoid of trees: a name given to certain parts of European and Asiatic Russia, of which the most characteristic feature is the absence of forests. The word steppe was introduced into the scientific literature of western Europe by Humboldt, in whose "Ansichten der Natur"—a work widely circulated, and translated into all the most important European languages—there is a chapter entitled "Steppen und Wüsten" (Steppes and Deserts). The steppe region in Europe begins on the borders of Holland, and extends through northern Germany—where such lands are called Heiden (heaths)—into Russia in Europe, and beyond the Ural Mountains almost to the Pacific Ocean, for a distance of about 4,500 miles. Although the steppes are in general characterized by the lack of an arboreal and the presence of a grassy vegetation, and by a pretty uniformly level surface, there are many breaks in this botanical and topographical monotony, in the form of forests extending along the streams, large patches of dense and sometimes tall shrubbery, lakes (both fresh and saline), rolling hills, ridges, barren sands, and patches covered with saline efflorescence. The general character of the region is pastoral, and the population (especially of the Asiatic steppes) nomadic; but all this has been to a considerable extent interfered with by the spread of Russian civilization and the domination of Russian authority. The Russian and Siberian steppes pass southward into the deserts of central Asia, and northward into the tundra region of the extreme north. Humboldt, in the work named above, occasionally uses the term steppe in describing the pampas and llanos of South America, and the plains, prairies, and barrens of the northern division of the New World, and his example has been followed to a certain extent by other physical geographers writing in regard to America; but the word steppe is nowhere in popular use except as to places where Russian is the dominating language.

Some of the Asiatic Steppes are grassy plains; others are covered with succulent, evergreen, articulated soda-plants: many glisten from a distance with flakes of exuded salt which cover the clayey soil, not unlike in appearance to fresh fallen snow.
Humboldt, Aspects of Nature (trans.).

Steppe murrain, rinderpest.

stepped (stept), a. [< step + -ed[2].] 1. Formed in or forming a step or a series of steps.—2. Supported, as a vertical shaft, by a step, step-like bearing, or shoe.—Stepped cone. Same as cone-pulley.—Stepped gable, gage, gearing. See the nouns.—Stepped pyramid, a form of pyramid of which the faces, instead of continuing in one slope from base to apex, Stepped Pyramid, Sakkarah, Egypt.

are formed in a more or less even series of enormous steps. Some of the oldest of the Egyptian pyramids present this form.

stepper (step′ėr), n. [< step + -er[1].] One who or that which steps (with a certain gait or carriage expressed or implied); specifically, a fast horse: often in composition: as, a high-stepper; that horse is a good stepper.

The mare's a stepper, and Phil King knows how to handle the ribbons. The Century, XXXVIII. 377.

stepping (step′ing), n. 1. Collectively, the steps of a joint in which the parts at their junction form a series of reëntrant angles, thus resembling a flight of steps, as in the fitting of the doors to the front frames of safes.—2. Collectively, a series of step-like bearings, as the bearings for the spindles of a spinning-frame or spooling-machine, or of a ball-winding machine.

stepping-point (step′ing-point), n. Same as bearding, 1.

stepping-stone (step′ing-stōn), n. 1. A raised stone in a stream or in a swampy place designed to save the feet in walking.—2. A horse-block. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—3. An aid or means by which an end may be accomplished or an object gained; an assistance to progress.

stepsister (step′sis″tėr), n. [< ME. stepsystyr (= D. stiefzuster = MHG. G. stiefschwester = Sw. styfsyster = Dan. stifsoster); < step- + sister.] One's stepfather's or stepmother's daughter by a former marriage.

stepson (step′sun), n. [< ME. stepsone, stepsune, < AS. steópsunu (= D. stiefzoon = MLG. stēfsone = OHG. stiufsun, MHG. stiefsun, G. stiefsohn = Icel. stjūpson = Sw. styfson = Dan. stifsön), < steóp-, step-, + sunu, son.] A son of one's husband or wife by a former marriage.

step-stone (step′stōn), n. Same as stepping-stone. [Rare.]

step-vein (step′vān), n. In mining, a vein filling a fissure, consisting alternately of flats, or horizontal, and steeply inclined or vertical parts, resembling in form a flight of steps.

-ster. [< ME. -ster, -stre, -estre, -estere, < AS. -estre, used fem. of -ere, as in webbestre, a female weaver (E. webster), fithelstre, a female fiddler, witegestre, a female prophet, etc.; = D. -ster, as in spinster, a female spinner (= E. spinster), etc., = LL. -ster, as in poetaster (see -aster, poetaster, criticaster, etc.), also in olcaster; < Indo-Eur. -as- + -tar.] A termination denoting occupation, as in maltster, gamester, spinster, songster, etc. In the earliest times, and up to about the end of the thirteenth century, it was generally the sign of the feminine gender, corresponding to the masculine -ere or -er. In the fourteenth century it began to give place as a feminine termination to the Norman -ess, with which it was later often combined, as in seamstress, sempstress, songstress, or, if it survived, was used chiefly as masculine, and took on new meanings of contempt or depreciation, as in trickster, gamester, punster, etc., or indicated simple agency or existence, as in deemster, doomster, huckster, tapster, teamster, upholster, roadster, youngster, etc. Some of the older nouns with this suffix survive as surnames, as Baxter, Webster, Sangster, Dempster, etc.

ster. An abbreviation of sterling[2].

steraclet, n. [Early mod. E., also sterracle, sterakel; < ME. steracle; origin obscure.] A strange thing, sight, or performance; a prank.

> Whan thou art sett upon the pynnacle,
> Thou xalt ther pleyn a qweynt steracle,
> Or ellys shewe a grett merscle,
> Thysself ffrom hurte thou save.
> Coventry Mysteries, p. 208. (Halliwell.)

stercobilin (stėr′kō-bil-in), n. [< L. stercus (stercor-), dung, + bilis, bile, + -in[2].] The brown coloring matter of the feces.

stercoraceous (stėr-kō-rā′shius), a. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung, + -aceous.] 1. Pertaining to, composed of, or in any way resembling dung, ordure, or feces; excrementitious; fecal.—2. In entam., frequenting or feeding on dung, as many beetles, flies, etc.—Stercoraceous vomiting, in pathol., vomiting of fecal matter.

stercoræmia, n. See stercoremia.

stercoral (stėr′kō-ral), a. and n. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung, + -al.] I. a. Of or pertaining to feces; stercoraceous.

II.† n. Dung; excrement.

Stercoranism (stėr′kō-ran-izm), n. [< Stercoran-ist + -ism.] In eccles. hist., the doctrine or belief of the Stercoranists. Also Stercorianism, Stercorarianism.

Stercoranist (stėr′kō-ran-ist), n. [= F. stercoraniste, < ML. Stercoranistæ, < L. stercus (-or-), dung.] A name applied by opponents to various persons in the church who were said to hold a grossly materialistic conception of the Lord's Supper. They were alleged to believe that the Lord's body was, like other food consumed, digested and evacuated. The word was first used by Cardinal Humbert in 1054. Also Stercorianist, Stercorarian.

stercorareous (stėr-kō-rā′rē-us), a. Same as stercoraceous.

Stercorarian (stėr-kō-rā′ri-an), n. [< L. stercorarius, pertaining to dung (< stercus (-or-), dung), + -an.] Same as Stercoranist.

Stercorarianism (stėr-kō-rā′ri-an-izm), n. [< Stercorarian + -ism.] Same as Stercoranism.

Stercorariinæ (stėr-kō-rā-ri-ī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Stercorarius + -inæ.] The dung-hunters, a subfamily of Laridæ, typified by the genus Stercorarius: same as Lestridinæ. See cuts under skua and Stercorarius.

Stercorarius (stėr-kō-rā′ri-us), n. [NL. (Brisson, 1760), < L. stercorarius, pertaining to dung: see stercorary.] The dung-hunters, skuas, or jägers, a genus of Laridæ, typical of the subfamily Stercorariinæ. Also called Lestris. The name is used (a) for all the species of the subfamily; (b) for the larger species, as S. skua, the smaller being called Lestris (see cut under skua); (c) for the smaller species, S.

Parasitic Jäger (Stercorarius parasiticus).

pomatorhinus, S. parasiticus, and others, the larger being called Buphagus or Megalestris.

stercorary (stėr′kō-rā-ri), a. and n. [< L. stercorarius, pertaining to dung (ML. neut. stercorarium*, a place for dung), < stercus (stercor-), dung.] I. a. Pertaining or relating to dung or manure; consisting of dung. D. G. Mitchell, Wet Days, p. 17.

II. n.; pl. stercoraries (-riz). A place, properly secured from the weather, for containing dung.

stercorate (stėr′kō-rāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. stercorated, ppr. stercorating. [< L. stercoratus, pp. of stercorare, dung, manure, < stercus (-or-), dung.] To manure or dung. Scott, Pirate, iv.

stercorate† (stėr′kō-rāt), n. [< stercorate, v.] Dung; excrement. Imp. Dict.

stercoration† (stėr-kō-rā′shon), n. [< L. stercoratio(n-), a dunging or manuring, < stercorare, pp. stercoratus, dung, manure, < stercus (-or-), dung.] The act of manuring with dung. Evelyn, To Mr. Wotton.

stercoremia, stercoræmia (stėr-kō-rō′mi-ą), n. [NL. stercoræmia, < L. stercus (-or-), dung, + Gr. αἷμα, blood.] Contamination of the blood from retained feces.

Stercorianism, Stercorianist (stėr-kō′ri-an-izm, -ist). Same as Stercoranism, Stercoranist.

stercoricolous (stėr-kō-rik′ō-lus), a. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung, + colere, inhabit.] Inhabiting excrement; dwelling in dung. Encye. Brit., XIX. 842.

Stercorist (stėr′kō-rist), n. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung, + -ist.] A Stercoranist.

stercorite (stėr′kō-rīt), n. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung, + -ite[2].] A hydrous phosphate of ammonium and sodium, found in guano on the island Ichaboe, off the west coast of Africa.

stercory† (stėr′kō-ri), n. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung.] Excrement; dung. Mir. for Mags., III. 246.

Sterculia (stėr-kū′li-ą), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), so called from the fetid flowers or fruit of certain species; < L. Sterculius, a deity so named, < stercus (stercor-), excrement.] 1. A genus of plants, type of the order Sterculiaceæ and of the tribe Sterculieæ. It is characterized by a stamen-column usually with fifteen anthers crowded without regular order, a five-celled ovary with two or more Flowering Branch of Sterculia platanifolia.

a, a male flower; b, the same before anthesis; c, the stamens; d, the fruit.

ovules in each cell, and a fruit of distinct spreading dehiscent carpels. There are about 85 species, natives of warm climates, especially of tropical Asia. They are most commonly large trees, with simple feather-veined leaves, and unisexual flowers in drooping panicles, with a colored bell-shaped calyx, and a fruit of five radiating woody follicles opening on the upper edge; but none of these characters is universal. Their inner bark is composed of a tough fiber which is not affected by moisture, and is in many species a valuable material for cordage, mats, bags, paper, or tow for upholstering. Their seeds are filled with an oil which may be used for lamps, and are slightly acrid but often edible. They are mucilaginous, and often exude an abundance of gum resembling gum tragacanth, swelling into a jelly in cold water without dissolving. S. urens, and perhaps other species, furnish a share of the Indian tragacanth, or kuteera gum; S. Tragacantha of western Africa yields the African or Senegal tragacanth. S. acerifolia of New South Wales, a large tree sometimes 80 feet high and 8 feet in girth, with large lobed leaves and racemes of showy red flowers, is known as flame-tree, and also as lacebark from its beautiful lace-like inner bark, which becomes 2 inches thick and is valued for many uses. S. diversifolia, the Victorian bottle-tree, or currijong, is a stout tree with coarser fiber: for the similar S. rupestris, see bottle-tree, and for S. villosa, see oadal. S. lurida, the sycamore of New South Wales, also yields a fiber, there made into fancy articles. S. quadrifida, the calool of eastern and northern Australia, produces clusters of brilliant scarlet fruits, each with ten or eleven black seeds resembling filberts in taste, and eaten as a substitute for them. S. Carthayinensis (S. Chicha), the chicha or panama, yields seeds eaten as nuts in Brazil and northward; it is a handsome tree with yellowish purple-spotted flowers. S. fœtida (see stavewood) is the source of some native remedies in Java. S. alata has been called Buddha's cocoanut; S. platanifolia of Japan and China, sultan's parasol. See mahoe and cassoumba.

2. In entom., a genus of coleopterous insects. Laporte, 1835.

Sterculiaceæ (stėr-kū-li-ā′sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Ventenat, 1799), < Sterculia + -aceæ.] An order of polypetalous plants, of the cohort Malvales, intermediate between the two orders Malvaceæ and Tiliaceæ, resembling the former in its variety of habit and foliage and its frequently monadelphous stamens, and the latter in its two-celled anthers. It includes about 730 species, belonging to 49 genera, classed in 8 tribes, natives mostly of the tropics, or occurring further to the south in Africa and Australia.

sterculiaceous (stėr-kū-li-ā′shius), a. Of or pertaining to the plant-order Sterculiaceæ.

sterculiad (stėr-kū′li-ad), n. A plant of the order Sterculiaceæ. Lindley.

Sterculieæ (stėr-kū-lī′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1824), < Sterculia + -eæ.] A tribe of plants, of the order Sterculiaceæ. It is characterized by unisexual or polygamous flowers without petals, commonly with a colored calyx, and five to fifteen anthers adnate at the summit of a long or short column of united filaments, and either crowded or arranged in a definite series or a ring. It includes 8 genera, of which Sterculia is the type. They are natives mostly of tropical Asia and Africa, extending into Australia and Java. See Sterculia.

stere[1]†. A Middle English form of steer[1], steer[2], stir[1], stoor[2].

stere[2] (stār), n. [= F. stère, < Gr. στερεός, solid, cubic; prob. < √ sta as in ἱστάναι, stand.] A cubic meter: the French unit for solid measure, equal to 35.31 cubic feet. The word stere is but little used, except with reference to cordwood, cubic meter being the expression in universal use for the solid unit.

Sterelmintha† (ster-el-min′thą), n. pl. [NL., irreg. < Gr. στερεός, stiff, hard, solid, + ἕλμινς (ἑλμινθ-), a worm.] The parenchymatous endoparasitic worms, having no intestinal canal. They formed one of two main divisions, the other being Cœlelmintha, into which the Entozoa were divided by Owen in 1843, corresponding to the parenchymatous intestinal worms or vers intestinaux parenchymateux of Cuvier. They are such as the cestoid and trematoid worms, or tapes and flukes.

sterelminthic (ster-el-min′thik), a. [< Sterelmintha + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the Sterelmintha.

sterelminthous (ster-el-min′thus), a. Same as sterelminthic.

stereo- (ster′ē-ō, also, especially in trade use, stē′rē-ō). An element of Greek origin, meaning 'solid.'

stereo (ster′ē-ō), n. and a. [Short for stereotype.] Same as stereotype: as, a stereo plate; stereo apparatus.

stereobate (ster′ē-ō-bāt), n. [= F. stéréobate, < Gr. στερεός, solid, firm, + βατός, verbal adj. of βαίνειν, go, step: see base[2].] In arch., the substructure, foundation, or solid platform upon which a building is erected. In columnar buildings it includes the stylobate, which is the uppermost step or platform of the foundation upon which the columns stand.

Stereobate of the Parthenon, east front (illustrating the convex curvature of the best Greek Doric temple-foundations).

stereobatic (ster″ē-ō-bat′ik), a. [< stereobate + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or resembling a stereobate; of the character of a stereobate. Encye. Brit., II. 408.

stereoblastula (ster″ē-ō-blas′tū-lą), n.; pl. stereoblastulæ (-lē). [NL., < Gr. στερεός, solid, + βλαστός, a germ.] A solid blastula; a blastula in which there is no cavity. J. A. Ryder.

stereochrome (ster′ē-ō-krōm), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + χρῶμα, color.] A stereochromic picture. See stereochromy.

stereochromic (ster″ē-ō-krō′mik), a. [< stereochrom-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to stereochromy; produced by stereochromy.—Stereochromic process, the method of painting by stereochromy.

stereochromy (ster′ē-ō-krō-mi), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + χρῶμα, color.] A method of painting in which water-glass serves as the connecting medium between the color and its substratum.

stereo-clumps (ster′ē-ō-klumps), n. pl. [< stereo + clump.] Sectional blocks of type-metal or wood, usually three fourths of an inch high, made of different sizes so that they can be combined to fit and uphold any size of stereotype plate. When clamps are added, they keep the plate secure in the process of printing. [Eng.]

stereo-electric (ster′ē-ō-ē-lek′trik), a. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + E. electric.] Noting the electric current which ensues when two solids, especially two metals, as bismuth and antimony, are brought together at different temperatures.

stereogastrula (ster′ē-ō-gas′trŏ-lą), n.; pl. stereogastrulæ (-lē). [NL., < Gr. στερεός, solid, + NL. gastrula, q. v.] A solid gastrula; a form of gastrula in which no cleavage-cavity is developed. J. A. Ryder.

Stereognathus (ster-ē-og′nā-thus), n. [NL. (Charlesworth, 1854), < Gr. στερεός, solid, + γνάθος, jaw.] A genus of fossil mammals of problematical character from the Lower Oölite of Oxfordshire, England, later identified with Microlestes. The original fossil was named S. oölitieus.

stereogram (ster′ē-ō-gram), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + γράμμα, a writing, < γράφειν, write: see gram[2].] A diagram or picture which represents objects in such a way as to give the impression of relief or solidity; specifically, a double photographic picture or a pair of pictures mounted together for the stereoscope; a stereoscopic picture.

stereograph (ster′ē-ō-graf), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + γράφειν, write.] Same as stereogram.

stereographic (ster″ē-ō-graf′ik), a. [= F. stéréographique; as stereograph-y + -ic.] Showing the whole of a sphere on the whole of an infinite plane, while preserving the angles.—Stereographic map-projection. See projection.

stereographical (ster″ē-ō-graf′i-kal), a. [< stereographic + -al.] Same as stereographic.

stereographically (ster″ē-ō-graf′i-kal-i), adv. In a stereographic manner; by delineation on a plane.

stereography (ster-ē-og′ra-fi), n. [= F. stéréographie, < Gr. στερεός, solid, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The art of delineating the forms of solid bodies on a plane; a branch of solid geometry which demonstrates the properties and shows the construction of all solids which are regularly defined.

Stereolepis (ster-ē-ol′e-pis), n. [NL. (Ayres, 1859), < Gr. στερεός, solid, + λεπίς, a scale.] 1. A genus of serranoid fishes of enormous size in comparison with related forms. S. gigas, the jew-fish or black sea-bass of the Californian coast, reaches a Jew-fish (Stereolepis gigas).

length of 5 feet. It is brownish- or greenish-black with large black blotches, most evident in the young.

2. [l. c.] A fish of this genus.

stereome (ster′ē-ōm), n. [< Gr. στερέωμα, a solid body, < στερεός, solid.] In bot., a name proposed by Schwendener for those elements which impart strength to a fibrovascular bundle. Compare mestome.

stereometer (ster-ē-om′e-tėr), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + μέτρον, a measure.] 1. An instrument for measuring the solid capacity of a vessel.—2. An instrument for determining the specific gravity of liquids, porous bodies, etc.

stereometric (ster″ē-ō-met′rik), a. [< stereometr-y + -ic.] Pertaining to or performed by stereometry.—Stereometric function. See function.

stereometrical (ster″ē-ō-met′ri-kal), a. [< stereometric + -al.] Same as stereometric.

stereometrically (ster″ē-ō-met′ri-kal-i), a. By or with reference to stereometry.

stereometry (ster-ē-om′e-tri), n. [= F. stéréométrie, < Gr. στερεός, solid, cubic, + -μετρία, < μέτρον, measure.] 1. The art of measuring volumes.—2. The metrical geometry of solids.—3. The art or process of determining the specific gravity of liquids, porous bodies, powders, etc.

stereo-mold (ster′ē-ō-mōld), n. [< stereo + mold[3].] A mold used in stereotyping.

stereomonoscope (ster″ē-ō-mon′ō-skōp), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + μόνος, single, alone, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An instrument with two lenses for exhibiting on a screen of ground glass a single picture so as to give it all the effect of solidity.

stereoneural (ster″ē-ō-nū′ral), a. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + νεῦρον, a nerve.] Having the nervous center, if any, solid.

stereoplasm (ster′ē-ō-plazm), n. [< NL. stereoplasma, < Gr. στερεός, solid, + πλάσμα, anything molded or formed: see plasm.] 1. In corals, a delicate endothecal structure occupying different positions in the corallite, often forming vertical processes in the interseptal loculi or encircling septa, or acting as true endotheca. This substance, which connects septa (environing their free edges in some paleozoic corals), stretches across interseptal loculi irregularly, and sometimes fills up the lower part of the inside of the corallum, constituting a solid mass there. It is to be distinguished from the true endotheca.

2. In bot., same as stereoplasma.

stereoplasma (ster″ē-ō-plas′mą), n. [NL.: see stereoplasm.] 1. Same as stereoplasm, 1. Lindström.—2. In bot., a term proposed by Naegeli for the solid part of protoplasm. Compare hyaloplasma.

stereoplasmic (ster″ē-ō-plaz′mik), a. [< stereoplasm + -ic.] Of the nature of or formed by stereoplasm; consisting of that substance.

stereopticon (ster-ē-op′ti-kon), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + ὀπτικός, pertaining to seeing or sight: see optic.] An improved form of magic lantern, consisting essentially of two complete lanterns matched and connected. The object of the reduplication is to permit the pictures shown to pass from one to the next by a sort of dissolving effect which is secured by alternate use of the two lenses, and at the same time to avoid the delay or the unpleasant sliding of the pictures across the field in view of the audience, but imperfectly avoidable when the simple magic lantern is used. The two lanterns may be either superposed or Double-tier Stereopticon.

A, A′, tubes containing objectives; B, B′, covers for condensers; C, C′, collapsible-bellows fronts of the lanterns, which are mounted one above the other and hinged together at the rear standards (as shown at D) to provide for the elevation or depression necessary to bring the views on the screen into exact superposition; E, E′, lime-light boxes, one of the lime-cylinders F and oxyhydrogen jets G being shown in the upper box, a part of which is removed; H, oxygen-holder; I, hydrogen-holder; J, J′, flexible tubes for separately conveying these gases to the burners and mixing them only as they are needed to supply light; L, set-screw for elevation or depression; M, milled heads of shaft operating gear for extending or shortening the lens-tubes A, A′ in adjustment of the focus; N, openings for insertion of slides, with inclined bottoms for insuring exact position.

placed side by side. Some forms of stereopticon are made with three lanterns. See triplexicon.

stereoscope (ster′ē-ō-skōp), n. [= F. stéréoscope, < Gr. στερεός, solid, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An optical instrument illustrating the phenomena of binocular vision, and serving to produce from two nearly similar pictures of an object the effect of a single picture with the appearance of relief and solidity belonging to ordinary vision. It depends upon the fact that in ordinary vision, while the respective images of an object formed upon the retinas of the two eyes differ slightly because of the divergence of the rays from each point of the object, yet the effect upon the brain is that of a single object seen in perspective relief which the monocular image lacks. The slide of the stereoscope shows two pictures side by side taken under a small difference of angular view, each eye looking upon one picture only; thus, as in ordinary vision, two images are conveyed to the brain which unite into one, exhibiting the objects represented under a high degree of relief. A reflecting form of stereoscope was invented by Sir Charles Wheatstone in 1838. Subsequently Sir David Brewster invented the lenticular or refracting stereoscope, based on the refractive properties of semi-double-convex lenses. This is the one now in general use. There are many forms of it, one of which is shown in the figure. The action is illustrated by the diagram beneath. The light-rays from corresponding points of the two pictures P and P′ are refracted in passing through the lenses L, L′, and their directions changed so that they now seem to the eyes E, E′ to diverge from a common point A beyond the plane of the card. By special effort a skilled observer can combine stereoscopic pictures into one without the use of the instrument, each eye being directed to one picture only and (to produce the normal stereoscopic effect) the one on its own side; the process may be facilitated by interposing a card screen between the pictures so that, for example, the left picture is entirely cut off from the right eye, etc. If the eyes are crossed so that the right eye sees the left picture and the left eye the right only, and the images combined by special effort, the usual stereoscopic effect is reversed—a convex surface becomes concave, etc. A similar pseudoscopic result is obtained with the ordinary stereoscope if the positions of the two pictures are exchanged.

Stereoscope.

stereoscopic (ster″ē-ō-skop′ik), a. [= F. stéréoscopique; as stereoscope + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or resembling the stereoscope; adapted to the stereoscope; having the form in relief, or proper perspective, as of an object seen in the stereoscope: as, stereoscopic pictures; stereoscopic views.—Stereoscopic camera, diagrams, projection. See the nouns.

stereoscopical (ster″ē-ō-skop′i-kal), a. [< stereoscopic + -al.] Same as stereoscopic.

stereoscopically (ster″ē-ō-skop′i-kal-i), adv. By or as by a stereoscope.

stereoscopist (ster′ē-ō-skō-pist), n. [< stereoscope + -ist.] One versed in the use or manufacture of stereoscopes.

stereoscopy (ster′ē-ō-skō-pi), n. [= F. stéréoscopie, < Gr. στερεός, solid, + -σκοπία, < σκοπεῖν, view.] The use or construction of stereoscopes.

stereotomic (ster″ē-ō-tom′ik), a. [< stereotom-y + -ic.] Pertaining to or performed by stereotomy.

stereotomical (ster″ē-ō-tom′i-kal), a. [< stereotomic + -al.] Same as stereotomic.

stereotomy (ster-ē-ot′ō-mi), n. [= F. stéréotomie, < Gr. στερεός, solid, + -τομία, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] The science or art of cutting solids into certain figures or sections.

stereotrope (ster′ē-ō-trōp), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + τροπή, a turning, < τρέπειν, turn.] An instrument by which an object is perceived as if in motion and with an appearance of solidity or relief as in nature. It consists of a series of stereoscopic pictures, generally eight, of an object in the successive positions it assumes in completing any motion, affixed to an octagonal drum revolving under an ordinary lenticular stereoscope, and viewed through a solid cylinder pierced in its entire length by two apertures, which makes four revolutions for one of the picture-drum. The observer thus sees the object constantly in one place, but with its parts apparently in motion and in solid and natural relief.

stereotype (ster′ē-ō-tīp), n. and a. [= F. stéréotype, < Gr. στερεός, fixed, + τύπος, impression, type: see type.] I. n. 1. The duplicate, in one piece of type-metal, of the face of a collection of types composed for printing. Three processes are used. (a) The plaster process, in which a mold taken from the composed types in fluid plaster of Paris is baked until dry, and is then submerged in melted type-metal. The cast taken in this mold, when cooled, is shaved to proper thickness, making the stereotype plate. (b) The clay process, in which the mold, taken by a press on a prepared surface of stiff clay, is baked until dry, and filled by pouring into it fluid metal. (c) The papier-maché process, in which the mold is made by covering the type with a preparation of paper-pulp and clay, which is beaten into the interstices of the type-surface by a stiff brush. This mold when baked by steam-heat is put in a casting-box, which is filled with melted metal. This is the rudest but quickest process. Stereotypes for daily newspapers are usually made in fifteen minutes. For newspaper-work the plates for rotary presses are molded and cast with a curved surface that fits them to the impression-cylinder. The practice of stereotyping is now confined to newspapers and the cheaper forms of printed work. Plates of books, woodcuts, and the finer forms of printing are now made by the electrotype process. (See electrotype.) Stereotype plates were first made, but imperfectly, by William Ged, at Edinburgh, in 1725. The plaster process, which was the first to become popular, was invented by Wildon and Lord Stanhope in 1810.

A, Stereotype Founding Apparatus. B, Stereotype Plates from the Mold. a, furnace by which the water-jacketed mold b is uniformly heated. The mold is supported on the frame d and on the rollers f; the parts of the mold are held together by a clamping-screw c; the water is supplied to the water-jacket through the funnel e. In pouring the metal, the mold is placed in position shown in dotted outline.

2. Loosely, an electrotype.—3. The art of making plates of fixed metallic types; the process of producing printed work by means of such plates.

II. a. Of or pertaining to stereotype, or stereotyping, or stereotype printing: as, stereotype work; stereotype plates.

stereotype (ster′ē-ō-tīp), v. t.; pret. and pp. stereotyped, ppr. stereotyping. [< stereotype, n.] 1. To cast a stereotype plate from: as, to stereotype a page or a form.—2. To prepare for printing by means of stereotype plates: as, to stereotype the New Testament.—3. To fix or establish firmly or unchangeably.

> If men cannot yet entirely obey the law, . . . it does not follow that we ought therefore to stereotype their incompetency, by specifying how much is possible to them and how much is not. H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 506.

stereotype-block (ster′ē-ō-tīp-blok), n. A block of iron or of hard wood, bound with brass, about three fourths of an inch high, on which a stereotype plate is fixed for use.

stereotyped (ster′ē-ō-tīpt), p. a. 1. Made or printed from stereotype plates.—2. Formed in an unchangeable manner; fixed; set: as, stereotyped opinions.

> The entablatures show considerable progress, but the capitals were so stereotyped that it is evident, if any Greek or Roman artists had designed capitals in Gandhara during the period just alluded to, we could predicate exactly what they would have been.
> J. Fergusson, Hist. Indian Arch., p. 178.

stereotype-metal (ster′ē-ō-tīp-met″al), n. An alloy for stereotype plates; type-metal.

stereotyper (ster′ē-ō-tī-pėr), n. [< stereotype + -er[1].] One who stereotypes, or who makes stereotype plates.

stereotypery (ster″ē-ō-tī′pėr-i), n. [< stereotype + -ery.] 1. The art or work of making stereotype plates.—2. Pl. stereotyperies (-iz). A place where stereotype plates are made; a stereotype foundry.

stereotypic (ster″ē-ō-tip′ik), a. [< stereotype + -ic.] Of or relating to stereotype or stereotype plates.

stereotyping (ster′ē-ō-tī-ping), n. The art, act, or process of making stereotypes.—Paper process of stereotyping. See paper.

stereotypist (ster′ē-ō-tī-pist), n. [< stereotype + -ist.] One who makes stereotype plates; a stereotyper.

stereotypographer (ster″ē-ō-tī-pog′ra-fėr), n. [< stereotypograph-y + -er[1].] A stereotype-printer.

stereotypography (ster″ē-ō-tī-pog′ra-fi), n. [< Gr. στερεός, fixed, + E. typography.] The art or practice of printing from stereotype. Imp. Dict.

stereotypy (ster′ē-ō-tī-pi), n. [= F. stéréotypie; as stereotype + -y[3].] The art or business of making stereotype plates.

sterhydraulic (stėr-hī-drâ′lik), a. [Irreg. < Gr. στερεός, solid, + E. hydraulic.] Pertaining to or having an action resembling that of a sterhydraulic press. See the phrase.—Sterhydraulic press, a peculiar form of hydraulic press in which pressure is generated in a hydraulic cylinder by the displacement of a part of the contained liquid through the entrance into its mass of a rod working through a stuffing-box, a screw working in a packed nut, or in some cases a rope wound upon a barrel in the inclosure and pulled into it through a packed hole, the shaft of the winding-barrel or -drum also extending through a stuffing-box in the side of the cylinder, and fitted on the exterior with a winch or a driving-wheel. Of these forms that using a screw is the simplest and best.

sterigma (stę-rig′mä), n.; pl. sterigmata (-ma-tä). [NL., < Gr. στήριγμα, a prop, support, < στερίζειν, prop.] In bot., a stalk or support of some kind: a term of varying application. (a) Same as basidium. (b) The stalk-like branch of a basidium which bears a spore. (c) The footstalk of a spore, especially of a spore of minute size. (d) The cell from which a spermatium is cut off. (e†) A ridge or foliaceous appendage proceeding down the stem below the attachment of a decurrent leaf.

sterigmatic (ster-ig-mat′ik), a. [< sterigma(t-) + -ic.] In bot., resembling, belonging to, or of the nature of a sterigma.

sterilt, a. An obsolete spelling of sterile.

sterile (ster′il), a. [Formerly also steril; < F. stérile = Sp. Pg. esteril = It. sterile, < L. sterilis, unfruitful, barren; cf. Gr. στερεός, stiff, hard, solid, στέριφος, hard, unfruitful, barren.] 1. Unfruitful; unproductive; not fertile.

> Indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 310.
>
> It is certaine that in sterile years corne sowne will growe to an other kinde. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 525.

2. Barren; not reproducing its kind.

> She is grown sterile and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable. Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

3. In bot., of a flower, producing only stamens—that is, staminate or male (compare neutral); of a stamen, having no anther, or a functionless one; of an anther, without pollen; of an ovary, without perfect seeds; of a seed, without an embryo; of a frond, without sori. See cuts under Onoclea, Ophioglossum, sassafras, and smoke-tree.—4. Free from living germs.

> I at first suspected that the biologically sterile tube might not be chemically clean. Medical News, XLIX. 400.

5. Leading to no results; fruitless; profitless; useless.

> I will endeavour that the favour conferred on me rest not sterile. Abbé Mann, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 431.

6. Lacking richness of thought or expression; bald; bare; as, a sterile style; sterile verse.—Sterile wood a shrub or small tree, Coprosma fœtidissima, of the Rubiaceæ, found in New Zealand. It is extremely fetid when drying, though inodorous when alive and growing.

sterilisation, sterilise, etc. See sterilization, etc.

sterility (ste-ril′i-ti), n. [< F. stérilité = Sp. esterilidad = Pg. esterilidade = It. sterilità, < L. sterilitu(t-)s, unfruitfulness, barrenness, < sterilis, barren, sterile: see sterile.] The state or character of being sterile. (a) Lack of fertility; unproductiveness; unfruitfulness, as of land, labor, etc.

> For the Soil of Spain, the Fruitfulness of their Vallies recompences the Sterility of their Hills. Howell, Letters, I. iii. 32.

(b) Lack of fecundity; barrenness: said of animals or plants.

> Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend
> To make this creature fruitful!
> Into her womb convey sterility!
> Shak., Lear, i. 4. 300.

(c) Fruitlessness; profitlessness.

> The truth of this formula is only equalled by its sterility for psychological purposes. W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 551.

(d) Deficiency in ideas, sentiments, or expression; lack of richness or luxuriance, as in literary style; poverty; baldness; mesgerness.

> He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses. Pope, Essay on Homer.

sterilization (ster″il-i-zā′shon), n. [< sterilize + -ation.] The act or operation of making sterile; specifically, the process of freeing from living germs. Also spelled sterilisation.

> Sterilization of cow's milk must and will be a most valuable preventive of summer diarrhœa. Medical News, LIII. 12.

sterilize (ster′il-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. sterilized, ppr. sterilizing. [= F. stériliser = Sp. Pg. esterilizar; as sterile + -ize.] To render sterile or unproductive in any way; specifically, in bacteriology, to render free from living germs, as by heating or otherwise. Also spelled sterilise.

> No, no—such wars do thou, Ambition, wage!
> Go sterilize the fertile with thy rage!
> Whole nations to depopulate is thine.
> Savage, Public Spirit.

> Prof. Tyndall found that he could not sterilize an infusion of old hay . . . without boiling it continuously for several hours. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 309.

sterilizer (ster′il-ī-zėr), n. [< sterilize + -er[1].] One or that which sterilizes; especially, any apparatus for rendering substances free from living germs, as by means of heat. Also spelled steriliser.

sterkt. An old spelling of stark[1], stirk.

sterlet (stėr′let), n. [< F. sterlet = Dan. sterlet = Sw. sterlett, < G. sterlet, < Russ. sterlyadĭ, a sterlet.] A species of sturgeon, Acipenser ruthenus. It is of small size and slender form, with a long sharp snout and fringed barbels, and from sixty to seventy lateral shields. It rarely reaches a length of two feet, and is generally not more than a foot long. It inhabits the Black Sea, Sea of Azof, Caspian Sea, and the rivers of Asiatic Russia, as well as certain rivers of Siberia. It is highly esteemed for its flavor, and its roe makes a superior caviar. Compare also cuts under Acipenser.

Sterlet (Acipenser ruthenus).

Sterletus (stėr′le-tus), n. [NL. (Rafinesque, 1820), < F. sterlet, < Russ. sterlyadĭ, sterlet: see sterlet.] A genus of sturgeons, the type of which is the sterlet, having the spines of the dorsal shield posterior, no stellate plates, and the lip emarginate.

sterling[1]†, n. An obsolete form of starling[1].

sterling[2] (stėr′ling), n. and a. [< ME. sterling, sterlinge, sterlynge, starling, the coin so called; cf. D. sterling = Sw. Dan. sterling, sterling (as in mod. E. use), = Icel. sterlingr, a sterling (the English coin so called), = MHG. sterlinc, stærline (-ling), a coin so called, G. sterling (as in mod. E. use); = OF. esterlin, a sterling (the English coin so called), sterlin, esterlin, estellin, estelin, a weight of twenty-eight grains (of gold), the twentieth part of an ounce, = Sp. Pg. esterlino, in libra esterlina, a pound sterling, = It. sterlino, in lira sterlina, a pound sterling, also as a noun, sterlino, sterling coin, standard rate (of coin); ML. sterlingus, sterlingum, sterlinus, stellinus, stelligus, sterlingeus, sterilingus, esterlingus, estrilingus, a sterling (the English coin so called), also a weight of twenty-eight grains, the twentieth part of an ounce; all < E., unless, as Kluge asserts, the E. itself (and so in part the OF. and ML.) is < MHG. sterline, stærline (-ling), which is then < sterl- or ster-, origin unknown, + -ing[3] or -ling[1] as in shilling, farthing (AS. feórthing, feórthling), penny (AS. pening, etc.). In this view the word must have been introduced into ME. use by the Hanse merchants in London, who, according to the story, first stamped the coin in England. The accepted statement is that these merchants were called Easterlings as coming from "the east parts of Germany" (Camden), and that the coin received its name from them; but the similarity appears to be accidental, and the statement, besides other deficiencies, fails to explain the MHG. name, which could not have meant 'Easterling.' It seems more probable that the MHG. word is, like the rest, derived from the ME. word, which must then be due, in spite of unexplained difficulties, to Easterling, or else is derived, as asserted in a statement quoted by Minsheu from Linwood, from the figure of a starling (ME. sterling) at one time engraved on one quarter of the coin so called: see starling[1]. Historical evidence of the truth of this assertion is as yet lacking.] I. n. 1†. A silver coin struck by English (and Scottish) kings from the time of Richard I. (1190).

> Faste comen out of halle
> And shoken nobles and sterlinges.
> Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1315.

> The oldest pieces [of the coinage of Scotland] are silver pennies or sterlings, resembling the contemporary English money, of the beginning of the 12th century. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 656.

2. English money. [Rare.]

> And Roman wealth in English sterling view. Arbuthnot.

II. a. 1. Of fixed or standard national value; conforming to the national standard of value: said of English money, and, by extension, of the precious metals: as, a pound sterling; a shilling sterling. Abbreviated ster., stg.

> In the Canon Law mention is made of 5 shillings sterling, and a merke sterling, cap. 3. de Arbitris, & c. constitut. 12. de procurator. Minshcu, 1617.
>
> When a given weight of gold or silver is of a given fineness, it is then of the true standard, and called esterling or sterling metal. Blackstone, Com., I. vii.
>
> I lost between seven and eight thousand pounds sterling of your English money. J. S. Le Fanu, Dragon Volant, v.

2. Of acknowledged worth or influence; authoritative.

> If my word be sterling yet in England,
> Let it command a mirror hither straight,
> That it may show me what a face I have.
> Shak., Rich. II., iv. 1. 264.

3. Genuine; true; pure; hence, of great value or excellence.

> His sterling worth, which words cannot express,
> Lives with his friends, their pride and their distress.
> Crabbe, Works, II. 27.
>
> I might recall other evidence of the sterling and unusual qualities of his public virtue. R. Choate, Addresses, p. 321.

sterling[3] (stėr′ling), n. See starling[2].

Sterling's formula. See formula.

stern[1] (stėrn), a. [< ME. stern, sterin, sterne, sturne, < AS. styrne, severe, austere, stern (also in comp. styrn-mōd, stern-minded); akin to OHG. stornēn, be astonished, sturni, stupor; perhaps related to OHG. storrēn, MHG. storren, stand out, project, = Goth. staurran,* in comp. and-staurran, murmur against, also to D. stuursch, stern, = Sw. sursk, refractory, and to Icel. stūra, gloom, despair, stūra, mope, fret.] 1. Severe in disposition or conduct; austere; harsh; rigorous; hard.

> No Man was more gentle where there was Submission; where Opposition, no Man more stern. Baker, Chronicles, p. 132.
>
> And sterner hearts alone may feel
> The wound that time can never heal.
> Byron, The Giaour.

2. Characterized by severity or rigor; especially, resulting from or expressive of harshness: as, a stern reply; a stern glance; a stern rebuke.

> He herd thair strakes, that war ful sterin.
> Ywaine and Gawin, l. 3219. (Halliwell.)
>
> If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time, > Thou shouldst have said, "Good porter, turn the key."
> Shak., Lear, iii. 7. 63.
>
> Gods and men
> Fear'd her stern frown. Milton, Comus, l. 446.

3. Grim or forbidding in aspect; gloomy; repelling.

> In passing through these stern and lofty mountains, their path was often along the bottom of a barranco, or deep rocky valley. Irving, Granada, p. 88.

4. Rough; violent; tumultuous; fierce.

> The werre wox in that won wonderly stern.
> Alisaunder of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 337.
>
> Those stern waves, which like huge mountains roll.
> Drayton, Polyolbion, i. 435.

5. Rigid; stringent; strict.

> Subjected to stern discipline by the rigid enforcement of uniform motives. Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 8.

6†. Stout; strong; heavy.

> The hamur bothe sterne and gret
> That drof the nayles thorow hond and fete.
> Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 184.
>
> Of bak & of brest al were his bodi sturne.
> Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 143.

7. Firm; unyielding; inflexible; hard.

> When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept:
> Ambition should be made of sterner stuff.
> Shak., J. C., iii. 2. 97.

The sterner sex. See sex[1].—Syn. 1. Severe, Harsh, Strict, etc. See austere.—1 and 2. Unrelenting, uncompromising, inflexible.

stern[2] stėrn, n. [< ME. sterne, steerne, stearne (not found in AS., where only steór, a rudder, appears: see steer[1], n.) = OFries. stiorne, stiarne, a rudder, = Icel. stjórn, a steering, steerage, rudder; with formative -n, from the root of AS. steór, E. steer, etc., a rudder: see steer[1], n. and v.] 1†. The rudder or helm of a vessel.

ȝif he ne rise the rather and rauhte to the steorne,
The wynt wolde with the water the bot ouer-throwe.
Piers Plowman (A), Ix. 30.

But to preserve the people and the land,
Which now remain as shippe without a sterne.
Norton and Sackville, Ferrex and Porrex, v. 2.

2†. Hence, figuratively, any instrument of management or direction; a guiding agent or agency; also, a post of direction or control.

The father held the sterne of his whole obedience.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 48.

Not a few of them [the eunuchs] have come to sit at the stern of State. Sandys, Travalles, p. 55.

3. The hinder part of a ship or boat, where the rudder is placed; the part furthest removed Lower part of Ship's Stern.

S, stern-post; KS, keelson; K, keel; DT, dovetail-plates; I, inner stern-post; D, deadwood; DK, deadwood-knee; SS, sternson; T, deck-transom; F, false keel. (The dotted lines show bolts.)

from the stem or prow. See also cut under poop.

So, when the first bold vessel dared the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian raised his strain.
Pope, Ode on St. Cecilia's Day, l. 39.

4. The hinder parts, backside, buttocks, or rump; the tail of an animal.

He [the dragon] . . . gan his sturdy sterne about to weld,
And him so strongly stroke that to the ground him feld.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xi. 28.

We don't want to deceive ourselves about them, or fancy them cherubs without sterns.
Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), Forewords, [p. xxiii.

By the stern. See by[1]. — False stern, an addition made to the stern of a vessel for strength or protection. — From stem to stern. See stem[2]. — Square stern, a stern less rounded or elliptical than is usual. — Stern foremost, backside foremost; with the stern advanced. — Stern on, the position of a vessel when her stern is presented toward the observer. — To make a stern board. See board. — To moor head and stern. See moor[2].

stern[2] (stėrn), v. [< stern[2], n.] I. trans. 1†. To steer; guide.

Hulke tower . . . is a notable marke for pilots, in directing them which waie to sterne their ships, and to eschew the danger of the craggie rocks.
Stanihurst, Descrip. of Ireland, iii. (Holinshed.)

2. To back (a boat) with the oars; back water; row backward. — Stern all! stern hard! orders to back water given by the officer of a boat to the crew. Also simply stern!

II. intrans. To draw back; back water: said of a boat or its crew.

Meantime Mr. Norton, the mate, having struck the fast whale, he and the second mate sterned off to wait for the whale to get quiet. Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 273.

stern[3] (stėrn), n. Same as starn[1].

stern[4] (stėrn), n. [A var. of tern: see tern, and cf. Sterna.] A tern.

Sterna (stėr'nä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1758), appar. based on E. tern.] A Linnean genus of Laridæ, typical of the subfamily Sterninæ, and containing all the terns or sea-swallows, or variously restricted. It is now commonly confined to species of moderate and large size, white with usually a pearly-blue mantle and black cap, and having a long deeply-forked tail, whose outer feathers are more or less narrowly linear for much of their length. The species are numerous, and are found all over the world, as S. hirundo, the common tern of Europe and America; S. arctica, the arctic tern of the northern hemisphere; S. paradisea or dougalli, the roseate tern (see cut under roseate), very widely distributed; and S. forsteri and S. trudeaui of America. Among the large species, representing a subgenus Thalasseus, are S. tschegrava or caspia, the Caspian tern of Asia, Europe, and America; S. maxima, the royal tern (smaller than the last, in spite of its name) of America; S. elegans, the ducal tern of America. (See cut under Thalasseus.) A group of small species, such as S. minuta of Europe and S. antillarum of America, are called least terns, and all have a white frontal crescent in the black cap; these represent a subgenus Common Tern (Sterna hirundo).

Sternula. (See cut under Sternula.) Some middle-sized terns with dark upper parts, widely distributed in tropical and warm temperate regions, are the subgenus Haliplana, as the common sooty and bridled terns, S. fuliginosa and S. anæsthetica. (See cut under sooty.) Gull-billed terns form a section Gelochelidon (see cut there). The wholly white terns, the black terns, and the noddies belong to other genera. See Sterninæ and tern.

sternadiform (stėr'nạ-di-fôrm), a. [< NL. sternum, the breast-bone, + L. ad, to, + forma, form.] In ichth., characterized by a tendency to expansion or extension of the thoracic or sternal region, as exemplified in the John-dory and the Serranidæ. Gill.

sternage (stėr'nāj), n. [< stern[2] + -age.] Steerage; direction; course, as of a ship or fleet.

Follow, follow:
Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England, as dead midnight still.
Shak., Hen. V., Iii. Prol., l. 18.

sternal (stėr'nal), a. [= F. sternal, < NL. sternalis, < sternum, the breast-bone: see sternum.] 1. Of or pertaining to the sternum, especially the breast-bone of vertebrates: as, the sternal end of the clavicle; the sternal keel of a bird's breast-bone; sternal articulation; a sternal segment. — 2. In Invertebrata, of or pertaining to a sternite; sternitic. — 3. Ventral; hemal; on the ventral surface or aspect, where the sternum is situated; on the same side with the sternum; in man, anterior; in other animals, inferior: opposed to dorsal, tergal, or neural. — Sternal band, in embryol., of insects, a longitudinal thickening of the ovum, which gives rise to the sternal region of the body. — Sternal canal, in Crustacea, a median passage between each pair of endosternites, arched over by the meeting of the mesophragmal apophyses of the apodemes of opposite sides. The sternal canal conveys the chain of nervous ganglia and the sternal artery. See cut under Astacidæ. — Sternal glands, a chain of six to ten small lymphatic glands, situated along the course of the internal mammary blood-vessels. — Sternal line, the vertical line on the front of the chest lying over the edge of the sternum. — Sternal region, the region of the front of the chest lying between the sternal lines. It is divided into a superior and an inferior sternal region by a line passing through the uppermost points of the junctions of the third costal cartilages with the sternum. — Sternal rib. (a) A true or fixed rib; one that joins the sternum by its hemapophysis, or costal cartilage, as distinguished from a false rib. See cut under endoskeleton. (b) The hemapophysis of a rib, as distinguished from the pleurapophysis; that part of a bony jointed rib answering to the costal cartilage of a mammalian rib, reaching from the end of the pleurapophysis to the sternum or toward it, as distinguished from a vertebral rib, which is the pleurapophysis alone. See cuts under epipleura and interclavicle.

sternalgia (stėr-nal'ji-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. στέρνον, the breast-bone, + ἄλγος, pain.] 1. Pain about the sternum or breast-bone. — 2. Specifically, angina pectoris. See angina.

sternalgic (stėr-nal'jik), a. [< sternalgia + -ic.] Pertaining to or affected with sternalgia; especially, affected with angina pectoris.

sternalis (stėr-nā'lis), n.; pl. sternales (-lēz). [NL., sc. musculus, muscle: see sternal.] A sternal or presternal muscle; specifically, the rectus sternalis of various animals, more expressly called sternalis brutorum and rectus thoracicus superficialis. It is not infrequently present in man.

Sternaspida (stėr-nas'pi-dä), n. pl. [NL., irreg. < Sternaspis (-aspid-) + -ida.] An order of gephyreans, represented by the genus Sternaspis: distinguished from an order Echiurina, both being referred to a subclass Echiuroidea of the class Gephyrea. Compare Echiuroidea.

Sternbergia (stėrn-bėr'ji-ä), n. [NL. (Waldstein and Kitaibel, 1805), named after Count Kaspar Maria von Sternberg, 1761–1838, author of various botanical and paleontological works.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Amaryllidaceæ and tribe Amarylleæ. It is characterized by a commonly solitary funnel-shaped perianth without a corona and with somewhat spreading lobes, and by a fleshy nearly indehiscent fruit with roundish and often strophiolate seeds. About 12 species have been described, now by some reduced to 5, all native of Europe and the Mediterranean region. They produce a short flower-stalk from a coated bulb, with leaves at the same time or earlier. S. lutea and several other dwarf species with handsome yellow flowers are cultivated under the name of star-flower. S. lutea is also known as winter daffodil, and S. Ætnensis as Mount Etna lily; these are often sold under the name of amaryllis.

sternbergite (stėrn'bėrg-īt), n. [Named after Count K. M. von Sternberg: see Sternbergia.] An ore of silver, a sulphid of silver and iron, having a pinchbeck-brown color and metallic luster. It occurs foliated, the laminæ being soft and flexible. It leaves a mark on paper like that of graphite.

stern-board (stėrn'bōrd), n. Naut., a backward motion of a vessel. See to make a stern board, under board.

stern-cap (stėrn'kap), n. An iron cap to protect the stern of a boat.

stern-chase (stėrn'chās), n. A chase in which two vessels sail on one and the same course, one following in the wake of the other: as, a stern-chase is a long chase.

stern-chaser (stėrn'chā″sėr), n. A cannon placed in a ship's stern, pointing backward, and intended to annoy a ship that is in pursuit.

Sterneæ (stėr'nē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Sterna + -eæ.] A subdivision of Sterninæ, containing all the sea-swallows with forked tails and emarginate webs, as distinguished from the Anoëæ or noddies; the typical terns. Coues, 1862.

sterneber (stėr'nē-bėr), n. [< NL. sternebra, < sternum + (vert)ebra.] One of the pieces of which the breast-bone of a vertebrate usually consists; a bony segment of the sternum; a sternite, or sternebral element. The sternum is a serially segmented bone, made up of pieces, primitively separate bones, corresponding to pairs of ribs, every one of which is a sterneber. Thus, in man the manubrium sterni and the xiphoid or ensiform cartilage are each a sterneber; and the gladiolus, the middle part of the breast-bone, is composed of four other sternebers.

sternebral (stėr'nē-brạl), a. [< sterneber + -al.] Entering into the composition of the breast-bone; of or pertaining to a sterneber.

sterned[1] (stėrnd), a. [< stern[2] + -ed[2].] Having a stern (of a specified character). Chapman, Iliad, xi.

sterned[2†] (stėrnd), a. [ME., < stern[3] + -ed[2].] Starred; starry. Hampole, Prick of Conscience.

sterner† (stėr'nėr), n. [< stern[2] + -er[1].] A steersman; a guide or director. [Rare.]

He that is "regens sidera," the sterner of the stars.
Dr. Clarke, Sermons (1637), p. 15. (Latham.)

stern-fast (stėrn'fâst), n. A rope or chain used to confine the stern of a ship or other vessel to a wharf or quay.

stern-frame (stėrn'frām), n. The several pieces of timber or iron which form the stern of a ship — the stern-post, transoms, and fashion-pieces.

sternfully† (stėrn'fůl-i), adv. [< sternful* (irreg. < stern + -ful) + -ly[2].] Sternly. Stanihurst, Conceites. [Rare.]

stern-gallery (stėrn'gal″ę-ri), n. Naut. See gallery, 9.

stern-hook (stėrn'hůk), n. In ship-building, a curved timber built into the stern of a ship to support the stern-frame.

Sternidæ (stėr'ni-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Sterna + -idæ.] The Sterninæ rated as a family apart from Laridæ.

Sternidius (stėr-nid'i-us), n. [NL. (Le Conte, 1873).] A genus of longicorn beetles, of the family Cerambycidæ, equivalent to Liopus (Leiopus of Serville, 1835). S. aculiferus is a common North American species now placed in Leptostylus. Its larva burrows under the bark of various trees.

Sternidius aculiferus.

sterniform (stėr'ni-fôrm), a. [< NL. sternum, the breast-bone, + L. forma, form.] In entom., having the form or appearance of a thoracic sternum. — Sterniform process or horn, an anterior projection of the first ventral segment of the abdomen, between the bases of the posterior legs: it is more commonly called the intercoxal process.

Sterninæ (stėr-nī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Sterna + -inæ.] A subfamily of Laridæ, typified by the genus Sterna, containing all the terns or sea-swallows. It differs from Larinæ in the average smaller size, slenderer form, relatively longer wings and tail, the forking of the tail, the small feet, and the slender sharp bill. The bill is paragnathous (not epignathous as is usual in Larinæ), with continuous horny covering, usually long and slender, very sharp, with straight commissure or nearly so, gently curved culmen, long gonys, and slight symphyseal eminence. The wings are extremely long, narrow, and pointed, with the first primary much the longest, and the secondaries all short. The tail is usually long, and forked or forficate, with attenuated outer feathers. The feet are small, and scarcely ambulatorial. There are 60 or more species, of all parts of the world. They are divided into two groups, the Sternæ or terns proper, including nearly all of the Sterninæ, and the noddies or Anoëæ. Most of the species fall into the single genus Sterna. Other genera are Hydrochelidon, Phaëthusa, Procelsterna, Gygis, Inca, and Anous. See Sterna, and cuts there noted.

sternine (stėr'nin), a. [< NL. sterninus, < Sterna, tern.] Resembling or related to a tern; of or pertaining to the Sterninæ.

sternite (stėr'nīt), n. [< NL. sternum, the breast-bone, + -ite[2].] 1. In Arthropoda, as an insect or a crustacean, one of the median ventral sclerites of the crust or body-wall; the median ventral piece of any segment, somite, or metamere, whether a distinct piece or only that undistinguished ventral part or region which lies between the insertions of any pair of legs or other appendages. The sternites are primitively and typically all alike, but may be variously modified in different regions of the body, or coalesced with one another or with other pieces of the exoskeleton, or suppressed. See cut under cephalothorax.

2. In entom., specifically, the under or ventral sclerite of an abdominal segment. [Rare.]—3. One of the pieces of the sternum or breast-bone of a vertebrate; a sterneber. [Rare.]—Antennary sternite. Same as epistoma (b).

sternitic (stėr-nit'ik), a. [< sternite + -ic.] Of or pertaining to a sternite; sternal, as a sclerite of an arthropod.

stern-knee (stėrn'nē), n. The continuation of a vessel's keelson, to which the stern-post is secured by bolts. Also called sternson and stern-son-knee.

stern-light†, n. [< stern[3] + light[1].] Starlight.

> It was mirk mirk night, and there was nae stern light.
> Thomas the Rhymer (Child's Ballads, I. 112).

sternly (stėrn'li), adv. [< ME. sternelich, sternelîche, sturnelîche, < AS. styrnlīec, < styrne, stern: see stern[1] and -ly[2].] In a stern manner; with severity, harshness, austerity, or rigor.

sternmost (stėrn'mōst), a. superl. [< stern[2] + -most.] Furthest in the rear; furthest astern: as, the sternmost ship in a convoy.

sternness (stėrn'nes), n. [< ME. sternessc, steernesse; < stern + -ness.] The quality or character of being stern.

> With steernesse ȝe comaundide to hem, and with power.
> Wyclif, Ezek. xxxiv. 4.

= Syn. See stern[1], a.

sternochondroscapularis (stėr-nō-kon-drō-skap-ū-lā'ris), n.; pl. sternochondroscapulares (-rēz). [NL. (sc. musculus, muscle), < Gr. στέρνον, the breast-bone, + χόνδρος, cartilage, + NL. scapularis, q. v.] A muscle of some mammals, not infrequent in man, arising from the first costal cartilage and the sternum, and inserted into the superior border of the scapula. Also called chondroscapularis, scapulocostalis minor, costoscapularis, subclavius posticus.

sternoclavicular (stėr″nō-kla-vik'ū-lār), a. [< NL. sternoclavicularis, < Gr. στέρνον, the breast-bone, + NL. clavicula: see clavicular.] Pertaining to the sternum and the clavicle. Also sternoclidal, and sometimes clidosternal.—Sternoclavicular fibrocartilage. See fibrocartilage.—Sternoclavicular ligament, a band of ligamentous fibers uniting the sternum and the clavicle: an anterior and a posterior are distinguished in man.

sternoclavicularis (stėr″nō-kla-vik-ū-lā'ris), n.; pl. sternoclaviculares (-rēz). [NL.: see sternoclavicular.] One of two anomalous muscles in man, anterior and posterior, extending over the sternoclavicular articulation.

sternoclidal (stėr-nō-klī'dal), a. [< Gr. στέρνον, the breast-bone, + κλείς (κλειδ-), key (clavicle), + -al.] Same as sternoclavicular.

sternoclidomastoid (stėr-nō-klī-dō-mas'toid), a. and n. [< NL. sternoclidomastoideus, < sternum, q. v., + clidomastoideus, q. v.] I. a. In anat., of or belonging to the sternum, the clavicle, and the mastoid process. The sternoclidomastoid muscle arises from the summit of the sternum and the inner section of the clavicle, and is inserted into the mastoid process of the temporal bone. It is also called sternomastoid, mastoideus colli, and nutator capitis. See cut under muscle[1].

II. n. The sternoclidomastoid muscle.

sternoclidomastoideus (stėr″nō-klī″dō-mas-toi'dē-us), n.; pl. sternoclidomastoidei (-ī). [NL.: see sternoclidomastoid.] The sternoclidomastoid muscle.

sternocoracoid (stėr-nō-kor'a-koid), a. and n. [< NL. sternocoracoideus, < sternum, q. v., + coracoideus, q. v.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the coracoid: as, the sternocoracoid articulation of birds and reptiles; a sternocoracoid muscle.

II. n. The sternocoracoideus.

sternocoracoideus (stėr-nō-kor-a-koi'dē-us), n.; pl. sternocoracoidei (-ī). [NL.: see sternocoracoid.] The sternocoracoid muscle of various animals, arising from the sternum and inserted in the coracoid. It is represented in man by the pectoralis minor.

sternocostal (stėr-nō-kos'tal), a. [< NL. sternocostalis, < sternum, q. v., + L. costa, rib: see costal.] Of or pertaining to the sternum and the ribs or costal cartilages; costosternal.

sternocostalis (stėr″nō-kos-tā'lis), n.; pl. sternocostales (-lēz). [NL.: see sternocostal.] A thin median fan-shaped muscle within the thorax, behind the costal cartilages and breast-bone, arising from the lower part of the sternum. Also called transversus thoracis, and usually triangularis sterni.

sternocoxal (stėr-nō-kok'sal), a. [< NL. sternocoxalis, < sternum, q. v., + L. coxa, the hip: see coxal.] Of or pertaining to the sternites and coxæ of an arthropod.

sternofacial (stėr-nō-fā'shal), a. and n. [< NL. sternofacialis, < sternum, q. v., + L. facies, face: see facial.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the face: as, a sternofacial muscle.

II. n. The sternofacialis.

sternofacialis (stėr-nō-fā-shi-ā'lis), n.; pl. sternofaciales (-lēz). [NL.: see sternofacial.] A muscle of the hedgehog, arising over the fore part of the sternum and passing to the side of the lower jaw and integument of the face: it assists the action of the orbicularis panniculi.

sternoglossal (stėr-nō-glos'al), a. and n. [< NL. sternoglossalis, < Gr. στέρνον, breast-bone, + γλῶσσα, tongue.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the tongue: as, a sternoglossal muscle.

II. n. The sternoglossus.

sternoglossus (stėr-nō-glos'us), n.; pl. sternoglossi (-ī). [NL., < Gr. στέρνον, the breast-bone, + γλῶσσα, the tongue.] 1. A long retractor muscle of the tongue, as of the great ant-eater, Myrmecophaga jubata, attached behind to the sternum, and antagonizing the action of the protractor muscles, the genioglossus and stylohyoideus.—2. [cap.] In entom., a genus of coleopterous insects.

sternohyoid (stėr-nō-hī'oid), a. and n. [< NL. sternohyoideus, < sternum, q. v., + hyoides: see hyoid.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the hyoid bone.—Sternohyoid muscle, a ribbon-like muscle arising from the manubrium sterni and inner extremity of the clavicle, and inserted into the body of the hyoid bone. It is innervated from the ansa hypoglossi, and its action draws down or back the hyoid bone and larynx. See cut under muscle[1].

II. n. The sternohyoid muscle.

sternohyoidean (stėr″nō-hī-oi'dē-an), a. [< sternohyoid + -e-an.] Same as sternohyoid.

sternohyoideus (stėr″nō-hī-oi'dē-us), n.; pl. sternohyoidei (-ī). [NL.: see sternohyoid.] The sternohyoid.

sternomastoid (stėr-nō-mas'toid), a. and n. [< NL. sternomastoideus, < sternum, q. v., + mastoideus, q. v.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the mastoid process of the temporal bone.—Sternomastoid artery. (a) A superficial descending branch of the superior thyroid artery, which is distributed to the sternomastoid, platysma, and the muscles attached to the thyroid cartilage. (b) A small muscular branch of the occipital artery which supplies the sternoclidomastoid.—Sternomastoid muscle. (a) That portion of the sternoclidomastoid which arises from the sternum. (b) The entire sternoclidomastoid, without distinction.

II. n. The sternomastoid muscle.

sternomastoideus (stėr″nō-mas-toi'dē-us), n.; pl. sternomastoidei (-ī). [NL.: see sternomastoid.] The sternomastoid muscle.

sternomaxillaris (stėr-nō-mak-si-lā'ris), n.; pl. sternomaxillares (-rēz). [NL.: see sternomaxillary.] The sternomaxillary muscle.

sternomaxillary (stėr-nō-mak'si-lā-ri), a. [< NL. sternomaxillaris, < sternum, q. v., + L. maxilla, jaw: see maxillary.] Pertaining to the sternum and the mandible: applied to the sternomastoid muscle when, as in the horse, its anterior end is fixed to the mandible.

sternon (stėr'non), n. [NL.: see sternum.] Same as sternum. Wiseman, Surgery. [Rare.]

sternopagus (stėr-nop'a-gus), n.; pl. sternopagi (-jī). [NL., < Gr. στέρνον, breast, chest, + πάγος, that which is firmly set.] In teratol., a double monster with union at the sternum.

Sternoptychidæ (stėr-nop-tik'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Sternoptyx (-ptych-) + -idæ.] A family of iniomous fishes, typified by the genus Sternoptyx. (a) In Günther's system it includes the typical Sternoptychidæ and other families. (b) In Gill's system, a family of iniomous fishes with a compressed ventriform body, carinated contour, deeply and obliquely cleft or subvertical mouth whose upper margin is constituted by the supramaxillaries as well as intermaxillaries, branchiostegal arch near and parallel with lower jaw, scapular arch with an inferior projection, and one or more of the neural spines abnormally developed and projecting above the back in advance of the dorsal fin. There are 3 genera and about 7 species, small deep-sea fishes of remarkable appearance and organization, representing 2 subfamilies, Sternoptychinæ and Argyropelecinæ. Also Sternoptyges, Sternottidi, and Sternoptygoidei.

sternoptychoid (stėr-nop'ti-koid), a. and n. [< Sternoptyx (-ptych-) + -oid.] I. a. Of, or having characteristics of, the Sternoptychidæ.

II. n. A fish of the family Sternoptychidæ.

Sternoptyx (stėr-nop'tiks), n. [NL. (Hermann, 1781), < Gr. στέρνον, breast, chest, + πτύξ, a fold.] A genus of fishes, so named from the transverse folds on the pectoral or sternal region, typical of the Sternoptychidæ.

sternorhabdite (stėr-nō-rab'dīt), n. In entom., one of the lowermost or sternal pair of rhabdites.

sternoscapular (stėr-nō-skap'ū-lār), a. and n. [< NL. sternoscapularis, < sternum, q. v., + L. scapulæ, shoulder-blades: see scapular.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the scapula: as, a sternoscapular muscle.

II. n. The sternoscapularis.

sternoscapularis (stėr-nō-skap-ū-lā'ris), n.; pl. sternoscapulares (-rēz). [NL.: see sternoscapular.] A muscle of many animals, connecting the sternum and the scapula, and forming with the serratus magnus and the levator anguli scapulæ a sling in which the fore part of the body is supported upon the anterior extremities.

Sternothæridæ (stėr-nō-thē'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Sternothærus + -idæ.] A family of pleurodirous tortoises, typified by the genus Sternothærus, to which different limits have been assigned. As generally understood, they have eleven plastral bones, mesoplastrals being distinct, and the skull has no bony temporal roof. The species are confined to Africa and Madagascar.

Sternothærus (stėr-nō-thē'rus), n. [NL. (Bell, 1825), < Gr. στέρνον, breast, chest, + θαιρός, the hinge of a door or gate.] A genus of tortoises, having a hinged plastron (whence the name).

sternothere (stėr'nō-thēr), n. [< NL. Sternothærus, q. v.] An African turtle of the genus Sternothærus. P. L. Sclater.

sternothyroid (stėr-nō-thī'roid), a. and n. [< NL. sternothyroideus, < sternum, q. v., + thyroideus.] I. a. In anat., of or pertaining to the sternum and the thyroid cartilage.—Sternothyroid muscle, a small muscle beneath the sternohyoid on either side, arising from the manubrium sterni, and inserted into the oblique line on the outer side of the thyroid cartilage: it is innervated from the ansa hypoglossi.

II. n. The sternothyroid muscle.

sternothyroideus (stėr″nō-thī-roi'dē-us), n.; pl. sternothyroidei (-ī). [NL.: see sternothyroid.] The sternothyroid muscle.

sternotracheal (stėr-nō-trā'kē-al), a. and n. [< NL. sternotrachealis, < sternum, q. v., + trachea: see tracheal.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the trachea; connecting the breast-bone and the windpipe, as a muscle.

II. n. The sternotrachealis.

sternotrachealis (stėr-nō-trā-kē-ā'lis), n.; pl. sternotracheales (-lēz). [NL.: see sternotracheal.] A muscle which in birds passes from the sternum to the trachea or windpipe; one of a pair, or one pair of two pairs, of long slender muscular slips attaching the trachea to the sternum or the clavicle, or both.

sternotribe (stėr'nō-trīb), a. [< Gr. στέρνον, the breast, + τρίβειν, rub.] In bot., touching the breast, as of an insect: noting those zygomorphous flowers, especially adapted for crossfertilization by external aid, in which the stamens and styles are so arranged as to strike the visiting insect on the breast. Compare nototribe, pleurotribe.

Sternoxi (stėr-nok'sī), n. pl. [NL., irreg. < Gr. στέρνον, breast, + ὀξύς, sharp.] In entom., in Latreille's system, a section of Serricornes, containing two tribes, the buprestids and elaterids, having the prosternum produced in front and pointed behind: distinguished among the serricorn beetles from Malacodermi and Xylotrogi. It corresponds to the modern families Buprestidæ and Elateridæ in a broad sense. See cuts under Agrilus, Buprestis, click-beetle, Pyrophorus, and wireworm. Also Sternoxia.

sternoxian (stėr-nok'si-an), a. and n. [< Sternoxi + -an.] Same as sternoxine.

sternoxine (stėr-nok′sin), a. and n. [< Sternoxi + -ine[1].] I. a. Pertaining to the Sternoxi, or having their characters.

II. n. A member of the Sternoxi.

stern-port (stėrn′pōrt), n. A port or opening in the stern of a ship.

stern-post (stėrn′pōst), n. The principal piece of timber or iron in a vessel's stern-frame. Its lower end is tenoned into or riveted to the keel, and to it the rudder is hung and the transoms are bolted. See cuts under rudder and stern[2]. —Stern-post knee, a large knee which unites the stern-post and the keel. See cut under stern[2].

stern-sheets (stėrn′shēts), n. pl. The space in a boat abaft the thwarts on which the rowers sit.

sternsman† (stėrnz′man), n. [< stern's, poss. of stern[2], + man.] A steersman; a pilot.

> Off from the sterne the sternesman diuing fell,
> And from his sinews flew his soule to hell.
> Chapman, Odyssey, xii. 582.

sternson (stėrn′son), n. [Appar. < stern[2] + -son as in keelson.] Same as stern-knee.

Sternula (stėr′nū-lä), n. [NL. (Boie, 1822), < Sterna + dim. -ula.] The least terns, a genus of Sterninæ containing species of the smallest size, with moderately forked tail, a white frontal crescent in the black cap, and the bill yellow tipped with black: of cosmopolitan distribution. S. minuta inhabits Europe, Asia, etc.; S. balænarum is South African; S. nereis, S. placens, and S. melanauchen are Asiatic, East Indian, Australian, and Polynesian; S. superciliaris is South American. The common bird of the United States and middle America is S. antillarum, which is very abundant along the Atlantic coast. It is 9 inches long and 20 in extent of wings, white with pearly-blue mantle over all the upper parts, a black cap, and the usual white lunule.

American Least Tern (Sternula antillarum).

sternule (stėr′nūl), n. A sea-swallow of the genus Sternula.

sternum (stėr′num), n.; pl. sterna (-nä) or sternums (-numz). [NL., also sternon, < Gr. στέρνον, the breast-bone.] 1. The breast-bone of man and many other vertebrates; a bone or longitudinal series of bones in the middle line of the ventral aspect of the body, chiefly in its thoracic section, completing the thoracic wall by articulation with more or fewer ribs, or elements of the scapular arch, or both: theoretically, in Owen's system, the hemal spines of a series of vertebræ. (a) In man and most mammals the sternum consists of an anterior piece, the "handle," manubrium, or presternum; of several (in man four) segments or sternebers constituting the body of the sternum, gladiolus, or mesosternum; and of a terminal piece, the xiphoid or ensiform cartilage, or xiphisternum. It articulates in man with the clavicles and with seven costal cartilages. The sternebers of a mammalian sternum may remain perfectly distinct, or be ankylosed in one. (See cut under mesosternum.) In cetaceans and sirenians the sternum is much reduced, and may be a single bone or quite rudimentary. In the monotrematous mammals a small median bone called proösteon is developed in front of the præsternum. The parts called episternum, omosternum, interclavicle, in the mammals just mentioned, or in various reptiles, or in batrachians, belong rather to the shoulder-girdle. There is no sternum in some reptiles, as serpents. See cuts under Catarrhina, Elephantinæ, interclavicle, omosternum, and skeleton. (b) In birds the sternum is a large single bone without trace of its original composition of several parts, highly specialized in form and function, in relation to the muscular apparatus of the wings, articulating with several ribs, with the coracoids, and sometimes ankylosed with the clavicle; it appears under two principal modifications, known as the carinate and ratite. (See these words.) The carinate sternum normally develops from five ossific centers, having consequently as many separate pieces in early life. The single median ossification, which includes the keel, is the lophosteon; the anterior lateral pieces, a pair, are the pleurostea, which become the costal or costiferous processes; the posterior pair are the metosteæ. In some birds are additional pieces, a pair of coracostea and a urosteon. The ratite sternum has no median ossification, or lophosteon. The passerine sternum normally develops a prominent forked manubrium. In a few birds, as cranes and swans, the sternum is hollowed out to receive convolutions of the windpipe. See cuts under carinate, Dinornis, and epipleura. (c) In Chelonia, the plastron of a turtle, consisting of several bones, normally nine, one median, and four lateral in pairs. These bones have no homology with the sternum of other vertebrates. See cuts under carapace, plastron, and Chelonia.

Shoulder-girdle, or Pectoral Arch, and Sternum of a Lizard (Iguana tuberculata): upper figure, under view; lower figure, side view. sc, scapula; ssc, suprascapula; msc, mesoscapula; cr, coracoid; pcr, precoracoid; mcr, mesocoracoid; ecr, epicoracoid; cl, clavicle; icl, interclavicle; gl, glenoid; st, sternum; xst, xiphisternum.

2. In arthropods, as insects and crustaceans, a median sternal or ventral sclerite of any somite of the cephalothorax, thorax, or abdomen; a sternite: the opposite of a tergite or notum. In such cases, sternum and sternite are used interchangeably, sternum being seldom used of the series of sternites as a whole. (See cut under cephalothorax.) In insects the three thoracic sterna are specified as prosternum, mesosternum, and metasternum. In Diptera, sternum generally means the mesosternum, as the other thoracic rings do not show a sternal piece. In Coleoptera, sternum is sometimes extended to include the episterna and epimera, or whole lower surface of a thoracic segment. See episternum, 3. —Antennary sternum. See antennary.—Cephalic sternum, in arachnology, the lower part of the head or gula; the central plate on the lower part of the cephalothorax of a spider, between the bases of the legs.—Sternum collare, in entom., the sternal prominence of the prothorax.—Sternum pectorale, in entom., the sternal prominence of the metathorax.

sternutation (stėr-nū-tā′shon), n. [< LL. sternutatio(n-), a sneezing, < L. sternutare, freq. of sternuere, sneeze.] The act of sneezing. De Quincey, Opium Eater, p. 135.

sternutative (stėr-nū′tā-tiv), a. [< L. sternutare, sneeze, + -ive.] Same as sternutatory. Bailey, 1731.

sternutativeness (stėr-nū′tā-tiv-nes), n. The character of being sternutative. Bailey, 1727.

sternutatory (stėr-nū′tā-tō-ri), a. and n. [= F. sternutatoire, < L. sternutare, sneeze: see sternutation.] I. a. Causing or tending to cause sneezing. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 476.

II. n.; pl. sternutatories (-riz). Anything which causes sneezing, as snuff: an errhine.

sternutory (stėr′nū-tō-ri), n. An erroneous form of sternutatory. Dunglison.

sternward, sternwards (stėrn′wärd, -wärdz), a. and adv. [< stern[2] + -ward, -wards.] Toward the stern.

sternway (stėrn′wā), n. The movement of a ship backward, or with her stern foremost.—To fetch sternway. See fetch[1].

stern-wheeler (stėrn′hwē″lėr), n. A steam-vessel propelled by one wheel, similar to a side-wheel, mounted astern: used for navigating shallow or narrow waters.

Steropus (ster′ō-pus), n. [NL. (Megerle, 1821), appar. < Gr. στερεός, solid, + ποίς = E. foot.] A genus of beetles of the family Carabidæ, containing about 100 species, widely distributed throughout Europe, northern Africa, Asia, Australia, and both Americas.

sterquilinous† (stėr-kwi-lī′nus), a. [< L. sterquilinium, sterenlinium, stercilinium, sterquilinum, a dunghill or dung-pit, < stercus, dung.] Pertaining to a dunghill; hence, mean; dirty; paltry. Howell, Letters, ii. 48.

sterraster (ste-ras′tėr), n. [< Gr. στερρός, var. of στερεός, solid, + ἀστήρ, star.] A form of spongespicule characteristic of the family Geodinidæ. It is of the polyaxon type, having many rays coalesced for the greater part of their lengths, but ending in separate hooklets.

Sterrastrosa (ster-as-trō′sä), n. pl. [NL.: see sterraster.] In Sollas's classification, a group of choristidan tetractinellid sponges, in which sterrasters are present, usually in addition to simple asters, as in the families Geodinidæ and Placospongiidæ: distinguished from Spirastrosa and Euastrosa.

sterrastrose (ste-ras′trōs), a. [< NL. sterrastrosus, < sterraster, q. v.] Provided with sterrasters, as a sponge; of or pertaining to the Sterrastrosa: distinguished from spirastrose.

sterret, n. A Middle English form of star[1].

sterrinck (ster′ingk), n. A seal of the genus Stenorhynchus (Ogmorhinus) or of the subfamily Stenorhynchinæ: as, the saw-toothed or crabeating sterrinck, Lobodon carcinophagus.

sterro-metal (ster′ō-met″al), n. An alloy of about three parts of copper with two of zinc, to which a small amount of iron and tin is added. This alloy is not in general use, but is said to be superior to gun-metal in tenacity, while at the same time less expensive. It has been used in Austria for the pumps of hydraulic presses.

stert[1] (stėrt), v. A dialectal spelling of start[1].

stert[2]†, n. A Middle English form of start[2].

sterte†. [Inf. sterte(n), pret. sterte, pp. stert.] An obsolete preterit of start[1].

stertor (stėr′tor), n. [< NL. stertor, < L. stertere, snore.] A heavy snoring sound which accompanies inspiration in certain diseases. Compare stertorous.

stertorious (stėr-tō′ri-us), a. [< stertor + -i-ous.] Same as stertorous. Poe, Prose Tales, I. 125.

stertoriousness (stėr-tō′ri-us-nes), n. Same as stertorousness. Poe, Prose Tales, I. 125.

stertorous (stėr′tō-rus), a. [< stertor + -ous.] Characterized by a deep snoring sound, such as characterizes the laborious breathing which frequently accompanies certain diseases, as apoplexy.

stertorously (stėr′tō-rus-li), adv. In a stertorous manner.

stertorousness (stėr′tō-rus-nes), n. The quality or state of being stertorous.

sterve†, v. A Middle English form of starve.

Stesichorean (ste-sik-ō-rē′an), a. [< LL. Stesichorēus, Stesichorius, < Gr. Στησίχορειος, Stesichorean, < Στησίχορος, Stesichorus (see def.).] Of or pertaining to the Greek lyric poet Stesichorus (Tisias) of Himera (about 632–550 B. C.), inventor of epodic composition; specifically, in anc. pros., noting (a) a trochaic trimeter of the form $- \smile - - \mid - \smile - - \mid - \smile - -$; (b) an encomiologic verse; (c) a line consisting of two dactylic tetrapodies, the last foot a spondee.

stet (stet). [L., 3d pers. sing. pres. subj. act. of stare, stand: see stand.] Let it (that is, the original) stand: a proof-reader's order to cancel an alteration previously made by him. It is indicated by putting a line of dots under what is crossed out, and writing "stet" in the margin. Abbreviated st.

stet (stet), v. t.; pret. and pp. stetted, ppr. stetting. To mark with the word "stet"; direct or cause to remain, after deletion, as printed; forbear to delete. [Colloq.]

stetch (stech), n. A ridge between two furrows, as in plowed land. [Prov. Eng.]

stetch (stech), v. t. [< stetch, n.] To form into ridges with a plow: followed by up. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stethiæum (steth-i-ē′um), n.; pl. stethiæa (-ä). [NL., < Gr. στηθαῖος, of the breast. < στῆθος, the breast.] In ornith., the entire anterior half of a bird: opposed to urætum. [Rare.]

stethidium (stē-thid′i-um), n.; pl. stethidia (-ä). [NL., dim. of Gr. στῆθος, the breast.] In entom., the thorax. Illiger.

stethograph (steth′ō-gråf), n. [< Gr. στῆθος, the breast, + γράφειν, write.] An instrument for recording the respiratory movements of the thorax. Also called pneumograph.

stethographic (steth-ō-graf′ik), a. [< stethograph + -ic.] Of or pertaining to, or obtained by means of, the stethograph. Nature, XLII. 581.

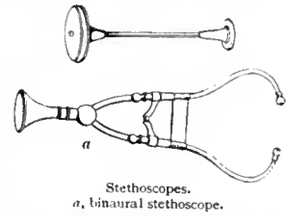
stethometer (stē-thom′e-tėr), n. [< Gr. στῆθος, the breast, + μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the respiratory movements of the walls of the chest. In one form a cord or band is extended round the chest, and its extension, as the thorax is expanded, is shown by an index on a dial-plate.

stethoscope (steth′ō-skōp), n. [= F. stéthoscope, < Gr. στῆθος, the breast, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An instrument used in auscultation to convey the sounds from the chest or other part of the patient to the ear of the observer.—Binaural stethoscope, a stethoscope in which the sound is conducted to both ears.—Differential stethoscope, a double stethoscope having elastic tubular branches and bells which can be applied to different parts of the thorax so as to compare the indications at various points.



Stethoscopes.
a, binaural stethoscope.

stethoscope (steth′ō-skōp), v. t.; pret. and pp. stethoscoped, ppr. stethoscoping. [< stethoscope, n.] To examine by means of a stethoscope. Lancet, 1890, II. 1267.

stethoscopic (steth-ō-skop'ik), a. [< stethoscope + -ic.] Of or pertaining to stethoscopy or the stethoscope; obtained by means of the stethoscope.

stethoscopical (steth-ō-skop'i-kal), a. [< stethoscopic + -al.] Same as stethoscopic.

stethoscopically (steth-ō-skop'i-kal-i), adv. In a stethoscopic manner; by means of the stethoscope.

stethoscopist (steth'ō-skō-pist), n. [< stethoscop-y + -ist.] One who is versed in the use of the stethoscope.

stethoscopy (steth'ō-skō-pi), n. [< Gr. στῆθος, the breast, + -σκοπία, < σκοπεῖν, view.] 1. The examination of the chest.—2. Auscultation with a stethoscope.

stet processus (stet prō-ses'us). [Law L.: L. stet, 3d pers. sing. pres. subj. act. of stare, stand; processus, process.] In old Eng. law: (a) The termination of a suit at law, upon consent of the parties, by an order of court having the effect of staying permanently all further proceedings. (b) The phrase entered on the record as expressing that order.

steve, v. t. See steeve[3].

stevedore (stē've-dōr), n. [< Sp. estivador, a wool-packer, hence a stower of wool for exportation, and gen. one who stows a cargo (cf. Sp. estiva = It. stiva = OF. estive, stowage, ballast), < estivar = Pg. estivar = It. stivare, press close, stow (a cargo), < L. stipare, press together: see stive[2].] One whose occupation is the stowage of goods, packages, etc., in a ship's hold; one who loads or unloads vessels.

steven (stev'en), n. [Early mod. E. also steaven; < ME. steven, stevene, steryn, steryne, stefne, stemne, < AS. stefn, stemn = OS. stemna, stemnia = OFries. stemma = MD. stemme, D. stem = MLG. stempne, stemme, LG. stemme = OHG. stimna, stimma, MHG. G. stimme, voice, = Icel. stefna, stemna, direction, summons, = Sw. stämma = Dan. stemme = Goth. stibna, voice; root and connections unknown. Cf. Gr. στόμα, mouth.] 1†. Voice; the voice.

> When Little John heard his master speake,
> Well knew he it was his steven.
> Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne. (Halliwell.)

2†. Speech; speaking; crying out.

> Manne, stynte of thy steuen and be stille.
> York Plays, p. 365.

3†. That which is uttered: a speech or cry; prayer.

> To thee, lady, y make my moone; I praie thee heere my steuen. Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 6.

4†. Word; bidding; command; direction.

> Thre semely sonnes and a worthy wiffe
> I haue euer at my steven to stande.
> York Plays, p. 45.

5. One's word or promise; an agreement; an appointment; hence, anything fixed by appointment.

> Stephen kept his steaven, and to the time he gave > Came to demand what penance he should have.
> Ellis, Spec. of Anc. Poetry, III. 121. (Nares.)

At unset steven†, at a time or place not previously specified; without definite appointment.

> It is ful fair a man to bere hym evene,
> For al day meeteth men at unset stevene.
> Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 666.

To set a steven, to make an agreement; fix an appointed time. [Prov. Eng.]

> Hit fil, on a tyde,
> That by her bothe assent was set a steven.
> Chaucer, Complaint of Mars, l. 52.

steven (stev'en), v. [< ME. stevenen, < AS. stefnian, call, summon (= Icel. stefna, stemna, cite, summon), < stefn, stemn, voice: see steven, n.] I. trans. 1†. To speak; utter; tell of; name.

> In Rome Y shalle zou steuene
> And [an] honyred kyrkes fowrty and scuen.
> Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 113.

2†. To call; summon; command; appoint.

> Lord God! I loue the lastandly,
> And highly, botht with harte and hande,
> That me, thy poure prophett Hely,
> Haue steuened me in this stede to stande.
> York Plays, p. 187.

3. To bespeak. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II.† intrans. To talk; call out; shout; make a noise.

> Ye rebaldis that regnys in this rowte,
> Ze stynte of youre steuenyng so stowte.
> York Plays, p. 307.

stevened†, a. [< late ME. stevynyd, stevend, steryndˌ also and appar. orig. steyned, steynyd, stened, lit. 'stained,' pp. of steynen, steinen, stain: see stain.] Party-colored. Cath. Ang., p. 363.

> Item, a steynynyd clothe, a crucifix, . . . xxd.
> Paston Letters, III. 408.

Stevia (stē'vi-ä), n. [NL. (Cavanilles, 1797), named after Esteve, a Spanish scientist.] 1. A genus of composite plants, of the tribe Eupatoriaceæ and subtribe Ageratew. It is characterized by crowded corymbose or loosely panicled heads with five or six nearly equal involucral bracts, five flowers, appendaged anthers, and a variable pappus of several scales or awns or of both mingled in the same head. Over one hundred species have been described, natives of the warmer parts of America from Buenos Ayres to Mexico, and especially numerous westward; absent in tropical Brazil and nearly so in Guiana. They are herbs or shrubs, often somewhat rigid, or rarely diffuse. Their leaves are usually opposite, three-nerved, and serrate, sometimes entire or three-parted. The flowers are white or purplish, forming slender heads. Several species are cultivated as border-plants in Europe. In the United States S. compacta and S. serrata, bearing a profusion of small white fragrant flowers, the latter flowering later, are grown under glass in great quantities for cutting and for winter use in houses. S. serrata and five other species extend within the United States into Arizona or Texas.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

stew[1] (stū), n. [< ME. stewe, stue, stuw, stw, etc., pl. stewes, stues, stuwes, stywes, stives, stuywes, < OF. estuve, estouve, a heated room, hothouse, bath-room, F. étuve, a vapor-bath, stove, = Sp. Pg. estufa = It. stufa, stove, hothouse, < OHG. stubā, stupā, MHG. stube, a heated room, a bath-room, G. stube, a room or chamber in general, = MLG. stove = MD. stove = AS. stofa, a hothouse, bath-room: see stove[1], the same word in a more orig. form. In defs. 8 and 9 the noun is from the verb.] 1. A heated room, especially such a room for bathing purposes; a hothouse; a stove.

> It fresethe more strongly in tho Contrees than on this half; and therfore hathe every man Stewes in his Hous, and in tho Stewes thei eten and don here Occupatiouns, alle that thei may. Mandeville, Travels, p. 131.

> Whan he came out of his stewe or bayne, he axyd drynke, by the force whereof he was poysoned.
> Fabyan, Chron., cxxv.

> It [a small artificially warmed room] is used for drying various substances, as plants, extracts, conserves, &c., or for taking vapor baths. In this case the stew or stove is said to be wet or humid; in the opposite case it is said to be dry. Dunglison, Med. Dict., p. 987.

2. Specifically, a hatters' drying-room. Halliwell.—3†. A room; a chamber; a closet.

> Troylus, that stood and myghte it se
> Thorghout a litel wyndowe in a stewe,
> Ther he bishet, sen mydnyght, was on mewe.
> Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 601.

4. A brothel; a bagnio: often used in the plural, sometimes with the force of a singular noun.

> Sleuthe . . . wedded on Wanhope, a wenche of the stewes. Piers Plowman (C), xxiii. 159.

> Wommen of the styves. Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 34.

> Shall we every decency confound?
> Through taverns, stews, and bagnios take our round?
> Pope, Imit. of Horace, I. vi. 120.

5†. A lock hospital. See hospital.

> In the borough of Southwark, prior to the time sometimes fixed upon for the origin of syphilis, there were places called stews, where prostitutes were confined and received the benefits of surgical assistance.
> S. Cooper, Practice of Surgery (6th ed.), p. 332. [(Encyc. Dict.)

6†. A prostitute: sometimes in the plural form with a singular meaning.

> And shall Cassandra now be termed, in common speeche, a stewes? G. Whetstone, Promos and Cass., I., iv. 3.

> It was so plotted betwixt her husband and Bristoll that instead of that beauty he had a notorious stew sent to him.
> Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 146.

7†. A close vessel in which something is cooked or stewed; a stew-pot or stew-pan.

> I have seen corruption boil and bubble
> Till it o'er-run the stew.
> Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 321.

8. Food cooked by stewing; especially, meat or fish prepared by slow cooking in a liquid.

> The contents of the kettle—a stew of meat and potatoes— . . . had been taken off the fire and turned out into a yellow platter.
> George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 11.

9. A state of agitation or ferment; mental disturbance; worry; fuss. [Colloq.]

> And he, though naturally bold and stout,
> In short, was in a most tremendous stew.
> Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 104.

Box-stew, an oyster-stew made of box-oysters—that is, of large select oysters.—Irish stew, a dish made of mutton, onions, and potatoes, and sometimes other vegetables, stewed in water mixed with flour, and seasoned with salt and pepper.

stew[1] (stū), v. [< ME. stewen, stuen, stuwen*, < OF. estuver (estuwer*), bathe, stew, F. étuver, stew, = Sp. estufar, estofar, estobar = Pg. estufar = It. stufare, stew (cf. D. MLG. LG. stoven (> G. stoven) = Sw. stufva = Dan. stuve, stew); from the noun: see stew[1], n. Cf. stive[3], a doublet of stew[1].] I. trans. 1†. To bathe, as in a liquid or a vapor-bath.

> Stuwyn or bathyn, or stuyn in a stw. Balneo.
> Prompt. Parv.

2†. Figuratively, to steep.

> The Stockes were fitter for him; the most corrupted fellow about the Suburbs, his conscience is stewd in Bribes.
> Brome, Sparagus Garden, v. 13.

3. To cook (food) by simmering or slowly boiling; prepare by cooking in a liquid kept at the simmering-point: as, to stew meat or fruit; to stew oysters.

> Stuwyn or stuyn mete. Stupho. Prompt. Parv.

> Stew'd shrimps and Afric cockles shall excite
> A jaded drinker's languid appetite.
> Francis, tr. of Horace's Satires, ii. 4.

Stewed Quaker. See Quaker.

II. intrans. To be cooked by slowly simmering.—To stew in one's own grease. See grease.

stew[2] (stū), n. [< ME. stewe, stue, stiewe, stiwe = MLG. stouwe, stouw, stou, stow, a dam, weir, fish-pond; connected with stouwen, dam, hem in, = G. stauen, dam, = MD. stouwen, heap up, collect. Cf. stow[1].] 1. A pond, usually artificial, used for domestic purposes; especially, a pool or tank in which fish are kept until needed for the table; a vivarium; a stew-pond.

> Many a breem and many a luce in stuwe.
> Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 350.

> At the Priory, a low and moist situation, there were ponds and stews for their fish.
> Gilbert White, Antiq. of Selborne, Letter xxvi.

> We find vivarium sometimes rendered as "vivary" and at other times as "stew." Athenæum, No. 3234, p. 524.

2. A breeding-place for tame pheasants. Encye. Dict.—3. An artificial bed of oysters: used of the old Roman and also of the modern methods of fattening.

stew[3] (stū), n. [< ME. stew (Sc. pl. storys), mist; cf. Dan. stöv, dust, D. stof, dust (stofregen, drizzling rain), G. staub, dust.] Dust; a cloud of dust, smoke, or vapor. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.] stew[4]†, v. A Middle English variant of stow[1].

steward (stū'ärd), n. [< ME. steward, stewarde, stewerd, stewerde, stuward, stuard (also stewart, stuart, as in the surname Stewart, Stuart; AF. estuard), earlier stiward, styward, < AS. stīgweard, later stīweard (> Icel. stīvardhr), a steward, < stīgu, stīgo, a sty, pen for cattle, + weard, a ward: see sty[2] and ward. Cf. AS. stīgwita, stīwita, a steward, < stīgu, stīgo, a sty, + wita, an officer, adviser.] 1. One who has charge of the household or estate of another; a majordomo; especially, a person employed in a court, household, or important domestic establishment of any kind to superintend financial affairs, as by keeping accounts, collecting rents or other revenue, or disbursing money for household expenses.

> This lessoun loke thow nogt for-gete:
> The stuard, countroller, and tresurere,
> Sittand at de deshe, thou haylse in fere.
> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 299.

> The first of them, that eldest was and best,
> Of all the house had charge and governement,
> As Guardian and Steward of the rest.
> Spenser, F. Q., I. x. 37.

> Protector, steward, substitute
> Or lowly factor for another's gain.
> Shak., Rich. III., iii. 7. 133.

> The hedge broke in, the banner blew,
> The butler drank, the steward scrawl'd.
> Tennyson, Day-Dream.

2. An officer or retainer appointed to perform duties similar to those mentioned above; especially, a person appointed to provide and distribute food and all the requisites of the table; a purveyor. (a) In some British colleges, one who has charge of the commons. (b) One of a ship's company whose duty it is to distribute provisions to the officers and crew. In passenger-ships he has charge of the table, servants, staterooms, etc., and is called distinctively chief steward, the title steward being also extended to his male helpers—those who wait at table and attend to the staterooms. In a man-of-war the paymaster's steward is now styled paymaster's yeoman (see yeoman); the cabin-steward, ward-room steward, steerage-steward, and warrant-officers' steward are petty officers charged with providing for their several messes and keeping the apartments in order.

3. Figuratively, a manager; especially, one who controls expenditure; a disburser.

> A man is but a steward of his owne goods; wherof God one day will demaund an account.
> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 251.

> And what not rare? Luxury being the steward, and the treasure unexhaustible. Sandys, Travailes, p. 25.

4. Formerly, in the English gilds, one of the officers in charge of the finances of the society; also, a corresponding functionary in municipal affairs. The title is still given in English towns to magistrates varying in functions, authority, rank, etc. In this latter case it is usually qualified by some limiting word: as, the city steward of York; the land steward of Norwich; the town steward of Northampton; the lord high steward of Gloucester.

That the stewards of enery cratte that ben contributory shullen be called to the accompte to knowe the charge.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 385.

5. In the early church, same as econome or œconomus.—6. A fiscal agent of certain bodies; specifically, in the Methodist Church, an officer having charge of the finances and certain other material interests of the church.—Hospital steward. See hospital.—Lord high steward of England, one of the former great officers of state: his chief functions were at an early date assumed by the justiciar. This office was the inheritance of the Earls of Leicester, till forfeited by Simon de Montfort to Henry III., at the close of whose reign it was abolished as a permanent dignity. A lord high steward is now created only for particular occasions—namely, a coronation or the trial of a peer—the office to cease when the business requiring it is ended. In the former case the lord high steward is commissioned to settle matters of precedence, etc.; in the latter, to preside in the House of Lords.—Lord steward of the household, in England, one of the chief officers of the royal household. He is the head of the court called the Board of Green Cloth, which has the supervision of the household expenses and accounts and their payment, the purveyance of provisions, etc.; but his duties are practically performed by a permanent official called the master of the household. The lord steward is a peer and a member of the ministry.—Steward, or high steward of Scotland, an ancient officer of the crown of the highest dignity and trust. He had not only the administration of the crown revenues, but the chief oversight of all the affairs of the household, and the privilege of the first place in the army, next to the king, in battle.—Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds. See Chiltern Hundreds, under hundred.

steward (stū′ärd), v. t. [< steward, n.] To manage as a steward.

Did he thus requite his mother's care in stewarding the estate? Fuller, Holy War, p. 85.

stewardess (stū′ärd-des), n. [< steward + -ess.] A female steward; specifically, a woman who waits upon women in passenger-vessels, etc.

My new attendant . . . told me she had formerly been the stewardess of a passenger vessel at the same time that her husband was steward.
Jean Ingelow, Off the Skelligs, vi.

stewardly (stū′ärd-li), adv. With or as with the care of a steward; prudently; providently. [Rare.]

It is with a provident deliberation, not a rash and prodigal hand, to be dealt; and to be stewardly dispensed, not wastefully spent.
Tooker, Fabrick of the Church (1604), p. 48. (Latham.) stewardly (stū′ärd-li), a. Managing; careful; provident. Halliwell.

stewardry (stū′ärd-ri), n. [Also stewartry, q. v.; < steward + -ry.] Stewardship.

stewardship (stū′ärd-ship), n. [< ME. stiwardshepe; < steward + -ship.] The office or functions of a steward.

He hym gaue, withynne a litill space,
Of all his lande the Stiwar[d]shepe to holde,
And full power to rewle it as he wold.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1056.

Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward. Luke xvi. 2.

stewart†, n. An obsolete spelling of steward.

stewartry (stū′ärt-ri), n. [Sc. var. of stewardry.] 1†. Same as stewardry.

As an human stewartry, or trust,
Of which account is to be giv'n, and just.
Byrom, Poetical Version of a Letter.

2. In Scotland, a jurisdiction over a certain extent of territory, very similar to that of a regality; also, the territory over which this jurisdiction extends. Most stewartries consisted of small parcels of land which were only parts of a county; but the stewartry of Kirkcudbright (often called distinctively "The Stewartry"), and that of Orkney and Shetland, make counties by themselves.

stewed† (stūd), a. [< stew[1] + -ed[2].] Lodged in or belonging to the stews.

O Aristippus, thou art a greate medler with this woman, beyng a stewed strumpette.
Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus. (Davies.)

stewerd†, n. An old spelling of steward.

stewish† (stū′ish), a. [< stew[1] + -ish[1].] Pertaining to or befitting the stews.

Rhymed in rules of stewish ribaldry.
Bp. Hall, Satires, I. ix. 9.

stew-pan (stū′pan), n. A utensil in which anything is stewed.

stew-pond (stū′pond), n. Same as stew[2].

There is a dovecote, some delightful stew-ponds, and a very pretty canal.
Jane Austen, Sense and Sensibility, xxx.

stew-pot (stū′pot), n. 1. A pot with a cover for making stews, soups, etc.—2. A covered pan used for heating rooms with charcoal. [Prov. Eng.]

steyt, steyet, v. and n. Same as sty[1].

steyeret, n. A Middle English form of stair.

stg. An abbreviation of sterling.

sthenia (sthe-nī′ä), n. [NL., < Gr. σθένος, strength.] In pathol., strength; excessive force: opposed to asthenia or debility.

sthenic (sthen′ik), a. [< Gr. σθένος, strength, might, + -ic.] 1. Strong; robust; characterized by power of organization or energy of function, as a part or organ of an animal. See megasthenic, microsthenic.—2. In pathol., attended with a morbid increase of vital (especially cardiac) action. Sthenic diseases are opposed to diseases of debility, or asthenic diseases.—3. Exciting; inspiring: said of feeling. [A use introduced by Kant.]

sthenochire (sthen′ō-kīr), n. [< Gr. σθένος, strength, + χείρ, hand.] An apparatus for exercising and strengthening the hands for pianoforte- or organ-playing.

stiacciato (stiä-chä′tō), a. [It., crushed, flattened (cf. stiacciato, n., a cake), pp. of stiacciare, crush, press.] In decorative art, in very low relief, as if a bas-relief had been pressed flatter.

stiant, n. A variant of styan for sty[3].

stib (stib), n. [Origin obscure.] The American dunlin, purre, or ox-bird: a gunners' name. See cut under dunlin. F. C. Browne, 1876. [Massachusetts.]

stibble (stib′l), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of stubble.

stibbler (stib′lèr), n. [< stibble + -er[1].] 1. One who goes from ridge to ridge on the harvest-field, and cuts and gathers the handfuls left by the reapers. Jamieson. Hence—2. One who has no settled charge, but goes from place to place: often applied humorously to a clerical probationer. Scott, Guy Mannering, xlvi. [Scotch in both senses.]

stibborne†, a. A Middle English spelling of stubborn.

stibial (stib′i-al), a. [< NL. stibium + -al.] Like or having the qualities of antimony; antimonial.

stibialism (stib′i-al-izm), n. [< stibial + -ism.] Antimonial intoxication or poisoning. Dunglison.

stibiated (stib′i-ā-ted), a. [< NL. stibium + -ate[1] + -ed[2].] Impregnated with antimony.

stibic (stib′ik), a. [< NL. stibium + -ic.] Same as antimonic.

stibiconite (stib′i-kon-īt), n. A hydrous oxid of antimony, of a pale-yellow color, sometimes massive and compact, and also in powder as an incrustation. Also stiblite.

stibious (stib′i-us), a. [< NL. stibium + -ous.] Same as antimonious.

stibium (stib′i-um), n. [NL., < L. stibium, also stibi, stimmi, < Gr. στίβι, στίμμι, a sulphuret of antimony. Cf. antimony.] Antimony.

stiblite (stib′līt), n. Same as stibiconite.

stibnite (stib′nīt), n. [< NL. stibium + -n- (?) + -ite[2].] Native antimony trisulphid (Sb_2S_3), a mineral usually occurring in orthorhombic crystals, sometimes of great size, often acicular, and also massive. See cut under acicular. The color is lead-gray. Stibnite is sometimes blackish and dull externally, and with an iridescent tarnish, but when fresh it has a very brilliant metallic luster, especially on the surface of perfect cleavage. It is very soft, yielding to the pressure of the nail. This ore is the source of most of the antimony of commerce. Also called antimonite and antimony-glance.

stibogram (stib′ō-gram), n. [< Gr. στίβος, a footstep, + γράμμα, a writing.] A graphic record of footprints.

stiborn†, stibourn†, a. Middle English forms of stubborn.

stich (stik), n. [< Gr. στίχος, a row, order, line, < στείχειν, go in line or order: see sty[1]. The word occurs in acrostic[1] (for acrostich), distich, etc.] 1. A verse, of whatever measure or number of feet.—2. A line in the Scriptures.—3. A row or rank, as of trees.

sticharion (sti-kā′ri-on), n.; pl. sticharia (-ä). [< LGr. στιχάριον.] In the Gr. Ch., a vestment corresponding to the alb of the Western Church. Like the alb, it is a long robe with close sleeves, and formerly was of white linen. At the present day, however, it is often of silk or other rich material, and may be purple in color. It is worn by subdeacons, deacons, priests, and bishops.

stichel (stich′el), n. [Also stichall, stetchil; origin obscure.] A term of reproach, applied especially by parents to children. Halliwell. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Barren, stichel! that shall not serve thy turn.
Lady Alimony, l. 4 b.

sticher (stich′èr), v. i. [Assibilated freq. of stick[1].] To catch eels in a particular way. See quotation under sticherer.

"Stichering," a Hampshire method [of catching eels], is perhaps one of the most amusing.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXIX. 259.

sticherer (stich′èr-èr), n. [< sticher + -er[1].] One who stichers.

In the wide, deep drains used for irrigation eels abound, and the object of the sticherer is to thrust the sickle under the eel's body, and, with a sudden hoist, to land him on the bank, from which he is transferred to the bag.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXIX. 259.

sticheron (sti-kē′ron), n.; pl. stichera (-rä). [< MGr. στιχηρόν (sc. τροπάριον), neut. of στιχηρός, pertaining to a versicle, < Gr. στίχος, a verse, versicle.] In the Gr. Ch., a troparion, or one of several troparia, following the psalms and intermingled with stichoi. See stichos.

stichic (stik′ik), a. [< Gr. στιχικός, of lines or verses, < στίχος, a row, line: see stich.] Pertaining to a verse or line; consisting of verses or lines; linear; specifically, in anc. pros., composed of lines of the same metrical form throughout: opposed to systematic.

The stichic portions of the cantica of Terence are divided into strophes. Amer. Jour. Philol., VII. 399.

stichid (stik′id), n. [< stichidium, q. v.] In bot., same as stichidium.

stichidium (sti-kid′i-um), n.; pl. stichidia (-ä). [NL., < Gr. στίχος, a row, line, + dim. -ίδιον.] In bot., a peculiarly modified branch of the thallus in some algæ, which serves as a receptacle for the tetraspores. See cut under Algæ. Farlow, Marine Algæ, p. 165.

stichomancy (stik′ō-man-si), n. [< Gr. στίχος, a row, line, + μαντεία, divination.] Divination by lines or passages in books taken at hazard; bibliomancy.

stichometric (stik-ō-met′rik), a. [< stichometr-y + -ic.] Same as stichometrical. J. R. Harris, Jour. of Philol., No. 15, p. 310.

stichometrical (stik-ō-met′ri-kal), a. [< stichometric + -al.] Of or pertaining to stichometry; characterized by measurement by stichs or lines; stating the number of lines.

Quite lately Mommsen has published . . . a previously unknown stichometrical catalogue of the books of the Bible, and also of the writings of Cyprian.
Salmon, Int. to the New Testament, p. 559, note.

stichometry (sti-kom′e-tri), n. [< Gr. στίχος, a row, line, verse, + -μετρία, < μέτρον, a measure.] In paleog., measurement of manuscripts by lines of fixed or average length; also, an edition or a list containing or stating such measurement.

It ["The Assumption of Moses"] is included in the stichometry of Nicephorus, who assigns it the same length . . . as the Apocalypse of St. John.
Salmon, Int. to the New Testament, p. 526.

stichomythia (stik-ō-mith′i-ä), n. [< Gr. στιχομυθία, dialogue in alternate lines, < στιχομυθεῖν, answer one another line by line: see stich and myth.] In anc. Gr. drama and bucolic poetry, dialogue in alternate lines, or pairs or groups of lines; also, arrangement of lines in this manner. Usually in such dialogue one speaker opposes or corrects the other, often with partial repetition or imitation of his words. Also stichomythy.

The speeches of this play are of inordinate length, though stichomythia in the Greek antithetical manner is also introduced. A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., I. 118.

stichos (stik′os), n.; pl. stichoi (-oi). [< Gr. στίχος, a row, line, verse.] 1. In paleog., a line of average length assumed in measuring the length of a manuscript. See epos, 3, and stichometry.—2. In the Gr. Ch., a verse or versicle, as in the psalter or the odes; especially, a verse or part of a verse from a psalm, used as a versicle.

stichwort†, n. See stitchwort.

stick[1] (stik), v.; pret. and pp. stuck, ppr. sticking. [A verb confused in form and meanings with stick[2], stick[1] being more prop. steek (as in dial. uses) or steak* (after the analogy of break, speak, etc.); E. dial. steek, Sc. steik, etc.; < ME. stiken, prop. steken (pret. stak, pp. steken, i-steken, y-steke, stiken, stoken; also, by conformity with stick[2], pret. stiked, stikede, pp. stiked), < AS. stecan* (pret. stæc*, pp. stecen*), pierce, stab, = OS. stekan (pret. stak) = OFries. steka = MD. D. steken = MLG. LG. steken = OHG. stechan, stehhan, MHG. G. stechen (pret. stach, pp. gestochen), pierce; not found in Scand. or Goth. (the Goth. form would be stikan*; cf. Goth. staks, a mark, stigma, stiks, a point, a moment of time); Teut. √ stik = L. √ stig (in instigare, prick, instigate, stinguere* (in comp. distinguere, distinguish, exstinguere, extinguish), stimulus, a prick, goad, stilus, a point, style, etc.) = Gr. √ στιγ (in στίζειν, prick, στίγμα, a prick, mark, spot) = Skt. √ tij for stij*, be sharp. From this root are ult. E. stick[2], stick[3], stitch, steak, sting, etc., and, through OF., ticket, etiquette (from a collateral Teut. root, stake[1], stock[1], stang[1], stoke[2], stoker, etc.); from the L. root are ult. E. style[1], distinguish, extinguish, distinct, extinct, instinct, stimulate, stimulus, instigate, prestige, etc. The verb stick[1], pierce, has been confused, partly in ME. and completely in mod. E., with its derivative stick[2]. The reg. mod. pret. of stick[1] would be stack* or stake* (as in ME.), but the pret. has yielded to the influence of the pp., and, becoming stoke*, appears in mod. E. with shortened vowel stuck, as also in the pp. (cf. break, pret. brake, now broke, pp. broken; speak, pret. spake, now spoke, pp. spoken—verbs phonetically parallel to stick[1].) I. trans. 1. To pierce or puncture with a pointed instrument, as a dagger, sword, or pin; pierce; stab.

The sowdan and the Cristen everichone
Ben al tohewe [hewed] and stiked at the bord.
Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale, l. 332.

He drew his shining blade,
Thinking to stick her where she stood.
Clerk Colvill; or, The Mermaid (Child's Ballads, I. 194).

A villain fitter to stick swine
Than ride abroad redressing women's wrong.
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

2. To push, thrust, or drive the point or end of, as into something which one seeks to pierce, or into a socket or other receptacle; place and fix by thrusting into something.

A broche golde and asure,
In whiche a ruby set was lik an herte,
Cryseyde hym gaf, and stak it on his sherte.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1372.

The Israelites . . . neither prayed to him, neither kissed his bones, nor offered, nor sticked up candles before him.
Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 123.

I would not see . . . thy fierce sister
In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs.
Shak., Lear, iii. 7. 58.

3. To thrust; cause to penetrate or enter in any way; loosely, to thrust or put (something) where it will remain, without any idea of penetration.

Byndez byhynde, at his bak, bothe two his handez, . . .
Stik hym stifly in stokez.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 157.

A lean old gentleman . . . stuck his head out of the window. J. S. Le Fanu, Dragon Volant, i.

Behind the said car was stuck a fresh rose.
Kingsley, Westward Ho, ii.

4. To insert in something punctured: as, to stick card-teeth; hence, to set with something pointed or with what is stuck in: as, to stick a cushion full of pins.

Tho chambur dore stekes tho vssher theme
With preket [candles] and tortes [torches] that come brenne. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 315.

Biron. A lemon.
Long. Stuck with cloves. Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 654.

5. To thrust or fix upon something pointed: as, to stick a potato on a fork.

Their heads were stuck upon spears.
Burke, Rev. in France.

6. In carp., to run or strike (a molding) with a molding-plane.—7†. To close; shut; shut up. See steek.

When the kyng had consayuit Cassandra noise,
He comaundet hir be caght, & closit full hard:
In a stithe house of ston stake hir vp fast.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7191.

Stick a pin there, make a note of that; take heed of that. [Colloq.]—To stick off†, to set off; adorn. Compare the phrase and quotation under II.

The humble variety whereof [of the Torch-bearers' habits] stucke off the more amplie the maskers high beauties, shining in the habits of themselues.
Chapman, Masque of the Middle Temple.

To stick out, to cause to project; protrude.—To stick pigs, to hunt wild hogs with the spear, the hunter being mounted, especially in British India. [Colloq.]

II. intrans. 1. To be fastened or fixed by or as by piercing or by insertion; remain where thrust in: as, the arrow sticks in the target.

Therein stiked a lily flour. Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 196.

Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 317.

2. To be thrust; extend or protrude in any direction.

She espied his cloven foot,
From his gay robes sticking thro'.
The Dæmon Lover (Child's Ballads, I. 303).

To stick off†, to appear to advantage; show off; make a display.

I'll be your foil, Laertes; in mine ignorance
Your skill shall, like a star i' the darkest night,
Stick fiery off indeed. Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 268.

To stick out, to project; be prominent.

One hair a little here sticks out, forsooth.
B. Jonson, Volpone, iii. 2.

To stick up, to stand up; be erect. [Colloq.]—To stick up for, to espouse or maintain the cause of; speak or act in defense of; defend: as, to stick up for an absent friend; to stick up for the truth or one's rights. [Colloq.]

Heard him abuse you to Ringwood. Ringwood stuck up for you and for your poor governor—spoke up like a man—like a man who sticks up for a fellow who is down.
Thackeray, Philip, xl.

To stick up to. Same as to stand up to (which see, under stand). [Colloq.]

No matter how excellent may be the original disposition of the head boy, if there is no one who dare stick up to him, he soon becomes intolerable.
Contemporary Rev., LV. 173.

stick[1] (stik), n. [< stick[1], v.] A thrust with a pointed instrument which pierces, or is intended to pierce.

stick[2] (stik), v.; pret. and pp. stuck (formerly sticked), ppr. sticking. [< ME. sticken, stikken, stykken, stiken, styken, steken, stikien, stykien, stekien (pret. stikede, etc.; also, by conformity with stick[1], pret. stak, pp. steken, stoken), be fastened, adhere, also fasten, < AS. stician (pret. sticode) (= MLG. steken), pierce, stab, intr. cleave, adhere, stick; a weak form, parallel with an unreecorded form to be assumed as the cognate of the LG., etc., weak verb, namely AS. steccan* = MD. stecken = MLG. LG. stecken = OHG. stecchen, MHG. G. stecken (pret. steckte; also, by conformity with stechen, pret. stach), stick, set, stick fast, remain, = Sw. sticka = Dan. stikke, stab, sting (these appar. due in part to the LG. forms cognate with stick[1]); not found in Goth., where the form would be stakjan*, standing for staikjan* = AS. as if stæcan*, etc., a secondary form from the root stik*, or else directly from the root stak*, a collateral form of the root stik*: see stick[1], and cf. stick[3]. The forms and senses of the primitive and derivative verbs become confused, and cannot now be wholly separated; in most dictionaries the two verbs are completely merged. Under stick[2] are put all uses of the verb so spelled not clearly belonging originally to stick[1] or stick[3]. The proper pret. of stick[2] is sticked; this has been superseded by stuck, or dial. stack (ME. stak), which prop. belongs only to stick[1].] I. trans. 1. To pierce; stab. See stick[1].—2. To fasten or attach by causing to adhere: as, to stick a postage-stamp on a letter.

Twenty ballads stuck about the wall.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 65.

You should be on the look-out when Debarry's side have stuck up fresh bills, and go and paste yours over them.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xxviii.

3. To cause to come to a stand; puzzle; pose. [Slang.]—4. To impose upon; cheat; chouse. [Slang.]

The pawnbrokers have been so often stuck . . . with inferior instruments that it is difficult to pledge even a really good violin.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 18.

The second purchaser found a customer willing to give ten francs for it, but the latter's family so ridiculed him for having been stuck on the canvas that he put it away out of sight in his garret. The American, XIII. 14.

5. To beat, as at a game of cards: with for before the penalty or stake: as, to stick one for the drinks at poker. [Slang.]—To be stuck on, to be greatly taken with; be enamored of. [Slang, U. S.]—To be stuck up, to be proud or conceited. [Colloq.]—To stick one's self up, to exalt or display one's self; assert one's self. [Colloq.]—To stick up, to plunder; waylay and rob: as, to stick up a mail-coach; to stick up a bank. [Bush-rangers' slang, Australia.]

Having attacked, or, in Australian phrase, stuck up the station, and made prisoners of all the inmates.
Leisure Hour, March, 1885, p. 192. (Encyc. Dict.)

II. intrans. 1. To cleave as by attraction or adhesion; adhere closely or tenaciously.

She nadde on but a streit olde sak,
And many a cloute on it ther stak.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 458.

The gray hairs yet stuck to the heft.
Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

And on thy ribs the limpet sticks.
Tennyson, The Sailor-Boy.

2. To remain where placed; hold fast; adhere; cling; abide.

A born devil, on whose nature
Nurture can never stick. Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 189.

Now began an ill name to stick upon the Bishops of Rome and Alexandria. Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

But finding that they [doubts] still stuck with his followers, he took the last and best way of satisfying them.
Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, II. ii.

"We may teach you to ride by-and-by, I see; I thought not to see you stick on so long—" "I should have stuck on much longer, sir, if her sides had not been wet."
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xi.

3. To hold or cling in friendship and affection.

There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.
Prov. xviii. 24.

Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
Sticking together in calamity.
Shak., K. John, iii. 4. 67.

4. To be hindered from proceeding or advancing; be restrained from moving onward or from acting; be arrested in a course, career, or progress; be checked or arrested; stop.

And zit in my synne y stonde and sticke, Ynel custum ys ful hard to blynne.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 197.

I had most need of blessing, and "Amen"
Stuck in my throat. Shak., Macbeth, ii. 2. 33.

We stuck upon a sand bank so fast that it was after sunset before we could get off.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 93.

5. To be embarrassed or puzzled; be brought to a standstill, as by being unable to interpret or remember the words one is attempting to read or recite.

They will stick a long time at a part of a demonstration, not for want of will and application, but really for want of perceiving the connection of two ideas.
Locke, Conduct of the Understanding, § 6.

Some of the young chaps stick in their parts. They get the stage-fever and knocking in the knees.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, III. 142.

6. To scruple; hesitate: with at.

I . . . desired his opinion of it, and in particular touching the paucity of Auditors, whereat I formerly sticked, as you may remember.
Thomas Adams, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 148.

To serve him I should, I think, stick at nothing.
Pepys, Diary, IV. 141.

To stick at it, to persevere. [Colloq.]—To stick by, (a) To adhere closely to; be constant or faithful to.

For, of so many thousands that were vnder mine empire, you only haue folowed and sticked by me.
J. Brende, tr. of Quintus Curtius, v.

(b) To remain with; abide in the memory or possession of: as, ill-gotten gains never stick by a man.

Nothing stickes faster by vs, as appeares,
Then that which we learne in our tender yeares.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 197.

To stick in one's gizzard. See gizzard.—To stick in or to one's fingers, to remain unlawfully in one's hands.

He was—if half Leicester's accusations are to be believed—a most infamous peculator. One-third of the money sent by the Queen for the soldiers stuck in his fingers.
Motley, Hist. United Netherlands, II. 87.

To stick out, to refuse to comply or come to terms; hold out or hold back: as, to stick out for a better price.—To stick to, to abide firmly and faithfully by; hold fast to: as, to stick to a resolution.

stick[2] (stik), n. [< stick[2], v.] 1. An adhesion, as by attraction or viscosity.

A magnetic stick between the wheels and the rails, which largely augments the amount of traction.
Elect. Rev. (Amer.), XVII. 194.

2. Hesitation; demur; a stop; a standstill.

When he came to the Hill Difficulty, he made no stick at that, nor did he much fear the lions.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, Sixth Stage.

3. A strike among workmen. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stick[3] (stik), n. [< ME. sticke, stikke, < AS. sticca, a stick, peg, nail, = MD. stick, steck, MLG. sticke, LG. stikke = OHG. stiecho, steecho, steecho (> It. stecco, thorn, stecca, staff, F. étiquette, ticket, etc.), MHG. steeke, steche, G. stecken, a stick; cf. Icel. stika, stick (for fuel), a stick (yard-measure): so called as having orig. a sharp point; from the root of stick[1] (AS. stecan*, etc.): see stick[1], stick[2], and cf. stake, steak, stitch, stickle[1], etiquette, ticket, etc.; also stock[1], etc.] 1. A piece of wood, generally rather long and slender; a branch of a tree or shrub cut or broken off; also, a piece of wood chopped or cut for burning or other use: often used figuratively.

Of all townes, castels, fortes, bridges, and habitations, they left not any stick standing.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

Wither'd sticks to gather, which might serve Against a winter's day. Milton, P. R., I. 316.

Come, hostess, lay a few more sticks on the fire. And now, sing when you will.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 174.

2. A cudgel; a rod; a wand; especially, a walking-stick or cane.

Al-though thow stryke me with thi staffe, with stikke or with gerde. Piers Plowman (B), xii. 14.

Your old friend Mr. Burchell, walking . . . with the great stick for which we used so much to ridicule him!
Goldsmith, Vicar, xxx.

Stick is a large genus, running up from switch to cudgel, from rod to bludgeon. De Quincey, Homer, ii.

3. Anything in the form of a stick, or somewhat long and slender: as, a stick of candy; a stick of sealing-wax; one of the sticks of a fan, whether of wood, metal, or other material.

A painted Landskip Fann, cutt, gilded Sticks.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 176.

4. Specifically — (a) The wand or baton with which a musical conductor directs a chorus or orchestra. (b) The wooden rod or back of a bow for playing on a musical instrument of the viol class. (c) The wooden rod or wand, with a rounded or padded head, with which a drum or similar musical instrument is beaten and sounded; a drumstick. — 5. In printing: (a) A composing-stick. (b) A piece of furniture used to lock up a form in a chase or galley. It is called, according to the place it occupies, head-stick, foot-stick, side-stick, or gutter-stick. — 6. The rod which is carried by the head of a rocket, and serves to direct its flight.

And the final event to himself [Mr. Burke] has been that, as he rose like a rocket, he fell like the stick.
T. Paine, Letter to the Addressers.

7. A timber-tree. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] — 8. Naut., a mast: as, the gale was enough to blow the sticks out of her. [Humorous.] — 9. That which is strung on a stick; a string: as, a stick of herring. — 10. The number of twenty-five eels, or the tenth part of a bind, according to the old statute de ponderibus. Also called strike. — 11. A stick-insect. See stick-bug and walking-stick. — 12. A person who is stiff and awkward in bearing; hence, a stupid, incapable, or incompetent person. [Colloq.]

I was surprised to see Sir Henry such a stick. Luckily the strength of the piece did not depend upon him.
Jane Austen, Mansfield Park, xiii.

About the poorest stick for a legislator ever elected.
New York Tribune, Sept. 4, 1855.

As cross as two sticks. See cross[1]. — Devil on two sticks. See devil. — In a cleft stick. See cleft[2]. — Long stick. In measuring British muslins, long stick is the yard-measure of 36 inches and a thumb, equivalent to 37 inches. It is used to measure goods for the home market. Goods for the foreign market are measured by short stick, in which the yard consists of 35 inches and a thumb, or about 36 inches. — Middle stick, a measure containing 35½ inches and a thumb to the yard, or about 36½ inches. — Stick and stone, the whole; everything: as, to leave neither stick nor stone standing. Compare stock and block, under stock[1].

And this it was she swore, never to marry
But such a one whose mighty arm could carry . . .
Her bodily away through stick and stone.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, ii. 1.

To beat all to sticks, to outdo completely. [Colloq., Eng.]

Many ladies in Strasburg were beautiful, still
They were beat all to sticks by the lovely Odille.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 239.

To cut one's stick. See cut. — To go to sticks and staves, to go to pieces; fall into ruin: in allusion to a tub with broken hoops.

She married a Highland drover or tacksman, I can't tell which, and they went all to sticks and staves.
Miss Ferrier, Inheritance, I. 95. (Jamieson.)

=Syn. 2. See staff.

stick[3] (stik), v. t. [< stick[3], n.] 1. To furnish or set with sticks, as for climbing upon: said of peas.

But I . . . must . . . go stick some rows of peas which are already flourishing in our new garden.
Carlyle, in Froude, First Forty Years, xxiv.

I was sticking peas in my own garden.
Jean Ingelow, Fated to be Free, vi.

2. In printing, to arrange in a composing-stick; compose: as, to stick type.

stickadore†, stickadove† (stik'a-dōr, -duv), n. [Also stickadoue, sticadoue, stickado, steckado, sticados; < F. stechados (Cotgrave), for corrupt forms of NL. stœchados, flos stœchados, flower of Stœchas: stœchados, gen. of Stœchas, q. v.] A species of lavender, Lavandula Stœchas, used officinally. See lavender[2].

stick-bait (stik'bāt), n. Insects or worms found sticking to the under surface of stones, and used as bait. [North Carolina.]

stick-bug (stik'bug), n. 1. Any orthopterous insect of the family Phasmidæ: particularly applied to Diapheromera femorata, the commonest insect of this kind in the United States, where it is also called wood-horse, stick-insect, twig-bug, twig-insect, walking-twig, walking-stick, prairie-alligator, specter, and devil's horse. See cut under Phasma. [Local, U. S.] — 2. A predaceous reduvioid bug of the United States, Emesa longipes, with a long slender brown body and long spider-like legs, the front pair of which are raptorial; the spider-bug. When lodged on a twig, it swings its body back and forth like some of the daddy-long-legs. This insect resembles some of the Phasmidæ, which receive the same name, but belongs to a different order.

Stick-bug (Emesa longipes).

stick-culture (stik'kul″tūr), n. A bacterial culture made by thrusting a platinum needle (sterilized and then dipped into a growth of the microbe or other material to be examined) into the culture-medium, as a tube of gelatin.

sticked†. An obsolete past participle of stick[2].

sticker[1] (stik'ėr), n. [< stick[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which sticks or stabs; especially, one who kills swine or other animals by sticking or stabbing.

Master Bardell the pig-butcher, and his foreman, or, as he was more commonly called, Sam the Sticker.
Hood, Sketches on the Road, The Sudden Death.

2. An anglers' gaff. [Slang.] — 3. A sharp remark or an embarrassing question, intended or adapted to silence or pose a person. Thackeray.

sticker[2] (stik'ėr), n. [< stick[2] + -er[1].] 1. One who adheres, clings, or sticks to anything.

Although culture makes us fond stickers to no machinery, not even our own. M. Arnold, Culture and Anarchy, Pref.

2. One who sticks, or causes to adhere, as by pasting.

The bill-sticker, whose large flat basket, stuffed with placards, leaned near him against the settle.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xxviii.

3. Same as paster, 2. — 4. An article of merchandise which sticks by the dealer and does not meet with a ready sale. [U. S.] — 5. In organ-building, a wooden rod serving to transmit motion between the ends of two reciprocating levers. Stickers are usually held in place by pins in their ends, which work freely in holes or slots in the lever-ends. See cut under organ. 6. pl. The arms of a crank-axis employed to change the plane and direction of a reciprocating motion. For distinction the arms are thus named when they act by compression, and are called trackers when they act by tension. The axis is termed a roller.

stickful (stik'fūl), n. [< stick[3] + -ful.] In printing, as much composed type as can be contained in a composing-stick.

stick-handle (stik'han″dl), n. The handle of a walking-stick. See cane[1].

stick-helmet (stik'hel″met), n. A mask with additional guards for the forehead and head, used in cudgel-play.

stickiness (stik'i-nes), n. The property of being sticky, adhesive, or tenacious; viscousness; glutinousness.

sticking[1] (stik'ing), n. [Verbal n. of stick[1], v.] The act of stabbing or piercing. (a) The act of thrusting a knife or spear into the neck or body of a beast. Hence — (b) pl. The part of a beast's neck where it is stabbed by the butcher; a coarse and cheap cut of beef or pork.

The meat is bought in "pieces," of the same part as the sausage-makers purchase — the stickings — at about 3*d.* the pound.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 196.

(c) Stitching; needlework. [Scotch, in the form steeking.]

The cloth of it was satin fine,
And the steeking silken wark.
The Jolly Goshawk (Child's Ballads, III. 289).

sticking[2] (stik'ing), n. [Verbal n. of stick[2], v.] 1. The act of coming to a stop. Compare sticking-place.

All stickings and hesitations seem stupid and stony.
Donne, Letters, iv.

Specifically — 2. pl. The last of a cow's milk; strippings. [Prov. Eng.]

sticking-place (stik'ing-plās), n. The point where anything sticks, stays, or stops; a place of stay.

Which flower out of my hand shall never passe,
But in my heart shall have a sticking-place.
Gorgeous Gallery of Gallant Inventions (1578), quoted in [Furness's Variorum Shakespeare, Macbeth.

But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we'll not fail. Shak., Macbeth, i. 7. 60.

sticking-plaster (stik'ing-plās″tėr), n. 1. Same as resin plaster (which see, under plaster). — 2. Court-plaster.

In the reign of Charles I., . . . suns, moons, stars, and even coaches and four were cut of sticking plaister, and stuck on the face.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 169.

sticking-point (stik'ing-point), n. Same as sticking-place.

One sight of thee would nerve me to the sticking-point.
Disraeli, Alroy, i. 2.

stick-insect (stik'in″sekt), n. Same as stick-bug, 1. See walking-stick.

stick-in-the-mud (stik'in-thē-mud'), n. An old fogy; a slow or insignificant person. [Colloq.]

This rusty-colored one [a pin] is that respectable old stick-in-the-mud, Nicias.
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, I. x.

stickit (stik'it), p. a. [Sc. form of sticked, pp. of stick[2] (and stick[1]).] Stuck. [Scotch.] — Stickit minister, in Scotland, a student of theology who fails to obtain license, or a licentiate who fails to obtain a pastoral charge.

He became totally incapable of proceeding in his intended discourse —. . . shut the Bible — stumbled down the pulpit-stairs, trampling upon the old women who generally take their station there — and was ever after designated as a stickit minister.
Scott, Guy Mannering, ii.

stick-lac (stik'lak), n. See lac[2], 1.

stickle[1] (stik'l), n. [< ME. stikel*, stykyl* (in comp.), < AS. sticel (also, with diff. formative, sticels), a prickle, sting, = MD. stekel, later stickel, D. stekel = LG. stikkel (in comp.), also stikke = OHG. stichil, MHG. stichel, G. dial. stickel, a prickle, sting, = Icel. stikill, the pointed end of a horn, = Norw. stikel, a prickle (cf. MD. stackel, OHG. stachulla, stacchulla, stachilla, stachila, MHG. G. stachel, a thorn, prickle, sting); akin to sticea, etc., a (pointed) stick (see stick[2]), < steean*, pierce, prick, stick: see stick[1].] A sharp point; a prickle; a spine. [Obsolete, except in *stickle*back, stickle-haired, stickly, and the local name Pike o' Stickle, one of the two Pikes of Langdale in England.]

stickle[2] (stik'l), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also stikle; < ME. stikel, < AS. sticol, sticel, steep, high, inaccessible, < steean*, pierce, prick, stick: see stick[1].] I. a. 1. Steep; high; inaccessible. — 2. High, as the water of a river; swollen; sweeping; rapid.

When they came thither, the riuer of the Shenin, which inuironeth and runneth round about the citie, they found the same to be so deepe and stikle that they could not passe ouer the same. Giraldus Cambrensis, Conq. of Ireland, [p. 37 (Holinshed's Chron., I.).

II. n. 1. A shallow in a river where the water, being confined, runs with violence.

Patient anglers standing all the day
Neare to some shallow stickle or deepe bay.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. 4.

2. A current below a waterfall.

The water runs down with a strong, sharp stickle, and then has a sudden elbow in it, where the small brook trickles in. R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, vii.

[Prov. Eng. in all uses.]

stickle[3] (stik'l), v.; pret. and pp. stickled, ppr. stickling. [A mod. var. of stightle, which also appears (with a reg. change of the orig. guttural gh to f) as stiffle: see stightle. In defs. II., 2, 3, the sense has been influenced by association with stick[2].] I.† trans. To interpose in and put a stop to; mediate between; pacify.

They ran unto him, and pulling him back, then too feeble for them, by force stickled that unnatural fray.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

II. intrans. 1.† To interpose between combatants and separate them; mediate; arbitrate.

There had been blood shed if I had not stickled.
W. Carturight, The Ordinary (Hazlitt's Dodsley, XII. 275).

2. To take part with one side or the other; uphold one party to a dispute.

Fortune (as she 's wont) turn'd fickle,
And for the foe began to stickle.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. iii. 516.

You, Bellmour, are bound in Gratitude to stickle for him; you with Pleasure reap that Fruit which he takes pains to sow. Congreve, Old Batchelor, I. 4.

3. To contest or contend pertinaciously on insufficient grounds; insist upon some trifle.

I hear no news about your bishops, farther than that the lord lieutenant stickles to have them of Ireland.
Swift, Letter, May 13, 1727.

4. To hesitate.

Some . . . stickle not to aver that you are cater-cousin with Beelzebub himself.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 122.

5. To play fast and loose; waver from one side to the other; trim.

stickleback (stik'l-bak), n. [Also corruptly sticklebag, and metamorphosed tittlebat; < ME. stikelbak*, stykylbak; < stickle[1] + back[1]. Cf. thornback, and see stickling.] Any fish of the family Gasterosteidæ: so called from the sharp

Two-spined Stickleback (Gasterosteus aculeatus).
(From Report of U. S. Fish Commission.)

spines of the back. They are small fishes, a few inches long, of 5 genera, Gasterosteus, Pygosteus, Eucalia, Apeltes, and Spinachia, but very pugnacious and rapacious, being especially destructive to the spawn and fry of many larger fishes. They inhabit fresh waters and sea-arms of northern Europe, Asia, and North America to the number of nearly 20 species. The common two- or three-spined stickleback, banstickle, burnstickle, or tittlebat, is G. aculeatus, 4 inches long. Another is the nine- or ten-spined, Pygosteus pungitius. The fifteen-spined stickleback, or sea-stickleback, is Spinachia vulgaris, of the northerly coasts of Europe, a marine species, from 5 to 7 inches long, of very slender elongate form, with a tubular snout. They are among the most characteristic fishes of the northern hemisphere in the colder regions. Except in the breeding-season, they live in shoals, and are sometimes numerous enough to become of commercial value for their oil or for manure. They are noted for the construction of elaborate nests which the male builds for the eggs, in which several females often or generally deposit their burden. The eggs are comparatively few, and while being hatched are assiduously guarded by the male. The local or popular synonyms of the sticklebacks are numerous, among them prickleback, sprickleback, stickling, and sharpling.

Nest of Stickleback.

sticklebag (stik'l-bag), n. A corruption of stickleback. I. Walton, Complete Angler, i. 5.

stickle-haired† (stik'l-hārd), a. Having a rough or shaggy coat; rough-haired.

These [dogs] that serve for that purpose are stickle haired, and not unlike the Irish grayhounds.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 60.

stickler (stik'lėr), n. [An altered form of stiteler, stightler*, after stickle for stightle: see stickle[3], stightle.] 1†. An attendant on or a judge of a contest, as a duel; a second; hence, an arbitrator; a peacemaker.

The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,
And, stickler-like, the armies separates.
Shak., T. and C., v. 8. 18.

Buriasso, a stickler or iudge of any combatants, such a one as brings into the listes such as shall fight a combat, or run at tilt. Florio, 1598.

Hee is a great stickler in the tumults of double Iugges, and venters his head by his Place, which is broke many times to keep whole the peace.
Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Constable.

2. An obstinate contender about anything, often about a thing of little consequence: as, a stickler for ceremony; an advocate; a partizan.

He was one of the delegates (together with Dr. Dale, &c.) for the Tryall of Mary Queen of Scots, and was a great stickler for the saving of her life.
Aubrey, Lives (William Aubrey).

stickling (stik'ling), n. [Early mod. E. also styckelyng; < ME. stikeling, stykelynge, stekelyng; < stickle[1] + -ing[3]. Cf. stickleback.] A fish: same as stickleback.

stickly (stik'li), a. [< stickle[1] + -y[1].] Prickly; rough. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stick-play (stik'plā), n. Same as cudgel-play or single-stick.

stick-pot (stik'pot), n. A lath-pot for taking lobsters: the common form of lobster-trap, semicylindrical or rectangular in shape, and constructed of laths or of any narrow strips of wood.

Other names by which they are known to the fishermen are "box-traps," "house-pots," "stick-pots," and "lath-coops." Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 666.

stickseed (stik'sēd), n. A plant of the genus Echinospermum, of the borage family. The genus consists of rather slender rough weeds whose seeds bear on the margin from one to three rows of barbed prickles, by which they adhere to clothing, etc. E. Virginicum, the beggar's-lice, is a leading American species.

sticktail (stik'tāl), n. The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida. See cut under Erismatura. J. P. Giraud, 1844. [Long Island.]

sticktight (stik'tīt), n. A composite weed, Bidens frondosa, whose flat achenia bear two barbed awns; also, one of the seeds. The name is doubtless applied to other plants with adhesive seeds. Compare beggar's-ticks, beggar's-lice.

sticky[1] (stik'i), a. [< stick[2] + -y[1].] 1. Having the property of adhering to a surface; inclining to stick; adhesive; viscous; viscid; glutinous; tenacious.—2. Humid; producing stickiness; muggy: as, a disagreeable, sticky day. [Colloq.]

sticky[2] (stik'i), a. [< stick[3] + -y[1].] Like a stick; stiff.

But herbs draw a weak juyce, and have a soft stalk; and therefore those amongst them which last longest are herbs of strong smell, and with a sticky stalk.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 583.

Sticta (stik'tä), n. [NL. (Schreber, 1774), < Gr. στικτός, spotted, dappled, punctuated, verbal adj. < στίζειν, mark with a pointed instrument, prick: see stigma.] A large, mostly tropical, genus of parmeliaceous lichens, of the family Peltigeræi. The thallus is frondose-foliaceous, variously lobed, but for the most part wide-lobed, and coriaceous or cartilaginous in texture. The apothecia are scutelliform, submarginal, elevated, and blackened; the spores are fusiform and acicular, two- to four-celled, usually colorless. There are about 20 North American species. Some of the exotic species, as S. argyracea, are rich in coloring matter. See crottles[2], hazel-crottles, lungwort, 3, oaklungs, rag[1], 3, and cut under apothecium.

sticteine (stik'tē-in), a. [Irreg. < Sticta + -ine.] In bot., relating or belonging to the genus Sticta. E. Tuckerman, N. A. Lichens, I. 83.

stictiform (stik'ti-fôrm), a. [< NL. Sticta + L. forma, form.] In bot., having the form or characters of the genus Sticta.

stid†, n. A Middle English form of stead.

stiddy[1] (stid'i), n. A dialectal form of stithy.

James Yorke, a blacksmith of Lincoln, . . . is a servant as well of Apollo as Vulcan, turning his stiddy into a study.
Fuller, Worthies, Lincoln, II. 295.

stiddy[2], a. A dialectal form of steady[1].

stiet. See sty[1], sty[2], sty[3].

Stiebel's canal. See canal[1].

stieve, stievely. See steeve[1], steevely.

stife[1] (stīf), a. A dialectal variant of stiff.

stife[2] (stīf), n. [Cf. stifle, stive[2].] Suffocating vapor. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

A large open-mouthed chimney or stack, about 45 feet high (one for each set), which serves to carry off the smoke from the fires, the fumes from the metal, and the stife from the grease.
W. H. Wahl, Galvanoplastic Manipulations, lxv. 517.

stiff (stif), a. and n. [Also dial. stife, stive (with diphthong after orig. long vowel); < ME. stif, styf, steef, stef, < AS. stif or stīf = OFries. stef, North Fries. stif, styf, stīf (Siebs) = MD. stief, stijf, D. stijf = MLG. stif or stīf, LG. stief = MHG. stīf (appar. < MLG.), G. steif = Dan. stiv = Sw. styf = Norw. stiv (Icel. stīfr* (Webster), not found, stífr (Haldorsen), prob., like the other Scand. forms, of LG. origin); Teut. √ stif, stīf; akin to Lith. stiprus, strong, stipti, be stiff, L. stipes, a stem (see stipe). Cf. stifle[1].]

I. a. 1. Rigid; not easily bent; not flexible or pliant; not flaccid: as, stiff paper; a cravat stiff with starch.

A stif spere. King Alisaunder, l. 2745.

Oh God, my heart! she is cold, cold, and stiff too,
Stiff as a stake; she's dead!
Fletcher, Double Marriage, v. 2.

Hark! that rustle of a dress,
Stiff with lavish costliness!
Lowell, The Ghost-Seer.

2. Not fluid; thick and tenacious; neither soft nor hard: as, a stiff batter; stiff clay.

I grow stiff, as cooling metals do.
Dryden, Indian Emperor, v. 2.

3. Drawn tight; tense: as, a stiff cord.

Then the two men which did hold the end of the line, still standing there, began to draw, & drew til they had drawn the ends of the line stiffe, & together.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 433.

Keep a stiff rein, and move but gently on;
The coursers of themselves will run too fast.
Addison, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., ii.

4. Not easily bent; not to be moved without great friction or exertion; not working smoothly or easily.

As he [Rip Van Winkle] rose to walk, he found himself stiff in the joints. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 56.

The plugs were stiff, and water could not be got.
Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, v.

5. Not natural and easy in movement; not flowing or graceful; cramped; constrained: as, a stiff style of writing or speaking.

And his address, if not quite French in ease,
Not English stiff, but frank, and form'd to please.
Cowper, Tirocinium, l. 671.

Our hard, stiff lines of life with her
Are flowing curves of beauty.
Whittier, Among the Hills.

6. Rigidly ceremonious; formal in manner; constrained; affected; unbending; starched: as, a stiff deportment.

This kind of good manners was perhaps carried to an excess, so as to make conversation too stiff, formal, and precise. Addison, Spectator, No. 119.

7. Strong and steady in motion: as, a stiff breeze.

And, like a field of standing corn that 's mov'd
With a stiff gale, their heads bow all one way.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, iii. 1.

8. Strong; lusty; stanch, both physically and mentally. [Now provincial only.]

Yet oft they quit
The dank, and, rising on stiff pennons, tower
The mild aereal sky. Milton, P. L., vii. 441.

Somtyme I was an archere good,
A styffe and eke a stronge,
I was commytted the best archere
That was in mery Englonde.
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 120).

9. Strong: said of an alcoholic drink, or mixed drink of which spirit forms a part.

But, tho' the port surpasses praise,
My nerves have dealt with stiffer.
Tennyson, Will Waterproof.

10. Firm in resistance or persistence; obstinate; stubborn; pertinacious.

A grene hors gret & thikke,
A stede ful stif to strayne [guide].
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 173.

Ther the batayle was stiffest and of more strengthe.
Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 18.

The boy remained stiff in his denial, and seemed not affected with the apprehension of death.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 58.

11. Hard to receive or accept; hard to bear.

Labienus—
This is stiff news—hath with his Parthian force Extended Asia from Euphrates.
Shak., A. and C., i. 2. 104.

12. Hard to master or overcome; very difficult: as, a stiff examination in mathematics.

We now left the carriages, and began a stiff climb to the top of the hill. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 447.

13. Naut., bearing a press of canvas or of wind without careening much; tending to keep upright: as, a stiff vessel; a stiff keel: opposed to crank.

It continued a growing storm all the day, and towards night so much wind as we bore no more sail but so much as should keep the ship stiff.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 17.

14. High; steep: as, a stiff price. [Slang.]—15. Unyielding; firm: said of prices, markets, etc.: as, the wheat-market is stiff. [Commercial slang.]—16. Rigid as in death; dead. [Slang.]—A stiff neck. See neck.—To keep a stiff upper lip. See lip.=Syn. 1. Unbending, unyielding.—6. Prim, punctilious.—10. Inflexible, uncompromising.

II. n. 1. A dead body; a corpse. [Slang.]

They piled the stiffs outside the door—
They made, I reckon, a cord or more.
John Hay, Mystery of Gilgal.

2. In hatting, a stiffener.—3. Negotiable paper. [Commercial slang.]—4. Forged paper. [Thieves' slang.]—To do a bit of stiff, to accept or discount a bill. [Slang.]

How are the Three per Cents, you little beggar? I wish you'd do me a bit of stiff; and just tell your father, if I may overdraw my account, I'll vote with him.
Thackeray, Newcomes, vi.

stiff (stif), v. i. [< ME. stiffen, styffen, a later form of stiven, early ME. stifien*, < AS. stifian or stīfian, be stiff, < stif, stīf, stiff: see stiff, a., and cf. stive[1], the older form of the verb.] To become or grow stiff. (a) To become upright or strong.

As sone as they [chicks] styffe and that they steppe kunne,
Than cometh and crieth her owen kynde dame.
Richard the Redeless, iii. 54.

(b) To become obstinate or stubborn.

But Dido affrighted stift also in her obstinat onset.
Stanihurst, Æneid, iv.

stiff-borne (stif'bōrn), a. Carried on with unyielding constancy or perseverance.

The stiff-borne action. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 1. 177.

stiffen (stif'n), v. [= Sw. styfna = Dan. stivne; as stiff + -en[1].] I. intrans. To become stiff. (a) To become less flexible or pliant; become rigid.

With chatt'ring teeth he stands, and stiff'ning hair,
And looks a bloodless image of despair!
Pope, Iliad, xiii. 364.

In this neighbourhood I have frequently heard it said that if a corpse does not stiffen within a reasonable time it is a sign of another death in the family.
N. and Q., 7th ser., X. 114.

(b) To become less soft or fluid; grow thicker or harder; become inspissated: as, jellies stiffen as they cool.

The lender soil then stiff'ning by degrees. Dryden.

(c) To become steady and strong: as, a stiffening breeze.
(d) To become unyielding; grow rigid, obstinate, or formal.

Sir Aylmer Aylmer slowly stiffening spoke:
"The girl and boy, Sir, know their differences!"
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

(e) To become higher in price; become firmer or more unyielding: as, the market stiffens. [Commercial slang.]

II. trans. To make stiff. (a) To make less pliant or flexible.

From his saddle heavily down-leapt,
Stiffened, as one who not for long has slept.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 259.

(b) To make rigid, constrained, formal, or habitual.

I pity kings, whom Worship waits upon, . . .
Whom Education stiffens into state.
Cowper, Table-Talk, l. 125.

(c) To make more thick or viscous; inspissate: as, to stiffen paste. (d) To make stubborn or obstinate.

The man . . . who is settled and stiffened in vice.
Barrow, Sermons, III. xvi. (Encyc. Dict.)

stiffener (stif'nėr), n. [< stiffen + -er[1].] One who or that which stiffens. (a) Formerly used specifically for a piece of stiff material worn inside a stock or neckcloth, and also for a similar device worn in leg-of-mutton sleeves. (b) In bookbinding, a thick paper or thin millboard used by bookbinders as an inner lining to book-covers to give them the needed stiffness.

stiffening (stif'ning), n. [Verbal n. of stiffen, v.] 1. Something that is used to make a substance stiff or less soft, as starch.—2. Something inserted to make a garment, or part of a garment, stiff and capable of keeping its shape. See buckram, crinoline.

stiffening-machine (stif'ning-ma-shēn″), n. In hat-making, an apparatus for applying the heated composition used to harden and stiffen the felt of hats. It consists of a vat filled with melted shellac, and a pair of rollers for removing the superfluous stiffening material after the hat has been dipped in the vat.

stiffening-order (stif'ning-ôr″dėr), n. A custom-house warrant by which ballast or heavy goods may be taken on board before the whole inward cargo is discharged, to prevent the vessel from getting too light. Imp. Dict.

stiff-hearted (stif'här'ted), a. Obstinate; stubborn; contumacious.

They are impudent children and stiffhearted.
Ezek. ii. 4.

stiffle[1] (stif'l), n. A dialectal form of stighle, stickle[3].

stiffle[2]†, n. An obsolete form of stifle[2].

stiffler (stif'lėr), n. [Also stifler; < late ME. styffeler, a var. of stightler*, whence also stickler: see stickler, stickle, stiffle, stighle.] 1†. Same as stickler.

The king intendeth, in eschewing all inconvenients, to be as big as they both, and to be a styffeler atween them.
Paston Letters, III. 98, quoted in J. Gairdner's Richard III. i.

The drift was, as I judged, for Dethick to continue such stifflers in the College of his pupils, to win him in time by hook or crook the master's room.
Abp. Parker, p. 252. (Davies.)

2. A busybody. Halliwell (spelled stifler). [Prov. Eng.]

stiffly (stif'li), adv. [< ME. stifliche, styfly, stifli (= MD. stijflick); < stiff + -ly[2].] In a stiff manner, in any sense of the word stiff.

And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,
But bear me stiffly up. Shak., Hamlet, i. 5. 95.

Pistorius and others stiffly maintain the use of charms, words, characters, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 271.

stiff-neck (stif'nek), n. Cervical myalgia; sometimes, true torticollis.

stiff-necked (stif'nekt or -nek″ed), a. Stubborn; inflexibly obstinate; contumacious: as, a stiff-necked people.

stiff-neckedness (stif'nekt-nes or -nek″ed-nes), n. The property or character of being stiff-necked; stubbornness.

stiffness (stif'nes), n. [< ME. styfnesse, styfnes; < stiff + -ness.] The state or character of being stiff, in any sense.

stifftail (stif'tāl), n. The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida. See cut under Erismatura. [Local, U. S.]

stiff-tailed (stif'tāld), a. Having rigid rectrices or tail-feathers denuded to the base; erismaturine: specifically noting ducks of the genus Erismatura.

stifle[1] (stī'fl), v.; pret. and pp. stifled, ppr. stifling. [Early mod. E. also stifil; < Icel. stifla = Norw. stirla, dam up, choke, stop, perhaps (like Norw. stivra, stiffen) freq. of Norw. stira = Sw. styfva = Dan. stive = ME. stiven, stiffen: see stive[1], stiff, v. The word was prob. confused with E. stive[2]. < OF. estiver, pack tight. stive: see steve.] I. trans. 1†. To choke up; dam up; close.

Make fast the chamber door, stifle the keyhole and the crannies. Shirley, Traitor, iii. 1.

2. To kill by impeding respiration, as by covering the mouth and nose, by introducing an irrespirable substance into the lungs, or by other means; suffocate or greatly oppress by foul air or otherwise; smother.

Sure, if I had not pinch'd yon 'till you wak'd, you had stifled me with Kisses. Congreve, Old Batchelor, ii. 3.

I took my leave, being half stifled with the closeness of the room. Swift, Account of Partridge's Death.

3. To stop the passage of; arrest the free action of; extinguish; deaden; quench: as, to stifle flame; to stifle sound.

They [colored bodies] stop and stifle in themselves the rays, which they do not reflect or transmit.
Newton, Opticks, I. ii. x.

She whisper'd, with a stifled moan.
Tennyson, Mariana in the South.

4. To suppress; keep from active manifestation; keep from public notice; conceal; repress; destroy: as, to stifle inquiry; to stifle a report; to stifle passion; to stifle convictions.

A record surreptitiously or erroneously made up, to stifle or pervert the truth. Blackstone, Com., III. xxv.

=Syn. 2. Suffocate, Strangle, etc. See smother.—4. To hush, muffle, muzzle, gag.

II. intrans. To suffocate; perish by asphyxia.

You shall stifle in your own report,
And smell of calumny. Shak., M. for M., ii. 4. 158.

stifle[2] (stī'fl), n. [Formerly also stiffle; appar. < stiff, dial. stife: see stiff.] 1. The stifle-joint.

If the horse bee but hurt in the stifle with some stripe or straine.
Topsell, Four-Footed Beasts (1607), p. 405. (Halliwell.)

2. Disease or other affection of the stifle-bone or stifle-joint, as dislocation or fracture of the patella.

stifle-bone (stī'fl-bōn), n. The patella of the horse; the kneepan, kneecap, or bone of the stifle-joint.

stifled (stī'fld), a. [Formerly also stiffled; < stifle[2] + -ed[2].] Affected with stifle. See stifle[2], 2.

The horse is said to be stifled when the stiffling bone is removed from the place.
Topsell, Four-Footed Beasts (1607), p. 405. (Halliwell.)

stifle-joint (stī'fl-joint), n. The stifle or knee-joint of the horse; the joint of the hind leg between the hip and the hock, whose convexity points forward, which is close to the belly, and which corresponds to the human knee. See cut under Equidæ.

stifler (stī'flėr), n. [< stifle[1], v., + -er[2].] Milit. See camouflet.

stifle-shoe (stī'fl-shö), n. A form of horseshoe exposing a curved surface to the ground: used in treating a stifled horse. It is fixed on the sound foot, with the effect of forcing the animal to throw its weight on the weak joint, and thus strengthen it by exercise.

stifling (stī'fling), p. a. Close; oppressive; suffocating: as, a stifling atmosphere.

E'en in the stifling bosom of the town.
Cowper, Task, iv. 753.

stifling-bonet†, n. Same as stifle-bone.

stightt, v. [ME. stigten, < AS. stihtan, stihtian (for stiftan*), order, rule, govern, = MD. D. stichten, found, build, impose a law, = OHG. MHG. G. stiften = Icel. stipta, stifta, stigta = Sw. stifta, stikta = Dan. stifte, found, institute; cf. Icel. stētt, foundation, pavement, stepping-stone, foot-piece. Hence stightle.] To found; establish; set.

The ston that theron was stigt was of so stif vertu
That neuer man vpon mold migt it him on haue.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4425.

stightlet, v. [< ME. stightlen, styghtlen, stightelen, stiztlen, styztlen, order, arrange, direct, freq. of stighten, AS. stihtan, order, rule, govern: see stight. Hence mod. E. stickle[3], stiffle[2], q. v.] I. trans. 1. To order; arrange; dispose of; take order concerning; govern; direct.

That other was his stiward that stigtled al his meyne.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1199.

II. intrans. To make arrangements; treat; direct; mediate; stickle.

When thay com to the conrte keppte wern thay fayre, Stygtled with the stewarde, stad in the halle.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 90.

stigma[1] (stig'mä), n.; E. pl. stigmas (stig'mäz), used chiefly in senses 1, 2, and 6; L. pl. stigmata (stig'ma-tä), used more or less in all the senses. [= F. stigmate = Sp. Pg. estigma = It. stimate, stigma = G. stigma, < NL. stigma, < L. stigma, < Gr. στίγμα, pl. στίγματα, a mark, esp. of a pointed instrument, a spot, brand, < στίζειν, mark (with a point), prick, brand: see stick[1].] 1. A mark made with a red-hot iron, formerly in many countries upon criminals as a badge of infamy; a brand impressed on slaves and others.

The Devil, however, does not imprint any stigma upon his new vassal, as in the later stories of witch-compacts.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 95.

2. Any mark of infamy, slur, or disgrace which attaches to a person on account of evil conduct.

Happy is it for him that the blackest stigma that can be fastened upon him is that his robes were whiter than his brethren's. Bp. Hall, Remains, Pref.

3. In anat. and zoöl., a mark; a marked point or place: variously applied to marks of color, as a spot, and to many different pores or small holes. Specifically—(a) A birth-mark; a nævus. (b) The point or place on the surface of an ovary where a mature Graafian follicle ruptures. (c) In ornith., the place where the calyx or ovisac of the ovary ruptures to discharge an ovum into the oviduct. See calyx, 3 (b). (d) In entom.: (1) The exterior orifice of a trachea; a spiracle. See cuts under pulmonary, flesh-fly, sheep-bot, and Acarida. (2) A chitinous spot or mark on the anterior margin of the fore wings of many insects, formed by a special enlargement of a vein; a pterostigma. (e) In Protozoa, a spot of pigment; the so-called eye of an infusorian. (f) In Annelida, one of the pores or openings of the segmental organs. (g) In Hydrozoa, the pore by which a pnenmatocyst opens to the exterior. See cut under Hydrozoa. (h) In Pharyngopneusta, as an ascidian, one of the ciliated openings by which the cavity of the pharynx is placed in communication with that of the atrial canal. See cuts under Appendicularia and Tunicata.

4. A place or point on the skin which bleeds periodically or at irregular intervals during some mental states. The spontaneous appearance of stigmata was formerly regarded superstitiously.—5. pl. In the Rom. Cath. Ch., marks said to have been supernaturally impressed upon the bodies of certain persons in imitation of the wounds on the crucified body of Christ.

In the life of St. Francis of Assisi we have the first example of the alleged miraculous infliction of stigmata.
Encyc. Brit., XXII. 549.

6. In bot., a modified part of the style or, when that is wanting, of the surface of the ovary, which in impregnation receives the pollen. In Stigmas.

1. Of Cynodon Dactylon. 2. Of Vitis Labrusca. 3. Of Papaver Argemone. 4. Of Gordonia pubescens. 5. Of Tilia Americana. 6. Of Silene Pennsylvanica. 7. Of Tribulus cistoides. 8. Of Dionæa muscipula. 9. Of Linum Virginianum. 10. Of Parietaria officinalis. 11. Of Rumex obtusifolius.

the latter case the stigma is said to be sessile, as in the poppy and the tulip. When the style is present, the stigma may be terminal, occupying its summit, as in the plum and cherry, or lateral, running down its face in one or two lines, as in Ranunculus. Its form and appearance are very various. In many plants there is only one stigma, while in others there are two, three, five, or many, according to the number of styles or style-branches. The stigma is composed of delicate cellular tissue; its surface is destitute of true epidermis, and is usually moist. See pistil (with cut) and pollen-tube.

stigma[2] (stig'mä), n. [Gr. στίγμα, the ligature ς, an altered form, to bring in στ, of σίγμα or σῖγμα, the letter σ, ς, sigma: see sigma. The ligature was also called στῖ.] In Gr. gram. and paleog., a ligature (ς) still sometimes used for στ (st), and also used as a numeral (6).

stigma-disk (stig'ma-disk), n. In bot., a disk forming the seat of a stigma, sometimes produced by the fusion of two or more style-apices, as in Asclepias.

stigmal (stig'mal), a. [< stigma[1] + -al.] Of or pertaining to a stigma; stigmatic. Specifically applied in entomology to a vein of the wings of some insects, whose modification makes a stigma (pterostigma).

Stigmaria (stig-ma'ri-ä), n. [NL., < L. stigma, a mark (see stigma[1]), + -aria.] A former genus of fossil plants, very abundant in many regions in the coal-measures, and especially in the under-clay, or clayey material (often mixed with more or less sand) by which most seams of coal are underlain; also [l. c.], a plant of this genus. These plants are cylindrical root-like bodies, usually starting from a center in four main branches, and afterward bifurcating irregularly, and extending sometimes to great distances. The bodies are covered with small round depressions or scars arranged in lozenge-shaped patterns, and each the point of attachment of a ribbon-shaped filament or rootlet. In some cases the stigmarias have been found attached to trunks of Sigillaria, in such a position as would naturally be occupied by the roots with reference to the stem of the plant or tree; hence they have been admitted by most paleobotanists to be in fact the roots of the widely distributed coal-plant called Sigillaria. Some who maintain this, however, admit that the relation of the stigmarias to the plant itself was peculiar; while others believe that they were floating stems, able under favorable conditions to play the part of roots. This opinion has for its support the fact that thick beds of under-clay are frequently found almost entirely made up of remains of stigmarias, while not even a fragment of Sigillaria can be found in the vicinity.

Stigmarian (stig-mā'ri-an), a. [< Stigmaria + -an.] Relating to, containing, or consisting of Stigmaria. Geol. Mag., No. 267, p. 407.

stigmarioid (stig-mā'ri-oid), a. [< Stigmaria + -oid.] In bot., resembling Stigmaria.

stigmata, n. Latin plural of stigma[1].

stigmatal (stig'ma-tal), a. [< stigmata + -al.] In entom., pertaining to, near, or containing the stigmata or breathing-pores: stigmatic: as, the stigmatal line of a caterpillar.

stigmatic (stig-mat'ik, formerly also stig'ma-tik), a. and n. [< ML. stigmaticus, < L. stigma, < Gr. στίγμα, a mark, brand: see stigma[1].] I. a. Of or pertaining to a stigma, in any sense of that word. Specifically—(a) Having the character of a brand; ignominious.

Print in my face
The most stigmaticke title of a villaine.
Heywood, Woman Killed with Kindness (Works, II. 110).

(b) Marked with or as with a stigma or brand; repulsive; abhorrent.

So the world is become ill favoured and shrewd-pated, as politic in brain as it is stigmatic in limbs.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 19.

(c) In nat. hist., belonging to or having the character of a stigma; stigmal. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 374. (d) In bot., receptive of pollen: said of parts of the style which have the function without the form of a stigma, as the "silk" of maize. (e) Bearing the stigmata; stigmatized. See stigma[1], 5.—Stigmatic cells, in bot., same as lid-cells.

II. n. 1. A person who is marked with stigmata, in the ecclesiastical or the pathological sense; a stigmatist.—2. A criminal who has been branded; one who bears upon his person the marks of infamy or punishment; a notorious profligate.

Convaide him to a justice, where one swore
He had been branded stigmatic before.
Philomythie (1616). (Nares.)

3. One on whom nature has set a mark of deformity.

But like a foul, mis-shapen stigmatic,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 2. 136.

stigmatical (stig-mat'i-kal), a. [< stigmatic + -al.] Same as stigmatic. Shak., C. of E., iv. 2. 22.

stigmatically (stig-mat'i-kal-i), adv. With stigmata; with a mark of infamy or deformity.

If you spye any man that has a looke,
Stigmatically drawne, like to a furies,
(Able to fright) to such I lie give large pay.
Dekker, Wonder of a Kingdom, iii. i.

stigmatiferous (stig-ma-tif'e-rus), a. [< NL. stigma(t-), a stigma, + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] In bot., stigma-bearing.

stigmatiform (stig'ma-ti-fôrm), a. [< NL. stigma(t-), stigma, + L. forma, form.] In entom., having the structure or appearance of a stigma, spiracle, or breathing-pore; spiraculiform.

stigmatisation, stigmatise, etc. See stigmatization, etc.

stigmatist (stig'ma-tist), n. [< Gr. στίγμα(τ-), a mark, a brand (see stigma[1]), + -ist.] One on whom the stigmata, or marks of Christ's wounds, are said to be supernaturally impressed.

stigmatization (stig'ma-ti-zā'shon), n. [< stigmatize + -ation.] 1. The act of stigmatizing, or the condition of being stigmatized; specifically, the supposed miraculous impression of the marks of Christ's wounds on the bodies of certain persons.—2. The act, process, or result of producing, as by hypnotic suggestion, on the surface of the body points or lines which bleed. [Recent.]

Also spelled stigmatisation.

stigmatize (stig'ma-tīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. stigmatized, ppr. stigmatizing. [< F. stigmatiser = Sp. estigmatizare = Pg. estigmatisar = It. stimatizzare, < ML. stigmatizare, < Gr. στιγματίζειν, mark, brand, < στίγμα(τ-), a mark, brand: see stigma[1].] 1. To mark with a stigma or brand.

They had more need some of them . . . to have their cheeks stigmatised with a hot iron.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 474.

2. To set a mark of disgrace on; disgrace with some mark or term of reproach or infamy.

It was thought proper to restrain it [comedy] within bounds by a law enacting that no person should be stigmatized under his real name.
Goldsmith, Essay, Origin of Poetry.

3. To produce red points, sometimes bleeding, in or on: as, a person or the skin stigmatized by hypnotic suggestion. [Recent.]

Also spelled stigmatise.

stigmatized (stig'ma-tīzd), p. a. 1. Marked with a stigma; branded; specifically, marked with the stigmata of the passion.—2. Resembling stigmata: as, the stigmatized dots on the skin in measles.

Also spelled stigmatised.

stigmatose (stig'ma-tōs), a. [< NL. stigmatosus*, < stigma[1], a stigma: see stigma[1].] 1. In bot., same as stigmatic.—2. Affected with stigmata; stigmatized.

stigme (stig'mē), n. [< Gr. στιγμή, a prick, point.] 1. In Gr. paleog., a dot used as a punctuation-mark; especially, a dot placed at the top of the line, like the later Greek colon, and having the value of a period.—2. In Gr. pros., a dot placed over a time or syllable to mark the ictus.

Stigmonema (stig-mō-nē'mä), n. [NL., < Gr. στίγμα, a mark, + νῆμα, a thread.] A genus of cyanophyceous algæ, giving name to the family Stigmonemeæ.

Stigmonemeæ (stig-mō-nē'mē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Stigmonema + -eæ.] A family of cyanophyceous algæ, embraced, according to late systematists, in the order Scytonemaceæ.

Stigmus (stig'mus), n. [NL. (Jurine, 1807), < Gr. στίγμα, a mark: see stigma[1].] In entom., a genus of fossorial wasps, of the family Pemphredomidæ, having a large stigma to the fore wing and a petiolate abdomen. S. troglodytes of Europe makes its cells in the hollow straws of thatched roofs, and provisions them with masses of immature Thripes.

stilar, a. See stylar.

Stilbeæ (stil'bē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στίλβειν, glitter, shine, + -eæ.] A division of hyphomycetous fungi, characterized by the cohering of the spore-bearing hyphæ into a dense and slender stipe.

stilbite (stil'bīt), n. [< Gr. στίλβειν, glitter, shine, + -ite[2].] 1. A common zeolitic mineral, usually occurring in radiated or sheaf-like tufts of crystals having a pearly luster on the surface of cleavage. It varies in color from white to brown or red. It is essentially a hydrous silicate of aluminium and calcium. Also called desmine. See cut under tufted.

2. The mineral heulandite.

stile[1] (stīl), n. [Early mod. E. also style; < ME. stile, style, stigele, < AS. stigel (= OHG. stigila, stiagil, MHG. stiegel, stigele, a step, G. dial. stegel, a step), a stile, < stigan (pp. stigen), climb, ascend. Cf. styl[1], n., and stair.] 1. A series of steps, or a frame of bars and steps, for ascending and descending in getting over a fence or wall.

Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way,
And merrily hent the stile-a.
Shak., W. T., iv. 3. 133.

2. In carp., a vertical part of a piece of framing, into which the ends of the rails are fixed by mortises and tenons. See cut of panel-door, under door.

stile[2]†, n. A former and more correct spelling of style[1].

stile[3]†, n. A former spelling of style[2].

stilet[1]† (sti-let'), n. A former and more correct form of stiletto. Scott, Monastery.

stilet[2] (sti'let), n. In zoöl., a small style; a stylet.

stiletteț (sti-let'), n. Same as stylet.

stiletto (sti-let'ō), n. [< It. stiletto, a dagger, dim. of stilo, a dagger, < L. stilus, a stake, a pointed instrument: see stile[2], style[2], and cf. stylet.] 1. A dagger having a blade slender and narrow, and thick in proportion to its width—that is, triangular, square, etc., in section, instead of flat.—2. A small sharp-pointed implement used for making eyelet-holes and for similar purposes. Stilettos are of ivory, bone, metal, and other materials.—3†. A beard trimmed into a sharp-pointed form.

The stiletto beard,
O, it makes me afeard,
It is so sharp beneath.
Acad. of Compl. (Nares.)

The very quack of fashion, the very he that Wears a stiletto on his chin? Ford, Fancies, iii. 1.

stiletto (sti-let'ō), v. t. [< stiletto, n.] To strike or wound with a stiletto; hence, in general, to stab.

Henry IV. . . . [was] likewise stilettoed by a rascal votary. Bacon, Charge against W. Talbot, p. 202.

still[1] (stil), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also stil, stille, styll, stylle; < ME. stille, stylle, < AS. stille = OS. stilli = OFries. stille = MD. stille, stil, D. stil = MLG. stille, LG. still = OHG. stilli, MHG. stille, G. still = Icel. stillr = Dan. stille = Sw. stilla, quiet, still; with adj. formative, from the root (stel) of AS. steall, etc., a place, stall: see stall[1], stell.] I. a. 1. Remaining in place; remaining at rest; motionless; quiet: as, to stand, sit, or lie still.

Foot & hond thou kepe fulle stylle
Fro clawyng or tryppyng, hit ys skylle.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 13.

2. Calm; tranquil; peaceful; undisturbed or unruffled: as, still waters run deep; a still night.

In the calmest and most stillest night.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 28.

A Poet in still musings bound.
Wordsworth, Sonnets, iii. 11.

3. Silent; quiet; calm; noiseless; hushed.

A man that sayth little shall perceiue by the speeche of another;
Be thou stil and see, the more shalt thou perceyue in another.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 85.

The trumpet's silver sound is still,
The warder silent on the hill!
Scott, Marmion, i., Int.

4. Soft; low; subdued: as, a still small voice.

The gentle blasts of western winds shall move
The trembling leaves, and through their close boughs breathe Still musick, whilst we rest ourselves beneath Their dancing shade. Carew, Poems, p. 70. (Latham.)

5. Not sparkling or effervescing: said of wine, mineral water, and other beverages: contrasted with sparkling; by extension, having but little effervescence. Thus, still champagne is not the non-effervescent natural wine, but champagne which is only moderately sparkling.

6†. Continual; constant.

But I of these will wrest an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.
Shak., Tit. And., iii. 2. 45.

Still alarm, an alarm of fire given by a person calling at a station, and not by the regular system of fire-signals.—Still days. See day[1].—Still hunt. See hunt.—Still life, inanimate objects, such as furniture, fruits, or dead animals, represented by the painter's art.

The same dull sights in the same landscape mixt,
Scenes of still life, and points for ever fixed,
A tedious pleasure on the mind bestow.
Addison, Epil. to British Enchanters.

II. n. 1. Calm; silence; freedom from noise.

He [Henry VIII.] had never any . . . jealousy with the King his father which might give any occasion of altering court or counsel upon the change; but all things passed in a still. Bacon, Hist. Hen. VIII.

2. A still alarm. [Colloq.]

Many alarms were what the firemen called stills, where a single engine went out to fight the fire.
Elect. Rev. (Amer.), ii. xxv. 6.

still[1] (stil), v. [Early mod. E. also stille, stylle; < ME. stillen, < AS. stillan = OS. stillian, stillōn = MD. D. stillen = MLG. LG. stillen = OHG. stillan, stillēn, MHG. G. stillen = Icel. Sw. stilla = Dan. stille, make or become still; from the adj.] I. trans. 1. To make still; cause to be at rest; render calm, quiet, unruffled, or undisturbed; check or restrain; make peaceful or tranquil; quiet.

Lord, still the seas, and shield my ship from harm.
Quarles, Emblems, iii. 11.

2. To calm; appease; quiet or allay, as commotion, tumult, agitation, or excitement.

A turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 163.

3. To silence; quiet.

With his name the mothers still their babes.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 17.

O still my bairn, nourice;
O still him wi' the pap!
Lamkin (Child's Ballads, III. 97).

=Syn. 1 and 2. To lull, pacify, tranquilize, smooth.—3. To hush.

II. intrans. To become calm or tranquil; grow quiet; be still. [Rare.]

Heruppon the people peacyd, and stilled unto the tyme the shire was doon. Paston Letters, I. 180.

still[1] (stil), adv. [Early mod. E. also stil, stille, styll, stylle; < ME. stille, < AS. stille = OS. stillo = D. stil = OHG. stillo, MHG. stille, G. still = Sw. stilla = Dan. stille, quietly; from the adj.] 1†. Quietly; silently; softly; peacefully.

Thei criede mercy with good wille,
Somme lowde & somme stille.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 96.

2. Constantly; continually; habitually; always; ever.

Thou still hast been the father of good news.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 42.

What a set face the gentlewoman has, as she were still going to a sacrifice! B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

O first of friends! (Pelides thus reply'd)
Still at my heart, and ever at my side!
Pope, Iliad, xi. 743.

3. Now as in the past; till now; to this time; now as then or as before; yet: as, he is still here.

At after noone, with an easy wynde, and salyd styll in alto pelage, lenynge Grece on ye lefte hande and Barbary on the ryght hande. Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 12.

Poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,
To hearken if his foes pursue him still.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 699.

Apart she lived, and still she lies alone.
Crabbe, Works, I. 113.

4. In an increased or increasing degree; beyond this (or that); even yet; in excess: used with comparatives or to form a comparative: as, still greater things were expected; still more numerous.

What rich service!
What mines of treasure! richer still!
Fletcher (and another), False One, iii. 4.

The matter of his treatise is extraordinary; the manner more extraordinary still.
Macaulay, Sadler's Law of Population.

5. For all that; all the same; nevertheless; notwithstanding this (or that).

Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss.
Shak., Sonnets, xxxiv.

The Bey, with all his good sense and understanding, was still a Mamaluke, and had the principles of a slave.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 30.

Loud and (or or) still†. See loud.—Still and anon†, at intervals and repeatedly; continually.

And, like the watchful minutes of the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time.
Shak., K. John, iv. 1. 47.

still[2] (stil), v. [< ME. stillen*, styllen, in part an abbr. of distil, in part < L. stillare, drop, fall in drops, also let or cause to fall in drops, < stilla, a drop; cf. stiria, a frozen drop, an icicle. Cf. distil, instil.] I.† intrans. To drop; fall in drops. See distil.

From her faire eyes wiping the deawy wet
Which softly stild. Spenser, F. Q., IV. vii. 35.

II. trans. 1†. To drop, or cause to fall in drops.

Her father Myrrha sought,
And loved, but loved not as a daughter ought.
Now from a tree she stills her odorous tears,
Which yet the name of her who sheds them bears.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love, i.

2. To expel, as spirit from liquor, by heat and condense in a refrigerator; distil. See distil.

In Burgos, Anno 21., Doctor Sotto cured me of a certeine wandering feuer, made me eat so much Apium, take so much Barley water, & drink so much stilled Endiue.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 275.

still[2] (stil), n. [< still[2], v. The older noun was stillatory.] 1. An apparatus for separating, by means of heat, volatile matters from substances Still.

a, alembic; b, hot-water jacket; c, head; d, rostrum or beak; e e, worm; f, refrigerator; g, funnel-tube for supplying cold water to the refrigerator; h, h', tubes for conveying away the warm upper stratum of water, which is heated by the condensation of vapor in the worm.

containing them, and recondensing them into the liquid form. It assumes many forms, according to the purposes for which it is used; but it consists essentially of two parts, a vessel in which the substance to be distilled is heated, and one in which the vapor is cooled and condensed. The most important use of stills is for the distillation of spirituous liquors. See distillation, and cut under petroleum-still.

2. A house or works in which liquors are distilled; a distillery. S. Judd, Margaret, i. 15.—3. In bleaching, a rectangular vessel made of slabs of freestone or flagstone with rabbeted and stemmed joints held together by long bolts, and provided with a steam-chamber below, and with a manhole for introducing the materials for making chlorid of manganese solution, called still-liquor.

stillage (stil′āj), n. [Origin uncertain.] A stout support, in the nature of a stool, for keeping something from coming in contact with the floor of a shop, factory, bleachery, etc. Specifically—(a) In bleaching, a stout low stool or bench to keep textiles or yarns from the floor, and to permit the moisture to drain out of them. (b) In the packing of cloths and other goods for shipment, etc., a stool or bench for supporting the goods taken out of a stock to be packed. Some stillages are made so that they can be tilted, and allow articles placed on them to slide off into packing-boxes, etc.

stillatitious (stil-ą-tish′us), a. [< L. stillaticius, dropping, dripping, < stillare, pp. stillatus, drop, trickle: see still[2], v.] Falling in drops; drawn by a still. [Rare.] Imp. Dict.

stillatory (stil′ą-tō-ri), n.; pl. stillatories (-riz). [< ME. stillatorie, a distilling-vessel (cf. OF. F. stillatoire, a.), < ML. stillatorium, neut. of stillatorius*, adj., < L. stillare, pp. stillatus, fall in drops: see still[2], v.] 1. A still; a vessel for distillation; an alembic.

His ferheed dropped as a stillatorie
Were ful of plantayne and of paritorie.
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 27.

In stillatories where the vapour is turned back upon itself by the encounter of the sides of the stillatory.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 27.

2. A laboratory; a place or room in which distillation is performed; a still-room.

Marius, Armanus, as you are noble friends,
Go to the privy garden, and in the walk
Next to the stillatory stay for me.
Beau. and Fl. (?), Faithful Friends, iv. 3.

still-birth (stil′bėrth), n. The birth of a lifeless thing; also, a still-born child.

still-born (stil′bôrn), a. Dead at birth; born lifeless: as, a still-born child.

still-burn (stil′bėrn), v. t. To burn in the process of distillation: as, to still-burn brandy.

stiller[1] (stil′ėr), n. [< still[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which stills or quiets.—2. A wooden disk laid on the liquid in a full pail to prevent splashing. [Prov. Eng.]

stiller[2] (stil′ėr), n. A distiller. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXX. 830.

still-fish (stil′fish), v. i. [< still[1] + fish[1], after still-hunt.] To fish from a boat at anchor.

still-fisher (stil′fish″ėr), n. An angler engaged in still-fishing.

still-fishing (stil′fish″ing), n. Fishing from a boat at anchor, or from the bank of a stream.

still-house (stil′hous), n. A distillery, or that part of it which contains the still.

still-hunt (stil′hunt), v. [< still hunt: see under hunt.] I. trans. To hunt stealthily; stalk; lie in ambush for.

The only way to get one [a grizzly] is to put on moccasins and still-hunt it in its own haunts.
T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 327.

The best time to still-hunt deer is just before sunset, when they come down from the hills to drink.
Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 81.

II. intrans. To hunt without making a noise; pursue game stealthily or under cover.

The best way to kill white-tail is to still-hunt carefully through their haunts at dusk.
T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 118.

An inferior sort of still-hunting, as practised, for instance, on Norwegian islands for the large red-deer.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLI. 394.

still-hunter (stil′hun″tėr), n. One who pursues game stealthily and without noise; one who hunts from ambush or under cover; a stalker. W. T. Hornaday, Smithsonian Report, 1887, ii. 430.

Stilliard[1]†, n. See Steelyard[1].

stilliard[2]†, n. An old spelling of steelyard[2].

stillicide (stil′i-sīd), n. [< F. stillicide, < L. stillicidium, stilicidium, a falling of drops, dripping, falling rain, < stilla, a drop (see still[2]), + cadere, fall.] 1†. A continual falling or succession of drops.

The stillicides of water, . . . if there be water enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small thread, because they will not discontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they cast themselves into round drops.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 24.

2. In Rom. law: (a) The right to have the rain from one's roof drop on another's land or roof. (b) The right to refuse to allow the rain from another's roof to drop on one's own land or roof.

stillicidious (stil-i-sid′i-us), a. [< stillicide + -i-ous.] Falling in drops. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 1.

stillicidium (stil-i-sid′i-um), n. [L.: see stillicide.] A morbid dropping or trickling.—Stillicidium lacrymarum, the trickling of tears down over the lower lids from obstruction of the lacrymal passages.—Stillicidium urinæ, a discharge of urine in drops.

stilliform (stil′i-fôrm), a. [< L. stilla, a drop, + forma, form.] Drop-shaped.

stilling (stil′ing), n. [Also stillion; appar. a variant of E. dial. stelling, a shed for cattle (= LG. stelling = G. stellung, a stand, scaffold; cf. Icel. stilling, management), < stell + -ing.] 1. A stand for casks.—2. In a brewery, a stand on which the rounds or cleansing-vats are placed in a trough, which serves to carry off the overflowing yeast.—3. A stand on which pottery is placed in the drying-kiln preparatory to firing.

Stillingia (sti-lin′ji-ą), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1767), named after Benjamin Stillingfleet, an English botanist who published botanical papers in 1759.] 1. A genus of apetalous plants, of the order Euphorbiaceæ, tribe Crotoneæ, and subtribe Hippomaneæ. It is characterized by monœcious flowers in terminal bracted spikes, each bract bearing two glands—the male flowers having a small calyx with two or three broad shallow lobes, and two or rarely three free exserted stamens, and the female flowers bearing an ovary of two or three cells, which terminate in undivided styles united at the base, and ripen into two-valved carpels which on falling leave the receptacle armed with three hard spreading horns. There are about 13 species, natives of North and South America, the Mascarene Islands, and the islands of the Pacific. They are mostly smooth shrubs, usually with alternate short-petioled leaves and a few small female flowers solitary under the lower bracts of the dense sterile spike, which bears usually three male flowers under each of the short and broad upper bracts. One species, S. sylvatica, occurs from Virginia southward, for which see queen's-delight and silver-leaf.

2. [l. c.] A plant of the above genus, especially the officinal S. sylvatica.

stillion (stil′yon), n. Same as stilling. G. Seamell, Breweries and Maltings, p. 92.

stillitory†, n. An erroneous spelling of stillatory.

still-life, n. See still life, under still[1].

still-liquor (stil′lik″or), n. Bleaching-liquor prepared by the reaction of hydrochloric acid upon manganese binoxid in large stone chambers called stills (whence the name). It is a solution of manganese chlorid.

stillness (stil′nes), n. [< ME. stilnesse, < AS. stilnes, stillnes (= OFries. stilnese, stilnisse = MLG. stilnisse = OHG. stilnissi, stilnessi, MHG. stilnisse, stilnesse), < stille, still: see still[1] and -ness.] The state or character of being still. (a) Rest; motionlessness; calmness: as, the stillness of the air or of the sea. (b) Noiselessness; quiet; silence: as, the stillness of the night. (c) Freedom from agitation or excitement: as, the stillness of the passions. (d) Habitual silence; taciturnity.

still-peering†, (stil′pēr″ing), a. Appearing still.

O you leaden messengers,
That ride upon the violent speed of fire,
Fly with false aim; move the still-peering air,
That sings with piercing.
Shak, All's Well, iii. 2. 113.

[A doubtful word, by some read still-piercing.]

still-room (stil′rōm), n. 1. An apartment for distilling; a domestic laboratory.—2. A room connected with the kitchen, where coffee, tea, and the like are made, and the finer articles supplied to the table are made, stored, and prepared for use. [Eng.]

still-stand (stil′stand), n. A standstill; a halt; a stop. [Rare.]

The tide swell'd up unto his height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 3. 64.

still-watcher (stil′woch″ėr), n. In distilling, a reservoir in which the density of the liquid given over is tested by a hydrometer in order to follow the progress of the distillation.

stilly (stil′i), a. [< ME. stillich, < AS. stillīc (= MLG. stillich, stillik); as still[1] + -ly[1].] Still; quiet.

Oft in the stilly night,
Ere Slumber's chain has bound me,
Fond Memory brings the light
Of other days around me.
Moore, Irish Melodies.

stilly (stil′li), adv. [< ME. stilliche, < AS. stillīce (= MD. stillick, also stillekens = MLG. stilliken, stilken); as still[1] + -ly[2].] 1. Silently; without uproar.

And he a-rooa as stilliche as he myght.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 180.

The hum of either army stilly sounds.
Shak., Hen. V., iv., Prol., l. 5.

2. Calmly; quietly; without agitation.

He takes his own, and stilly goes his way.
Dr. H. More, Cupid's Conflict, st. 47.

stilogonidium (stī″lō-gō-nid′i-um), n.; pl. stilogonidia (-ą). [NL., < L. stilus, a pointed instrument, + NL. gonidium, q. v.] In bot., a gonidium cut off or separated from the end of a sterigma.

stilp (stilp), v. i. [With variation of vowel, < stulp, a prop: see stulp.] 1. To stalk; take long, high steps in walking.—2. To go on stilts or crutches. [Scotch.]

stilpers (stil′pėrz), n. pl. [< stilp + -er[1].] Stilts; crutches. [Scotch.]

stilpnomelane (stilp-nom′e-lān), n. [< Gr. στιλπνός, glittering (< στίλβειν, glitter, glisten), + μέλας (μελαν-), black, dark.] A black, greenish-black, or bronze-colored mineral occurring in foliated plates or thin scales sometimes forming a velvety coating (the variety chalcodite), also in fibrous forms. It is essentially a hydrous silicate of iron.

stilpnosiderite (stilp-nō-sid′e-rīt), n. [< Gr. στιλπνός, glittering, + E. siderite.] Same as limonite.

stilt (stilt), n. [Early mod. E. also stylte; < ME. stilte, stylte, < Sw. stylta, a prop, stilt, = Dan. stylte (cf. Norw. styltra), a stilt, = D. stelt, a stilt, wooden leg, = MLG. LG. stelte = OHG. stelza, MHG. G. stelze, a prop, crutch; perhaps akin to stale[2], stalk[2].] 1†. A prop used in walking; a crutch.

> Verely she was heled, and left her styltes thore,
> And on her fete went home resonably well.
> Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 47.
>
> I have laughed a-good to see the cripples > Go limping home to Christendom on stilts.
> Marlowe, Jew of Malta, ii. 3. 215.

2. One of two props or poles, each having a step or stirrup at some distance from the lower end, by means of which one may walk with the feet raised from the ground, and with a longer stride: used for crossing sandy or marshy places, streams, etc., and by children for amusement. Stilts were sometimes merely props fastened under the feet, as if very high-heeled shoes. Those used by children are slender poles about 6 feet long, with steps or stirrups 12 inches or more from one end; the longer end of the pole can be held by the hand or passed behind the arm. In a modified form the upper end of the pole is much shorter, and is fitted with a cross-handle which can be grasped by the hand, or is strapped to the leg below the knee. Stilts are used by the shepherds of the marshy Landes in southwestern France.

> The doubtful fords and passages to try
> With stilts and lope-staves.
> Drayton, Barons' Wars, i. 43.

3. In hydraul. engin., one of a set of piles forming the back for the sheet-piling of a starling. E. H. Knight.—4. The handle of a plow. Scott, Kenilworth, xv.—5. In ceram., a support, generally of iron, used to hold a piece of pottery in the kiln, to allow the fire free access to the bottom of the piece. Also called cockspur and spur (which see).—6. [Abbr. of stilt-bird.] In ornith., any bird of the genus Himantopus: so called from the extremely long, slender legs. The bill is likewise very slender, straight, and sharp. The body is slender, the neck long, the wings are long and pointed, and the tail is short. The stilts are wading-birds living in marshes. They are white below, with most of the upper parts glossy-black, the bill is black, and the legs are of some bright tint. They are very generally distributed over the world, nest on the ground, and lay four dark-colored, heavily spotted eggs. Their food consists of small soft animals found in the mud and water, which they explore with their probe-like bills. The common stilt of the Old World is H. candidus or melanopterus; that of the United States is H. mexicanus, a rare bird in the eastern regions of the country, but abundant in some parts of the west. It is about 15 inches long, and 30 in extent of wings; the bill 2¾ inches; the legs, from the feathers to the toes, 7½ inches. There are only three toes, which are semipalmated. This species is locally called longshanks and lawyer. The South American stilt is H. nigricollis; the Australian, H. leucocephalus. A related bird of Australia to which the name extends is Cladorhynchus pectoralis, having the toes webbed like those of the avoset.—Stilt prolegs, in entom., the prolegs of a caterpillar when they are unusually long, so that the body over them is much raised above the surface on which the insect walks.

Black-necked Stilt (Himantopus mexicanus).

stilt (stilt), v. t. [< stilt, n.] To raise above the ordinary or normal position or surface, as if by the use of stilts.

> The fluted columns [of San Moisé] are stilted upon pedestals, and their lines are broken by the bands which encircle them like broad barrel-hoops.
> Howells, Venetian Life, xviii.

stilt-bird (stilt′bėrd), n. 1. The stilt or stilt-plover.—2†. pl. Wading birds collectively; the grallatorial birds, constituting the old order Grallæ or Grallatores. Also called stilt-walkers.

stilted (stil′ted), p. a. Elevated, as if on stilts; hence, pompous; inflated; formal; stiff and bombastic: said especially of language: as, a stilted mode of expression; a stilted style.

> His earliest verses have a stilted, academic flavor.
> Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 39.

Stilted arch, an arch which does not spring immediately from the apparent or feigned imposts, as from the capitals of the supporting pillars, but from horizontal courses of masonry resting on these false imposts, as if the arch were raised on stilts. Such arches occur frequently in all mediæval styles, especially as a means of maintaining a uniform height when spans of different widths are used in the same range. Compare arch[1].

Stilted Arch.—Mihrab in the Mosque of Sultan Hassan, Cairo.

stiltedness (stil′ted-nes), n. Stilted character; pompous stiffness. Athenæum, No. 3195, p. 94.

stiltify (stil′ti-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. stiltified, ppr. stiltifying. [< stilt + -i-fy.] To raise as on stilts; elevate or prop up, as with stilts. [Rare.]

> Skinny dwarfs ye are, cushioned and stiltified into great fat giants. C. Reade, Cloister and Hearth, lxv.

Stilton cheese. See cheese[1].

stilt-petrel (stilt′pet′rel), n. A stormy petrel of the genus Fregetta: so called from the length of the legs. F. grallaria is an example.

stilt-plover (stilt′pluv″ėr), n. The stilt or stilt-bird: so called because it has only three toes on each foot, like a plover.

stilt-sandpiper (stilt′sand″pī-pėr), n. A long-legged sandpiper of America, Micropalama himantopus. The adult in summer is blackish above, with each feather edged and tipped with white, or tawny and bay; the under parts are mixed reddish, whitish, and black in streaks on the throat, elsewhere in bars; the ear-coverts are chestnut, the upper tail-coverts white with dusky bars, and the bill and feet greenish-black. The length is 8¾ inches, the extent 16½. The young and the adults in winter are quite different, being ashy-gray above, with little or no trace of the reddish and black; a line over the eye and the whole under parts are white; and the jugulum and sides are suffused with ashy, and streaked with dusky. The bird inhabits North America, breeding in high latitudes, and migrating in the fall to Central and South America. See cut under Micropalama.

stilt-walker (stilt′wâ″kėr), n. 1. One who walks on stilts. Amer. Nat., Nov., 1889, p. 943. —2. A grallatorial bird; a stilt-bird.

stilty (stil′ti), a. [< stilt + -y[1].] Inflated; pompous; stilted. Quarterly Rev.

stilus, n. See stylus.

Stilwell act. See act.

stime (stim), n. [Also styme; < ME. stime; a var. of steem, stem, a ray of light (see steam). It is otherwise explained as perhaps a var., due to some interference, of shim, < AS. scima, a light, brightness, a gleam of light (see shim[1], shime).] A ray of light; a glimmer; a glimpse: not now used except in negative expressions. [Now only Scotch.]

> Ne he iwis might se a stime.
> Cursor Mundi, l. 19652. (Stratmann.)
>
> Wherewith he blinded them so close
> A stime they could not see.
> Robin Hood and the Beggar (Child's Ballads, V. 201).

stimulant (stim′ū-lant), a. and n. [= F. stimulant = Sp. Pg. estimulante = It. stimolante, < L. stimulan(t-)s, ppr. of stimulare, prick, urge, stimulate: see stimulate.] I. a. Stimulating; serving to stimulate, incite, or provoke; specifically, in physiol., temporarily quickening some functional or trophic process.—Stimulant balsam, a mixture of oil of turpentine 8 parts and flour mustard 1 part.

II. n. 1. That which stimulates, provokes, or incites; a stimulus; a spur.

> The stimulant used to attract at first must be not only continued, but heightened to keep up the attraction.
> Mrs. H. More, Cœlebs, xxv.

2. In physiol., an agent which temporarily quickens some functional or trophic process. It may act directly on the tissue concerned, or may excite the nerves which effect the process or paralyze the nerves which inhibit it. Stimulants comprise certain medicinal substances, as ammonia, alcohol, ethylic ether, as well as physical conditions, such as warmth, cold, light, or electricity, esthetic effects, as music and other products of art, and emotions of various kinds, as joy, hope, etc. Stimulants have been divided into general and topical, according as they affect directly or indirectly the whole system or only a particular part.—Diffusible stimulants, those stimulants, as ether or ammonia, which have a speedy and quickly transient effect.

stimulate (stim′ū-lāt), v.; pret. and pp. stimulated, ppr. stimulating. [< L. stimulatus, pp. of stimulare (> It. stimolare = Sp. Pg. estimular = F. stimuler), prick, urge, stimulate, < stimulus, a goad: see stimulus.] I. trans. 1. To prick; goad; excite, rouse, or animate to action or more vigorous exertion by some effective motive or by persuasion; spur on; incite.

> The general must stimulate the mind of his soldiers to the perception that they are men, and the enemy is no more. Emerson, Courage.
>
> Mystery in nature stimulates inquiry; why should it not do so in religion? J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 149.

2. In physiol., to quicken temporarily some functional or trophic process in.—3. Specifically, to affect by the use of intoxicating drinks.

> We were all slightly stimulated [with arrack] before a move was made toward the dinner table.
> O'Donovan, Merv, xi.

Stimulating bath, a bath containing aromatic astringent or tonic ingredients.—Syn. 1. To encourage, impel, urge, instigate, provoke, whet, foment, kindle, stir up.

II. intrans. To act as a stimulus.

> Urg'd by the stimulating goad,
> I drag the cumbrous waggon's load.
> Gay, To a Poor Man, l. 87.

stimulation (stim-ū-lā′shọn), n. [= F. stimulation = Sp. estimulacion = Pg. estimulação = It. stimolazione, < L. stimulatio(n-), a pricking, incitement, < stimulare, prick, goad, stimulate: see stimulate.] 1. The act of stimulating, or the state of being stimulated; urging; encouragement; incitement; increased or quickened action or activity.

> The providential stimulations and excitations of the conscience. Rp. Ward, Sermon, Jan. 30, 1674. (Latham.)
>
> A certain length of stimulation seems demanded by the inertia of the nerve-substance.
> W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 648.

2. In med., the act or method of stimulating; the condition of being stimulated; the effect of the use of stimulants.

> The latent morbid predisposition [to delirium tremens] engendered in the nervous system by prolonged and abnormal stimulation is evoked or brought into activity by the depressing influence of the shock [of a corporeal injury].
> J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 153.

—Syn. 1. See stimulate.

stimulative (stim′ū-lā-tiv), a. and n. [= It. stimolativo; as stimulate + -ive.] I. a. Having the quality of stimulating; tending to stimulate.

II. n. That which stimulates; that which rouses into more vigorous action; a stimulant or incentive.

> Then there are so many stimulatives to such a spirit as mine in this affair, besides love!
> Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, I. 225. (Davies.) stimulator (stim′ū-lā-tor), n. [= F. stimulateur = It. stimolatore, < LL. stimulator, an instigator, < L. stimulare, prick, goad: see stimulate.] One who or that which stimulates.

stimulatress (stim′ū-lā-tres), n. [= F. stimulatrice = It. stimolatrice, < L. stimulatrix, fem. of (LL.) stimulator: see stimulator.] A woman who stimulates or animates.

stimulose (stim′ū-lōs), a. [< F. stimuleux = It. stimoloso, < L. stimulosus, abounding with prickles, < stimulus, a prick, goad, prickle: see stimulus.] In bot., covered with stings or stimuli.

stimulus (stim′ū-lus), n.; pl. stimuli (-lī). [= F. stimulus, stimule = Sp. estimulo = Pg. estimulo = It. stimolo, stimulo, < L. stimulus, a goad, a pointed stake, fig. a sting, pang, an incitement, spur, stimulus, < √stig-, also in instigare, set on, incite, urge, = Gr. στίζειν, pierce, prick, = AS. stecan,* pierce: see stick[1].] 1. Literally, a goad.—2. In bot., a sting: as, the nettle is furnished with stimuli.—3. The point at the end of a crozier, pastoral staff, precentor's staff, or the like. In the staves of ecclesiastical authority the stimulus or point is regarded as the emblem of judgment or punishment.

4. Something that excites or rouses the mind or spirits; something that incites to action or exertion; an incitement or incentive.

We went to dine last Thursday with Mr. ——, a neighboring clergyman, a haunch of venison being the stimulus to the invitation. Sydney Smith, in Lady Holland, vi.

The infinitely complex organizations of commerce have grown up under the stimulus of certain desires existing in each of us. H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 28.

5. In physiol., something which evokes some functional or trophic reaction in the tissues on which it acts.

Light does not act as a stimulus to the nervous substance, either fibres or cells, unless it have an intensity which is nearly deadly to that substance.
G. T. Ladd, Physiol. Psychology, p. 179.

Absolute stimulus difference, in psychophysics, the actual difference in strength between two stimuli.—Relative stimulus difference, in psychophysics, the ratio of the difference between two stimuli to their mean.—Stimulus receptivity, in psychophysics, the power of appreciating stimuli, measured by the least intensity of stimulus giving the greatest conscious effect.—Stimulus scope, in psychophysics, the difference between the measure of stimulus receptivity and the stimulus threshold.—Stimulus susceptibility, in psychophysics, the power of perceiving a stimulus, so that the greater the stimulus susceptibility the lower the stimulus threshold.—Stimulus threshold, in psychophysics, the minimum amount of stimulus required to produce a conscious effect.

stinch†, v. t. [A var. of staneh[1].] To stanch.

First, the blood must hee stinched, and howe was that done? Breton, Miseries of Mauillia, p. 39. (Davies.) stine (stīn), n. A dialectal form of styan.

sting[1] (sting), v.; pret. and pp. stung (pret. formerly stang), ppr. stinging. [< ME. stingen (pret. stang, stong, stonge, pp. stungen, stongen, y-stongen, y-stonge), < AS. stingan (pret. stang, pp. stungen) = Icel. stinga = Sw. stinga = Dan. stinge; cf. Goth. us-stiggan, push, push out, = L. stinguere*, quench: see stick[1], v.] I. trans. 1†. To pierce; prick; puncture.

To the hert with a sharpe spere ye hym stonge, & with .iii. nayles made hym shede his gittles blode.
Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 38.

Thei ben y-sewed with whigt silk, . . .
Y-stongen with stiches.
Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), l. 553.

2†. To impale.

He stingeth him upon his speres orde.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 645.

3. To prick severely: give acute pain to by piercing with a sharp point; especially, to pierce and wound with any sharp-pointed weapon supplied with acrid or poisonous fluid, as a fang or sting, with which certain animals and plants are furnished; bite; urticate: as, to be stung by a bee, a scorpion, or a nettle, or by a serpent or a sea-nettle.

What, wouldst thou have a serpent sting thee twice?
Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 69.

I often have been stung too with curst bees.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

4. To pain acutely, as if with a sting; goad: as, a conscience stung with remorse.

Unhappy Psyche, stung by these reproaches, Profoundly feels the wound dive in her heart.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, v. 14.

5. To stimulate; goad.

She was trying to task herself up to her duty. At last she stung herself into its performance by a suspicion.
Mrs. Gaskell, North and South, xxxviii.

II. intrans. 1. To have a sting; be capable of wounding with a sting; use the sting: literally or figuratively: as, hornets sting; epigrams often sting; a stinging blow.

At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder. Prov. xxiii. 32.

2. To give pain or smart; be sharply painful; smart: as, the wound stung for an hour.

Under the dust, beneath the grass,
Deep in dim death, where no thought stings.
A. C. Swinburne, Félise.

sting[1] (sting), n. [= Icel. stingi, a pin, a stitch in the side, = Sw. sting, a sting (in sense 4), = Dan. sting, stitch; from the verb.] 1. A sharp-pointed organ of certain insects and other animals, capable of inflicting by puncture a painful wound.

I bring no tales nor flatteries; in my tongue, sir,
I carry no fork'd stings. Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ii. 1.

In zoöl., specifically—(a) The modified ovipositor of the females of certain insects, as bees, wasps, hornets, and many other Hymenoptera; an aculeus; a terebra. This weapon is generally so constructed as to inflict a poisoned as well as punctured wound, which may become inflamed and very painful or even dangerous; an irritating fluid is injected through the tubular sting when the thrust is given. See cut under Hymenoptera. (b) The mouth-parts of various insects which are formed for piercing and sucking, as in the mosquito and other gnats or midges, gadflies, fleas, bedbugs, etc. In these cases the wound is often poisoned. See cuts under gnat and mosquito. (c) A stinging hair or spine of the larvæ of various moths, or such organs collectively. See cuts under hag-moth, saddleback, and stinging. (d) The falces of spiders, with which these creatures bite—in some cases, as of the katipo or malmignatte, inflicting a very serious or even fatal wound. See cuts under chelicera and falx. (e) The curved or claw-like telson of the tail of a scorpion, inflicting a serious poisoned wound. See cuts under scorpion and Scorpionida. (f) One of the feet or claws of centipeds, which, in the case of some of the larger kinds, of tropical countries, inflict painful and dangerous wounds. (g) The poison-fang or venom-tooth of a noxious serpent; also, in popular misapprehension, the harmless soft forked tongue of any serpent. See cuts under Crotalus and snake. (h) A fin-spine of some fishes, capable of wounding. In a few cases such spines are connected with a venom-gland whence poison is injected; in others, as the tail-spines of sting-rays, the large bony sting, several inches long and sometimes jagged, is smeared with a substance which may cause a wound to fester. See cuts under stone-cat, sting-ray. (i) An urticating organ, or such organs collectively, of the jellyfishes, sea-nettles, or other cœlenterates. See cut under nematocyst.

2. In bot., a sort of sharp-pointed hollow hair, seated upon or connected with a gland which secretes an acrid or poisonous fluid, which, when introduced under the skin, produces a stinging pain. For plants armed with such stings, see cowhage, nettle[1] (with cut), nettle-tree, 2, and tread-softly.—3. The fine taper of a dog's tail. Sportsman's Gazetteer.—4. The operation or effect of a sting; the act of stinging; the usually poisoned punctured wound made by a sting; also, the pain or smart of such a wound.

Their softest touch as smart as lizards' stings!
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 2. 325.

5. Anything, or that in anything, which gives acute pain, or constitutes the principal pain; also, anything which goads to action: as, the sting of hunger; the stings of remorse; the stings of reproach.

The sting of death is sin. 1 Cor. xv. 56.

Slander,
Whose sting is sharper than the sword's.
Shak., W. T., ii. 3. 86.

A bitter jest leaves a sting behind it.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 77.

6. Mental pain inflicted, as by a biting or cutting remark or sarcasm; hence, the point of an epigram.

There is nothing harder to forgive than the sting of an epigram. O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LXVI. 667.

7. A stimulus, irritation, or incitement; a nettling or goading; an impulse.

The wanton stings and motions of the sense.
Shak., M. for M., i. 4. 59.

Exserted sting. See exserted.

sting[2] (sting), n. [Also steing; a var. of stang[1].] 1†. A pole.—2†. A pike; a spear.—3. An instrument for thatching.—4. The mast of a vessel. [Prov. Eng. or Scotch in all uses.]

sting-and-ling (sting'and-ling'), adv. [Lit. pole and line; < sting[2] + and + ling, Se. var. of line[2].] Entirely; completely; with everything; hence, by force. [Scotch.]

Unless he had been brought there sting and ling.
Scott, Antiquary, xliv.

stingaree (sting'ga-rē), n. [A corrupt form of sting-ray.] See sting-ray.

sting-bull (sting'bůl), n. The greater weever, or sting-fish, Trachinus draco. See Trachinus and weever. Also called otter-fish.

stinger (sting'ėr), n. [< sting[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which stings, vexes, or gives acute pain.

That malice
Wears no dead flesh about it, 'tis a stinger.
Middleton, More Dissemblers Besides Women, iii. 2.

(a) An animal or a plant that stings.

The Mutilla being a well-armed insect, and a severe stinger. E. D. Cope, Origin of the Fittest, p. 212.

(b) The sting of an insect. (c) A biting or cutting remark. [Colloq.] (d) A smart, telling blow. [Colloq.]

Rooke, . . . rushing at him incautiously, received a stinger that staggered him and nearly closed his right eye.
C. Reade, Hard Cash, xliii.

sting-fish (sting'fish), n. 1. Same as sting-bull. See cut under Trachinus.—2. The sea-scorpion, Cottus scorpius, a fish of the family Cottidæ.

stingily (stin'ji-li), adv. In a stingy manner; with mean niggardliness; in a niggardly manner.

stinginess (stin'ji-nes), n. The state or quality of being stingy; extreme avarice; niggardliness; miserliness.

stinging (sting'ing), p. a. 1. That uses a sting; furnished with a sting or stinging organs of any sort; urticating: as, a stinging insect or sea-nettle.—2. In bot., noting a plant furnished with stinging hairs. See sting[1], 2.—3. That pierces or wounds as with a sting; that causes acute pain, irritation, or the like; keen; sharp; pungent; telling: as, a stinging tongue; a stinging rebuke or remark.

He wrapped her warm in his seaman's coat,
Against the stinging blast.
Longfellow, Wreck of the Hesperus.

The stinging lash of wit.
O. W. Holmes, Opening of Fifth Ave. Theatre, N. Y., 1873.

Stinging ant, an ant of the family Myrmicidæ.—Stinging bug, the blood-sucking cone-nose, Conorhinus sanguisuga, a common bug of the family Reduviidæ, which sucks the blood of man and domestic animals, and inflicts a painful wound. See cut under Conorhinus.—Stinging caterpillar, the larva of any one of certain bombycid moths in the United States, as Saturnia maia, Hyperchiria io, Empretia stimulea, Phobetron pithecium, Stinging Caterpillar, or Slug-caterpillar, and Moth of Lagoa opercularis, both natural size.

Limacodes scapha, and Lagoa opercularis, which are provided with stinging spines.—Stinging hair. See hair[1] and stinging spine.—Stinging nettle. See nettle[1], 1.—Stinging spine, in entom., one of the modified bristles of any stinging caterpillar, which are sharp and have an urticating effect. See cuts under hag-moth and saddleback.—Stinging tree. Same as nettle-tree, 2.

stinging-bush (sting'ing-bůsh), n. Same as tread-softly.

stinging-cell (sting'ing-sel), n. The thread-cell or lasso-cell with which any cœlenterate, as a sea-nettle, urticates. See nematophore, and cuts under enida and nematocyst.

stingingly (sting'ing-li), adv. With stinging effect.

stingless (sting'les), a. [< sting[1] + -less.] Having no sting, as an insect. Shak., J. C., v. 1. 35.—Stingless nettle, the richweed or clearweed, Pilea pumila. See clearweed.

sting-moth (sting'môth), n. The Australian Doratifera vulnerans, whose larva is capable of inflicting a stinging wound.

stingo (sting'gō), n. [With a simulated It. or Sp. or L. termination, < sting[1]: in allusion to its sharp taste.] Strong malt liquor. [Colloq.]

Come, let 's in and drink a cup of stingo.
Randolph, Hey for Honesty, ii. 6.

sting-ray (sting'rā), n. [Also, corruptly, stingaree, stingoree; < sting[1] + ray[2].] A batoid fish of the family Trygonidæ, as Trygon (or Dasybatis) pastinaca, having a long, smooth, flexible, lash-like tail armed near the base with a bony spine several inches long, sharp at the point, and serrated along the sides. It is capable of inflicting a severe and very painful wound, which appears to be poisoned by the slime with which the sting is covered. There are many species of sting-rays, in some of which there are two or three spines bundled together. The British species above named is locally known as fire-flare or fiery-flare. The commonest sting-ray of the North Atlantic coast of the United States is T. centrura, locally known as clam cracker, and corruptly called stingaree. T. sabina is a similar southern species. The name extends to any ray with a tail-spine. See Myliobatidæ (a).

Southern Sting-ray (Trygon sabrina). (From Report of U. S. Fish Commission.)

stingtail (sting'tāl), n. A sting-ray.

sting-winkle (sting'wing'kl), n. The hedge-hog-murex. Murex erinaceus or europæus: so called by fishermen because it bores holes in other shell-fish, as if stinging them.

stingy[1] (sting'i), a. [< sting[1] + -y[1].] Stinging; piercing, as the wind; sharp, as a criticism. [Colloq. or prov. Eng.]

stingy[2] (stin'ji), a. [A dialectal (assibilated) form and deflected use of stingy[1].] 1. Ill-tempered. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. Meanly avaricious; extremely close-fisted and covetous; niggardly: as, a stingy fellow.

The griping and stingy humour of the covetous.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. vii.

3. Scanty; not full or plentiful.

When your teams
Drag home the stingy harvest.
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Birds of Killingworth.

=Syn. 2. Parsimonious, Miserly, etc. (see penurious), illiberal, ungenerous, saving, chary.

stink (stingk), v.; pret. and pp. stunk (pret. formerly stank), ppr. stinking. [< ME. stinken, stynken (pret. stank, stonk, pp. stonken), < AS. stincan (pret. stanc, pp. stuncen), smell, have an odor, rise as vapor, = MD. D. stinken = MLG. LG. stinken = OHG. stinchan, smell, have an odor, MHG. G. stinken = Sw. stinka = Dan. stinke, have a bad smell, stink; cf. Gr. τάγγος, rancid. Perhaps connected with Icel. stökkva, spring, leap, sprinkle, but not with Goth. stiggkwan, smite, thrust, strike; ef. L. tangere, touch (see tact, tangent). Hence ult. stench[1].] I. intrans. To emit a strong offensive smell; send out a disgusting odor: hence, to be in bad odor; have a bad reputation; be regarded with disfavor.

And therwithal he stank so horribel.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 627.

Fall Fate upon us,
Our memories shall never stink behind us.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, iii. 7.

Stinking badger, the stinkard or teledu.—Stinking bunt. Same as stinking smut.—Stinking camomile. Same as mayweed.—Stinking cedar, a coniferous tree of the genus Torreya: so named from the strong peculiar odor of the wood and foliage, especially when bruised or burnt. Most properly so called is T. taxifolia, an extremely local tree of western Florida, an evergreen of moderate size, with bright-yellow (or in old trees reddish) wood susceptible of a fine polish, very durable in contact with the soil, and, where found, largely used for fence-posts. Also called savin. See cut under Torreya. The similar T. Californica is the California nutmeg (see nutmeg). T. grandis of China, called kaya, affords a good timber. T. nucifera, a smaller Japanese species, yields a wood valued by coopers and turners, and a food-oil is expressed from its nuts. Also stinking yew.—Stinking crane's-bill. Same as herb-robert.—Stinking goosefoot. Same as notchweed.—Stinking hellebore, hoarhound. See the nouns.—Stinking mayweed, the common mayweed.—Stinking nightshade. Same as henbane.—Stinking nutmeg, the California nutmeg, one of the stinking cedars. See nutmeg.—Stinking smut. See smut, 3.—Stinking vervain, the guinea-hen weed. See Petiveria.—Stinking yew. Same as stinking cedar.

II. trans. To annoy with an offensive smell; affect in any way by an offensive odor. Imp. Dict.

stink (stingk), n. [< ME. stinke, stynk, stynke: from the verb. Cf. stench[1].] 1. A strong offensive smell; a disgusting odor; a stench.

And fro him comethe out Smoke and Stynk and Fuyr, and so moche Abhomynacioun that unethe no man may there endure. Mandeville, Travels, p. 282.

In Köln, a town of monks and bones,
And pavements fanged with murderous stones,
And rags, and hags, and hideous wenches —
I counted two and seventy stenches,
All well-defined and several stinks!
Coleridge, Cologne.

2†. Hell, regarded as a region of sulphurous smells (or of infamy ?).

So have I doon in erthe, allas the while!
That certes, but if thou my socour be,
To stynk eterne he wol my gost exile.
Chaucer, A. B. C., l. 56.

3. A disagreeable exposure. [Slang.]

The newspapers of the district where he was then located had raised before the eye and mind of the public what the "patterers" of his class [genteel beggars] proverbially call a stink—that is, had opened the eyes of the unwary to the movements of "Chelsea George."
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 250.

Fire stink, in coal-mining, a smell indicating the spontaneous combustion of the coal or goaf somewhere in the mine.=Syn. 1. Stench, etc. See smell.

stink-alive (stingk'a-liv'), n. The bib or pout, Gadus luscus: so called because it speedily putrefies after death. J. G. Wood.

stinkard (sting'kärd), n. [< stink + -ard.] 1†. One who stinks; hence, a mean, paltry fellow.

Your stinkard has the self-same liberty to be there in his tobacco-fumes which your sweet courtier hath.
Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 133.

That foolish knave, that hose and doublet stinkard.
Chapman, Gentleman Usher, v. 1.

2. The stinking badger of Java, Mydaus meliceps; the teledu. See cut under teledu.—3. In ichth., a shark of the genus Mustelus.

stinkardly† (sting'kärd-li), a. [< stinkard + -ly[1].] Stinking; mean.

You notorious stinkardly bearward.
B. Jonson, Epicœne, iv. 1.

stink-ball (stingk'bâl), n. A preparation of pitch, resin, niter, gunpowder, colophony, asafetida, and other offensive and suffocating ingredients, placed in earthen jars, formerly used for throwing upon an enemy's decks at close quarters, and still in use among Eastern pirates.

stink-bird (stingk'bėrd), n. The hoactzin, Opisthocomus cristatus.

stink-bug (stingk'bug), n. Any one of several malodorous bugs, particularly the common squash-bug, Anasa tristis, of the Coreidæ. See cut under squash-bug.

stinker (sting'kėr), n. [< stink + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which stinks; a stinkard; a stinkpot.

The air may be purified . . . by burning of stink-pots or stinkers in contagious lanes. Harvey, Consumptions.

2. One of several large petrels, as the giant fulmar, Ossifraga gigantea, which acquire an offensive odor from feeding on blubber or carrion.

stinkhorn (stingk'hôrn), n. [< stink + horn.] In bot., a common name for certain ill-smelling fungi of the genus Phallus. The most common species is P. impudicus. See Phallus, 3.

stinkingly (sting'king-li), adv. In a stinking manner; disgustingly; with an offensive smell.

stinking-weed (sting'king-wēd), n. 1. A species of Cassia, C. occidentalis, found distributed throughout the tropics: so called from its fetid leaves. Also stinking-wood.—2. The ragwort, Senecio Jacobæa. [Local, Scotland.]

stinking-wood (sting'king-wůd), n. 1. Same as stinking-weed, 1.—2. A leguminous shrub, Anagyris fœtida, of southern Europe.

stinkpot (stingk'pot), n. 1. A pot or jar of stinking materials; a chamber-pot. Smollett. —2†. A receptacle containing a disinfectant. See the quotation under stinker.—3. A stinkball.—4. The musk-turtle, Cinosternum odoratum or Aromochelys odorata, a stinking kind of turtle common in some parts of the United States. It is a common inhabitant of the eastern and central streams of the country, and is very troublesome to fishermen by swallowing their bait. It is useful as a scavenger.

Stinkpot (Cinosternum odoratum or Aromochelys odorata).

stink-rat (stingk'rat), n. The musk-turtle. See stinkpot, 4. [Local, U. S.]

stink-shad (stingk'shad), n. Same as mud-shad.

stinkstone (stingk'stōn), n. A variety of limestone which gives off a fetid odor when quarried or struck by a hammer. This odor comes from the escape of sulphureted hydrogen, and in most cases it seems to be caused by the decomposition of embedded organic matter. In some quarries in the Carboniferous limestone of Ireland the smell has been found so overpowering that the men were sickened by it, and had to leave off work for a time. (Jukes.) Also called fetid limestone, and swinestone.

stink-trap (stingk'trap), n. A contrivance to prevent the escape of effluvia from the openings of drains; a stench-trap.

stink-turtle (stingk'tėr'tl), n. The musk-turtle. See stinkpot, 4.

stinkweed (stingk'wēd), n. 1. An ill-smelling cruciferous plant, Diplotaxis muralis, of southern Europe. [Prov. Eng.]—2. The jimsonweed.

stinkwood (stingk'wůd), n. One of several trees with fetid wood. (a) In South Africa, Ocotea bullata (see Ocotea) and Celtis Kraussiana, the latter a tree 20 feet high and 2 feet in diameter, with a tough yellowish-white wood used for planks, cooperage, etc. (b) In Tasmania, a shrub or tree, Zieria Smithii, also found in Australia, and sometimes called sand-fly bush. (c) In the Mascarene Islands, Fœtidia Mauritiana of the Myrtaceæ, a tree from 20 to 40 feet high, whose wood is used for foundations, not being attacked by white ants.

stint (stint), v. [Also obs. or dial. stent; < ME. stinten, stynten, stenten, < AS. styntan, make dull, blunt, orig. make short (also in comp. forstyntan, ge-stentan, warn, restrain) (= Icel. stytta (for stynta*), shorten, = Sw. dial. stynta, shorten, = Norw. stytta, stutta, shorten, tuck up the clothes), < stunt, dull, obtuse, stupid, = Icel. stuttr = OSw. stunt = Norw. stutt, short: see stunt.] I. trans. 1. To cause to cease; put an end to; stay; stop. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Sey, "al forgeven," and stynt is al this fare [disturbance].
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1107.

Make war breed peace, make peace stint war.
Shak., T. of A., v. 4. 83.

Stint thy babbling tongue!
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, i. 1.

The thin jackals waiting for the feast
Stinted their hungry howls as he passed by.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 172.

2†. To bring to a stand; stay; put a stop to.

The kynges were stynted at the entre of the forest by a river, and ther assembled alle her peple that thei myght haue. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 154.

3. To forbear; cease.

Art thou a seruing man? then serue againe,
And stint to steale as common souldiours do.
Gascoigne, Steele Glas (ed. Arber), p. 67.

Spare not to spur, nor stint to ride,
Until thou come to fair Tweedside.
Scott, L. of L. M., i. 22.

4. To limit; restrain; restrict; hence, to limit or confine to a scanty allowance: as, to stint one's self in food; to stint service or help.

[He] trauels halfe a day without any refreshment then water, whereof wisely and temperately he stinted himselfe.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 135.

Was the infinite One to be confined to this narrow space? Could His love be stinted to the few to whom He had especially revealed His Will? Channing, Perfect Life, p. 61.

5. To assign a definite task to; prescribe a specified amount of labor for: as, to stint a pupil or a servant. See stint, n., 2.—6. To cover or serve (a mare) successfully; get with foal. See the quotation under stinted, 2.

II. intrans. 1. To cease; desist; stay; stop; hold.

Of this cry they wolde nevere stenten.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 45.

He styntid not, nor neuer wold he sese,
And with his swerd where that his stroke glynt,
Owt of ther sadill full redely they went.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2420.

And swears she'll never stint. Shak., Pericles, iv. 4. 42.

2. To be saving or careful in expenditure.

It's in things for show they cut short; while for such as me, it's in things for life we've to stint.
Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, xxxvii.

stint (stint), n. [Also obs. or dial. stent; < stint, v.] 1. Limit; bound; limitation; restriction; restraint: as, common without stint (that is, without limitation or restriction as to the extent of the pasturage, the number of cattle to be pastured, or the period of the year).

If the summe which the debter oweth be above the stint, he shall not be released. Coryat, Crudities, I. 167.

I know not how, Diuine Prouidence seemeth to hane set those Scythian stints to the Persian proceedings.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 352.

By rallying round the throne the whole strength of the Royalists and High-Churchmen, and by using without stint all the resources of corruption, he [Danby] flattered himself that he could manage the Parliament.
Macaulay, Sir W. Temple.

2. Fixed amount or quantity; allowance; prescribed or allotted task or performance: as, a certain stint of work.

Put me to a certain stint, sir; allow me but a red herring a-day. Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, ii. 1.

In the divided or social state, these functions are parcelled out to individuals, each of whom aims to do his stint of the joint work. Emerson, Misc., p. 72.

Margaret had a new stint at quilling.
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 2.

If you are sick or weak, and can't finish your stent, you are given twenty blows with the cat.
The Century, XXXVII. 36.

3. One of several small species of sandpiper, especially of the genus Actodromos; a sandpeep. The common stint is the dunlin, purre, or ox-bird, Pelidna alpina. (See dunlin.) This is an early, if not the first, application of the name, as by Ray, who called this bird also oxeye and least snipe. The little stint is Actodromas minuta; the least stint is A. minutilla, which abounds in North America, and is also known as Wilson's sandpiper. Temminck's stint is A. temminckii; the red-necked, A. ruficollis. There are several others of the same genus. The broad-billed sandpiper, Limicola platyrhyncha, is a kind of stint, and the spoon-billed, Eurynorhynchus pygmæus, is another. Extension of the name to the sanderling and to phalaropes is unusual.

American Least Stint (Actodromos minutilla).

stintance† (stin'tans), n. [< stint + -ance.] Stint; limit; restriction; restraint. London Prodigal, p. 7. (Halliwell.) [Rare.]

stinted (stin'ted), p. a. 1. Limited; scanty; scrimped.

> Oh! trifle not with wants you cannot feel,
> Nor mock the misery of a stinted meal.
> Crabbe, Works, I. 9.

2. In foal. See stint, v. t., 6. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

> Stinted, 'in foal.' The word was printed, in this sense, in a catalogue of live-stock for sale at Nashville a year or two ago [1886]. Halliwell and Wright give it as an adjective, meaning in foal, used in the West of England.
> Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., XVII. 44.

stintedness (stin'ted-nes), n. The character or condition of being stinted.

stinter (stin'tėr), n. [< stint + -er[1].] One who or that which stints, checks, or puts a stop to: as, a stinter of strife.

> Let us now see whether a set form, or this extemporary way, be the greater hinderer and stinter of it.
> South, Sermons, II. iii.

stintingly (stin'ting-li), adv. Restrictedly; restrainedly; grudgingly. George Eliot, Janet's Repentance, viii.

stintless (stint'les), a. [< stint + -less.] 1†. Ceaseless.

> His life was nothing els but stintlesse passion.
> Rowland, Betraying of Christ (1598). (Halliwell.)

2. Without stint; unstinted; generous.

> He gets glimpses of the same stintless hospitality.
> The Century, XXVII. 201.

stinty (stin'ti), a. [< stint + -y[1].] Restricted; grudging; illiberal. [Rare.]

> Those endowments which our Anglo-Saxon forefathers made to win for themselves and kindred such ghostly aids in another world were neither few nor stinty.
> Rock, Church of our Fathers, ii. 327.

stiony, n. See styany.

Stipa (stī'pă), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), named from the flaxen appearance of the feathery awns of S. pennata; < L. stipa, stupa, stuppa, the coarse part of flax, tow: see stupa.] A genus of grasses, of the tribe Agrostideæ, type of the subtribe Stipeæ. It is characterized by one-flowered paniceled spikelets, with their pedicels not continued beyond the flower, which contains three or perhaps sometimes only two lodicules and a narrow acuminate flowering glume indurated closely around the grain and prolonged, usually by a joint, into a long and commonly conspicuously twisted or bent awn. There are nearly 100 species, widely dispersed through both tropical and temperate regions. They are tufted grasses, usually tall, with convolute leaves and a slender, sparingly branched panicle of rather long scattered spikelets, with awns sometimes extremely attenuated. A general name of the species is feather-grass, applying particularly to the highly ornamental S. pennata of Europe. The only common species of the eastern United States is S. avenacea, the black oat-grass; westward the species are numerous—several, known as bunch-beard-, or feather-grass, being somewhat valuable wild forage-plants of the mountains and great plains. Among these are S. comata (silk-grass) and S. spartea (porcupine-grass), the latter remarkable for its hygrometric awns, which are coiled when dry, but uncoil under moisture and, when resisted, tend to push the seed into the ground. S. viridula, var. robusta, of Mexico, New Mexico, etc., is reported to have a narcotic effect upon horses, and is called steepy-grass. S. aristiglumis of Australia is a valuable fodder-plant, of remarkably rapid growth; S. micrantha of Queensland borrows the name of bamboo. S. tenacissima and S. arenaria, on account of their large membranous spikelets and two-cleft flowering glume, are sometimes separated as a genus, Macrochloa (Kunth, 1835). See esparto, alfa, and atocha-grass.

stipate (stī'pāt), a. [< L. stipatus, pp. of stipare, crowd, press together. Cf. constipate.] In bot., crowded.

stipe[1] (stīp), n. [A dial. var. of steep[1]. Cf. Stiper Stone group.] A steep ascent. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stipe[2] (stīp), n. [< F. stipe, a stipe, = Sp. estipite, a door-post, = It. stipite, a stock, trunk, post, door-post, < L. stipes (stipit-), a stock, trunk, post, poet. a tree, a branch of a tree; perhaps cognate with E. stiff.] 1. In bot., a stalk or support of some sort, the word being variously employed. (a) In flowering plants, the stalk formed by the receptacle or some part of it, or by a carpel. To distinguish further this kind of stipe, various other terms are employed, as thecaphore, gynophore, gonophore, anthophore, gynobase, and carpophore. See cut under Arachis. (b) The stalk or petiole of a frond, especially of a fern or seaweed. See cut under seaweed. (c) In fungi, especially of the genus Agaricus, the stalk or stem which supports the pileus or cap. (d) The caudex of a tree-fern. Also stipes. See cut in next column.

a, Longitudinal section of the flower of Gynandropsis pentaphylla, showing the calyx, two of the petals, two of the stamens, and the stipitate ovary. b, Frond of Asplenium Trichomanes. c, Agaricus campestris. (s, Stipe in a, b, and c.)

2. In anat., a stem: applied to two branches, anterior and posterior, of the zygal or paroccipital fissure of the brain. B. G. Wilder.—3. In zoöl., a stipes.

stipel (stī'pel), n. [< NL. stipella*, for stipitella*, dim. of L. stipes, a post: see stipe[2].] In bot., a secondary stipule situated at the base of the leaflets of a compound leaf. Unlike stipules, there is only a single one to each leaflet, with the exception of the terminal leaflet, which has a pair.

stipellate (stī'pel-āt), a. [< NL. stipellatus*, < stipella*, a stipel: see stipel.] In bot., bearing or having stipels.

stipend (stī'pend), n. [= Sp. Pg. estipendio = It. stipendio, < L. stipendium, a tax, impost, tribute; in military use, pay, salary; contr. for stipipendium*, < stips, a gift, donation, alms (given in small coin), + pendere, weigh out: see pendent.] A fixed periodical allowance or payment; settled or fixed pay; salary; pay; specifically, in Scotland, the salary paid to a clergyman; the income of an ecclesiastical living.

> Americus Vesputius, . . . vnder the stipende of the Portugales, hadde sayled towarde the south pole many degrees beyond the Equinoctiall.
> Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on America, [ed. Arber, p. 134).

> 'Twas a wonder with how small a stipend from his father Tom Tusher contrived to make a good figure.
> Thackeray, Henry Esmond, x.

=Syn. Pay, etc. See salary[1].

stipend (stī'pend), v. t. [< F. stipendier = Sp. Pg. estipendiar = It. stipendiare, pay, hire, < L. stipendiari, receive pay, serve for pay, < stipendium, pay: see stipend, n.] To pay by settled stipend or wages; put upon or provide with a stipend. Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, xlvii. (Latham.) [Rare.]

stipendiarian (stī-pen-di-ā'ri-an), a. [< stipendiary + -an.] Acting from mercenary considerations; hired; stipendiary. Imp. Dict.

stipendiary (stī-pen'di-ā-ri), a. and n. [< F. stipendiaire = Sp. Pg. estipendiario = It. stipendiario, < L. stipendiarius, pertaining to tribute, contribution, or pay, < stipendium, tribute, pay: see stipend.] I. a. Receiving wages or salary; performing services for a stated price or compensation; paid.—Stipendiary curate. See curate[1].—Stipendiary estate, in law, a feud or estate granted in return for services, generally of a military kind.—Stipendiary magistrate, in Great Britain, a police justice sitting in large cities and towns, under appointment by the Home Secretary on behalf of the crown.

II. n.; pl. stipendiaries (-riz). 1. One who performs services for a settled payment, salary, or stipend.—2. A stipendiary magistrate. See under I.—3. In law, a feudatory owing services to his lord.

stipendiate† (stī-pen'di-āt), v. t. [< L. stipendiatus, pp. of stipendiari, receive pay, serve for pay, < stipendium, tribute, salary: see stipend, v.] To endow with a stipend or salary.

> Besides ye exercise of the horse, armes, dauncing, &c., all the sciences are taught in the vulgar French by professors stipendiated by the greate Cardinal.
> Evelyn, Diary, Sept. 14, 1644.

Stiper Stone group. [< Stiper Stones (see def.).] In geol., a subgroup, the equivalent of the Arenig series in Carnarvonshire: so called from the name Stiper Stones given to a prominent ridge of quartzose rocks rising above the moorland in Shropshire, and extending for about ten miles in length. The Arenig or Stiper Stone group, according to Murchison's original classification (1833–4), formed the base of the Silurian system. It is now considered to be the base of Lapworth's Ordovician, of the Cambro-Silurian of Jukes, and of the Middle Cambrian of other English geologists.

stipes (stī'pēz), n. [NL., < L. stipes, stips (stipit-), a stock, trunk: see stipe[2].] 1. In bot., same as stipe[2].—2. In zoöl., a stalk or stem, as an eyestalk or a footstalk; a stipe. Specifically—(a) In entom., the footstalk of the maxilla of an insect, the outer or main division of that organ; the second joint of the maxilla, borne upon the cardo, and through the palpifer and subgalea bearing the palpus, galea, and lacinia, when these organs exist. Also called shaft. See cuts under galea and Insecta. (b) In Myriapoda: (1) The proximal or median one of two pieces of which the protomala, or so-called mandible, consists, the other being the cardo. See protomala, and figure under epilabrum. (2) One of two sets, an inner and an outer, of broad plates into which the deutomala, or second pair of mouth-appendages, of a myriapod is divided. See deutomata. A. S. Packard, Proc. Amer. Philos. Soc., June, 1883, pp. 198, 200.

stipiform (stī'pi-fôrm), a. [< L. stipes, stips (stipit-), a stock, trunk, + forma, form.] In bot. and zoöl., having the form or appearance of a stipe or stipes. See stipe[2], stipes.

stipitate (stip'i-tāt), a. [< NL. stipitatus*, < L. stipes (stipit-), a stock, trunk: see stipe[2].] In bot. and zoöl., having or supported by a stipe or stipes; elevated on a stipe.

stipitiform (stip'i-ti-fôrm), a. [< L. stipes (stipit-), a stock, trunk (see stipe[2]), + forma, form.] In bot. and zoöl., having the form or character of a stipe or stipes; stipiform; stalklike.

stipiture (stip'i-tūr), n. A bird of the genus Stipiturus; an emu-wren.

Stipiturus (stip-i-tū'rus), n. [NL. (Lesson, 1831), < L. stipes (stipit-), a stock, trunk, + Gr. οὐρά, tail.] An Australian genus of warbler-like birds, assigned to the Malurinæ or placed elsewhere, having the tail curiously formed of ten feathers with stiffened shafts and loose decomposed barbs (whence the name); the emu-wrens.

Emu-wren (Stipiturus malacurus).

S. malacurus is a small brownish bird streaked with black, and with a blue throat, described by Latham in 1801 as the soft-tailed flycatcher. The immediate affinities of the genus are with such forms as Sphenœacus and Sphenura (see these words), and the true position of all these forms seems to be among or near the reed- or grass-warblers, especially such as have but ten tail-feathers. See warbler.

stipple (stip'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. stippled, ppr. stippling. [< D. stippelen, speckle, dot over (cf. stippel, a speckle, dim. of stip, a point), freq. of stippen (> G. stippen), prick, dot, speckle, < stip, MD. stip, stup, a point, dot.] To produce gradation in color or shade in (any material) by means of dots or small spots. See stippling.

> The interlaying of small pieces can not altogether avoid a broken, stippled, spotty effect.
> Milman, Latin Christianity, xiv. 10.

stipple (stip'l), n. [< stipple, v.] 1. In the fine arts, same as stippling.—2. In decorative art, an intermediate tone or color, or combination of tones, used to make gradual the passage from one color to another in a design.—Stipple-engraving process, the process of making an engraved plate by stippling. The first step is to lay an etching-ground on a copperplate; the next, after the subject has been transferred as in etching, is to dot in the outline: after which the darker parts are marked with dots, which are laid in larger and more closely in the deeper shades. The plate is then bitten in, the ground is removed, and the lighter parts are laid in with dry-point or the stipple-graver.

stippled (stip'ld), p. a. Spotted; shaded or modeled by means of minute dots applied with the point of the brush or in a similar way.

stipple-graver (stip'l-grā″vėr), n. An engravers' tool of which the point is bent downward so as to facilitate the making of small dots or indentations in the surface of a copperplate.

stippler (stip'lėr), n. [< stipple + -er[1].] 1. One who stipples.—2. A brush or tool used for stippling: as, a stippler made of hog's hair.

stippling (stip'ling), n. [Verbal n. of stipple, v.] In the fine arts, dotted work of any kind, whether executed with the brush-point, the pencil, or the stipple-graver.

stiptic†, a. and n. See styptic.

stipula (stip'ū-lă), n.; pl. stipulæ (-lē). [NL., < L. stipula, a stalk: see stipule.] In ornith., same as stipule.

stipulaceous (stip-ū-lā'shius), a. [< stipula + -aceous.] In bot., same as stipular.

stipular (stip'ū-lăr), a. [< NL. stipula + -ar[3].] In bot., of, belonging to, or standing in the place of stipules; growing on stipules, or close to them: as, stipular glands.—Stipular buds, buds which are enveloped by the stipules, as in the tulip-tree.

stipulary (stip'ū-lā-ri), a. [< NL. stipula + -ary.] In bot., relating to stipules; stipular.

stipulate[1] (stip'ū-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. stipulated, ppr. stipulating. [< L. stipulatus, pp. of stipulare (> It. stipulare = Sp. Pg. estipular = F. stipuler), exact, bargain for; origin doubtful: by some referred to OL. stipulus*, firm; by others to L. stipula, a straw.] To arrange or settle definitely, or by special mention and agreement, or as a special condition: as, it is stipulated that A shall pay 5 per cent.

Henry the Fourth and the king my master had stipulated with each other that, whensoever any one of them died, the survivor should take care of the other's child.
Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Life (ed. Howells), p. 129.

Those Articles which were stipulated in their Favour.
Howell, Letters, I. iii. 20.

It is stipulated also that every man shall be bound to obey his own lord "convenienter," or so far as is fitting and right. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 782.

Stipulated damages. (a) In a general sense, a sum named in a contract or obligation as the damages to be paid in case of non-performance. (b) As commonly used in law, damages liquidated by a stipulation—that is, a sum fixed by a contract or obligation in such manner as to be the sum payable in case of breach, without any further question as to the amount of the actual damages.

stipulate[2] (stip'ū-lāt), a. [< NL. stipulatus*, < L. stipula, a stalk, stipule: see stipule.] In bot., having stipules: as, a stipulate stalk or leaf.

Stipulateæ (stip-ū-lā'tē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (J. von Sachs), < stipulatus*, stalked (see stipulate[2]), + -eæ.] Sachs's name for the eusporangiate ferns, a division which embraces the Ophioglossaceæ and Marattiaceæ. The name is now abandoned, as it is known that there are no stipules in the Ophioglossaceæ, and that they are sometimes wanting in the Marattiaceæ.

stipulation[1] (stip-ū-lā'shon), n. [< F. stipulation = Sp. estipulacion = Pg. estipulação = It. stipulazione, < L. stipulatio(n-), a promise, bargain, covenant, < stipulari, demand a formal promise, bargain, covenant, stipulate: see stipulate.] 1. The act of stipulating, agreeing, or covenanting; a contracting or bargaining. —2. That which is stipulated or agreed upon; a contract or bargain, or a particular article or item in a contract: as, the stipulations of the allied powers to furnish each his contingent of troops; a contract containing so many stipulations.—3. In law, specifically—(a) An agreement between counsel or attorneys in a cause, affecting its conduct. (b) An undertaking in the nature of bail taken in the admiralty courts. (c) In Roman law, a contract in which the form consisted in a question and answer, formalities which in course of time came to be recognized as making a valid contract which might dispense with the ceremonials required by the earlier law.

stipulation[2] (stip-ū-lā'shon), n. [< L. stipula, a stalk: see stipule.] In bot., the situation and structure of the stipules.

stipulator (stip'ū-lā-tor), n. [< L. stipulator, one who stipulates, < stipulari, demand a formal promise, bargain, stipulate: see stipulate.] One who stipulates, contracts, or covenants; in Rom. law, one to whom a stipulation or promise was given in the form of contract known as stipulatio. See stipulation[1], 3 (c).

stipule (stip'ūl), n. [= F. stipule = It. stipula, < L. stipula, a stalk, stem, blade, dim. of stipes, stock, trunk: see stipe[2].] 1. In bot.: (a) One of a pair of lateral appendages found at the base of the petiole of many leaves. Stipules are normally flat organs, leaf-like in appearance and use, or colorless and scale-like, and without function—sometimes, however, as in the magnolia, fig, and beech, serving as bud-scales and falling when the leaves expand. Stipules may be free from the petiole, or adnate by one edge, then passing by grades into mere wing-like expansions of its base; they may be free from one another, or variously united, sometimes so as to clasp the stem, sometimes between it and the leafstalk (then intrapetiolar), sometimes sheathing the stem, as in Polygonum, then forming ocreæ (see ocrea). The adjacent members of two opposite pairs may become connate around the stem, as in many Rubiaceæ. Stipules are sometimes reduced to mere bristles, or take the form of spines, as in the common locust; in Smilax they appear to be converted into tendrils. They are often wholly wanting, but where present they generally characterize whole families, as they do the Malvaceæ, Leguminosæ, and Rosaceæ. (b) In the Characeæ, one of certain unicellular tubes, of greater or less length, on the inner and outer sides of the so-called leaf. (c) Same as paraphyllum (b).—2. In ornith., a newly sprouted feather; a pinfeather. Also stipula.

Stipules (St).
1. Of Robinia Pseudacacia. 2. Of Rosa canina. 3. Of Pisum arvense. 4. Of Lathyrus Aphaca. 5. Of Smilax bona-nox.

stipuled (stip'ūld), a. [< stipule + -ed[2].] In bot., furnished with stipules, or lateral leafy appendages.

stipuliform (stip'ū-li-fôrm), a. [< L. stipula, a stalk, + forma, form.] In bot., having the form of a stipule.

stir[1] (stėr), v.; pret. and pp. stirred, ppr. stirring. [Also dial. steer (and stoor); early mod. E. also stirr, stirre, stire, stere; < ME. stiren, steren, sturen, styren, < AS. styrian, move, stir, = North Fries. stiaren = MD. stooren, D. storen, disturb, vex, = MLG. stören, disturb, hinder, = OHG. stören, störren, scatter, destroy, disturb, MHG. stæren, G. stören, disturb, interrupt, hinder, = Sw. störa, disturb; cf. Icel. styrr, a stir, Dan. for-styrre, disturb; not connected with L. sternere, scatter, or E. strew: see strew. Cf. stoor[2]. Hence ult. storm and sturgeon. The ME. forms are in some uses confused with similar forms of steer[1], 'direct,' 'guide.'] I. trans. 1. To move; change the position or situation of: as, to stir hand or foot.

Stonde he neuere so styfliche thorgh sterynge of the bote
He bendeth and boweth the body is vnstable.
Piers Plowman (C), xi. 36.

He pulls you not a hair, nor pares a nail,
Nor stirs a foot, without due figuring
The horoscope. T. Tomkis (?), Albumazar, i. 3.

2. To set in motion; agitate; disturb.

There is everemore gret Wynd in that Fosse, that sterethe everemore the Gravelle, and makethe it trouble.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 32.

My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 311.

Airs that gently stir
The vernal leaves. Wordsworth, Ruth.

3. To move briskly; bestir.

Now stureth hym self Arthour,
Thenkyng on hys labour,
And gaderyth to hym strenghth aboute,
Hys kynges & Erles on a rowte.
Arthur (ed. Furnivall), l. 295.

Come, you must stir your Stumps, you must Dance.
Steele, Tender Husband, v. 1.

4. To cause the particles or parts of to change place in relation to each other by agitating with the hand or an implement: as, to stir the fire with a poker; to stir one's coffee with a spoon.

He stireth the coles.
Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 267.

Mr. ——, one of the fellowes (in Mr. Fr. Potter's time), was wont to say that Dr. Kettle's braine was like a hasty-pudding, where there was memorie, judgement, and phancy all stirred together. Aubrey, Lives (Ralph Kettle).

5†. To brandish; flourish.

Now hatz Arthure his axe, & the halme grypez, & sturnely sturez hit aboute, that stryke wyth hit thozt.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 331.

6. To bring into notice or discussion; agitate; debate; moot.

Stir not questions of jurisdiction. Bacon, Great Place.

7. To rouse, as from sleep or inaction; awaken.

Nay, then, 'tis time to stir him from his trance.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 1. 182.

Thy dear heart is stirred
From out its wonted quiet.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 344.

8. To move; excite; rouse.

His steed was bloody red, and fomed yre,
When with the malstring spur he did him roughly stire.
Spenser, F. Q., II. v. 2.

The music must be shrill and all confus'd
That stirs my blood.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, i. 1.

9. To incite; instigate; set on.

Feendis threten faste to take me,
And steren helle houndis to bite me.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 70.

With him along is come the mother-queen,
An Æe, stirring him to blood and strife.
Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 63.

To stir coals†. See coal.—To stir up. (a) To instigate; incite: as, to stir up a nation to rebellion.

To these undertakings these great Lords of the World have been stirred up rather by the desire of Fame . . . than by the affection of bearing rule.
Raleigh (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 654).

There's that Will Maskery, sir, as is the rampageousest Methodis' as can be, an' I make no doubt it was him as stirred up th' young woman to preach last night.
George Eliot, Adam Bede, v.

(b) To excite; provoke; foment; bring about: as, to stir up a mutiny; to stir up contention.

They gan with fowle reproch
To stirre up strife, and troublous contecke broch.
Spenser, F. Q., III. i. 64.

To be more just, religious, wise, or magnanimous then the common sort stirrs up in a Tyrant both feare and envy. Milton, Eikonoklastes, xv.

(c) To rouse to action; stimulate; quicken: as, to stir up the mind.

[They] are also perpetually stirred up to fresh industry and new discoveries. Bacon, Physical Fables, ii., Expl.

The man who stirs up a reposing community . . . can scarcely be destitute of some moral qualities which extort even from enemies a reluctant admiration.
Macaulay, Sir William Temple.

II. intrans. 1. To pass from rest or inaction to motion or action; move; budge: as, they dare not stir; to stir abroad.

"Master," said he, "be rul'd by me,
From the Green-wood we'll not stir."
Robin Hood and the Golden Arrow (Child's Ballads, V. 384).

No disaffected or rebellious person can stir without being presently known; and this renders the King very safe in his Government. Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 74.

During the time I remained in the convent, the superior thought it proper I should not stir out.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 4.

2. To be in motion; be in a state of activity; be on the move or go; be active: as, to be continually stirring.

If ye will nedys know at short and longe,
It is evyn a womans tounge,
For that is ever sterynge.
Interlude of the Four Elements. (Halliwell, under short.)

If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Cassio entreats of her a little favour of speech. Shak., Othello, iii. 1. 27.

She will brook
No tarrying; where she comes the winds must stir.
Wordsworth, Sonnets, i. 32.

3. To be in circulation; be current; be on foot.

No ill luck stirring but what lights on my shoulders.
Shak., M. of V., iii. 1. 99.

Ther dyed such multitudes weekly of ye plague, as all trade was dead, and little money stirring.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 204.

There is no News at all stirring here now.
Howell, Letters, ii. 18.

4. To use an instrument or the hand for making a disturbing or agitating motion, as in a liquid.

The more you stir in it the more it stinks. Bulwer.

5. To be roused; be excited; disturb or agitate one's self.

You show too much of that
For which the people stir. Shak., Cor., iii. 1. 53.

stir[1] (stėr), n. [Early mod. E. also stirre; < stir[1], v.] 1†. Movement; action.

The sounding of our wordes [is] not alwayes egall; for some aske longer, some shorter time to be vttered in, & so, by the Philosophers definition, stirre is the true measure of time. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 56.

2. A state of motion, activity, briskness, bustle, or the like; the confusion and tumult of many persons in action.

Why all these words, this clamour, and this stir?
Sir J. Denham, Prudence, l. 112.

The house had that pleasant aspect of life which is like the cheery expression of comfortable activity in the human countenance. You could see at once that there was the stir of a large family within it.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xiii.

It is well to turn aside from the fretful stir of the present. Huxley, Animal Automatism.

3. Commotion; excitement; tumult: as, his appearance on the scene created quite a stir.

Men may thinke it strange there should be such a stirre for a little corne; but had it beene gold, with more ease wee might haue got it; and had it wanted, the whole Colony had starued.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 219.

When Portsey, weighing well the ill to her might grow,
In that their mighty stirs might be her overthrow.
Drayton, Polyolbion, ii. 448.

An Impost was leuied of the subiects, to satisfie the pay due to the souldioura for the Persian warre, which raised these stirres. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 287.

4. Motion; impulse; emotion; feeling.

He did keep
The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the fits and stirs of 's mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on.
Shak., Cymbeline, i. 3. 12.

5. A poke; a jog.

"Eh, Arthur?" said Tom, giving him a stir with his foot. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 8.

6. A house of correction; a lockup; a prison. [Thieves' slang.]

I was in Brummagem, and was seven days in the new stir, and nearly broke my neck.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 469.

stir[2] (stir), n. [A corruption of sir.] Sir. [Scottish vulgarism.]

I'm seeking for service, stir. Scott, Old Mortality, viii.

stirabout (stêr'a-bout″), n. [< stir[1] + about.] 1. Oatmeal or other porridge.

The fifth book is of pease-porridge, under which are included frumetary, water-gruel, milk-porridge, rice-milk, flumary, stir-about, and the like.
W. King, Art of Cookery, Letter ix.

2. Oatmeal and dripping or bacon-fat mixed together and stirred about in a frying-pan. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Stiretrus (stī-rē'trus), n. [NL. (Laporte, 1833), < Gr. στεῖρος, barren, + ἦτρον, the abdomen.] A notable genus of true bugs, of the family Pentatomidæ, comprising about 25 species peculiar to America, most of them tropical. One species, S. anchorago, is found in the southern United States, and is a common enemy of the chinch-bug, Colorado potato-beetle, and cotton-worm.

Stiretrus anchorago. (Hair-line shows natural size.)

striated (stir'i-ā-ted), a. [< striate* (< L. stiria, a frozen drop, an icicle; cf. still[2]) + -ed[2].] Adorned with pendants like icicles.

stirioust (stir'i-us), a. [< L. stiria, a frozen drop, an icicle, + -ous.] Consisting of or resembling icicles.

Crystal is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not much unlike the stirious or stillicidious dependencies of ice. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 1.

stirk (stêrk), n. [Also sterk, sturk; < ME. stirk, styrk, sterk, stirke, styrke, < AS. stire, a young cow, heifer, styre, styric, a young steer, = MD. stierick = MLG. sterke, > G. stärke, starke, a young cow, heifer, G. dial. sterk, a young steer; usually explained as derived, with dim. suffix -ie, < AS. steór, etc., a steer; but prob. connected, as orig. 'a young cow that has not yet calved,' with OHG. stero, MHG. ster, a ram, Goth. staira, barren, L. sterilis, barren, Gr. στεῖρος, στέριφος, barren, Skt. starī, barren, sterile: see sterile.] An animal of the ox or cow kind from one to two years old. [Prov. Eng. or Scotch.]

stirless (stêr'les), a. [< stir[1] + -less.] Still; motionless; inactive; very quiet. [Rare.]

She kept her hollow, stirless eyes on his. There was an absence of movement about her almost oppressive. She seemed not even to breathe. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 228.

stirn (stêrn), n. Same as stern[5].

stiropt, n. An old spelling of stirrup.

stirpt (stêrp), n. [< ME. stirpe, < L. stirps, a stock, root, race.] Stock; race; family.

So is ahe spronge of noble stirp and high.
Court of Love, l. 16.

Democracies . . . are commonly more quiet, and less subject to sedition, than where there are stirps of nobles.
Bacon, Nobility (ed. 1887).

stirpicultural (stêr-pi-kul'tūr-al), a. Pertaining to stirpiculture. The Sanitarian, XXIV. 514.

stirpiculture (stêr'pi-kul-tūr), n. [< L. stirps, a stock, race, + cultura, culture.] The breeding of special stocks or strains.

Sentimental objections in the way of the higher stirpiculture. The Nation, Aug. 10, 1876, p. 92.

stirps (stêrps), n.; pl. stirpes (stêr'pēz). [L.: see stirp.] 1. Race; lineage; family; in law, the person from whom a family is descended. See per stirpes, under per.—2. In zoöl., a classificatory group of uncertain rank and no fixed position, by MacLeay made intermediate between a family and a tribe; a superfamily. Compare group[1], section, cohort, and phalanx.—3. In bot., a race or permanent variety.

stirrage[1]t (stêr'āj), n. [< stir[1] + -age.] The act of stirring; agitation; commotion; stir.

Every small stirrage waketh them.
Granger, On Eccles. (1621), p. 320.

stirrage[2]t, n. Same as steerage.

stirrer (stêr'êr), n. [< stir[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who stirs; especially, one who is active or bustling.

Come on, . . . give me your hand, sir; an early stirrer.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 2. 3.

Bris. Good day to you.
Cam. You are an early stirrer.
Fletcher, Double Marriage, i. 1.

2. One who stirs or agitates anything, as a liquid, with the hand or an implement for stirring.—3. An implement or a machine used for stirring a liquid or the like.

The liquid being taken out on a pointed glass rod or stirrer. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 207.

4. One who incites or instigates; an instigator: often with up: as, a stirrer up of contention.

We must give, I say,
Unto the motives, and the stirrers up
Of humours in the blood.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, iii. 1.

Stirrers of sedition, without any zeal for freedom.
Macaulay, Sir W. Temple.

stirring (stêr'ing), n. [< ME. steringe, styrynge, sterïinge; verbal n. of stir[1], v.] 1. Movement; motion; activity; effort; the act of moving or setting in motion.

Eche abouten other goynge,
Causeth of othres steringe.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 800.

The emotions voiced in his song are stirrings of the spirit rather than thrills of the senses.
The Atlantic, LXV., p. 4 of adv'ts.

2t. Temptation.

3if any sterynge on me stele,
Out of the clos of ihi clennesse
Wysse me, lord, in wo & wele,
And kepe me fram vnkyndnesse.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 251.

3. In agri., the second tilth or fallow. Florio, p. 273. (Halliwell.)—4t. Riot; commotion.

I'll lie about Charing-cross, for, if there be any stirrings, there we shall have 'em.
Webster and Dekker, Northward Ho, i. 2.

stirring (stêr'ing), p. a. [Ppr. of stir[1], v.] 1. Being in active motion; characterized by stir or activity; active; bustling; lively; vivacious; brisk: as, a stirring life; stirring times.

Such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 16.

Those who appear the most stirring in the scene may possibly not be the real movers. Burke, Rev. in France.

2. Animating; rousing; awakening; stimulating; exciting; inspiriting: as, a stirring oration; a stirring march.

Often the ring of his verse is sonorous, and overcomes the jagged consonantal diction with stirring lyrical effect.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 302.

3t. Fickle.

A stythe man of his stature, stirond of wille,
Menyt hym to mony thinges, & of mynde gode.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3833.

stirrup (stir'- or stêr'up), n. [Early mod. E. also stirrop, stirop, steropе; < ME. stirop, styrop, styrope, sterepe, < AS. stirāp, stigrāp, stigerāp (= MD. stegerep, steeghreep, also steeclreep = OHG. stegareif, MHG. G. stegreif = Icel. stigreip), lit. 'mounting-rope,' < stīgan, mount, + rāp, rope: see sty[1] and rope[1]. Cf. D. stijg-beugel = G. steig-bügel = Sw. stig-bygel = Dan. stig-bøjle, a stirrup, lit. a ring or loop for mounting (see bail[1]).] 1. A support for the foot of a person mounted on a horse, usually a metal loop with the bottom part flat and corrugated or finished with points to give a hold to the sole of the boot and to aid in mounting. The metal loop is suspended from the saddle by a strap or thong, which in modern saddles is adjustable in length. The stirrup of Arab or other Eastern horsemen has a very broad rest for the foot; this projects sometimes beyond the heel, and the sharp edge of it serves instead of a spur. The stirrups of some modern military saddles have a strong front piece of leather or other material which prevents the foot from passing too far into the loop and protects the front of the leg. See also cut under saddle.

1, Stirrup for poulaine; 2, modern stirrup; 3, Mexican wooden stirrup; 4, Mexican wooden stirrup with taps.

Our hoste upon his stiropes stood anon.
Chaucer, Prol. to Shipman's Tale, l. 1.

I'll hold your stirrup when you do alight,
And without grudging wait till you return.
Beau. and Fl., Honest Man's Fortune, iv. 1.

2. Naut., a rope with an eye at its end, through which a foot-rope is rove, and by which it is supported. The ends of stirrups are securely fastened to the yard, and they steady the men when reefing or furling sails.

3. In mach., any piece resembling in shape and functions the stirrup of a saddle, as the iron loop by which a mill-saw hangs from the muley-head or in the sash.—4. In carp., etc., an iron loop-strap or other device for securing a rafter-post or -strut to a tie, or for supporting a beam, etc.—5. A hold for the foot at the end of the stock of a large crossbow, to keep it firm while the bow is bent and the string drawn to the noteh. See cut under arbalister.—6. In anat., the stapes or stirrup-bone.

stirrup-bar (stir'up-bär), n. The spring-bar or other device on a riding-saddle to which the upper end of the stirrup-strap is fastened.

stirrup-bone (stir'up-bōn), n. The stapes of a mammal: so called from its shape.

stirrup-cup (stir'up-kup), n. A cup of wine or other liquor presented to a rider when mounted and about to take his departure; a parting-cup.

stirrup-hose (stir'up-hōz), n. pl. Heavy stockings worn over the other garments for the legs by men traveling on horseback in the seventeenth century, and probably earlier. They are described as made very large at the top, and secured by points to the girdle or the bag-breeches.

stirrup-iron (stir'up-ī″êrn), n. The stirrup proper—that is, the metal loop in which the foot is placed, as distinguished from the leather strap which suspends it.

stirrup-lantern (stir'up-lan″têrn), n. A small lantern with an iron frame fastened below the stirrup to light the road at night and also to warm the rider's feet: a contrivance used in the fifteenth century and later.

stirrup-leather (stir'up-leтн″êr), n. The leather strap by which a stirrup hangs from the saddle.

stirrup-muscle (stir'up-mus″l), n. The stapedius.

stirrup-oil (stir'up-oil), n. A sound beating; a drubbing. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stirrup-piece (stir'up-pēs), n. In carp., mach., etc., anything which performs the office of a stirrup, in hanging from a fixed point of support and supporting anything else which lies in its loop or hollow.

stirtet, stirtt. Obsolete forms of the preterit and past participle of start[1].

stitch (stich), n. [< ME. stiche, styche, < AS. stice, a pricking sensation (also in comp. instice, an inward stitch, fær-stice, a sudden stitch or twinge, stic-ādl, stic-wære, stitch in the side), not found in lit. sense 'pricking,' 'piercing,' = OFries. stēke, stek = OHG. stih, MHG. G. stich, a pricking, prick, sting, stab, stitch, = Goth. stiks, a point of time; from the verb, AS. steean*, etc., prick, sting, stick: see stick[1], stick[2].] 1. An acute sudden pain like that produced by the thrust of a needle; a sharp spasmodic pain, especially in the intercostal muscles: as, a stitch in the side. Such pains in the side may be myalgic, neuralgic, pleuritic, or due to muscular cramp.

'Twaa but a stitch into my side,
And sair it troubles me.
The Queen's Marie (Child's Ballads, III. 117).

Corporal sickness is a perpetual monitor to the conscience, every pang a reproof, and every stitch reads a lesson of mortality. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 441.

2t. A contortion; a grimace; a twist of the face.

If you talk,
Or pull your face into a stitch again,
As I love truth, I shall be very angry.
Beau. and Fl., Captain, ii. 2.

3. In sewing: (a) One movement of a threaded needle, passing in and out of the fabric, and uniting two parts by the thread, which is drawn tight after each insertion. (b) The part of the thread left in the fabric by this movement.—4. In knitting, netting, crochet, embroidery, lace-making, etc.: (a) One whole movement of the implement or implements used, as knitting-needles, bobbins, hook, etc. (b) The result of this movement, shown in the work itself.—5. The kind or style of work produced by stitching: as, buttonhole-stitch; cross-stitch; pillow-lace stitch; by extension, a kind or style of work with the loom. For stitches in lace, see point[1]. See also whip-stitch.—6t. Distance passed over at one time; stretch; distance; way.

How far have ye come to-day? So they said, From the house of Gaius our friend. I promise you, said he, you have gone a good stitch; you may well be aweary; sit down. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 314.

7. In agri., a space between two double furrows in plowed ground; a furrow or ridge.

And many men at plough he made, that drave earth here and there,
And turn'd up stitches orderly. Chapman, Iliad, xviii. 495.

8. A bit of clothing; a rag: as, he had not a dry stitch on. [Colloq.]—9. In bookbind-

ing, a connection of leaves or pieces of paper, through perforations an inch or so apart, with thread or wire. A single stitch is made with two perforations only, the thread being tied near the entering place of the stitching-needle. A double stitch has three and sometimes four perforations, the thread being reversed in and out on the upper and under side at each perforation. A saddle-back stitch has its perforations in the center of the creased folded double leaves. A side-stitch has perforations through the sides of the leaves, about one eighth of an inch from the back fold. A French stitch has two perforations only in each section of the pamphlet, the second perforation of the first section ending where the first perforation of the second section begins, in which diagonal line the stitching-needle is put through each succeeding section, and is then reversed and locked at the end. A machine-stitch is a succession of ordinary locked stitches made by the sewing-machine. A wire stitch has short staples of turned wire, which are forced through the leaves and clamped by one operation of the wire-stitching machine. See kettle-stitch.—Blind stitch. See blind[1].—Damask stitch. See damask.—Dotted stitch. Same as dot-stitch.—False stitch, in pillow-lace making, same as false pinhole (which see, under pinhole).—Fancy, Flemish, German, glovers', gobelin, herring-bone, honeycomb, idiot, Irish, overcast stitch. See the qualifying words.—Outline-stitch. See outline.—Plaited stitch. See plaited.—Raised stitch. See raise[1].—Royal stitch. See royal.—Russian stitch. A kind of ribbed stitch in crochet. Dict. of Needlework.—Short stitch, a kind of needlework used in embroidery of the simplest kind, where the ground is partly covered by single stitches of a thread usually of different color, the ground not so covered generally forming the pattern.—Slanting stitch. See slant.—To go through stitch with†, to prosecute to the end; complete.

And in regard of the main point, that they should never be able to go through stitch with that war.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, Gargantua, i. 47.

(See also backstitch, chain-stitch, crewel-stitch, cross-stitch, feather-stitch, hemstitch, lock-stitch, rope-stitch, spider-stitch, stem-stitch, streak-stitch, etc.)

stitch (stich), v. [< ME. stiechen (pret. stigte, stigt), prick, stitch, = MD. sticken, D. stikken = OHG. sticchan, MHG. G. sticken, embroider, stitch; from the noun. Cf. stick[1], v.] I. trans. 1. To unite by stitches; sew.—2. To ornament with stitches.—3. In agri., to form into ridges.—To stitch up. (a) To form or put together by sewing.

She has, out of impatience to see herself in her Weeds, order'd her Mantua-Woman to stitch up any thing immediately. Steele, Grief A-la-Mode, v. 1.

(b) To mend or unite with a needle and thread: as, to stitch up a rent; to stitch up an artery.

II. intrans. To sew; make stitches.

Stitch! stitch! stitch!
In poverty, hunger, and dirt.
Hood, Song of the Shirt.

stitchel (stich'el), n. A kind of hairy wool. [Local.] Imp. Dict.

stitcher (stich'ėr), n. [< stitch + -er[1].] One who stitches; also, a tool or machine used in stitching.

All alike are rich and richer,
King with crown, and cross-legged stitcher,
When the grave hides all.
R. W. Gilder, Drinking Song.

stitchery (stich'ėr-i), n. [< stitch + -ery.] Needlework; in modern times, the labor or drudgery of sewing.

Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon.
Shak., Cor., i. 3. 75.

stitchfallen (stich'fâ'ln), a. [< stitch + fallen, pp. of fall[1].] Fallen, as a stitch in knitting. [Rare.]

A stitch-fal'n cheek, that hangs below the jaw.
Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, x. 309.

stitching (stich'ing), n. [Verbal n. of stitch, v.] Stitches collectively; especially, ornamental stitches designed to show on the surface of the work.—Middle stitching (naut.). Same as monk's seam, 1.

stitching-horse (stich'ing-hôrs), n. A harness-makers' clamp or work-holder mounted on a wooden frame or horse. The jaw of the clamp is kept in position by means of a foot-lever. See cut under sewing-clamp.

stitch-wheel (stich'hwēl), n. In harness-making, a small notched wheel mounted in a handle, used to mark the places for the stitches in hand-sewed work; a pricking-wheel.

stitch-work (stich'wėrk), n. Embroidery. B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 415.

stitchwort (stich'wėrt), n. [Early mod. E. also stichwort; < ME. stichwurt, < AS. sticwyrt, < stice, stitch, + wyrt, plant: see stitch and wort[1].] One of several plants of the chickweed or starwort genus, Stellaria. The proper stitchwort is S. Holostea, the greater stitchwort, locally called allbone, break-bones, shirt-buttons, snap-jack, etc., a pretty Old World species with an erect slender stem and starry white flowers. The name alludes to its reputed virtue for the cure of stitch in the side, or, according to one old work, to its use for curing the sting of venomous reptiles (Prior). S. graminea is in England the lesser stitchwort. In the United States S. longifolia, a plant of similar habit, is named long-leaved stitchwort. The name is sometimes extended, in books, to the whole genus.

stith[1]† (stith), a. [Also stithe; < ME. stith, stithe, < AS. stith = OFries. stith, strong, hard, harsh; cf. Icel. stirdhr, stiff, rigid, harsh, severe.] Strong; hard.

Telamocus he toke, his tru sone,
Stake hym in a stith house, & stuerne men to kepe,
Wallit full wele, with water aboute.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 13844.

stith[2]† (stith), n. [< ME. stith, stithe, < Icel. stethi = Sw. städ, an anvil: so called from its firmness; cf. Icel. stathr, a fixed place, AS. stede, a place, stead: see stead. Doublet of stithy.] An anvil; a stithy.

The smyth
That forgeth sharpe swerdes on his stith.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1168.

stithly† (stith'li), adv. [ME., < AS. stithlice, strongly, < stith, strong: see stith[1] and -ly[2].] Strongly; stiffly; greatly; sore.

Stithly with stonya [they] steynyt hir to dethe.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 12157.

stithy (stith'i), n.; pl. stithies (-iz). [Also dial. stiddy, steddy, steady; an extension of stith[2] (prob. due to confusion with smithy as related to smith): see stith[2].] 1. An anvil.

"Let me sleep on that hard point," said Varney; "I cannot else perfect the device I have on the stithy."
Scott, Kenilworth.

2. A smithy; a smith's shop; a forge.

And my imaginations are as foul
As Vulcan's stithy. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2. 89.

stithy (stith'i), v. t.; pret. and pp. stithied, ppr. stithying. [< stithy, n.] To forge on an anvil.

The forge that stithied Mars his helm.
Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 255.

stithy-man† (stith'i-man), n. A smith.

The subtle stithy-man that lived whilere.
Bp. Hall, Satires, II. i. 44. (Davies.)

stive[1] (stīv), a. Same as steeve[1] for stiff.

stive[1]† (stīv), v. [< ME. stiven, < AS. stifian or stīfian, also in comp. āstifian or ā-stīfian (= OFries. stiva, steva = MD. D. stijven = G. steifen = Sw. styfva = Dan. stive), grow stiff, < stif or stīf, stiff: see stiff.] I. intrans. To become stiff; stiffen.

II. trans. To stiffen.

The hote sunne hade so hard the hides stiued.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3033.

stive[2] (stīv), v. t.; pret. and pp. stived, ppr. stiving. [< OF. estiver = Sp. Pg. estivar = It. stivare, < L. stipare, compress, crowd together. Cf. steeve[3], steve.] To stuff; cram; stow; crowd. [Obsolete or provincial.]

You would think it strange that so small a shell should contain such a quantity, but admire, if you saw them stive it in their ships. Sandys, Travailes, p. 12.

"Things are a good deal stived up," answered the Deacon. "People's minds are sour, and I don't know, Molly, what we can do." S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 8.

stive[3]† (stīv), v. [< ME. stiven, a var. of stuven, stuwen, < OF. estuver, stew, bathe: see stew[1].] I. trans. To stew, as meat.

II. intrans. To stew, as in a close atmosphere; be stifled. [Provincial.]

I shall go out in a boat. . . . One can get rid of a few hours every day in that way, instead of stiving in a damnable hotel. George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, liv.

stive[3]†, n. An obsolete form of stew.

stive[4] (stiv), n. [Also dial. stew; appar. < MD. stuyve, dust, = G. staub = Dan. støv, dust.] Dust; the dust floating in flour-mills during the operation of grinding. Simmonds.

stiver[1] (stī'vėr), n. [= Sw. styfver = Dan. styver, < MD. stuyver, D. stuiver = G. stuber, a stiver; origin unknown.] 1. A small coin formerly current in Holland and in the Dutch colonies: in Dutch called stuiver. (a) A small silver coin formerly current in Holland, the twentieth part of the Dutch gulden.

Set him free,
And you shall have your money to a stiver,
And present payment. Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, i. 3.

(b) A copper coin formerly current in the Dutch colonies.

Obverse. Reverse.
Stiver.—British Museum. (Size of the original.)

Hence—2. Any very small coin, or coin of little value.

Entre nous, mon cher, I care not a stiver for popularity.
Bulwer, My Novel, ix. 3.

"There's fourteen foot and over," says the driver,
"Worth twenty dollars, ef it 's worth a stiver."
Lowell, Fitz Adam's Story.

stiver[2]† (stī'vėr), n. [< stive[3] + -er[1].] An inhabitant of the stews; a harlot. Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, ii. 1.

stiward†, n. A Middle English form of steward.

Stizostedion (stī-zō-stē'di-on), n. [NL. (Rafinesque, 1820), also Stizostedium, Stizotethidium, and prop. Stizostethium*, < Gr. στίζειν, prick, + στηθίον, dim. of στῆθος, breast.] In ichth., a genus of pike-perches, including two marked species of Europe and North America. They are of large size, are carnivorous, and inhabit fresh waters. S. vitreum is the wall-eyed, goggle-eyed, glass-eyed, yellow, or blue pike, dory, or jack-salmon, and S. canadense the gray pike, sand-pike, sauger, or hornfish. See cut under pike-perch.

stoa (stō'ä), n. [< Gr. στοά, sometimes στοιά, a porch, colonnade.] In Gr. arch., a portico, usually a detached portico, often of considerable extent, generally near a public place to afford opportunity for walking or conversation under shelter. The Greek stoa was often richly adorned with sculpture and painting. Many examples had two stories.—The Stoa. Same as the Porch. See porch, Stoic.

Diagram of the construction of a Greek Stoa, as excavated and restored by the Archæological Institute of America, at Assos, 1882.

stoat (stōt), n. [Also stote; a var. of stot[1].] The ermine, Putorius erminea, and other members of that genus when not specified by distinctive names. See ermine[1], weasel, mink, fitchew, polecat, ferret[1]. Stoat more particularly designates the animal in ordinary summer pelage, when it is dull mahogany-brown above, and pale sulphur-yellow below, with the tail black-tipped as in winter.

Stoat or Ermine (Putorius erminea), in summer pelage.

stob (stob), n. [A var. of stub.] 1. A small post.—2. A thorn; spine. Halliwell.—3. A long steel wedge used for bringing down coal after holing. Gresley. [Prov. Eng. in all uses.]

stoble†, n. A Middle English form of stubble.

stocah† (stō'kä), n. [Early mod. E. also stokaghe; < Ir. Gael. stocach, an idler in the kitchen.] An attendant; a hanger-on: an old Irish term.

The strength of all that nation is the Kearne, Galloglasse, Stokaghe, Horsemen, and Horseboyes.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

stoccade† (sto-kād'), n. [Also stockado, stoccado, and stoccata, after Sp. or It.; < OF. estoccade, estocade = Sp. Pg. estocada, a thrust, pass, < It. stoccata, a thrust with a weapon, < stoccare*, < stocco, a truncheon, short sword, < G. stock, a stick, staff, stock, = MD. stock, a stock-rapier, etc.: see stock[1]. Cf. stockade.] 1. A thrust with a sword, one of the movements taught by the early fencing-masters, as in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

Your punto, your reverso, your stoccata, your imbrocata your passada, your montanto.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iv. 5.

2. See stockade.

stoccade†, v. t. See stockade.

stoccado†, stoccata†, n. Same as stoccade.

stocco (stok'ō), n. [It.: see stock[1], stoccade.] A long straight sword for thrusting, similar to the tuck. See tuck[2] and estoc.

stochastic† (stō-kas'tik), a. [< Gr. στοχαστικός, able to hit or to guess, conjecturing, < στοχάζεσθαι, aim at, endeavor after, < στόχος, aim, shot, guess.] Conjectural; given to or partaking of conjecture.

Though he [Sir T. Browne] were no prophet, . . . yet in that faculty which comes nearest to it he excelled, i. e. the Stochastick, wherein he was seldom mistaken as to future events, as well publick as private.
Whitefoot, quoted in Sir T. Browne's Works, I. xlvii.

stock[1] (stok), n. and a. [< ME. stocke, stokke, stok, stoke, stoc (pl. stokkes, the stocks), < AS. stoc, stocc (stocc-), a post, trunk, stock, = OFries. stok = MD. stock, D. stok = MLG. stok, LG. stock = OHG. stoc, stoch, MHG. stoc (> It. stocco, a rapier), G. stock = Icel. stokkr = Dan. stok = Sw. stock (not recorded in Goth.), a post, stock (hence, from Teut., OF. cstoc, a stock, trunk of a tree, race, etc., = It. stocco, a stock, trunk of a tree, rapier, etc.: see stocco, stoccade, stock[2], tuck[2], etc.); generally supposed to be connected with the similar words, of similar sense, stick[3], stake[1], and so with stack; but the phonetic connection is not clear. Assuming the sense 'stick' or 'club' to be original, a connection may be surmised with Skt. √ tuj (orig. stug*?), thrust. The senses of this noun are numerous and complicated; the ME. senses are in part due to the OF. estoc.] I. n. 1. A wooden post; a stake; a stump.

The Cros of oure Lord was made of 4 manere of Trees, . . . and the Stock, that stode within the Erthe, . . . was of Cedre. Mandeville, Travels, p. 10.

Ley this ronde plate upon an evene grond or on an evene ston or on an evene stok fix in the gronde.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, ii. 38.

They all went downward, fleetly and gaily downward, and only he, it seemed, remained behind, like a stock upon the wayside. R. L. Stevenson, Will o' the Mill.

2. A wooden block; a block; a log; hence, something lifeless and senseless.

He swore hire yis, by stokkes and by stones,
And by the goddes that in hevene dwelle.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 589.

There was an exe, and a stoke, and oon of the lewdeste of the shippe badde hym ley down his hedde, and he should be fair ferd wyth, and dye on a swerd.
Paston Letters, I. 125.

More than dead stocks would startle at such beauty.
Chapman, Blind Beggar of Alexandria.

And those made thee forsake thy God,
And worship stocks and stones.
Wanton Wife of Bath (Child's Ballads, VIII. 155).

3. A person who is as dull and senseless as a block or a log.

Let 's be no stoics nor no stocks. Shak., T. of the S., i. 1. 31.

Such a stock of a child, such a statue! Why, he has no kind of feeling either of body or mind.
Brooke, Fool of Quality, iii.

What a phlegmatic sot it is! Why, sirrah, you 'r an anchorite!—a vile insensible stock. Sheridan, Rivals, iii. 1.

4. A dull object or recipient of action or notice, as of wonder, scorn, or laughter; a butt: generally the second element in a compound: as, a gazing-stock; a laughing-stock.

Howsoever we are all accounted dull, and common jesting stocks for your gallants, there are some of us do not deserve it. Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, iii. 3.

Thou art the stock of men, and I admire thee.
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 5.

I know, and may presume her such,
As, out of humour, will return no love;
And therefore might indifferently be made
The courting-stock for all to practise on.
B. Jonson, New Inn, i. 1.

5. The stalk, stem, or trunk of a tree or other plant; the main body, or fixed and firm part.

Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground. Job xiv. 8.

There, in the stocks of trees, white fairies do dwell.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

You know him—old, but full
Of force and choler, and firm upon his feet,
And like an oaken stock in winter woods.
Tennyson, Golden Year.

6. A stem in which a graft is inserted, and which is its support; also, a stem, tree, or plant that furnishes slips or cuttings.

You see, sweet maid, we marry
A gentler scion to the wildest stock.
Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 93.

The scion ever over-ruleth the stock.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., Int. to § 477.

Hence—7. The original progenitor of a family or race; the person from whom any given line of descent or inheritance is derived. See stock of descent, below.

This firste stok was ful of rightwisnesse,
Trewe of his word, sobre, pitous, and free.
Chaucer, Gentilnesse, l. 8.

Brave soldier, yield, thou stock of arms and honour.
Fletcher, Bonduca, v. 5.

8. Direct line of descent; race; lineage; family: as, children of the stock of Abraham.

What things are these! I shall marry into a fine stock!
Brome, Northern Lass, ii. 2.

In his actions and sentiments he belied not the stock to which he pretended. Lamb, Two Races of Men.

They sprang from different stocks. They spoke different languages. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

9. The principal supporting or holding part; the part in which other parts are inserted, or to which they are attached in order to furnish a firm support or hold. Specifically—(a) The wooden support to which the barrel and lock of a rifle or like firearm are attached, or upon which the bow of the crossbow is mounted. See cuts under gun and gun-carriage. (b) The handle by which a boring-bit is held and turned; a bit-stock; a brace. See cut under brace. (c) The block of wood which constitutes the body of a plane, and in which the cutting iron is fitted. See cuts under plane, rounding-plane, and router. (d) The support of the block on which an anvil is fitted, or of the anvil itself. (e) The crosspiece of an anchor, perpendicular to the shank, formerly of wood, when the shank was passed through a hole cut in the stock, or the latter was made in two parts joggled to receive the shank: now usually of iron, in which case the stock slips through a hole made in the shank. See cut under anchor. (f) An adjustable wrench for holding screw-cutting dies. (g) That part of a plow to which the handles, irons, etc., are attached. (h) A beater, as used in a fulling-mill, in the manufacture of chamois-leather, etc. (i) An arm of a bevel-gage or of a square. (j) The wooden frame in which the wheel and post of a spinning-wheel are supported.

10. A stiff band of horsehair, leather, or the like, covered with black satin, cambric, or similar material, and made to imitate and replace the cravat or neckband: formerly worn by men generally, and, in some forms, still in military use. It was sometimes fastened behind with a buckle, which was often an ornamental object.

Military Stock, 18th century.

A shining stock of black leather supporting his chin.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 321.

He wore a magnificent stock, with a liberal kind of knot in the front; in this he stuck a great pin.
W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 98.

11. The front part, especially the front side-piece, of a bed. [Scotch.]

I winna lie in your bed,
Either at stock or wa'.
Capt. Wedderburn's Courtship (Child's Ballads, VIII. 12).

12. pl. An apparatus for the confinement of vagrants and petty offenders, formerly in use in different parts of Europe, and retained until recently in country villages in England. It consisted of two heavy timbers, one of which could be raised, and when lowered was held in place by a padlock or the like; notches in these timbers, forming round holes when the upper timber was shut down in place, held firmly the legs of those upon whom this punishment was inflicted; in some cases a second row of openings could be used to retain the hands, and even the neck, also. Compare pillory.

Stocks.

This yere was ordeyned in euery warde [of London] a peyr stockis. Arnold's Chronicle, p. xxxvi.

Mars got drunk in the town, and broke his landlord's head, for which he sat in the stocks the whole evening.
Steele, Tatler, No. 4.

13. The frame or timbers on which a ship rests while building; hence, generally, on the stocks, in course of construction or preparation.—14†. That part of the tally which the creditor took away as evidence of the king's debt, the part retained in the Exchequer being called the counterstock. See tally.

It was the custom when money was borrowed for State purposes to record the transaction by means of notches on a stick (commonly hazel), and then to split the stick through the notches. The lender took one half as a proof of his claim against the Exchequer, and it was called his Stock. The Exchequer kept the other half, which was called the counterstock, and which answered the same purpose as was served in after-times by the counterfoil.
Bithell, Counting-House Dict., p. 290.

15. In finance: (a) The money represented by this tally; money lent to a government, or a fund consisting of a capital debt due by a government to individual holders who receive a fixed rate of interest. In modern usage, especially in Great Britain, the name is applied to a capital of which payment cannot be claimed, but on which interest is paid in perpetuity at a given rate; hence, to buy stock is simply to buy the right to this interest on a certain amount of this capital debt—a right which may be sold again. The various kinds of stocks are called the public funds. See fund[1], n., 2.

I have known a Captain rise to a Colonel in two days by the fall of stocks.
Steele, quoted in Ashton's Reign of Queen Anne, II. 206.

The term Stock was originally applied to the material sign and proof of money lent. But as the thing signified was of greater importance to both parties than the sign, it was at length transferred to the money itself, or rather to the right to claim it. In this way Stock came to be understood as money lent to the government, and eventually to any public body whatever.
Bithell, Counting-House Dict., p. 290.

(b) The share capital of a corporation or commercial company; the fund employed in the carrying on of some business or enterprise, divided into shares of equal amount, and owned by individuals who jointly form a corporation; in the plural, shares: as, bank stock; railway stock; stocks and bonds.—16. The property which a merchant, a tradesman, or a company has invested in any business, including merchandise, money, and credits; more particularly, the goods which a merchant or a commercial house keeps on hand for the supply of customers.

Who trades without a stock has naught to fear. Cibber.

"We must renew our stock, Cousin Hepzibah!" cried the little saleswoman. "The gingerbread figures are all gone, and so are those Dutch wooden milkmaids, and most of our other playthings."
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, v.

17. Fund; sum of money.

Mr. John Whitson being Maior, with his brethren the Aldermen, and most of the Merchants of the Citie of Bristow, raised a stocke of 1000*l.* to furnish out two Barkes.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 108.

It 's proverbial He gave them an alms-penny, for which reason Judas carried the bag that had a common stock in it for the poor. Barnard, Heylin, § 104.

The money is raised out of the interest of a stock formerly made up by the nobility and gentry.
Butcher, quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 103.

18. Hoard or accumulation; store; supply; fund which may be drawn upon as occasion demands: as, to lay in a stock of provisions; a stock of information.

Though all my stock of tears were spent already Upon Pisano's loss. Shirley, Traitor, v. 1.

He set up as a Surgeon upon his bare natural stock of knowledge, and his experience in Kibes. But then he had a very great stock of confidence withal, to help out the other. Dampier, Voyages, I. 388.

A great stock of parliamentary knowledge.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

19†. Share; portion.

Whilst we, like younger Brothers, get at best
But a small stock, and must work out the rest.
Cowley, To Lord Falkland.

Therefore nothing would satisfie him [a young prodigal] unless he were intrusted with the Stock which was intended for him, that he might shew the difference between his Father's Conduct and his own.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, III. i.

20†. Ground; reason; evidence; proof.

He pities our infirmities, and strikes off much of the account upon that stock.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 914.

21. The part of a pack of cards which in certain games is not dealt out, but left on the table, to be drawn from as occasion requires.

Nay, then, I must buy the stock; send me good carding! I hope the prince's hand be not in this sport.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, iv. 1.

22. In agri.: (a) The horses, cattle, sheep, and other useful animals raised or kept on a farm or ranch: distinctively known as live stock: as, a farmer's land and stock. The term is extended to any animals, as fish or oysters, artificially propagated.

Brandy was produced, pipes lighted, and conversation returned to the grand staple Australian subject—stock.
A. C. Grant, Bush Life in Queensland, I. 141.

(b) The implements of husbandry stored for use. Also called dead stock.—23. The raw material from which anything is made; stuff; material: as, paper-stock (rags, fiber, wood-pulp, etc.); soap-stock.

In its natural state, fat of animals is always associated with cellular tissue and other foreign matters, which must be separated before it can be used as candle stock.
Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 350.

24. The liquor or broth prepared by boiling meat, with or without vegetables, etc., so as to extract the nutritious properties, and used as a foundation for different kinds of soup. Also called soup-stock.—25. A good kind of red and gray brick, used for the exterior of walls and the front of buildings.—26. A name of several cruciferous garden-flowers. (a) One of several species of Matthiola, or sometimes the species in general: originally stock-gillyflower. (b) By extension, the somewhat similar Malcolmia maritima, the Mahon stock, a low diffuse annual, in England called Virginia or virgin stock, though from the shores of the Mediterranean. The name has been applied also to the genus Heliophila.

27†. A covering for the leg; a stocking. Compare nether-stocks.

A linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other. Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 67.

28. In her., the stump of a tree used as a bearing: represented as cut square on top and eradicated—that is, torn up by the roots—with at least the main roots indicated.—29. (a) The pillar or post on which the holy-water vessel was fixed. E. Peacock. Hence—(b) A holy-water vessel, or aspersorium.

Item. oone hollywater stocke of glasse with a hasyle.
Inventory 34, Henry VIII.

30. The proceeds of the sale of the catch of a fishing-trip; the net value of a cargo of fish. [New Eng.]—31. pl. A frame in which a horse or other animal can be secured or slung for shoeing or for a veterinary operation.—32. In mining, sometimes used as the equivalent of the German stock (plural stöcke), especially in translating from that language. A "stock" is a mass of ore of irregular form, but usually thick in proportion to its other dimensions, and not having the characters of a true vein, but belonging more properly to the class of segregated veins or masses. Some "stocke" resemble very nearly the "carbonas" of the Cornish miner; others are akin to the "flats" of the north of England.

33. In early forms of feudalism, commendation. See to accept stock, below.—34. In zoöl., a compound, colonial, or aggregate organism; an aggregate of persons forming one organic whole, which may grow by budding or cast off parts to start a new set of persons: as, a polyp-stock. A polypidom, a polyzoary, a chain of salps or doliolids, etc., are examples. Haeckel extends stock in this sense to the broader biological conception which includes those plants that propagate by buds or shoots. See tectology.—Dead stock. See def. 22.—Drop of stock. See drop.—Fancy stocks. See fancy.—Holy-water stock, a vessel for holy water; a holy-water stoup. See water.—Live stock. See def. 22.—Lock, stock, and barrel. See lock[1].—Long of stock. See long[1].—Net stock. See net[2].—On or upon the stocks. See def. 13.—Preference or preferred stock. See preference.—Rolling stock. See rolling-stock.—Stock-and-bill tackle. Same as stock-tackle.—Stock and block†, everything; both capital and interest.

Before I came home I lost all, stock and block.
Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, p. 236.

Stock and die, a screw-cutting die in its holder.—Stock certificate. (a) In the law of corporations, a certificate issued by a corporation or joint-stock company to a shareholder, as evidence of his title to a specified number of shares of the capital stock. (b) In Eng. finance, a certificate issued by or on behalf of the government, pursuant to the National Debt Act, 33 and 34 Vict., c. 71, to a holder of consols or of some other public indebtedness or annuities, as evidence of his title to such stock, with coupons annexed, entitling the bearer of the coupon to the corresponding dividend. A stock certificate is evidence of title to the stock, as distinguished from the stock itself, which is considered as an intangible right.—Stock company. (a) A commercial or other company or corporation whose capital is divided into shares, which are held or owned by individuals, generally with limited liability, as distinguished from a partnership: as, a stock company for the manufacture of window-glass. (b) A company of actors and actresses employed more or less permanently under the same management, and usually connected with a central or home theater.—Stock dividend. See dividend.—Stock indicator. See indicator.—Stock in trade, the goods kept for sale by a shopkeeper; hence, a person's mental equipment or resources considered as qualifying him for a special service or business.—Stock of descent, in the law of inheritances, the person with whose ownership any given succession of inheritance is considered as commencing. At common law, in order to determine who was entitled to succeed as heir, the inquiry was for the heir of the person last actually seized. This rule has been superseded by modern legislation.—To accept stock, in early feudal customs, the act of a lord in receiving another person as his vassal.—To give stock, the act of a person in becoming the vassal of a lord.—To have on the stocks, to have in hand; be at work upon.—To take stock. (a) Same as to accept stock. (b) In com., to make an inventory of stock or goods on hand; hence, with of, to make an estimate of; set a value upon; investigate for the purpose of forming an opinion; loosely, to notice.

In taking stock of his familiarly worn . . . nautical clothes, piece by piece, she took stock of a formidable knife in a sheath at his waist, . . . and of a whistle hanging round his neck, and of a short jagged knotted club.
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, ii. 12.

To take stock in. (a) To take a share or shares in; take or have an interest in. Hence—(b) To repose confidence in; believe in: as, to take little stock in one's stories. [Colloq.]

Captain Polly gives the right hand of fellowship to two boys in whom nobody else is willing to take stock, and her faith in them saves them.
Harper's Mag., Oct., 1889, Literary Notes.

To water stocks. See water, v. t.

II. a. Kept in stock; ready for service at all times; habitually produced or used; standing; as, a stock play; a stock anecdote; a stock sermon.

The old stock-oaths, I am confident, do not amount to above forty-five, or fifty at most.
Swift, Polite Conversation, Int.

The master of the house, who was burning to tell one of his seven stock stories. Dickens, Sketches, Tales, x. 2.

stock[1] (stok), v. [< ME. stocken, stokken = MD. MHG. stocken, G. stöcken, put in the stocks; from the noun: see stock[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To provide with a stock, handle, or the like: as, to stock a gun or an anchor.

They can mend and new stock their pieces, as well, almost, as an Englishman.
Gov. Bradford, in App. to New England's Memorial, p. 456.

2. To fasten, bolt, or bar, as a door or window. [Old and prov. Eng.]

Oftyn tymes the dure is stokked, and we parsons & vicars cannot get brede, wyne, nor water.
Fabric Rolls of York Minster (1519), p. 268. (E. Peacock.)

3. To put in the stocks as a punishment; hence, to confine; imprison.

Rather deye I wolde and determine,
As thynketh me now, stokked in prisone,
In wrechednesse, in filthe and in vermyns.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 380.

They suffered great hardships for this their love and good-will, being often stocked, stoned, beaten, whipped, and imprisoned. Penn, Rise and Progress of Quakers, v.

4. To lay up in store; accumulate for future use: as, to stock goods. Scott, Quentin Durward, xviii.—5. To provide or supply with stock. (a) To supply with a stock of goods; store with commodities; store with anything: as, to stock a warehouse.

Our Author, to divert his Friends to Day, Stocks with Variety of Fools his Play.
Steele, Tender Husband, Prol.

The bazaars were crowded with people, and stocked with all manner of eastern delicacies.
R. F. Burton, El-Medinah, p. 419.

(b) To supply with cattle, sheep, etc., or, in some uses, to supply with domestic animals, implements, etc.: as, to stock a farm.

He has bought the great farm, . . .
And stock'd it like an emperor.
Fletcher (and another?), Prophetess, v. 2.

(c) To furnish with a permanent growth, especially with grass: as, to stock a pasture.

6. To suffer to retain milk for many hours, as cows before selling.—7†. To dig up; root out; extirpate by grubbing: sometimes with up.

This tyme is to be stocked every tree
Awsy with herbes brode, eke root and bough.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 182.

The wild boar not only spoils her branches, but stocks up her roots. Decay of Christian Piety.

8. Same as stack[1], 2.

II. intrans. 1. To branch out into shoots immediately above ground; tiller: applied to grasses, grain, or flowers.

About two months ago broad blanks were to be seen on many oatfields, and, though they were stocked a little, the crop is yet far too thin. The Scotsman.

2. To send out sprouts, as from a stem which has been cut over: said of a tree or plant.—3. To make a certain profit on stock. See stock[1], n., 30. [New Eng.]

stock[2]† (stok), n. [< OF. estoc = It. stocco, a rapier: see stock[1], and cf. estoc, tuck[2].] 1. Same as cstoc; also, a thrusting-sword used in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, superseding the cut-and-thrust sword of earlier times.—2. Same as stoccade, 1.

stock[2]† (stok), v. t. [< stock[2], n.] To hit with a rapier or stock.

Oh, the brave age is gone! in my young days
A chevalier would stock a needle's point
Three times together.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, iii. 4.

stock-account (stok'a-kount'), n. In com., an account in a ledger showing on one side the amount of the original stock with accumulations, and on the other the amount of what has been disposed of.

stockade (sto-kād'), n. [Formerly also stockado, stoccade; < stock[2] + -ade[1], in imitation of stoccade, < F. estocade, a thrust in fencing (and of palisade?): see stoccade.] 1. In fort., a fence or barrier constructed by planting upright in the ground timber, piles, or trunks of trees, so as to inclose an area which is to be defended. In Oriental warfare such stockades are often of formidable strength and great extent, as the stockades of Rangoon. 2. An inclosure or pen made with posts and stakes.—3. In hydraul. engin., a row of piles serving as a breakwater, or to protect an embankment.

stockade (sto-kād'), v. t.; pret. and pp. stockaded, ppr. stockading. [Formerly also stockado, stoccade; < stockade, n.] To encompass or fortify with posts or piles fixed in the ground.

On the back of the Hill, the Land being naturally low, there is a very large Moat cut from the Sea to the River, which makes the whole an Island; and that back part is stockadoed round with great Trees, set up an end.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 160.

stockado† (sto-kā'dō), n. 1. Same as stoccade.

Robrus, who, addict to nimble fence,
Still greets me with stockado's violence.
Marston, Satires, i. 132.

2. Same as stockade.

Stockadoes, Pallizadoes, stop their waters.
Heywood, Four Prentises (Works, ed. 1874, II. 242).

stockado†, v. t. See stockade.

stock-beer (stok'bēr), n. Lager-beer. See beer[1]. [Rare.]

stock-blind (stok'blīnd), a. Blind as a stock or block; stone-blind.

True lovers are blind, stockblind.
Wycherley, Country Wife, ii. 1.

stock-board (stok'bōrd), n. 1. In brickmaking, a board over which the mold is passed, and which forms the bottom of the mold in molding.—2. In organ-building, the upper board of a wind-chest.

stock-book (stok'bůk), n. In com., a book in which a detailed account is kept of the stock of goods on hand.

stock-bow (stok'bō), n. A crossbow of any kind; a bow mounted on a stock.

stock-breeder (stok'brē'dėr), n. One whose occupation is the breeding of live stock; a stock-farmer; a stock-raiser.

stock-broker (stok'brō'kėr), n. [< stock[1] + broker.] A broker who, for a commission, attends to the purchase and sale of stocks or shares, and of government and other securities, in behalf and for the account of clients. On the London stock-exchange brokers cannot deal directly with brokers, but must treat with a class of operators called jobbers. See jobber[2], 4.

stock-broking (stok'brō'king), n. The business of a stock-broker.

stock-brush (stok'brush), n. A brush in which the tufts are arranged on a flat wooden stock with a handle. Encyc. Brit., IV. 403.

stock-buckle (stok'buk'l), n. A buckle used to fasten the stock (see stock[1], n., 10), usually at the back of the neck. These buckles were frequently of gold, and sometimes jeweled.

stock-car (stok'kär), n. On a railroad, a car used to transport live stock, as horses, cattle, pigs, and sheep; a cattle-car. It is usually a long covered car, with sides and ends formed with slats for ventilation, and is sometimes fitted with conveniences for feeding and watering the stock.

stock-dove (stok'duv), n. [< ME. stok-douve, stokke-dowe = MD. stock-duyve; as stock[1] + dove[1]: so called, according to some writers, because it was at one time believed to be the stock of the many varieties of the domestic pigeon; according to others, from its breeding in the stocks of trees.] The wild pigeon of Europe, Columba œnas. It is closely related to the rock-dove, C. livia, with which it has often been confounded, but is smaller and darker-colored, without white on the neck or wings. Also rarely called hole-dove. Compare rock-dove, ring dove.

stock-duck (stok'duk), n. The common mallard, Anas boscas.

stock-eikle (stok'ī'kl), n. Same as hickwall. [Worcestershire, Eng.]

stocker (stok'ėr), n. [< stock[1] + -er[1].] 1. A workman who makes or fits gun-stocks.

The stocker upon receiving the stock first roughs it into shape, or, as it is called, trims it out, with a mallet, chisel, and draw-knife. W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 249.

2. One who is employed in the felling and grubbing up of trees. [Prov. Eng.]—Stockers' saw, a small saw designed especially for the use of the gun-stocker or armorer.

stock-exchange (stok'eks-chānj″), n. 1. A building, place, or mart where stocks or shares are bought and sold.—2. An association of brokers and dealers or jobbers in stocks, bonds, and other securities, created under state or municipal authority, or by corporations concerned in the business connected with the carrying on of railways, mines, manufactures, banks, or other commercial or industrial pursuits.

stock-farm (stok'färm), n. A farm devoted to stock-breeding.

stock-farmer (stok'fär″mėr), n. A farmer who is chiefly engaged in the breeding and rearing of different kinds of live stock. Also called stock-farmer.

stock-father† (stok'fä″ᵀᴴėr), n. A progenitor.

stock-feeder (stok'fē″dėr), n. 1. One who is chiefly engaged in the feeding or fattening of live stock; a stock-farmer.—2. An attachment to a manger for the automatic supply of a certain quantity of feed to stock at fixed intervals.

stock-fish[1] (stok'fish), n. [< ME. stokefysche, stokfysche = D. MLG. stokvisch = MHG. stocvisch, G. stockfisch = Sw. stockfisk = Dan. stokfisk; as stock[1], n., + fish[1]. The exact sense in which stock is here used is uncertain; various views are reflected in the quotations.] Certain gadoid fish which are cured by splitting and drying hard without salt, as cod, ling, hake, haddock, torsk, or cusk. Codfish are thus hard-dried in the air without salt most extensively in Norway and Greenland, but the art has not been acquired in the United States.

From heuse [Norway] is brought into all Europe s fysshe of the kindes of them whiche we caule haddockes or hakes, indurate and dryed with coulde, and beaten with clubbes or stockes, by reason whereof the Germayns caule them stockefysshe.
R. Eden, tr. of Jacobus Ziglerus (First Books on America, [ed. Arber, p. 303).

Cogan says of stockfish, "Concerniug which fish I will say no more than Erasmus hath written in his Colloquio. There is a kind of fishe which is called in English Stockfish: it nourisheth no more than a stock." . . . Stockfish whilst it is unbeaten is called Buckhorne, because it is so tough; when it is beaten upon the stock, it is termed stockfish. Quoted in Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 155, note.

stock-fish[2] (stok'fish), n. [< stock[1], n., 22, + fish[1].] In fish-culture, fish adapted or used for stocking rivers, ponds, lakes, etc.

stock-gang (stok'gang), n. In a saw-mill, a group or gang of saws arranged in a frame and used for reducing a log or balk to boards, etc., at one passage through the machine. A saw used in such a stock-gang is called a stock-saw.

stock-gillyflower (stok'jil″i-flou-ėr), n. A plant of the genus Matthiola, chiefly M. incana: so called as having a woody stem, to distinguish it from the clove-gillyflower or carnation.

stock-hawk (stok'hâk), n. The peregrine falcon, Falco peregrinus. See cut under duck-hawk. [Shetland.]

stock-holder (stok'hōl″dėr), n. One who is a proprietor of stock in the public funds, or who holds some of the shares of a bank or other company.

stock-horse (stok'hôrs), n. A horse used on an Australian station in driving, mustering, cutting out, and similar work.

He was an aged stockhorse, which I had bought very cheap, as being a secure animal to begin with.
H. Kingsley, Hillyars and Burtons, I.

stockily (stok'i-li), adv. In a stocky manner; short and stout: as, a stockily built person.

stock-indicator (stok'in″di-kā-tọr), n. See indicator.

stockinet (stok-i-net'), n. [Adapted from stockinget, < stocking + -et.] An elastic knitted textile fabric, of which undergarments, etc., are made. Also spelled stockinget or stockingette, and also called jersey, jersey cloth, and elastic cloth.

stocking (stok'ing), n. [< stock[1] + dim. -ing.] 1. A close-fitting covering for the foot and lower leg. Stockings were originally made of cloth or milled stuff, sewed together, but they are now ususlly knitted by the hand or woven in a frame, the material being wool, cotton, or silk.

Their legges were adorn'd with close long white silke stockings, curiously embroidered with golde to the Middelegge.
Chapman, Masque of Middle Temple and Lincoln's Inn.

2. Something like or suggesting such a covering. (a) The lower part of the leg of a quadruped when of a different color from the rest: as, a horse or cow with white stockings. See cut under gayal. (b) A covering of feathers on the shank of some birds; a legging or leg-muff. Compare blue-stocking, 2, and see cuts under Eriocnemis, Spathura, and pouter.—Elastic stocking, a stocking of elastic webbing, used for giving uniform pressure to a limb, as in the treatment of varicose veins.—In one's stockings or stocking-feet, without shoes or slippers: used in statements of stature-measurements: as, he stands six feet in his stockings (that is, with his shoes off).—Lisle-thread stocking. See thread.—Silk stockinga. See silk.—To sew up one's stocking. See sew[1].

stocking (stok'ing), v. t. [< stocking, n.] To dress in stockings; cover as with stockings. Dryden.

stockinger (stok'ing-ėr), n. [< stocking + -er[1].] 1. One who knits or weaves stockings.

The robust rural Saxon degenerates in the mills to the Leicester stockinger, to the imbecile Manchester spinner.
Emerson, English Traits, x.

2. One who deals in stockings and other small articles of apparel.

stockinget (stok-ing-et'), n. Same as stockinet.

stocking-frame (stok'ing-frām), n. A special form of knitting-machine; also, a general term for the knitting-machine.

stocking-loom (stok'ing-lōm), n. A stocking-frame.

stocking-machine (stok'ing-ma-shēn″), n. A stocking-frame or knitting-machine.

stocking-maker (stok'ing-mā″kėr), n. A bottle-tit, Acredula caudata, or A. rosea: translating a French name, débassaire, referring to the long woven nest, likened to a stocking. C. Swainson.

stocking-yarn (stok'ing-yärn), n. Loosely spun thread, made especially for stockings.

stockish (stok'ish), a. [< stock[1] + -ish[1].] Like a stock or block; stupid; blockish. Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 81. [Rare.]

stockishness (stok'ish-nes), n. The quality or character of being stockish; stupidity; lack of sense or feeling. [Rare.]

Friend,
I've seen you with St. John—O stockishness!
Wear such a ruff, and never call to mind
St. John's head in a charger?
Browning, Strafford, iii. 3.

stock-jobber (stok'job″ėr), n. One who speculates in stocks for gain; one whose occupation is the purchase and sale of stocks or shares.

Publick Knaves and Stock-Jobbers pass for Wits at her end of the Town, as common Cheats and Gamesters do at yours. Steele, Tender Husband, ii. 1.

stock-jobbery (stok'job″ėr-i), n. The practice or business of dealing in stocks or shares.

stock-jobbing (stok'job″ing), n. The business of dealing in stocks or shares; the purchase and sale of stocks, bonds, etc., as carried on by jobbers who operate on their own account.

stockless (stok'les), a. Without a stock: as, stockless anchors; stockless guns.

stock-list (stok'list), n. A list, published daily or periodically in connection with a stock-exchange, enumerating the leading stocks dealt in, the prices current, the actual transactions, etc.

stockman (stok'man), n.; pl. stockmen (-men). 1. A man who has charge of the stock in an establishment of any kind.—2. A stock-farmer or rancher.—3. A man employed by a stock-farmer as a herdsman or the like. [U. S. and Australia.]

stock-market (stok'mär″ket), n. 1. A market where stocks are bought and sold; a stock-exchange.—2. The purchase and sale of stocks or shares: as, the stock-market was dull.—3. A cattle-market.

stock-morel (stok'mor″el), n. A fungus, Morchella esculenta. See morel[2], Morchella.

stock-owl (stok'oul), n. The great eagle-owl of Europe, Bubo ignavus.

stock-pot (stok'pot), n. A pot in which soup-stock is prepared and kept ready for use.

stock-printer (stok'prin″tėr), n. An instrument for automatically printing stock quotations transmitted by telegraph; a stock-indicator.

stock-pump (stok'pump), n. A pump which, by means of levers, is operated by the weight of an animal as it walks on the platform of the pump, seeking water.

stock-punished (stok'pun″isht), a. Punished by being confined in the stocks. Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 140.

stock-purse (stok'pėrs), n. A fund used for the common purposes of any association or gathering of persons.

stock-raiser (stok'rā″zėr), n. One who raises cattle and horses; a stock-farmer.

stock-ranch (stok'ranch), n. A stock-farm. [Western U. S.]

stock-range (stok'rānj), n. A tract or extent of country over which livo stock (especially cattle) range. [Western U. S.]

stock-rider (stok'rī″dėr), n. A man employed as a herdsman on an unfenced station in Australia.

Now and afterwards I found out that he was a native of the colony, a very great stock-rider, and was principal overseer to Mr. Charles Morton.
H. Kingsley, Hillyars and Burtons, xlviii.

stock-room (stok'röm), n. A room in which is kept a reserved stock of materials or goods ready for use or sale.

stocks (stoks), n. pl. See stock[1], 12.

stock-saddle (stok'sad′l), n. A saddle used in the western United States, an improvement of the old Spanish and Mexican saddle. Its peculiarity is its heavy tree and iron horn, made to withstand a strong strain from a rope or reata.

For a long spell of such work a stock-saddle is far less tiring than the ordinary Eastern or English one, and in every way superior to it.
T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXV. 863.

stock-station (stok'stā″shọn), n. A ranch or stock-farm. [Australia.]

stock-still (stok'stil'), a. Still as a stock or fixed post; perfectly still.

If he begins a digression, from that moment, I observe, his whole work stands stock-still.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, i. 22.

stock-stone (stok'stōn), n. A scouring-stone used in the stretching and smoothing of leather before currying.

stock-tackle (stok'tak′l), n. A tackle used in handling an anchor and rousing it up to secure it for sea: usually called a stock-and-bill tackle.

stock-taking (stok'tā″king), n. See to take stock, under stock[1].

stock-train (stok'trān), n. A train of cars carrying cattle; a cattle-train. [U. S.]

stock-whaup (stok'hwâp), n. The curlew, Numenius arquata: the whaup.

stockwork (stok'wėrk), n. [< stock[1] + work; tr. G. stockwerk.] In mining, that kind of ore-deposit in which the ore is pretty generally or uniformly distributed through a large mass of rock, so that the excavations are not limited to a certain narrow zone, as they are in the case of an ordinary fissure-vein. This mode of occurrence is almost exclusively limited to, and very characteristic of, stanniferous deposits, and the word is used especially in describing those of the Erzgebirge. Also called stockwerk (the German name).

The name of interlaced masses, or stockworks, is given to masses of igneous rock penetrated by a great number of little veins of metallic ores which cross in various ways. Callon, Mining (tr. by Le Neve Foster and Galloway), i. 47.

The stockwerk consists of a series of small veins, interlacing with each other and ramifying through a certain portion of the rock.
J. D. Whitney, Met. Wealth of the U. S., p. 39.

stocky (stok'i), a. [< stock[1] + -y[1]. Cf. stogy.] 1. Short and stout; stumpy; stock-like.

They had no titles of honour among them but such as denoted some bodily strength or perfection: as, such a one "the tall," such a one "the stocky," such a one "the gruff." Addison, Spectator, No. 433.

2. In zoöl., of stout or thick-set form; stout-bodied.—3. In bot., having a strong, stout stem, not spindling.

Stocky plants, vigorous, and growing rapidly, are better than simply early plants. Science, XIV. 364.

4. Headstrong; stubborn. [Prov. Eng.]

stock-yard (stok'yärd), n. An inclosure connected with a railroad, or a slaughter-house, or a market, etc., for the distribution, sorting, sale, or temporary keeping of cattle, swine, sheep, and horses. Such yards are often of great size, and are arranged with pens, sheds, stables, conveniences for feeding, etc.

stodgy (stoj'i), a. [Assibilated form of stogy, ult. of stocky.] 1. Heavy; lumpy; distended. [Colloq., Eng.]

"Maggie," said Tom, . . . "you don't know what I've got in my pockets." . . . "No," said Maggie. "How stodgy they look, Tom! Is it marls or cobnuts?"
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 5.

2. Crammed together roughly; lumpy; crude and indigestible. [Colloq., Eng.]

The book has too much the character of a stodgy summary of facts. Saturday Rev.

3. Wet; miry. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stœchiology, stœchiometrical, etc. Same as stoicheiology, etc.

stog (stog), v.; pret. and pp. stogged, ppr. stogging. [< stog, n.; ult. a var. of stock[1], v. Cf. stodge, v.] I. trans. 1. To plunge a stick down through (the soil), in order to ascertain its depth; probe (a pool or marsh) with a pole. [Scotch.]—2. To plunge and fix in mire; stall in mud; mire. [Colloq., Eng.]

It was among the ways of good Queen Bess,
Who ruled as well as mortal ever can, sir,
When she was stogg'd, and the country in a mess,
She was wont to send for a Devon man, sir.
West Country song, quoted in Kingsley's Westward Ho, x.

II. intrans. To plant the feet slowly and cautiously in walking. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

stogy (stō′gi), a. and n. [< stog + -y[1]. Cf. stodgy, stocky.] I. a. Rough; coarse; heavy: as, stogy shoes; a stogy cigar.

> One of his legs, ending in a stogy boot, was braced out in front of him. The Century, XXXVI. 88.

II. n.; pl. stogies (-giz). 1. A rough, heavy shoe.—2. A long, coarse cigar. [Colloq. in all uses.]

stoic (stō′ik), a. and n. [Formerly also stoick; = F. stoique = Sp. estóico = Pg. estoico = It. stoico, < L. stoicus, < Gr. στωικός, pertaining to a porch or portico, specifically pertaining to that called Στοὰ Ποικίλη, 'the Painted Porch' in the Agora at Athens, and to the school of philosophy founded by Zeno, who frequented this porch.] I. a. [cap.] Pertaining to the Stoics, or to their teaching: as, a Stoic philosopher; the Stoic doctrine; hence, manifesting indifference to pleasure or pain (compare stoical).

II. n. 1. [cap.] A disciple of the philosopher Zeno, who founded a sect about 308 B. C. He taught that men should be free from passion, unmoved by joy or grief, and submit without complaint to the unavoidable necessity by which all things are governed. The Stoics are proverbially known for the sternness and austerity of their ethical doctrines, and for the influence which their tenets exercised over some of the noblest spirits of antiquity, especially among the Romans. Their system appears to have been an attempt to reconcile a theological pantheism and a materialist psychology with a logic which seeks the foundations of knowledge in the representations or perceptions of the senses, and a morality which claims as its first principle the absolute freedom of the human will. The Stoics teach that whatever is real is material; matter and force are the two ultimate principles; matter is of itself motionless and unformed, though capable of receiving all motions and all forms. Force is the active, moving, and molding principle, and is inseparably joined with matter; the working force in the universe is God, whose existence as a wise thinking being is proved by the beauty and adaptation of the world. The supreme end of life, or the highest good, is virtue—that is, a life conformed to nature, the agreement of human conduct with the all-controlling law of nature, or of the human with the divine will; not contemplation, but action, is the supreme problem for man; virtue is sufficient for happiness, but happiness or pleasure should never be made the end of human endeavor. The wise man alone attains to the complete performance of his duty; he is without passion, although not without feeling; he is not indulgent, but just toward himself and others; he alone is free; he is king and lord, and is inferior in inner worth to no other rational being, not even to Zeus himself.

> Certain philosophers of the Epicureans and of the Stoicks encountered him. Acts xvii. 18.

Hence—2. A person not easily excited; one who appears or professes to be indifferent to pleasure or pain: one who exhibits calm fortitude.

> Flint-hearted Stoics, you, whose marble eyes
> Contemn a wrinkle, and whose souls despise
> To follow nature's too affected fashion.
> Quarles, Emblems, ii. 4.

School of the Stoics, the Porch. See porch.

stoical (stō′i-kal), a. [< stoic + -al.] Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of the Stoics; hence, manifesting or maintaining indifference to pleasure or pain; exhibiting or proceeding from calm fortitude: as, stoical indifference.

> It is a common imputation to Seneca that, though he declaimed with so much strength of reason, and a stoical contempt of riches and power, he was at the same time one of the richest and most powerful men in Rome.
> Steele, Tatler, No. 170.

Stoical ethics. See Stoic, n., 1.

stoically (stō′i-kal-i), adv. In the manner of the Stoics, or of a stoic; without apparent feeling or sensibility; with indifference to pleasure or pain; with calm fortitude.

stoicalness (stō′i-kal-nes), n. The state of being stoical; indifference to pleasure or pain; calm fortitude.

stoicheiology (stoi-kī-ol′ō-ji), n. [Also stoichiology, and more prop. stœchiology; < Gr. στοιχεῖον, a small post, also a first principle (dim. of στοῖχος, a row, rank, < στείχειν, go in line or order: see stich), + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] A division of a science which treats of the nature of the different kinds of objects that science deals with, but not of the manner in which they are associated with one another; the doctrine of elements.

> The conditions of mere thinking are given in certain elementary requisites; and that part of logic which analyzes and considers these may be called its stoicheiology, or doctrine of elements. . . . Logical stoicheiology, or the doctrine conversant about the elementary requisites of mere thought. . . . In its stoicheiology, or doctrine of elements, logic considers the conditions of possible thought.
> Sir W. Hamilton, Logic, iv., xxiv.

stoicheiometrical (stoi″kī-ō-met′ri-kal), a. [Also stœchiometrical; < stoicheiometr-y + -ic-al.] Pertaining to stoicheiometry.

stoicheiometry (stoi-kī-om′e-tri), n. [Also stœchiometry; < Gr. στοιχεῖον, a first principle, + μέτρον, a measure: see meter[1].] The science of calculating the quantities of chemical elements involved in chemical reactions or processes.

Stoician†, n. [ME. stoicien; as Stoic + -ian.] A Stoic. Chaucer, Boëthius, v. meter 4.

stoicism (stō′i-sizm), n. [= F. stoïcisme; as stoic + -ism.] 1. [cap.] The opinions and maxims of the Stoics; also, the conduct recommended by the Stoics.—2. A real or pretended indifference to pleasure or pain; the bearing of pain without betraying feeling; calm fortitude.

> He [Nuncomar] had just parted from those who were most nearly connected with him. Their cries and contortions had appalled the European ministers of justice, but had not produced the smallest effect on the iron stoicism of the prisoner. Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

=Syn. 2. Insensibility, Impassibility, etc. See apathy.

stoicity† (stō-is′i-ti), n. [< stoic + -ity.] Stoicalness; stoical indifference. B. Jonson, Epicœne, i. 1.

stoit (stoit), v. i. [A dial. var. of stot[2].] 1. To walk in a staggering way; totter; stumble on any object. [Scotch.]—2. To leap from the water, as certain fish. Day. [Prov. Eng.]

stoiter (stoi′tėr), v. i. [A dial. var. of stotter.] Same as stoit.

stoke[1]†, v. t. and i. [< ME. stoken, < OF. estoquer (= It. stoccare*), stab, thrust, < estoc, a rapier, stock: see stock[2], stoccade.] To pierce; stick; thrust.

> Ne short awerd for to stoke with point bytynge.
> Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1688.

stoke[2] (stōk), v.; pret. and pp. stoked, ppr. stoking. [< stoker, taken as an E. noun, < stoke* + -er[1], but appar. < D. stoker, < stoken, kindle a fire, incite, instigate, < MD. stoken, D. stoken, a stick, stock, rapier: see stock[1]. Cf. stoke[1].] I. trans. To poke, stir up, and maintain the fire in (a furnace, especially one used with a boiler for the generation of steam for an engine); supply with fuel; trim and maintain combustion in.

> Much skill is needed to stoke the furnace of a steam-boiler successfully; and one stoker will often be able to keep the steam well up when another of equal strength and diligence will fail altogether.
> Brande and Cox, Dict. Sci., Lit., and Art.

Cold stoking, in glass-manuf., the process of lowering the temperature of the oven until the glass attains the tough fluid consistency necessary for blowing.

II. intrans. To attend to and supply a furnace with fuel; act as a stoker or fireman.

stoke-hole (stōk′hōl), n. The compartment of a steamer in which the furnace-fires are worked: in the United States called fire-room.

stoker (stō′kėr), n. [< D. stoker, one who kindles or sets on fire, < stoken, kindle a fire, stir a fire, < stok, a stock, stick (hence a poker for a fire): see stock[1], and cf. stoke[2].] 1. One who attends to and maintains suitable combustion in a furnace, especially a furnace used in generating steam, as on a locomotive or steamship; a fireman.—2. A poker. [Rare.]—Mechanical stoker, an automatic device for feeding fuel to a furnace, and for keeping the grate free from ashes and clinkers. Many such machines have been invented. Endless aprons or chains, or revolving toothed cylinders, are common feeders, distributing the coal to the grate in definite quantity as needed, while shaking grates, revolving grate-bars, and special bars called picker-bars, with teeth working in the air-spaces of the grate, are employed for the discharge of ashes and cinders.

Stokesia (stō-kē′si-ä), n. [NL. (L'Heritier, 1788), named after Dr. Jonathan Stokes (1755–1831), a British botanist.] A genus of composite plants, of the tribe Vernoniaceæ, subtribe Eurvernoniceæ, and series Stilpnopappeæ. It is characterized by large stalked heads of blue flowers, with smooth three- or four-angled achenes and a pappus of four or five long bristles. The corollas, unlike the tubular type otherwise prevalent in the tribe, are flattened above the middle and somewhat ligulate, and toward the outside of the head, by their increased size and deeply five-parted border, they suggest the tribe Cichoriaceæ. The only species, S. cyanea, is a native of the southern United States near the Gulf of Mexico, a rare plant of wet pine-barrens. It is an erect shrub, clad above with loose wool and alternate clasping leaves, and bearing petioled leaves below, which are entire or spiny-fringed. The handsome blue flowers form large terminal heads which are purplish in the bud, resemble those of the China aster, and are grown in large quantities for the London market, under the name of Stokes's aster.

Roman Woman Clad in the Stola (over which is draped the palla).

stola (stō′lä), n.; pl. stolæ (-lē). [L.: see stole[2].] An ample outer tunic or dress worn by Roman women over the under-tunic or chemise: it fell as low as the ankles or feet, and was gathered in around the waist by a girdle. It was a characteristic garment of the Roman matrons, as the toga was of the men, and divorced women and courtezans were not permitted to wear it. See cut in preceding column.

stole[1] (stōl). Preterit and obsolete past participle of steal[1].

stole[2] (stōl), n. [< ME. stole, stoole, < OF. estole, F. étole = Sp. Pg. estola = It. stola, < L. stola, a stola, robe, stole, < Gr. στολή, a long robe; orig., in a gen. sense, dress, equipment, sacerdotal vestment or vestments; < στέλλειν, set, array, despatch: see stell.] 1. A stola, or any garment of similar nature.

> Forsoth the fadir seyde to his seruauntis, Soone brynge ȝe forth the first stoole, and clothe ȝe him.
> Wyclif, Luke xv. 22.
>
> Behind, four priests, in sable stole,
> Sung requiem for the warrior's soul.
> Scott, L. of L. M., v. 30.

2. In the Roman Catholic, Oriental, and Anglican churches, an ecclesiastical vestment, consisting of a narrow strip of silk or other material, worn over the shoulders (by deacons over one shoulder) and hanging down in front to the knees or below them. It is widened and fringed at the ends, and usually has a cross embroidered on it at the middle and at each extremity. Stoles are worn of different colors, according to the ecclesiastical season. When celebrating the eucharist a priest wears his stole crossed upon the breast and secured by the girdle, at other times simply pendent from the shoulders. A bishop, on account of his pectoral cross, wears it pendent even when celebrating. A deacon wears it over the left shoulder and tied on the right side. In the Greek Church the stole has been worn since early times in two different forms, the deacon's (orarion) and the priest's (epitrachelion). Originally the stole was of linen, and probably was a napkin or cloth indicative of ministering at the altar and at agapæ. The pall or omophorion is of entirely distinct origin. See orarium.

> Forth comth the preest with stole aboute his nekke,
> And bad hire be lyke to Sarra and Rebekke
> In wysdom and in trouthe of mariage.
> Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 459.

3. A chorister's surplice or cotta: an occasional erroneous use.

> Six little Singing-boys—dear little souls—
> In nice clean faces, and nice white stoles.
> Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 210.

4. In her., usually, a bearing representing a scarf with straight and parallel sides, fringed at each end.—Groom of the stole, the first lord of the bed-chamber in the household of an English king.—Order of the Golden Stole, a Venetian order, the badge of which was a stole of cloth of gold worn over the robes. It disappeared with the independence of the republic of Venice.—Stole-fee, a fee paid to a priest for religious or ecclesiastical service, as for marriages, christenings, and funerals.

stole[3] (stōl), n. Same as stolon.

stole[4]†, n. An obsolete form of stool.

stoled (stōld), a. [< stole[2] + -ed[2].] Wearing a stole. G. Fletcher, Christ's Triumph After Death.

stolen (stō′ln), p. a. [Pp. of steal[1].] Obtained or acquired by stealth or theft: as, stolen goods.

> Stolen waters are sweet. Prov. ix. 17.

Stolephoridæ (stol-e-for′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stolephorus + -idæ.] A family of malacopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Stolephorus; the anchovies. The body is oblong or elongate; the snout is produced forward; the mouth is very large and inferior; the maxillaries are very narrow, and project backward; the dorsal fin is submedian and short; the anal fin is rather long; the pectorals are normal; and the ventrals are abdominal, but further advanced than usual, and of moderate size. There is no lateral line, but along the sides is generally developed a broad silvery band, to which the typical genus owes its name. The species are mostly of small size, rarely exceeding 6 inches, and often less. About 70 are known, some inhabiting almost all tropical and temperate seas. Engraulididæ is a synonym.

stolephoroid (stō-lef′ō-roid), n. and a. [< Stolephorus + -oid.] I. n. A fish of the family Stolephoridæ.

II. a. Of, or having characters of, the Stolephoridæ.

Stolephorus (stō-lef′ō-rus), n. [NL. (Lacépède, 1803), < Gr. στολή, a stole, + φέρειν = E. bear[1].] A genus of fishes, related to the herrings, but with a produced snout, and a broad silvery band which has been compared to the white stole or band worn by priests, typical of the family Stolephoridæ (or Engraulididæ). The common anchovy is S. encrasicholus. There are several others, as S. browni, from Cape Cod to Brazil, abounding southward; S. ringens, from Vancouver Island to Peru, a large anchovy; S. delicatissimus and S. compressus, of the Californian and Mexican coasts, the latter locally known as sprat (see sprat[2], 2 (e)). This genus has been oftener called Engraulis. See cut under anchovy.

stolid (stol'id), a. [= Sp. estólido = Pg. estolido = It. stolido, < L. stolidus, unmovable, slow, dull, stupid; prob. akin to Gr. στερεός.] Heavy; dull; stupid; not easily moved; lacking in or destitute of susceptibility; denoting dullness or impassiveness: as, a stolid person; a stolid appearance.

> But the stolid calm of the Indian alone > Remains where the trace of emotion has been.
> Whittier, Mogg Megone, i.

=Syn. Doltish, wooden.

stolidity (stō-lid'i-ti), n. [= It. stolidità, < LL. stolidita(t-)s, dullness, stupidity, < L. stolidus, dull, stupid: see stolid.] The state or character of being stolid; dullness; stupidity.

> These certainly are the fools in the text, indocile, intractible fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and be proof against demonstration itself.
> Bentley, Sermons, i.

=Syn. See stolid.

stolidly (stol'id-li), adv. In a stolid manner: as, to gaze stolidly at one. Bailey.

stolidness (stol'id-nes), n. Stolidity.

stolo (stō'lō), n.; pl. stolones (stō-lō'nēz). [L.: see stolon.] In zoöl., a stolon.—Stolo prolifer, the proliferating stolon of some animals, as certain ascidians; a germ-stock. See stolon, 2 (e).

stolon (stō'lon), n. [NL., < L. stolo(n-), a shoot, branch, sucker.] 1. In bot.: (a) In phanerogams, a reclined or prostrate branch which strikes root at the tip, developing a new plant.

Carex vulgaris, var. stolonifera, showing the stolons.

A very slender naked stolon with a bud at the end constitutes a runner, as of the strawberry. See also cut under Solidago. (b) In mosses, a shoot running along or under the ground, and eventually rising into the air and producing fully leafed shoots. Goebel.—2. In zoöl., some proliferated part or structure, likened to the stolon of a plant, connecting different parts or persons of a compound or complex organism, and usually giving rise to new zooids by the process of budding. See cuts under Campanularia and Willsia. (a) A process of protoplasm between the different compartments of a multilocular foraminifer. (b) The procumbent, adherent, or creeping basal section of the stock of some social infusorians. (c) One of the prolongations of the cœnosarc of some actinozoans. (d) The second stage of the embryo of some hydrozoans. (e) The germ-stock or prolongation of the tunic of some compound ascidians, as a salp; a stolo prolifer. See cuts under Salpa and cyathozooid.

Also stole.

stolonate (stō'lon-āt), a. [< stolon + *-ate*1.] In zoöl., giving rise to or provided with a stolon or stolons; originating in a stolon; stoloniferous.

stoloniferous (stō-lō-nif'e-rus), a. [< L. stolo(n-), a shoot, sucker, + ferre, bear, carry: see -ferous.] Producing or bearing stolons; proliferating, as an ascidian or a hydroid; stolonate.

stolzite (stol'zīt), n. [Named after Dr. Stolz of Teplitz in Bohemia.] Native lead tungstate, a mineral occurring in tetragonal crystals of a green, brown, or red color, and resinous or subadamantine luster. Sometimes called scheelitine.

stoma (stō'mą), n.; pl. stomata (-ma-tą). [NL., < Gr. στόμα (στοματ-), pl. στόματα, the mouth, a mouth, opening, entrance or outlet, a chasm, cleft, etc., the face, front, fore part, etc.; = Zend staman, mouth. Cf. stomach, from the same source.] 1. In zoöl., a mouth or ingestive opening; an oral orifice; an ostium or ostiole: chiefly used of small or simple apertures, as a cytostome; hence, also, a small opening of any kind through which something may pass in or out; a pore. Specifically—(a) An opening of a lymphatic vessel; a lymphatic pore or orifice, as an interstice between the cells of a serous membrane. (b) The outer opening of a trachea or air-tube of an insect; a spiracle or breathing-hole. (c) A branchial pore of an ascidian or acranial vertebrate.

2. In bot., a minute orifice or slit in the epidermis of leaves, etc., which opens directly into air-cavities or intercellular spaces that pervade the interior, and through which free ingress and egress of air take place; a breathing-pore. The apparatus of the stoma consists usually of a pair of cells (there are several in the Equisetaceæ, Hepaticeæ, etc.), called guard-cells or guardian-cells, between the opposed concave sides of which lies the slit or opening, which extends through the whole height of the epidermis and permits free communication between the intercellular spaces and the external air. According to Van Tieghem, the stomata are always open in sunlight and closed in darkness. These cells are strongly thickened on the upper and under walls of their opposed faces, while elsewhere their walls are relatively thin. The opening and closing of a stoma depend upon the difference in thickness of the parts of the walls. When the turgescence of the guard-cells increases, they curve more strongly, and consequently the cleft widens; but with decreased turgescence the cleft becomes narrower. See also cut under Iris.

Longitudinal Section of a Stoma taken from the leaf of Uvularia perfoliata. (Magnified.)

1. Strobilanthes Sabinianus. 2. Codiæum variegatum. 3. Limnocharis Plumieri. a, Stomata. (Magnified.)

3. In Swedenborg's philosophy, a cubical figure with hollowed surfaces, being the figure of the interstices of spheres arranged in what Swedenborg calls the fixed quadrilateral pyramidal position, supposed to be that natural to the spherical particles of water.

stomacace (stō-mak'ą-sē), n. [NL., < L. stomacace, < Gr. στομακάκη, a disease of the mouth, scurvy of the gums, < στόμα, mouth, + κάκη, badness, < κακός, bad.] Ulcerous stomatitis. See stomatitis.

stomach (stum'ak), n. [Now conformed terminally to the L. spelling, but pron. according to its ME. origin; early mod. E. stomack, stomacke, stomak, stomake; < ME. stomak, stomake, stomoke, < OF. estomac, estomach, F. estomac = Pr. estomach = Sp. estómago = Pg. estomago = It. stomaco, the stomach, < L. stomachus, the throat, gullet, also the stomach, fig. taste, liking, also distaste, dislike, irritation, chagrin, < Gr. στόμαχος, the throat, gullet, the orifice of the stomach, hence also the stomach, lit. (as shown also in other uses, the neck of the bladder or of the uterus, etc.) a mouth or opening, < στόμα, mouth, opening: see stoma.]

1†. The throat; the gullet; the mouth.

> Spiteful tongues in cankered stomachs placed.
> Raleigh. (Imp. Dict.)

2. A more or less sac-like part of the body where food is digested. In the lowest animals any part of the sarcode or protoplasmic substance of the body is capable of digesting food, and forms during the process a temporary stomach, as in an amœba. In many infusorial animalcules special vacuoles containing food are formed. These are inconstant both in number and in position, whence Ehrenberg's name, Polygastrica, for these organisms. In the highest protozoans, which have a definite oral or ingestive area, there is likewise a more or less fixed digestive tract, constituting a stomach. A few of the metazoans have no true digestion, and consequently no stomach; such are the parenchymatous or anenterous worms, which imbibe or soak in nutriment already elaborated in the tissues of the host of which they are parasites. But the vast majority of animals above the protozoans have an intestinal digestive tract the whole or a part of which may properly be called a stomach. In most of these, again, a definite stomach exists as a specialized, usually dilated, part of the alimentary canal, in which food is subjected to a certain degree of digestion subsequent to mastication and insalivation and prior to further digestive changes which go on in the intestine. Among vertebrates more than one section of the alimentary canal is called a stomach, and many vertebrates have more than one. Thus, in birds there are a true glandular stomach, the proventriculus, in which the esophagus ends, and a muscular or grinding stomach, the gizzard or gigerium. In mammals the stomach always extends from the end of the gullet to the beginning of the gut. It is of extremely variable size and shape. Kinds of mammalian stomachs sometimes distinguished are the simple, as in man, the carnivores, etc.; the complex or plurilocular stomach, as in various marsupials, rodents, some monkeys, etc.; and the compound or pluripartite. The last is confined to the ruminants. (See Ruminantia.) In man the stomach is the most dilated and most distensible part of the alimentary canal. It occupies parts of the left hypochondriac and epigastric regions of the abdomen, immediately within the abdominal walls, below the diaphragm and partly under the liver, to the right of the spleen, and above the transverse colon. In form it is irregularly conoidal, and curved upon itself. When moderately distended, it is about 12 inches long and 4 wide; it weighs 3 or 4 ounces. But the size, shape, and hence the anatomical relations, vary greatly in different individuals and in different states of distention. It begins where the gullet ends, at the esophageal or cardiac orifice, and ends at the pyloric orifice, where the duodenum begins. From the cardiac orifice the stomach bulges to the left in a great cul-de-sac, the fundus cardiacus, or cardiac end, in contact with the spleen, and from this greatest caliber the organ lessens in diameter with a sweep to the right. The lesser curvature or short border of the stomach, between the cardiac and pyloric orifices, is uppermost, and is connected with the liver by the lesser or gastrohepatic omentum. The greater curvature or long border of the stomach is opposite the other, between the same two points, and gives attachment to the great or gastrocolic omentum. These two curvatures separate the anterior and posterior surfaces. The stomach is held in place by folds of peritoneum, the gastrocolic, gastrohepatic, gastrosplenic, and gastrophrenic omenta, the last of which gives it most fixity. The arteries of the stomach are the gastric (a branch from the celiac axis), the pyloric and right gastro-epiploic branches of the hepatic, the left gastro-epiploic, and short branches from the splenic artery. The veins end in the splenic, superior mesenteric, and portal veins. The numerous lymphatics consist of a deep set and a superficial set. The nerves are the terminal branches of both pneumogastrics and many branches from the sympathetic system. The coats of the stomach are four—serous, muscular, submucous, and mucous. The serous layer is the peritoneum, which covers the whole organ on both its surfaces, and is reflected away from it along each of its curvatures. The muscular coat includes three sets of fibers—longitudinal, circular, and oblique, the last chiefly limited to the cardia. The submucous coat is simply the connective tissue between the muscular layer and the mucous membrane lining the stomach. This mucous membrane is the so called "coat" of the stomach. It is thick, pinkish, reddish, or brownish, with a soft velvety surface, thrown into longitudinal folds or rugæ when the organ is contracted. Studding the surface of the mucous membrane are numberless depressions or alveoli of polygonal tending to hexagonal form, $\frac{1}{250}$ to $\frac{1}{150}$ of an inch in diameter; these are the enlarged mouths of the tubular gastric glands, which secrete the gastric juice by the action of which gastric digestion is effected. Two kinds of these follicles are distinguished by their microscopic structure—the pyloric and the cardiac. The former are found chiefly at and near the pyloric end, the latter most typical at the cardiac, and there are intermediate forms in intermediate regions. The epithelium lining the mucous membrane and its alveoli is of the kind called columnar. Besides the four coats above described, a fifth, a layer of involuntary muscular fibers between the mucous membrane and the submucous layer, is distinguished as the muscularis mucosæ. The digestive activity of the stomach is intermittent, and depends upon the stimulus which the presence of food occasions. The muscular arrangement is such that food is continually rolled about, so that every part of the mass is submitted to the action of the gastric juice. In the stomach the proteids are converted into albumins and peptones by the pepsin, milk is curdled by the rennet-ferment, the gelatiniferous tissues are dissolved, and other less important changes are effected. See also cuts under alimentary, Asteroidea, Appendicularia, Dibranchiata, Doliolidæ, intestine, peritoneum, Plumatella, pluteus, Protula, Pulmonata, Pycnogonida, Ruminantia, Salpa, Trayulus, and Tunicata.

Human Stomach and Beginning of Intestine, laid open to show rugæ.

a, esophagus or gullet; b, cardiac (left) dilatation of stomach; c, lesser curvature of stomach, opposite which is the (unlettered) greater curvature; d, pylorus, at right extremity of stomach; e, biliary or hepatic duct; f, gall bladder, whose duct, the cystic duct, forms with the hepatic duct the ductus communis choledochus, or common bile-duct; g, pancreatic duct, opening into the last; h, i, duodenum, or beginning of the small intestine.

3. The digestive person or alimentary zooid of a compound polyp. See gasterozooid.—4. In most insects of the orders Lepidoptera, Diptera, and some Hymenoptera, a bladder-like expansion of the esophagus, which can be dilated at the will of the insect; the sucking-stomach, by means of which the nectar of flowers or other liquid is sucked up, as water is drawn into a syringe. In mandibulate insects the ingluvies or crop takes the place of the sucking-stomach, and nearly all insects have two true stomachs, called proventriculus and ventriculus.

5. Appetite; desire or relish for food: as, to have a good stomach for one's meals.

> The body is ay so redy and penyble
> To wake, that my stomak is destroyed.
> Chaucer, Summoner's Tale, l. 139.

> Pray, seat you, lords; we'll bear you company,
> But with small stomach to taste any food.
> Beau. and Fl. (?), Faithful Friends, iii. 2.

> I'll make as bold with your meat; for the trot has got me a good stomach. Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 234.

> In some countries, where men and women have good travelling stomachs, they begin with porridge, then they fall to capon, or so forth, but if capon come short of filling their bellies, to their porridge again, 'tis their only course.
> Webster and Dekker, Northward Hoe, i. 1.

Hence—6. Relish; taste; inclination; liking: as, to have no stomach for controversy.

> He also hathe tolde me moche off hys stomake and tendre faver that he owythe to yow. Paston Letters, III. 160.

> Finding that the citizens had apparently no stomach for the fight, he removed his trophies, and took his departure.
> Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 66.

7. Disposition. (a) Spirit; temper; heart.

Though I bea not worthie to receive any favor at the handes of your maistership, yet is your exeellente herte and nohle stomake worthie to shewe favour.
Udall, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 4.

This was no small Magnanimity in the King, that he was able to pull down the high Stomachs of the Prelates in that time. Baker, Chronicles, p. 50.

(b†) Compassion; pity.

Nere myn extorcioun I myghte nat lyven,
Nor of swiche japes wol I nat be shryven, Stomak ne conscience ne knowe I noon.
Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 143.

(c) Courage; spirit.

For in them, as men of stowter stomackes, bolder spirites, and manlyer courages then handycraftes men and plowemen be, doth consiste the whole powre, strength, and puissaunce of oure army, when we muste fight in battayle.
Sir T. More, Utopia, tr. by Robinson, p. 39.

(d†) Pride; haughtiness; conceit.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 2. 34.

(e†) Spleen; anger; choler; resentment; sullenness.

From that time King Richard, mooued in stomacke against King Philip, neuer shewed any gentle countenance of peace & amitie. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 23.

Many learned men haue written, with moch diuersitie for the matter, and therfore with great contrarietie and some stomacke amongest them selues.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 123.

Which might teach these times not suddenly to condemn all things that are sharply spoken, or vehemently written, as proceeding out of stomach, virulence, and ill nature. Milton, Church-Government, ii., Int.

Circulating stomach, one of the temporary food-vacuoles of an infusorian or other protozoan, which moves about with a kind of cyclosis. See Polygastrica.—Frigidity of the stomach, a state of gastric debility formerly considered to depend on sexual excesses.—Fullness of the stomach, a feeling of weight or distention in the epigastric region.—Glandular stomach. See proventriculus.—Hypogenesia of the stomach, unnatural smallness of the stomach, seen in some children.—Masticatory stomach. See masticatory.—Muscular stomach. See muscular and gizzard.—Pit of the stomach, the depression just below the sternum: same as epigastrium, 1. Also called infrasternal fossa, scrobiculus cordis, and anticardium.—Proud stomach, a haughty disposition. Compare def. 7.

Truths whilk are as unwelcome to a proud stomach as wet clover to a cow's. Scott, Pirate, xviii.

Rugæ of the stomach, folds of the mucous membrane, present when the organ is contracted, and extending for the most part in a longitudinal direction. See cut in def. 2.—Sour stomach, that condition of the stomach which causes acid eructations.—Sucking-stomach. See def. 4.—To stay the stomach. See stay[2].

stomach (stum′ak), v. [= OF. estomaquer = Sp. Pg. estomagar = It. stomacare, disgust, refl. feel disgust, < L. stomachari, feel disgust, be angry, < stomachus, distaste, dislike, stomach: see stomach, n.] I. trans. 1†. To encourage; hearten.

When he had stomached them by the Holy Ghost to shoot forth his word without fear, he went forward with them by his grace, conquering in them the prince of this world. Bp. Bale, Select Works (Parker Soc.), p. 313.

2†. To hate; resent; remember or regard with anger or resentment.

If that any stomach this my deed,
Alphonsus can revenge thy wrong with speed.
Greene, Alphonsus, iii.

A plague on them all for me! . . . O, I do stomach them hugely. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iii. 2.

3. To put up with; bear without open resentment or opposition: as, to stomach an affront.

"The priests talk," said he, "of absolution in such terms that laymen can not stomach it."
Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 76.

4. To turn the stomach of; disgust. [Rare.]

It is not because the restaurants are very dirty — if you wipe your plate and glass carefully before using them, they need not stomach you. Howells, Venetian Life, vi.

II.† intrans. To be or become angry.

What one among them commonly doth not stomach at such contradiction? Hooker.

stomachal (stum′ak-al), a. and n. [= F. stomacal = Sp. Pg. estomacal = It. stomacale, < NL. stomachalis*, < L. stomachus, stomach: see stomach.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the stomach; gastric: as, stomachal tubes.

The body-wall, which encloses the stomachal cavity.
Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 92.

2. Relating to the stomach, or to a region of the body which contains the stomach; gastric; epigastric; abdomiual; ventral: as, the stomachal part of a crab's carapace.—3. Remedial of a disordered stomach; peptic or digestive; cordial; stomachic.—Stomachal teeth, sharp, horny processes of the lining of the proventriculus, and sometimes of other parts of the alimentary canal, found in many insects and crustaceans, and serving for the comminution of food.

II. n. A stomachic.

stomach-animals† (stum′ak-an″i-malz), n. pl. The Infusoria. See Polygastrica. Öken.

stomach-brush (stum′ak-brush), n. A brush designed to be introduced into the stomach, by way of the esophagus, to stimulate secretion.

stomach-cough (stum′ak-kôf), n. A form of reflex cough excited by irritation of the stomach or small intestine.

stomacher (stum′ak-ėr), n. [< stomach, v., + -er[1].] 1. One who stomachs, in any sense of the word.—2†. A stomachic; an appetizer.

In Sir Kenelm Digby's "Choice and Experimentel Receipts in Physick and Chirurgery" (London, 1675) I find a preparation of herbs for external application with this heading: "To strengthen the stomach use the following stomacher." N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 173.

3. A part of the dress covering the front of the body, generally forming the lower part of the bodice in front and usually projecting down into the skirt or lapping over it — the name being given to the whole front piece covering the pit of the stomach and the breast. In some fashions the stomacher was richly embroidered, and ornamented with jewels, as in Europe in the sixteenth century.

Less fashionable ladies, between 1615 and 1625, discarded the tight and pointed stomacher and farthingale, and wore, over an easy jerkin and ample petticoat, a loose gown open in front, made high to meet the ruff.
Encyc. Brit., VI. 473.

4. A plaque or brooch, usually large, the name being derived from that part of the dress upon which the brooch was worn. J. B. Atkinson, Art Jour. (1867), p. 203.

stomachful† (stum′ak-fûl), a. [Early mod. E. also stomackfull; < stomach + -ful.] Full of stomach or wilfulness; proud; spirited; wilful; perverse; stubborn; sturdy.

From all those Tartara he hath had an Army of an hundred and twenty thousand excellent, swift, stomackfull Tartarian horse. Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 39.

Nay, if I had but any body to stand by me, I am as stomachful as another. Wycherley, Plain Dealer, iii. 1.

stomachfully† (stum′ak-fûl-i), adv. In a stomachful, or perverse or wilful, manner; stubbornly; perversely. Bp. Hall, The Golden Calf.

stomachfulness† (stum′ak-fûl-nes), n. Stubbornness; perverseness; wilfulness.

Pride, stomachfulness, headiness — avail but little.
Granger, On Beeles. (1621), p. 248.

stomach-grief (stum′ak-grēf), n. Anger.

Stomacke grief is when we wil take the matter as hot as a toste. We neede no examples for this matter, hot men have to many. Sir T. Wilson, Art of Rhetoric.

stomachic (stō-mak′ik), a. and n. [= F. stomachique = Sp. estomático = Pg. estomachico = It. stomachico, < L. stomachicus, < Gr. στομαχικός, pertaining to the stomach, < στόμαχος, the stomach: see stomach.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the stomach. (a) Stomachal; gastric: as, stomachic vessels or nerves. (b) Specifically, sharpening the appetite, and stimulating gastric digestion. See gtomachal, 3.

He [Boswell] was . . . gluttonously fond of whatever would yield him a little solacement, were it only of a stomachic character. Carlyle, Boswell's Johnson.

Stomachic balsam, a mixture of balsam of Peru with oil of nutmeg and other volatile oils, as those of wormwood, cloves, mace, peppermint, orange-peel, and amber, made up in different proportions.—Stomachic calculus, a concretion, usually containing hair, found in the stomach, particularly of lower animals. See bezoar.—Stomachic fever, gastric fever. See fever[1].

II. n. A medicine which sharpens the appetite, and is supposed to stimulate digestion, as the bitter tonics; a stomachal.

stomachical (stō-mak′i-kal), a. [< stomachic + -al.] Same as stomachic. Wiseman, Surgery, i. 18.

stomaching† (stum′ak-ing), n. [Verbal n. of stomach, v.] Resentment. Shak., A. and C., ii. 2. 9.

stomachless (stum′ak-les), a. [Early mod. E. stomacklesse; < stomach + -less.] Lacking stomach; having no appetite. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead, ii. § 6.

stomachous† (stum′ak-us), a. [< L. stomachosus, angry, choleric, < stomachus, distaste, dislike: see stomach.] Resentful; sullen; obstinate.

Young blood is hot; youth hasty; ingenuity open; abuse impatient; choler stomachous.
G. Harvey, Four Letters.

stomach-piece (stum′ak-pēs), n. In ship-carp., same as apron, 3.

stomach-plaster (stum′ak-plās″tėr), n. See plaster.

stomach-pump (stum′ak-pump), n. A small pump or syringe used in medical practice for the purpose of emptying the stomach or of introducing liquids into it. It resembles the common syringe, except that it has two apertures near the end, instead of one, in which the valves open different ways, so as to constitute a sucking and a forcing passage. When the object is to empty the stomach, the pump is worked while its sucking orifice is in connection with a flexible tube passed into the stomach; and the extracted matter escapes by the forcing orifice. When, on the contrary, the object is to force a liquid into the stomach, the tube is connected with the forcing orifice, by which the action of the pump is reversed. It is now not much used, the stomach being emptied, when necessary, by the stomach-tube working as a siphon.

stomach-qualmed (stum′ak-kwämd), a. Same as stomach-sick. Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 4. 193.

stomach-sick (stum′ak-sik), a. Nauseated; qualmish; hence, having an aversion.

Receiuing some hurt in his stomack by drinking those cold waters, he proued stomach-sick to his expedition also.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 289.

stomach-staggers (stum′ak-stag″ėrz), n. A disease in horses, depending on a paralytic affection of the stomach. The animal so affected dozes in the stable, resting his head in the manger; on awaking, or being aroused, he falls to eating, and continues to eat voraciously, death from apoplexy or repletion often resulting.

stomach-sweetbread (stum′ak-swēt″bred), n. The pancreas of the calf, as used for food: distinguished from the throat-sweetbread, or thymus gland of the same animal.

stomach-timber (stum′ak-tim″bėr), n. Same as belly-timber. [Slang.]

As Prior tells, a clever poet, . . .
The main strength of ev'ry member Dependa upon the stomach timber.
Combe, Dr. Syntax's Tours, xxxiii.

stomach-tooth (stum′ak-töth), n. A lower canine milk-tooth of infants: so called because there is often gastric disturbance at the time of its appearance.

stomach-tube (stum′ak-tūb), n. A long flexible tube to be introduced into the stomach, through the gullet, as for washing out the stomach.

stomach-worm (stum′ak-wėrm), n. A common intestinal roundworm, Ascaris lumbricoides, sometimes found in the human stomach.

stomachy (stum′ak-i), a. [< stomach + -y[1].] Proud; haughty; irascible; easily offended. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stomack†, stomak†, stomake†, n. Obsolete spellings of stomach.

stomapod (stō′ma-pod), a. and n. Same as stomatopod.

Stomapoda (stō-map′ō-dä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στόμα, mouth, + ποῦς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] Same as Stomatopoda. Latreille, 1817.

stomapodiform (stō-ma-pod′i-fôrm), a. [< NL. Stomapoda + L. forma, form.] Resembling or shaped like a stomatopod, especially of the genus Squilla. Applied in entomology to certain elongate, somewhat flattened larvæ which have the abdomen wider than the thorax, long antennæ, and six legs, the anterior pair being large and raptorial. In aquatic species the body is furnished with lateral false gills. The larvæ of Ephemera are examples of this form.

stomapodous (stō-map′ō-dus), a. [< stomapod + -ous.] Same as stomatopod.

stomata, n. Plural of stoma.

stomatal (stō′ma-tal), a. [< NL. stoma(t-) + -al.] In bot. and zoöl., relating or belonging to stomata.

stomate (stō′māt), a. and n. [< NL. stomatus* for stomatatus*, < stoma (stomat-), a stoma: see stoma.] I. a. Having a stoma or stomata; stomatous.

II. n. A stoma.

stomatia, n. Plural of stomatium.

stomatic (stō-mat′ik), a. and n. [= It. stomatico, < Gr. στοματικός, of or pertaining to the mouth, < στόμα(τ-), mouth: see stoma.] I. a. In zoöl. and bot., of or pertaining to a stoma or stomata; oral.

II. n. A medicine for diseases of the mouth.

stomatiferous (stō-ma-tif′ė-rus), a. [< NL. stoma(t-) + L. ferre, bear, carry: see -ferous.] Bearing or provided with stomata; stomatophorous.

stomatitis (stō-ma-tī′tis), n. [NL., < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + -itis.] Inflammation of the interior of the mouth, including the mucous membrane of the lips, gums, tongue, cheeks, and palate.—Aphthous stomatitis, inflammation of the mucous membrane of the mouth-cavity, consisting in the formation of small superficial ulcers. Also called aphthæ, canker sore mouth, follicular or vesicular stomatitis.—Catarrhal stomatitis, a simple local or general inflammation of the mucous membrane of the mouth-cavity. Also called oral catarrh, erythema of the mouth, and erythematous, simple, and superficial stomatitis.—Gangrenous stomatitis. See noma.—Mercurial stomatitis, an inflammation of the mucous membrane of the mouth, with ulceration, caused by mercurial poisoning.—Parasitic stomatitis, inflammation of the mouth due to or complicated with the growth on the mucous membrane of Oïdium albicans. Also called thrush, pseudomembranous stomatitis.

—Ulcerous stomatitis, inflammation of the mucous membrane of the mouth-cavity, usually unilateral, resulting in the formation of multiple ulcers. Also called fetid stomatitis, phlegmanous stomatitis, and putrid sore mouth.

stomatium (stō-mā′shi-um), n.; pl. stomatia (-ä). [NL., dim. of stoma: see stoma.] A stoma.

Stomatoda (stō-ma-tō′dä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + εἶδος, form.] Dujardin's name for the ciliate infusorians, regarded by him as the only animaleules with distinct stomata, or oral apertures: distinguished from Astomata, or the supposed mouthless flagellate infusorians.

stomatodæum (stō″ma-tō-dē′um), n.; pl. stomatodæa (-ä). [NL.: see stomodæum.] Same as stomodæum. [Rare.]

The stomatodæum: a sac-like involution of the epidermis abutting against the mesenteron, spacious, and well marked on account of its dense pigmentation.
Huxley and Martin, Elementary Biology, p. 171.

stomatode (stō′ma-tōd), a. and n. [< Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + εἶδος, form.] I. a. Having a stoma or cytostome, as an infusorian; stomatophorous; of or pertaining to the Stomatoda.

As regards the classification of the Protozoa, a rough and useful division is into mouth-bearing or "stomatode" Protozoa, in which there is a distinct mouth, and mouthless or "aatomatous" Protozoa. H. A. Nicholson.

II. n. A member of the Stomatoda.

stomatodendron (stō″ma-tō-den′dron), n.; pl. stomatodendra (-drä). [NL., < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + δένδρον, a tree.] One of the dendritie branches of the Rhizostomidæ, ending in minute polypites. Encyc. Dict.

stomatodynia (stō″ma-tō-din′i-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + ὀδυνη, pain.] Pain in the mouth.

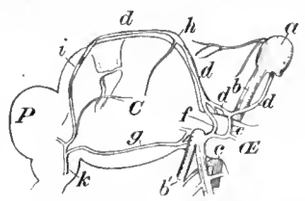
stomatogastric (stō″ma-tō-gas′trik), a. [< Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + γαστήρ, stomach: see gastric.] Of or pertaining to the mouth and stomach: applied to the set or system of visceral nerves which ramify upon the alimentary canal of many invertebrates. See figure and description.



Stomatogastric and other Visceral Nerves of Crawfish (Astacus fluviatilis).

Œ, esophagus, around which is the esophageal ring; C, cardiac; P, pyloric parts of stomach; a, cerebroganglion; b, commissural nerve of left side, in place; b′, commissural nerve of right side, cut away and turned down (these longitudinal commissures being completed in the esophageal ring by c, postesophageal transverse commissures); d, d, d, azygous nerve, with h, a ganglion; i, lateral branch, uniting with g, a posterolateral nerve; e, f, anterolateral and mediolateral nerves; k, hepatic nerve.

The Crayfish possesses a remarkably well-developed system of visceral or stomatogastric nerves.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 280.

stomatologi-cal (stō″ma-tō-loj′i-kal), a. [< stomatolog-y + -ic-al.] Pertaining to stomatology.

stomatologist (stō-ma-tol′ō-jist), n. [< stomatolog-y + -ist.] One versed in stomatology.

stomatology (stō-ma-tol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The sum of scientific knowledge concerning the mouth.

stomatomorphous (stō″ma-tō-môr′fus), a. [< Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + μορφή, form.] In bot., mouth-shaped.

stomatonecrosis (stō″ma-tō-nek-rō′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + νέκρωσις, deadness: see necrosis.] Gangrenous stomatitis. See stomatitis and noma.

Stomatophora (stō-ma-tof′ō-rä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of stomatophorus: see stomatophorous.] Protozoa which are provided with a mouth or its equivalent: a higher series of protozoans: same as Infusoria, 2: opposed to Lipostomata.

stomatophorous (stō-ma-tof′ō-rus), a. [< NL. stomatophorus, < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + φέρειν = E. bear[1].] Having a mouth or stoma; of or pertaining to the Stomatophora; not lipostomatous.

stomatoplastic (stō″ma-tō-plas′tik), a. [< stomatoplast-y + -ic.] Pertaining to stomatoplasty.

stomatoplasty (stō′ma-tō-plas-ti), n. [< Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + πλαστός, verbal adj. of πλάσσειν, form, mold.] Plastic surgery of the mouth.

stomatopod (stō′ma-tō-pod), a. and n. [< NL. stomatopus (-pod-), < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + ποίς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] I. a. Having some of the legs close by the mouth, as a mantis-shrimp; of or pertaining to the Stomatopoda. Also stomatopodous, stomapodous.

II. n. A member of the Stomatopoda, in any sense.

Also stomapod.

Stomatopoda (stō-ma-top′ō-dä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of stomatopus (-pod-): see stomatopod.] An order of malacostraeous podophthalmic crustaceans, to which various limits have been assigned. (a†) As constituted by Latreille in 1817, in the form Stomapoda, the second order of Crustacea, the so-called sea-mantes, or gastrurans, divided into two families, Unipeltata and Bipeltata, of which only the former are properly stomatopodous, the other being the so-called glass-crabs (Phyllosoma), or larval forms of other crustaceans. Hence—(b†) An artificial order of the higher crustaceans, under which are included not only the Squillidæ or Stomatopoda proper, but also the Mysidæ or opossum-shrimps, and related forms, the Lucíferidæ, etc. (c) Restricted by Huxley to the family Squillidæ. See cuts under mantis-shrimp and Squillidæ.

Squilla, Gonodactylus, and Coronis appear to me to differ so widely and in such important structural peculiarities, not only from the Podophthalmia proper, but from all other Crustacea, as to require arrangement in a separate group, for which the title of Stomatopoda may well be retained. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 317.

stomatopodous (stō-ma-top′ō-dus), a. [< stomatopod + -ous.] Same as stomatopod.

Stomatopora (stō-ma-top′ō-rä), n. [NL. (Brown, 1835), < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + πόρος, pore: see pore[2].] Same as Aulopora.

stomatoporoid (stō-ma-top′ō-roid), a. [< Stomatopora + -oid.] Pertaining to or eharacteristie of a eoral of the genus Stomatopora. Geological Jour., XLV. iii. 566.

Stomatopterophora (stō-ma-top-te-rof′ō-rä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + πτερόν, feather, + φέρειν = E. bear[1].] In J. E. Gray's classification (1821), the fourth classof mollusks, divided into two orders, Pterobranchia and Dactyliobranchia; the Pteropoda or pteropods.

stomatorrhagia (stō″ma-tō-rā′ji-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + -ραγία, < ῥήγνύναι, break, burst.] Hemorrhage from the mouth.

stomatoscope (stō′ma-tō-skōp), n. [< Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + σκοπεῖν, view.] Any instrument for keeping the mouth open so as to permit the parts within to be inspected. Dunglison.

stomatotheca (stō″ma-tō-thē′kä), n.; pl. stomathothecæ (-sē). [NL., < Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + θήκη, box, chest.] In entom., the mouth-ease, or that part of the integument of a pupa which eovers the mouth.

stomatous (stō′ma-tus), a. [< Gr. στόμα(τ-), mouth, + -ous.] Provided with stomata; stomatophorous; stomate.

Stomias (stō′mi-as), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1817), < Gr. στόμα, mouth.] A genus of deep-sea fishes, typieal of the family Stomiatidæ, having a long compressed body with delicate deciduous scales, a row of phosphoreseent or luminous spots along eaeh side, and a rayed dorsal opposite the anal fin: so called from the large and deep mouth, armed with a formidable array of teeth. S. ferox is found from Greenland to Cape Cod. Specimens are taken at various depths from 450 to 1,800 fathoms.

Stomiatidæ (stō-mi-at′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stomias (see stomiatoid) + -idæ.] A family of physostomous fishes, typified by the genus Stomias. They are deep-sea Atlantic fishes, of 5 or 6 species and 3 genera, divided into 2 subfamilies, according to the presence or absence of an adipose fin.

stomiatoid (stō′mi-a-toid), a. and n. [< Stomias (assumed stem Stomiat-).] I. a. Resembling a fish of the genus Stomias; of or pertaining to the Stomiatidæ.

II. n. Any fish of the family Stomiatidæ.

stomodæal (stō-mō-dē′al), a. Same as stomodeal.

stomodæum (stō-mō-dē′um), n.; pl. stomodæa (-ä). [NL., < Gr. στόμα, mouth, + ὁδαῖος, by the way, < ὁδός, way.] An anterior part of the alimentary eanal or digestive traet, being so mueh of the whole enteric tube as is formed at the oral end by an ingrowth of the eetoderm: eorrelated with proctodæum, which is derived from the eetoderm at the aboral end, both being distinguished from enteron proper, whieh is of endodermal origin.

stomodeal (stō-mō-dē′al), a. [< stomodæum + -al.] Pertaining to or having the eharaeter of a stomodæum. Also spelled stomodæal.

Stomoxyidæ (stō-mok-sī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stomoxys + -idæ.] A family of braehyeerous dipterous insects, typified by the genus Stomoxys, often merged in the Muscidæ. It contains such genera as Stomoxys, Hæmatobia, and Glossina, and includes some well-known biting flies, as the horn-fly, stable-fly, and tsetse-fly. Also Stomoxidæ (Meigen, 1824) and Stomoxidea (Westwood, 1840), and, as a subfamily of Muscidæ, Stomoxyinæ or Stomoxinæ.

Stomoxys (stō-mok′sis), n. [NL. (Geoffroy, 1764), < Gr. στόμα, mouth, + ὀξύς, sharp.] A notable genus of biting flies, typieal of the family Stomoxyidæ, or merged with the Muscidæ. They are gray, of medium size, and resemble the common house-fly in appearance. The mouth-parts are developed into a horny proboscis. S. calcitrans, common to Europe and North America, is a familiar example. See stable-fly, 1.

stomp[1] (stomp), n. A dialectal form of stamp; specifically, in coal-mining, one of the plugs of wood driven into the roof of the level, to which are fastened the "lines" serving to direct the miner in his proper course; they may also be used as beneh-marks. Gresley. [Midland coal-field, Eng.]

stomp[2]†, n. and v. An obsolete form of stump.

stompers (stom′pėrz), n. pl. A dialectal form of stampers. See stamper, 3.

stonage† (stō′nāj), n. [< stone + -age.] A collection or heap of stones. Halliwell.

Would not everybody say to him, We know the stonage at Gilgal? Leslie. (Nares.) stond (stond), v. and n. An obsolete or dialectal form of stand.

stondent. An obsolete past partieiple of stand.

stone (stōn), n. and a. [Also E. dial. stean, steen, Se. stane, stain; < ME. stoon, ston, stan, < AS. stān = OS. stēn = OFries. stēn = D. steen = MLG. stēn, LG. steen = OHG. MHG. G. stein = Iceel. steinn = Sw. Dan. sten = Goth. stains, a stone; prob. akin to OBulg. stiena = Russ. stiena, a wall, and to Gr. στία, στῖον, a stone. Hence steen[1], steen[2].] I. n. 1. A piece of rock of small or moderate size. The name rock is given to the aggregation of mineral matter of which the earth's crust is made up. A small piece or fragment of this rock is generally called a stone, and to this a qualifying term is frequently added: as, cobble-stone or gravel-stone. See rock[1].

Lo, heere be stoonys hard y-wrou3te,
Make hereof breed.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 43.

Are there no stones in heaven
But what serve for the thunder?
Shak., Othello, v. 2. 234.

He is not a man, but a block, a very stone.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 450.

2. The hard material of which rock eonsists: in contradistinetion to metal, wood, ete.

Al hem to-dryven ase ston doth the glas.
Flemish Insurrection (Child's Ballads, VI. 270).

He made a harp of her breast-bone, . . .
Whose sounds would melt a heart of stone.
The Cruel Sister (Child's Ballads, II. 236).

That we might see our own work out, and watch
The sandy footprint harden into stone.
Tennyson, Princess, iii.

3. A piece of rock of a determined size, shape, or quality, or used for a defined purpose: as, a grind*stone*; a hearth*stone*; an altar-stone. Specifically—(a†) A gun-flint.

About seauen of the clocke marched forward the light peeces of ordinance, with stone and powder.
Holinshed, Chron., III. 947.

(b) A gravestone; a monument or memorial tablet.

You shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswept stone besmear'd with sluttish time.
Shak., Sonnets, lv.

(c) A millstone. (d) In printing, an imposing-stone. (e) In glass-manuf., a flattening-stone.

4. A precious stone; a gem. See precious.

Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 4. 27.

5. A small, hard, rounded objeet resembling a stone or pebble: as, a hail-stone; a gall-stone; an ear-stone. Specifically—(a) A calculous concretion in the kidney or urinary bladder or gall-bladder, etc.; hence, the disease arising from a calculus. (b) A testicle: generally in the plural. [Vulgar.] (c) The nut of a drupe or stone-fruit, or the hard covering inclosing the kernel, and itself inclosed by the pulpy pericarp, as in the peach, cherry, or plum. See drupe and endocarp (with cuts). (d†) A hard, compact mass; a lump or nugget.

Marvellous great stones of yron.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., I. 498.

6†. The glass of a mirror; a mirror of crystal.

Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why, then she lives. Shak., Lear, v. 3. 262.

7. A common measure of weight in use throughout the northwest and central countries of Europe, but varying much in different countries. The English imperial standard stone is 14 pounds avoirdupois, and is commonly used in England in giving the weight of a man, but other values are in common use, varying with the article weighed: thus, the stone of butchers' meat or fish is 8 pounds, of cheese 16 pounds, of glass 5 pounds, of alum 13¾ pounds, of hemp usually 32 pounds, though a statute of George II. made it 16 pounds, and one of Henry VIII. 20 pounds; of lead 12 pounds, though the statute de ponderibus makes it 15 pounds of 25 "shillings" each, equal to 14¼ pounds avoirdupois. There were in the early part of the nineteenth century many local stones in use in England, but in the United States this unit is unknown. The stone of 14 pounds is not recognized in the statute de ponderibus, and first appears as a weight for wool. The old arithmetics call 14 pounds half a quarter, and either do not mention the stone, or define it as 8 pounds. The only legal stone in Great Britain now is that of 14 pounds.

And sende ye me word how mech more yn value yn a stoon shall I syle my wolle. Paston Letters, I. 155.

He was not a ghost, my visitor, but solid flesh and bone; He wore a Palo Alto hat, his weight was twenty stone.
O. W. Holmes, Nux Postcœnatica.

Alençon stone, pure rock-crystal cut in rose or brilliant form.—Amazonian or Amazon stone. See Amazonian[2].—Arkansas stone, a fine-grain whetstone found in Arkansas, and used to sharpen surgical and dental instruments.—Armenian stone. See Armenian.—Artificial stone, a material prepared for decorative and building purposes by consolidating sand with the aid of some chemical. The best-known and most extensively used artificial stone is Ransome's, which is made by mixing sand with silicate of soda in a pug-mill, so as to form a plastic substance, which is then rolled or pressed into any desired form. The articles as thus prepared are then immersed in a solution of calcium chlorid, when double decomposition takes place, a calcium silicate being formed which firmly cements the particles of sand together, while the sodium chlorid, the other product of the decomposition, is afterward removed by washing. This material has been somewhat extensively used in England and elsewhere. Other processes akin to this, but in which different chemicals were used, have also been patented in the United States, but the materials thus produced have not met with any extensive sale. Beton or concrete has also been employed as a building material, to take the place of stone or brick, especially the "béton-Coignet," which is extensively used in and near Paris and elsewhere. Beton and concrete, which are mixtures of sand, gravel, stone chippings, fragments of brick, etc., with common or hydraulic mortar or cement, are also frequently, but not correctly, designated artificial stone.—Ayr stone, a stone used for polishing marble and surfacing metals. The harder varieties are used as whetstones. Also called water of Ayr, Scotch stone, and smoke-stone.—Bath stone, a rock used extensively for building purposes in England, and especially near Bath (whence its name). It is a limestone, having an oölitic structure, and belonging to the Inferior Oölite, which lies directly upon the Lias, the lowest division of the Jurassic of Continental and American geologists. Also called Bath oölite.—Beer stone, a hard sandy chalk stratum of small thickness, occurring westward of Seaton in Devonshire, England. It forms a part of the Lower Chalk, and contains Inoceramus mytiloides. This series of beds, not having a thickness of more than 10 feet, is only of local importance, but it has been quarried as a building-stone for many hundred years, and parts of Exeter Cathedral are built of it.—Bologna stone, or Bolognian stone, a variety of barite, or barium sulphate, found in roundish masses, composed of radiating fibers, first discovered near Bologna. It is phosphorescent in the dark after being heated to ignition, powdered, and exposed to the sun's light for some time.—Bristol stone, rock-crystal, or Bristol diamond, small round crystals of quartz, found in the Clifton limestone, near the city of Bristol in England.—Caen stone, the French equivalent of the English Bath oölite. It is a cream-colored building-stone, of excellent quality, got near Caen in Normandy. Although soft in the quarry, it is of fine texture and hardens by exposure, so as to become extremely durable. Winchester and Canterbury cathedrals, Henry VII.'s chapel at Westminster, and many churches are built of it. It is still frequently used in England.—Cambay stones. See carnelian.—Centurial stones. See centurial.—Ceylon stone, a dark-green, brown, or black spinel from Ceylon, also called ceylonite: the name is also given to other minerals or gems from Ceylon.—Channel-stone. See channel[1].—Charnwood Forest stone, an oilstone found only in Charnwood Forest in Leicestershire, England. It is one of the best substitutes for the Turkey oilstone, and is much used to give a fine edge to knives and other tools.—Cornish stone. Same as china-stone, 2.

Cornish stone is used for almost all English wares, both in the body and the glaze. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., p. 1560.

Crab's stones. Same as crab's eyes (which see, under crab[1]). See also crabstone.—Crape stone, a trade-name for onyx of which the surface is cut in imitation of crape and colored a lusterless black. A similar article is made from artificial silicious compounds cast in molds.—Cut stone, hewn stone, or work in hewn stone; ashlar.—Deaf as a stone. See deaf.—Dimension stone, ashlar.—Drafted stone, ashlar stone having a chisel-draft around the face, the part inside the draft being left rough.—Heraclean stone. See Heraclean.—Hewn stone, blocks of stone with faces dressed to shape by the hammer.—Holy stone, a stone used in magical rites, whether as a magic mirror or show-stone, or as a sort of amulet.—Infernal, ledger, lithographic, Lydian stone. See the adjectives.—Maltese stone, a limestone of a delicate brown cream-color, very compact, and almost as soft as chalk. The natives of the island of Malta turn and carve it into various ornamental objects.—Memorial, meteoric, Moabite stone. See the adjectives.—Mocha stone [formerly also Moco stone; also Mocha-pebble; so called from Mocha in Arabia, where the stone is plentiful], a variety of dendritic agate, containing dark outlines of arborization, like vegetable filaments, due to the presence of metallic oxids, as of manganese and iron; moss-agate.—Philosopher's stone. See elixir, 1.—Portland stone, in England, a rock belonging to the Portlandian series: so named from the Isle of Portland, where it is typically developed. The Portlandian is a part of the Jurassic series, and lies between the Purbeckian, the highest member of that series, and the Kimmeridgian. The Portland group, or Portlandian, consists of two divisions, the Portland stone and the Portland sand; the former has several subdivisions, to which local names are attached, such as curf, base-bed, and whit-bed. The Portland stone, which is a nearly pure carbonate of lime, is an important building-stone in England, and was extensively used by Inigo Jones and Sir Christopher Wren, in important public buildings, especially in St. Paul's Cathedral.—Precious stone. See precious.—Protean stone. See Protean.—Quarry-faced stone, cut stone of which the face is left rough as it comes from the quarry, as distinguished from tooled, hammer-faced, pitch-faced stone, etc.—Rocking stone. See rock[2].—Rosetta stone, a stele or tablet of black basalt, found in 1799 near Rosetta, a town of Egypt, on the delta of the Nile, by M. Boussard, a French officer of engineers. This stone bears a trilingual inscription, a decree of Ptolemy V. (Epiphanes) in Greek and Egyptian hieroglyphic and demotic. The inscription was deciphered chiefly by Champollion, and afforded the key to the interpretation of Egyptian hieroglyphics. The monument is now in the British Museum.—Rough-pointed stone. See rough[1].—Rubbed stone, stonework of which the surface is cut straight with the stone-saw, and afterward smoothed by rubbing with grit or sandstone.—Samian stone. See Samian.—Saracen's or Sarsen's stone. See Saracen.—Scotch stone. Same as Ayr stone.—Shipman's stone†. See shipman.—Sonorous stone. See sonorous.—Standing stone. See standing.—Stick and stone. See stick[3].—Stone cancer. Same as scirrhous cancer (which see, under scirrhous).—Stone of the second class. See elixir, 1.—Stones of sulphur. See sulphur.—To leave no stone unturned, to do everything that can be done; use all practicable means to effect an object; spare no exertions.

New crimes invented, left unturn'd no stone
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own.
Dryden, Æneid, ii. 133.

To mark with a white stone, to mark as particularly fortunate, favored, or esteemed. The phrase arose from the custom among the Romans of marking their lucky days on the calendar with a white stone (as a piece of chalk), while unlucky days were marked with charcoal. Brewer.

=Syn. 1 and 2. See rock[1].

II. a. 1. Made of stone: as, a stone house; a stone wall.

The lion on your old stone gates
Is not more cold to you than I.
Tennyson, Lady Clara Vere de Vere.

2. Made of stoneware: as, a stone jar; a stone mug.

Now mistress Gilpin (careful soul!)
Had two stone bottles found,
To hold the liquor that she loved,
And keep it safe and sound.
Cowper, John Gilpin.

Stone age. See archæological ages, under age.—Stone ax, an ax-head or hatchet-head made of hard stone. Such axes are found, belonging to prehistoric epochs, and have also been in use down to the present time among savage tribes in different parts of the world. Compare stone-ax.—Stone brick. See brick[2].—Stone jug. See jug[1], 2.—Stone ocher. See ocher.

stone (stōn), v. t.; pret. and pp. stoned, ppr. stoning. [< ME. stonen, stanen (in earlier use stenen, whence mod. E. dial. steen[1]), < AS. stǣnan = OHG. steinōn, MHG. steinen = Sw. stena = Dan. stene = Goth. stainjan (cf. D. steenigen = G. steinigen), pelt with stones, stone; from the noun.] 1. To throw stones at; pelt with stones.

With atones men shulde hir stryke and stone hir to deth.
Piers Plowman (B), xii. 77.

Francis himself was stoned to death.
R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., xv.

2. To make like stone; harden. [Rare.]

O perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart.
Shak., Othello, v. 2. 63.

3. To free from stones, as fruit.

She picked from Polly's very hand the raisins which the good woman was stoning for the most awfully sacred election cake. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 270.

4. To provide or fit with stones, as by lining, walling, or facing: as, to stone a well or a road. —5. In leather-manuf., to work (the leather) with a stock-stone to reduce it to uniform thickness, stretch it, and make it smooth-grained.

stone-ax (stōn'aks), n. [< ME. stonax*, < AS. stānæx, < stān, stone, + æx, ax.] An ax or a hammer with two somewhat obtuse edges, used in hewing stone.

stone-basil (stōn'baz'il), n. Same as basil-weed.

stone-bass (stōn'bas), n. A fish of the family Serranidæ, Polyprion cernium, or another of the same genus. It is distinguished by the development of a strong longitudinal bony ridge on the operculum, and the serration of the spines of the anal and ventral fins. It inhabits moderately deep water in the Mediterranean and neighboring Atlantic. (Also called wreck-fish and cernier.) The corresponding stone-bass of Pacific waters is a very similar though distinct species, P. oxygenius (originally oxygeneios). See Polyprion.

Stone-bass (Polyprion cernium).

stone-bird (stōn'bėrd), n. 1. The vinous grosbeak, or moro.—2. The stone-snipe, or greater yellowlegs. See cut under yellowlegs.

stone-biter (stōn'bī'tėr), n. The common wolf-fish. See cut under Anarrhichas.

stone-blind (stōn'blīnd'), a. [= Icel. steinblindr = Sw. Dan. sten-blind; as stone + blind.] Blind as a stone; wholly blind, either literally or figuratively.

I thought I saw everything, and was stone-blind all the while. George Eliot, Mr. Gilfil, xviii.

stone-blue (stōn'blū), n. A compound of indigo and starch or whiting.

stone-boat (stōn'bōt), n. A drag or sled without runners, used for moving stones; also, a wagon-platform hung below the axles, used for the same purpose. [U. S.]

stonebock (stōn'bok), n. Same as steenbok.

stone-boilers (stōn'boi'lėrz), n. pl. A tribe or race of men who practise stone-boiling.

The Australians, at least in modern times, must be counted as stone-boilers.
E. B. Tylor, Early Hist. Mankind, ix.

stone-boiling (stōn'boi'ling), n. The act or process of making water boil by putting hot stones in it.

The art of boiling, as commonly known to us, may have been developed through this intermediate process, which I propose to call stone-boiling.
E. B. Tylor, Early Hist. Mankind, ix.

stone-borer (stōn'bōr'ėr), n. A mollusk that bores stones; a lithodomous, lithophagous, or saxicavous bivalve. See cuts under accessory, date-shell, Glycymeris, and piddock.

stone-bow (stōn'bō), n. [< ME. stonbowe; < stone + bow[2].] A weapon somewhat resembling a crossbow, for shooting stones; a catapult; also, a sort of toy.

O, for a stone-bow, to hit him in the eye!
Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 51.

Item, six stone bowes that shoot lead pellets.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 363.

Children will shortly take him for a wall,
And set their stone-bows in his forehead.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, v. 1.

stone-bramble (stōn'bram'bl), n. Same as roebuck-berry.

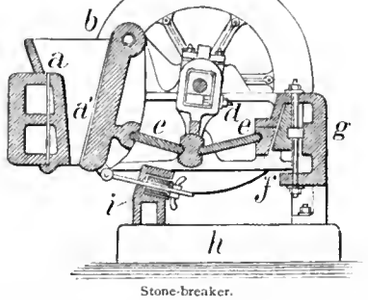
stone-brash (stōn'brash), n. In agri., a subsoil composed of shattered rock or stone.

stonebreak (stōn'brāk), n. The meadow-saxifrage, Saxifraga granulata: so called from the virtue, according to the doctrine of signatures, of its pebble-like bulbs against calculus. The name is also a general equivalent of saxifrage.

stone-breaker (stōn'brā'kėr), n. One who or that which breaks stones; specifically, a machine for pounding or crushing stone; an ore-mill; a stone-crusher.



Stone-breaker.

a, stationary jaw; a', oscillating jaw; b, hopper; c, fly-wheel; d, short pitman connecting crank-wrist with toggles; e, e, toggles; f, frame, strengthened at g, where the thrust of the toggles is received; h, base of machine; i, rubber spring which withdraws the lower end of the jaw a'.

stone-bruise (stōn'bröz), n. A bruise caused by a stone; especially, a painful and persistent bruise on the sole of the foot, commonly in the middle of the ball of the foot, due to walking barefooted; also, a bruise produced on the hand, as by ball-playing. [Local, U. S.]

stonebuck (stōn'buk), n. [< ME. stonbukke*, < AS. stānbueca, the ibex, < stān, stone, rock, + bueca, buck. In mod. use, tr. D. steenbok, G. steinboek: see steenbok.] The steenbok.

stone-butter (stōn'but'ėr), n. A sort of alum.

stone-canal (stōn'ka-nal'), n. In echinoderms, the duct leading from the madreporic plate to the circular canal: so called because it ordinarily has calcareous substances in its walls. Also sand-canal. Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 220.

stone-cast (stōn'kast), n. The distance which a stone may be thrown by the hand; a stone's cast; a stone's throw.

About a stone-cast from the wall
A sluice with blacken'd waters slept.
Tennyson, Mariana.

stonecat (stōn'kat), n. A catfish of the genus Noturus, as N. flavus, common in many parts of the United States. N. flavus is one of the largest, sometimes exceeding a foot in length. N. insignis is another, nearly as large, found in the Middle and Southern States. There are several more, a few inches long, all of fresh waters of the same country.

Stonecat (Noturus flavus).

stone-centiped (stōn'sen″ti-ped), n. A centiped of the family Lithobiidæ.

stonechacker (stōn'chak″ėr), n. Same as stonechat.

stonechat (stōn'chat), n. One of several different Old World chats, belonging to the genera Saxicola and (especially) Pratincola; a kind of bushchat: applied to three different English birds, and extended, as a book-name, to several others of the above genera. (a) Improperly, the wheatear, Saxicola œnanthe, and some other species of the restricted genus Saxicola. See cut under wheatear. [In this sense chiefly Scotch and American, the wheatear being the only bird of the kind which straggles to America.] (b) Improperly, the whin-bushchat or whinchat, Pratincola rubetra. [Eng.] (c) The black-headed bushchat, Pratincola rubicola, a common bird of Great Britain and other parts of Europe. The true stonechat is about 5 inches long, the wing 2½, the tail scarcely 2. The male in full plumage has the head and most of the back black, the feathers of the back mostly edged with sandy brown; the upper tail-coverts white, varied with black and brown; the wings and tail blackish-brown, the former with a large white area on the coverts and inner secondaries; the sides of the neck and breast white; the rest of the under parts rufous-brown; the bill and feet black; and the eyes brown. It nests on the ground, and lays four to six bluish-green eggs clouded and spotted with reddish-brown. Also called chickstone, stonechacker, stonechatter, stoneclink, stonesmich, stonesmitch, or stonesnickle, and stonesmith.

Stonechat (Pratincola rubicola), in a usual plumage.

The Stonechat closely resembles the Whinchat, . . . a circumstance which has caused much confusion; . . . for in almost all parts of England the Whinchat, by far the commonest species, popularly does duty for the Stonechat, and in many parts of Scotland the Wheatear is universally known by that name. Seebohm, Hist. Brit. Birds, I. 317.

stonechatter (stōn'chat″ėr), n. Same as stonechat.

stone-climber (stōn'klī″mėr), n. The dobson or hellgrammite. See cut under sprawler. [Local, U. S.]

stoneclink (stōn'klingk), n. Same as stonechat.

stone-clover (stōn'klō″vėr), n. The rabbit-foot or hare's-foot clover, Trifolium arvense, a low slender branching species with very silky heads, thence also called puss-clover. It is an Old World plant naturalized in America.

stone-coal (stōn'kōl), n. [= G. steinkohle; as stone + coal.] Mineral coal, or coal dug from the earth, as distinguished from charcoal: generally applied in England to any particularly hard variety of coal, and especially to that called in the United States anthracite. See coal.

stone-cold (stōu'kōld'), a. Cold as a stone. Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, iv. 4.

stone-color (stōn'kul″or), n. The color of stone; a grayish color.

stone-colored (stōn'kul″ord), a. Of the usual color of a large mass of stone, a cold bluish gray.

stone-coral (stōn'kor″al), n. Massive coral, as distinguished from branching coral, or tree-coral; hard, sclerodermatous or lithocoralline coral, as distinguished from sclerobasic coral. Most corals are of this character, and are hexacoralline (not, however, the red coral of commerce, which is related to the sea-fans and other octocorallines).

stonecrab (stōn'krab), n. 1. Any crab of the family Homolidæ.—2. A European crab, Lithodes maia.—3. A large, stout, edible crab of the Atlantic coast of the United States, Menippe Stonecrab (Menippe mercenaria).

mercenaria.—4. The dobson or hellgrammite. See cut under sprawler. [Local, U. S.]

stone-crawfish (stōn'krâ″fish), n. A crawfish of Europe, specified as Astacus torrentium, in distinction from the common crawfish of that country, A. fluviatilis.

stone-cray (stōn'krā), n. A distemper in hawks. Imp. Dict.

stone-cricket (stōn'krik″et), n. One of the wingless forms of the orthopterous family Locustidæ, living under or among stones and in dark places, and popularly confounded with true crickets (which belong to the orthopterous family Gryllidæ or Achetidæ). There are many species, of various parts of the world, some simply called crickets, and others cave-crickets. The commonest American stone-crickets belong to the genus Ceuthophilus, as C. maculatus, etc. See cave-cricket, and cut under Hadenœcus.

stonecrop (stōn'krop), n. [< ME. stoncrop, < AS. stāncrop, stonecrop, < stān, stone, + crop, the top or head of a plant, a sprout, a bunch or cluster of flowers: see stone and crop.] The wall-pepper, Sedum acre: so called as frequently growing upon walls and rocks. It is native throughout Europe and Asiatic Russia, and somewhat employed in ornamental gardening; in America called moss, mossy stonecrop, etc., from its creeping and matting stems beset with small sessile leaves. The flowers are bright-yellow in small terminal cymes. The name is also extended to other species of similar habit, especially S. ternatum, and not seldom to the whole genus.—Ditch-stonecrop, a plant of the genus Penthorum, chiefly the American P. sedoides, a weed-like plant with yellowish-green flowers, common in ditches and wet places.—Great stonecrop, an old designation of the kidneywort, Cotyledon Umbilicus, also of Sedum album.—Mossy stonecrop. See def.

stone-crush (stōn'krush), n. A sore on the foot caused by a bruise from a stone. [Local.]

stone-crusher (stōn'krush″ėr), n. A mill or machine for crushing or grinding stone or ores for use on roads, etc.; an ore-crusher; an ore-mill; a stone-breaker (which see).

stone-curlew (stōn'kėr″lū), n. 1. The stone-plover or thick-knee, Œdicnemus crepitans. See cut under Œdicnemus.—2. The whimbrel, Numenius phæopus.—3. In the southern United States, the willet, Symphemia semipalmata: a misnomer. Audubon.

stone-cutter (stōn'kut″ėr), n. 1. One whose occupation it is to hew or cut stones for building, ornamental, or other purposes.—2. A machine for shaping or facing stones.

stone-cutting (stōn'kut″ing), n. The business of cutting or hewing stones for walls, monuments, etc.

stoned (stōnd), a. [< stone + *-ed*².] Having or containing stones, in any sense.

Of stoned fruits I have met with three good sorts: viz., Cherries, plums, and persimmons.
Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 12.

The way
Sharpe ston'd and thorny, where he pass'd of late.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. 3

stone-dead (stōn'ded'), a. [< ME. standeed, standed (= Sw. Dan. stendöd); < stone + dead.] Dead as a stone; lifeless.

The Geant was by Gaffray don bore,
So discomfite, standede, and all cold.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 3121.

He cannot be so stupid, or stone-dead.
B. Jonson, Volpone, i. 1.

stone-deaf (stōn'def'), a. Deaf as a stone; totally deaf.

stone-devil (stōn'dev″l), n. The dobson or hellgrammite. See cut under sprawler. [Virginia.]

stone-dresser (stōn'dres″ėr), n. 1. One who tools, smooths, and shapes stone for building purposes. Simmonds.—2. One of a variety of power-machines for dressing, polishing, and finishing marbles, slates, and other building-stones.

stone-dumb (stōn'dum'), a. Perfectly dumb. The Century, XXXV. 622. [Rare.]

stone-eater (stōn'ē″tėr), n. Same as stone-borer.

stone-engraving (stōn'en-grā″ving), n. The art of engraving on stone. See lithography, etching, gem-engraving.

stone-falcon (stōn'fâ″kn), n. See falcon, and cut under merlin.

stone-fern (stōn'fėrn), n. A European fern, Asplenium Ceterach: so called from its habit of growing on rocks and stone walls.

stone-fish (stōn'fish), n. The shanny. Parnell. [Local, Scotch.]

stone-fly (stōn'flī), n. A pseudoneuropterous insect of the family Perlidæ: so called because the larval forms abound under the stones of streams. (See cut under Perla.) P. bicaudata, whose larva is much used by anglers, is an example.

stone-fruit (stōn'frōt), n. [= D. steenvrucht = G. steinfrucht = Sw. stenfrukt = Dan. stenfrugt; as stone + fruit.] In bot., a drupe; a fruit whose seeds are covered with a hard shell enveloped in a pulp, as the peach, cherry, and plum. See drupe.

Bring with you the kernels of peares and apples, and the stones of such stonefruits as you shall find there.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 439.

stonegale (stōn'gāl), n. Same as staniel.

stone-gall¹ (stōn'gâl), n. [< stone + *gall*³.] A roundish mass of clay often occurring in variegated sandstone.

stone-gall² (stōn'gâl), n. Same as staniel.

stone-gatherer (stōn'gaᵀᴴ″ėr-ėr), n. A horse-machine for picking up loose stones from the ground. It consists of a receiving-box with a toothed wheel and a traveling apron, or a fork with curved teeth, and a lever for emptying it into the box when loaded.

stone-gray (stōn'grā), n. A dark somewhat brownish-gray color.

stone-grig (stōn'grig), n. The pride or mud-lamprey, Ammocœtes branchialis.

stone-hammer (stōn'ham″ėr), n. A hammer for breaking or rough-dressing stones.

stone-hard (stōn'härd), a. 1. Hard as a stone; unfeeling. Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4. 227.—2†. Firm; fast.

Steken the gates ston-harde wyth stalworth barrez.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 884.

stone-harmonicon (stōn'här-mon″i-kon), n. Same as lapideon and rock-harmonicon.

stone-hatch (stōn'hach), n. The ring-plover, Ægialites hiaticula: so called from nesting on shingle. See cut under Ægialites. Yarrell. [Prov. Eng.]

stone-hawk (stōn'hâk), n. Same as stone-falcon.

stone-head (stōn'hed), n. The bed-rock; the solid rock underlying the superficial detritus. [Eng.]

stone-hearted (stōn'här″ted), a. Same as stony-hearted.

Weepe, ye stone-hearted men! Oh, read and pittie!
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. 1.

stone-horse† (stōn'hôrs), n. The common stonecrop, Sedum acre; also, S. reflexum. Britten and Holland.

stone-horse (stōn'hôrs), n. A stallion. [Obsolete or provincial.]

My grandfathers great stone-hors, flinging up his head, and jerking out his left legge.
Marston, Antonio and Mellida, II., i. 3.

stone-leek (stōn'lēk), n. Same as cibol, 2.

stone-lichen (stōn'lī″ken), n. A lichen growing upon stones or rocks, as species of Parmelia, Umbilicaria, etc. See lichen.

stone-lily (stōn'lil″i), n. A fossil crinoid; a crinite or encrinite, of a form suggesting a lily on its stem. Also called lily-encrinite. A. Geikie, Geol. Sketches, i.

stone-liverwort† (stōn'liv″ėr-wėrt), n. The plant Marchantia polymorpha.

stone-lobster (stōn'lob″stėr), n. See lobster. [Local, U. S.]

stone-lugger (stōn'lug″ėr), n. 1. A catostomoid fish of the United States, Catostomus or Hypentelium nigricans; the hog-sucker or hog-molly. Also called stone-roller and stone-toter.—2. A cyprinoid fish of the United States, Campostoma anomalum, or some other member of that genus. It is 6 or 8 inches long; in the males in spring some of the parts become fiery-red, and the head and often the whole body is studded with large rounded tubercles. It is herbivorous, and abounds in deep still places in streams from New York to Mexico. Also stone-roller. See cut under Campostoma.

stoneman (stōn'man), n. [< stone + dial. man, a heap of stones, < W. maen, a stone. Cf. dol- men.] A pile of rocks roughly laid together, usually on a prominent mountain-peak or -ridge, and intended to serve either as a landmark or as a record of a visit; a cairn.

stone-marten (stōn'mär″ten), n. Same as beech-marten.

stone-mason (stōn'mā″sn), n. One who dresses stones for building, or builds with them; a builder in stone.

stone-merchant (stōn'mėr″chant), n. A dealer in stones, especially building- or paving-stones.

stone-mill (stōn'mil), n. 1. A machine for breaking or crushing stone; a stone-breaker; an ore-crusher. See cut under stone-breaker. —2. A stone-dresser. See stone-dresser, 2.

stone-mint (stōn'mint), n. The American dittany. See Cunila.

stone-mortar (stōn'môr″tär), n. A form of mortar used for throwing projectiles of irregular and varying form, such as stones.

stonen (stō'nen), a. [< ME. stonen, also stenen, < AS. stǣnen, of stone, < stān, stone: see stone and *-en*².] Consisting or made of stone. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

He forsothe areride a stonen signe of worshiþ.
Wyclif, Gen. xxxv. 14.

stone-oak (stōn'ōk), n. An oak, Quercus Javensis, found in Java and other islands: so named from its thick osseous nut, which is peculiar among aeorns in being ridged, with the cupule fitting into the furrows.

stone-oil (stōn'oil), n. Rock-oil or petroleum.

stone-owl (stōn'oul), n. The Acadian or sawwhet owl, Nyctala acadica, which sometimes hides in quarries or piles of rock. See cut under Nyctala. [Pennsylvania.]

stone-parsley (stōn'pärs″li), n. The plant Sison Amomum; also, Seseli Libanotis and other species of the genus Seseli. See Seseli.

stonepecker (stōn'pek″ėr), n. 1. The turnstone, Strepsilas interpres. See cut under turnstone. [Local, Great Britain.] —2. The purple sandpiper, Tringa maritima, a bird of similar resorts and habits. [Shetland Islands.]

stone-pine (stōn'pīn), n. See *pine*¹, also oil-tree, 5, and pignon, 1.

stone-pit (stōn'pit), n. A pit or quarry where stones are dug.

stone-pitch (stōn'pich), n. Hard inspissated pitch.

stone-plover (stōn'pluv″ėr), n. 1. The stone-curlew, thick-kneed plover, or thick-knee, a charadriomorphic or plover-like wading bird of the family Œdicnemidæ, Œdicnemus crepitans, a common bird of Europe. See cut under Œdicnemus.—2. Hence, one of various limicoline birds of the plover and snipe families. (a) The Swiss, gray, or bullhead plover, Squatarola helvetica. See cut under Squatarola. (b) The ring-plover, Ægialites hiaticula, or the dotterel, Eudromias morinellus; a stone-runner. See cuts under Ægialites and dotterel. (c) A shore-plover of the genus Esacus, as E. recurvirostris. (d) The bar-tailed godwit, Limosa lapponica. See cut under Limosa. (e) The whimbrel, Numenius phæopus.

stone-pock (stōn'pok), n. A hard pimple which suppurates; acne.

stone-priest† (stōn'prēst), n. A lascivious priest. Grim the Collier. (Davies.) stoner (stō'nėr), n. [< stone + *-er*¹.] One who or that which stones, in any sense of that word.

stone-rag (stōn'rag), n. A lichen, Parmelia saxatilis.

stone-raw (stōn'rà), n. 1. Same as stone-rag. —2. The turnstone, Strepsilas interpres. [Armagh, Ireland.]

stonern† (stō'nėrn), a. [Var. of stonen.] Consisting or made of stone. [Scotch.]

The West Port is of stonern work, and mair decorated with architecture and the policy of bigging.
Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, ii.

stone-roller (stōn'rō″lėr), n. Same as stone-lugger.

stone-root (stōn'röt), n. See horse-balm and heal-all.

stone-rue (stōn'rö), n. The fern Asplenium Ruta-muraria. [Eng.]

stone-runner (stōn'run″ėr), n. Same as stone-plover, 2 (b). [Prov. Eng.]

stone-saw (stōn'sâ), n. A tool or a sawing-machine for cutting marble, millstones, and building-stones into slabs, disks, columns, and blocks, either from the live rock in the quarry or in a stone-yard. The most simple form of machine is a flat blade of iron strained tight in a saw-frame, and reciprocated by means of suitable mechanism. The cutting is done by particles of sand continually supplied to the saw by means of a stream of water. Stone-saws of this type are usually arranged in gangs, the frame supporting a number of saws, and being suspended by chains over the block to be cut, the spaces between the blades regulating the thickness of the slabs. Circular saws have also been used to cut thin slabs of stone into narrow pieces by the agency of wet sand. An improvement on this method is the use of circular saws armed with black diamonds or carbon-points. The saw is placed in a frame resembling an iron-planer, the saw-arbor having a vertical motion; and the block of stone, dogged to a traversing table, is fed to the saw as the cut is made. Diamond stone-cutting machines have also been made in the form of reciprocating saws. In one new stone-sawing machine, called a channeling-machine, used to cut out large blocks and columns in a quarry, a circular saw having carbon-points is employed, the power being applied by means of gearing to the edge of the saw instead of at the arbor. Another form of quarrying stone-saw consists of an endless band of twisted wire rope passing in a horizontal direction over large pulleys, like a band-saw, and employing wet sand as the cutting-material.

stone's-cast (stōnz'kȧst), n. Same as stone-cast.

stoneseed (stōn'sēd), n. A plant of the genus Lithospermum, particularly the gromwell, L. officinale and L. arvense. The name, as also that of the genus, refers to the hardness of the seeds.

Stonesfield slate. See *slate*².

stone-shot (stōn'shot), n. The distance a stone can be thrown, either from a cannon or from a sling.

He show'd a tent
A stone-shot off. Tennyson, Princess, v.

stone-shower (stōn'shou″ėr), n. A fall of aërolites; a meteoric shower.

stonesmickle (stōn'smik″l), n. Same as stone-chat (c). Also stonesmich, stonesmitch, stone-smith.

stone-snipe (stōn'snīp), n. 1. The greater telltale, greater yellowshanks, or long-legged tattler, Totanus melanoleucus, a common North American bird of the family Scolopacidæ. The length is from 13 to 14 inches, the extent 24; the bill is 2 or more inches long, the tarsus 2½. The legs are chrome-yellow; the bill is greenish-black. The upper parts are dusky, speckled with whitish; the under parts are white, streaked on the jugulum, marked on the sides, flanks, and axillars with dusky bars and arrow-heads. The tail is barred with blackish and white. The stone-snipe inhabits North America at large, breeding in high latitudes, and is chiefly seen in the United States during the migrations and in winter. It is a noisy and restless denizen of marshes, bays, and estuaries. See cut under yellowlegs.
2. Same as stone-plover, 1. Encyc. Dict.

stone-sponge (stōn'spunj), n. A lithistidan sponge: so called from the hardness. See Lithistida.

stone-squarer (stōn'skwâr″ėr), n. One who forms stones into square shapes; a stone-cutter.

And Solomon's builders and Hiram's builders did hew them, and the stonesquarers [the Gebalites, R. V.].
1 Ki. v. 18.

stone-still (stōn'stil′), a. [< ME. ston-stille; < stone + *still*¹.] Still as a stone; absolutely motionless, silent, etc. Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 242.

stone-sturgeon (stōn'stėr″jon), n. Same as lake-sturgeon.

stone-sucker (stōn'suk″ėr), n. The lamprey; a petromyzont. [Local, Eng.]

stone-thrush (stōn'thrush), n. The mistle-thrush. [Prov. Eng.]

stone-toter (stōn'tō″tėr), n. 1. Same as stone-lugger, 1. Also toter.—2. A cyprinoid fish, Exoglossum maxillingua: a cut-lips. [Local, U. S., in both senses.]

stone-walling (stōn'wâ″ling), n. 1. The process of walling with stone; hence, walls built of stone. Encyc. Brit., II. x. 388.—2. Parliamentary obstruction by talking against time, raising technical objections, etc. [Australia.]

He is great at stone-walling tactics, and can talk against time by the hour.
Mrs. Campbell Praed, The Head Station, p. 35.

stoneware (stōn'wâr), n. Potters' ware made from clay of very silicious nature, or a composition of clay and flint. The clay is beaten in water and purified, and the flint is calcined, ground, and suspended in water, and then mixed (in various proportions for various wares) with the clay. The mixture is then dried in a kiln until it is sufficiently solid to be kneaded, and is then beaten and tempered before being molded into shape. When fired it is not porous, like common pottery, but vitrified through its whole substance in consequence of the great amount of silex contained in the prepared clay. Vessels of stoneware are generally glazed by means of common salt. The salt, being thrown into the furnace, is volatilized by heat, becomes attached to the surface of the ware, and is decomposed, the muriatic acid flying off and leaving the soda behind it to form a fine thin glaze on the ware, which resists ordinary acids. The old German stoneware had often a vitreous glaze. See grès de Flandres, under grès, and Cologne ware, under *ware*².

stoneweed (stōn'wēd), n. 1. Same as stone-seed.—2. The doorweed, Polygonum aviculare. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

stonework (stōn'wėrk), n. Work consisting of stone; masons' work of stone.—Broken-range stonework. See range, n.—Crandalled stonework. See crandall.—Random, range, etc., stonework. See the qualifying words.

stone-works (stōn'wėrks), n. sing. and pl. 1. A stone-cutting establishment.—2. An establishment for the making of stoneware. Jewitt.

stonewort (stōn'wėrt), n. [< stone + *wort*¹.] 1. A plant of the genus Chara: so called from the calcareous deposits which frequently occur on the stems.—2. Sometimes, the stone-parsley, Sison Amomum.

stone-yard (stōn'yärd), n. A yard or inclosure in which stone-cutters are employed.

stong (stong), n. [A var. of *stang*¹.] An instrument with which eels are commonly taken. Richardson. [Lincolnshire, Eng.]

stonify† (stō'ni-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. stonified, ppr. stonifying. [< stone + -i-fy.] To make stony; petrify. [Rare.]

Wilkes of stone, a shell-fish stonified.
Holland's Camden, p. 365, margin. (Davies.)

stonily (stō'ni-li), adv. In a stony manner; stiffly; harshly; frigidly.

stoniness (stō'ni-nes), n. The quality of being stony: as, the stoniness of ground or of fruit; stoniness of heart.

stonish¹† (stō'nish), a. [< stone + *-ish*¹.] Stony. Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

stonish²† (ston'ish), v. t. [An aphetic form of astonish. Cf. *stony*².] Same as astonish. Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 825.

stonishment† (ston'ish-ment), n. Same as astonishment. Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 19.

stont†. A Middle English form of stant, stent, contraction of standeth, present indicative third person singular of stand.

stony¹ (stō'ni), a. [< ME. stony, stany, < AS. stǣnig (= OHG. MHG. steinag, G. steinig = Sw. stenig), stony, < stān, stone: see stone. Cf. AS. staniht = G. steinicht = Dan. stenet, stony.] 1. Containing stones; abounding in stone.—2. Made of stone; consisting of stone; rocky.

And some fell on stony [the rocky, R. V.] ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth. Mark iv. 5.

With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these walls;
For stony limits cannot hold love out.
Shak., R. and J., ii. 2. 67.

3. Hard like stone, but not made of stone; stone-like.

The cocoa-nut with its stony shell.
Whittier, The Palm-Tree.

Specifically, in anat. and zoöl., very hard, like a stone; hard as a rock. (a) Sclerodermic or madreporarian, as corals. (b) Lithistidan, as sponges. (c) Especially thick and hard, as some opercula of shells. See sea-bean, 3. (d) Petrous or petrosal, as bone. (e) Otolithic, as concretions in the ear. See ear-bone, ear-stone, otolith. (f) Turned to stone; petrified, as a fossil.

4. Pertaining to or characteristic of stone: as, a stony quality or consistency.

Chattering stony names
Of shale and hornblende, rag and trap and tuff.
Tennyson, Princess, iii.

5. Rigid; fixed; hard, especially in a moral sense; hardened; obdurate.

Thou knowest that all these things do little or nothing move my mind — my heart, O Lord, is so stony.
J. Bradford, Works (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 257.

6. Painfully hard and cold; chilling; frigid; freezing.

The stony feare
Ran to his hart, and all his sence dismayd.
Spenser, F. Q., II. viii. 46.

Out of my stony griefs Bethel I'll raise.
Sarah F. Adams, Nearer, my God, to Thee.

He . . .
Gorgonised me from head to foot
With a stony British stare.
Tennyson, Maud, xiii.

Stony cataract, a cataract with great hardening of the lens.

stony²†, v. [< ME. stonyen, stonien; cf. *astony, stun*¹, *stound*³, and aston.] I. trans. 1. To stun.

He was stonyed of the stroke that he myght not stonde on his feet ne meve no membre that he hadde.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 265.

2. To astonish; confound.

Sothely thise wordes when I here thaym or redis tham stonyes me. Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 43.

II. intrans. To be or become stunned or astounded.

By land and sea, so well he him acquitte,
To speake of him I stony in my witte.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 296.

stony-hearted (stō'ni-här″ted), a. Hard-hearted; unfeeling; obdurate. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 2. 28.

stood (stůd). Preterit and past participle of stand.

stook (stůk), n. [Also dial. stouk; prob. < MLG. stūke, LG. stuke, a heap or bundle, as of flax or turf, = G. stauche, a bundle, as of flax; cf. MD. styck, a chest, hamper.] A shock of corn, consisting, when of full size, of twelve sheaves. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

But stooks are cowpet wi' the blast.
Burns, Third Epistle to J. Lapraik.

Stook, twelve sheaves of corn stuck upright, their upper ends inclining towards each other like a high pitched roof. Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests (E. E. T. S.), [Notes, p. 79.

stook (stůk), v. [< stook, n.] I. trans. To set up, as sheaves of grain, in stooks or shocks. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Still shearing, and clearing,
The tither stooked raw [row].
Burns, To the Guidwife of Wauchope House.

II. intrans. To set up grain in stooks.

Those that binde and stooke are likewise to have 8*d.* a day, for bindinge and stookinge of winter corne is a man's labor. Best's Farming Book (1641), p. 43. (E. Peacock.) stooker (stůk'ėr), n. [< stook + -er[1].] One who sets up sheaves in stooks or shocks in the harvest-field. J. Wilson.

stool (stōl), n. [< ME. stool, stole, stol, < AS. stōl = OS. stōl = OFries. stōl = D. stoel = MLG. stōl, LG. stol = OHG. stuol, stual, stōl, MHG. stuol, G. stuhl = Icel. stōll = Sw. Dan. stol = Goth. stōls, a seat, chair; cf. OBulg. stolŭ = Russ. stolŭ = Lith. stalas, a table, = Gr. στήλη, an upright slab (see stele[3]); from the root of stall, stell, ult. from the root of stand: see stall[1], stell, stand.] 1. A seat or chair; now, in particular, a seat, whether high or low, consisting of a piece of wood mounted usually on three or four legs, and without a back, intended for one person; also, any support of like construction used as a rest for the feet, or for the knees when kneeling.

I may nougte stende ne stoupe ne with-oute a stole knele.
Piers Plowman (B), v. 394.

By sitting on the stage, you may . . . have a good stool for sixpence. Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 141.

Oh! who would cast and balance at a desk,
Perch'd like a crow upon a three-legg'd stool?
Tennyson, Audley Court.

2†. The seat of a bishop; a see.

This bispryche [Salisbury] was hwylen two bispriche; thee other stol was at Remmesbury, . . . the other at Schireburne. Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 145.

3. Same as ducking-stool.

I'll speed me to the pond, where the high stool
On the long plank hangs o'er the muddy pool,
That stool, the dread of every scolding quean,
Yet sure, a lover should not die so mean.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Wednesday, l. 107.

4. The seat used in easing the bowels; hence, a fecal evacuation; a discharge from the bowels.—5†. A frame for tapestry-work.

This woful lady lerned had in youthe
So that she werken and enbrouden couthe,
And weven in hir stole the radevore
As hit of women hath be woned yore.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2352.

6. The root or stump of a timber-tree, or of a bush, cane, grass, etc., which throws up shoots; also, the cluster of shoots thus produced.

What is become of the remains of these ancient vineyards, as vines shoot strongly from the stool, and are not easily eradicated? Archæologia, III. 91. (Davies.)

The male prisoners, who were besom-makers, had been seen cutting sticks in Sweethope Dene . . . a few days before, and these sticks, having been compared with some stools in that secluded wood from which cuttings had been made, were found to correspond.
North-Country Lore and Legend, II. 254.

7. The mother plant from which young plants are propagated by the process of layering. Lindley.—8. Naut.: (a) A small channel in the side of a vessel for the deadeyes of the backstays. (b†) An ornamental block placed over the stem to support a poop-lantern.—9. A movable pole or perch to which a pigeon is fastened as a lure or decoy for wild birds. See the extract under stool-pigeon, 1. Hence—10. A stool-pigeon; also, a decoy-duck.

The decoys, or stools, as they are called, are always set to windward of the blind. . . . The stools should be set in a crescent-shaped circle [about fifty of them] with the heads of the decoys pointing to the wind. Shore Birds, p. 44.

11. Material spread on the bottom for oyster-spat to cling to; set, either natural or artificial. See cultch.—Back-stool, a kind of low easy-chair.—Folding stool. See fold[1].—Office stool, a high stool made for use by persons writing at a high desk, such as are used by bookkeepers and clerks.—Stool of a window, or window-stool, in arch., the flat piece on which the sash shuts down, corresponding to the sill of a door.—Stool of repentance, in Scotland, an elevated seat in a church on which persons were formerly made to sit to receive public rebuke as a punishment for fornication or adultery. Compare cutty-stool.

What! d'ye think the lads wi' the kilts will care for yer synods, and yer presbyteries, and yer buttock-mail, and yer stool o' repentance? Scott, Waverley, xxx.

To fall between two stools, to lose, or be disappointed in, both of two things between which one is hesitating.

No one would have thought that . . . Lily was aware . . . that she was like to fall to the ground between two stools—having two lovers, neither of whom could serve her turn. Trollope, Last Chronicle of Barset, xxxv.

(See also camp-stool, footstool, night-stool, piano-stool.)

stool (stōl), v. [< stool, n.] I. intrans. 1. To throw up shoots from the root, as a grass or a grain-plant; form a stool. See stool, n., 6.

I worked very hard in the copse of young ash with my bill-hook and a shearing knife, cutting out the saplings where they stooled too close together.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xxxviii.

2. To decoy duck or other fowl by means of stools. [U. S.]

For wet stooling, the wooden ones [decoys] are preferable, as the tin ones soon rust and become worthless.
Shore Birds, p. 45.

3. To be decoyed; respond to a decoy. [U. S.]

They [widgeons] stool well to any shoal-water duck decoys, and answer their call. Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 206.

4. To evacuate the bowels.

II. trans. To plow; cultivate. [Prov. Eng.]—To stool turfs, to set turfs two and two, one against the other, to be dried by the wind. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stool-ball (stōl'bâl), n. An outdoor game of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, generally played by women alone, but sometimes in company with men. See second quotation.

Daugh. Will you go with me?
Wooer. What shall we do there, wench?
Daugh. Why, play at stool-ball.
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 2.

Stool-Ball. This game, so often mentioned in old writers, is still played in almost every village in Sussex, and is for ladies and girls exactly what cricket is to men. Two pieces of board 18 inches by 12 are fixed to two sticks from 3 to 4 feet high, according to the age of the players. These sticks are stuck in the ground sloping a little backwards, and from 10 to 15 yards apart. The players take sides, generally eight to ten each. . . . The bowler pitches the ball at the board, which in fact is the wicket. If he hits it the player is out. The same is the case if the ball is caught; and the running out, stumping, &c., are exactly like cricket. N. and Q., 3d ser., XI. 457.

stool-end (stōl'end), n. In mining, a part of rock left unworked for the purpose of supporting the rest.

stool-pigeon (stōl'pij″on), n. 1. A pigeon fastened to a stool, and used as a decoy.

The Stool-Pigeon, also, as familiar to English ears as to ours, exists here—and even in the Eastern States—still in both its primary signification and its figurative extension. In the former it means the pigeon, with its eyes stitched up, fastened on a stool, which can be moved up and down by the hidden fowler, an action which causes the bird to flutter anxiously. This attracts the passing flocks of wild pigeons, which alight and are caught by a net, which may be sprung over them.
De Vere, Americanisms, p. 210.

Hence—2. A person employed as a decoy: as, a stool-pigeon for a gambling-house: such a fellow is generally a "rook" who pretends to be a "pigeon." See pigeon, 2, and rook[1], 3.

stoom (stōm), n. and v. Same as stum.

stoop[1] (stōp), v. [Formerly and still dial. stoup; < ME. stoupen, stowpen, stupen, < AS. stūpian = MD. stuypen = Icel. stūpa (very rare), stoop, = Norw. stupa, fall, drop, = Sw. stupa, dial. stjupa, fall, drop, tr. lower, incline, tilt; akin to steep[1]: see steep[1], and cf. steep[2]. The reg. mod. form from AS. stūpian is stoup (pron. stoup), as in dialectal use. The retention of or reversion to the orig. AS. vowel-sound ō occurs also in room (< AS. rūm) (and in wound (as pron. wönd), < AS. wund).] I. intrans. 1. To bend; bow; incline; especially, of persons, to lower the body by bending forward and downward.

He hit on his helme with a heuy sword,
That greuit hym full gretly, gert hym to stoupe.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7256.

The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 1028.

How sweetly does this fellow take his dowst!
Stoops like a camel!
Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, iv. 1.

2. To be bent or inclined from the perpendicular; specifically, to carry the head and shoulders habitually bowed forward from the upright line of the rest of the body.

A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white. Shak., Hen. V., v. 2. 168.

Tall trees stooping or soaring in the most picturesque variety. George Eliot, Felix Holt, xxiii.

3. To come down; descend.

The cloud may stoop from heaven and take the shape,
With fold to fold, of mountain or of cape.
Tennyson, Princess, vi. (song).

4. Specifically, to swoop upon prey or quarry, as a hawk; pounce.

As I am a gentleman,
I'll meet next cocking, and bring a haggard with me
That stoops as free as lightning.
Tomkis (?), Albumazar, iii. 5.

Here stands my dove; stoop at her if you dare.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, v. 3.

5. To condescend; deign: especially expressing a lowering of the moral self, and generally followed by an infinitive or the preposition to.

Is Religion a beggarly and contemptible thing, that it doth not become the greatness of your minds to stoop to take any notice of it? Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. v.

Frederic, indeed, stooped for a time even to use the language of adulation. Macaulay, Frederic the Great.

6. To yield; submit; succumb.

Thus hath the Field and the Church stouped to Mahomet.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 242.

I will make thee stoop, thou abject.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, v. 3.

II. trans. 1. To bend downward; bow.

Myself . . .
Have stoop'd my neck under your injuries.
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 1. 19.

She stooped her by the rnnnel's side.
Scott, Marmion, vi. 30.

2. To incline; tilt: as, to stoop a cask. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—3. To bring or take down; lower, as a flag or a sail.

Nor, with that Consul join'd, Vespasian could prevail
In thirty several fights, nor make them stoop their sail.
Drayton, Polyolbion, viii. 212.

4. To put down; abase; submit; subject.

I will stoop and humble my intents
To your well-practised wise directions.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 2. 120.

5. To cast down; prostrate; overthrow; overcome.

You have found my spirit; try it now, and teach me
To stoop whole kingdoms.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, i. 1.

6†. To swoop or pounce down upon.

The hawk that first stooped my pheasant is killed by the spaniel that first sprang all of our side.
Webster and Dekker, Northward Hoe, v. 1.

7. To steep; macerate. [Prov. Eng.]

stoop[1] (stōp), n. [< stoop[1], v.] 1. The act of stooping or bending down; hence, a habitual bend of the back or shoulders: as, to walk with a stoop.

Now observe the stoops,
The bendings, and the falls.
B. Jonson, Sejanus, i. 1.

His clumsy figure, which a great stoop in his shoulders, and a ludicrous habit he had of thrusting his head forward, by no means redeemed.
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ii.

2. The darting down of a bird on its prey; a swoop; a pounce.

Once a kite, hovering over the garden, made a stoop at me. Swift, Gulliver's Travels, ii. 5.

Hence—3†. That which stoops or swoops; a hawk. [Rare.]

You glorious martyrs, you illustrious stoops,
That once were cloister'd in your fleshly coops.
Quarles, Emblems, v. 10.

4. A descent from superiority, dignity, or power; a condescension, concession, or submission: as, a politic stoop.

Can any loyal subject see
With patience such a stoop from sovereignty?
Dryden.

To give the stoop†, to stoop; submit; yield.

O that a king should give the stoop to such as these.
Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, ii. 186. (Davies.)

stoop[2], stoup[2] (stōp, stoup), n. [< ME. stop, stope, appar. a var. (due to confusion with the related ME. stoppe, < AS. stoppa: see stop[2]) of stepe*, steap*, < AS. steáp, a cup, = MD. stoop, a cup, vessel, D. stoop, a measure of about two quarts, = MLG. stōp, a cup, vessel, also a measure, LG. stoop, a measure, = OHG. stouf, stoph, MHG. stouf, G. stauf, a cup, = Icel. staup, a cup, = Sw. stop (< D. or LG.), a measure of about three pints; also in dim. form, MHG. stubechin, G. stübchen, a gallon, measure; prob. ult. identical with Icel. staup, a lump (orig. meaning something cast), hence a vessel of metal, etc., from the verb represented by Icel. steypa = Sw. stöpa = Dan. stöbe, cast (metals), pour out (liquids), E. steep: see steep[2]. The spelling stoup is partly Sc., and in the Sc. pron. stoup is prob. of Icel. origin.] 1. A drinking-vessel; a beaker; a flagon; a tankard; a pitcher.

Feteh me a stoupe of liquor.
Shak. (folio 1623), Hamlet, v. 1. 68.

Hence—2. Liquor for drinking, especially wine, considered as the contents of a stoop: as, he tossed off his stoop.

He took his rouse with stoups of Rhenish wine.
Marlowe, Doctor Faustus, [iii. 4.

3. A basin for holy water, usually placed in a niche or against the wall or a pillar at the entrance of Roman Catholic churches: also used in private houses. In the Greek Church it is called a colymbion or hagiasmateron. In this sense usually written stoup. Sometimes also called by the French name bénitier, and formerly holy-water stock, holy-water stone.

Holy-water Stoup.—Church of San Miniato, Florence.

stoop[3] (stöp), n. [Derived from D. usage in New York; < D. stoep, a stoop (een hooge stoep, a high stoop), MD. stoepe, a stoop, a bench at the door, = OS. stōpo = OHG. stuofa, MHG. stuofe, G. stufe, a step, guide; a doublet of stope, lit. a step, and from the root of step (AS. stapan, steppan, pret. stōp): see step.] An uncovered platform before the entrance of a house, raised, and approached by means of steps. Sometimes incorrectly used for porch or veranda. [U. S.; originally New York.]

Stoop.—Van Rensselaer House, at Greenbush, New York.

Nearly all the houses [in Albany] were built with their gables to the street, and each had heavy wooden Dutch stoops with seats at its door. J. F. Cooper, Satanstoe, xi.

They found him [Stuyvesant], according to custom, smoking his afternoon pipe on the stoop, or bench at the porch of his house. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 297.

stoop[4] (stöp), n. [Also stoup; a var. of stulp.]

1†. The stock or stem, as of a tree; the stump.

It may be known, hard by an ancient stoop,
Where grew an oak in elder days, decay'd.
Tancred and Gismunda, iv. 2.

2. A post or pillar; specifically, an upright post used to mark distance, etc., on a race-course.

Stoulpe, before a doore, souche. Palsgrave.

Carts or waines are debarred and letted [by coaches]: the milk-maid's ware is often spilt in the dirt, . . . being crowded and shrowded up against stalls and stoopes.
John Taylor, Works, ii. 242. (Bartlett.)

And 'twere well to have a flag at the ending stoup of each heat to be let down as soon as the first horse is past the stoup. Quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 421.

3. An upright support; a prop or column; specifically, in coal-mining, a pillar of coal left to support the roof.—4. Figuratively, a sustainer; a patron.

Dalhousie, of an auld descent,
My chief, my stoup, and ornament.
Ramsay, Poems, II. 367. (Jamieson.)

[Prov. Eng. and Scotch in all uses.]

Stoop and room, a method of mining coal in use in Scotland, differing but little from the pillar and breast method. See pillar.—Stoop and roop. [Also stoup and roup; a riming formula, of which the literal or original meaning is not obvious; explained by Jamieson as for stump and rump.] The whole of everything; every jot: often used adverbially.

"But the stocking, Hobbie?" said John Elliot; "we're utterly ruined. . . . We are ruined stoop and roop."
Scott, Black Dwarf, x.

Stoop and thirl. Same as stoop and room. N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 264.

stooped (stö'ped or stöpt), a. [< stoop[1] + -ed[2].] Having a stoop in posture or carriage; round-shouldered; bent.

The college witticism that "——— and ———" (another highly esteemed university dignitary) "are the stoopedest men in New Haven." The Atlantic, LXIV. 557.

stooper (stö'pėr), n. [< stoop[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which stoops.

stooping (stö'ping), p. a. 1. Leaning; bending forward and downward; hence, bent; bowed: as, stooping shoulders; a stooping figure.—2†. Yielding; submissive.

A stooping kind of disposition, clean opposite to contempt. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vii. 24.

3. In her., swooping or flying downward as if about to strike its prey: noting a hawk used as a bearing. Also spelled stouping.

stoopingly (stö'ping-li), adv. In a stooping manner or position; with a bending of the body forward. Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 260.

stoop-shouldered (stöp'shōl'dėrd), a. Having a habitual stoop in the shoulders and back.

stoor[1] (stör), a. [Also stour; early mod. E. also stoore; Sc. stour, stoure, sture, < ME. stoor, store, stor, < AS. stōr = OFries. stōr = Icel. stōrr = Dan. Sw. stor, great, large.] 1. Great; large; strong; mighty.

He was store man of strenght, stoutest in armes.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3743.

On a grene hille he sawe a tre,
The savoure of hit was stronge & store.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 101.

2. Stiff; hard; harsh.

Stoure, rude as course clothe is, gros. Palsgrave.

Now, to look on the feathers of all manner of birds, you shall see some so low, weak, and short, some so coarse, stoore, and hard, and the ribs so brickle, thin, and narrow, that it can neither be drawn, pared, nor yet will set on.
Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. 1864), p. 123.

3. Austere; harsh; severe; violent; turbulent: said of persons or their words or actions.

O stronge lady stoore, what dost thow?
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, i. 1123.

Thenne ho gef hym god-day, & wyth a glent lazed,
& as ho stod, ho stonyed hym wyth ful stor wordez.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1291.

Stowre of conversacyon, estourdy. Palsgrave.

4. Harsh; deep-toned. Halliwell.

[Obsolete or provincial in all uses.]

stoor[2] (stör), v. [Also stour; < ME. storen, < AS. as if stōrian*, a var. of stȳrian = MLG. stören, etc., move, stir: see stir[1] and steer[3], doublets of stoor[2].] I. intrans. 1. To move; stir. Halliwell. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Loke ye store not of that stedd, Whedur y be quyck or dedd.
MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 191. (Halliwell.)

2. To move actively; keep stirring. [Prov. Eng.]—3. To rise up in clouds, as smoke, dust, etc. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. 1. To stir up, as liquor. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.] Hence—2. To pour; especially, to pour leisurely out of any vessel held high. [Scotch.]—3. To sprinkle. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

stoor[2] (stör), n. [Also stour; < stoor[2], v. Cf. stir[1], n. In some senses confused in the spelling stour with stour[3].] 1. Stir; bustle; agitation; contention. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

An infinite cockneydom of stoor and din.
Carlyle, in Froude, i. 161.

2. Dust in motion; hence, also, dust at rest. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Our ancient crown's fa'n in the dust—
De'il blin' them wi' the stoure o't.
Burns, Awa', Whigs, Awa'.

3. A gush of water. Jamieson; Halliwell (under stour, stowre). [Scotch.]—4. Spray. [Scotch.]—5. A sufficient quantity of yeast for brewing. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stoor[3]†, n. A Middle English form of store[3].

stoorey (stö'ri), n. [Cf. stoor[2], n., 5.] A mixture of warm beer and oatmeal stirred up with sugar. [Prov. Eng.]

stoorness† (stör'nes), n. [Also stourness; < ME. stowrnes, stowrenes; < stoor[1] + -ness.] Strength; power.

And Troiell, the tru knight, trayturly he slogh, Noght thurgh stowrenes of strokes, ne with strenght one.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 10345.

stoory (stö'ri), a. [Also stoury, stowry; < stoor[2], n., 2, + -y[1].] Dusty. [Scotch.]

An aye she took the tither sonk,
To drouk the stowrie tow.
Burns, I Bought my Wife a Stane of Lint.

stooth (stöth), n. [Early mod. E. stothe; prob. < Icel. stoth = Sw. stod, a post; cf. AS. studu, > ME. stode, E. stud, a post, etc.: see stud[1].] A stud; a post; a batten. [Obsolete or provincial.]

For settinge in ij. stothes and mendyng the wall of the receiver's chalmer over the stare.
Howden Roll (1552), in Fabric Rolls of York Minster, [p. 355. (E. Peacock.) stooth (stöth), v. t. [< stooth, n.] To lath and plaster. Halliwell; Jamieson. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

stoothing (stö'thing), n. [< stooth + -ing[1], or a var. of studding, accom. to stooth.] Studding; battening.

stop[1] (stop), v.; pret. and pp. stopped, ppr. stopping. [< ME. stoppen, stoppien, < AS. stoppian (in comp. for-stoppian), stop up, = OS. stuppōn = MD. D. stoppen = MLG. LG. stoppen, stuff, cram, = OHG. stoffōn, stoppōn, MHG. G. stopfen, stoppen = Icel. Sw. stoppa = Dan. stoppe, stop. (a) According to the usual view, = OF. estouper, F. étouper = OSp. estopar = It. stoppare, stop up with tow, < LL. stupare, stuppare, stop up with tow, cram, stop, < L. stupa, stuppa = Gr. στύπη, στύππη, coarse part of flax, hards, oakum, tow: see stupa, stupe[1]. (b) But this explanation, which suits phonetically, is on grounds of meaning somewhat doubtful; it does not appear from the early instances of the verb that the sense 'stop with tow,' 'stuff,' is the original. The similarity with the L. and Rom. forms may be accidental, and the Teut. verb may be different (though mingled with the other), and connected with OHG. stophōn, MHG. stupfen, stüpfen, pierce, and so ult. with E. stump. Cf. stuff, v., derived, through the F., from the same Teut. source.] I. trans. 1. To close up, as a hole, passage, or cavity, by filling, stuffing, plugging, or otherwise obstructing; block up; choke: as, to stop a vent or a channel.

Ther is an eddre thet is y-hote ine latin aspis, thet is of znieke kende thet hi stoppeth thet on eare mid erthe, and thet other mid hare tayle, thet hi ne yhere thane charmere.
Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 257.

Imperious Cæsar, dead, and turn'd to clay,
Might stop a hole to keep the wind away.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 1. 237.

Mountains of ice, that stop the imagined way,
Beyond Petsora eastward, to the rich Cathaian coast. Milton, P. L., x. 291.

2. To make close or tight; close with or as with a compressible substance, or a lid or stopper: as, to stop a bottle with a cork; hence, to stanch.

The eldest and wysest at Geball were they that mended and stopped thy shippes. Bible of 1551, Ezek. xxvii. 9.

Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge,
To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death.
Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 258.

Children yet
Unborn will stop their ears when thou art nam'd.
Beau. and Fl., Laws of Candy, v. 1.

This place [a Maronite convent] is famous for excellent wine, which they preserve, as they do in all these parts, in large earthen jars, close stopped down with clay.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 103.

3. To shut up; inclose; confine.

Forthi yf combes ronke of hony weep,
Three dayes stopped up atte home hem [bees] keep.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 138.

Whatever spirit . . . leaves the fair at large Shall feel sharp vengeance soon o'ertake his sins,
Be stopp'd in vials, or transfix'd with pins.
Pope, R. of the L., ii. 126.

4. To hinder from progress or procedure; cause to cease moving, going, acting, working, or the like; impede; check; head off; arrest: as, to stop a car; to stop a ball; to stop a clock; to stop a thief.

"How dare you stop my errand?" he says;
"My orders you must obey."
Child Noryce (Child's Ballads, II. 41).

Did they exert themselves to help onward the great movement of the human race, or to stop it?
Macaulay, Sir J. Mackintosh.

5. To hold back, as from a specified course, purpose, end, or the like; restrain; hinder: followed by from (obsolete or dialectal of).

No man shall stop me of this boasting. 2 Cor. xi. 10.

Thus does he poison, kill, and slay, . . .
Yet stops me o' my lawfu' prey.
Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook.

6. To prevent the continuance of; suppress; extinguish; bring to an end: as, to stop a leak.

Thei putten here hondes upon his mouthe, and stoppen his Brethe, and so thei sleen him.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 201.

If there be any love to my deservings
Borne by her virtuous self, I cannot stop it.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, i. 1.

7. To check or arrest by anticipation.

The grief . . . that stops his answer.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1664.

Every bold sinner, when about to engage in the commission of any known sin, should . . . stop the execution of his purpose with this question: Do I believe that God has denounced death to such a practice, or do I not?
South. (Johnson.)

8. To keep back; withhold.

Do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 1. 24.

Nor stops, for one bad cork, his butler's pay.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. ii. 63.

9. To cease from; discontinue; bring to a stop.

When the crickets stopped their cry,
When the owls forbore a term,
You heard music; that was I.
Browning, Serenade at the Villa.

10. In musical instruments: (a) Of the lute and viol classes, to press (a string) with the finger so as to shorten its vibrating length, and thus raise the pitch of the tone produced from it. (b) Of the wind group generally, to close (a finger-hole in the tube) so as to change the nodes of the vibrating column of air, and thus alter the pitch of the tone. (c) Of wind-instruments of the trumpet class, to insert the hand into (the bell) so as to shorten the length of the vibrating column of air, and thus to raise the pitch of the tone.—11. Naut., to make fast with a small line: as, to stop a line to a harpoon-staff.—12. To put the stops, or marks of punctuation, in; point, as a written composition; punctuate.

If his sentences were properly stopped.
Landor. (Imp. Dict.)

13. In masonry, plastering, etc., to point or dress over (an imperfect or damaged place in a wall) by covering it with cement or plaster.—14. In hort., same as top.

After the end of July it is not advisable to continue the topping—technically stopping—of the young shoots.
Encyc. Brit., XII. 254.

15. To ward off; parry. [Pugilistic slang.]—A stopping oyster†. See oyster.—Stopping the glass. See glass.—To stop a gap. See gap.—To stop a line. See *line*2.—To stop down a lens, in photog., etc., to reduce the amount of light admitted through a lens by using stops or diaphragms. See *stop*1, n., 12.—To stop off. (a) In founding, to fill in (a part of a mold) with sand to prevent metal from running into that part when the casting is made. The form of the casting can frequently be thus changed without the expense of altering a pattern or making a new pattern. (b) In galvanoplastic operations, to apply a varnish to (parts of a plate or object), to prevent the deposit of metal upon the varnished parts during immersion in the gilding or electroplating solution.—To stop one's mouth, to silence one; especially, to silence one by a sop or bribe.

Let repentance stop your mouth;
Learn to redeem your fault.
Ford, Lover's Melancholy, iv. 1.

If you would have her silent, stop her mouth with that ring. Wycherley, Gentleman Dancing-Master, v. 1.

To stop out. (a) In the arts, to protect (a surface, etc.) from chemical or other action by covering with a coating: as, in photography, to cover with paint, paper, etc., as parts of a negative which are not to be printed; in electrotyping, to cover with wax, as parts of the black-leaded mold, to prevent the deposit of copper on those parts; in etching, to cover with a varnish or other resisting composition, as parts of a plate which are not to be bitten by the acid. (b) Theat., to cover (some of the teeth) with black wax, so as to make them invisible. = Syn. 1 and 4. To interrupt, block, blockade, barricade, intercept, end.—9. To suspend, intermit.

II. intrans. 1. To check one's self; leave off; desist; stay; halt; come to a stand or stop, as in walking, speaking, or any other action or procedure.

Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iii. 2. 52.

Terence . . . always judiciously stops short before he comes to the downright pathetic.
Goldsmith, Sentimental Comedy.

No rattling wheels stop short before these gates.
Cowper, Task, iv. 144.

2. To discontinue; come to an end; cease to be: as, the noise stopped; an annuity stops.—3. To make a halt or a stay of longer or shorter duration; tarry; remain.

We . . . went about half a mile to the east of Tortura, not designing to stop there.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 60.

Mr. Brontë and old Tabby went to bed. . . . But Charlotte . . . stopped up . . . till her weak eyes failed to read or to sew. Mrs. Gaskell, Charlotte Brontë, II. 121.

"I would rather stop abed," said I; "what have I to do with fighting?" R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, lxiv.

I've been up country some weeks, stopping with my mother. S. O. Jewett, Deephaven, p. 17.

4. To intercept, ward off, or parry a blow. [Pugilistic slang.]

Don't stop with your head too frequently.
A. L. Gordon, In Utrumque Paratus.

To stop off or over, to make a brief or incidental stay at some point in the course of a journey; lie off or over: also used as a noun or an adjective: as, a stop-over check; the ticket allows a stop-off in Chicago. [Colloq.]—To stop out, to stay out all night, as in the streets, or away from one's proper lodging-place.

Mr. Hall, at Bow-street, only says, "Poor boy, let him go." But it's only when we've done nothink but stop out that he says that.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 563.

stop[1] (stop), n. [< stop, v.] 1. The act of stopping, in any sense. (a) A filling or closing up.

A breach that craves a quick expedient stop!
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 288.

(b) An impeding or hindering; obstruction; stoppage.

What's he? One sent,
I feare, from my dead mother, to make stop
Of our intended voyage. Brome, Antipodes, i. 7.

(c) A pause; a stand; a halt.

When he took leave now, he made a hundred stops,
Desir'd an hour, but half an hour, a minute.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, iii. 1.

Mrs. Crummles advancing with that stage walk which consists of a stride and a stop alternately.
Dickens, Nicholas Nickleby, xxv.

(d) Termination; ending.

How kingdoms sprung, and how they made their stop,
I well observed. J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 49.

(e) A stay; a tarrying.

Coming to the Corner above Bethlehem Gate, [we] made a stop there, in order to expect the return of our Messenger. Maundrell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 67.

2†. A state of hesitation or uncertainty; a standstill.

At which sudden question, Martius was a little at a stop.
Bacon, Holy War.

3. That which stops or hinders; especially, an obstacle or impediment; specifically, a weir.

He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, falleth out of his own favour. Bacon, Empire (ed. 1887).

What they called stops . . . were in effect wears or kidels.
Sir J. Hawkins, in Walton's Complete Angler, p. 274, note.

4. In musical instruments: (a) Of the lute and viol classes, a pressure on a string so as to shorten its vibrating length, and raise the pitch of its tone. (b) Of wind-instruments, the closing of a finger-hole in the tube so as to alter the pitch of its tone. (c) Of wind-instruments of the trumpet class, the inserting of the hand into the bell so as to raise the pitch of the tone.—5. Any lever or similar device for thus stopping a string or finger-hole.

His jesting spirit, which is now crept into a lute-string and now governed by stops. Shak., Much Ado, iii. 2. 62.

In every instrument are all tunes to him that has the skill to find out the stops. Brome, Sparagus Garden, iii. 4.

6. In an organ, a graduated set of pipes of the same kind, and giving tones of the same quality. A complete stop has at least one pipe for each digital of the keyboard to which it belongs; if a stop has less, it is called a partial stop; if more, it is called a compound stop or mixture-stop. The number of pipes constituting a stop varies according to the compass of the keyboard to which it belongs, the usual number being now sixty-one for manual keyboards, and either twenty-seven or thirty for pedal keyboards, while mixture-stops have between twice and five times as many. Stops are variously classified, as follows: (a) As to general quality of tone, the principal qualities recognized being the organ-tone (as in the open diapason, the octave, the fifteenth, etc.), the flute-tone (as in the hourdon, the stopped diapason, the melodia, the flute, etc.), the string-tone (as in the viol da gamba, the violina, the dulciana, etc.), and the reed-tone (as in the oboe, the clarinet, the trumpet, etc.). The first three groups are also called flue-stops, and the last reed-stops, from the construction of their pipes (see pipe[1], 2). (b) As to the pitch of the tones relative to the digitals used, the two classes being foundation- and mutation-stops, of which the former give tones exactly corresponding to the normal pitch of the digitals, while the latter give tones distant from that pitch by some fixed interval, like one, two, or three octaves, or even a twelfth. Foundation-stops are usually called eight-feet stops, because the length of an open pipe sounding the second C below middle C is approximately eight feet; while for an analogous reason mutation-stops sounding an octave below the normal pitch of the digitals are called sixteen-feet stops; those sounding the octave above, four-feet stops; those sounding the second octave above, two-feet stops, etc. The specific names of stops are not only numerous, but often vary without sufficient reason. Some names have a merely technical significance, as diapason, principal, etc.; some indicate the instrument which they are intended to imitate, as flute, trumpet, violoncello, etc.; while others mark the extent of the mutation produced, as octave, twelfth, quint, etc. Each partial organ has its own stops, which can be sounded only by means of the digitals of its own keyboard. The pipes of a stop are usually arranged in a transverse row on the wind-chest, the order of disposition, or plantation, varying somewhat. Under them, and between the upper and middle boards of the chest, is a movable strip of wood called a slider, which (together with both these boards) is perforated with holes corresponding to the plantation of the pipes. The position of the slider is controlled through a system of levers by a handle near the keyboard called a register, stop-knob, or stop. When this handle is pulled out or drawn, the holes of the slider are coincident with those of the two boards, so that the air can pass freely from the pallets into the pipes; when the handle is pushed in, the holes of the slider are not coincident with those of the two boards, and communication between the pallets and the pipes is cut off. In the one case the stop is said to be "on," in the other "off." When the slider controlling the use of the upper pipes of a stop is separated from that controlling the lower, the stop is called divided. Since the handles controlling the use of the pipes or stops proper are made of the same general shape as those controlling various mechanical appliances, like couplers, the former are also called sounding or speaking stops, in distinction from the latter, or mechanical stops. Stops whose quality or power of tone is decidedly individual, so as to fit them for the performance of solo melodies, are called solo stops. See organ, reed-organ, pipe, etc.

The pathetic stop of Petrarch's poetical organ was one he could pull out at pleasure.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 368.

7. Same as stop-knob.—8. pl. In the harpsichord, handles controlling levers by which the position of the jacks could be varied so as to alter the force or quality of the tones produced.—9. A mark to indicate a stop or pause in reading; a mark of punctuation.

I can write fast and fair,
Most true orthography, and observe my stops.
Middleton, More Dissemblers besides Women, iii. 2.

Who walked so slowly, talked in such a hurry,
And with such wild contempt for stops and Lindley Murray!
C. S. Calverley, Isabel.

10. In joinery, one of the pieces of wood nailed on the frame of a door to form the recess or rebate into which the door shuts.—11. Naut.: (a) A projection at the head of a lower mast, supporting the trestletrees. (b) A bit of small line used to lash or fasten anything temporarily: as, hammock-stops, awning-stops.—12. In optics, a perforated diaphragm inserted between the two combinations of a double lens, or placed in front of a single lens, to intercept the extreme rays that disturb the perfection of the image. The practical effect of the stop is to increase the depth of the focus and sharpness of definition, but to diminish the illumination in the exact ratio of the diameter of the stop to that of the lens, and hence, in photography, to increase correspondingly the necessary time of exposure.

Microscopes, in which, whatever be the size of the lens itself, the greater portion of its surface is rendered inoperative by a stop. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 10.

13. In bookbinding, a small circular finishing-tool used by bookbinders to stop a line or fillet at its intersection with another line.—14. In lace-manuf. (in the application of the Jacquard attachment described under loom, 2, to a lace-frame), a point at which the different sets of warp-threads are concentrated or brought to a sort of focus, and which in the design of a pattern is taken as a basis for measurement in determining the distances the respective threads in the set must be moved to form the desired pattern. The movements of the mechanism are adjusted in accordance with these measurements.—15. In phonetics, an alphabetic sound involving a complete closure of the mouth-organs; a mute; a check.—16. The concavity of the profile of a dog's face, specially marked in the bulldog and pug.—17. In fencing, the action whereby a fencer, instead of parrying a blow and then thrusting, allows a careless opponent to run on his sword-point. He may hasten the stop by extending the sword-arm. (See stop-thrust.) The stop is discouraged in fencing as a game, since much use of it shortens the passages, and destroys combinations of feints, disengagements, coupés, etc.—Double stop. See single stop.—Full stop. (a) A period. (b) In lute-playing: (1) A chord followed by a pause. (2) A chord in producing which all the strings are stopped by the fingers.—Geneva stop. See Geneva movement, under movement.—Half-stop, in an organ, a stop which contains half, or about half, the full number of stops.—Harmonic stop. See harmonic.—Incomplete or imperfect stop. See incomplete.—Open stop, in organ-building, a stop whose pipes are open at the upper end.—Pedal stop. See pedal.—Service stop, in railroading, a stop made by a railway-train, in the regular way and at stations designated by the regulation schedule, as distinguished from an emergency stop.—Single stop, in ship-building, the scoring down of the carlines between the beams, by which means a carline is prevented from sinking any lower than its intended position. The double stop is generally used for deeper carlines than the single stop.—To hunt upon the stop†, to hunt with or like a stop-hound—that is, slowly and with frequent pauses; hence, to be lukewarm.

If any [Christian] step a little forward, do not the rest hunt upon the stop? Rev. S. Ward, Sermons, p. 91.

To put a stop to, to cause to stop, temporarily or permanently; break off; end. = Syn. 1. Stop, Cessation, Stay, Suspension, Intermission, Pause, Rest. These words may denote the failure or interruption of forward motion or of activity. Stop is an energetic word, but the most general: it is opposed to going forward or going on; cessation may be temporary or final, and is opposed to continuance; a stay is a stop viewed as a lingering or delay: as, a short stay in the place; or, as a legal term, simply a stop: as, a stay of proceedings; suspension is a complete but presumably temporary stop: as, a suspension of work or pay; intermission is a strictly temporary stop; pause is a brief stop, in full expectation of going on; rest is a stop for refreshment from weariness.

stop[2] (stop), n. [< ME. stoppe, < AS. stoppa, a bucket or pail: see stoop[2].] A bucket; a pail; a small well-bucket; a milk-pail. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stop[3]†, n. A Middle English form of stoop[2].

stop-cock (stop′kok), n. A faucet with a valve of some form, operated by a handle: used to open or close a pipe or passage for water, gas, etc. Such cocks are sometimes made self-closing, to prevent waste.

stop-collar (stop′kol′ăr), n. In mach., an adjustable collar which can be placed and held by a set-screw on a shaft or rod as a stop or gage to limit the motion of a movable part sliding on the rod or shaft, as a fitting on the main shaft on which the carriage of a typewriter slides, and adjustments in many other machines.

stop-cylinder (stop′sil″in-dėr), n. In printing. See cylinder-press and printing-machine.

stop-drill (stop′dril), n. A form of drill made with a solid shoulder, or admitting of the attachment of a collar by a side-screw, to limit the depth of penetration of the tool.

stope[1] (stōp), n. [< ME. stope* = MD. stoepe, etc., a step; or a var. of stape, stap, a step (cf. stopen, stope, stapen, pp. of steppen): see step, and cf. stoop[3].] An excavation made in a mine to remove the ore which has been rendered accessible by the shafts and drifts. These are, to a certain extent, permanent constructions, being carefully supported by the necessary timbering and left open for passage, while the stopes are only supported so far as may be necessary for the safety of the mine, and are more or less completely filled up with the attle or refuse rock left behind after the ore has been picked out and sent to the surface.

stope[1] (stōp), v. t. and i.; pret. and pp. stoped, ppr. stoping. [< stope[1], n.] In mining, to remove the contents of a vein. The stoping is done after a vein or lode has been laid open by means of the necessary shafts and drifts. See stoping.

stope[2]† (stōp), n. An obsolete form of stoop[2].

stope[3]†, stopen†. Middle English forms of stapen, past participle of step.

stop-finger (stop′fing″gėr), n. Same as faller-wire, 2.

stop-gap (stop′gap), n. and a. [< stop[1], v., + obj. gap.] I. n. That which fills a gap or hiatus, or, figuratively, that which serves as an expedient in an emergency.

I declare off; you shall not make a stop-gap of me.
Foote, The Cozeners, i. 1.

A good deal of conversation which is . . . introduced as a stop-gap. Proc. Eng. Soc. Psych. Research, XVII. 450.

II. a. Filling a gap or pause, as in the course of talk.

The "well's" and "ah's," "don't-you-know's," and other stop-gap interjections.
Proc. Amer. Soc. Psych. Research, I. 312.

stop-gate (stop′gāt), n. A gate used to divide a canal into sections, so that in case of a break in an embankment in one section the water can be shut off from flowing into it from other sections.

stop-hound (stop′hound), n. A dog trained to hunt slowly, stopping at the huntsman's signal. Davies (under stop).

Sir Roger, being at present too old for fox-hunting, to keep himself in action, has disposed of his beagles and got a pack of stop-hounds. Budgell, Spectator, No. 116.

stoping (stō′ping), n. [Verbal n. of stope[1], v.] In mining, the act of excavating mineral ground to remove the ore after this has been rendered accessible by the necessary preliminary excavations—namely, sinking one or more shafts or winzes and running drifts.—Overhand stoping, a method of working out the contents of a vein by advancing from below upward, the miner being thus always helped by gravity. It is the method most commonly employed. That part of the material thrown down which is worth saving is raised to the surface, and the refuse rock (attle or deads) resting on the stulls remains in the excavation, helping to support the walls of the mine, and giving the miner a place on which to stand.—Underhand stoping, excavating the ore by working from above downward. In underhand stoping everything loosened by blasting has to be lifted up to be got out of the way. The advantage of this method is that in case the ore is very valuable, less of it need be lost by its getting so mixed with the attle that it cannot be picked out.

stop-knob (stop′nob), n. In organ-building, the handle by which the player controls the position of the slider belonging to a particular stop, or set of pipes. When the knob is drawn out, the pipes are ready to be sounded by the keys. The name of the stop is commonly written on the knob. Also called register and stop. See cut under reed-organ.

stopless (stop′les), a. [< stop[1] + -less.] Not to be stopped or checked. [Rare.]

Making a civil and staid senate rude
And stopless as a running multitude.
Sir W. Davenant, On King Charles the Second's Return.

stop-motion (stop′mō″shon), n. In mech., a device for automatically arresting the motion of an engine or a machine, when from any cause it is necessary to stop suddenly to prevent injury to the machine or material. Stop-motion mechanisms are applied to looms, spinning-, roving-, and drawing-machines, winding-machines, elevators, knitting-machines, and engines. They are divided into two classes: those operated by some mechanical means, as a weighted arm resting on the thread of a loom, where the breakage of the thread causes the arm to fall; and those actuated by electricity, in which the fall of an arm closes a circuit, and by means of a magnet sets in motion some mechanical device for arresting the motion. In most machines the usual method is the shifting of the belt that moves the machine. In engines the stoppage and fall of the governor closes the steam-valve. Electrical stop-motion appliances, not self-acting, are sometimes used; in case of a break-down the use of a push-button releases a weight that by suitable mechanism shuts off steam from the engine.—Fork-and-grid stop-motion, in a power-loom, a stop-motion in which a grid on the batten acts in connection with a fork, which when the weft-thread breaks causes a lever to drop and stops the loom.

stop-net (stop′net), n. An addition to the main net in seine-fishing. Encyc. Brit., IX. 254.

stop-order (stop′ôr″dėr), n. In stock-broking, an order given by a person to his broker to sell or buy a specified stock when the price reaches a specified figure.

stop-over (stop′ō″vėr), n. and a. See to stop off or over, under stop[1], v. i.

stoppage (stop′āj), n. [< stop[1] + -age.] 1. The act of stopping, in any sense, or the state of being stopped; especially, a stopping of motion or procedure.

His majesty, . . . finding unexpected stoppage, tells you he now looks for a present proceed in his affairs.
Court and Times of Charles I., I. 344.

2. A deduction made from pay or allowances to repay advances, etc.—Stoppage in transit or in transitu, in law, the act of a seller of goods who has sent them on their way to the buyer, in reclaiming them before they have come into the actual possession or control of the buyer, and terminating or suspending performance of the sale: a right allowed in case of discovering the buyer to be insolvent.

stoppet, n. [ME., < AS. stoppa, a vessel: see stoop[2].] A pail or bucket. Prompt. Parv., p. 477; Halliwell.

stopped (stopt), p. a. 1. In playing musical instruments, noting the effect produced by stopping in any of the senses described under stop[1], v. t., 10.—2. In an organ, having the upper end plugged: said of a pipe: opposed to open. The tone produced by a stopped pipe is an octave lower than that produced by an open pipe of the same length.—Stopped diapason, in organ-building. See diapason (e).—Stopped note. See note[1].

stoppel[1]†, n. An obsolete form of stopple.

stoppel[2]†, n. Same as estoppel.

Abatements, stoppels, inhibitions.
Marston, Scourge of Villanie, vii. 87.

stopper (stop′ėr), n. [< stop[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which stops or plugs. (a) One who fills up holes or openings.

The ancients of Gebal and the wise men thereof were in thee thy calkers [margin: stoppers of chinks].
Ezek. xxvii. 9.

(b) That which closes or fills up (an opening, etc.), as a plug, a bung, or a cork; especially, such an article for the mouth of a fruit-jar, decanter, or vial, when made of the same material as the vessel itself, and having no special name, as cork, bung, etc.; a stopple; specifically, a device for closing bottles for aërated water. See cut under siphon-bottle. (c) A convenient utensil made of wood, bone, ivory, or the like, formerly used to compress or pack some loose or flocculent substance into small compass.

I sold little bone "tobacco-stoppers"—they're seldom asked for now; stoppers is quite out of fashion.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 490.

(d) One who or that which brings to a stop or stand; specifically, one of the players in tennis, foot-ball, and other games, who stops the balls. Halliwell. (e) Naut., a piece of rope secured at one end to a bolt or the like, used to check the motion of another rope or of a cable. Stoppers for cables are of various construction, such as an iron clamp with a lever or screw, a claw of iron with a rope attached, etc. (f) In an organ, a wooden plug inserted in the tops of certain kinds of pipes, as in those of the stopped diapason, flute, bourdon, etc., whence they are called stopped pipes. Such pipes are tuned by means of the stopper. (g) In a vehicle, a bar of wood with iron points pivoted to the body, and allowed to trail on the ground behind to serve as a stop or brake in ascending steep grades. Such a device is used, for instance, on ice-carts plying on hilly streets, where stoppages are frequent.

2. The upper pad or principal callosity of the sole of a dog's foot.

The leg, or bones below the knee [of the greyhound], should be of good size, the stopper (or upper pad) well united to it, and firm in texture.
Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 45.

3. A small tree of one of four species of the genus Eugenia occurring in Florida. Of the species E. buxifolia is the gurgeon or Spanish stopper, E. monticola is the white stopper, and E. procera is the red stopper. The last is somewhat abundant, and has a very heavy, hard, strong, and close-grained wood of a light yellowish-brown color, likely to be valuable for cabinet-making and coarse engraving. The remaining species so called is E. longipes, a rare tree bearing a small red fruit with the flavor of cranberries. All except the last are found also in the West Indies. Sargent.—Cat-head stopper. See cat-head.—Spanish stopper. See def. 3. (See also fighting-stopper.) stopper (stop′ėr), v. t. [< stopper, n.] 1. To close or secure with a stopple: as, stoppered bottles.—2. To fit with a stopple or stopples.

The mouth of the vessel to be stoppered is ground by an iron cone fixed to a lathe.
H. J. Powell, Glass-making, p. 73.

3. Naut., to secure with a stopper or stoppers.—To stopper a cable, to put stoppers on a cable to prevent it from running out of the ship when riding at anchor.

stopper-bolt (stop′ėr-bōlt), n. Naut., a large ring-bolt driven into the deck before the main hatch, etc., for securing the stoppers.

stopper-hole (stop′ėr-hōl), n. In iron-puddling, a hole in the door of the furnace through which the metal is stirred. See cut under puddling-furnace.

stopper-knot (stop′ėr-not), n. A knot in the end of a rope-stopper made by double-walling the strands.

stopping (stop′ing), n. [Verbal n. of stop[1], v.] 1. The act of one who or that which stops, in any sense. Specifically—(a) The process of filling cracks or fissures, as in an oil-painting, with a composition preparatory to restoring; also, the material used in the process.

The stopping, as this mixture [of size and whiting] is called, is pressed into the cracks by means of a palette-knife.
Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 127.

(b) In etching. See to stop out (a), under stop[1], v. t. (c) The act or process of altering the pitch of the tones of a musical instrument in any of the ways described under stop[1], v. t., 10.

2. Something that stops. Specifically—(a) In mining, any solid wall or brattice built across a passage in a mine, to shut out the air from the goaves, or to limit it to certain passages, or to keep the gas confined, or for any other purpose. (b) In dental surg., material for filling cavities in teeth. (c) In farriery, a ball or pad for stuffing the space in a horse's foot within the inner edge of the shoe.—Double stopping, in viol-playing, the act or process of producing tones simultaneously from two stopped strings.

stopping-brush (stop′ing-brush), n. 1. In hat-making, a brush used to sprinkle boiling water upon the napping and the hat-body to assist in uniting them.—2. In etching, a camel's-hair brush used in stopping out parts of etched plates.

stopping-coat (stop′ing-kōt), n. The covering of resistant material applied to any part of an object about to be exposed to the action of an acid or other agent, in order to protect that part from such action.

stopping-knife (stop′ing-nīf), n. A knife used in stopping, as a glaziers' putty-knife.

stop-plank (stop′plangk), n. One of the planks employed to form a sort of dam in some hydraulic works. They generally occupy vertical grooves in the wing walls of a lock or weir, to hold back water in case of temporary disorder of the lock-gates.

stop-plate (stop′plāt), n. An end-bearing for the axle in a railroad journal-box, designed to resist end-play of the axle.

stopple[1] (stop′l), n. [< ME. stoppel, stoppell, stopell; < stop + -el, now -le, a noun-formative indicating the instrument (as also in whittle, swingle, etc.).] 1. That which stops or closes the mouth of a vessel; a stopper: as, a glass stopple; a cork stopple.

Item, j. litill botell, with j. cheyne and j. stopell, welyng xxxviij. unces.
Paston Letters, I. 472.

Who knows, when he openeth the stopple, what may be in the bottle?
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, ii. 1.

2. A plug sometimes inserted in certain finger-holes of a flute or flageolet to accommodate its scale to some unusual series.

stopple[1] (stop′l), v. t.; pret. and pp. stoppled, ppr. stoppling. [< stopple[1], n.] To stop or close with a stopple.

His hours of study clos'd at last,
And finish'd his concise repast,
Stoppled his cruise, replac'd his book
Within its customary nook.
Cowper, Moralizer Corrected.

stopple[2] (stop′l), n. [< ME. stopyll, stouple; a more orig. form of stubble: see stubble.] Stubble. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

And thoru haubert and ys coler, that nere nothyng sonple,
He smot of ys heved as lyztlyche as yt were a lute stouple.
Robert of Gloucester, p. 223.

stop-ridge (stop′rij), n. A band slightly elevated upon the surface of a blade or a similar part of an implement, intended to stop and hold it in the proper place, as in the handle. In stone celts the presence of such a stop-ridge marks a certain class or category.

stop-rod (stop′rod), n. In weaving, the rod which extends longitudinally under the batten of a loom, forming a part of the stop-motion, and which raises a catch that, if not raised, engages mechanism which immediately stops the loom. Every time the shuttle enters the shuttle-box fairly it acts upon a stop-finger to cause the stop-rod to lift the catch; but, if the shuttle is stopped in its course through the shed, the catch is not raised, the loom is stopped, and the warp, which would otherwise be broken by the impact of the reed against the shuttle while in the shed, is thus saved.

stop-ship† (stop'ship), n. [< stop[1], v., + obj. ship; a translation of the Gr. ἐχενηίς, the remora: see Echeneis, and cf. mora, remora.] The fish remora.

O Stop-ship, . . . tell vs where thou doo'st thine Anchors hide;
Whence thou resistest Sayls, Owers, Wind, and Tide.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 5.

stop-thrust (stop'thrust), n. In fencing, a slight thrust at one's opponent, instead of a parry, made after he has begun to lunge forward in an attack. The stop-thrust goes over by delicate gradations into the time-thrust, but is not considered by fencers a fine blow like the time-thrust.

stop-valve (stop'valv), n. 1. In hydraul., a valve which closes a pipe against the passage of fluid. It is usually a disk which occupies a chamber above the pipe when the passageway through the latter is open, and is driven down by a screw to stop the aperture.

2. In steam-engines, a valve fitted to the steam-pipes, where they leave the several boilers, in such a way that any boiler may be shut off from the others and from the engines.

stop-watch (stop'woch), n. A watch which records small fractions of a second, and in which the hands can be stopped at any instant, so as to mark the exact time at which some event occurs: chiefly used in timing races.

He suspended his voice in the epilogue a dozen times, three seconds and three fifths by a stop-watch, my lord, each time. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iii. 12.

stop-water (stop'wâ″tėr), n. [< stop[1], v., + obj. water.] 1. Naut., a drag.—2. A plug of soft wood driven tightly into a hole at the joint of a scarf, the expansion of which, when immersed, prevents water from working up through the scarf and behind the bottom planking. In building iron ships a piece of canvas soaked in red lead is used to make water-tight joints where calking is difficult.

stop-wheel (stop'hwēl), n. See Geneva movement, under movement.

stop-work (stop'wėrk), n. A device attached to the barrel of a watch, musical box, etc., to prevent overwinding.

stor[1]†, a. A Middle English form of stoor[1].

stor[2]†, n. [ME., < AS. stōr, incense, storax (= W. ystor, resin, rosin), < L. storax, storax: see storax.] Incense.

Thet Stor signefied Gode werkes, for ase se smech of the store wanne hit is i-do into the ueréé and goth upward to the heuene and to Gode warde Swo amuntel si gode biddinge to gode of tho herte of tho gode cristenemanne.
Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 28.

storable (stōr'a-bl), a. [< store[3] + -able.] Capable of being stored. R. S. Bull, Exper. Mechanics, p. 262.

storage (stōr'āj), n. [< store[3] + -age.] 1. The act of storing, in any sense; specifically, the keeping of goods in a store, warehouse, or other place of deposit.—2. The price charged or paid for keeping goods in a storehouse.—Cold storage, storage in refrigerating chambers or other places artificially cooled, as for the preservation of articles liable to be damaged by heat.—Storage battery. See battery.—Storage magazine. Same as magazine, 1 (a).—Storage warehouse. See warehouse.

storage-bellows (stōr'āj-bel″ōz), n. See organ[1], 6.

storax (stō'raks), n. [= F. storax, styrax, < L. storax, styrax, < Gr. στύραξ, a sweet-smelling resin so called, also a tree producing it.] I. A solid resin resembling benzoin, with the fragrance of vanilla, formerly obtained from a small tree, Styrax officinalis, of Asia Minor and Syria. It was in use from ancient times down to the close of the last century, but has disappeared from the market, the trees having been mostly reduced to bushes by excessive lopping.

This, that, and ev'ry thicket doth transpire
More sweet than storax from the hallowed fire.
Herrick, Apparition of his Mistresse.

2. The tree yielding storax, or some other tree or shrub of the same genus. Among the American species, Styrax Californica is a handsome Californian shrub. See cut in next column.—Liquid storax, a balsam known from ancient times with the true storax, obtained by boiling and pressing from the inner bark of the Oriental sweet-gum tree, Liquidambar orientalis, itself also called liquidambar. It is a semi-fluid adhesive substance with the properties of a stimulant expectorant, but now scarcely used in Western practice except as a constituent in the compound tincture of benzoin (resembling friars' balsam: see benzoin), and as an application for itch. It has long been used in making incense and fumigating preparations, and also enters into perfumery. Its chief markets are China and India. A similar balsam is obtained, chiefly in Burma, from Altingia excelsa, known (together with the last) in East Indian commerce as rose-maloes, rasamala, etc. In Formosa and southern China a dry terebinthinous resin of the same character is derived from Liquidambar Formosana (a species recently identified). An American liquidambar, or liquid storax, or a substitute for it, is procured as natural exudation or by incision from the bark of the sweet gum, Liquidambar styraciflua, in the hotter parts of its habitat. It is better known in Europe than in the United States, where it is perhaps most used for making chewing-gum.

Branch with Flowers of Storax (Styrax Californica). a, a leaf, showing nervation.

Storax liquida [cometh] from Rhodes.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 277.

Storax ointment. See ointment.

storax-tree (stō'raks-trē), n. Same as storax, 2.

store[1]†, a. A Middle English form of stoor[1].

store[2]†, v. A Middle English form of stoor[2].

store[3] (stōr), v. t.; pret. and pp. stored, ppr. storing. [< ME. storen, also astoren, astorien, < OF. estorer, esturer, estaurer, make, build, establish, provide, furnish, store, < L. instaurare, renew, repair, make, ML. also provide, store, < in, in, to, + staurare*, set up, place (found also in restaurare, restore), < staurus*, fixed, = Gr. σταυρός, n., an upright pole, a stake, cross, = Skt. sthāvara, fixed, = AS. steór, a rudder, etc.; from the root of stand: see stand. Cf. restore, instauration, etc. Hence store[3], n., storage, story[2], etc.] 1. To provide; furnish; supply; equip; outfit.

No Cytee of the World is so wel stored of Schippes as is that. Mandeville, Travels, p. 207.

Her Mind with thousand Virtues stor'd.
Prior, Ode to the King after the Queen's Death, st. 35.

I believe for Greek & Latin there come very few lads so well stored to the University.
William Lloyd, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 188.

2. To stock with provisions; provision; replenish.

Alle thine castles ich habbe wel istored.
Layamon, l. 13412.

Backe to the yle of Alango, where some of vs went a londe . . . to store vs of newe vytaylles.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 59.

3. To deposit in a store or warehouse for preservation or safe-keeping; warehouse.

Now was stored
In the sweet-smelling granaries all the hoard
Of golden corn.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 393.

4. To lay up in reserve; accumulate; hoard: often with up.

According to Sir W. Thomson a single Faure cell of the spiral form, weighing 165 lbs., can store 2,000,000 foot-pounds of energy.
W. L. Carpenter, Energy in Nature (1st ed.), p. 125.

5†. To restore.

Keppit the fro combraunse & fro cold deth,
Storet thee to strenght & thi stythe londes,
And dawly hir distitur of hir fader.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 726.

store[3] (stōr), n. and a. [< ME. stor, store, stoor (cf. W. ystôr = Gael. stor, < E.), < OF. estore, estoire, estorie, provisions, store, a fleet, navy, army, < ML. staurum (also, after OF., storium), same as instaurum, store, < L. instaurare, renew, restore, ML. also provide, furnish, store: see store[3], v.] I. n. 1. That which is provided or furnished for use as needed; a stock accumulated as for future use; a supply; a hoard; specifically, in the plural, articles, particularly of food, accumulated for a specific object; supplies, as of food, ammunition, arms, or clothing: as, military or naval stores; the winter stores of a family.

He . . . kepte hir to his usage and his store.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2337.

500 pounds of hard bread, sleeping-bags, and assorted subsistence stores were landed from the floe.
Schley and Soley, Rescue of Greely, p. 77.

Hence—2. A great quantity; a large number; abundance; plenty: used with, or archaically without, the indefinite article.

That olde man of pleasing wordes had store.
Spenser, F. Q., I. i. 35.

With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
Rain influence, and judge the prize.
Milton, L'Allegro, l. 121.

3. A place where supplies, as provisions, ammunition, arms, clothing, or goods of any kind, are kept for future use or distribution; a storehouse; a warehouse; a magazine.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam, . . .
Concocted and adjuated, they reduced
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd.
Milton, P. L., vi. 515.

Hence—4. A place where goods are kept for sale by either wholesale or retail; a shop: as, a book-store; a dry-goods store. See note under shop[1], 2. [U. S. and British colonies.]

Stores, as the shops are called.
Capt. B. Hall, Travels in N. A., I. 8.

Bill of stores. See bill[3].—Bonded store. See bonded.—Coöperative store. See coöperative.—Fancy store. See fancy.—General-order store, a customs warehouse in which goods are stored temporarily, as unclaimed, or arriving in advance of invoice or transportation papers, or through other like cause of detention. Such goods are obtainable only on a general order.—General store, a store or shop where goods of all ordinary kinds are kept for sale; especially, such a store in a country village or at cross-roads.—In store, laid up; on hand; ready to be produced: as, we know not what the future has in store for us.

I have an hour's talk in store for you.
Shak., J. C., ii. 2. 121.

Marine, ordnance, public stores. See the qualifying words.—Sea-stores, provisions and supplies on shipboard for use at sea. Compare ship-stores.—Ship-stores, provisions and supplies for use on board ships at sea or in port: such supplies are sealed, as non-dutiable, by the customs officers.—Small stores, in a man-of-war, a general term embracing tinware, tobacco, soap, razors, brushes, thread, needles, etc., issued and charged to the men by the paymaster.—Subsistence stores. See subsistence.—To set store by. See set[1], v. t., 18.—To tell no store of†, to make no account of; set no store by.

I ne telle of laxatyves no store,
For they ben venymous, I woot it weel;
I hem diffye, I love hem never a deel.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 334.

II. a. 1†. Hoarded; laid up: as, store linen; store fruit.

Of this treasure . . . the gold was accumulate, and store treasure; . . . but the silver is still growing.
Bacon, Holy War.

2. Containing stores; set apart for receiving stores or supplies. Compare store-city.—3. Obtained at a store or shop; purchased or purchasable at a shop or store: as, store clothes; store teeth (humorously used for false teeth). This word in rural or frontier use is commonly opposed to home-made, and implies preference: as, stylish store curtains; in town use it is usually opposed to made to order, and implies disparagement: as, clumsy store boots. [Colloq., U. S.]—Store casemate. Same as barrack casemate (which see, under barrack).—Store cattle, lean cattle bought for fattening by squatters who find that they have more grass than the natural increase of their herd requires. [Australia.]

Oh, we are not fit for anything but store cattle: we are all blady grass. Mrs. Campbell Praed, Head Station, p. 74.

Store pay, payment for country produce, labor, etc., by goods from a store, in lieu of cash; barter. [Rural, U. S.]

See, a girl has just arrived with a pot of butter to trade off for store pay. She wants in exchange a yard of calico, a quarter of tea, . . . and a bottle of rum.
Capt. Priest's Adventures, p. 54. (Bartlett.) store[4]†, n. A Middle English form of stour[3].

store[5] (stōr), n. [< F. store, a window-shade, spring-blind, roller-blind, < L. storea, a mat.] A window-shade: the French term used in English for such a shade when of decorative character, especially when of French manufacture.

store-city (stōr'sit″i), n. In the Old Testament, a city provided with stores of provisions for troops.

He [Solomon] built Tadmor in the wilderness, and all the store cities, which he built in Hamath.
2 Chron. viii. 4.

store-farm (stōr'färm), n. A stock-farm; a cattle-farm; a sheep-farm. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xlii. [Scotch.]

store-farmer (stōr'fär″mėr), n. Same as stock-farmer. [Scotch.]

storehouse (stōr'hous), n. 1. A house in which things are stored; a building for the storing of grain, food-stuffs, or goods of any kind; a magazine; a repository; a warehouse; a store.

They ne'er cared for us yet: suffer us to famish, and their store-houses crammed with grain.
Shak., Cor., i. 1. 83.

2†. A store; a plentiful supply.

And greatly joyed merry tales to faine,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vi. 6.

storekeeper (stōr′kē″pėr), n. 1. One who has the care or charge of a store or stores. (a) A shopkeeper. [U. S.] (b) An officer in a dockyard in charge of stores and storehouses; the superintendent of a storehouse in a navy-yard. (c) Milit., a commissioned officer in the United States army who has charge of the military stores at depots and arsenals. A military storekeeper is an officer of the quartermaster's department; an ordnance storekeeper, of the ordnance department; a medical storekeeper, of the medical department. These officers have the rank and pay of mounted captains in the army, but are not in the line of promotion.

2. Figuratively, an article in a stock of goods that remains so long on hand as to be unsalable. [Slang, U. S.]

storekeeping (stōr′kē″ping), n. The act of taking charge of stores or a store.

storeman (stōr′man), n.; pl. storemen (-men). 1. A man in charge of stores or supplies: as, the storeman's stock of bolts and screws.—2. A man employed in a storehouse for the work of storing goods.

The question of wages of shifters and store-men has been referred to arbitration.
Weekly Echo, Sept. 5, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.) store-master (stōr′mās″tėr), n. The tenant of a store-farm. [Scoteh.]

storer (stōr′ėr), n. [< store[3] + -er[1].] One who lays up or accumulates a store.

Storeria (stō-rē′ri-ä), n. [NL. (Baird and Girard, 1853), named after Dr. D. H. Storer, an American naturalist.] A genus of harmless colubriform serpents of North America, of the family Colubridæ. Two common species of the United States are S. dekayi, and S. occipitomaculata, the spotted-neck snake.

store-room (stōr′röm), n. A room set apart for stores or supplies, especially table and household supplies.

Miss Jenkyns asked me if I would come and help her to tie up the preserves in the store-room.
Mrs. Gaskell, Cranford, ii.

store-ship (stōr′ship), n. A government vessel detailed to carry stores for the use of a fleet or garrison, or to store them in foreign ports.

storey, n. See story[2].

storge (stôr′gē), n. [< Gr. στοργή, natural love or affection, < στέργειν, love, as parents their children.] The strong instinctive affection of animals for their young; hence, the attachment of parents for children, or of children for parents; parental or filial love. [Rare and technical.]

In the storge, or natural affections of divers animals to their young ones, . . . there appears in the parent manifest tokens of solicitousness, skill, and in some cases courage too. Boyle, Christian Virtuoso, pt. II. aph. viii.

The innocence of infancy . . . is the cause of the love called storge. Swedenborg, Conjugial Love (trans.), § 395.

storial† (stō′ri-al), a. [ME. storial, an aphetic form of historial.] 1. Historical.

This is storial sooth, it is no fable.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 702.

2. Of the nature of a story.

He shal fynde ynowe, grete and smale,
Of storiol thyng that toucheth gentillesse,
And eek moralitee and hoolynesse.
Chaucer, Prol. to Miller's Tale, l. 71.

storiated (stō′ri-ā-ted), a. [Cf. historiated.] Decorated with elaborate ornamental and illustrative designs, as title-pages of books in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, in which the ornamentation often covered the entire page.

The mania for the acquisition of storiated title-pages has led to the cruel spoliation of thousands of rare old books.
London Art Jour., No. 51, p. 91.

storied[1] (stō′rid), a. [< story[1] + -ed[2].] 1. Celebrated or recorded in story or history; associated with stories, tales, or legends.

To-morrow hurry through the fields
Of Flanders to the storied Rhine!
M. Arnold, Calais Sands.

2. Adorned with scenes from a story, or from history, executed by means of sculpture, painting, weaving, needlework, or other art: as, storied tapestries.

Storied windows, richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light.
Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 159.

Can storied urn, or animated bust,
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Gray, Elegy.

storied[2] (stō′rid), a. [Formerly also storeyed; < story[2] + -ed[2].] Having stories or stages: as, a four-storied building.

storier (stō′ri-ėr), n. [< story[1] + -er[1].] A relater of stories; a story-teller; a historian.

The honeyed rhythm of this melodious storier.
J. Rogers Rees, Poetry of the Period (Bookworm, p. 65).

storify[1]† (stō′ri-fī), v. t. [< story[1] + L. facere, make, do: see -fy.] To make or tell stories about.

storify[2] (stō′ri-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. storified, ppr. storifying. [< story[2] + L. facere, make, do: see -fy.] To range, as beehives over and under one another, in the form of stories. Phin, Diet. Apiculture, p. 67. [Rare.]

storiologist (stō-ri-ol′ō-jist), n. [< storiology + -ist.] A student or expounder of popular tales and legends; one who is versed in folk-lore. [Recent.]

The resuscitation of the roe from its bones will recall to storiologists similar incidents in European and especially Scandinavian and Icelandic folk-lore.
N. and Q., 7th ser., I. 484, note.

storiology (stō-ri-ol′ō-ji), n. [< E. story[1] + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of folk-lore; the study of popular tales and legends. [Recent.]

For Chaucer's direct source, it might be well worth while for students of comparative storiology who have leisure . . . to examine these and similar monkish collections of exempla [of the thirteenth century].
N. and Q., 7th ser., I. 485.

stork (stôrk), n. [< ME. stork, < AS. storc = D. MLG. LG. stork = OHG. storah, MHG. G. storch (also OHG. storc, MHG. G. dial. stork) = Icel. storkr = Sw. Dan. stork, a stork; cf. OBulg. strŭkŭ, Bulg. strŭk, shtrŭk = Serv. shtrk = ORuss. sterkŭ, Russ. sterkhŭ = Lith. starkus = Lett. stārks = Hung. eszterag = Albanian sterkjok, a stork. The relation of the Teut. to the Slav. and other forms is undetermined. Cf. Gr. τόργος, a vulture, τόργος ὑγρόφωτις, a swan.] A large altricial grallatorial bird, of the family Ciconiidæ and especially of the subfamily Ciconiinæ (which see for technical characters). The stork is related to the herons, spoonbills, and ibises, but not very closely to the cranes. There are several species, found in nearly all temperate and tropical regions. They are tall and stately birds, equaling the cranes and larger herons in stature, but are readily distinguished by many technical characters. Storks are wading birds, frequenting the vicinity of water; but some of them become semi-domesticated, and often nest on buildings. Their fidelity and amiability are traditional. They feed chiefly on reptiles (as snakes and lizards), amphibians (as frogs), fishes, mollusks, and worms, but also sometimes capture small quadrupeds and birds. The best-known species is the common white stork of Europe, Ciconia alba; when adult, it is pure-white with black-tipped wings and reddish bill and feet; it is about 3½ feet long, and stands 4 feet high. The black stork of the same country is C. nigra, a rarer species. Various birds of different countries, technically storks, are known by other names, as adjutant, marabou, maguari, jabiru, shell-ibis, and wood-ibis. See these words, and cuts under adjutant-bird, Ciconiidæ, Grallæ, jabiru, openbill, Pelargomorphæ, simbil, and Tantalus.—Black-necked stork, Xenorhynchus australis, of India and Australia, related to the American jabiru and African saddle-billed stork, the three being often placed in the genus Mycteria.—Black stork. See def.—Episcopal stork, Dissoura episcopus. See cut under Pelargomorphæ.—Giant stork, the adjutant-bird.—Hair-crested stork, Leptoptilus (Cranopelargus) javanicus, a small and quite distinct species of marabou, related to the adjutant, found in parts of India, Java, Sumatra, etc.—Maguari stork, Euxenura maguari. See maguari.—Marabou stork. See marabou, and cut under adjutant-bird.—Pouched stork. Same as adjutant-bird.—Saddle-billed stork, Ephippiorhynchus senegalensis. See the generic name.—White-bellied stork, Sphenorhynchus abdimi. See cut under simbil.—White stork. See def.

stork-billed (stôrk′bild), a. Having a bill like a stork's, as a kingfisher of the genus Pelargopsis. See cut under Pelargopsis.

stork's-bill (stôrks′bil), n. 1. A plant of the genus Erodium, particularly the heron's-bill, E. cicutarium (also called hemlock stork's-bill), a low bushy herb with pinnate leaves, a mostly Old World plant, abundantly naturalized in many parts of the United States, perhaps indigenous in the west. See alfilerilla. — 2. A plant of the related genus Pelargonium, which includes the geraniums, etc., of gardens.

Flowering Plant of Stork's-bill (Erodium cicutarium). a, one of the carpels.

storm (stôrm), n. [< ME. storm, < AS. storm, storm, = OS. MD. D. MLG. LG. storm = OHG. MHG. G. sturm = Icel. stormr = Sw. Dan. storm (not in Goth.; cf. It. stormo, a fight, It. dial. sturm = Pr. estorn = OF. estour, estor, estur (> E. stour[3], a tumult, stir) = Ir. Gael. stoirm = Bret. stourm, a storm, all < Teut.); perhaps, with formative -m, from the root of stir[1] (√ stur, √ stor) or of L. sternere, strew: see stir[1], strew.] 1. A disturbance of the normal condition of the atmosphere, manifesting itself by winds of unusual direction or force, or by rain (often with lightning and thunder), snow, or hail, or by several of these phenomena in combination; a tempest: also used with reference to precipitation only, as in hail-storm, thunder-storm, snow-storm. A storm is usually associated with an area of low pressure, and its intensity or violence depends upon the steepness of the density-gradients which produce it. The terms area of low pressure, cyclone, cyclonic storm, and storm are often used interchangeably. In area of low pressure the primary reference is to the state of the barometer, in cyclone it is to the gyratory character of the atmospheric circulation, and in storm to the disturbance of the weather: but each term is extended to include the whole of the attendant phenomena.

And there arose a great storm of wind. Mark iv. 37.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm.
Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 29.

2. Specifically—(a) Technically, in nautical use, a wind of force 11 on the Beaufort scale, being that in which a man-of-war could carry only storm-staysails.

The wind suddenly shifted in a heavy rain squall from SSE. to W., and increased to a storm; at 12 noon the barometer read lowest, and the wind was blowing a storm.
Monthly Weather Review (1887), p. 40.

(b) A fall of snow. (c) A prolonged frost. [Prov. Eng.] Hence, figuratively—3. A tempestuous flight or descent of objects fiercely hurled: as, a storm of missiles.

No drizzling shower,
But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire.
Milton, P. L., vi. 546.

4. A violent disturbance or agitation of human society; a civil, political, or domestic commotion; a tumult; a clamor.

I will stir up in England some black storm
Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven or hell.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 349.

5. A destructive or overwhelming calamity; extremity of adversity or disaster.

Having passed many bitter brunts and blastes of vengesunce, they dread no stormes of Fortune.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., February, Embleme.

An old man, broken with the storms of state.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 2. 21.

6. A vehement or passionate outbreak, as of some emotion, or of the expression of such emotion: as, a storm of indignation; a storm of applause; a storm of hisses.

Mark'd you not how her sister
Began to scold and raise up such a storm?
Shak., T. of the S., i. 1. 177.

Her bosom shaken with a sudden storm of sighs.
Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

7. Milit., a violent assault on a fortified place or strong position; a dashing attempt by troops to capture a fortified place, as by scaling the walls or forcing the gates.

How by storm the walls were won,
Or how the victor sacked and burnt the town.
Dryden.

Cyclonic storm, one that accompanies or is caused by a cyclone.—Electric storm. See electric.—Eye of a storm, the calm region at the center of a violent cyclonic storm, where the clouds clear away and blue sky appears—occurring mostly in the tropics, but also experienced more or less perfectly in higher latitudes. This phenomenon is due to the circumstance that the winds immediately bordering the central area blow circularly around it, leaving a region of calm. The centrifugal force of the wind intensifies the diminution of pressure, and develops a tendency toward a gently descending current from above, and a consequent clearing of the sky.—High-area storm, a storm associated with an area of high pressure.—Low-area storm. Same as cyclonic storm.—Magnetic, revolving, etc., storm. See the adjectives.—Storm and stress (a translation of the German Sturm und Drang, alluding to a drama by Klinger, "Sturm und Drang"), a name given to a period in German literary history (about 1770 to 1790) influenced by a group of younger writers whose works were characterized by passion and reaction from the old methods; hence, a proverbial phrase for unrest or agitation.—To take by storm. (a) Milit., to carry by assault. See def. 7.

The recollection of the victory of Roanoke imparted to the Federals that assurance which is a great element of success; they knew that a battery could be taken by storm.
Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), I. 587.

(b) To captivate or carry away by surprising or delighting: as, the new singer has taken the town by storm.—Wind-storm, a storm with heavy wind, without precipitation.=Syn. 1. Tempest, etc. See wind[2].

storm (stôrm), v. [< ME. stormen, sturmen, < AS. styrman = D. MLG. LG. stormen = OHG. sturman, MHG. G. stürmen = Icel. styrma = Sw. storma = Dan. storme, storm; cf. It. stormire, make a noise, stormeggiare, ring the storm-bell, throng together; from the noun.] I. intrans. 1. To blow with great force; also, to rain, hail, snow, or sleet, especially with violence: used impersonally: as, it storms.—2. To fume; scold; rage; be in a violent agitation or passion; raise a tempest.

> The Dolphin then, discrying Land (at last),
> Stormes with himselfe for hauing made such haste.
> Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 5.

> When . . . I see a gentleman lose his money with serenity, I recognise in him all the great qualities of a philosopher. If he storms and invokes the gods, I lament that he is not placed at the head of a regiment.
> Steele, Guardian, No. 174.

3. To move with violence; rush angrily or impetuously: as, he stormed about the room.

> Bobby Wick stormed through the tents of his Company.
> R. Kipling, Only a Subaltern.

II. trans. To attack and attempt to take possession of, as by scaling walls or forcing gates or breaches; assault: as, to storm a fortified town: often used figuratively.

> With eager warmth they fight, ambitions all > Who first shall storm the breach, or mount the wall.
> Addison, To the King.

storm-area (stôrm'ā″rē-ā), n. The area covered by a storm; the region within the closed isobars surrounding a center of low pressure. In the United States this region is generally an oval whose length is, on the average, nearly twice its width. Its longest diameter may be turned in any azimuth, but is most frequently directed to a point between north and north 60° east. Over the ocean storm-areas are generally nearly circular.

storm-beat, storm-beaten (stôrm'bēt, -bē″tn), a. Beaten or damaged by storms.

storm-belt (stôrm'belt), n. A belt of maximum storm-frequency. On charts containing a large number of storm-tracks the paths are found to be mostly divided into several well-defined groups whose loci form natural storm-belts. In the United States three storm-belts are distinguished: (1) that of storms which appear in the northwest British provinces, advance eastward to the lake region, and thence down the St. Lawrence valley; (2) that of storms which originate in the southwest near the Gulf of Mexico, and move northeastward to the lakes; (3) that of the West India hurricanes, which first move westerly, and then northeastward along the Atlantic coast. Over Europe three storm-belts may be distinguished: one lying across the northern Mediterranean, one across the North Sea and the Baltic, and one northeast and southwest off the coast of Norway and the British Isles. Also called storm-zone.

storm-bird (stôrm'bėrd), n. 1. A petrel; one of the birds of the family Procellariidæ, including the albatrosses, fulmars, etc., as well as those to which the name petrel is more commonly applied; specifically, the stormy petrel. See cut under petrel.—2. A bird that indicates or seems to foretell bad weather by its cries or other actions, as a storm-cock. Compare rain-bird.

storm-bound (stôrm'bownd), a. Confined or delayed by storms; relating to hindrance by storms: as, we were storm-bound in port.

> Weeks of storm-bound inactivity.
> Carlyle, To John Carlyle, Feb. 11, 1830.

storm-card (stôrm'kärd), n. A transparent card containing lines to represent the wind-directions in all quarters of a cyclonic storm: devised by Reid as an aid to seamen in avoiding dangerous storms. When the card is drawn to suitable scale, and placed over the position of a vessel on a chart, so that the observed wind-direction and the same wind-direction on the card are brought into coincidence, the bearing of the center of the card from the point of observation indicates the direction of the center of the storm. Knowing the direction of the storm-center, its probable path can be laid down with considerable precision, and the best course for the vessel may then be determined. It is now known that a storm-card cannot universally be used to discover the bearing of a storm-center, for the angle between the wind and the radius varies in different latitudes, and is different at different distances from the center. Also called storm-circle, storm-compass.

storm-center (stôrm'sen″tėr), n. The position of lowest pressure in a cyclonic storm. In the typical case the wind throughout the storm-area blows spirally inward toward the storm-center, changing from a radial to an approximately circular path, and increasing in force as the center is approached. The center itself is an area of comparative calm, accompanied by a partial or complete clearing away of the clouds, and a mild temperature. (See eye of a storm, under storm.) Violent ocean storms frequently exemplify this typical description; but in land storms, which present irregularities of all kinds, these conditions are in general only partially realized.

storm-circle (stôrm'sėr″kl), n. Same as storm-card.

storm-cloud (stôrm'klond), n. A cloud that brings or threatens storm.

storm-cock (stôrm'kok), n. 1. The fieldfare, Turdus pilaris; also, the mistlethrush, T. viscivorus.

> Its song . . . it [the missel] begins . . . very early in the spring, often with the new year, in blowing showery weather, which makes the inhabitants of Hampshire call it the storm-cock. Pennant, Brit. Zoöl. (ed. 1776), I. 302.

2. The green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis. [Prov. Eng. in all uses.]

storm-compass (stôrm'kum″pas), n. Same as storm-card.

storm-cone (stôrm'kōn), n. A cone consisting of tarred canvas extended on a frame 3 feet high and 3 feet wide at the base, used either alone or along with the drum as a storm-signal. See cut under storm-signal. [Eng.]

storm-current (stôrm'kur″ent), n. A surface sea-current produced by the force of the wind in a storm. Such a current frequently outruns its generating storm, and affords the first announcement thereof on a distant shore by increasing there the intensity of the usual current or by changing its set.

storm-door (stôrm'dōr), n. An outer or additional door for protection against inclement weather: in general used temporarily, for the winter only.

storm-drum (stôrm'drum), n. A cylinder of tarred canvas extended on a hoop 3 feet high and 3 feet wide, hoisted in conjunction with the cone as a storm-signal. See storm-signal. [Eng.]

stormer (stôr'mėr), n. [< storm + -er[1].] One who storms; specifically (milit.), a member of an assaulting party.

storm-finch (stôrm'finch), n. See finch[1], and cut under petrel.

storm-flag (stôrm'flag), n. See storm-signal.

stormful (stôrm'fûl), a. [< storm + -ful.] Abounding with storms.

> They know what spirit brews the stormful day.
> Collins, Ode on the Popular Superstitions of the Highlands.

stormfulness (stôrm'fûl-nes), n. The state of being stormful; stormy character or condition. Coleridge.

storm-glass (stôrm'glȧs), n. A hermetically sealed tube containing an alcoholic solution of camphor, together with crystals of nitrate of potash and ammonium chlorid: so named because an increase in the amount of the precipitate was supposed to indicate the approach of stormy weather. The changes in the amount of the precipitate are due solely to variations of temperature, and the instrument is simply a chemical thermoscope.

storm-house (stôrm'hous), n. A temporary shelter for men employed in constructing or guarding railroads, or other works in exposed situations.

stormily (stôr'mi-li), adv. In a stormy manner; tempestuously.

storminess (stôr'mi-nes), n. The state of being stormy, or of being agitated or visited by violent winds; tempestuousness; impetuousness; violence.

storming-party (stôr'ming-pär″ti), n. Milit., the party to whom is assigned the duty of making the first assault in storming an enemy's works.

storm-kite (stôrm'kīt), n. A device, on the principle of a kite, for carrying a rope from a ship to the shore in a storm.

stormless (stôrm'les), a. [< storm + -less.] Free from storms; without storm.

> Our waking thoughts > Suffer a stormless shipwreck in the pools
> Of sullen slumber. Tennyson, Harold, v. 1.

storm-pane (stôrm'pān), n. An extra square of glass fitted in a frame provided with clamps, used to fit over a window in an exposed building, as a lighthouse, in case of breakage.

storm-path (stôrm'pȧth), n. Same as storm-track.

storm-pavement (stôrm'pāv″ment), n. In hydraul. engin., a sloping stone pavement lining the sea-face of a pier or breakwater. E. H. Knight.

storm-petrel (stôrm'pet″rel), n. A small blackish petrel, belonging to the genus Procellaria as now restricted, or to one of a few closely related genera, as Oceanites, Cymochorea, and Halocyptena. The three best-known storm-petrels are Procellaria pelagica, Cymochorea leucorrhoa, and Oceanites oceanicus. All are also called Mother Carey's chickens. See cut under petrel. The form stormy petrel is also common.

storm-proof (stôrm'prōf), a. Proof against storms or stress of weather.

storm-sail (stôrm'sāl), n. A sail made of very stout canvas, of smaller size than the corresponding sail in ordinary use, set in squally or heavy weather.

storm-signal (stôrm'sig″nal), n. A signal displayed on sea-coasts and lake-shores for indicating the expected prevalence of high winds or storms. For this purpose flags and lanterns are used in the United States, and a cone and drum in Great Britain. In the practice of the United States Weather Bureau, a red flag with black center is displayed by day when a violent storm is expected, and an additional pennant indicates the quadrant of the probable wind-direction, as follows: red pennant above flag, northeasterly winds; red pennant below flag, southeasterly winds; white pennant above flag, northwesterly winds; white pennant below flag, southwesterly winds. By night, a red light indicates easterly winds, and a white light above a red light indicates westerly winds. In the British system the inverted cone indicates a south gale, the upright cone a north gale, while the addition of the drum indicates that the winds are expected to be of marked violence. See weather-signal.

English Storm-signal, indicating dangerous winds from the south.

storm-stay (stôrm'stā), n. A stay on which a storm-sail is set.

storm-stayed (stôrm'stād), a. Prevented from proceeding on, or interrupted in the course of, a journey or voyage by storms or stress of weather.

storm-stone (stôrm'stōn), n. Same as thunderbolt.

storm-tossed (stôrm'tost), a. Tossed about by storm or tempest: as, a storm-tossed bark; hence, agitated by conflicting passions or emotions: as, his storm-tossed spirit is at rest.

storm-track (stôrm'trak), n. The path traversed by the center of a cyclonic storm. North of the parallel of 30° storm-tracks almost invariably pursue an easterly course, having generally a northerly inclination. Within the tropics storm-tracks almost invariably tend westerly, generally with an inclination toward the pole; they have rarely, if ever, been traced nearer to the equator than 6°. Continuous storm-tracks are sometimes traced across North America, the Atlantic ocean, and Europe; but in general less than 12 per cent. of the storms leaving America reach the European coast.

storm-wind (stôrm'wind), n. The wind or blast of a storm or tempest; a hurricane; also, a wind that brings a storm.

> Then comes, with an awful roar, > Gathering and sounding on,
> The storm-wind from Labrador,
> The wind Euroclydon,
> The storm-wind!
> Longfellow, Midnight Mass.

storm-window (stôrm'win″dō), n. 1. An outer window to protect the inner from inclemency of the weather.—2. A window raised from the roof and slated above and on each side.

stormy (stôr'mi), a. [< ME. stormi, < AS. stormig (= D. Sw. stormig = MHG. sturmic, G. stürmig), < storm, storm: see storm.] 1. Characterized by storm or tempest, or by high winds; tempestuous; boisterous: as, a stormy season.

> No cloudy show of stormy blustering weather
> Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear.
> Shak., Lucrece, l. 115.

> His trumpet has often been heard by the neighbors, of a stormy night, mingling with the howling of the blast.
> Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 448.

2. Characterized by violent disturbances or contentions; agitated; turbulent.

> For love is yet the moste stormy lyf,
> Right of hymself, that ever was begonne.
> Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 778.

> His [Warren Hastings's] administration, so eventful and stormy, closed in almost perfect quiet.
> Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

3. Violent; passionate; easily roused to anger or strife.

> The lives of all your loving complices
> Lean on your health; the which, if you give o'er
> To stormy passion, must perforce decay.
> Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 1. 165.

> The stormy chiefs of a desert but extensive domain.
> Scott.

4. Associated with storms, as seen in them or supposed to presage them: specifically, in ornithology, noting certain petrels.—Stormy petrel. Same as storm-petrel.—Syn. 1. Windy, gusty, squally, blustering. See wind[2].

storm-zone (stôrm'zōn), n. Same as storm-belt.

> The regions between 40° and 70° latitude are the great storm zones of the world.
> R. Hinman, Eclectic Physical Geography, p. 94.

stornello (stôr-nel'lō), n.; pl. stornelli (-li). [It.] A form of Italian folk-song, usually improvised and either sentimental or satirical.

The Tuscan and Umbrian stornello is much shorter [than the rispetto], consisting, indeed, of a hemistich naming some natural object which suggests the motive of the little poem. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 272.

Storthing (stōr'ting), n. [< Dan. Norw. storthing (= Icel. stōrthing), great or high court, parliament, < stor (= Sw. stor = Icel. stōrr = AS. stōr, > E. stoor), great, + thing = Sw. ting = Icel. thing, assembly, meeting, = AS. thing: see *thing*².] The national parliament of Norway. It is composed of 114 members, who are chosen by indirect election. The Storthing is convened every year, and divides itself into an upper house (Lagthing) and a lower house (Odelsthing). The former is composed of one fourth, and the latter of three fourths of the members. See Lagthing and Odelsthing.

storvent†. Preterit plural and past participle of Middle English sterven, die. See starve.

story[1] (stō'ri), n.; pl. stories (-riz). [< ME. storie, storye (cf. It. storia, < LL. storia), an aphetic form of istorie, historie, history: see history.] 1. A connected account or narration, oral or written, of events of the past; history.

The prime vertue of Story is verity.
Howell, Vocall Forrest, Pref.

She was well versed in the Greek and Roman story, and was not unskilled in that of France and England.
Swift, Death of Stella.

There 's themes enough in Caledonian story
Would show the tragic muse in a' her glory.
Burns, Prologue for Mr. Sutherland's Benefit.

2. An account of an event or incident; a relation; a recital: as, stories of bravery.

A lered man, to lere the [teach thee]
. . . of gode Friday the storye.
Piers Plowman (B), xiii. 447.

And tell sad stories of the death of kings;
How some have been deposed, some slain in war.
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 2. 156.

To make short of a long story, . . . I have been bred up from childhood with great expectations.
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, vi.

3. In lit., a narrative, either true or fictitious, in prose or verse; a tale, written in a more or less imaginative style, of that which has happened or is supposed to have happened; specifically, a fictitious tale, shorter and less elaborate than a novel; a short romance; a folk-tale.

Call up him that left half-told
The story of Cambuscan bold,
Of Camball and of Algarsife,
And who had Canace to wife.
Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 110.

Voltaire has a curious essay to show that most of our best modern stories and plots originally belonged to the eastern nations. I. D'Israeli, Curios. of Lit., I. 174.

4. The facts or events in a given case considered in their sequence, whether related or not; the experience or career of an individual: as, the story of a foundling; his is a sad story.

Weep with me, all you that read
This little story.
B. Jonson, Epitaph on Salathiel Pavy.

There was not a grave in the church-yard but had its story. Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 205.

5. An anecdote: as, a speech abounding in good stories.

I will go yet further, and affirm that the success of a story very often depends upon the make of the body, and formation of the features, of him who relates it.
Steele, Guardian, No. 42.

Sometimes I recorded a story, a jest, or a pun for consideration. O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LXVI. 666.

6. A report; an account; a statement; anything told: often used slightingly: as, according to his story, he did wonders.

Fol. You confess, then, you picked my pocket?
Prince. It appears so by the story.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 3. 191.

All for a slanderous story, that cost me many a tear.
Tennyson, The Grandmother.

7. A falsehood; a lie; a fib. [Colloq. and euphemistic.]

I wrote the lines; . . . owned them; he told stories. (Signed) Thomas Ingoldsby.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 116, note.

8. The plot or intrigue of a novel or drama: as, many persons read a novel, or are interested in a play, only for the story.

It is thought clever to write a novel with no story at all, or at least with a very dull one.
R. L. Stevenson, A Gossip on Romance.

9†. A scene from history, legend, or romance, depicted by means of painting, sculpture, needlework, or other art of design.

The walles also of all the body of the Chirche, from the pyllers to the Rooff, be poyntyd with storys from the begynnyng of the world.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 49.

To erect greate Chapells, . . . to paint faire stories, and to make rich ornaments.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 341.

There 's his chamber, . . . 'tis painted about with the story of the Prodigal, fresh and new.
Shak., M. W. of W., iv. 5. 8.

Blind story, a pointless tale.—To be in a or one story†, to be in the same story†, to agree in testimony; give the same account.

So I find they are all in a story.
Sheridan, The Duenna, ii. 3.

=Syn. 1. Relation, Narration, etc. (see account); record, chronicle, annals.—2. Anecdote, Story. See anecdote.—3. Tale, fiction, fable, tradition, legend.—4. Memoir, life, biography.

story[1] (stō'ri), v.; pret. and pp. storied, ppr. storying. [< story[1], n. Cf. history, n.] I. trans. 1. To tell or describe in historical relation; make the subject of a narrative, tale, or legend; relate.

Pigmies (those diminutive people, or sort of apes or satyrs, so much resembling the little men storied under that name). Evelyn, True Religion, I. 261.

What the sage poets, taught by the heavenly Muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras, and enchanted isles.
Milton, Comus, l. 516.

2. To ornament with sculptured or painted scenes from history or legend. Compare storied[2].

II. intrans. To relate; narrate.

Cupid, if storying Legends tell aright,
Once framed a rich Elixir of Delight.
Coleridge, Composition of a Kiss.

story[2] (stō'ri), n. [Sometimes storey, early mod. E. storie, stourie; < ME. story, prob. < OF. estoree*, a building, a thing built, < estoree, fem. pp. of estorer, build, < L. instaurare, erect, build, etc.: see store[3], v.] 1†. A building; an edifice.

Hii [they] bygonne her heye tounes strengthy [strengthen] vaste aboute,
Her castles & storys, that hii myghte be ynne in doute [danger]. Rob. of Gloucester, p. 181.

2. A stage or floor of a building; hence, a subdivision of the height of a house; a set of rooms on the same level or floor. A story comprehends the distance from one floor to another: as, a story of nine, twelve, or sixteen feet elevation.

They founde the kyng in his pallaice sittynge vppon a floure or stourie made of the leaues of date trees wrought after a curious diuise lyke a certeyne kynde of mattea.
R. Eden, tr. of Antonio Pigafetta (First Books on America, [ed. Arber, p. 257).

Upon the ground storey a fair gallery, open, upon pillars; and upon the third storey likewise an open gallery upon pillars, to take the prospect and freshness of the garden. Bacon, Building (ed. 1887).

Attic story. See attic[2], 1.—Mezzanine story. Same as entresol.—The upper story, the brain; the wits. [Familiar and ludicrous.]

He 's a good sort o' man, for all he 's not overburthen'd i' th' upper storey. George Eliot, Amos Barton, i.

story-book (stō'ri-bůk), n. A book containing one or more stories or tales; a printed collection of short tales.

If you want to make presents of story-books to children, his [Richter's] are the best you can now get.
Ruskin, Elements of Drawing, App.

story-post (stō'ri-pōst), n. In building, an upright post supporting a beam on which rests a floor or a wall, as when the whole front of a ground floor is glazed.

story-rod (stō'ri-rod), n. A wooden strip used in setting up a staircase. It is equal in height to the staircase, and is divided according to the number of stairs.

story-teller (stō'ri-tel″ėr), n. 1. One who tells stories, true or fictitious, whether orally or in writing. Specifically—(a) One whose calling is the recitation of tales in public: as, the story-tellers of Arabia.

"Master," said he [Achmet], "I know many stories, such as the story-tellers relate in the coffee-houses of Cairo."
B. Taylor, Journey to Central Africa, xix.

(b) One given to relating anecdotes: as, a good story-teller at a dinner-table.

Good company will be no longer pestered with dull, dry, tedious storytellers. Swift, Polite Conversation, Int.

(c) One who tells falsehoods; a fibber. [Colloq. and euphemistic.]

Becky gave her brother-in-law a bottle of white wine, some that Rawdon had brought with him from France, . . . the little story-teller said.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xliv.

story-telling (stō'ri-tel″ing), n. 1. The act or art of relating stories, true or fictitious.

Story-telling . . . is not perfect without proper gesticulations of the body, which naturally attend such merry emotions of the mind. Steele, Guardian, No. 42.

2. The telling of fibs; lying. [Colloq. and euphemistic.]

story-writer (stō'ri-rī″tėr), n. 1. A writer of stories.

The story-writer's and play-writer's danger is that they will get their characters mixed, and make A say what B ought to have said.
O. W. Holmes, Atlantic Monthly, LXVI. 664.

2†. A historian; a chronicler.

Rathumus the storywriter, and Semellius the scribe, . . . and the judges. 1 Esd. ii. 17.

stosh (stosh), n. [Origin obscure.] Fish-offal; gurry; especially, a thick paste made by grinding slivers in a bait-mill, and used as toll-bait; chum; pomace.

stot[1] (stot), n. [Early mod. E. also stotte; < ME. stot, stott, stotte, a horse, a bullock; cf. Icel. stūtr, a bull, the butt-end of a horn, a stumpy thing, = Sw. stut, a bullock, also a blow, bang, dial. a young ox, a young man, = Norw. stut, a bullock, also an ox-horn, = Dan. stud, a bullock; prob. lit. 'pusher,' from the root of D. stooten = G. stossen, push, thrust, strike, = Icel. stauta, strike, beat, stutter, = Sw. stöta = Dan. stöde, strike, push, thrust, = Goth. stautan, strike. Cf. stoat, stote[1].] 1†. A horse; a stallion.

This reve sat upon a ful good stot,
That was al pomely grey and highte Scot.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 615.

2. A young ox; a steer.

And Grace gaue Pieres of his goodnesse foure stottis, Al that his oxen eryed they to harwe after.
Piers Plowman (B), xix. 262.

To procure restitution in integrum of every stirk and stot that the chief . . . and his clan had stolen since the days of Malcolm Canmore. Scott, Waverley, xv.

The woman would work—ay, and get up at any hour; and the strength of a stot she had.
W. Black, Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 889.

3. A weasel; a stoat. See cut under stoat.

Lamb, wolf, fox, leopard, minx, stot, miniver.
Middleton, Triumphs of Love and Antiquity.

[The name was formerly applied in contempt to a human being.

"Nay, olde stot, that is not myn entente," Quod this somonour, "for to repente me."
Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 332.]

stot[2] (stot), v. i.; pret. and pp. stotted, ppr. stotting. [Formerly stote; < ME. stoten; = D. stooten, push, etc.: see stot[1], and cf. stotter, stut, stutter[1].] 1. To stumble; walk irregularly; bounce in walking. Compare stoit. [Prov. Eng.]

They stotted along side by side.
Miss Ferrier, Inheritance, ii. 367.

2. To rebound, as a ball. [Prov. Eng.]

stotay†, v. i. [ME. stotayen, stotaien, < OF. estoteier, estotier, estoutoier, etc., be thrown into disorder, tr. throw into disorder, maltreat (< estout, estot, etc., rash, bold, stout: see stout[1]), but in sense confused with stoten, stumble: see stot[2].] To stumble; stagger.

Than he stotays for made, and alle his strenghe faylez, Lokes upe to the lyfte, and alle his lyre chaunges!
Downne he sweys fulle swythe, and in a swoune fallys!
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 4272.

stote[1], n. See stoat.

stote[2]†, v. See stot[2] and stut[1].

stoter†, v. i. An obsolete form of stotter.

stoteye†, n. [ME., < OF. estotie, estoutie, estutie, boldness, rashness, < estout, estot, bold, stout: see stout[1].] Cunning; stratagem.

Hade he had his ost he wold [haue] a-saide there
To haue with stoteye & strengthe stoutli hire wonne.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4985.

stotter (stot'ėr), v. [< ME. stoteren; freq. of stot[2]. Cf. stutter[1].] I. intrans. To stumble. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. To affect with staggers.

He'd tell what bullock's fate was tragick
So right, some thought he dealt in magick;
And as well knew, by wisdom outward,
What ox must fall, or sheep be stotered.
D'Urfey, Colin's Walk, i. (Davies.)

stouk, n. An obsolete or dialectal form of stook.

stound[1]† (stound), n. [< ME. stounde, stund, stunt, stunde, < AS. stund, a time, space of time, season, = OS. stunda = OFries. stunde, stonde = MD. stonde, a time, while, moment, D. stond, a moment, = MLG. stunde, stunt, LG. stunde = OHG. stunta, stunt, MHG. stunde, a time, while, hour, G. stunde, an hour, = Icel. Sw. Dan. stund, a time, while, hour, moment; perhaps orig. 'a point of resting or standing,' and akin to stand.] A time; a short time; a while; a moment; an instant.

Now lat us stynte of Troylus a stounde.
Chaucer, Troilus, i. 1086.

Soe death is heer & yonder in one stound.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 129.

Upon a stound, in a moment.

stound[2] (stound), v. i. [Also stoun; = Icel. stynja = Dan. stönne = D. stenen = LG. stenen, stönen, > G. stöhnen, groan. Cf. stound[2], n.] 1. To ache; smart. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To long;

pine: as, the cows stound for grass. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stound[2]†, n. [ME.: see stound[2], v.] Sorrow; grief; longing.

To putte awey the stoundes stronge,
Which in me lasten alle to longe.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 2639.

stound[3] (stound), v. t. [A var. of stun[1], as astound of astun, aston: see stun[1], stony[2], aston, astun, etc.] 1. To stun as with strokes; beat heavily: as, to stound the ears with the strokes of a bell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To astound; amaze.

Your wrath, weak boy? Tremble at mine unless Retraction follow close upon the heels
Of that late stounding insult.
Keats, Otho the Great, iv. 2. 95.

stound[3] (stound), n. [< stound[3], v.] 1. A stunning blow or stroke; the force of a blow.

Like to a mazed steare,
That yet of mortall stroke the stound doth beare, Spenser, F. Q., IV. vi. 37.

2. Astonishment; amazement; bewilderment.

Thus we stood as in a stound,
And wet with tears, like dew, the ground.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Prol., l. 23.

stound[4]† (stound). An obsolete past participle of stun[1]. Spenser.

stound[5] (stound), n. [A dial. var. of stond, stand: see stand, n.] A vessel to contain small beer. [Prov. Eng.]

stoundmeal† (stound'mēl), adv. [< ME. stoundmele, stoundemele, < AS. stundmǣlum, at times, < stund, time, space of time (see stound[1]), + mǣlum, dat. pl. of mǣl, a time: see meal[2], and cf. dropmeal, flockmeal, piecemeal, thousandmeal, etc.] At times; at intervals; from moment to moment: also used adjectively.

The lyf of love is fulle contrarie,
Which stoundemele can ofte varie.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 2304.

This wynde that moore and moore
Thus stoundemele encresseth in my face.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 674.

stoup. See stoop[1], stoop[2], stoop[4].

stour[1], a. See stoor[1].

stour[2], v. and n. See stoor[2].

stour[3] (stour or stör), n. [Early mod. E. also stowre, Sc. also sture; < ME. stour, store, stor, stur, < OF. estor, estour (also rarely estorme, also estormie, estourmie, esturmie), a tumult, conflict, assault, shock, battle, = Pr. estor = It. stormo, dial. sturm, tumult, noise, bustle, throng, troop, band, < OHG. sturm, storm, battle, = E. storm: see storm. For the loss of the final m in OF., cf. OF. tour, turn, jour, day, etc., with loss of final n (see turn, tour[2]).] 1. Tumult; conflict; a warlike encounter; shock of arms; battle.

Men sen al day and reden ek in storyes
That after sharpe stoures ben oft victories.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1066.

His horsemen they raid sturdily,
And stude about him in the stoure.
Raid of the Reidswire (Child's Ballads, VI. 135).

2†. A fit; a paroxysm.

Which suddein fitt, and halfe extatick stoure,
When the two fearefull wemen saw, they grew Greatly confused in behaveoure.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iii. 50.

3†. Encounter; time or place of meeting.

Maidens blush when they kiss men;
So did Phillis at that stowre;
Her face was like the rose flower.
Greene, The Shepherd's Ode (trans.).

stour[4] (stour), n. [Also stower; < ME. stoure, stourre, < Icel. staurr, a stake, pale; perhaps akin to Gr. σταυρός, a stake, cross: see steer[1] and staurus.] 1. A stake.

And if he wille no te do soo, I salle late hym witt that ze salle sende a grete powere to his citee, and bryne it up stikke and stourre.
MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 41. (Halliwell.)

2. A round of a ladder.—3. A stave in the side of a wagon. Halliwell.—4. A long pole by which barges are propelled against the stream. Also called poy. [Prov. Eng. in all uses.]

Stourbridge clay. A refractory clay from Stourbridge, in Worcestershire, England, occurring in the coal-measures, extensively worked for the manufacture of fire-brick and crucibles.

stoured (stourd), a. [Early mod. E. stowered; < stour[4] + -ed[2].] Staked. [Prov. Eng.]

Standyng together at a comon wateryng place ther called Hedgedyke, lately stowered for catall to drynke at.
Archæologia, XXIII. 23. (Halliwell.) stourness†, stoury. Same as stoorness, stoory.

stout[1] (stout), a. and n. [< ME. stout, stowte, sometimes stought; < OF. stout, estout, estolt, estot, estut, F. dial. stout, proud, = Pr. estout, stout, bold, valiant, rash, impetuous, violent, < MD. stolt, D. stout, stout, bold, rash, also stupid (influenced by It. stolto, silly, < L. stultus: see stultify), = AS. stolt = OFries. stult = MLG. LG. stolt = OHG. MHG. G. stolz, proud (MHG. also foolish, due to the influence of the It. word), = Icel. stoltr = Sw. Dan. stolt, proud; perhaps akin to stilt. Hence ult. (< OF.) ME. stotay, stoteye.] I. a. 1. Bold; valiant; brave; daring.

So sterne he was & stoute & swiche st[r]okes lent;
Was non so stif stelen wedo that with-stod his wepen.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3535.

Verily Christian did here play the man, and showed himself as stout as Hercules could, had he been here.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 286.

Have you a stout heart? Nerves fit for sliding panels and tapestry? Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, xx.

2†. Proud; haughty.

I was hig of herte and stowte,
And in my clothing wondre gay.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 36.

As stout and proud as he were lord of all.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., i. 1. 187.

3. Firm; resolute; persistent; stubborn.

He was a great Becketist—viz, a stout opposer of Regal Power over Spiritual Persons.
Fuller, Worthies, Wilts, II. 467.

Shakespeare was Article XL. of stout old Doctor Portman's creed. Thackeray, Pendennis, ix.

4. Hardy; vigorous; lusty; sturdy.

The people of this part of Candia are stout men, and drive a great coasting trade round the island in small boats, by carrying wood, corn, and other merchandizes.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 241.

Seven braw fellows, stout and able
To serve their king and country weel.
Burns, Dedication to G. Hamilton.

5. Firm; sound; stanch; strong.

The stoutest vessel to the storm gave way.
Dryden, Æneid, i. 170.

6. Solid; substantial.

With blithe air of open fellowship,
Brought from the cupboard wine and stouter cheer.
Wordsworth, Excursion, ii.

7. Bulky in figure; thick-set; corpulent.

Mrs. Reed was rather a stout woman; but . . . she ran nimbly up the stair. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, iv.

=Syn. 1. Valorous, manful, gallant.—4 and 5. Stalwart, Sturdy, etc. See robust.

II. n. Strong ale or beer of any sort; hence, since the introduction of porter, porter of extra strength: as, Dublin stout.

The waiter's hands, that reach
To each his perfect pint of stout.
Tennyson, Will Waterproof.

stout[1] (stout), v. [< ME. stouten; < stout[1], a.] I. intrans. 1†. To be bold or defiant.

Lewed man, thou shalt cursyng doute,
And to thy prest thou shalt nat stoute.
MS. Harl. 1701, f. 72. (Halliwell.)

2. To persist; endure: with an impersonal it. [Prov. Eng.]

We stouted it out and lived.
Annals of Phila. and Penn., I. 385.

II.† trans. To dare; defy; resist.

For no man ful comunly
Besecheth a wyfe of foly,
But there the wyfe ys aboute
The gode man for to stoute.
MS. Harl. 1701, f. 20. (Halliwell.)

stout[2] (stout), n. [Also stut: < ME. stout, stut, < AS. stūt, a gnat.] 1. A gnat.—2. A gadfly. [Prov. Eng. in both uses.]—3†. A firefly or miller.

Pirausta, a fire-flye; . . . some call it a candle-flie, a stout, a miller-fowle, or bishop. Florio.

stout-dart (stout'därt), n. A British noctuid moth, Agrotis ravida.

stouten (stout'n), v. t. [< stout[1] + -en[1].] To make stout; strengthen. [Rare.]

The pronounced realist is a useful fellow-creature, but so also the pronounced idealist—stouten his work though you well may with a tincture of modern reality.
R. W. Gilder, New Princeton Rev., IV. 12.

stouth (stouth), n. [< ME. stouth, stealth, < Icel. stuldr = Sw. stöld, stealth: see stealth.] Theft; stealth; also, a clandestine transaction. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

Sum rownys till his fallow thaym betwene,
Hys mery stouth and pastyme lait gistrene.
Gavin Douglas, Æneid, xii., Prol., l. 212.

stouth-and-routh (stouth'and-routh'), n. [A Sc. riming formula, in which one of the words appears to be wrenched, as usual, from its lit. meaning: prob. orig. as if 'plunder and plenty,' i. e. much property acquired and inherited: stouth, theft, stealth (cf. stouthrief, robbery with violence, also provision, furniture); routh, plenty: see routh[3].] Plenty; abundance. [Scotch.]

It 's easy for your honour and the like n' you gentle folks to say sae, that hae stouth-and-routh, and fire and fending, and meat and claith, and sit dry and canny by the fireside. Scott, Antiquary, xl.

stout-hearted (stout'här"ted), a. Having a stout or brave heart; also, obstinate.

The stouthearted are spoiled; they have slept their sleep.
Ps. lxxvi. 5.

stout-heartedness (stout'här"ted-nes), n. The quality of being stout-hearted; courage; especially, moral courage.

If any one wants to see what German stout-heartedness, rectitude, and hard work could do for Syria, he had better go and live for a while in the German colony at Ha fa.
Contemporary Rev., LIV. 366.

stouthrief (stouth'rēf), n. [Also corruptly stouthrie; < stouth + reaf, Sc. rief, reif, robbery: see reaf.] In Scots law, theft accompanied by violence; robbery; burglary. The term is usually applied in cases in which robbery is committed within a dwelling-house.

stoutly (stout'li), adv. [< ME. stoutly; < stout + -ly[2].] In a stout or sturdy manner; with boldness, stanchness, or resolution.

stoutness (stout'nes), n. [< ME. stoutnes; < stout + -ness.] The state or quality of being stout, in any sense.

stove[1] (stōv), n. [Early mod. E. also stoore, rarely stouph; not found in ME. and rare in AS. (see below); < MD. stove, a heated room, bath-room, also (with dim. stofken) a foot-stove used by women, later D. stoof, a stove, furnace, = MLG. stove, a heated room, bath-room, in gen. a room, LG. stove, usually stave, a bath-room, in gen. a room, = OHG. stubā, stupā, MHG. stube, a heated room, a bath-room, G. stube, a room (cf. OF. estuve, F. étuve = Pr. estuba = Sp. Pg. estufa = It. stufa, a bath-room, hothouse, < OHG.), = AS. stofa, a bath-room (glossing L. balneum), = Icel. stofa, stufa, a bath-room with a stove, = Sw. stuga = Dan. stue, a room: cf. OBulg. istŭba, izba, a tent, Bulg. a hut, cellar, = Sloven. izba, jezba, a room, = Serv. izba, a room, = Bohem. izbo, jizba = Pol. izba, a bath-room, = Russ. istĭba, izba, a hut, dial. kitchen, = Albanian isbe, a cellar, = Rum. izbe, a stove, = Turk. izbe, a cellar, = OPruss. stubo = Lith. stuba = Lett. istaba = Finn. tupa = Hung. szoba, a bath-room; all prob. < OHG. or G. The orig. sense appears to have been 'a heated room.' The application of the name to a means of heating is comparatively recent. From the Teut., through OF., are derived E. stew[1] and stive[3], which are thus doublets of stove[1].] 1. A room, chamber, or house artificially warmed. [Obsolete except in the specific uses (a), (b), below.]

When a certain Frenchman came to visit Melanchthon he found him in his stove, with one hand dandling his child in the swaddling clouts and the other holding a book and reading it. Fuller.

When you have taken Care of your Horse, you come whole into the Stove, Boots, Baggage, Dirt and all, for that is a common Room for all Comers.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 288.

Specifically—(a) In hort., a glazed and artificially heated building for the culture of tender plants: the same as a greenhouse or hothouse, except that the stove maintains a higher temperature—not lower than 60° F. See greenhouse, hothouse, and dry-stove. [Eng.] (b) A drying-chamber, as for plants, extracts, conserves, etc.; also, a highly heated drying-room, used in various manufactures.

They are sumtimes inforced to rype and dry them [grain] in theyr stooues and hottes houses.
R. Eden, tr. of Sebastian Munster (First Books on America, [ed. Arber, p. 292).

2†. A place for taking either liquid or vapor baths; a bath-house or bath-room.

In that village there was a Stoue, into which the captaine went in the morning, requesting M. Garrard to go also to the same to wash himselfe.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 423.

There are in Fez a hundred bath-stoues well built, with foure Hals in each, and certaine Galleries without, in which they put off their clothes.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 617.

3. A closed or partly closed vessel or receiver in which fuel is burned, the radiated heat being utilized for warming a room or for cooking. Stoves are made of cast-iron and sheet-iron, and also of earthenware in the form of tiles cemented together, of plaster held together by a frame of wire, or the like, and of masonry solidly put together. The stoves of tiles, masonry, etc., radiate less heat than iron stoves, but when heated remain hot for a long time. Stoves are divided into the two main classes of cooking-stoves and warming-stoves, and are also classified according to the fuel used, as wood-stoves, gas-stoves, etc. There are many varieties, named according to their use, as the car-stove, camp-stove, foot-stove, tinmen's stove, etc., or according to some attachment, as a water-back stove. Warming-stoves range from the open fireplace or Franklin stove to magazine and base-burning fireplaces and heaters for warming more than one room, which are more properly furnaces. The word was first used in English in this sense as applied to foot-stoves. See foot-stove, oil-stove, gas-stove.

The sempstress speeds to Change with red-tipt nose;
The Belgian store beneath her footstool glows.
Gay, Trivia, ii. 338.

4. In ceram., a pottery-kiln.—5. In a furnace, the oven in which the blast is heated.—6. In bookbinding, an apparatus with which the finisher heats his tools, formerly made to burn charcoal, but latterly gas.—Air-tight stove, See air-tight.—Bark-stove, Same as bark-bed.—Base-burning stove, See base-burning.—Camp-stove, a small sheet-iron stove, light and portable, used for both cooking and heating, as in a tent.—Cooking-stove, a stove arranged especially for cooking, having ovens, and often a water-back, exposed to the heat of the fire, and pot-holes above the fire.—Franklin stove, a form of open stove invented by Benjamin Franklin in the early part of his life, and called by him "the Pennsylvania fireplace." The name is now given (a) to any open stove with or without doors that open widely, and with andirons or a grate similar to those of an ordinary fireplace; (b) to a kind of fireplace with back and sides of ironwork and some arrangement for heating the air in chambers which communicate with the room.—Norwegian stove, a chamber the walls of which are made as perfect non-conductors of heat as possible, used for cooking by enabling a pot or saucepan full of boiling water, placed in it, to retain its heat for a great length of time, thus stewing the meat, etc., which it may contain. The same chamber may be used as a refrigerator, as it keeps ice unmelted for a long time.—Rotary stove, See rotary oven, under oven.

stove[1] (stōv), v. t.; pret. and pp. stoved, ppr. stoving. [< stove[1], n. Cf. stew[1], v., stive[3], v.] 1. To heat in a stove or heated room; expose to moderate heat in a vessel. Specifically—(a) To keep warm in a house or room by artificial heat: as, to stove orange-trees.

For December and January, and the latter part of November, you must take such things as are green all winter; . . . lemon-trees, and myrtles, if they be stoved.
Bacon, Gardens (ed. 1887).

(b) To heat in or as in a stove: as, to stove feathers; to stove printed fabrics (to fix the color); to stove ropes (to make them pliable); to stove timber.

Light upon some Dutchmen, with whom we had good discourse touching stoveing, and making of cables.
Pepys, Diary, II. 210.

And in 1726, when the ship was surveyed by the Master Shipwrights of Portsmouth and Deptford, with the view to her being rebuilt, it was found that the stoved planks were fresher and tougher, and appeared to have fewer defects, than those which had been charred, many of the latter being found rotten. Fincham, Ship-building, iii. 32.

(c) In vinegar-manuf., to expose (malt-wash, etc.) in casks to artificial heat in a close room, in order to induce acetous fermentation. (d) In ceram., to expose to a low heat. See pottery, porcelain, and kiln. (e) To cook in a close vessel; stew. [Scotch or prov. Eng.]

The supper was simple enough. There were oatcakes and cheese on the table, a large dish of stoved potatoes steaming and savory, and a jug of milk.
Mrs. Oliphant, Joyce, v.

2†. To shut up, as in a stove; inclose; confine.

A naked or stov'd fire, pent up within the house without any exit or succession of external fresh and unexhausted vital air, must needs be noxious and pernicious.
Evelyn, Advertisement to Quintenye. (Richardson.)

Fighting cocks . . . must then be stoved, which meant putting them in deep baskets filled with straw, covering them with straw, and shutting down the lids.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 302.

stove[2] (stōv). Preterit and past participle of stave.

stove-coal (stōv'kōl), n. Coal of either of two sizes: (a) large stove, or No. 3, which passes through a 2¼- to 2-inch mesh, and over a 1¾- to 1½-inch mesh, and (b) small stove, known as No. 4, which passes through a 1⅝- to 1⅜-inch mesh, and over a 1¼- to 1-inch mesh. Penn. Surv. Gloss.

stove-drum (stōv'drum), n. A chamber over a stove in which the heated gases are received before being discharged into the chimney, in order that their heat may be utilized.

stove-glass (stōv'glȧs), n. See glass.

stove-hearth (stōv'härth), n. The horizontal shelf or ledge which in some stoves lies outside and in front of the grate containing the fuel. [New Eng.]

stove-house (stōv'hous), n. Same as store[1], 1. (a) Same as store[1], 1 (a). (b) In the preparation of furs, a house or chamber in which the skins are dried.

The stove-house is full of iron racks upon which are placed iron rods, which receive the skins.
Ure, Dict., IV. 380.

stove-jack (stōv'jak), n. Same as smoke-jack, 2.

stovepipe (stōv'pīp), n. 1. A metal pipe for conducting smoke, gases, etc., from a stove to a chimney-flue.—2. Same as stovepipe hat. [Colloq., U. S.]—Stovepipe hat, Same as chimney-pot hat (which see, under hat[1]). [Colloq., U. S.]

He bore himself like an ancient prophet, and would have looked like one only for his black face and a rusty stove-pipe hat. Harper's Mag., LXXX. 391.

stovepiping (stōv'pī'ping), n. [< stovepipe + -ing.] Tubing for a stovepipe.

A piece of stove-piping about 18 in. long.
Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 102.

stove-plant (stōv'plant), n. A plant cultivated in a stove. See store[1], 1 (a).

stove-plate (stōv'plāt), n. 1. One of the plates or lids serving to cover the apertures in the top of a cooking-stove; a griddle.—2. Same as stove-hearth. Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., XVII., App., p. xii. [Pennsylvania.]

stove-polish (stōv'pol'ish), n. See polish[1].

stover[1] (stō'vėr), n. [< ME. stover, < OF. estover, estovoir, necessaries, < estover, estoveir, estovoir, esturoir, estevoir, astovoir, istovoir, entovoir, stovoir, used impers., it is necessary; origin unknown.] Fodder and provision of all sorts for cattle. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Where live nibbling sheep,
And flat meads thatch'd with stover, them to keep.
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 63.

stover[2]† (stō'vėr), v. i. [Origin obscure.] To bristle up; stiffen. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Beard, be confin'd to neatness, that no hair
May stover up to prick my mistress' lip.
Ford, Love's Sacrifice, ii. 1.

stove-truck (stōv'truk), n. 1. In a cannon-foundry, a truck on which ordnance is moved.—2. A truck for moving heavy stoves. It is run under the stove, when, by means of a lever, its platform is raised, and lifts the stove. The lever serves as a handle for guiding the truck. E. H. Knight.

stow[1] (stō), v. t. [< ME. stowen, stawen, stewen, < AS. stowigan, stow, = MD. stouwen, stuwen, D. stuwen = MLG. stouwen, stowen, LG. stauen, bring to a stand, hinder, = OHG. stouwan, stouwan, stuwan, stūan, stūen, stuowan, MHG. stouwen, G. stauen, bring to a halt, hem in, stow, pack, = Sw. stufva = Dan. stuve, stow, pack (< LG. ?); lit. 'place,' 'put in place,' < stow, a place, = OFries. sto, a place, = Icel. stō*, in eld-stō, a fireplace, = Lith. stowa, a place where one stands; prob. from the root of stand (√ sta): see stand, staw. But the continental forms (to which is due stow[2]) may not be connected with the AS. verb, which is rare. Cf. bestow. See also stew[2].] 1. To put in a suitable or convenient place or position; put in a place aside or out of the way; lay up; put up; pack; especially, to pack in a convenient form: as, to stow bags, bales, or casks in a ship's hold; to stow sheaves.

He radde religion here ruele to holde,
"Leste the kyng and hus eonsail 3oure comunes a-peyre,
And be stywardes of 3oure stedes til 3e be stewed betere."
Piers Plowman (C), vi. 146.

Foul thief, where hast thou stow'd my daughter?
Shak., Othello, i. 2. 62.

We pointed to the white rolls of stowed hammocks in the nettings.
J. W. Palmer, Up and Down the Irrawaddi, p. 219.

2. To accumulate or compactly arrange anything in; fill by packing closely: as, to stow a box or the hold of a ship.

The tythe o' what ye waste at eartes
Wad stow'd his pantry!
Burns, To W. Simpson.

3. To contain; hold.

Shall thy black bark those guilty spirits stow
That kill themselves for love?
Fletcher, Mad Lover, iv. 1.

There was an English ship then in the roads, whereof one Mr. Mariot was master; he entertained as many as his ship could stow. Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 293.

4. To furl or roll up, as a sail.—5. In mining, to fill up (vacant spaces) with stowing. A mine is worked by the method of stowing when all the valuable substance—ore, or coal, or whatever it may be—is taken out, and the vacant space packed full of deads or refuse, either that furnished by the workings themselves, or stuff brought from the surface, or both together.

6†. To bestow; give; grant.

If thou dost flow
In thy frank guiftes, & thy golde freely stow,
The principall will make thy pennance ebbe.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 81.

7†. To intrust; commit; give in charge.

Stowyne or waryne, or besettyne, as men done moneye or chaffer. Commuto. Prompt. Parv., p. 478.

To stow down. (a) To put in the hold of a vessel; stow away; specifically, to run (oil) into the casks of a whaler. (b) To furnish as the stowdown: as, the whale stowed down 75 barrels of oil.

stow[2] (stō), v. [ME. stowen: see stow[1].] I. trans. 1†. To resist; hinder; stop.

3iff any man stowe me this nyth,
I xal hym 3eve a dedly wownde.
Coventry Mysteries, p. 217. (Halliwell.)

2. To put out of sight or hearing; be silent about. [Slang.]

Now if you'll stow all that gammon and speak commonsense for three minutes, I'll tell you my mind right away.
Whyte Melville, White Rose, II. xx.

II.† intrans. To make resistance; resist.

Thay stekede stedys in stoure with stelene wapynes,
And alle stowede wyth strenghe that stode theme agayones!
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 1489.

stow[3] (stou), v. t. [Cf. LG. stuve, stuf, a remnant, stuf, blunt, stumpy.] To cut off; crop; lop. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

If ever any body should affront his kinsman, . . . he would stow his lugs out of his head, were he the best man in Glasgow. Scott, Rob Roy, xxxvi.

stow[4] (stō), n. [A dial. var. of stove[1].] In tin-plate manuf., the structure which contains the furnace and the series of five pots. [Prov. Eng.]

stow[4] (stō), v. t. [A dial. var. of stove[1].] To dry in an oven. [Prov. Eng.]

stowage (stō'āj), n. [< stow[1] + -age.] 1. The act or operation of stowing.

Coasting vessels, in the frequent hurry and bustle attendant upon taking in or discharging cargo, are the most liable to mishap from the want of a proper attention to stowage. Poe, Narrative of A. Gordon Pym, vi.

2. The state of being stowed; also, a place in which something is or may be stowed; room for stowing.

I am something curious, being strange,
To have them [jewels, etc.] in safe stowage.
Shak., Cymbeline, i. 6. 192.

They may as well sue for Nunneries, that they may have some convenient stowage for their wither'd daughters.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures.
Addison. (Johnson.)

3. Money paid for stowing goods.—4. That which is stowed.

We ha' ne'er better luck
When we ha' such stowage as these trinkets with us.
Fletcher (and another), Sea Voyage, i. 1.

stowaway (stō'a-wā'), n. [< stow[1] + away.] One who, in order to secure a free passage, conceals himself aboard an outward-bound vessel, with the hope of remaining undiscovered until too late to be sent ashore.

stowdown (stō'doun), n. The act of stowing down, also that which is stowed down, in the hold of a vessel.

stower[1] (stō'ėr), n. [< stow[1] + -er[1].] One who stows; specifically, a workman who assists in stowing away the cargo in the hold of a vessel.

stower[2], stowered†. See stour[4], stoured.

stowing (stō'ing), n. In mining, rubbish, or material of any kind, taken from near at hand, or brought from the surface, and used to fill up places from which ore, coal, or other valuable substance has been removed.

stowlins (stō'linz), adv. [Contracted from stolenlings*, < stolen + -ling[2].] Stealthily.

Rab, stowlins, prie'd her bonnie mou' . . .
Unseen that night. Burns, Halloween.

stown (stoun). A Scotch past participle of steal.

My mither she fell sick, and the cow was stown awa.
Auld Robin Gray.

stowre†. Same as stoor[1], stoor[2].

stow-wood (stō'wūd), n. Naut., billets of wood used for steadying casks in a vessel's hold.

S. T. P. An abbreviation of Sacræ or Sacrosanctæ Theologiæ Professor, Professor of Sacred Theology.

stra†, n. An obsolete form of straw[1].

strabism (strā'bizm), n. [< NL. strabismus.] Same as strabismus.

strabismal (strā-biz'mal), a. [< strabism + -al.] Same as strabismic.

strabismic (strā-biz'mik), a. [< strabism + -ic.] Pertaining to, affected by, or involving strabismus; squinting; distorted.

strabismical (strā-biz'mi-kal), a. [< strabismic + -al.] Same as strabismic. Science, XIII. 364.

strabismometer (strab-is-mom'e-tėr), n. [< NL. strabismus, q. v., + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for measuring strabismus; a strabometer.

strabismus (strā-bis'mus), n. [= F. strabisme, < NL. strabismus, < Gr. στραβισμός, a squinting, < στραβός, crooked, distorted, < στρέφειν, twist, turn about.] Squint; a failure of one of the visual axes to pass through the fixation-point (the point which is looked at). The eye whose visual axis passes through the fixation-point is called the working eye, the other the squinting eye.—Absolute strabismus, strabismus occurring for all distances of the fixation-point.—Concomitant strabismus, strabismus which remains about the same in amount for all positions of the fixation-point.—Convergent strabismus, strabismus in which the visual axes cross between the fixation-point and the eyes. Diplopia from this cause is said to be homonymous.—Divergent strabismus, divergent squint, in which the visual axes diverge, or at least cross beyond the fixation-point. Diplopia from this cause is said to be crossed.—Latent strabismus, strabismus existing only when one eye is occluded.—Manifest strabismus, strabismus occurring when both eyes are open.—Monolateral strabismus, strabismus in which it is always the visual axis of the same eye which fails to pass through the fixation-point.—Relative strabismus, strabismus occurring for some and not for other distances of the fixation-point.—Strabismus deorsum vergens, downward squint, in which the visual axis of the squinting eye passes lower than the fixation-point.—Strabismus sursum vergens, upward squint, in which the visual axis of the squinting eye passes higher than the fixation-point.

strabometer (strā-bom'e-tėr), n. [< Gr. στραβός, crooked, + μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for measuring strabismus; a strabismometer.

strabotomy (strā-bot'ō-mi), n. [< Gr. στραβός, crooked, distorted (< στρέφειν, twist, turn about), + -τομία, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] In surg., the operation for the cure of squinting by cutting the attachment of a muscle or muscles to the eyeball.

strachy†, n. A word of doubtful form and meaning, occurring only in the following passage, where in the earlier editions it is italicized as a title or proper name.

There is example for 't; the lady of the Strachy married the yeoman of the wardrobe. Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 45.

strackent. An obsolete past participle of strike. Chaucer.

stract (strakt), a. [Aphetic form of distract.] Distracted. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

So I did, but he came afterwards as one stract and besides himselfe. Terence in English (1614). (Nares.) strad (strad), n. [Origin obscure.] A kind of leather gaiter worn as a protection against thorns. Halliwell.

straddle (strad'l), v.; pret. and pp. straddled, ppr. straddling. [A var. of stridle, striddle, freq. of stride: see striddle, stride.] I. intrans. 1. To stand or walk with the legs wide apart; sit or stand astride.

At length (as Fortune semde) I lighted vppon an old, straddling usurer. Nashe, Pierce Penilesse, p. 11.

Then Apollyon straddled quite over the whole breadth of the way, and said, I am void of fear in this matter. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

2. To include or favor two apparently opposite or different things; occupy or take up an equivocal position in regard to something: as, to straddle on the tariff question. [Colloq.]

II. trans. 1. To place one leg on one side and the other on the other side of; stand or sit astride of: as, to straddle a fence or a horse.—2. To occupy or take up an equivocal position in regard to; appear to favor both sides of: as, to straddle a political question. [Colloq.]

The platform [of the Ohio Democrats] contains the well-known plank straddling the tariff question, which has appeared in previous Democratic platforms of that and other States. The Nation, July 3, 1884, p. 4.

3. To double (the blind) in poker.

straddle (strad'l), n. [< straddle, v.] 1. The act of standing or sitting with the legs far apart.—2. The distance between the feet or legs of one who straddles.—3. In speculative dealings on 'change, a "privilege" or speculative contract covering both a "put" and a "call"—that is, giving the holder the right at his option (1) of calling, within a specified number of days, for a certain stock or commodity at a price named in the contract, or (2) of delivering to the person to whom the consideration had been paid a certain stock or commodity upon terms similarly stated. See call[1], n., 15, privilege, n., 5, and put[1], n., 5. Also called spread eagle. [Slang.]—4. In the game of poker, a doubling of the blind by one of the players.—5. An attempt to take an equivocal or non-committal position: as, a straddle in a party platform. [Colloq.]—6. In mining, one of the vertical timbers by which the different sets are supported at a fixed distance from each other in the shaft; a vertical post used in various ways in timbering a mine, as in supporting the framework of a shaft at a hanging-on place.

straddle (strad'l), adv. [Short for astraddle.] Astride; with straddled legs: as, to ride straddle.

straddle-bug (strad'l-bug), n. A sort of tumble-bug; a scarabæid beetle with long legs, of the genus Canthon, as C. lævis. See cut under tumble-bug. [U. S.]

Out in the woods for a good time. Cloth spread on the green-sward, crickets and straddle bugs hopping and crawling over sandwiches and everything else.
St. Nicholas, XVII. 12, advt.

straddle-legged (strad'l-legd), a. Having the legs wide apart; with the legs astride of an object. W. H. Russell.

straddle-pipe (strad'l-pīp), n. In gas-manuf., a bridge-pipe connecting the retort with the hydraulic main. E. H. Knight.

straddle-plow (strad'l-plou), n. A plow with two triangular parallel shares set a short distance apart, used to cover a row of corn, etc., by running it so that the line of seed comes between the shares. E. H. Knight.

stradiot† (strad'i-ot), n. [< OF. stradiot, estradiot: see estradiot.] Same as estradiot.

strae (strā), n. A Scotch form of straw[1].

straget, n. [< L. strages, slaughter.] Slaughter; destruction.

He pressaged the great strage and messacre which after hapned in Sicilia. Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 230.

straggle (strag'l), v. i.; pret. and pp. straggled, ppr. straggling. [Formerly also stragle; a var. of strackle*, freq. of strake (perhaps due in part to the influence of draggle, but cf. stagger for stacker[1]): see strake[1]. Straggle is not connected with stray.] 1. To roam or wander away, or become separated, as from one's companions or the direct course or way; stray.

In the plain beyond us, for we durst not straggle from the shore, we beheld where once stood Ilium by him [Ilus] founded. Sandys, Travailes, p. 16.

I found my self four or five Mile to the West of the Place where I stragled from my Companions.
Dampier, Voyages, II. ii. 84.

2. To roam or wander at random, or without any certain direction or object; ramble.

Master George How, one of the Councell, stragling abroad, was slaine by the Salvages.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 100.

3. To escape or stretch out ramblingly or beyond proper limits; spread widely apart; shoot too far in growth.

Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

How these tall
Naked geraniums straggle!
Browning, Pippa Passes, i.

4. To be dispersed; be apart from any main body; stand alone; be isolated; occur at intervals or apart from one another; occur here and there: as, the houses straggle all over the district.

straggler (strag'lėr), n. [< straggle + -er[1].] 1. One who straggles or strays away, as from his fellows or from the direct or proper course; one who lags behind or becomes separated in any way from his companions, as from a body of troops on the march.

This maner of speech is termed the figure of digression by the Latines, following the Greeke originall; we also call him the straggler, by allusion to the souldier that marches out of his array. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 195.

The first stragglers of a battalion of rocks, guarding a sort of pass, beyond which the beck rushed down a waterfall. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxxiv.

2. Specifically, in ornith., a stray, or strayed bird, out of its usual range, or off its regular migration. The stragglers are the casual or accidental visitants in any avifauna. In the nature of the case they are never numerous as regards individuals; but the list of what are technically called stragglers in any region or locality usually becomes, in the course of time, a long one, so far as species are concerned. Thus, in the avifauna of the District of Columbia, the stragglers are about as many species as the regular visitants of either summer or winter, or the permanent residents of the year round, though fewer than the spring and autumn migrants.

3. One who roams or wanders about at random, or without settled direction or object; a wanderer; a vagabond; especially, a wandering, shiftless fellow; a tramp.

Let 's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 327.

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by stragglers and other servants.
Swift, Adviee to Servants (Butler).

4. Something that shoots beyond the rest or too far; an exuberant growth.

Let thy hand supply the pruning-knife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgies, ii. 503.

5. Something that stands apart from others; a solitary or isolated individual.

I in a manner alone of that tyme left a standing straggler, peradventur, though my frute be very smaul, yet, bicause the grownd from whens it sprong was so good, I may yet be thought somwhat fitt for seede, whan all yow the rest ar taken up for better store.
Ascham, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 14.

straggle-tooth (strag'l-tōth), n. An irregular or misshapen tooth; a snaggle-tooth; a snag.

straggling (strag'ling), n. [Verbal n. of straggle, v.] A mode of dressing the surfaces of grindstones.

stragglingly (strag'ling-li), adv. In a straggling manner; one here and one there, or one now and one again: as, to come in stragglingly.

straggling-money (strag'ling-mun*i), n. In the British navy: (a) Money given to those who apprehend deserters or others who have straggled or overstayed their leave of absence. (b) Money deducted from the wages of a man absent from duty without leave.

straggly (strag'li), a. [< straggle + -y[1].] Straggling; lone and spread out irregularly: as, a straggly scrawl; a straggly village. [Colloq.]

stragular (strag'ū-lär), a. In ornith., pertaining to the stragulum or mantle; pallial.

stragulum (strag'ū-lum), n.; pl. stragula (-lä). [< L. stragulum, a cover, coverlet: see strail.] In ornith., the mantle; the pallium; the back and folded wings taken together, in any way distinguished from other parts, as by color on a gull or tern. [Rare.]

strahlite (strä'līt), n. [< G. strahl, a ray, beam, arrow (see strale), + -ite[2].] Same as actinolite.

straight[1] (strāt), a. and n. [Formerly also streight, straught, Sc. straught, straucht, and, with the omission of the silent guttural, strait (prob. by confusion with the diff. word strait[1], narrow, strict, which was also, on the other hand, formerly spelled straight); < ME. streight, streght, streigt, rarely streit, straight, lit. 'stretched,' < AS. streht, pp. of streccan, stretch: see stretch. Cf. ME. strek, strik, < AS. stræc, streac = MLG. LG. strak = OHG. strach, MHG. strac, G. strack, extended, stretched, straight, = Dan. (obs.) strag, straight, erect, tight; from the same ult. root. Cf. the equiv. right, lit. 'stretched.'] I. a. 1†. Stretched; drawn out.

Sithe thi fleisch, lord, was furst pereeyued
And, for onre sake, laid streizt in stalle.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 252.

Pirrus with his streite sword.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 537.

2. Without bend or deviation, like a string tightly stretched; not crooked or curved; right; in geom., lying, as a line, evenly between its points. This is Euclid's definition. The principal characteristic of a straight line is that it is completely determined, if unlimited, by any two points taken upon it, or, if limited, by its two extremities. The idea of measurement does not enter into the idea of a straight line, and it is unnecessary to introduce that idea into the definition, as is done when it is said (after Legendre) to be the shortest distance between two points.

He that knoweth what is straight doth even thereby discern what is crooked, because the absence of straightness in bodies capable thereof is crookedness.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 8.

There is no moe such Cæsars; other of them may have crook'd noses, but to owe such straight arms, none.
Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 1. 38.

Be pleased to let thy Holy Spirit lead me in the straight paths of sanctity, without deflections to either hand.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 86.

3. Without interruption or break; direct.

Forth-with declarid to hys peple all,
And to thys cite his peple gan cal,
Wher-vnto thai had an euyn streight way.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 1308.

With straight air—that is, with the pressure from the main reservoir, or the air-pump, going directly to the brake cylinder—the engineer can apply the brakes to all the wheels of his train simultaneously.
Scribner's Mag., VI. 333.

4. Direct; authoritative; sure; reliable: as, a straight tip. [Slang.]—5. Upright; marked by adherence to truth and fairness; fair; honorable: as, a man straight in all his dealings. [Colloq.]—6. Proceeding or acting with directness; keeping true to the course. [Colloq.]

He shows himself to be a man of wide reading, a pretty straight thinker, and a lively and independent critic.
The Nation, Dec. 6, 1888, p. 459.

7. Free from disorder or irregularity; in order: as, his accounts are not quite straight.

Finally, being belted, curled, and set straight, he descended upon the drawing-room.
Thackeray, Pendennis, vii.

He told her that she needn't mind the place being not quite straight, he had only come up for a few hours—he should be busy in the studio.
H. James, Jr., The Century, XXXVI. 218.

8. Unqualified; unreserved; out-and-out: as, a straight Democrat (that is, one who supports the entire platform and policy of his party).—9. Unmixed; undiluted; neat. [Slang.]

Dissipating their rare and precious cash on "whisky straight" in the ever-recurring bar-rooms.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 76.

10. East and west; along an east and west line: used of the position of the body in Christian burial.

First Clo. Is she to be buried in Christian burial that willfully seeks her own salvation?
Sec. Clo. I tell thee she is; and therefore make her grave straight; the crowner hath sat on her, and finds it Christian burial. Shak., Hamlet, v. 1. 4.

11. In pokcr, consisting of a sequence; forming a straight: as, a straight hand; a straight flush.—A straight face, an unsmiling face; a sober, unamused expression: as, he could with difficulty keep a straight face. [Colloq.]—Long straight†. See *long*1.—Straight accents, the long marks over the vowels, as ā, ē, ī, ō, ū, ȳ.—Straight angle. See *angle*3, 1.—Straight arch, in arch., a form of arch spanning an aperture in which the intrados is represented by straight lines which meet in a point at the top and comprise two sides of a triangle.—Straight ends and walls, a system of working coal, somewhat similar to "board and pillar." [North Wales.]—Straight flush. See *flush*9.—Straight intestine, bowel, or gut, the rectum. See cuts under alimentary, intestine, and peritoneum.—Straight sheer. See *sheer*3, 1.—Straight sinus, ticket, tubule, etc. See the nouns.

II. n. 1. The condition of being straight, or free from curvature or crookedness of any kind: as, to be out of the straight. [Colloq.] —2. A straight part or direction: as, the straight of a piece of timber.—3. In poker, a sequence of cards, generally five in number, or a hand containing such a sequence.

straight1 (strāt), adv. [< ME. streight, streyght, streyghte, etc.; < *straight*1, a.] 1. In a straight line; without swerving or deviating from the direct course; directly.

Streight aforn hym a fair feld gan behold.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 4661.

Floating straight, obedient to the stream.
Shak., C. of E., i. 1. 87.

2. At once; immediately; directly; straightway.

And went streyghte into the Hospytall, and refresshed vs with mete and drynke, and rested vs there an houre or .ij. bycause of our watche the nyght byfore.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 28.

Shew him an enemy, his pain 's forgot straight.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, i. 1.

straight1 (strāt), v. t. [< *straight*1, a.] To make straight; straighten. [Rare.]

The old gypsy, in the mean time, set about arranging the dead body, composing its limbs, and straighting the arms by its side. Scott, Guy Mannering, xxvii.

straight2†, a. and n. An obsolete spelling of *strait*1.

straightaway (strāt'a-wā″), a. Straight forward, without turn or curve: as, a straightaway course in a yacht- or horse-race.

At the Ascot, where I was last Thursday, the course is a straightaway one. T. C. Crawford, English Life, p. 28.

straight-billed (strāt'bild), a. Having the bill straight, as a bird; rectirostral.

straight-cut (strāt'kut), a. Cut in a straight manner: applied to fine grades of cut smoking tobacco. The leaves are flattened out, packed compactly, and cut lengthwise, long fibers being thus obtained that present a beautiful silky appearance.

straight-edge (strāt'ej), n. A bar having one edge, at least, as straight as possible, to be used as a fiducial line in drawing and testing straight lines. Such instruments when of the greatest accuracy are somewhat costly. Common straight-edges for ruling ordinary lines, testing the surface of millstones, brickwork and stonework, etc., are made of wood, and range from a slip of wood one foot long to planks cut in the form of a truss and ten or more feet in length. See cut under plumb-rule.

straighten1 (strā'tn), v. [< *straight*1 + *-en*1.] I. trans. To make straight, in any sense; specifically, to reduce from a crooked to a straight form.

A crooked stick is not straightened unless it be bent as far on the clean contrary side.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iv. 8.

To straighten the sheer. See *sheer*3.

II. intrans. To become straight; assume a straight form.

straighten2, v. t. See straiten.

straightener (strāt'nėr), n. [< *straighten*1 + *-er*1.] One who or that which straightens.

straightening-block (strāt'ning-blok), n. An anvil used in straightening buckled saws. E. H. Knight.

straightening-machine (strāt'ning-ma-shēn″), n. In metal-work, any machine for removing a twist, bend, buckle, or kink from rails, rods, plates, straps, tubes, or wire.

straightforth† (strāt'fôrth'), adv. [Early mod. E. streight foorth; < *straight*1 + *forth*1.] Directly; straightway.

She smote the ground, the which streight foorth did yield A fruitfull Olyve tree. Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 325.

straightforward (strāt'fôr'wärd), adv. [Also straightforwards, formerly also straitforward; < *straight*1 + *forward*1.] Directly forward; right ahead.

Look not on this side or that side, or behind you as Lot's wife did, but straightforwards on the end.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 211.

straightforward (strāt'fôr'wärd), a. [< straightforward, adv.] 1. Direct; leading directly forward or onward.

Midway upon the journey of our life
I found myself within a forest dark,
For the straightforward pathway had been lost.
Longfellow, tr. of Dante's Inferno, i. 3.

2. Characterized by uprightness, honesty, or frankness; honest; frank; open; without deviation or prevarication: as, a straightforward course; a straightforward person, character, or answer.

In prose he wrote as he conversed and as he preached, using the plain straightforward language of common life.
Southey, Bunyan, p. 40.

straightforwardly (strāt'fôr'wärd-li), adv. In a straightforward manner. Athenæum, No. 3258, p. 451.

straightforwardness (strāt'fôr'wärd-nes), n. Straightforward character or conduct; undeviating rectitude: as, a man of remarkable straightforwardness.

straight-hearted, a. See strait-hearted.

straight-horn (strāt'hôrn), n. A fossil cephalopod of the family Orthoceratidæ, some of which were 12 or 15 feet long; an orthoceratite. P. P. Carpenter.

straight-joint (strāt'joint), a. Noting a floor the boards of which are so laid that the joints form a continuous line throughout the length.

straightly1 (strāt'li), adv. [< *straight*1 + *-ly*2.] In a straight line; not crookedly; directly: as, to run straightly on. Imp. Dict.

straightly2†, adv. An obsolete spelling of straitly.

straightness (strāt'nes), n. The property or state of being straight.

straight-out (strāt'out), a. and n. I. a. Out-and-out; straight: as, straight-out Republicans.

II. n. In U. S. politics, one who votes a straight or strictly party ticket; a thorough partizan.

Other Straight-outs, as they call themselves, . . . cannot take Grant and the Republicans.
The Nation, Aug. 22, 1872, p. 113 straight-pight† (strāt'pīt), a. [< *straight*1 + pight.] Straight-fixed; erect.

Straight-pight Minerva. Shak., Cymbeline, v. 5. 164.

straight-ribbed (strāt'ribd), a. In bot., having the lateral ribs straight, as leaves of Castanea, palms, etc.

straightway (strāt'wā), adv. [< ME. streightwey; < *straight*1 + *way*1.] Immediately; forthwith; without loss of time; without delay.

Thei hilde her streight-wey toward north wales to a Citee that longed to the kynge Tradily-uaunte.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 558.

And straightway the damsel arose and walked.
Mark v. 42.

straightways† (strāt'wāz), adv. [< straightway + adv. gen. -s.] Straightway.

None of the three could win a palm of ground but the other two would straightways balance it.
Bacon, Empire (ed. 1887).

straight-winged (strāt'wingd), a. In entom., having straight wings; orthopterous.

straik1, n. A Scotch spelling of *strake*2.

straik2, v. t. A Scotch form of *stroke*2.

strail†, n. [< ME. strayle, < AS. *streagl, strægel, contr. strǣl, a bed-cover, carpet, rug, = OF. straule, a mantle, coverlet, < L. stragulum, a spread, covering, coverlet, blanket, carpet, rug, also stragula, a covering, blanket; neut. and fem. respectively of stragulus, serving for spreading or covering, < sternere, pp. stratus, spread, strew: see stratum.] A covering; a coverlet. Prompt. Parv., p. 478.

strain1 (strān), v. [Early mod. E. also strayne; < ME. straynen, streinen, streynen, straynyen, < OF. streindre, estraindre, straindre, F. étreindre = Pr. estrenher, estreigner = It. strignere, stregnere, stringere, < L. stringere, pp. strictus, draw tight; akin to Gr. στραγγός, twisted, στραγγίζειν, press out, Lith. stregti, become stiff, freeze, AS. streccan, stretch, etc.: see *stretch, straight*1. From L. stringere are also ult. E. *constrain, distrain, restrain, stringent, strait*1, strict, etc.] I. trans. 1†. To draw out; stretch; extend, especially with effort or care.

And if thi vynes footes IV ascende, Theune armes IV is goode forth forto streyne.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 70.

All their actions, voyces, and gestures, both in charging and retiring, were so strained to the height of their qualitie and natnre that the strangenesse thereof made it seeme very delightfull. Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 136.

2†. To draw tight; tighten; make taut.

To the pyller, lorde, also,
With a rope men bownd the foo,
Hard drawe and streynyd faste.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 181.

Sir Mungo, who watched his victim with the delighted yet wary eye of an experienced angler, became now aware that, if he strained the line on him too tightly, there was every risk of his breaking hold.
Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, xv.

3†. To confine; restrain; imprison.

There the steede in stoode strayned in bondes.
Alisaunder of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 1157.

4. To stretch to the utmost tension; put to the stretch; exert: as, to strain every nerve to accomplish something.

He sweats,
Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in postnre
That acts my words. Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 3. 94.

5. To stretch beyond measure; push beyond the proper extent or limit; carry too far.

He strained the Constitution, but he conquered the Lords. N. A. Rev., CXLII. 593.

6. To impair, weaken, or injure by stretching or overtasking; harm by subjection to too great stress or exertion; hence, to sprain.

Hold, sir, hold, pray use this whistle for me,
I dare not straine my selfe to winde it I,
The Doctors tell me it will spend my spirits.
Brome, Sparagus Garden, iv. 7.

Prudes decay'd about may tack,
Strain their necks with looking back. Swift.

7. To force; constrain.

Whether that Goddes worthy forwetyng
Streyneth me nedely for to don a thing.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 422.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd.
Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 184.

His mirth
Is forc'd and strain'd.
Sir J. Denham, The Sophy. (Latham.)

8. To urge; press.

Note if your lady strain his entertainment
With any strong or vehement importunity.
Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 250.

9. To press; squeeze; hence, to hug; embrace.

He that nyght in armes wold hire streyne
Harder than ever Paris did Eleyne.
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 509.

I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., x. 407.

10. To press through a filter or colander; separate extraneous or coarser matters from (a liquid) by causing it to pass through a filter or colander; purify from extraneous matter by filtration; filter: as, to strain milk.—11. To separate or remove by the use of a filter or colander: with out. See phrase under v. i., below.

Ye blind guides, which strain out the gnat, and swallow the camel. Mat. xxiii. 24 [R. V.].

12†. To force out by straining.

I at each sad strain will strain a tear.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1131.

13. To deform, as a solid body or structure.—To strain a point. See *point*1.—To strain courtesy, to use ceremony; stand too much upon form or ceremony; insist on the precedence of others; hang back through excess of courtesy or civility.

My business was great; and in such a case as mine a man may strain courtesy. Shak., R. and J., ii. 4. 55.

Strain not courtesies with a noble enemy.
Lamb, Two Races of Men.

=Syn. 10. Bolt, Screen, etc. See sift.

II. intrans. 1. To exert one's self; make violent efforts; strive.

To build his fortnne I will strain a little.
Shak., T. of A., i. 1. 143.

What
Has made thy life so vile that thou shouldst strain
To forfeit it to me? J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 105.

2. To urge; press.

Nay, Sir, indeed the fault is yours most extreamlie now. Pray, sir, forbear to strain beyond a womans patience.
Brome, Northern Lass, iii. 3.

3. To stretch strugglingly; stretch with effort.

This parlor looked out on the dark courtyard, in which there grew two or three poplars, straining upward to the light. Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, iii.

No sound, no sight as far as eye could strain.
Browning, Childe Roland.

4. To undergo distortions under force, as a ship in a high sea.

A ship is said to strain if in launching, or when working in a heavy sea, the different parts of it experience relative motions. Sir W. Thomson, in Phil. Trans., CXLVI. 481.

The ship ran
Straining, heeled o'er, through seas all changed and wan.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 10.

5. To drip; ooze; filter; drain; flow; issue: as, water straining through sand becomes pure.

Then, in the Deserts dry and barren sand,
From flinty Rocks doth plentious Rivers strain.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Triumph of Faith, iii. 18.

To strain at, to strive after; endeavor to reach or obtain.

I do not strain at the position.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 112.

To strain at a gnat, a typographical error found in the authorized version (Mat. xxiii. 24) for strain out a gnat, the phrase found in Tyndale's and Coverdale's and other versions. See def. 11, above, and quotation there.

strain[1] (strān), n. [< strain[1], v. In some uses (def. 7), cf. strain[2].] 1†. Stretch; extent; pitch.

If it did infect my blood with joy,
Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 5. 171.

May our Minerva
Answer your hopes, unto their largest strain!
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, Ind.

2. Stretching or deforming force or pressure; violence. [This use of the word, while permissible in literature, is incorrect in mechanics. The strain is not the force, but the deformation produced by the force.]

A difference of taste in jokes is a great strain on the affections. George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xv.

3. Tense or constrained state or condition; tension; great effort.

A dismal wedding! every ear at strain
Some sign of things that were to be to gain.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 314.

Whether any poet . . . has exerted a greater variety of powers with less strain and less ostentation. Landor.

4. In mech., a definite change in the shape or size of a solid body setting up an elastic resistance, or stress, or exceeding the limit of elasticity. The deformation of a fluid is not commonly called a strain. The word, which had previously been ill-defined, was made a scientific and precise term in this sense by Rankine in 1850. Thomson and Tait, in their "Treatise on Natural Philosophy," extend the term to deformations of liquid masses, and even of groups of points; and Tait subsequently extends it to any geometrical figure, so that it becomes a synonym of deformation.

Fresnel made the very striking discovery that glass and other simply refracting bodies are rendered doubly refracting when in a state of strain. To this Brewster added the observation that the requisite strain might be produced by unequal heating instead of by mechanical stress.
Tait, Light, § 292.

In this paper the word strain will be used to denote the change of volume and figure constituting the deviation of a molecule of a solid from that condition which it preserves when free from the action of external forces.
Rankine, Axes of Elasticity (1855).

A strain is any definite alteration of form or dimensions experienced by a solid. . . . If a stone, a beam, or a mass of metal in a building, or in a piece of framework, becomes condensed or dilated in any direction, or bent, or twisted, or distorted in any way, it is said to experience a strain.
W. Thomson, Mathematical Theory of Elasticity (1856).

5. A stretching of the muscles or tendons, giving rise to subsequent pain and stiffness; sprain; wrench; twist.—6. A permanent deformation or injury of a solid structure.—7. Stretch; flight or burst, as of imagination, eloquence, or song. Specifically—(a) A poem; a song; a lay.

All unworthy of thy nobler strain.
Scott, L. of the L., i., Int.

(b) Tune; melody.

I was all ear,
And took in strains that might create a soul
Under the ribs of death. Milton, Comus, l. 561.

In sweet Italian Strains our Shepherds sing.
Congreve, Opening of the Queen's Theatre, Epil.

(c) In a stricter sense, in music, a section of a piece which is more or less complete in itself. In written music the strains are often marked by double bars.

An Cynthia had but seen me dance a strain, or do but one trick, I had been kept in court.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

(d) Tone; key; style or manner of speech or conduct.

The third [sort] is of such as take too high a strain at the first. Bacon, Youth and Age (ed. 1887).

That sermon is in a strain which I believe has not been heard in this kingdom. Burke, Rev. in France.

(e) Mood; disposition.

Henry . . . said, "I am come, young ladies, in a very moralizing strain, to observe that our pleasures in this world are always to be paid for."
Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, xxvi.

Axes of a homogeneous strain, three straight lines of particles perpendicular to one another both before and after the strain.—Composition of strains. See composition of displacements, under composition.—Concurrent stress and strain. See concurrent.—Homogeneous or uniform strain, a strain which leaves every straight line of particles straight, and every pair of parallel lines parallel.—Longitudinal strain. See longitudinal.—Normal plane of a homogeneous strain, one of three planes each containing two of the three axes. There is generally only one such system of planes through each point of the body.—Orthogonal strain. (a) Relatively to a stress, a strain which neither does nor uses work by virtue of that stress. (b) Relatively to another strain, a strain orthogonal to a stress perfectly concurrent to the other strain.—Principal strain. Same as principal strain-type (which see, under strain-type).—Pure strain, a homogeneous strain which does not rotate any axis of the strain.—Simple strain, any one of a number of strains conceived as independent components of other strains which they are employed to define. The phrase simple strain has no definite meaning, but simple longitudinal strain, simple tangential strain, simple shearing strain, etc., mean such strains existing not as components merely, but as resultants. Thus, if a bar is elongated without any transverse contraction or expansion, there is a simple longitudinal strain in the direction of the elongation. A simple tangential strain is a homogeneous strain in which all the particles are displaced parallel to one plane.—Strain-ellipsoid. See ellipsoid.—To heave a strain. See heave.—Type of a strain. See type.

strain[2] (strān), n. [An altered form, due appar. to confusion with strain[1], 7, of what would be reg. streen; < ME. streen, strene, stren, earlier strean, istrean, race, stock, generation, < AS. gestreón, gestrión, gain, wealth (= OS. gistriuni, = OHG. gistriuni, gain, property, wealth, business); appar. confused in ME. with the related noun, ME. strend, strynd, struud, < AS. strȳnd, race, stock; < streónan, strȳnan = OHG. striunan, beget, gestreónan, get, acquire.] 1. Race; stock; generation; descent; hence, family blood; quality or line as regards breeding; breed; a race or breed; a variety, especially an artificial variety, of a domestic animal. Strain indicates the least recognizable variation from a given stock, or the ultimate modification to which an animal has been subjected. But since such variation usually proceeds by insensible degrees, the significance of strain grades into that of breed, race, or variety.

Bountee comth al of God, nat of the streen
Of which they been engendred and ybore.
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 101.

O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,
Young man, thou couldst not die more honourable.
Shak., J. C., v. 1. 59.

The ears of a cat vary in shape, and certain strains, in England, inherit a pencil-like tuit of hairs, above a quarter of an inch in length, on the tips of their ears.
Darwin, Var. of Animals and Plants, i.

2. Hereditary or natural disposition; turn; tendency; character.

Sir, you have shown to-day your valiant strain.
Shak., Lear, v. 3. 40.

And here I shall not restrain righteousness to the particular virtue of justice, but enlarge it according to the genius and strain of the book of the Proverbs. Tillotson.

3. Sort; kind; style.

Let man learn a prudence of a higher strain.
Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 214.

4. Trace; streak.

With all his merit there was a strain of weakness in his character. Bancroft, Hist. Const., II. 6.

5. The shoot of a tree. Halliwell (under streue). [Prov. Eng.]—6†. The track of a deer.

When they haue shot a Deere by land, they follow him like blond-hounds by the blood, and straine, and oftentimes so take them. Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 134.

strain[3]† (strān), v. t. [An aphetic form of distrain.] To distrain.

When my lord refused to pay the two shillings, Mr. Knightly charged the constable to strain two shillings' worth of goods. Court and Times of Charles I., I. 56.

strainable (strā′na-bl), a. [Early mod. E. streinable, streynable; < strain[1] + -able.] 1†. Constraining; compelling; violent.

This yere the Duke of Burgon, . . . with his xii. M. men, was dryuen in to Englond, with a ferse streynable wynde, in ther selynge towarde Spayn.
Arnold's Chron. (1502), p. xliii.

2. Capable of being strained.

strainably† (strā′na-bli), adv. [Early mod. E. streinablie: < strainable + -ly[2].] Violently; fiercely.

The wind . . . droue the flame so streinablie amongest the tents and cabins of the Saxons, that the fire . . . increased the feare amongst the soulddiors wonderfullie.
Holinshed, Hist. Scotland, p. 95.

strained[1] (strānd), p. a. [< strain[1] + -ed[1].] Forced; carried beyond proper limits: as, a strained interpretation of a law.

strained[2] (strānd), a. [< strain[2] + -ed[2].] Of this or that strain or breed, as an animal.

strainer (strā′nėr), n. [< ME. streynour, strenyoure; < strain[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which strains.—2. A stretcher or tightener: as, a strainer for wire fences.—3. Any utensil for separating small solid particles from the liquid that contains them, either to preserve the solid objects or to clarify the liquid, or for both purposes.

Item, j. dressyng knyfe, j. fyre schowle, ij. treys, j. streynour. Paston Letters, I. 490.

4. In carriage-building: (a) A reinforcing strip or button at the back of a panel. (b) Canvas glued to the back of a panel to prevent warping or cracking. Also called stretcher.—Strainer of Hippocrates. Same as Hippocrates's sleeve (which see, under sleeve[1]).

strainer-vine (strā′nėr-vīn), n. The sponge-gourd, Luffa acutangula, and other species: so called from the use of the fibrous network contained in its fruit for straining palm-wine.

straining (strā′ning), n. [Verbal n. of strain[1], v.] In saddlery, leather, canvas, or other fabric drawn over a saddle to form a base for the seating. It is put on the saddle with a tool called a straining-fork, the fabric having first been stretched on a machine called a straining-reel. Also called straining-leather.—Cross-straining, canvas or webbing drawn transversely over the first straining.

straining-beam (strā′ning-bēm), n. In a queen-post roof, a horizontal beam uniting the tops of the two queen-posts, and acting as a tie-rod to resist the thrust of the roof; a straining-piece. If a similar beam is placed on the main tie-rod, between the bases of the posts, it is called a straining-sill.

straining-leather (strā′ning-leтн″ėr), n. In saddlery, same as straining.

straining-piece (strā′ning-pēs), n. Same as straining-beam.

straining-sill (strā′ning-sil), n. See straining-beam.

strain-normal (strān′nôr″mal), n. A normal of a homogeneous strain.

strain-sheet (strān′shēt), n. In bridge-building, a skeleton drawing of a truss or other part of a bridge, with the calculated or computed greatest strain to which it will be subjected annotated at the side of each member. In making the actual working-drawings, the respective members are drawn to a size sufficient to sustain the stresses so marked on the sheet multiplied by a certain predetermined "factor of safety." Also called stress-sheet.

straint† (strānt), n. [< OF. estrainte, estreinte, fem. of estraint, F. étreint, pp. of OF. estraindre, F. étreindre, strain: see strain[1], v., and cf. restraint, constraint.] A violent stretching or tension; a strain; pressure; constraint.

Uppon his iron coller griped fast,
That with the straint his wesand nigh he brast.
Spenser, F. Q., V. ii. 14.

strain-type (strān′tīp), n. The type of a strain.—Principal strain-type, one of six strain-types such that, when the homogeneous elastic solid to which they belong is homogeneously strained in any way, the potential energy of the elasticity is expressed by the sum of the products of the squares of the components of the strain expressed in terms of these strain-types, each multiplied by a determinate coefficient.

strait[1] (strāt), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also straight, streight, streit, etc.; < ME. strait, strayt, straite, strayte, streit, streyt, strcite, also sometimes straight, < OF. estreit, estrait (F. étroit), narrow, strict (as a noun, a narrow passage of water), = Pr. estreit = Sp. estrecho = Pg. estreito = It. stretto, narrow, strict, < L. strictus, pp. of stringere, draw tight: see strain[1], stringent. Cf. strict, which is a doublet of strait, the one being directly from the L., the other through OF. and ME. The word strait[1], formerly also spelled straight, has been more or less confused with the diff. word straight[1], which was sometimes spelled strait.] I. a. 1. Narrow; having little breadth or width.

Egypt is a long Contree; but it is streyt, that is to seye narow; for thei may not enlargen it toward the Desert, for defaute of Watre. Mandeville, Travels, p. 45.

Strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. Mat. vii. 14.

Britons seen, all flying
Through a strait lane. Shak., Cymbeline, v. 3. 7.

2. Confined; restricted; limited in space or accommodation; close.

Ther was swich congregacioun
Of peple, and eek so streit of herbergage,
That they ne founde as much as o cotage
In which they bothe myghte ylogged be.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 169.

And the sons of the prophets said unto Elisha, Behold now, the place where we dwell with thee is too strait for us. 2 Ki. vi. 1.

3†. Of time, short; scant.

If thi nede be greet & thi tyme strèite,
Than go thi silf therto & worche an houswijfes brayde.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 41.

4†. Tight.

You rode, like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait strossers. Shak., Hen. V., iii. 7. 57.

He [man] might see that a strait glove will come more easily on with use.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 295.

I denounce against all strait Lacing, squeezing for a Shape. Congreve, Way of the World, iv. 5.

5†. Close. (a) Near; intimate; familiar.

He, forgetting all former injuries, had received that naughty Plexirtus into a straight degree of favour, his goodness being as apt to be deceived as the other's craft was to deceive. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ii. (Latham.)

(b) Strict; careful.

Much strait watching of master bailiffs is about us, that there be no privy conference amongst us.
Bp. Ridley, in Bradford's Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 94.

(c) Close-fisted; stingy; avaricious.

I do not ask you much;
I beg cold comfort; and you are so strait
And so ingrateful, you deny me that.
Shak., K. John, v. 7. 42.

6. Strict; rigorous; exacting.

It was old and som del streit.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 174.

After the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee. Acts xxvi. 5.

Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue.
Shak., M. for M., ii. 1. 9.

Led a streight life in continencie and austerity, and was therefore admired as a Prophet, and resorted to out of all parts. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 379.

Bound them by so strait vows.
Tennyson, Coming of Arthur.

7†. Sore; great; difficult; distressing.

At a strayte neede they can wele stanche bloode.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 17.

8†. Hard-pressed; straitened; hampered.

Mother, I kindly thank you for yonr Orange pills you sent me. If you are not too straight of money, send me some such thing by the woman, and a pound or two of Almonds and Raisons.
Strype, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 178.

To make your strait circumstances yet straiter.
Secker, Sermons, II. xi.

II. n. 1. A narrow pass or passage.

Thei rode forth the softe pas straite and clos till they come to the straite be-twene the wode and the river, as the kynge loot hadde hem taught.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 160.

The barbarous people lay in waite for him in his way, in the straight of Thermopyles.
North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 394.

Honour travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 154.

2. Specifically, a narrow passage of water connecting two bodies of water: often used in the plural: as, the Strait or Straits of Gibraltar; the Straits of Magellan; the Straits of Dover. Abbreviated St.—3. A strip of land between two bodies of water; an isthmus.

A broken chancel with a broken cross,
That stood on a dark strait of barren land:
On one side lay the Ocean, and on one Lay a great water. Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

4†. A narrow alley in London.

Look into any angle of the town, the Streights, or the Bermudas, where the quarrelling lesson is read, and how do they entertain the time, but with bottle-ale and tobacco? B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, ii. 6.

Cant names then given to the places frequented by bullies, knights of the post, and fencing masters. . . . These Streights consisted of a nest of obscure courts, alleys, and avenues, running between the bottom of St. Martin's Lane, Half-Moon, and Chandos Street.
Gifford's Note at "Bermudas" in the above passage.

5. A tight or narrow place; difficulty; distress; need; case of necessity: often in the plural.

Finding himself out of straits, he will revert to his customs. Bacon, Expense (ed. 1887).

The straits and needs of Catiline being such
As he must fight with one of the two armies.
B. Jonson, Catiline, v. 6.

Take me; I'll serve you better in a strait.
Tennyson, Princess, i.

6†. pl. Cloth of single width, as opposed to broad cloth: a term in use in the sixteenth century and later.—Between the Straits, through and beyond the Straits of Gibraltar: used by American sailors with reference to a voyage to Mediterranean ports: as, he has made two voyages between the Straits.—Perineal strait. See perineal.—Straits of the pelvis, in obstet., the openings of the pelvic canal, distinguished as the superior and inferior straits. See pelvis.—Straits oil. See oil.

strait[1]† (strāt), v. t. [Also straight; < strait[1], a.] 1. To make strait or narrow; narrow; straiten; contract.

He [Crassus] set his ranks wide, casting his souldiers into a square battell. . . . Yet afterward he changed his mind againe, and straighted the battell [formation] of his footmen, fashioning it like a brick, more long than broad, making a front and shewing their faces every way.
North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 477.

2. To stretch; draw tight; tighten.

This weighty Scott sall strait a rope,
And hanged he shall be.
Lang Johnny Moir (Child's Ballads, IV. 273).

3. To press hard; put to difficulties; distress; puzzle; perplex.

If your lass
Interpretation should abuse, and call this Your lack of love or bounty, you were straited
For a reply. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 365.

strait[1]† (strāt), adv. [< ME. streite, streyte; < strait[1], a.] Narrowly; tightly; closely; strictly; rigorously; strenuously; hard.

Hir hosen weren of fyn scarlet reed
Ful streite yteyd.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 457.

Worceter sayd at Castre it schuld be nessessary for gow to have good witnesse, as he saythe it schuld go streythe with gow wytheowt gowr witnesse were rythe sofycyent.
Paston Letters, I. 516.

strait[2]†, a. and adv. An old spelling of straight[1].

straiten (strā'tn), v. t. [Formerly also straighten; < strait[1] + -en[1].] 1. To make strait or narrow; narrow; contract; diminish.

Let not young beginners in religion . . . straiten their liberty by vows of long continuance.
Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, iv. 7.

2. To confine; hem in.

Feed high henceforth, man, and no more be straiten'd
Within the limits of an empty patience.
Ford, Fancies, iv. 1.

3. To draw tight; tighten.

My horses here detain,
Fix'd to the chariot by the straiten'd rein.
Pope, Iliad, v. 325.

4. To hamper; inconvenience; restrict.

An other time having straightned [var. straighted] his enemies with scarcity of victuals.
North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 495.

Newtown men, being straitened for ground, sent some to Merimack to find a fit place to transplant themselves.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 159.

The shackles of an old love straiten'd him.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

5. To press hard, as with want or difficulties of any kind; distress; afflict with pecuniary difficulties: as, to be straitened in money matters.

So straitened was he at times by these warlike expenses that when his danghter married Bosbdil, her bridal dress and jewels had to be borrowed. Irving, Granada, p. 68.

straitforward†, adv. An old spelling of straightforward.

strait-handed† (strāt'han#ded), a. Parsimonious; niggardly; close-fisted.

In the distribution of onr time God seems to be strait-handed, and gives it to us, not as nature gives us rivers, enough to drown us, but drop by drop.
Jer. Taylor, Holy Dying, ii. 1.

strait-handedness† (strāt'han#ded-nes), n. Niggardliness; parsimony.

The Romish doctrine makes their strait-handedness so much more injnrious as the cause of separation is more just. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iv. 3.

strait-hearted (strāt'här'ted), a. Narrow; selfish; stingy. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ii. 17.

strait-jacket (strāt'jak#et), n. Same as strait-waistcoat.

strait-laced (strāt'lāst), a. 1. Made close and tight by lacing, as stays or a bodice.—2. Wearing tightly laced stays, bodice, etc.

We have few well-shaped that are strait-laced.
Locke, Education, § 11.

Hence—3. Strict in manners or morals; rigid in opinion.

And doubt'st thou me? suspect you I will tell
The hidden mysteries of your Paphian cell
To the strait-lac'd Diana?
Randolph, Complaint against Cupid.

Why are you so strait-lac'd, sir knight, to cast a lady off so coy? Peele, Sir Clyomon and Sir Clamydes.

One so strait-laced
In her temper, her taste, and her morals and waist.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 113.

straitly (strāt'li), adv. [Formerly also straightly; < ME. straitly, streytly, straitliche, streitliche; < strait[1] + -ly[2].] In a strait manner. (a) Narrowly; closely.

If men look straitly to it, they will find that, unless their lives are domestic, those of the women will not be.
Margaret Fuller, Woman in 19th Cent., p. 36.

(b) Tightly; tight.

Other bynde it straitly with sum bonnde.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 74.

"Spare me not," he said to Christie; for even that ruffian hesitated to draw the cord straitly. Scott, Monastery, xxxi.

(c) Strictly; rigorously.

Streytly for-bede ȝe that no wyfe [woman] be at ȝoure mete. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 329.

His majesty hath straitly given in charge
That no man shall have private conference,
Of what degree soever, with his brother.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 1. 85.

(d) Closely; intimately. (e) Hardly; grievously; sorely.

I hear how that you are something straitly handled for reading books, speaking with good men, yea, praying to God, as you would do.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 203.

straitness (strāt'nes), n. [Formerly also straightness; < ME. streitnes, streytnesse; < strait[1] + -ness.] The state or quality of being strait. (a) Narrowness; smallness; confined or restricted character.

For the streitnes of thin astrelabie, than is every smal devysioun in a signe departed by two degrees & two.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, i. 17.

By reason of the straitness of all the places.
2 Mac. xii. 21.

(b) Strictness; rigor.

If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well. Shak., M. for M., iii. 2. 269.

(c) Distress; difficulty; pressure from narrowness of circumstances or necessity of any kind, particularly from poverty; want; scarcity.

But he seyd ther shal no thyng hurt hym but youre streytnesse of mony to hym. Paston Letters, II. 38.

I received your loving letter, but straightness of time forbids me. Winthrop, in New England's Memorial, p. 191.

He was never employed in public affairs, . . . the straitness of his circumstances keeping him close to his trade.
Everett, Orations, II. 13.

strait-waistcoat (strāt'wāst#kōt), n. A garment for the body made of canvas or similar strong textile material, and so shaped as to lace up behind and fit closely. It has sleeves much longer than the arms, and usually sewed up at the ends, so that the hands cannot be used to do injury. The sleeves can also be tied together so as to restrain the wearer. It is used for the control or discipline of dangerous maniacs and other violent persons. Also called strait-jacket.

strake[1] (strāk), v. i.; pret. and pp. straked, ppr. straking. [< ME. straken; a collateral form of streken, striken, a secondary form of strīken, < AS. strīcan (pret. strāc), go, pass swiftly over: see streak[1], strike, and stroke[1]. Hence ult. straggle.] To move; go; proceed. [Old and prov. Eng.]

And with that worde right anoon
They gan to strake forth.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 1311.

strake[2] (strāk), n. [Sc. also straik; < ME. strake; in part a var. of streke, mod. E. streak[2], and in part of strok, mod. E. stroke: see strake[1], streak[2], stroke[1].] 1†. A streak; a stripe.

Summe lowe places therof by the water syde looke like redde cliffes with white strakes like wayes a cable length a piece.
R. Eden, First Books on America (ed. Arber, p. 381).

2†. A strip; a narrow tract.

This Morrea is a plentyous countrey, and almoste inuyronnde with the see, excepte one strake of a .vj. myle brode, whiche yeneth entre into Grecia, that ye Turke hathe.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 12.

3†. A reef in a sail.

Ffor ne han thei striked a strake and sterid hem the better,
And abated a bonet or the blast come,
They had be throwe ouere the borde backewarde ichonne.
Richard the Redeless, iv. 80.

4. A rut in a road. [Prov. Eng.]—5. A crack in a floor. [Prov. Eng.]—6. A breadth of plank or planking; specifically, a continuous line of planking or plates on a vessel's side, reaching from stem to stern. Also streak and shutter-in. See cut under clincher-built.—7. The iron band used to bind the fellies of a wheel; the hoop or tire of a wheel.—8. A piece of board or metal used for scraping off the skimpings in handjigging or tozing.—9. Same as lye[3].—10. A bushel: more commonly strike (which see). [Obsolete or colloq.]

Come, Ruose, Ruose! I sold fifty strake o' barley to-day in half this time. Farquhar, Recruiting Officer, iii. 1.

11. In hunting, a particular signal with a horn.

As bookes report, of sir Tristram came all the good termes of venery and of hunting, and the sises and measures of blowing of an horne. And of him wee had . . . all the blasts that long to all manner of games. First to the uncoupeling, to the seeking, to the rechace, to the flight, to the death, and to strak, and many other blasts and termes. Sir T. Mallory, Morte d'Arthur, II. cxxxvii.

Binding-strake. See binding.

strake[3]† (strāk). An obsolete preterit of strike.

strake[4] (strāk), v. t. A dialectal (Scotch) form of stroke[2].

stralet (strāl), n. See streal.

stram (stram), v.; pret. and pp. strammed, ppr. stramming. [Cf. Dan. stramme = Sw. stramma, be too tight, tighten, stretch, straiten, < Dan. stram = Sw. stram = G. stramm, tight, stiff, stretched; cf. D. straf, G. straff, severe, strict, stern.] I. intrans. 1. To spring or recoil with violence. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To spread out the limbs; walk with long ungraceful strides. [Colloq.]

II. trans. To dash down violently; beat. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stram (stram), n. A hard, long walk. [Colloq.]

I hed sech a stram this mornin'.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 568.

stramage†, n. [ME., < OF. stramage* (ML. stramagium), scattered straw, < L. stramen, straw, litter, < sternere, pp. stratus, scatter, strew: see stratum. Cf. stramineous, strammel.] Straw; litter. Prompt. Parv., pp. 478, 480.

stramash (stra-mash'), v. t. [Developed from stramazoun, pronounced later something like stramashin*, and so taken for stramashing*, the verbal n. of a supposed verb stramash*. Otherwise a made verb, on the basis of stramazoun; cf. squabash, a word of similar type.] To strike, beat, or bang; break; destroy. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch] stramash (stra-mash′), n. [See stramash, v.] A tumult; fray; fight; struggle; row; disturbance. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Seaforth profited by the confusion to take the delinquent who had caused this stramash by the arm.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 35.

stramazone†, stramazoun†, n. [< OF. estramaçon, a cut with a sword, a downright blow, bang, < It. stramazzone, a cut with a sword, a blow in fencing, < stramazza, a knock-down blow.] In old fencing, a cut delivered from the wrist with the extreme edge of the sword near the point. Egerton Castle, Schools and Masters of Fence.

I, being loth to take the deadly advantage that lay before me of his left side, made a kind of stramazoun, ran him up to the hilts through the doublet, through the shirt, and yet missed the skin.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 4.

stramineous (strā-min′ē-us), a. [< L. stramineus, made of straw, < stramen, straw, litter: see stramage.] 1. Consisting of straw; strawy. —2. Like straw; light.

His sole study is for words . . . to set out a stramineous subject. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 223.

3. Straw-colored; pale-yellowish.

strammel (stram′el), n. [< OF. estramier, straw, < estraim, estrain, stran = It. strame, straw, litter, < L. stramen, straw: see stramage.] Straw; litter. [Cant.]

Sleep on the strammel in his barn.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxviii.

stramonium (strā-mō′ni-um), n. [F. stramonium = Sp. Pg. estramonio = It. stramonia, < NL. stramonium (stramonium spinosum), stramonia, strammonia, stramonium; origin obscure.] 1. The thorn-apple, Datura Stramonium: so called particularly as a drug-plant. It is a stout ill-scented poisonous weed with green stem and pure-white flowers, widely diffused, in America often called Jamestown weed or jimson-weed. D. Tatula, a similar, but commonly taller, species with purple stem and pale-violet corolla (purple stramonium), has the same properties. It is found in the Atlantic United States.

2. An officinal drug consisting of the seeds or leaves of stramonium, the seeds being more powerful. Its properties are the same as those of belladonna. See belladonna and Datura.—Stramonium ointment. See ointment.—Stramonium plaster. See plaster.

stramony (stram′ō-ni), n. [< NL. stramonium.] Stramonium.

strand[1] (strand), n. [< ME. strand, strond, < AS. strand = MD. strande, D. strand = late MHG. strant, G. strand = Icel. strönd (strand-) = Sw. Dan. strand, border, edge, coast, shore, strand; root unknown.] 1. The shore or beach of the sea or ocean, or (in former use) of a lake or river; shore; beach.

He fond bi the stronde,
Arlued on his londe,
Schipes fiftene.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), l. 35.

The strand
Of precious India no such Treasure shows.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 24.

2. A small brook or rivulet. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]—3. A passage for water; a gutter. B. Jonson, Epig. of Inigo Jones. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch (Scotch also strawn).]—Strand mole-rat, the Cape mole-rat of South Africa, Bathyergus maritimus. See mole-rat, and cut under Bathyergus.

strand[1] (strand), v. [= D. MLG. G. stranden = Icel. Sw. stranda = Dan. strande; from the noun.] I. trans. To drive or run aground on the sea-shore: as, the ship was stranded in the fog: often used figuratively.

II. intrans. 1. To drift or be driven on shore; run aground, as a ship.

Stranding on an isle at morn. Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

2. To be checked or stopped; come to a standstill.

strand[2] (strand), n. [With excrescent d, for stran* (Sc. strawn), < D. streen, a skein, hank of thread, = OHG. streno, MHG. strene, stren, G. strähne, a skein, hank; root unknown.] 1. A number of yarns or wires twisted together to form one of the parts of which a rope is twisted; hence, one of a number of flexible things, as grasses, strips of bark, or hair, twisted or woven together. Three or more strands twisted together form a rope. See cut under crown, v. t., 9.

Wampum beads and birchen strands Dropping from her careless hands.
Whittier, Truce of Piscataqua.

2. A single thread; a filament; a fiber.

The continuous communication of the gray matter of the spinal cord with the motor and sensory strands.
J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 97.

3. A string. [Scotch, in the form strawn.]—Mycelial strand. Same as fibrous mycelium (which see, under mycelium).

strand[2] (strand), v. t. [< strand[2], n.] 1. To break one or more of the strands of (a rope).—2. In rope-making, to form by the union or twisting of strands.—Stranded wire, a wire rope. [Eng.]

strand-bird (strand′bėrd), n. Any limicoline wading bird which is found on the strand or beach, as a beach-bird, sanderling, sandpiper, sand-snipe, bay-snipe. See the distinctive names, and shore-bird, bay-birds.

stranding-machine (stran′ding-ma-shēn″), n. A machine for twisting strands into ropes.

strand-mycele, strand-mycelium (strand′mī-sēl″, -mī-sē″li-um), n. Same as fibrous mycelium (which see, under mycelium).

strand-plover (strand′pluv″ėr), n. The Swiss, gray, bull-head, or black-bellied plover, Squatarola helvetica. See cut under Squatarola.

strand-rat (strand′rat), n. The strand mole-rat (which see, under strand[1]).

strand-wolf (strand′wůlf), n. The brown hyena, Hyæna villosa, found in South Africa.

strang (strang), a. A dialectal form of strong[1]. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

strange (strānj), a. [Early mod. E. straunge; < ME. strange, straunge, estrange, < OF. estrange, estrenge, estraigne, estreigne, etc., F. étrange = It. strano, strange, foreign, < L. extraneus, that is without, external, < extra, without, on the outside: see extraneous, extra-.] 1. Foreign; alien; of or belonging to some other country. [Archaic.]

I have been an alien in a strange land. Ex. xviii. 3.

She hadde passed many a straunge strem.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 464.

Also asmuche as may be, eschew straunge words.
Gascoigne, Notes on Eng. Verse (Steele Glas, etc., ed. [Arber).

One of the strange queen's lords.
Shak., L. L. L., iv. 2. 134.

2. Of or pertaining to another or others; alien; belonging to others, or to some other place or neighborhood; not lawfully belonging to one; intrusive.

The mouth of strange women is a deep pit.
Prov. xxii. 14.

Strange fowl light upon neighbouring ponds.
Shak., Cymbeline, i. 4. 97.

Call me not Mother; for if I brought thee forth, it was As foolish hens at times hatch vipers, by Sitting upon strange eggs.
Byron, Deformed Transformed, i. 1.

3. Not before known, heard, or seen; unfamiliar; unknown; new: as, the custom was strange to them.

To knowe the verrey degree of any maner sterre straunge or unstraunge after his longitude, thow he be indeterminat in their astrelabie. Chaucer, Astrolabe, ii. 17.

Our strange garments cleave not to their mould
But with the aid of use. Shak., Macbeth, i. 3. 145.

Then a soldier,
Full of strange oaths, . . .
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7. 150.

Sat 'neath strange trees, on new flowers growing there,
Of scent unlike to those we knew of old.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 44.

4. Outlandish; queer; odd.

This power that some of them have is disguised gear and strange fashions. Latimer, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

They were enforced for feare of quarell & blame to disguise their players with strange apparell, and by colouring their faces and carying hatts & capps of diuerse fashions to make them selues lesse knowen.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 25.

5. Unusual; singular; wonderful; surprising; remarkable; of a kind to excite curiosity; not easily explained or explainable: as, a strange story, if true; a strange hallucination.

This is above strange,
That you should be so reckless!
B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, iii. 3.

Losing, by a strange after-game of Folly, all the battels we have won. Milton, Free Commonwealth.

You will see an odd country, and sights that will seem strange to you. Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 228.

6. Like a stranger; reserved; distant; estranged; not familiar.

And Joseph saw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them, and spake roughly unto them. Gen. xlii. 7.

Litle and litle he [Cæsar] withdrewe from men his accustomed gentilnesse, becomyng more . . . strange in countenance than euer before.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, ii. 5.

Let us be very strange and well bred.
Congreve, Way of the World, iv. 5.

7. Unacquainted; inexperienced; unversed.

I know thee well;
But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.
Shak., T. of A., iv. 3. 56.

8†. Unfavorable; averse to one's suit.

Thow that his lady evere more be straunge,
Yit lat hym serve hire til that he be ded.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 584.

A strange fish. See a cool fish, under fish[1].—Strange sail (naut.), an unknown vessel.—To make a thing strange†, to make it a matter of difficulty, or of surprise or astonishment.

Straunge he made it of hir marïage;
His purpos was for to bistowe hire hye
Into some worthy blood of auncetry.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 60.

She makes it strange; but she would be best pleased
To be so sueger'd with another letter.
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 2. 102.

To make strange†, to seem to be surprised or shocked; look astonished; express astonishment.

Lyford denied, and made strange of sundry things laid to his charge.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 116.

= Syn. 4. Singular, Odd, etc. See eccentric.—5. Surprising, Curious, etc. See wonderful.

strange† (strānj), v. [< ME. straungen; < strange, a.; in part by apheresis from estrange, q. v.] I. trans. To alienate; estrange.

And these presidents consedred wolde discorage any man to a bide but a litel amonges hem that so straunged hem self from me and mistrusted me.
Paston Letters, I. 508.

II. intrans. 1. To wonder; be astonished.

Whereat I should stronge more, but that I find . . .
Fuller, Holy War, p. 169. (Latham.)

2. To be estranged or alienated.

strange (strānj), adv. [< strange, a.] Strangely.

She will speak most bitterly and strange.
Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 36.

strangeful† (strānj′fůl), a. [< strange + -ful.] Strange; wonderful. [Rare.]

O Frantick France! why dost not Thou make vse
Of strangefull Signes, whereby the Heav'ns induce Thee to repentance?
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 2.

strangely (strānj′li), adv. In a strange manner, in any sense of the word strange.

strangeness (strānj′nes), n. The state or character of being strange, in any sense of that word.

stranger (strān′jėr), n. [< ME. stranger, straunger, estraunger, < OF. estranger, F. étranger (= It. straniere), a stranger, foreigner, < estrange, strange: see strange.] 1. One who comes from another country or region; a foreigner.

There shall no stranger eat of the holy thing.
Lev. xxii. 10.

And there ben nouther Theues ne Robboures in that Contree; and every man worschipethe other; but no man there dothe no reverence to no Straungeres, but zif thei ben grete Princes. Mandeville, Travels, p. 250.

I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions.
Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 4. 15.

2. A person with whom one is not acquainted; one whose name and character are unknown.

I do desire we may be better strangers.
Shak., As you Like it, iii. 2. 275.

"As I hope to be sav'd," the stranger said,
"One foot I will not flee."
Robin Hood and the Stranger (Child's Ballads, V. 406).

The name of envy is a stranger here.
Fletcher (and another ?), Nice Valour, v. 2.

3. One who is ignorant (of) or unacquainted (with): with to.

I am no stranger to such easy calms
As sit in tender bosoms.
Ford, Broken Heart, iii. 4.

I . . .
Unspeak mine own detraction, here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3. 125.

They say she 's quite a stranger to all his gallantries.
Swift, Polite Conversation, iii.

4. One not belonging to the house; a guest; a visitor.

A messinger passed forth tho by,
Wher Gaffray with gret toth was in his manere
At loyous disport ryght full merily
At Lusignen Castell with strangers many.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), i. 6017.

Fit to honour and receive
Our heavenly stranger. Milton, P. L., v. 316.

5. In law, one not privy or party to an act.—6. Something popularly supposed or humorously said to betoken the approach of a stranger or guest, as guttering in a candle or a teastalk in a cup of tea.—7. Specifically, in entom., the noctuid moth Hadena peregrina: an English collectors' name.—Strangers' Court. See court.—Strangers' fever. See fever[1].

stranger† (strān'jėr), v. t. [< stranger, n.] To estrange; alienate.

Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath.
Shak., Lear, i. 1. 207.

strangle (strang'gl), v.; pret. and pp. strangled, ppr. strangling. [< ME. strangelen, < OF. estrangler, F. étrangler = Sp. Pg. estrangular = It. strangolare, strangulare, < L. strangulare, < Gr. στραγγαλᾶν, στραγγαλίζειν, strangle, < στραγγάλη, a halter, cf. στραγγός, twisted, < *στράγγειν, draw tight, squeeze; cf. L. stringere, draw tight: see strain[1], stringent.] I. trans. 1. To choke by compression of the windpipe; kill by choking; throttle.

And yet I'll have it done; this child shall strangle thee.
Fletcher, Pilgrim, ii. 2.

2. To suppress; keep from emergence or appearance; stifle.

Strangle such thoughts as these with any thing
That you behold the while. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 47.

3†. To suffocate by drowning. Defoe. =Syn. 1. Choke, Stifle, etc. See smother.

II. intrans. To be choked or strangled.

strangle (strang'gl), n. [< ME. strangle; < strangle, v.] 1†. Strangulation. Chaucer.—2. pl. An infectious catarrh of the upper air-passages, especially the nasal cavity, of the horse, ass, and mule, associated with suppuration of the submaxillary and other lymphatic glands. The disease usually attacks young animals. Enfeebled health, exposure, and neglect are predisposing causes. It may appear as an epizootic in large stables. The mortality is from 2 to 3 per cent. The disease begins with fever and a serous discharge from the nose, which later becomes viscid. At the same time a swelling appears under the jaws, indicating inflammation and suppuration of the submaxillary glands. The disease ordinarily lasts several weeks. Complications may, however, appear. The throat and neighboring lymphatics may become involved and the infection extend to various parts of the system, giving rise to pyemia. Specific bacteria (streptococci) have been found in the suppurating glands.

strangleable (strang'gl-ạ-bl), a. [< strangle + -able.] Capable of being strangled. [Rare.]

I own, I am glad that the capital strangler should in his turn be strangleable, and now and then strangled.
Chesterfield.

strangler (strang'glėr), n. [< OF. estrangleur, F. étrangleur = It. strangolatore, < ML. strangulator, < L. strangulare, strangle: see strangle.] One who or that which strangles or destroys.

The band that seems to tie their friendship together will be the very strangler of their amity.
Shak., A. and C., ii. 6. 130.

strangle-tare (strang'gl-tār), n. The broom-rape, Orobanche: so named from its parasitism upon tares or other plants; also, species of Vicia and Lathyrus, as tares which strangle other plants by their climbing; also, the twining parasite Cuscuta Europæa, European dodder. See cuts under Cuscuta and Orobanche. [Old or prov. Eng.]

strangleweed (strang'gl-wēd), n. The dodder, Cuscuta, and, in books, the broom-rape, Orobanche. Compare strangle-tare. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names. [Old or prov. Eng.]

strangury†, n. Same as strangury. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ix. 5.

strangulate (strang'gū-lāt), a. [< L. strangulatus, pp. of strangulare, strangle: see strangle.] Same as strangulated.

strangulate (strang'gū-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. strangulated, ppr. strangulating. [< L. strangulatus, pp. of strangulare, strangle: see strangle.] To strangle; in pathol., to compress so as to suppress the function of a part, as a loop of intestine, a vessel, or a nerve. See strangulated.

Creepers of literature, who suck their food, like the ivy, from what they strangulate and kill.
Southey, Doctor, Interchapter viii. (Davies.)

A strong double ligature was passed through this part of the cheek, with the intention of strangulating the projection [a tubercle or tumor] at its base.
J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 47.

strangulated (strang'gū-lā-ted), p. a. 1. In pathol., compressed so as to suppress the function of a part: as, a hernia is said to be strangulated when it is so compressed as to obstruct the circulation in the part and cause dangerous symptoms.—2. In bot., contracted and expanded in an irregular manner.—3. In entom., constricted; much narrowed: especially noting the thorax or abdomen when constricted in one or more places, as in many ants.—Strangulated hernia. See def. 1 and hernia.

strangulation (strang-gū-lā'shọn), n. [< F. strangulation = Sp. estrangulacion = Pg. estrangulação = It. strangolazione, < L. strangulatio(n-), a choking, a suffocating, < strangulare, pp. strangulatus, choke, suffocate: see strangle.] 1. The act or state of strangling; a sudden and violent compression of the windpipe, constriction being applied directly to the neck, either around it or in the fore part, or from within the esophagus, so as to prevent the passage of air, and thereby suspend respiration and, if the constriction is prolonged, destroy life.—2. In pathol., the state of a part too closely constricted, as the intestine in strangulated hernia.—3. Excessive or abnormal constriction of any kind.

At the point where the strangulation takes place the glacier lies in a kind of basin, of which the lower lip presents proofs of the most intense erosion.
A. Geikie, Geol. Sketches, vi.

strangurious (strang-gū'ri-us), a. [< LL. stranguriosus, affected with strangury, < L. stranguria, strangury: see strangury.] Affected with strangury; of the nature of strangury; noting the pain of strangury.

strangury (strang'gū-ri), n. [< F. strangurie = OSp. estrangurria, Sp. estangurria = Pg. estranguria = It. stranguria, < L. stranguria, < Gr. στραγγουρία, retention of urine, < στράγξ (στραγγ-), a drop, that which is squeezed out (< *στράγγειν, draw or bind tight, squeeze: see strangle), + οὐρεῖν, urinate, < οὖρον, urine.] 1. Scanty micturition with painful sense of spasm.

He, growing ancient, became sick of the stone, or strangury, whereof, after his suffering of much dolorous pain, he fell asleep in the Lord.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 262.

2. In hort., a disease in plants produced by tight ligatures.

strap (strap), n. [Also, more orig., strop, dial. strope (the form strop being also in reg. E. use in some senses); < ME. stropp, strope, < AS. stropp = MD. strop, stroop, D. strop = MLG. strop = MHG. strupfe, strüpfe, G. struppe, strüppe, strippe = Sw. stropp = Dan. strop, a strap, = OF. estrope, F. étrope = Sp. Pg. estrovo, an oar-thong, < L. stroppus, struppus, a thong, strap, fillet, akin to Gr. στρόφος, a twisted band, < στρέφειν, twist: see strophe. Doublet of strop[1].] 1. A narrow strip of leather or other flexible material, generally used for some mechanical purpose, as to surround and hold together, or to retain in place. In ordinary use straps are most frequently of leather, and are often used with one or more buckles, or a buckle and slide, allowing of a more or less close adjustment of the strap. See cut under shot-pouch. Specifically—(a) Naut.: (1) A piece of rope with the ends spliced together, used for attaching a tackle to anything or for slinging any weight to be lifted. (2) A ring of rope or band of iron put round a block or deadeye, suspending it or holding it in place. Sometimes spelled strop. (b) A razor-strop. See razor-strop and strop[1]. (c) An ornament like a strap; a shoulder-strap. See shoulder-strap, 2.

2. A long and narrow piece of thin iron or other metal used to hold different parts together, as of a frame or the sides of a box; a leaf of a hinge; in carp., an iron plate for connecting two or more timbers, to which it is bolted or screwed.—3. In bot., the ligule in florets of Compositæ (see ligule); also, in some grasses, the leaf exclusive of its sheath.—4. A string. [Scotch.]

They winna string the like o' him up as they do the puir whig bodies that they catch in the muirs, like straps o' onions.
Scott, Old Mortality, x.

5. Credit; originally, credit for drink. [Slang.]—6. In a vehicle: (a) A plate on the upper side of the tongue and resting upon the doubletree, to aid in holding the wagon-hammer. (b) A clip, such as that which holds a spring to the spring-bar or to the axle. (c) The stirrup-shaped piece of a clevis. E. H. Knight.—7. A strap-oyster.

strap (strap), v. t.; pret. and pp. strapped, ppr. strapping. [< strap, n.] 1. To fasten or bind with a strap: especially in the sense of compressing and holding very closely: often with up or down.

He carries white thread gloves, sports a cane, has his trousers tightly strapped.
W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 49.

2. To beat or chastise with a strap. [Colloq.]—3. To sharpen with a strap; strop, as a razor.

"I shouldn't wonder if we had a snow-storm before it's over, Molly," said Pluck, strapping his knife on the edge of the kit.
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 17.

4. To hang. [Scotch.]

Weel I wot it's a crime, baith by the law of God and man, and mony a pretty man has been strapped for it [murder].
Scott, St. Ronan's Well, xiv.

To be or become strapped, to lose one's money; be bankrupt or out of money. [Slang.]—To strap a deadeye, to fasten a strap of rope or iron round a block, deadeye, or bull's-eye.

strap-bolt (strap'bōlt), n. Same as lug-bolt.

strap-game (strap'gām), n. A swindling trick otherwise known as prick the garter, prick at the loop, and fast and loose (which see, under fast[1], a.).

strap-head (strap'hed), n. In mach., a journal-box formed at the end of a connecting-rod.

strap-hinge (strap'hinj), n. See hinge.

strap-joint (strap'joint), n. In mach., a connection formed by a strap, key, and gib, as on the end of a pitman. E. H. Knight.

strap-laid (strap'lād), a. Noting a flat rope made by placing two or more strands of hawser-laid rope side by side, piercing them laterally, and binding them together by twine inserted through the pierced holes.

strap-mounts (strap'mounts), n. pl. The buckles, chapes, slides, etc., with which leather straps are fitted.

strap-oil (strap'oil), n. A beating. [Humorous.]

strap-oyster (strap'ois*ter), n. A long slender oyster which grows upright in mud. Also called stuck-up, stick-up, coon-heel, shanghai, razor-blade, rabbitear, etc. [New Jersey.]

strappado (stra-pā'dō), n. [Formerly also strapado; < OF. strapade, F. estrapade = Sp. estrapada = It. strappata, < strapparc, pull.] A punishment or torture which consisted in raising the victim to a certain height by a rope and letting him fall suddenly, the rope being secured to his person in such a way that the jerk in falling would inflict violent pain. For example, the hands being tied together, the rope would be secured to the wrists; the punishment was more severe when the arms had previously been brought behind the back.

We presently determined rather to seeke our liberties then to bee in danger for euer to be slaues in the country, for it was told vs we should haue ye strapado.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 253.

They vse also the Strappado, hoising them vp and downe by the armes with a cord. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 441.

strappado (stra-pā'dō), v. t. [< strappado, n.] To torture by the strappado.

Oh, to redeeme my honour,
I would haue this hand cut off, these my brests sear'd,
Be rack'd, strappado'd, put to any torment.
Heywood, Woman Killed with Kindness (Works, ed. 1874, [II. 141).

strapper (strap'ėr), n. [< strap + -er[1].] 1. One who has to do with straps; specifically, one who has charge of the harnessing of horses.

Men who, though nothing but strappers, call themselves grooms.
Encyc. Brit., XII. 195.

2. Anything bulky; a large, tall person. [Colloq.]

A strapper—a real strapper, Jane; big, brown, and buxom; with hair just such as the ladies of Carthage must have had. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xx.

strapping[1] (strap'ing), n. [Verbal n. of strap, v.] 1. The act of fastening with a strap.—2. A beating; a whipping. [Colloq.]

He will not say a word to any one, . . . for fear of a strapping.
W. Black, In Far Lochaber, xvi.

3. Material for straps, or straps in general.

Securing the loose flaps of the lip with pieces of strapping.
Lancet, 1890, I. 183.

strapping[2] (strap'ing), p. a. [Ppr. of strap, v., used, like thumping, whacking, whopping, bouncing, and other participial adjectives expressing violent action, to denote something of impressively large size.] Tall; lusty; robust. [Colloq.]

Then that t'other great strapping Lady—I can't hit off her Name. Congreve, Double-Dealer, iii. 10.

strapping-plate (strap'ing-plāt), n. In mining, one of the wrought-iron plates by which the spears of a pump-rod are bolted together. Also called spear-plate.

strapplet (strap'l), v. t. [Freq. of strap, v.] To bind with a strap; strap; entangle.

His ruin startled th' other steeds, the gears crack'd, and the reins Strappled his fellows. Chapman, Iliad, xvi. 438.

strap-shaped (strap'shāpt), a. Ligulate; shaped like a strap: used especially of the rays of the tubuliflorous and the corollas of the liguliflorous Compositæ.

strap-skein (strap'skān), n. In carriage-building, a flat strip of iron let into the wood of an axle-arm to protect it from wear.

strap-work (strap'wėrk), n. Architectural ornament consisting of a narrow fillet or band represented as folded and crossed, and occasionally interlaced with another.

strap-worm (strap'wėrm), n. A cestoid worm of the family Ligulidæ.

strapwort (strap'wėrt), n. A sea-coast plant of the Mediterranean region and western Europe, Corrigiola littoralis, of the Illecebraceæ. It is an herb with numerous slender trailing stems, suggesting the name, and small white flowers in little heads or cymes, the sepals petal-like on the margin.

Strasburg finch, pâté, ware, etc. See finch[1], etc.

strass (stras), n. [So called from the name of the German inventor, Josef Strasser.] 1. Same as paste[1], 3.—2. The refuse of silk left in making up skeins. E. H. Knight.

strata, n. Plural of stratum.

stratagem (strat'a-jem), n. [Formerly also strategem; early mod. E. stratageme; < OF. stratageme, F. stratagème = Sp. estratagema = Pg. estratagema, stratagema = It. stratagemma (in Rom. erroneously spelled with a in the second orig. syllable), < L. strategema, < Gr. στρατήγημα, the act of a general, a piece of generalship, < στρατηγεῖν, be a general, command an army, < στρατηγός, a general, the leader or commander of an army: see strategy.] 1. An artifice in war; a plan or scheme for deceiving an enemy.

> The man that hath no music in himself,
> Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
> Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils.
> Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 85.

> He [Henry V.] never fought Battel, nor won Town, wherein he prevailed not as much by Stratagem as by Force. Baker, Chronicles, p. 179.

2. Any artifice; a trick by which some advantage is intended to be obtained.

> Ambition is full of distractions; it teems with stratagems, and is swelled with expectations as with a tympany. Jer. Taylor.

> It is an honest stratagem to take advantage of ourselves. Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 13.

=Syn. 1 and 2. Artifice, Manœuver, Trick, etc. See artifice.—2. Deception, plot, trap, device, snare, dodge, contrivance.

stratagematic (strat″a-je-mat'ik), a. [< OF. stratagematique, < NL. strategematicus*, < Gr. στρατήγημα(τ-), a stratagem: see stratagem.] Using stratagem; skilled in strategy. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (ed. Arber), p. 35. [Rare.]

stratagematically (strat″a-je-mat'i-kal-i), adv. By stratagem or artifice. G. Harvey, Four Letters.

stratagemic (strat-a-jem'ik), a. [< stratagem + -ic.] Containing or characterized by stratagem or artifice. [Rare.]

stratagemical (strat-a-jem'i-kal), a. [< stratagemic + -al.] Same as stratagemic. Cotgrave; Swift (?), Tripos, iii.

stratarithmetry (strat-a-rith'me-tri), n. [Irreg. < Gr. στρατός, an army, + ἀριθμός, a number (see arithmetic), + -μετρία, < μέτρον, measure.] Milit., the art of drawing up an army or body of men in a geometrical figure, or of estimating or expressing the number of men in such a figure. Imp. Dict.

strategetic (strat-ē-jet'ik), a. [< Gr. στρατηγητικός, pertaining to the command of an army, < στρατηγεῖν, be a general, command an army: see stratagem.] Same as strategic.

strategetical (strat-ē-jet'i-kal), a. [< strategetic + -al.] Same as strategical.

strategetically (strat-ē-jet'i-kal-i), adv. In a strategetical manner.

strategetics (strat-ē-jet'iks), n. [Pl. of strategetic (see -ics).] Same as strategy.

strategi, n. Plural of strategus, 1.

strategic (stra-tej'ik), a. [= F. stratégique, < LL. strategicus* (in neut. pl. strategica, the deeds of a general), < Gr. στρατηγικός, of or pertaining to a general, < στρατηγός, a general: see stratagem, and cf. strategy.] Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of strategy; demanded by, used in, or characterized by strategy: as, strategic movements.—Strategic battle. See battle[1], 1.

strategical (stra-tej'i-kal), a. [< strategic + -al.] Same as strategic.

strategically (stra-tej'i-kal-i), adv. In a strategic manner; as regards strategy.

strategics (stra-tej'iks), n. [Pl. of strategic (see -ics).] Same as strategy.

strategist (strat'ē-jist), n. [= F. stratégiste; as strateg-y + -ist.] One skilled in strategy.

> He [Milton] was a strategist rather than a drill-sergeant in verse, capable, beyond any other English poet, of putting great masses through the most complicated evolutions without clash or confusion, but he was not curious that every foot should be at the same angle. Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 286.

strategus (stra-tē'gus), n. [< L. strategus, < Gr. στρατηγός, the commander of an army, a general: see strategy.] 1. Pl. strategi (-jī). A military commander in ancient Greece: as, Diœus was strategus of the Achean League.—2. [cap.] [NL. (Hope, 1837).] In entom., a genus of large American scarabæid beetles, whose males usually have three prothoracic horns. They are mainly tropical and subtropical, but S. antæus extends north to Massachusetts.—3. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of mollusks.

strategy (strat'ē-ji), n. [< OF. strategie, F. stratégie = Sp. estrategia = It. strategia, strategy (cf. L. strategia, a government, province), < Gr. στρατηγία, the office or dignity of a commander, generalship, a pretorship, government, province, < στρατηγός, the leader or commander of an army, a general, a governor, pretor, consul, < στρατός, an army, host, soldiery (prep. an encamped army, lit. 'scattered, spread' (= L. stratus, scattered, spread), < στορεννύναι = L. sternere (pp. stratus), scatter, spread, strew: see stratum), + ἄγειν, lead (see agent).] 1. The science of combining and employing the means which the different branches of the art of war afford, for the purpose of forming projects of operations and of directing great military movements; the art of moving troops so as to be enabled either to dispense with a battle or to deliver one with the greatest advantage and with the most decisive results; generalship. In strategy three things demand especial consideration: (1) the base of operations, or line from which an army commences its advance upon an enemy; (2) the objective, or objective point, the point which it aims to possess, or the object which it strives to attain; (3) the line of operations, or that line which an army must pass over to attain its objective point. When an army assumes a strictly defensive attitude, the base of operations becomes the line of defense, and in a retrograde movement the line of operations becomes the line of retreat. Strategical points are the points of operations of an army—namely, points whose occupation secures an undoubted advantage to the army holding them for offensive and defensive purposes, and points which it is the chief object of an army to attain. The theater of operations comprises the territory to be invaded or defended by an army. It includes the base of operations, the objective point, the front of operations, the lines of operation, the lines of communication which connect the several lines of operations, obstacles, natural or artificial, lines of retreat, and places of refuge. The front of operations is the length of the line in advance of the base of operations covered or occupied by an army.

2. The use of artifice, finesse, or stratagem for the carrying out of any project.

strath (strath), n. [< Gael. srath = Ir. srath, sratha = W. ystrad, a valley; perhaps connected with street, ult. < L. strata: see street.] In Scotland, a valley of considerable size, often having a river running through it and giving it its distinctive appellation: as, *Strath*spey (the valley of the Spey), *Strath*earn (the valley of the Earn), and *Strath*more (the great valley).

strathspey (strath-spā'), n. [So called from Strathspey in Scotland.] 1. A Scotch dance, invented early in the eighteenth century, resembling the reel, but slower, and marked by numerous sudden jerks.

> While youths and maids the light strathspey
> So nimbly danced, with Highland glee!
> Scott, Glenfinlas.

2. Music for such a dance or in its rhythm, which is duple, moderately rapid, and abounding in the rhythmic or metric figure called the Scotch snap or catch (which see, under Scotch[1]), or its converse.

straticulate (strā-tik'ū-lāt), a. [< NL. straticulatus*, < straticulum*, dim. of stratum, a layer: see stratum.] Arranged in thin layers, as a banded agate.

stratification (strat″i-fi-kā'shon), n. [= F. stratification = Sp. estratificacion = It. stratificazione; as stratify + -ation.] 1. The act of stratifying, or the state of being stratified; formation or arrangement in layers.

> It was formerly the practice in England, as it still is on the Continent, to tan by the process of stratification, for which purpose a bed of bark is made upon the bottom of the pit; upon this is laid the hide, then bark, then a hide, and so on until the pit is full. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 385.

2. Specifically, in geol., deposition in beds or strata; the mode of occurrence of those rocks which have been laid down or spread over the surface by water. The most important indication and result of stratification is that the rock separates more or less easily along the planes separating the beds or strata. Each stratification-plane marks a change in the character of the deposit, or a shorter or longer period during which deposition was suspended. Often one stratum is succeeded by another of quite different character, showing a change in the existing conditions. Sometimes, however, a rock is distinctly stratified, but each stratum separates easily into much thinner layers, closely resembling one another in petrographic character: this is generally called lamination. In some cases the apparent stratification seems to be of the nature of an imperfect cleavage, there having been a certain amount of rearrangement of the particles of the rock parallel to the planes of deposition. See cuts under Artesian and erosion.

3. In physiol., the thickening of a cell-wall by the deposition of successive thin layers of formed material; also, the arrangement of the layers so deposited.

> It is now known that stratification is due to a subsequent change in the amount of water of organization present in particular parts of the [cell-]wall. Bessey, Botany, p. 33.

4. In elect., the appearance presented by an electric discharge, or a series of rapid discharges, in a rarefied gas, light and dark bands or striæ being produced.

stratified (strat'i-fīd), p. a. Arranged or disposed in layers or strata: as, stratified rocks. See cut under erosion.—Stratified cartilage, ordinary white fibrocartilage.—Stratified epithelium. See epithelium.—Stratified thallus, in lichens, a thallus in which the gonidia, or algal cells, are disposed in one or more layers, thus producing stratification. See heteromerous, (c) (2).

stratiform (strat'i-fôrm), a. [< NL. stratum, a layer, + forma, form.] Forming or formed into a layer or lamella; embedded as a stratum or layer; stratified: specifically used in the anatomy of a form of cartilage.—Stratiform cartilage or fibrocartilage, a layer of cartilage embedded in a groove of bone along which the tendon of a muscle plays: referring not to a special kind of cartilage, but to the particular form in which it is arranged. The cartilage lining the bicipital groove of the humerus, on which the tendon of the long head of the biceps glides, is an example.

stratify (strat'i-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. stratified, ppr. stratifying. [= F. stratifier = It. stratificare, < NL. stratum, a layer, + L. facere, make, do.] To form into a layer or layers, as substances in the earth; lay or arrange in strata.

stratigrapher (strā-tig'ra-fėr), n. [< stratigraph-y + -er[1].] One who devotes himself to the study of stratigraphical geology. Nature, XLIII. 142.

stratigraphic (strat-i-graf'ik), a. [< stratigraph-y + -ic.] Having to do with the order of succession, mode of occurrence, and general geological character of the series of stratified rocks of which the earth's crust is largely composed.

stratigraphical (strat-i-graf'i-kal), a. [< stratigraphic + -al.] Same as stratigraphic.

stratigraphically (strat-i-graf'i-kal-i), adv. In a stratigraphic manner; as regards stratigraphy, or the disposition of strata.

stratigraphist (strā-tig'ra-fist), n. [< stratigraph-y + -ist.] One who studies stratigraphy; a stratigrapher. Nature, XXXVIII. 506.

stratigraphy (strā-tig'ra-fi), n. [< NL. stratum, a layer, + Gr. -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] In geol., order and position of the stratified groups; all that part of geological science which is not specially theoretical or paleontological; general descriptive geology.

Stratiomyia (strat″i-ō-mī'i-ą), n. [NL. (Macquart, 1838), orig. Stratiomys (Geoffroy, 1764), also Stratiomya (Schiner, 1868), Stratyomis (Schelling, 1803), Stratyomys (J. E. Gray, 1832); irreg. < Gr. στρατιώτης, a soldier, + μυῖα, a fly.] The typical genus of the family Stratiomyidæ. They are medium-sized or rather large flies of dark color with light spots or stripes. The larvæ live in mud or damp sand, and the flies are found upon umbelliferous and other flowers growing near water. About 40 species are known in North America, and about 20 in Europe. They are sometimes called chameleon-flies, from the name of one species, S. chamæleon.

Stratiomyidæ (strat″i-ō-mī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Leach, 1819, as Stratiomydæ), < Stratiomyia + -idæ.] A family of true flies, belonging to the brachycerous Diptera and to the section Notacantha. It is a large and wide-spread family; about 200 species occur in North America. They vary much in size and color, and have a large hemispherical head, flattened or convex abdomen, and tibiæ usually without spurs. They are mostly flower-flies, and are often found upon vegetation in damp places.

Stratioteæ (strat-i-ō'tē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Link, 1829), < Stratiotes + -eæ.] A tribe of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Hydrocharideæ and series Glycydræ. It is characterized by a very short stem bearing crowded sessile submerged leaves and usually also long-petioled floating leaves, by peduncled spathes, and by one-celled ovaries spuriously six-celled by intrusion of the lobed placentæ. It includes five genera, of which Stratiotes is the type. (See also Hydrocharis.) The others are mostly tropical plants of fresh water, with ovate-oblong or broadly cordate floating leaves and ribbed or winged spathes.

Stratiotes (strat-i-ō'tēz), n. [NL. (in def. 1 (Linnæus, 1737) so called from the sword-like leaves), < Gr. στρατιώτης, sc. ποτάμιος, an Egyptian water-plant, by some said to have been the water-lettuce, Pistia Stratiotes; lit. 'river-soldier,' < στρατιώτης, a soldier, < στρατιά, an army, < στρατός, an army: see strategy. Cf. stradiot, estradiot.] 1. A genus of water-plants, of the order Hydrocharideæ, type of the tribe Stratiotеæ. It is without floating leaves, unlike the rest of its tribe, and is characterized by spathes of two leaves which in the male inclose the base of a long pedicel bearing two or more flowers with from 11 to 15 stamens each. The female flowers are solitary and short-pedicelled, with numerous linear staminodes, 6 slender two-cleft styles, and a beaked ovary becoming in fruit ovoid and acuminate, externally fleshy, and exserted from its spathe on a recurved pedicel. The only species, S. aloïdes, the water-soldier, is a native of Europe and Siberia, and resembles a small aloe. It is a perennial submerged aquatic, with somewhat fleshy crowded sword-shaped leaves, which are acute, sessile, and sharply serrate. The flowers are borne above the surface of the water; each perianth consists of three calyx-like segments and three much larger wavy crisped white petals. Old names are knightswort, crab's-claw, and water-sengreen.

2. In entom., a genus of South American carabid beetles. Putzeys, 1846.

strato-cirrus (strā-tō-sir'us), n. [NL., < stratus + cirrus.] A cloud very like cirro-stratus, but more compact in structure, and formed at a lower altitude. Abercromby.

stratocracy (strā-tok'ra-si), n. [< Gr. στρατός, an army, + -κρατία, < κρατεῖν, rule.] A military government; government by force of arms.

Enough exists to show that the form of polity [according to Plato's system] would be a martial aristocracy, a qualified stratocracy. De Quincey, Plato.

strato-cumulus (strā-tō-kū'mū-lus), n. [NL., < stratus + cumulus.] A stratum of low cloud consisting of separate irregular masses; a cloud of the layer type, but not sufficiently uniform to be pure stratus. Also called cumulo-stratus.

stratographic (strat-ō-graf'ik), a. [< stratography + -ic.] Pertaining to stratography.

stratographical (strat-ō-graf'i-kal), a. [< stratographic + -al.] Same as stratographic.

stratographically (strat-ō-graf'i-kal-i), adv. In a stratographic manner.

stratography (strā-tog'ra-fi), n. [< Gr. στρατός, an army, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] Description of armies or what belongs to an army.

A great commander by land and by sea, he [Raleigh] was critical in all the arts of stratography, and delights to illustrate them on every occasion. I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 273.

Stratonic (strā-ton'ik), a. Same as Stratonical.

Stratonical (strā-ton'i-kal), a. [< Strato (see def.) + -ic-al.] Pertaining to Strato or Straton of Lampsacus, called "the physicist," the third head of the Peripatetic school of philosophy, over which he presided from 288 to 270 B. C. He was a thorough materialist, and held that every particle of matter has a plastic and seminal power, and that the world is formed by natural development.—Stratonical atheism†, a form of evolutionism which replaces the absolute chance of the Epicureans by a sort of life which is regarded as an intrinsic attribute of matter.

There is, indeed, another form of atheism, . . . we for distinction sake shall call Stratonical, such as, being too modest and shamefaced to fetch all things from the fortuitous motion of atoms, would therefore allow to the several parts of matter a certain kind of natural (though not animal) perception, such as is devoid of reflexive consciousness, together with a plastic power whereby they may be able artificially and methodically to form and frame themselves to the best advantage of their respective capabilities—something like to Aristotle's Nature, but that it hath no dependence at all upon any higher mind or deity. Cudworth, Intellectual System, ii. § 3.

stratopeite (strā-tō'pē-īt), n. [< NL. stratum, a layer; second element uncertain.] A hydrous silicate of manganese, of uncertain composition, derived from the alteration of rhodonite.

stratose (strā'tōs), a. [< NL. stratosus*, < stratum, a layer: see stratum.] In bot., stratified; arranged in more or less clearly defined layers. Farlow, Marine Algæ, p. 51.

stratotic (strā-tot'ik), a. [Irreg. < Gr. στρατός, an army, + -t-ic; or erroneously for stratiotic*, < Gr. στρατιωτικός, of or pertaining to a soldier, < στρατιώτης, a soldier: see Stratiotes.] Warlike; military. [Rare.] Imp. Dict.

stratum (strā'tum), n.; pl. strata (-tä). [NL., < L. stratum, a spread for a bed, a coverlet, quilt, blanket, a pillow, bolster, a bed, also pavement, prop. neut. of stratus (= Gr. στρατός, an army), pp. of sternere, = Gr. στορεννύναι, spread, extend. Cf. strew.] A layer of material, formed either naturally or artificially. Specifically—(a) In geol., same as bed. See *bed*1, 6 (c), and stratification, also cut under Artesian. (b) In zoöl. and anat., a layer of tissue, as a membrane, etc.; a lamina or lamella; especially, one of several similar or superposed layers specified by a qualifying word: used with either English or Latin context. —Gonidial stratum. See gonidial.—Rise of strata, in geol. See dip, n., 4 (a).—Secondary strata, in geol., the Mesozoic strata.—Stratum bacillosum. Same as rod-and-cone layer of the retina (which see, under retina).—Stratum cinereum, a layer of gray matter in the nates, lying just beneath the stratum zonale, with few and small ganglion-cells.—Stratum corneum, the outer layer of the epidermis, above the stratum granulosum. See cut under skin.—Stratum cylindrorum. Same as stratum bacillosum.—Stratum gelatinosum, a layer of gray matter of the olfactory bulb, consisting of fusiform or pyramidal gray nerve-cells in a fine mesh of white nerve-fiber.—Stratum glomerulosum, a layer of gray matter of the olfactory bulb, consisting of nodulated masses containing small nuclear cells, among which is a convoluted olfactory nerve-fiber.—Stratum granulosum, the thin stratum next above the stratum spinosum of the epidermis, consisting of cells rendered granular by minute globules of ceratohyalin. It is wanting over the lips and under the nails, and gives the white color to the skin. See cut under skin.—Stratum lacunosum, a layer of the hippocampus major, next above the stratum radiatum, characterized by the open reticulated nature of the neuroglia.—Stratum lucidum, the lowest layer of the stratum corneum of the epidermis. See cut under skin.—Stratum opticum, the layer in the upper quadrigeminal body which lies below the stratum cinereum, composed of longitudinal white fibers interspersed with ganglion-cells.—Stratum radiatum, a layer of the hippocampus major, striated at right angles to its surfaces by the processes of the large pyramidal cells which lie along its inner border.—Stratum spinosum, the lowest layer of the epidermis, next to the corium, formed of prickle-cells, and limited above by the stratum granulosum. Also called rete mucosum, rete Malpighii or Malpighi, and stratum Malpighii or Malpighi. See cut under skin.—Stratum zonale, a superficial stratum of white nerve-fibers.

stratus (strā'tus), n. [NL., < L. stratus, a spread for a bed, a coverlet, < sternere, pp. stratus, spread, extend: see stratum.] A continuous horizontal sheet of cloud, generally of uniform thickness. It is essentially a fine-weather cloud, and is characteristic of areas of high pressure. In the evening and morning of fine days it frequently appears as a low foggy canopy overspreading the whole or a part of the sky, and disappears as the heat of the day increases. All low detached clouds which look like lifted fog and are not consolidated into definite form are stratus. It is the lowest of the clouds. Abbreviated s. See cut under cloud.

All cloud which lies as a thin flat sheet must either be pure stratus or contain the word strato in combination. Abercromby, Weather, p. 71.

straucht, straught1 (strâcht), a. and r. Obsolete or dialectal (Scotch) forms of *straight*1.

straught2† (strât), a. [By apheresis from distraught. Cf. strauet.] Distraught.

So as being now straught of minde, desperate, and a verie foole, he goeth, etc. R. Scot, Witchcraft, I. 8 b. (Nares.) straughte†, straught3†. Obsolete forms of the preterit and past participle of stretch.

stravagant†, a. [= It. stravagante; an aphetic form of extravagant.] Extravagant; profuse.

stravaig (stra-vāg'), r. i. [Also stravaige; prop. stravague*, < OF. estravaguer = OIt. stravagare, < ML. extravagari, wander out or beyond: see extravagant. Cf. stravagant.] To stroll; wander; go about idly. [Scotch and Irish.]

What did ye come here for? To go prancing down to the shore and back from the shore—and stravaygng about the place? W. Black, In Far Lochaber, vii.

stravaiger (stra-vā'gėr), n. [< stravaig + *-er*1.] One who wanders about idly; a stroller; a wanderer. [Scotch and Irish.]

straw1 (strâ), n. and a. [= Sc. strae; < ME. straw, strau, stra, stre, stree, < AS. streáw, *streá, streów (found independently only in the form strēcu (appar. pl.), in two glosses, otherwise only in comp. streáwberie, etc.: see strawberry) = OS. strō = OFries. strē = MD. stroo, stroy, D. stroo = MLG. strō, LG. stro = OHG. strō, MHG. strou, strō (straw-, strouw-, strōw-), G. stroh = Icel. strá = Sw. strå = Dan. straa, straw: appar. 'that which is scattered about' (if so, it must have been orig. applied to the broken stalks of grain after threshing, the simple sense 'stalk' being then later), from the root of strew (dial. straw): see *strew, straw*2; cf. L. stramen, straw, < sternere, pp. stratus, strew (see *strand*3, stramage, strammel, stratum).] I. n. 1. The stalk or stem of certain species of grain, pulse, etc., chiefly of wheat, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, and pease, cut or broken off (and usually dry); also, a piece of such a stem.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws. Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 913.

2. Such stalks collectively, especially after drying and threshing: as, a load of straw. In this sense a collective without plural.

Ne how the fyr was couched first with stree,
And thanne with drye stokkes cloven a three.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2075.

3. Figuratively, anything proverbially worthless: the least possible thing.

For thy sword and thy bow I care not a straw,
Nor all thine arrows to boot.
Robin Hood and the Tanner (Child's Ballads, V. 225).

Love, like despair, catches at straws. Scott, Quentin Durward, xxxv.

4. [In allusion to the proverb, "A straw shows which way the wind blows."] A slight fact, taken as an instance in proof of a tendency.—5. A clay pipe, especially a long one. [Colloq.] —6. Same as straw-needle.—7. In entom., a stick-insect; a walking-stick.—Dunstable straw, wheat-straw used for bonnet-plaits. The middle part of the straw above the last joint is selected. It is cut into lengths of about 10 inches, which are then split by a machine into slips of the requisite width. Whole Dunstable signifies a plait that is formed of seven entire straws, while a patent Dunstable consists of fourteen split straws. Simmonds.—Face of straw, a sham; a mere effigy.

Off drops the Vizor, and a Face of Straw appeara. Roger North, Examen, III. viii. § 6.

In the straw, lying-in, as a mother; in childbed.

Our English plain Proverb de Puerperis, "they are in the straw," shows Feather-Beds to be of no ancient use among the common sort of our nation. Fuller, Worthies, Lincolnshire, II. 263. (Davies.)

Jack of straw. Same as jackstraw, I.—Leghorn straw. See leghorn.—Man of straw. See man.—Pad in the straw†. See *pad*2.—To break a straw†, to quarrel. Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 68.—To draw straws, to give indications of sleepiness.

Lady Answ. I'm sure 'tis time for honest folks to be a-bed.
Miss. Indeed my eyes draw straws. Swift, Polite Conversation, iii.

To lay a straw†, to pause and make a note. Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 141.

II. a. 1. Made or composed of straw: as, a straw hat.—2. Sham; fictitious; useless: as, a straw bid. Compare straw bail, under *bail*2, 5.—Straw bond. See *bond*1.—Straw bonnet, a bonnet made of woven or plaited straw. See straw hat, Dunstable straw (above), and leghorn.—Straw hat, a hat made of straw either woven together in one piece or, as is more common, plaited into a narrow braid which is wound spirally, the separate turns being sewed together where the edges touch. Hats for men and bonnets for women are included under the general term.—Straw mosaic, rope, etc. See the nouns.—Straw vote, a vote taken without previous notice, in a casual gathering or otherwise. See 1., 4.

straw1 (strâ), r. t. [< *straw*1, n.] To furnish or bind with straw; apply straw to.—Strawed seal, a seal containing a straw, a blade of grass, or a rush, or several of these, embedded in the wax, often around it as a border, or tied in fastening the seal to the document. Such additions to the ordinary seal were often made in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries; but whether the purpose was to strengthen or protect the wax or to preserve a fragment of the clod delivered in making livery of seizin seems to be matter of conjecture.

straw2 (strâ), r. t. An obsolete or dialectal form of strew. Ex. xxxii. 20.

She strawed the roses on the ground,
Threw her mantle on the brier.
Lord John (Child's Ballads, I. 135).

strawberry (strâ'ber/i), n.; pl. strawberries (-iz). [< ME. strawbery, strauberi, strabery, straberi, strebery, streberi, strebere, also (in comp.) strawbyry, strobery, < AS. streáwberie, streáwberige, also contracted streáberie, streáberige, streáberge, also streówberge, strauberie, late AS. strēberie (in comp.), strawberry (also called earthberie, G. erdbeere, 'earth-berry'), < streáw*, straw, + berie, berry: see *straw*1 and *berry*1. The first element, lit. 'straw,' is very rare in AS. use, and its exact application here is uncertain. It may be taken in the sense of 'a long stem,' referring to the runners of the plant, or it may allude to an old habit of stringing the berries on a straw. The word is often erroneously explained as a corruption of a supposed strayberry*, or even as referring to the common use of straw or hay about the plants to keep the earth from soiling the berries. No corresponding name appears in the other languages. Cf. strawberry-wise.] The fruit of any of the species of the genus Fragaria, or the plant itself. The plants are stemless, propagating by slender runners (whence they are often called strawberry-vines), with trifoliate leaves, and scapes a few inches high, bearing mostly white-petaled flowers in small cymes, followed by the "berry," which consists of an enlarged fleshy receptacle, colored scarlet or other shade of red, bearing the achenes on its exterior. About six natural species are recognized, though these are so variable as to make it possible that they all belong to one multiform species. F. vesca is common throughout the northern Old World and northward in North America. It includes the alpine strawberry, hautboy, and wood-strawberry (see below), was probably the first cultivated, and is the source of many artificial varieties, including the perpetuals. The Virginian or scarlet strawberry, F. Virginiana, is common eastward in North America, and in the more robust variety Illinoensis extends perhaps to Oregon. The achenes, which in F. vesca are superficial, are in this species sunk in pits. It was the source of the famous Hovey's seedling, produced near Boston about 1840, and later of Wilson's Albany (or simply Wilson's), whose production marked an epoch in American strawberry-culture. In Chili and along the Pacific coast from Sao Francisco to Alaska grows the Chili strawberry, F. Chilensis, a low stout densely hairy plant with thick leaves and large flowers, which has been the source of valuable hybrids in France and England. The Indian strawberry, F. Indica, peculiar in its yellow petals and tasteless fruit, is only of ornamental value. The strawberry was not cultivated by the ancients; its culture in Europe began probably in the fifteenth or sixteenth century. It is now grown in great quantities in Europe and North America for its delicious subacid fruit, which is used fresh for dessert, and also canned or made into jam, and affords a syrup for flavoring drinks, ices, creams, etc. The varieties, which are mainly or wholly from the first three species above named, are numerous and constantly changing. See cuts under flagellum and Fragaria.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle.
Shak., Hen. V., i. 1. 60.

Dr. Boteler said, of strawberries, "Doubtless God could have made a better berry, but doubtless God never did."
I. Walton, Complete Angler (ed. Bohn), p. 158.

Alpine strawberry, a European form of Fragaria vesca, sometimes distinguished as F. collina.—Ananas strawberry. Same as pine-strawberry.—Barren strawberry, in England, Potentilla Fragariastrum, resembling the strawberry in its trifoliate leaves and white flowers; in America, Waldsteinia fragarioides, having the leaves three-parted, but the flowers yellow. Neither has fleshy fruit.—Bog-strawberry, the marsh-fivefinger, Potentilla palustris. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]—Carolina strawberry, a misnomer of the pine-strawberry, once thought to have come from Carolina.—Chili strawberry. See def. and pine-strawberry.—Crushed strawberry, a crimson-red color of considerably reduced luminosity and somewhat reduced chroma. A color disk of 38 parts pure red, 7 parts artificial ultramarine, 48 parts velvet-black, and 7 parts white shows a crushed strawberry.—Hautboy strawberry. See hautboy, 2.—Pine-strawberry, a variety of the Chili strawberry (see def. above), so called from its pineapple flavor. Also Ananas strawberry. See Carolina strawberry. [Eng.]—Scarlet strawberry, specifically, the Virginian strawberry. [Eng.]—Strawberry-crown borer, a curculionid beetle, Tyloderma fragariæ, which lays its eggs at the crown of the strawberry-plant in the United States, and whose larva often seriously damages the crop.—Strawberry false-worm. See strawberry saw-fly (below), and strawberry-worm.—Strawberry leaf-roller, a tortricid moth, Phoxopteris fragariæ, the larva of which rolls the leaves of the strawberry-plant in the United States; also, one of several other moths whose larvæ have this habit. See cut under leaf-roller.—Strawberry-leaves, a dukedom: from the eight strawberry-leaves on a ducal coronet.—Strawberry root-borer, a moth, Anarsia lineatella, whose larva burrows in the roots of this plant, and often does great damage.—Strawberry run. See run[1].—Strawberry saw-fly, a small black saw-fly, Emphytus maculatus, whose larva is a strawberry-worm. See cut under Emphytus.—Strawberry spinach. Same as strawberry-blite.—Strawberry tongue, in med., a red papillated tongue, as seen in scarlatina.—Wild strawberry, any native strawberry; also, sometimes, species of Potentilla, from their resemblance to the true strawberry.—Wood-strawberry, the typical form of Fragaria vesca. [Eng.]

Strawberry-crown borer (Tyloderma fragariæ).
a, larva, full-grown; b, adult beetle, from side; c, same, from above. (Hair-lines show natural sizes.)

strawberry-bass (strâ'ber-i-bȧs), n. Same as grass-bass.

strawberry-blite (strâ'ber-i-blīt), n. A species of goosefoot, Chenopodium (Blitum) capitatum, also C. (B.) virgatum, whose flower-heads ripen into a bright-red juicy compound fruit. They are Old World plants found in gardens, and the fruit, though insipid, is said to have been formerly used in cookery. Also called strawberry spinach.

strawberry-borer (strâ'ber-i-bōr″ėr), n. One of several different insects whose larvæ mine, bore, or burrow in the crown, leaf, or root of the strawberry. See the specific phrase-names under strawberry.

strawberry-bush (strâ'ber-i-bŭsh), n. A low upright or straggling American shrub, Euonymus Americana: so named from its crimson and scarlet fruit.

strawberry-clover (strâ'ber-i-klō″vėr), n. A species of clover, Trifolium fragiferum, of Europe and temperate Asia. It resembles the common white clover, T. repens, but has the fruiting heads involucrate, and very dense from the inflation of the calyxes, which are also somewhat colored, thus suggesting the name.

strawberry-comb (strâ'ber-i-kōm), n. See comb[1], 3.

strawberry-crab (strâ'ber-i-krab), n. A small maioid or spider-crab of European waters, Eurynome aspera: so called from the reddish tubercles with which the carapace is studded.

strawberry-finch (strâ'ber-i-finch), n. Same as amadavat.

strawberry-geranium (strâ'ber-i-jē-rā″ni-um), n. See geranium and saxifrage.

strawberry-mark (strâ'ber-i-märk), n. A kind of birth-mark; a vascular nævus, of reddish color and soft consistency, like a strawberry.

strawberry-moth (strâ'ber-i-môth), n. Any moth whose larva injures the strawberry. (a) A strawberry root-borer. (b) A strawberry leaf-roller. (c) One of three geometrids, Petrophora truncata, Nematocampa filamentaria, and Angerona crocataria, whose larvæ feed on the foliage. (d) The smeared dagger, Acronycta oblinita.

strawberry-pear (strâ'ber-i-pãr), n. The fruit of a cactaceous plant, Cereus triangularis, of the West Indies, etc., or the plant itself. This plant has three-angled branches which climb by rooting. The fruit is subacid, pleasant, and cooling, and is said to be the best-flavored afforded by any plant of the order.

Strawberry-pear (Cereus triangularis).

strawberry-perch (strâ'ber-i-pėrch), n. The grass-bass.

strawberry-plant (strâ'ber-i-plant), n. 1. See strawberry.—2. Same as strawberry-shrub.

strawberry-roan (strâ'ber-i-rōn), a. See roan[1].

strawberry-shrub (strâ'ber-i-shrub), n. The sweet shrub, Calycanthus floridus and other species. See Calycanthus.

strawberry-tomato (strâ'ber-i-tō-mā″tō), n. The wintor-cherry, Physalis Alkekengi. The berry, inclosed within an inflated calyx, resembles a cherry or a very small tomato in appearance. Also called husk-tomato.

strawberry-tree (strâ'ber-i-trē), n. [< ME. strawbery-tre; < strawberry + tree.] 1†. The strawberry-plant. See the quotation under strawberry-wise.—2. A handsome evergreen shrub or bushy tree, Arbutus Unedo, native in southern Europe. The scarlet granulated fruit at a distance resembles a strawberry, but is dry and lacking in flavor, though sometimes eaten. In Spain a sugar and a spirit are extracted from it. The flowers appear in autumn, when also the fruit, which ripens only the second season, is present. The name is extended to the other species of the genus. See cut under Arbutus, 3.

strawberry-vine (strâ'ber-i-vīn), n. See strawberry.

strawberry-wise†, n. [< ME. strawbery wyse, strawbyry ryse, strobery wyse, streberiwise, < AS. streawberie-wise, streáberie-wise, later stræberiewise, strawberry-plant, < streáwberie, strawberry, + wise, here appar. a particular use of wise, way, manner, wise: see strawberry and wise[2].] The strawberry-plant.

Strawbery wyse (strawberytre, K. strawbe[ry] wyse, H. strawbyry cyse, S). Fragus. Prompt. Parv., p. 478.

strawberry-worm (strâ'ber-i-wėrm), n. The worm, grub, or caterpillar of any insect which injures the strawberry; especially, the larva of the strawberry saw-fly, Emphytus maculatus, more fully called strawberry false-worm. See cut under Emphytus. [U. S.]

strawboard (strâ'bōrd), n. A thick and coarse hard-rolled fabric of yellow paper or cardboard made of straw: largely used by makers of cheap paper boxes.

straw-buff (strâ'buf), n. Straw-color of very low chroma, as in Manila paper.

straw-built (strâ'bilt), a. Built or constructed of straw. Milton, P. L., i. 773.

straw-cat (strâ'kat), n. The pampas-cat.

straw-coat (strâ'kōt), n. Same as paillasse, 2.

straw-color (strâ'kul″ọr), a. and n. I. a. Straw-colored; stramineous.

Your straw-colour beard. Shak., M. N. D., i. 2. 95.

II. n. An extremely luminous, very cool yellow color, of somewhat reduced chroma, recalling the color of yellow straw, but cooler in hue. There is a wide range of chroma in colors called by this name.

straw-colored (strâ'kul″ọrd), a. Pale light-yellow, like dry straw; corn-colored; stramineous: as, the straw-colored bat, Natalus albiventer.

straw-cotton (strâ'kot″n), n. A cotton thread made for the manufacture of hats and other articles of straw.

straw-cutter (strâ'kut″ėr), n. In agri., any machine for cutting straw and hay into short pieces suitable for feed for cattle.

straw-drain (strâ'drān), n. A drain filled with straw.

straw-embroidery (strâ'em-broi″dėr-i), n. Fancy work done upon net, usually black silk net, by means of yellow straw, which forms the flowers and principal parts of the pattern, and silk of the same color.

strawen† (strâ'en), a. [< straw[1] + -en[1].] Made of straw. Stow.

straw-fiddle (strâ'fid″l), n. A variety of xylophone in which the wooden bars are laid on rolls of straw. Also gigelira and stiecado.

straw-fork† (strâ'fôrk), n. A pitchfork.

Flail, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong.
Tusser, September's Husbandry.

straw-house (strâ'hous), n. A house for holding straw after the grain has been thrashed out.

strawing (strâ'ing), n. The occupation of selling straws in the street and giving with them something which is forbidden to be sold, as indecent papers, political songs, and the like. Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 229. [Cant.]

straw-necked (strâ'nekt), a. Having husky or straw-like feathers on the neck: as, the straw-necked ibis. Carphibis spinicollis.

straw-needle (strâ'nē″dl), n. A long thin needle used for sewing together straw braid, as in the manufacture of hats. Also called straw.

straw-ride (strâ'rīd), n. A pleasure-ride in the country, taken in a long wagon or sleigh filled with straw, upon which the party sit. [Colloq., U. S.]

strawsmall (strâ'smâl), n. The whitethroat, Sylvia cinerea: so called from the straw used in constructing its nest. [Eng.]

strawsmear (strâ'smēr), n. 1. Same as straw-small.—2. The garden-warbler, Sylvia hortensis.—3. The willow-warbler, Phylloscopus trochilus. [Prov. Eng. in all senses.]

straw-stem (strâ'stem), n. 1. In glass-making, the stem of a wine-glass pulled out of the substance of the bowl. Hence—2. A wine-glass having a stem of the above character.

A party of young men . . . tet fall that superb cut-glass Claret, and shivered it, with a dozen of the delicately-engraved straw-stems that stood upon the waiter.
G. W. Curtis, Potiphar Papers, ii.

straw-stone (strâ'stōn), n. Same as earpholite.

straw-underwing (strâ'un″dėr-wing), n. A British noctuid moth, Cerigo cytherea, having straw-colored underwings, with a broad, smoky marginal band.

straw-wine (strâ'wīn), n. Wine made from grapes which have been dried or partly dried by exposure to the sun: so called from the bed of straw upon which they have been laid. Such wine is generally sweet and rich.

We may presume that oseye was a luscious-sweet, or straw-wine, similar to that which is still made in that province [Alsace]. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 206, note.

straw-worm (strâ'wėrm), n. The larva of a trichopterous neuropterous insect; a caddis-worm: so called from the bits of straw of which it builds its case. See cut under caddis-worm.

strawy (strâ'i), a. [< straw[1] + -y[1].] Pertaining to, made of, or like straw; consisting of straw: resembling straw.

There the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath.
Shak., T. and C., v. 5. 24.

straw-yard (strâ'yärd), n. See the quotation.

They [trampers] come back to London to avail themselves of the shelter of the night asylums or refuges for the destitute (usually called straw-yards by the poor).
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 138.

straw-yellow (strâ'yel″ō), n. A chromatic variety of straw-color, or a yellow verging upon straw-color.

stray[1] (strā), v. [< ME. strayen, straien, < OF. estraier, estrayer, estraer, estraer, wander about, stray (said of an animal, esp. of a horse, going about without its master), also of a person, wander, ramble, prob. lit. 'go about the streets or highways' (= It. stradare, put on the way, show the way) (cf. estraier, estrayer, wandering about, straying, stray, = Pr. estradier, one who wanders about the streets, < ML. as if stratarius*; cf. also It. stradiotto, a wanderer, traveler, gadder, a particular use of stradiotto, a soldier, free-booter (see stradiot, estradiot), associated with strada, street), < estree, stree, strae, also (after Pr.) estrade, a street, road, highway, = Pr. estrada = It. strada, a street, road, highway, < L. strata, a street, road: see estre[2] and street. According to some etymologists the OF. estraier is prob. = Pr. estraguar, < ML. extravagari, wander, < L. extra, without, + ragari, wander: see extravagant, extravagate. Cf. astray, estray, v., doublets of stray[1].] I. intrans. 1. To wander, as from a direct course; deviate or go out of the way or from the proper limits; go astray.

A sheep doth very often stray,
An if the shepherd be a while away.
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 1. 74.

2. To wander from the path of truth, duty, or rectitude; turn from the accustomed or prescribed course; deviate.

We have erred, and strayed from thy ways like lost sheep. Book of Common Prayer, General Confession.

Tom Tusher never permitted his mind to stray out of the prescribed University path. Thackeray, Henry Esmond, x.

3. To move about without or as without settled purpose or direction.

My eye, descending from the hill, surveys
Where Thames among the wanton valleys strays.
Sir J. Denham, Cooper's Hill, l. 160.

The Cardinal de Cabasolle strayed with Petrarch about his valley in many a wandering discourse.
I. D'Israeli, Lit. Char. Men of Genius, p. 147.

=Syn. 1. To straggle.—1 and 3. Wander, Rove, etc. See ramble, v.

II. trans. To cause to stray; mislead; seduce. [Rare.]

Hath not else his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?
Shak., C. of E., v. 1. 51.

stray[1] (strā), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also straye, straie; by apheresis from estray, n., as well as astray, orig. pp., < F. estraié, estrayé, strayed, astray, pp. of estraier, estrayer, stray: see stray[1], v. Cf. estray, n. In defs. II., 3 and 4, directly from the verb.] I. a. Having gone astray; strayed; wandering; straggling; incidental.

Stray beest, that goethe a-stray. Prompt. Parv., p. 478.

That little apothecary who sold a stray customer a pennyworth of salts. Thackeray, Pendennis, ii.

II. n. 1. Any domestic animal that has left an inclosure or its proper place and company, and wanders at large or is lost; an estray.

Impounded as a stray
The King of Scots. Shak., Hen. V., i. 2. 160.

Hence—2. A person or persons astray; a straggler; a truant.

Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd stray.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 2. 120.

There is also a school for strays and truants.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 545.

3. The act of wandering. [Rare.]

I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate. Shak., Lear, i. 1. 212.

4. A pasturage for cattle. [Prov. Eng.]

The eight hundred acres, more or less, in six different strays without the walls, belonging to the four ancient wards, and on which freemen have exclusive right to depasture their cattle. Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 843.

On the stray†, upon stray†, deserting; straggling; scattering; wandering.

Lokis well to the listis, that no lede passe!
If any stert vpon stray, strike hym to dethe!
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6258.

Right of stray, the right of pasturing cattle on commons. Halliwell.

stray[2]† (strā), n. [Early mod. E. also strayre*, streare; < ME. strayre, streyre, appar. for strayre*, streyre, < OF. estraiere, estrayere, estraihere, estrahere, f., estraier, estrayer, m. (ML. reflex estraieria, estraeria), usually in pl. estraieres, etc., goods left by an alien or bastard intestate, and escheated to the king as unowned or 'stray,' < estraier, estrayer, adj., straying, stray. The word was confused with the related noun stray[1], prop. a straying animal, and as a more technical term suffered some variation in use.] Property left behind by an alien at his death, and escheated to the king in default of heirs.

Somme seruen the kynge, . . . chalengynge hus dettes,
Of wardes and of wardemotes, waynes and strayues.
Piers Plowman (C), i. 92.

strayed (strād), p. a. Wandering; astray: as, strayed cattle; a strayed reveler.

strayer (strā'ėr), n. [< stray[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which strays; a wanderer.

stray-line (strā'lin), n. 1. In whaling, that part of the towline which is in the water when fast to a whale.—2. The unmarked part of a log-line, next to the chip, which is allowed to run off before beginning to count, in order to clear the chip from eddies at the stern. The limit of the stray-line is indicated by a rag called the stray-mark.

strayling (strā'ling), n. [< stray[1] + -ling[1].] A little waif or stray. [Rare.]

Hardy Asiatic straylings, whose seeds have followed the grains. Grant Allen, Colin Clout's Calendar, p. 182.

stret†, n. A Middle English form of straw[1].

streak[1] (strēk), v. i. [< ME. streken, a var. of striken, a secondary form of strīken (pret. pl. and pp. striken), go: see strike, v., and cf. strake[1], v. Cf. sneak, ult. < AS. snīcan. As used in the United States, this verb is commonly associated with streak[2], n.] To run swiftly. [Obsolete or prov. Eng. and U. S.]

O'er hill and dale with fury she did dreel;
A' roads to her were good and bad alike,
Nane o' 't she wyl'd, but forward on did streek.
Ross, Helenore, p. 56. (Jamieson.)

They jest streaked it out through the buttery-door!
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 172.

streak[2] (strēk), n. [< ME. streke, strike, < AS. strica, a line, stroke (= MD. streke, D. streek = MLG. streke, LG. streek = OHG. MHG. G. strich, a stroke, line, G. strcich, a stroke, blow, etc., = Icel. strykr, strykr, a streak, stroke, = Sw. streck = Dan. streg, a streak, line, = Goth. striks, a stroke of a pen), < strīcan (pp. stricen), go: see strike, and cf. stroke, strake[2]. The L. striga, a swath, furrow, is of diff. origin.] 1. A line, band, or stripe of somewhat irregular shape.

While the fantastic Tulip strives to break
In two-fold Beauty, and a parted Streak.
Prior, Solomon, i.

In dazzling streaks the vivid lightnings play.
Cowper, Heroism, l. 18.

2. In mineral., the line or mark of fine powder produced when a mineral is scratched, or when it is rubbed upon a hard, rough surface, as that of unglazed porcelain. The color of the streak is often an important character, particularly in the case of minerals having a metallic luster. For example, certain massive forms of the iron ores hematite and magnetite resemble each other closely, but are readily distinguished by the fact that the former has a red and the latter a black streak.

3. In zoöl., a color-mark of considerable length for its width, and generally less firm and regular than a stripe. See streaked, streaky, and compare stripe, 1.—4. Figuratively, a trait; a vein; a turn of character or disposition; a whim.

Some Streaks too of Divinity ran,
Partly of Monk, and partly Puritan.
Cowley, The Mistress, Wisdom.

Mrs. Britton had been churning, and the butter "took a contrary streak," as she expressed it, and refused to come. E. Eggleston, The Graysons, xviii.

5. Naut., same as strake[2], 6.—6†. A rung of a ladder.

You are not a little beholden to the poor dear soul that 's dead, for putting a streak in your ladder, when you was on the last step of it. Cumberland, Natural Son, iii.

7. A short piece of iron, six of which form the wheel-tire of a wooden artillery-carriage.—Germinal streak, primitive streak. Same as primitive groove (which see, under primitive).—Streak of luck, fortunate chance; run of luck. [Colloq., U. S.]—Streak of the spear. See spear[1], 6.—To go like a streak (sc. of lightning), to go very rapidly; rush. [Colloq., U. S.]

streak[2] (strēk), v. t. [< streak[2], n.] To put a streak upon or in; break up the surface of by one or more streaks.

Eche a strete was striked & strawed with floures.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1617.

The last faint gleams of the sun's low beams
Had streak'd the gray with red.
Scott, The Gray Brother.

streak[3] (strēk), v. [Also streek, streik; an unassibilated form of stretch: see stretch.] I. trans. 1. To stretch; extend. [Obsolete or dialectal.]

As the lion lies before his den,
Guarding his whelps, and streaks his careless limbs.
Chapman, Gentleman Usher, v. 1.

2. To lay out, as a dead body. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

The streikit corpse, till still midnight,
They waked, but naething hear.
Young Benjie (Child's Ballads, II. 302).

II. intrans. To stretch out; shoot, as a rocket or a shooting-star.

Fore-god, my lord, haue you beheld the like [a blazing star]?
Look how it streaks! what do you think of it?
Heywood, If you Know not Me (Works, ed. 1874, I. 292).

streaked (strēkt or strē'ked), a. 1. Striped; striate; having streaks or stripes; especially, having lengthwise streaks, as distinguished from crosswise bands, bars, or fasciæ.—2. Confused; ashamed; agitated; alarmed. [Low, U. S.]

But wen it comes to bein' killed—I tell ye I felt streaked The fust time 't ever I found out wy haggonets wnz peaked.
Lowell, Biglow Papers, 1st ser., ii.

Streaked falcon. See falcon.—Streaked gurnard, a fish, Trigla lineata.—Streaked sandpiper†. See sandpiper.

streakfield (strēk'fēld), n. The scuttler, or six-striped lizard, Cnemidophorus sexlineatus: so called from the swiftness with which it scuttles or streaks across fields.

streakiness (strē'ki-nes), n. The state or quality of being streaked or streaky.

streaking (strē'king), n. [< streak[2] + -ing.] A streak; a stripe.

She . . . striped its pure, celestial white
With streakings of the morning light.
J. R. Drake, The American Flag.

streak-stitch (strēk'stich), n. A stitch in needle-made lace by means of which an open line is left in the mat or toilé.

streaky (strē'ki), a. [< streak[2] + -y[1].] 1. Having streaks; marked with streaks; streaked. It differs from striped in that the lines are not accurately parallel, nor straight and uniform.

When streaky sunset faded softly into dusk.
R. D. Blackmore, Kit and Kitty, xiv.

Hence—2. Uneven in quality; variable in character or excellence: as, his poetry is decidedly streaky. [Colloq.]

streal (strēl), n. [Early mod. E. also strale; < ME. strel*, stral, < AS. strǣl, an arrow, missile, = OS. strāla = MD. straele, D. straal = MLG. strale = OHG. strāla, MHG. strāle (> It. strale), G. strahl, an arrow, beam of light, = Icel. strjāl, an arrow, = Sw. stråle = Dan. straale, a beam of light, jet of water, flash of lightning, = OBulg. striela = Russ. stricla, an arrow; cf. Russ. strielitz, an archer, (see strelitz).] 1. An arrow. Wright (spelled streale). [Prov. Eng.]—2†. The pupil of the eye.

The strale of the eye, pupilla.
Withals, Dict. (ed. 1608), p. 278. (Nares.) stream (strēm), n. [< ME. streem, strem, < AS. stream = OS. strōm = OFries. stram = D. stroom = MLG. strom = OHG. stroum, strōm, MHG. stroum, strūm, strām, G. strom = Icel. straumr = Sw. Dan. ström (Goth. not recorded), a stream; with initial str- for orig. sr-, akin to OIr. sruth, Ir. srath, a stream, sruaim, a stream, Russ. struia, Lith. srowe, a stream, Gr. ῥέος, a flowing, ῥεῦμα, a flowing, a stream, river, etc. (see rheum[1]), ῥυθμός, a flowing, rhythm (see rhythm); < √ sru = Gr. ῥεῖν (for σρεϝειν*), = Skt. √ sru, flow.] 1. A course of running water; a river, rivulet, or brook.

He stod bi the flodes strem.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 2096.

He brought streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers. Ps. lxxviii. 16.

As streams their channels deeper wear.
Burns, To Mary in Heaven.

2. A steady current in a river or in the sea; especially, the middle or most rapid part of a current or tide: as, to row against the stream; the Gulf Stream.

My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.
Shak., Othello, ii. 3. 65.

Row, brothers, row! the stream runs fast,
The rapids are near, and the daylight 's past!
Moore, Canadian Boat-Song.

3. A flow; a flowing; that which flows in or out, as a liquid or a fluid, air or light.

Bright was the day, and blew the firmament:
Phebus hath of gold hise stremes doun ysent
To gladen every flour with his warmnesse.
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 976.

Forth gusht a stream of gore blood thick.
Spenser, F. Q., II. i. 39.

A wandering stream of wind,
Breathed from the west, has caught the expanded sail.
Shelley, Alastor.

4. Anything issuing from a source and moving or flowing continuously: as, a stream of words; a stream of sand; a stream of people.

With never an end to the stream of passing feet.
Tennyson, Maud, xxvii. 1.

5. A continued course or current; the course or current of affairs or events; current; drift.

Such was the stream of those times that all men gave place unto it, which we cannot but impute partly to their own oversight. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 42.

For science, God is simply the stream of tendency by which all things fulfil the law of their being.
M. Arnold, Literature and Dogma, i.

6. A rift: so called by English anglers. Norris.—Gulf Stream. See gulf.—Stream-function of the motion of an incompressible fluid in two dimensions, such a function that the total instantaneous flow across any curve, referred to the unit of time, is equal to the difference of the values of the stream-function at the extremities of the curve.—Stream of thought, the train of ideas which pass successively into present consciousness, regarded as analogous to a current flowing past a point upon the bank.—The stream, the Gulf Stream.=Syn. 1 and 2. Stream, Current, Eddy. All rivers and brooks are streams, and have currents. An eddy is a counter-current, a current contrary to the main direction.

stream (strēm), v. [< ME. stremen = D. stroomen = G. strömen = Icel. streyma = Sw. strömma = Dan. strömme; from the noun.] I. intrans. 1. To move or run in a continuous current; flow continuously. See streaming, n., 2.

Within those banks, where rivers now
Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train.
Milton, P. L., vii. 306.

On all sides round
Streams the black blood. Pope, Odyssey, iii. 581.

2. To move or proceed continuously and uniformly, or in unbroken succession.

And to imperial Love, that god most high,
Do my sighs stream. Shak., All's Well, ii. 3. 82.

Streaming files of wild ducks began to make their appearance high in the air. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 437.

3. To pour out a stream; also, to throw off a stream from the surface: as, streaming eyes; a streaming umbrella.

Then grateful Greece with streaming eyes wou'd raise Historic marbles, to record his praise.
Fenton, in Pope's Odyssey, i. 305.

Blasts that blow the poplar white,
And lash with storm the streaming pane.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxii.

4. To move swiftly and continuously, as a ray of light; streak.

I looked up just in time to see a superb shooting star stream across the heavens. Nature, XXX. 455.

5. To stretch out in a line; hang or float at full length: as, streaming hair.

Standards and gonfalons 'twixt van and rear Stream in the air. Milton, P. L., v. 590.

Ribands streaming gay. Cowper, Task, iv. 541.

II. trans. 1. To discharge in a stream; cause to flow; pour out.

Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood.
Shak., J. C., iii. 1. 201.

Calanus told Onesicritus of a golden world, where meale was as plentifull as dust, and fonntaines streamed milke, hony, wine, and oyle. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 454.

2. To cause to float out; wave.

Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought, . . .
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens.
Shak., Rich. II., iv. 1. 94.

3†. To stripe or ray. See streaming, a. [Rare.]

The herald's mantle is streamed with gold. Bacon.

4. (a) In mining, to wash, as the superficial detritus, especially that accumulated in the beds of rivers, for the purpose of separating any valuable ore which it may contain. See placer[2]. The term stream, long in use in Cornwall, exclusively with reference to tin ores, seems hardly to have come into general use in any mining regions except those in which the ore of tin is mined. (b) In dyeing, to wash in running water, as silk, before putting in the dye. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 40.—To stream a buoy. See buoy.

stream-anchor (strēm′ang″kor), n. Naut., an anchor of a size intermediate between the bower-anchor and the kedge. It is used for warping and like purposes. In the United States navy stream-anchors weigh from 400 to 1,500 pounds, and are about one fourth the weight of bower-anchors.

stream-cable (strēm′kā″bl), n. The cable or hawser of the stream-anchor.

stream-clock (strēm′klok), n. [Tr. G. stromuhr.] A physiological instrument for determining the velocity of blood in a vessel.

stream-current (strēm′kur″ent), n. See the quotation, and also drift-current.

A current whose onward movement is sustained by the vis a tergo of a drift-current is called a stream-current.
Encyc. Brit., III. 19.

streamer (strē′mėr), n. [ME. stremer, stremere; < stream + -er[1].] 1. That which streams out, or hangs or floats at full length: applied to anything long and narrow, as a ribbon.

All twinkling with the dewdrops' sheen,
The brier-rose fell in streamers green.
Scott, L. of the L., i. 11.

(a) A long narrow flag; a pennon extended or flowing in the wind: same as pennant, 1 (a).

His brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phœbus fanning.
Shak., Hen. V., iii., Prol., l. 6.

(b) A stream or column of light shooting upward or outward, as in some forms of the aurora borealis.

He knew, by the streamers that shot so bright,
That spirits were riding the northern light.
Scott, L. of L. M., ii. 8.

(c) A long flowing strip of ribbon, or feather, or something similar, used in decoration, especially in dress.

A most airy sort of blue and silver turban, with a streamer of plumage on one side.
Charlotte Brontë, Villette, xx.

(d) A long-exserted feather which streams away from the rest of the plumage of some birds; a pennant or standard. See cuts under Semioptera and standard-bearer.

2. In mining, a person who washes for stream-tin. See streaming.—3. The geometrid moth Anticlea derivata: an English collectors' name.

streamful (strēm′fûl), a. [< stream + -ful.] Full of streams or currents.

Like a ship despoiled of her sails,
Shov'd by the wind against the streamful tide.
Drayton, Legend of Pierce Gaveston, st. 105.

stream-gold (strēm′gōld), n. See the quotation.

The gold of alluvial districts, called stream-gold or placer-gold, occurs, as well as alluvial tin, among the debris of the more ancient rocks. Ure, Dict., III. 298.

stream-ice (strēm′īs), n. Pieces of drift or bay ice forming a ridge and following the line of current.

At 4 A. M. a seemingly close pack was seen to the eastward, but later it developed into stream-ice of small extent.
A. W. Greely, Arctic Service, p. 67.

streaminess (strē′mi-nes), n. The quality or state of being streamy.

I give the case of a star-group which is certainly not the most remarkable for streaminess.
R. A. Proctor, Universe of Stars (2d ed., 1878), p. 22.

streaming (strē′ming), n. [Verbal n. of stream, v.] 1. In tin-mining, the washing of tin ore from the detritus with which it is associated. The now almost entirely exhausted deposits of detrital tin ore in Cornwall and Devon were called streams, because they occur chiefly in or near the bottoms of the valleys and adjacent to the present streams, or in the manner of deposits formed by streams, analogous to the channels of the Californian and the gutters of the Australian miners; the miners were themselves called streamers; the localities where streaming was carried on, stream-works; and the ore obtained, stream-tin.

2. In biol., the peculiar flowing motion of the particles of protoplasm in an amœba or other rhizopod, by which the form of the animalcule changes or pseudopods are protruded; also, the similar circulation or rotation of the protoplasm of some plant-cells. See protoplasm, and rotation of protoplasm (under rotation).

streaming (strē′ming), p. a. In her., issuing, as rays of light: as, rays streaming from the dexter chief.

streamless (strēm′les), a. [< stream + -less.] Not traversed by streams; unwatered. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 758.

streamlet (strēm′let), n. [< stream + -let.] A small stream; a rivulet; a rill.

Unnumber'd glittering streamlets play'd,
And hurled every where their waters sheen.
Thomson, Castle of Indolence, i. 3.

stream-line (strēm′līn), n. See line[2], and line of flow (under flow[1]).—Stream-line surface. See surface.

streamling (strēm′ling), n. [< stream + -ling[1].] Same as streamlet.

A thousand Streamlings that n'er saw the Sun,
With tribute silver to his service run.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Captsincs.

stream-tin (strēm′tin), n. In mining, tin ore, or oxid of tin, obtained in streaming (which see).

stream-wheel (strēm′hwēl), n. An undershot wheel, or current-wheel.

stream-works (strēm′wėrks), n. sing. and pl. In mining, a locality where the detrital deposits are washed in order to procure the valuable metal or ore which they may contain; alluvial washings, or surface mining. The words stream-works and stream (v. t.) are rarely, if ever, used except with reference to the separation of tin ore from detrital deposits.

streamwort (strēm′wėrt), n. A plant of Lindley's order Haloragaceæ. [Rare.]

streamy (strē′mi), a. [Early mod. E. also stremy; < stream + -y[1].] 1. Abounding in streams. (a) Full of running water or of springs.

Arcadia
(However streamy), now adust and dry, Deny'd the Goddess Water.
Prior, First Hymn of Callimachus.

(b) Full of or emitting streaming rays of light.

In streamy sparkles, kindling all the skies,
From pole to pole the trail of glory flies.
Pope, Iliad, xiii. 321.

2. Having the form of a beam or stream of light.

streatt, n. An obsolete form of street.

Streatfield's operation. See operation.

streberyt, n. An obsolete form of strawberry.

Strebla (streb′lä), n. [NL. (Wiedemann, 1824), < Gr. στρεβλός, twisted, crooked, < στρέφειν, twist.] A peculiar genus of pupiparous dipterous insects, of the family Nycteribiidæ, including certain so-called bat-lice or bat-ticks. S. vespertilionis is a common bat-parasite occurring in South America and the West Indies.

streblosis (streb-lō′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. στρεβλός, twisted: see Strebla.] The angle through which it is necessary to rotate an element of a figure to bring it into coincidence with the corresponding element of a given conformable figure.

Streblus (streb′lus), n. [NL. (Loureiro, 1790), so called in allusion to its branches, which form a dense mass of rigid straggling twigs; < Gr. στρεβλός, twisted: see Strebla.] A genus of apetalous plants, of the order Urticaceæ and tribe Moreæ, type of the subtribe Streblеæ. It is characterized by usually dioecious flowers, the male in clustered two-bracted heads, the female solitary on the peduncle, the perianth consisting of four widely overlapping segments which closely invest the one-celled ovary. As in most of the subtribe, its cotyledons are very unequal, and the larger, which is very fleshy, incloses the smaller. The only species, S. asper (Trophis aspera), is the tonkhoi or paper-tree of the Siamese, who prepare several kinds of paper from its bark, including a heavy and a thin white paper, and a black paper for use like a slate, much employed in the native law-courts. It is a small tree, reaching about thirty feet in height, bearing dark-green oval corisceous two-ranked leaves, and occurring from China and Manila to the Andaman Islands.

strecchet, v. An old spelling of stretch.

street, n. A Middle English form of straw[1].

streel (strēl), v. i. [Cf. streal.] To trail; stream.

A yellow satin train that streeled after her like the tail of a comet. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xx.

streent, n. A Middle English form of strain[2].

streept, v. A Middle English form of strip[1].

street (strēt), n. [Early mod. E. also streat, streate; < ME. streete, strete, stret, strate, < AS. strǣt = OS. strata = OFries. strete = MD. straete, D. straat = MLG. strāte, LG. strate = OHG. strāza, MHG. strāze, G. strasse = Icel. stræti = Sw. stråt = Dan. stræde (= It. strada = Sp. Pg. Pr. estrada = OF. estree, stree, strae, F. étrée = W. ystrad, ystrid = OIr. srāth = Ir. Gael. sraid = NGr. στράτα), < LL. strata, a street, road, highway, orig. via strata, a paved way, < L. strata, fem. of stratus, pp. of sternere, strew, scatter, spread, cover, pave: see stratum. Street is one of the very few words regarded as received in England from the Roman invaders, others being chester (Chester), port, wall, and -coln in Lincoln. Cf. stray[1], stray[2].] 1†. A paved road; a highway.

This grand-child, great as he [Mulmutius], those four proud Streets begun
That each way cross this Isle, and bounds did them allow. Drayton, Polyolbion, viii. 74.

There were at that time [fifth year after the Conquest] in England four great roads, . . . of which two ran lengthways through the Island, and two crossed it, . . . Watlinge-strete, Fosse, Hikenilde-strete, and Erming-strete.
Guest, Origines Celticæ, II. 218.

2. A public way or road, whether paved or unpaved, in a village, town, or city, ordinarily including a sidewalk or sidewalks and a roadway, and having houses or town lots on one or both sides; a main way, in distinction from a lane or alley: as, a fashionable street; a street of shops. Abbreviated St., st. Compare road, 3. Strictly, the word excludes the houses, which are on the street; but in a very common use it includes the land and houses, which are then in the street: as, a house in High Street. In law, street sometimes includes as much of the surface, and as much of the space above and of the soil or depth beneath, as may be needed for the ordinary works which the local authorities may decide to execute on or in a street, including sidewalks.

Up Fish Street! down Saint Magnus' Corner!
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 8. 1.

3. The way for vehicles, between the curbs, as distinguished from the sidewalks: as, to walk in the street.—4. Hence, a path or passageway inclosed between continuous lines of objects; a track; a lane.

It seemed to bee, as it were, a continued street of shippes. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 435.

I was ushered through an actual street of servitors.
Disraeli, Vivian Grey, iii. 8.

5†. A path; a way.

Than makest thou his pees with his sovereyn,
And bringest him out of the croked streete.
Chaucer, A. B. C., l. 70.

While I ran by the most secret streets,
Eschewing still the common haunted track.
Surrey, Æneid, ii. 975.

6. The inhabitants of a street collectively. [Colloq.]

All the whole street will hate us, and the world
Point me out cruel. Middleton, Chaste Maid, v. 2.

Grub Street. See Grub-street.—Lombard Street. See Lombard[2], 1.—Queer Street. See queer[1].—Street Arab. See Arab, 2.—Street broker. See broker.—The street, a street (as Wall Street in New York) or locality where merchants or stock-brokers congregate for business; the commercial exchange: as, it is rumored on the street.

Common places whyther marchanntes resort as to the burse or streate. Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books [on America, ed. Arber, p. 186).

To have the key of the street. See key[1].—To spin street-yarn. See spin.—Syn. 2. Road, etc. See way.

streetage (strē′tāj), n. [< street + -age.] A charge made for the use of a street. [Rare.]

street-car (strēt′kär), n. A passenger-car for local or city travel, drawn on the surface of the public streets by horses, by a locomotive engine, or by an endless cable, or propelled by electricity. [U. S.]

The street-cars rattled in the foreground, changing horses and absorbing and emitting passengers.
H. James, Jr., The Bostonians, xxxiv.

street-door (strēt′dōr), n. The door of a house or other building which opens upon a street.

When you step but a few doors off . . . to see a brother-footman going to be hanged, leave the street door open.
Swift, Advice to Servants (Footman).

streeted (strē′ted), a. Provided with streets.

There are few Places this Side the Alps better built, and so well streeted as this [Antwerp].
Howell, Letters, I. i. 12.

street-locomotive (strēt′lō″kō-mō-tiv), n. See locomotive.

street-orderly (strēt′ôr″dėr-li), n. A person employed to keep the streets clean by the prompt removal of rubbish, dung, or dirt of any kind by means of a hand-brush and bag.

By the street-orderly method of scavaging, the thoroughfares are continually being cleansed, and so never allowed to become dirty; whereas, by the ordinary method, they are not cleansed until they are dirty.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 257.

street-railroad (strēt′rāl″rōd), n. A railroad constructed upon the surface of a public street in towns and cities; a tramway. Cars on such railroads are variously propelled, and the railroads take specific names from the system of propulsion, as cable-railroad, horse-railroad, electric railroad. [U. S.]

street-sweeper (strēt′swē″pėr), n. One who or that which sweeps the streets; specifically, a machine provided with brushes and scrapers for removing dust, mud, etc., from the streets.

street-walker (strēt′wâ″kėr), n. 1. One who walks the streets; a pedestrian.

All street-walkers and shop-keepers bear an equal share in its hourly vexation [the nuisance of beggars].
Swift, Proposal for giving Badges to Beggars.

2. A common prostitute who walks the streets at night.

streetward[1] (strēt′wârd), n. [< street + ward.] Formerly, an officer who had the care of the streets.

streetward[2] (strēt′wärd), adv. and a. [< street + -ward.] Next the street; looking out on the street. Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

streetway (strēt′wā), n. [< street + way.] The open space of a street; the roadway.

streight[1]†. An old spelling of straight[1].

streight[2]†, streighten†. Old spellings of strait[1], straiten. Drayton.

streik†, v. See streak[3].

streinet†, streinable†. Old spellings of strain[1], strainable. Holinshed.

streit†, streite†, a. Old spellings of strait[1].

streke†. A Middle English form of streak[1], streak[2], and strike.

strelitz (strel′its), n. [< G. strelitze, < Russ. strieletsŭ, an archer, shooter, < strielyatĭ, shoot, striela, an arrow; prob. < OHG. strāla, G. strahl = AS. strǣl, arrow: see streal.] A soldier of the ancient Muscovite guards, abolished by Peter the Great.

Strelitzia (strē-lit′si-ą), n. [NL. (Aiton, 1789), named after Queen Charlotte, wife of George III. of England, and descended from the German house of Mecklenburg-Strelitz.] 1. A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Musaceæ, distinguished by its flowers with three free sepals and three very dissimilar and peculiar petals, of which the outer is short, broad, and concave or hooded, the two lateral long, narrow, more or less united, and continued into a long petaloid appendage. There are 4 or 5 species, natives of South Africa. They are singular plants, producing an erect or subterranean woody rootstock, and large leaves which resemble those of a small banana-tree, or are reduced mainly or completely to tall erect cylindrical petioles. The large handsome flowers are borne few together far exserted from a spathe, which consists of one or two large boat-shaped bracts on a terminal or axillary scape. S. Reginæ, known as queen-plant, bird's-tongue flower, or bird-of-paradise flower, produces large brilliant flowers, highly prized for the oddity of their shape and coloring, showing the unusual combination of orange and blue. S. augusta, a larger species with small white flowers and purple bracts, has a palm-like stem reaching 20 feet in height, and is cultivated under the name grand strelitzia. S. juncea and other species are also cultivated under glass.
2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

streme†, n. and v. An obsolete spelling of stream.

stren†, strene†, n. Middle English forms of strain[2].

strenger†, strengest†, a. Earlier comparative and superlative of strong[1].

strengite (streng′īt), n. [Named after A. Streng, of Giessen, Germany.] A hydrous phosphate of iron, occurring in reddish orthorhombic crystals: it is isomorphous with scorodite.

strength (strength), n. [< ME. strengthe, strenethe, strenkyth, also strenthe, streinthe, < AS. strengthu (= OHG. strengida), strength, < strang, strong: see strong[1]. Cf. length, < long.] 1. The property of being strong; force; power. Specifically—(a) In animals, that attribute of an animal body by which it is enabled to move itself or other bodies. The strength of animals is the muscular force or energy which they are capable of exerting. See horse-power.

Vlixes also, with angarely mony
Of tulkis [knights] of Traci, tor men of strenkyth.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6894.

The external indications of strength are the abundance and firmness of the muscular fibres.
Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, vi. 9.

[Used in plural with same sense as singular.

Alle his [Samson's] strengthes in his heres were.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 68.]

(b) In inanimate things, the property by which they sustain the application of force without breaking or yielding: as, the strength of a bone; the strength of a beam; the strength of a wall; the strength of a rope.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn.
Shak., Macbeth, v. 5. 2.

The citty is of no greate strength, having a trifling wall about it.
Evelyn, Diary, May 21, 1645.

Hence—2. Power or vigor of any kind; ability; capacity for work or effective action, whether physical, intellectual, or moral: as, strength of grasp or stroke; strength of mind, memory, or judgment; strength of feeling (that is, not intensity but effectiveness of emotion).

If, rather than to marry County Paris,
Thou hast the strength of will to slay thyself.
Shak., R. and J., iv. 1. 72.

The belief
He has of his own great and catholic strengths
In arguing and discourse.
B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, i. 2.

In the world of morals, as in the world of physics, strength is nearly allied to hardness.
Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 354.

3. One who or that which is regarded as an embodiment of force or strength; that on which confidence or reliance is firmly set; stay; support; security.

God is our refuge and strength. Ps. xlvi. 1.

Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress,
My only strength and stay. Milton, P. L., x. 921.

Hitherto, Davenant observes, in taxing the people we had gone chiefly on land and trade, which is about one-third of the strength of England.
S. Dowell, Taxes in England, II. 56.

4. Force; violence; vehemence; intensity.

Zee schulle undrestonde, that the Sondan is Lord of 5 Kyngdomes, that he hathe conquered and apropred to him be Strengthe. Mandeville, Travels, p. 35.

And al men speken of hunting,
How they wolde slee the hert with strengthe.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 351.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring, . . .
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.
Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 198.

5. Degree of the distinguishing or essential element or constituent; the power to produce sensible effects on other bodies; potency: said of liquors and the like: as, the strength of an acid; the strength of wine or spirits; the strength of a potion or a poison.—6. Force as measured or stated in figures; amount or numbers of any collective body, as of an army or a fleet: as, a play adapted to the whole strength of the company; the full strength of a regiment.

Demand of him of what strength they are a-foot.
Shak., All's Well, iv. 3. 181.

Half a dozen gentlemen, furnished with a good strength of water-spaniels.
Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. Selborne, To T. Pennant, xxii.

7. Available force or backing, as of a candidate: as, his strength is greatest in the cities. [Political cant.]—8. Force proceeding from motion and proportioned to it; vehemence; impetuosity: as, the strength of a current of air or water; the strength of a charge of cavalry.—9. A stronghold.

Syne they hae left him, hall and feir,
Within his strength of stane.
Auld Maitland (Child's Ballads, VI. 222).

"No to say it 's our best dwelling," he added, turning to Bucklaw, "but just a strength for the Lord of Ravenswood to flee until." Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, vii.

10. In colors, the relative property possessed by a pigment of imparting a color to and modifying the shade of any other pigment to which it is added. Thus, one pound of lampblack added to 100 pounds of white lead produces a dark-gray shade, but one pound of ivory-black added in the same way would have little effect on the white.
11. In the fine arts, boldness of conception or treatment.

Carracci's strength, Correggio's softer line.
Pope, Epistle to Jervas, l. 37.

12. In soap-making. See the quotation.

A peculiar phenomenon may be remarked in the cooling [of a little of the soap placed on a glass plate], which affords a good criterion of the quality of the soap. When there is formed around the little patch an opaque zone, a fraction of an inch broad, this is supposed to indicate complete saponification, and is called the strength; when it is absent, the soap is said to want its strength. When this zone soon vanishes after being distinctly seen, the soap is said to have false strength. Ure, Dict., III. 852.

On the strength (milit. and naval), on the muster-rolls. [Colloq.]

The colonel had put the widow woman on the strength; she was no longer an unrecognized waif, but had her regimental position.
Arch. Forbes, in Eng. Illust. Mag., VI. 525.

On or upon the strength of, in reliance upon the value of; on the faith of: as, to do something on the strength of another's promise.

My father set out upon the strength of these two following axioms. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ii. 19.

Proof strength. See proof, a.—Strength of a current, in elect., the quantity of electricity which passes in a unit of time; the measure of electrical energy. See Ohm's law, under law[1].—Strength of materials. See material.—Strength of pole. See pole[2].—Strength of the source. See the quotation.

The time rate of supply of liquid through the source is called the strength of the source.
Minchin, Uniplanar Kinematics, vi.

To measure strength. See measure.—Syn. 1. Force, etc. See power[1].

strengtht (strength), v. t. [< ME. strengthen, strenthen; < strength, n.] To strengthen.

Take this for a general reule, that every counsell that is affermed or strengthed so strongly that it may not be chaunged for no condicioun that may bitide—I say that thilke counsell is wikked.
Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus (Harleian MS.).

The helpe of Gods grace in that tribulation to strength him.
Sir T. More, Cumfort against Tribulation (1573), fol. 16.

His armes and leggys [were] well lengthed and strengthed.
Fabyan, Chron., clvi.

strengthen (streng′thn), v. [< strength + -en[1].] I. trans. To make strong or stronger; add strength to, either physical, legal, or moral; confirm; establish: as, to strengthen a limb; to strengthen an obligation; to strengthen a claim; to strengthen authority.

Charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him. Deut. iii. 28.

Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest . . .
With powerful policy strengthen themselves.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., i. 2. 58.

For the more strenthening the Acts of this Parliament, the King purchased the Pope's Bulls, containing grievous Censures and Curses to them that should break them.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 149.

Strengthening plaster. See plaster.—Syn. To invigorate, fortify, brace, nerve, steel, corroborate, support, heighten.

II. intrans. To grow strong or stronger.

The young disease, that must subdue at length,
Grows with his growth, and strengthens with his strength.
Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 136.

strengthener (strength′nėr), n. [Formerly also strengthner; < strengthen + -er[1].] One who or that which makes strong or stronger; one who or that which increases strength, physical or moral.

Whose plays are strengtheners of virtue.
Mary Lamb, Tales from Shakspere, Pref.

strengthful (strength′fûl), a. [< strength + -ful.] Abounding in strength; strong. Marston.

strengthfulness (strength′fûl-nes), n. The state or quality of being strengthful or strong; fullness of strength.

strengthing (streng′thing), n. [Verbal n. of strength, v.] A strengthening. Palsgrave. (Halliwell.) strengthless (strength′les), a. [< strength + -less.] Destitute of strength, in any sense of the word. Shak.; Boyle.

strengthner† (strength′nėr), n. Same as strengthener.

strengthy (streng′thi), a. [Early mod. E. also strenthie; < strength + -y[1]. Cf. lengthy.] Having strength; strong.

The simple and strenthie defence of ane iust caus.
J. Tyrie, Refutation, Pref. 2. (Jamieson.)

strenkle (streng′kl), v. t. An obsolete or Scotch form of strinkle.

strenkle (streng′kl), n. [< ME. strenkyll; < strenkle, v. Cf. sprinkle, n.] A sprinkler. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

Strenkyll to cast holy water, vimpilon.
Palsgrave. (Halliwell.)

strenth†, n. An obsolete form of strength.

strenuity† (stre-nū′i-ti), n. [< L. strenuita(t-)s, nimbleness, friskness, < strenuus, quick, active, vigorous: see strenuous.] Strenuousness.

About in the see
No Prince was of better strenuitee.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 206.

strenuosity (stren-ū-os′i-ti), n. [< strenuous + -ity.] 1. The state or character of being strenuous; strenuousness.—2. A strained effect, or a straining for effect, as in a literary composition.

Strenuosity in style is not quite the same thing as strength. The Academy, Jan. 30, 1886, p. 73.

strenuous (stren′ū-us), a. [< L. strenuus, quick, active, brisk, vigorous; cf. Gr. στερεός, firm, hard, στρηνής, strong.] 1. Strong; vigorous; active; pushing.

Him whose strenuous tongue
Can burst Joy's grape against his palate fine.
Keats, Melancholy.

2. Eagerly pressing or urgent; energetic; zealous; ardent; bold; earnest; valiant; intrepid.

To strenuous minds there is an inquietude in overquietness. Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., I. 33.

This scheme encountered strenuous opposition in the council. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

3. Neeessitating vigor or energy; accompanied by labor or exertion.

What more oft, in nations grown corrupt, . . .
Than to love bondage more than liberty,
Bondage with ease than strenuous liberty?
Milton, S. A., l. 271.

Worldlings revelling in the fields
Of strenuous idleness. Wordsworth, Memory.

=Syn. 1 and 2. Energetic, resolute.

strenuously (stren′ū-us-li), adv. In a strenuous manner; with eager and pressing zeal; ardently; boldly; vigorously; actively.

strenuousness (stren′ū-us-nes), n. The state or character of being strenuous; eagerness; earnestness; active zeal.

strepet, v. An old spelling of strip[1].

strepent (strep′ent), a. [< L. strepen(t-)s, ppr. of strepere, make a noise, rumble, murmur.] Noisy; loud. [Rare.]

Peace to the strepent horn!
Shenstone, Rural Elegance.

Strepera (strep′e-rä), n. [NL. (Lesson, 1831), < L. strepere, make a noise.] An Australian genus of corvine passerine birds, typical of the subfamily Streperinæ, having long wings and naked nostrils. Also called Coronica (Gould, 1837). There are 7 species, commonly called crow-shrikes, of a black, blackish-brown, or gray color, more or less varied with white or rufous. The type is Corrus graculinus of White, the noisy roller of Latham, Coracias or Gracula or Barita strepera of various authors, now Strepera graculina. It is glossy-black, with the base of the tail and an ular speculum white, the iris yellow. The length is 18½ inches. S. crissalis, arguta, intermedia, cunéicauda (or anaphonensis: see squeaker), melanoptera, and fuliginosa are the other species.

Crow-shrike (Strepera graculina).

streperine (strep′e-rin), a. [< Strepera + -ine[1].] Of or pertaining to birds of the genus Strepera.

streperous (strep′e-rus), a. [< L. strepere, make a noise, rumble, murmur, + -ous. Cf. obstreperous.] Noisy; loud; boisterous. [Rare.]

In a streperous eruption it [the bay or laurel] riseth against fire. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 6.

strephotome (stref′ō-tōm), n. [< Gr. στρέφω, twist, turn, + -τομος, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] A corkscrew-like needle used in an operation for the radical cure of inguinal hernia.

Strepitores (strep-i-tō′rēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of strepitor*, < L. strepere, make a noise: see strepent.] A group of insessorial birds, established by Blyth in 1849 for those Cuvierian Passerinæ which are non-passerine, and primarily divided into Syndactyli, Zygodactyli, and Heterodactyli. See these words.

strepitoso (strep-i-tō′sō), adv. [It., < strepito, noise, < L. strepitus, noise: see strepitous.] In music, in an impetuous, boisterous, noisy manner.

strepitous (strep′i-tus), a. [< L. strepitus, noise, < strepere, make a noise: see strepent.] Noisy.

strepsicere (strep′si-sēr), n. [< strepsiceros.] An antelope with twisted horns; a strepsiceros.

strepsiceros (strep-sis′e-ros), n. [NL., < L. strepsiceros, < Gr. στρεψίκερως*, an animal with twisted horns, called by the Africans addax.] 1†. Some antelope with twisted horns, as the koodoo; originally, perhaps, the addax.—2. [cap.] [NL. (Hamilton Smith, 1827).] A genus of antelopes with twisted or spiral horns. The only species now left in the genus is S. kudu, the koodoo. See cut under koodoo.

Strepsilas (strep′si-las), n. [NL. (Illiger, 1811), < Gr. στρέψις, a turning round, < στρέφειν (aor. στρέψαι), twist, turn, + λᾶς, λᾶας, a stone.] The typical genus of a subfamily Strepsilainæ; the turnstones. The bill is short, constricted at the base, tapering to a sharp point, with ascending gonys longer than the mandibular rami, short and broad nasal fossæ, and short shallow grooves in the under mandible. The legs are short and stout, with the tarsus scutellate in front and reticulate on the sides and back, and four toes, cleft to the base. There are 2 species—S. interpres, the common turnstone, and S. melanocephalus of the North Pacific, the black-headed turnstone, perhaps only a variety of the other. The genus was also called Cinclus, Arenaria, and Morinella. See cuts under Pressirostres and turnstone.

strepsipter (strep-sip′tėr), n. [< NL. Strepsiptera.] A member of the Strepsiptera.

Strepsiptera (strep-sip′te-rä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of strepsipterus*: see strepsipterous.] 1. An order of insects, named by Kirby in 1833 from the twisted wings, synonymous with Rhipiptera of Latreille, and corresponding to the family Stylopidæ. The fore wings are mere twisted filaments or pseudelytra; the hind wings are expansive and fan-shaped; the females are wingless. The strepsiptera are parasitic on hymenopterous insects, especially bees and wasps. They are now regarded as anomalous Coleoptera degraded by parasitism. See cut under Stylops.

2†. In Gegenbaur's system of classification, a family of neuropterous insects, forming with Phryganida the suborder Trichoptera.

strepsipteral (strep-sip′te-ral), a. [< strepsipter-ous + -al.] Same as strepsipterous.

strepsipteran (strep-sip′te-ran), n. and a. [< NL. Strepsiptera + -an.] I. n. A strepsipter.

II. a. Same as strepsipterous.

strepsipterous (strep-sip′te-rus), a. [< NL. strepsipterus*, < Gr. στρέφειν (aor. στρέψαι), twist, turn, + πτερόν, a wing.] Having twisted front wings, as a stylops; of or pertaining to the Strepsiptera; rhipipterous. Also strepsipteran, strepsipteral. See cut under Stylops.

strepsirrhinal, strepsirhinal (strep-si-rī′nal), a. [< strepsirrhine + -al.] Same as strepsirrhine.

strepsirrhine, strepsirhine (strep′si-rin), a. and n. [< NL. strepsirrhinus*, < Gr. στρέφειν (aor. στρέψαι), turn, twist, + ῥίς (ῥιν-), nose.] I. a. Having twisted or curved nostrils, as a lemur; of or pertaining to the Strepsirrhini; neither catarrhine nor platyrrhine, as a primate. Also strepsorhine.

II. n. Any lemur or prosimian; a member of the Strepsirrhini.

Strepsirrhini, Strepsirhini (strep-si-rī′nī), n. pl. [NL. (Geoffroy): see strepsirrhine.] The lemuroid mammals, or lemurs: so called from the twisted nostrils, in distinction from Catarrhini and Platyrrhini. In these animals the nostrils are at the corners of the snout, and somewhat comma-shaped, as is usual in mammals, instead of having the more human character of those of the higher Primates. The term is exactly synonymous with Prosimiæ or Lemuroidea, excepting that in early usages of all three of these names of lemurs the so-called flying-lemurs (Galeopithecidæ) were wrongly included, these being insectivorous and not primatial mammals, now always excluded from the strepsirrhines. Also Strepsirhina, Strepsirrhina, and Strepsorhina.

Streptanthus (strep-tan′thus), n. [NL. (Nuttall, 1825), so called from the greatly twisted claws of the petals; < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted (< στρέφειν, twist, turn), + ἄνθος, flower.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Cruciferæ and tribe Arabideæ, distinguished from the type-genus Arabis by a calyx commonly of large size, longer and sometimes connate stamens, and petals usually borne on a twisted claw. There are about 16 species, natives of North America, and chiefly of the western United States. They are smooth annuals or perennials, with entire or lyrate leaves and commonly bractless flowers, which are purple or sometimes white or yellow, and in some species pendulous. S. obtusifolius, a pink-flowered species, has been called Arkansas cabbage.

streptobacteria (strep″tō-bak-tē′ri-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + NL. bacterium.] A supposed bacterium, consisting of a chain of short rod-formed bacteria linked together. Ziegler, Pathol. Anat. (trans.), i. 185.

Streptocarpus (strep-tō-kär′pus), n. [NL. (Lindley, 1828), so called from the spirally twisted fruit; < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + καρπός, fruit.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Gesneraceæ, tribe Cyrtandreæ, and subtribe Didymocarpeæ. It is characterized by flowers with an elongated corolla-tube which is much enlarged above, and contains two perfect stamens and a linear ovary imperfectly four-celled by the protrusion of lobed placentæ densely covered on their margins with ovules, and becoming a spirally twisted capsule which is linear and terete and splits into valves coherent at the base and apex. There are about 19 species, natives of South Africa and of Madagascar. They are woolly or downy herbs, chiefly with spreading radical leaves or with a single leaf (a persistent cotyledon), sometimes with a stem bearing opposite leaves. The handsome flowers are mostly pale purple or blue; they form a many-flowered cyme, or are borne few or singly upon their peduncle. S. Dunnii, a remarkable species from the Transvaal mountains, is cultivated for its peculiar solitary grayish-green leaf, prostrate on the ground and over 3 feet long, with thick fleshy veins and clothed beneath with close reddish down, and for its bright-red tubular decurved flowers, of which there are sometimes over one hundred on a scape at once. Several other species are in cultivation under glass, especially S. Watsoni, a hybrid with several large leaves and rich crimson flowers, and S. Rexii, with blue flowers. They are known as Cape primrose.

streptococcheмia, streptococchæmia (strep″tō-kok-kē′mi-ä), n. [NL., < streptococci + Gr. αἷμα, blood.] The presence of streptococci in the blood.

streptococci (strep-tō-kok′sī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + κόκκος, a berry.] A chain of micrococci linked together, occurring in some specific diseases. Ziegler, Pathol. Anat. (trans.), i. 185.

Streptoneura (strep-tō-nū′rä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of streptoneurus: see streptoneurous.] A branch of anisopleurous Gastropoda, in which the long loop of visceral nerves embracing the intestine is caught and twisted into a figure-of-8 by the torsion which the animal undergoes in its development. The Streptoneura are divided into two orders, Zygobranchia and Azygobranchia. They include all the anisopleural gastropods except the opisthobranchs and pulmonifers. The nearest synonym is Prosobranchiata.

streptoneural (strep-tō-nū′ral), a. [< streptoneurous + -al.] Same as streptoneurous.

streptoneurous (strep-tō-nū′rus), a. [< NL. streptoneurus*, < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + νεῦρον, a nerve.] Having twisted (visceral) nerves; specifically, pertaining to the Streptoneura, or having their characters.

Streptopus (strep′tō-pus), n. [NL. (F. A. Michaux, 1803), so called from the abruptly bent flower-stalk; < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + ποῦς = E. foot.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Liliaceæ and tribe Polygonateæ. It is characterized by nodding solitary or twin axillary flowers, divided into six more or less spreading segments, with a filiform or columnar style which is three-cleft at the apex. There are 4 species, natives of Europe, North America, and temperate parts of Asia. They are rather delicate plants, from a short and densely fiber-bearing or a creeping rootstock, with a simple or sparingly branched stem, bearing numerous ovate or lanceolate alternate sessile or clasping leaves. The small rose-colored or whitish flowers hang upon slender recurved or reflexed peduncles, followed by small roundish berries with numerous pale oblong or curving striate seeds. They are known by the name twisted-stalk, translating the genus name. S. amplexifolius is found in Europe, and, together with S. roseus, in northern North America, and southward in the mountains.

streptospondylian (strep″tō-spon-dil′i-an), a. Same as streptospondylous.

streptospondylous (strep-tō-spon′di-lus), a. [< NL. streptospondylus*, < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted + σπόνδυλος, σφόνδυλος, a vertebra.] Having the character of the vertebral articulations reversed, or supposed to be so, as in the genus Streptospondylus.

Streptospondylus (strep-tō-spon′di-lus), n. [NL. (Meyer): see streptospondylous.] A genus of fossil crocodiles, founded on remains represented by vertebræ of the Wealden and Oölitic formations. It was originally placed among the opisthocœlian Crocodilia, subsequently among the amphicœlian. The genus agrees with such forms as Teleosaurus, which have the external nares terminal, and is placed by Huxley in the family Teleosauridæ.

streptostylic (strep-tō-stī′lik), a. [< NL. streptostylicus, < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + στῦλος, a pillar.] Having the quadrate bone freely articulated with the skull, as in ophidian and saurian reptiles; not monimostylic; of or pertaining to the Streptostylica.

Streptostylica (strep-tō-stil′i-kä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of streptostylicus: see streptostylic.] Streptostylic reptiles, a prime division of ordinary reptiles (as snakes and lizards), having an articulated quadrate bone and a pair of extraeloaeal copulatory organs: opposed to Monimostylica. They were divided into Ophi- dia and Sauria (including Amphisbæna). Stannius, 1856.

Streptothrix (strep′tō-thriks), n. [NL. (F. Cohn), < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + θρίξ, the hair.] A genus standing probably intermediate between the bacteria and the fungi proper. It comprises very minute, colorless, branching filaments, growing in interlacing masses like the mycelium of fungi. S. foersteri was found by Cohn in the concretions of the lacrymal canals of the eye.

stress[1] (stres), v. t. [< OF. estrecier, estressier, estrecchier, estroyssier, etc., straiten, contract, < ML. as if strictiare*, < L. strictus, pp. of stringere, draw together, compress: see stringent, strain[1], strict. Cf. distress.] 1. To straiten; constrain; press; urge; hamper. [Rare.]

If the magistrate be so stressed that he cannot protect those that are pious and peaceable, the Lord help.
Waterhouse, Apol. for Learning, p. 155. (Latham.)

2. In mech., to subject to a stress.

The theory of elastic solids . . . shows that when a solid is stressed the state of stress is completely determined when the amount and direction of the three principal stresses are known. Thomson and Tait, Nat. Phil., § 832.

3. To lay the stress, emphasis, or accent on; emphasize.

If he had eased his heart in stressing the first syllable, it was only temporary relief.
G. Meredith, The Egoist, xviii.

stress[1] (stres), n. [< stress[1], v.] 1. Constraining, urging, or impelling force; constraining power or influence; pressure; urgency; violence.

By stress of weather driven,
At last they landed. Dryden, Æneid, i. 503.

2. In mech., an elastic force, whether in equilibrium with an external force or not; the force called into play by a strain. This word was introduced into mechanics by Rankine in 1855. In the following year Sir William Thomson used the word as synonymous with pressure, or an external force balanced by elastic forces. The terminology has been further confused by the use of Rankine's word strain, by Thomson and others, as a synonym for deformation. The words stress and strain are needed in the senses originally given to them by Rankine; while they both have familiar equivalents to which they have been wrested. At present, some writers use them in one way and some in the other.

In this paper the word strain will be used to denote the change of volume and figure constituting the deviation of a molecule of a solid from that condition which it preserves when free from the action of external forces; and the word stress will be used to denote the force, or combination of forces, which such a molecule exerts in tending to recover its free condition, and which, for a state of equilibrium, is equal and opposite to the combination of external forces applied to it.
Rankine, Axes of Elasticity, § 2.

A stress is an equilibrating application of force to a body. . . . It will be seen that I have deviated slightly from Mr. Rankine's definition of the word stress, as I have applied it to the direct action experienced by a body from the matter around it, and not, as proposed by him, to the elastic reaction of the body equal and opposite to that action. Thomson, Phil. Trans., CLXVI. 487.

3. Stretch; strain; effort.

Though the faculties of the mind are improved by exercise, yet they must not be put to a stress beyond their strength. Locke, Conduct of the Understanding, xxviii.

4. Weight; importance; special force or significance; emphasis.

Consider how great a stress he laid upon this duty, . . . and how earnestly he recommended it. Bp. Atterbury.

This, on which the great stress of the business depends.
Locke. (Johnson.)

So rare the sweep, so nice the art,
That lays no stress on any part.
Lowell, Appledore.

5. The relative loudness with which certain syllables or parts of syllables are pronounced; emphasis in utterance; accent; ictus. In elocution, initial, opening, or radical stress is stress or emphasis at the beginning; medial or median stress is that in the middle; and close, final, or vanishing stress is stress at the end of a vowel-sound. The union of initial and final is compound stress, that of all three stresses is thorough stress. —Anticlastic stress. See anticlastic. —Axis of a stress, one of three mutually perpendicular lines meeting at any point of a body in which a given stress tends to produce only elongation or contraction, without any tangential action. —Center of stress. See center[1]. —Close stress. See def. 5. —Composition of stresses. See composition of displacements, under composition. —Compound stress. See def. 5. —Concurrent stress and strain. See concurrent. —Final stress. See def. 5. —Homogeneous stress, in mech., a stress which affects alike all similar and similarly turned portions of matter within the boundary within which the stress is said to be homogeneous. —Initial stress. See def. 5. —Lateral stress. See lateral. —Medial, median stress. See def. 5. —Normal stress, a stress such that its tendency to change the relative positions of two parts of a solid always acts along the normals to the surface separating those parts. Such a stress consists of three extensive or compressive stresses along three rectangular axes. —Orthogonal stress. (a) Relatively to a homogeneous strain, a stress which neither increases nor diminishes the work of producing that strain. (b) Relatively to another stress, a stress orthogonal to a strain perfectly concurrent with the other stress. —Perfectly concurrent stress. (a) Relatively to another stress, a stress equal to that other multiplied by a real number. (b) Relatively to an infinitesimal homogeneous strain, a stress such that, if the strain be so compounded with a rotation as to produce a pure strain, the motions of the particles upon the surface of a sphere relatively to its center represent in magnitude and direction the components of the stress. —Principal tension of a stress, a component of the stress along one of its axes. —Radical stress. See def. 5. —Shearing stress, a stress tending to produce a shear. —Storm and stress. See storm. —Synclastic stress, a stress upon a plate tending to give it a positive curvature. —Tangential stress, a stress such that its tendency to change the relative positions of two parts of a solid always acts along the tangents to the surface separating those parts. Such a stress consists of three shearing stresses having orthogonal axes. —The principal axes of stress. See axis[1]. —Thorough stress. See def. 5. —Type of a stress. See type. —Vanishing stress, an increasing loudness toward the end of a vowel-sound, producing the effect of a jerk. See def. 5. =Syn. 5. Accent, etc. See emphasis.

stress[2] (stres), n. [< stress[1], v. In part an aphetic form of distress, q. v.] 1. Distress; difficulty; extremity; pinch. [Obsolete or archaic.]

And help the pure that ar in stres
Oppreat and hereit mercyles.
Lauder, Dewtie of Kyngis (E. E. T. S.), l. 469.

The agony and stress
Of pitying love. Whittier, The Two Rabbis.

2. In law: (a) The act of distraining; distress. (b) A former mode of taking up indictments for circuit courts.

stress-diagram (stres′dī″a-gram), n. See diagram.

stressless (stres′les), a. [< stress[1] + -less.] Without stress; specifically, unaccented. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 788.

stress-sheet (stres′shēt), n. In bridge-building, same as strain-sheet.

stretch (strech), v. [< ME. strecchen (also unassibilated streken, whence mod. E. dial. streck, streak, var. strake) (pret. straughte, straght, strahte, strealhte, streighte, streigte, streihte, strehte*, pp. straught, straugt, streight, streigt, streiht), < AS. streccan (pret. strehte, pp. streht) = OFries. strekka = D. strekken = MLG. strecken = OHG. strecchen, MHG. G. strecken = Sw. sträcka = Dan. strække, draw out, stretch; connected with the adj. AS. stræc, strec, strong, violent (lit. stretched ?), = MHG. strac (strack-), G. strack, straight; √ strak, perhaps orig. √ srak*, a var. of √ rak in retch[2], reck, reach[1]; otherwise akin to L. stringere, pp. strictus, draw tight (see stringent, strain[1], strait[1]), and to Gr. στραγγός, twisted tight. Hence straight[1], orig. pp. of stretch. Connection with string, strong[1], etc., is uncertain.] I. trans. 1†. To draw (out); pull (out).

But stert vp stithly, straght out a swerde.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1240.

2. To draw out to full length; extend; expand; spread: as, to stretch one's self; to stretch the wings; to stretch one's legs; hence, sometimes, to tighten; make tense or taut.

Redli, of 3our rigt arm that ouer rome streyt,
I se wel the signifiaunce.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2957.

I have stretched my legs up Tottenham Hill to overtake you. I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 43.

3. To extend, or cause to reach or extend, lengthwise, or between specified points: as, to stretch a rope from one point to another.

My wings shall be Stretch'd out no further then from thee to thee.
Quarles, Emblems, iii. 12.

Phœnicia is stretched by some . . . euen to Ægypt, all alongst that Sea-coast. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 95.

A clothes-line with some clothes on it . . . is stretched between the trunks of some stunted willows.
Ruskin, Elements of Drawing, iii.

4. To draw out or extend in any direction by the application of force; draw out by tensile stress: as, to stretch cloth; to stretch a rubber band beyond its strength.

My business and that of my wife is to stretch new boots for millionaires. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 623.

5. To distend or expand forcibly or violently; strain by the exercise of force; subject to stress, literally or figuratively.

Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood.
Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 10.

They that stretch his Infallibility further do they know not what. Selden, Table-Talk, p. 86.

6. To extend or strain too far; impair by straining; do violence to; exaggerate: as, to stretch the truth. —7†. To exert; strain.

Till my veins
And sinews crack, I'll stretch my utmost strength.
Beau. and Fl. (?), Faithful Friends, iii. 3.

Stretching their best abilities to expresse their loues.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 182.

8. To reach or hold out; put forth; extend.

He drough oute a letter that was wrapped in a cloth of silke, and straught it to the kynge.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 639.

Stretch thine hand unto the poor. Ecclus. vii. 32.

9. To cause to lie or fall extended at full length: as, to stretch an opponent on the ground by a blow. —10. To hang. [Slang.]

The night before Larry was stretched.
R. Burrowes, in Prout's Reliques, p. 267.

To stretch a point. Same as to strain a point (which see, under point[1]).

II. intrans. 1. To extend; reach; be continuous over a distance; be drawn out in length or in breadth, or both; spread.

Twenty fadme of brede the armes straughte.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2058.

The town stretcheth along the bottome of the haven, backt on the West with a rocky mountain.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 10.

2. To be extended or to bear extension without breaking, as elastic substances; attain greater length: literally or figuratively.

The inner membrane, . . . because it would stretch and yield, remained unbroken. Boyle.

The terms . . . must be very elastic if they would stretch widely enough to include all the poems.
O. W. Holmes, Emerson, xiv.

3. To go beyond the truth; exaggerate. [Colloq.]

What an allay do we find to the credit of the most probable event that is reported by one who uses to stretch!
Government of the Tongue.

4. Naut., to sail by the wind under all sail. —5. To make violent efforts in running. —Stretching convulsions, tetanic convulsions which, acting through the extensor muscles, straighten the limbs. —Stretch out! an order to a boat's crew to pull hard.

stretch (strech), n. [< stretch, v.] 1. A stretching or straining, especially a stretching or straining beyond measure: as, a stretch of authority.

A great and suddain stretch or contortion.
Ray, Works of Creation, p. 287.

It is only by a stretch of language that we can be said to desire that which is inconceivable.
W. K. Clifford, Lectures, I. 229.

2. A state of tension; strain: as, to be on the stretch.

Those put a lawful authority upon the stretch, to the abuse of power, under the colour of prerogative.
Sir R. L'Estrange.

3. Reach; extent; scope.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., Ceyx and Alcyone, l. 482.

This is the utmost stretch that Nature can,
And all beyond is fulsome, false, and vain.
Granville, Unnatural Flights in Poetry.

It strains my faculties to their highest stretch.
Swift, Tale of a Tub, ix.

4. A long tract; an extended or continued surface or area, relatively narrow; a reach; distance; sweep: as, a long stretch of country road; a great stretch of grassy land; a stretch of moorland.

The grass, here and there, is for great stretches as smooth and level as a carpet.
H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 147.

5. One of the two straight sides of a race-course, as distinguished from the bend or curve at each end. The home-stretch is that part of the course which the contestant goes over after passing the last curve just before completing the race.

6. Naut., the reach or extent of progress on one tack; a tack. —7. In weaving: (a) The plot of ground on which a weaver stretches his warp. (b) The length of spun-yarn between the spindles and roller-beam, which is wound upon the spindles each time the carriage is run toward the roller-beam. Also called draw. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., i. 760. —8. A single continued effort; one uninterrupted sitting, diet, shift, turn, or the like: as, to work ten hours at a stretch.

She could not entertain the child long on a stretch.
Bulwer, Night and Morning, ii. 8.

But all of them left me a week at a stretch to attend the county fair. The Century, XXVIII. 555.

9. A year's imprisonment or punishment. [Thieves' slang.] —10. Course; direction: as, the stretch of seams of coal. —11. Stride; bound, as of a running animal. Gay.

stretcher (strech′ėr), n. [< stretch + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which stretches or expands. Specifically —(a) A tool for stretching the fingers of leather gloves, that they may be put on more easily. (b) In shoemaking, same as shoe-stretcher. (c) A frame, composed of four pieces of wood, upon which painters' canvas is drawn tight. By driving small wedges in at the angles the tension is increased. (d) One of the rods in an umbrella attached at one end to one of the ribs, and at the other to the tube sliding upon the handle. (e) In a vehicle, a jointed rod which when extended expands the carriage-bows, and thus spreads the hood or cover. (f) A short piece of wood placed in the clue of a hammock to extend it.

2. In masonry, a brick or stone laid horizontally with its length in the direction of the face of the wall, as distinguished from a header, which is laid lengthwise across the thickness of the wall, so that its small head or end is seen in the external face of the wall. See cut under inbond.—3. One of the cylindrical rails between the legs of a chair; a round. E. H. Knight.—4. In cabinet-making, a low shelf serving as a brace or stay to the legs of a table, and roomy enough to hold a vase, a basket of flowers, or other ornament.—5. In carp., a tie-timber in a frame.—6. Naut., a narrow piece of plank placed across a boat for the rowers to set their feet against; also, a cross-piece placed between a boat's sides to keep them apart when the boat is hoisted up and griped.—7. A light, simple litter, without inclosure or top, upon which a dead body or a wounded person can be carried: so called because generally composed of canvas stretched on a frame, or because the body is stretched out upon it. Such frames, covered with canvas, are often used as beds, as in camping.—8. A flat board on which corpses are stretched or laid out preparatory to coffining.—9. In angling: (a) The leader at the extreme end of the line. (b) The tail-fly; the fly that is fastened to the cast called the stretcher; a stretcher-fly. See tail-fly (under fly[2]) and whip.—10. A statement which overstretches the truth; a lie. [Colloq.]—11. In carriage-building, same as strainer, 4.

stretcher-bond (strech'ėr-bond), n. A method of building in which bricks or stones are laid lengthwise in contiguous courses, the joints of one coming at half length of the bricks or stones in the other. See cuts under bond.

stretcher-fly (strech'ėr-flī), n. The fly on the stretcher of a casting-line, at the extreme end.

stretcher-mule (strech'ėr-mūl), n. In cotton-manuf., a mule which stretches and twists fine rovings, advancing them a stage toward finishing. E. H. Knight.

stretch-halter (strech'hâl″tėr), n. [< stretch, v., + obj. halter[1].] One who ought to be hanged; a scoundrel. Also crack-rope, wag-halter, etc.

'Sfoot, look here, look here, I know this is the shop, by that same stretch-halter.
Heywood, If you Know not Me (Works, ed. 1874), I. 283.

stretching-frame (strech'ing-frām), n. 1. In cotton-manuf., a machine for stretching rovings previous to spinning them into yarn.—2. A frame on which starched fabrics are stretched to dry. It is sometimes arranged so that the direction of the tension can be changed in order to give the fabric a soft and elastic finish.

stretching-iron (strech'ing-ī″ėrn), n. In leather-manuf.: (a) A curriers' tool for stretching curried leather, smoothing the surface, removing rough places, and raising the bloom. It consists of a flat piece of metal or stone set in a handle. (b) Same as softening-iron.

stretching-machine (strech'ing-ma-shēn″), n. Any machine by which some material is stretched; specifically, a machine in which cotton goods and other textile fabrics are stretched, to lay all their warp- and woof-yarns truly parallel.

stretching-piece (strech'ing-pēs), n. See strut[2], 2.

stretchy (strech'i), a. [< stretch + -y[1].] 1. Liable to stretch unduly.

A workman with a true eye can often counteract stretchy stock. Harper's Mag., LXX. 282.

2. Inclined to stretch one's self: a consequence of fatigue or sleepiness. [Colloq. in both uses.]

But in the night the pup would get stretchy and brace his feet against the old man's back and shove, grunting complacently the while. S. L. Clemens, Roughing it, xxvii.

stretta (stret'tą), n.; pl. strette (-te). [It., fem. of stretto, drawn tight: see strait[1], strict.] Same as stretto.

stretto (stret'tō), n.; pl. stretti (-ti). [It., < L. strictus, drawn tight: see strait[1], strict.] In music: (a) In a fugue, that division in which the entrances of the answer are almost immediately after those of the subject, so that the two overlap, producing a rapidly cumulative effect. The stretto properly follows the "working out." When a stretto is constructed in strict canon, it is sometimes called a stretto maestrale or magistrale. (b) In dramatic music, a quickening of the tempo at the end of a movement for the sake of climax.

strew (strö or strō), v.; pret. strewed, pp. strewed or strewn, ppr. strewing. [Also archaically strow, formerly or dial. also straw; < ME. strewen, strawen, streowen, < AS. streówian, also streówian, strewian* (Somner) = OS. strewian, strowian = OFries. strewa = D. strooijen = OHG. strewen, MHG. ströuwen, strouwen, G. streuen = Icel. strā = Sw. Dan. strö = Goth. straujan (pret. strawida), > It. sdrajare, stretch, strew; cf. OBulg. streti, strew, < L. sternere (pret. stravi, pp. stratus), scatter (see stratum), = Gr. στορεννύναι, στρωννύναι, strew, scatter, = Skt. √ star, scatter. The relation of the Teut. to the variant L. and Gr. roots is not wholly clear. Hence ult. straw[1], n. The three pronunciations strö, strō, strâ are due to the instability of the AS. vowel or diphthong before w, and its wavering in ME.] I. trans. 1. To scatter; spread loosely: said of dry, loose, separable things: as, to strew seed in beds; to strew sand on the floor; to strew flowers over a grave.

I had hem strowe floures on my bed.
Chaucer, Good Women (1st version), l. 101.

And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strawed [spread, R. V.] them in the way. Mat. xxi. 8.

2. To cover in spots and patches here and there, as if by sprinkling or casting loosely about.

And [they] made soche martire that all the felde was strowed full of deed men and horse.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 294.

Forerun fair Love, strewing her way with flowers.
Shak., L. L. L., iv. 3. 380.

3. To spread abroad; give currency to.

She may strew
Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 5. 14.

strewing (strö'ing or strō'ing), n. [Verbal n. of strew, v.] Anything strewed, or suitable to be strewed (for some special purpose).

The herbs that have on them the cold dew o' the night
Are strewings fitt'st for graves.
Shak., Cymbeline, iv. 2. 285.

strewment (strö'ment or strō'ment), n. [< strew + -ment.] The act of strewing, or something strewn.—Maiden strewments†. See maiden.

strewn (strön or strōn). A past participle of strew.

streytet. A Middle English spelling of strait[1].

stria (strī'ą), n.; pl. striæ (-ē). [= F. strie, < L. stria, a furrow, channel, hollow.] 1. In anat., zoöl., and bot., a stripe or streak; a line, or linear marking, whether of elevation or depression—as a ridge or a furrow—or of texture or color. See cuts under brain, muscle[1], and Diatomaceæ.—2. In arch., a fillet between the flutes of columns, pilasters, and the like.—3. In pathol., a linear hemorrhagic macula.—4. An imperfection in the form of a streak or band, whether a discoloration or an irregularity of structure, especially in glass.—5. pl. In elect., the peculiar stratifications of the light observed in vacuum-tubes (Geissler tubes) upon the passage of an electrical discharge.—Confluent, dilated, distinct striæ. See the adjectives.—Dislocated stria. See dislocate.—Glacial striæ, nearly parallel lines, varying in depth and coarseness, engraved on rock-surfaces by the passage of ice in which fragments of rock are embedded. See glaciation, 3.—Obliterate, scutellar, etc., striæ. See the adjectives.—Striæ acusticæ, transverse white lines, more or less apparent, on the floor of the fourth ventricle, arising close to the middle line, and curving outward over the restiform bodies to the nucleus accessorius of the auditory nerve. Also called lineæ transversæ, striæ medullares.—Striæ musculares, the transverse striæ or stripes of striped muscular fiber. See cut under muscle[1].—Stria lateralis, a lateral stria on the surface of the corpus callosum, running lengthwise on either side of the striæ longitudinales.—Stria longitudinalis, stria Lancisi. Same as nerve of Lancisi (which see, under nerve).—Stria medullaris thalami, a band of white fibers running backward along the junction of the median and superior surfaces of the thalamus to end in the habenular ganglion.

strial (strī'al), a. [< stria + -al.] Of the nature of striæ; marked by striæ. Amer. Jour. Sci., XXXI. 135. [Rare.]

striate (strī'āt), a. [= F. strié, < L. striatus, pp. of striare, furrow, channel, < stria, a furrow, channel, hollow: see stria.] 1. Striped or streaked; marked with striæ; scored with fine lines; striped, as muscle; striated.—2. Having a thread-like form.

Des Cartes imagines this earth onee to have been a sun, and so the centre of a lesser vortex, whose axis still kept the same posture, by reason of the striate particles finding no fit pores for their passages but only in this direction. Ray.

striate (strī'āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. striated, ppr. striating. [< L. striatus, pp. of striare (> F. strier), furrow, channel, < stria, a furrow, channel: see stria.] To mark with striæ; cause striation in; score; stripe. Nature, XXX. 23.

—Striated fiber, striated muscular fiber, striated muscle, the striped fiber characteristic of the voluntary muscles, though also found in a few other red muscles which are involuntary, as those of the heart. See muscle[1].—Striated ipecacuanha. See ipecacuanha.—Striated sandpiper†. See sandpiper.

striately (strī'āt-li), adv. In a striate manner; with striæ.

striate-plicate (strī'āt-plī″kāt), a. In bot., striate by reason of minute folds.

striate-punctate (strī'āt-pungk″tāt), a. In entom., having rows of punctures set in regular lines very close together, sometimes elongated or running into one another.

striate-sulcate (strī'āt-sul″kāt), a. In bot., striate with minute furrows.

striation (strī-ā'shọn), n. [< striate + -ion.] 1. The state of being striated; a striate condition or appearance; striature; also, one of a set of striæ; a stria.—2. In geol., grooves, flutings, and scratches made on the surfaces of rocks by the passage over them of bodies of ice: a result frequently observed along the sides of existing glaciers, and in regions which were formerly occupied by ice.—3. In mineral., fine parallel lines on a crystalline face, commonly due to the oscillatory combination of two crystalline forms.

striatopunctate (strī-ā″tō-pungk'tāt), a. Same as striate-punctate.

striatum (strī-ā'tum), n.; pl. striata (-tą). [L. striatum (sc. corpus), neut. of striatus, streaked: see striate.] The great ganglion of the forebrain: more fully called corpus striatum.

striature (strī'a-tūr), n. [< L. striatura, condition of being furrowed or channeled, < striare, pp. striatus, furrow, channel: see striate.] Disposition of striæ; mode of striation; striation; also, a stria.

stricht, n. [Irreg. < L. strix (strig-), a screech-owl.] A screech-owl.

The ruefull strich, still waiting on the bere.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 36.

strick (strik), n. [A var. of strike. Cf. strickle.] 1. A flat piece of wood for leveling grain in a measure; a strickle.

A stritchill; a stricke: a long and round peece of wood like a rolling pinne (with us it is flat), wherewith measures are made even. Nomenclator. (Nares.)

2†. A bushel measure.

One cheesepress, one cuffer, one strick, and one fourme [form]. Worcestershire Wills of 16th and 17th Cents., [quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., X. 369.

3. A handful or bunch of flax, jute, or other fiber, heckled and sorted, or ready to be heckled.

The heckler stakes a handful or strick of rough flax.
Encyc. Brit., XIV. 665.

stricken (strik'n), p. a. [Pp. of strike, v.] 1. Struck; smitten: as, the stricken deer.—2. Advanced; far gone.

I chaunced to espye this foresayde Peter talkynge with a certayne Straunger, a man well stricken in age.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), p. 29.

Stricken hour, a whole hour, marked as completed by the striking of the clock.

He persevered for a stricken hour in such a torrent of unnecessary tattle. Scott.

strickle (strik'l), n. [Early mod. E. also strikle, and assibilated stritchel, stritchell, stritchill, strichell; < ME. strikile, strykylle (= MD. strijkel, streekel, strekel), a strickle; dim. of strick.] 1. A straight-edge used to sweep grain off level with the top of a measure when measuring grain.—2. A wooden swingle for dressing flax.—3. In carp. and masonry, a pattern or template.—4. In founding: (a) A straight-edge used to remove superfluous sand to a level with the top of a flask after ramming the sand into it. Compare loam-board. (b) A template or pattern used in sweeping patterns in sand or loam.—5. In cutlery, a straight-edge fed with emery, and employed to grind the edges of knives arranged spirally on a cylinder. E. H. Knight.

strickler (strik'lėr), n. [Also strikler; < strickle + -er[1].] A strickle or strike. Randle Holme, Acad. of Armory, p. 337. (Nares.) [Local, Eng.]

strict (strikt), a. [= F. strict (OF. streit, etc.), < L. strictus, pp. of stringere, draw tight, bind, contract: see stringent, strain[1]. Cf. strait[1], the older form of the same word.] 1. Drawn tight; tight; close: as, a strict ligature. Arbuthnot.

The lustful god, with speedy pace,
Just thought to strain her in a strict embrace.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., i. 976.

2. Tense; stiff: as, a strict or lax fiber.—3. Narrow; restricted; confined; strait. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Strict passage [the ear] through which sighs are brought,
And whispers for the heart, their slave.
Wordsworth, Power of Sound, i.

4. Close; intimate.

There never was a more strict friendship than between those Gentlemen.
Steele, in A. Dobson's Selections from Steele, Int., p. xl.

5. Absolute; unbroken: as, strict silence.—6. Exact; accurate; careful; rigorously nice: as, words taken in their strictest sense; a strict command.

I wish I had not look'd
With such strict eyes into her follies.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, i. 2.

And fall into deception unaware,
Not keeping strictest watch.
Milton, P. L., ix. 368.

7. Exacting; rigorous; severe; rigid: as, strict in keeping the Sabbath; a strict disciplinarian.

Within these ten days take a monastery,
A most strict house.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, i. 1.

Not over-ruled by fate
Inextricable, or strict necessity.
Milton, P. L., v. 528.

Strict statutes and most biting laws.
Shak., M. for M., i. 3. 19.

8. Restricted; taken strictly, narrowly, or exclusively: as, a strict generic or specific diagnosis.—9. In zoöl., constricted; narrow or close; straitened; not loose or diffuse: as, the strict stem of some corals.—10. In bot., close or narrow and upright: opposed to lax: said of a stem or an inflorescence.—11. In music, regular; exactly according to rule; without liberties: as, a strict canon or fugue.—A strict hand. See hand.—Strict constructionist, counterpoint, cross-examination. See the nouns.—Strict creditor's bill. See creditor's action, under creditor.—Strict foreclosure, fugue, sense, etc. See the nouns.—Strict imitation. See imitation, 2.—Strict settlement, in law, a device in English conveyancing by which the title to landed estates is preserved in the family by conveying it in such manner that the father holds an estate for life and the eldest son a contingent or expectant estate in remainder, with interests also in other members of the family, so that usually only by the concurrence of father and son, and often of trustees also, can complete alienation be made.=Syn. 6. Close, scrupulous, critical. —7. Severe, Rigorous, etc. See austere.

striction (strik'shon), n. [< L. strictio(n-), a drawing or pressing together, < stringere, pp. strictus, draw tight, contract: see strict.] A drawing or pressing together.—Line of striction of a ruled surface, the locus of points on the generators of a ruled surface where each is nearest to the next consecutive generator.

strictland†, n. [< strict + land: prob. suggested by island.] An isthmus. Halliwell. [Rare.]

strictly (strikt'li), adv. In a strict manner. (a) Narrowly; closely; carefully: as, the matter is to be strictly investigated. (b) Exactly; with nice or rigorous accuracy, exactness, or precision: as, strictly speaking, all men are not equal.

Horace hath but more strictly spoke our thoughts.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

(c) Positively; definitely; stringently.

Charge him strictly
Not to proceed, but wait my farther pleasure.
Dryden, Spanish Friar, iii. 3.

(d) Rigorously; severely; without remission or indulgence; with close adherence to rule.

I wish those of my blood that do offend
Should be more strictly punish'd than my foes.
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, iv. 1.

(e) Exclusively; out-and-out; thoroughly.

Cornwall . . . was a strictly British land, with a British nomenclature, and a British speech which lingered on into the last century. E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 149.

strictness (strikt'nes), n. The state or quality of being strict, in any sense.

stricture (strik'tūr), n. [= F. stricture = It. strettura, < L. strictura. a contraction, < stringere, draw tight, contract: see strict. Cf. straiture.] 1†. A drawing tight; contraction; compression; binding.

Christ . . . came to knit the bonds of government faster by the stricture of more religious ties.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 267.

2. In pathol., a morbid contraction of some mucous canal or duct of the body, as the esophagus, intestine, urethra, or vagina.—3†. Strictness.

A man of stricture and firm abstinence.
Shak., M. for M., i. 3. 12.

4. Sharp criticism; critical remark; censure.

I leave it [autobiography] wholly, both as to the matter and stile, to your emendations. . . . By your blots and strictures it may receive a beauty which of itself it had not. J. Cotton, in Aubrey's Letters and Lives, I. 20.

5†. Mark; trace; evidence; sign.

The God of nature implanted in their vegetable natures certain passive strictures, or signatures, of that wisdom which hath made and ordered all things with the highest reason. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 46.

Cock's, Syme's, and Wheelhouse's operations for stricture. See operation.—Resilient, spasmodic, etc., stricture. See the adjectives. (See also bridle-stricture.) strictured (strik'tūrd), a. [< stricture + *-ed*2.] Affected with stricture: as, a strictured duct.

strid. A preterit (obsolete) and past participle of stride.

striddle (strid'l), v.; pret. and pp. striddled, ppr. striddling. [Freq. of stride. Cf. straddle.] To straddle. [Prov. Eng.]

stride (strīd), v.; pret. strode (formerly also strid), pp. stridden or strid, ppr. striding. [< ME. striden (pret. strode, strood, strade), < AS. strīdan (pret. strād, pp. striden), stride, = MD. striden, D. strijden = MLG. striden (pret. streed), stride, strive, = OHG. strītan, MHG. strīten, G. streiten = Dan. stride, strive, contend; also in weak form, OS. strīthian = OFries. strīda = Icel. strīdha = Sw. strida, strive; orig. appar. contend, hence, in a particular use, go hastily, take long steps. Hence the comp. bestride and freq. straddle, also straddle, bestraddle; and, through OF., strive and strife.] I. intrans. 1. To walk with long steps; step.

There was no Greke so grym, ne of so gret wille, Durst abate on tho buernes, ne to bonke stride;
Ne afforse hym with fight to ferke out of ship.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 5687.

Hell trembled as he strode. Milton, P. L., ii. 676.

2. To stand with the feet far apart; straddle.

Because th' acute, and the rect-Angles too,
Stride not so wide as obtuse Angles doo.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Columnes.

The arches, striding o'er the new-born stream.
Burns, Verses Written in Kenmore Inn.

Striding level, a spirit-level the frame of which carries at its two extremities inverted Y's below, so that it may be placed upon two concentric cylinders and straddle any small intervening projections. The striding level is a necessary adjunct of the transit-instrument when this is used for determining time, and is used in many leveling-instruments.

II. trans. 1. To pass over at a step: as, to stride a ditch.

Another, like an Embrian's sturdy Spouse, Strides all the Space her Petticoat allows.
Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love, iii.

2. To sit astride on; bestride; straddle; ride upon.

And pity, like a naked new-born babe, Striding the blast. Shak., Macbeth, i. 7. 22.

stride (strīd), n. [< stride, v.] 1. A step, especially one that is long, measured, or pompous; a wide stretch of the legs in walking.

Simplicity flies away, and iniquity comes at long strides upon us. Sir T. Browne, Urn-Burial, Ded.

Her voice theatrically loud,
And masculine her stride.
Pope, Imit. of Earl of Dorset.

A lofty bridge, stepping from cliff to cliff with a single stride. Longfellow, Hyperion, iii. 2.

2. The space measured or the ground covered by a long step, or between putting down one foot and raising the other.

Betwixt them both was but a little stride,
That did the house of Richesse from hell-mouth divide.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 24.

strident (strī'dent), a. [= F. strident = Sp. Pg. estridente = It. stridente, < L. striden(t-)s, ppr. of stridere, give a harsh, shrill, or whistling sound, creak.] Creaking; harsh; grating.

"Brava! brava!" old Steyne's strident voice was heard roaring over all the rest. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, li.

stridently (strī'dent-li), adv. Creakingly; harshly; gratingly.

stridor (strī'dor), n. [L., < stridere, give a harsh, shrill, or whistling sound, creak: see strident.] A harsh, creaking noise.—Stridor dentium, grinding of the teeth: a common symptom during sleep in children affected with worms or other intestinal irritation. It occurs also in fevers as a symptom of irritation of the brain.

stridulant (strid'ū-lant), a. [< NL. as if stridulan(t-)s*, ppr. of stridulare:* see stridulate.] Strident or stridulous, as an insect; capable of stridulating; specifically, of or pertaining to the Stridulantia.

Stridulantia (strid-ū-lan'shi-ą), n. pl. [NL. (Burmeister, 1835): see stridulant.] A group of hemipterous insects, including various forms which have the faculty of stridulating; specifically, the cicadas. See Cicadidæ.

stridulate (strid'ū-lāt), v. i.; pret. and pp. stridulated, ppr. stridulating. [< NL. as if stridulatus*, pp. of stridulare*, < L. stridulus, giving a shrill sound, creaking: see stridulous.] To make a stridulous noise, as an insect; effect stridulation, as the cicada; grate, scrape, or creak with the organs of stridulation; shrill; chirr.

stridulating-organ (strid'ū-lā-ting-ôr‴gan), n. In entom., a finely wrinkled or file-like surface or plate, frequently having a pearly luster, by friction of which against another surface brought into contact with it a creaking sound is produced. These organs are variously situated on the wings, elytra, legs, abdomen, thorax, and even the head.

stridulation (strid-ū-lā'shon), n. [< stridulate + -ion.] The act, process, or function of stridulating; the power of so doing, or the thin, harsh, creaking noise thus produced; a shrilling. Stridulation is effected by rubbing together hard or rough parts of the body, often specially modified in various ways for that purpose, being thus not vocalization or phonation. It is highly characteristic of many homopterous insects, as the cicadas; of many orthopterous insects, as various locusts or grasshoppers; and of some coleopterous insects, or beetles. It rarely occurs in lepidopterous insects, but has been observed in some butterflies and moths, and also in a few spiders, as of the genus Theridion. Those homopterous insects in which it is specially marked are named Stridulantia.

stridulator (strid'ū-lā-tor), n. [< stridulate + *-or*1.] An insect which stridulates, shrills, or chirrs; that which is stridulatory.

stridulatory (strid'ū-lā-tō-ri), a. [< stridulate + -ory.] Pertaining to stridulators or stridulation; stridulant or stridulous; shrill or shrilling; chirring.

stridulous (strid'ū-lus), a. [< L. stridulus, creaking, rattling, hissing, < stridere, creak: see strident.] Making a small harsh sound; having a thin, squeaky sound; squeaky; creaking.

To make them [the old men] garrulous, as grasshoppers are stridulous. Chapman, Iliad, iii., Commentary.

Stridulous angina. Same as laryngismus stridulus (which see, under laryngismus).

strie†, v. t. A Middle English form of strew.

strife (strīf), n. [< ME. strif, < OF. estrif, < Icel. strīth, strife, contention, pain, grief, = Sw. Dan. strid, combat, contention, = OS. OFries. strīd = D. strijd = OHG. MHG. strīt, G. streit, strife, = OL. stlis (gen. stlit-), L. lis (lit-), strife, litigation (see litigate); from the verb, Icel. strīdha, strive, contend, etc.: see stride. Cf. strive.] 1. A striving or effort to do one's best; earnest attempt or endeavor.

With strife to please you, day exceeding day.
Shak., All's Well, Epil.

2. Emulative contention or rivalry; active struggle for superiority; emulation.

Weep with equal strife
Who should weep most. Shak., Lucrece, l. 1791.

Thus gods contended (noble strife, Worthy the heavenly mind!)
Who most should do to soften anxious life.
Congreve, To the Earl of Godolphin.

3. Antagonistic contention; contention characterized by anger or enmity; discord; conflict; quarrel: as, strife of the elements.

Sith for me ye fight, to me this grace
Both yield, to stay your deadly stryfe a space.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vi. 33.

Twenty of them fought in this black strife.
Shak., R. and J., iii. 1. 183.

To take strife†, to enter into conflict.

For which he took with Rome and Cesar stryf.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 595.

=Syn. 2 and 3. Strife, Contention. These words agree in being very general, in having a good sense possible, and in seeming elevated or poetical when applied to the organized quarrels of war or to anything more than oral disputes. Strife is the stronger. Contention often indicates the more continued and methodical effort, and hence is more often the word for rivalry in effort to possess something. Such a rivalry, when definite in form and limited in time, is a contest: as, the contests of the Greek games. A contention that is forcible, violent, exhausting, or attended with real or figurative convulsions or contortions, is a struggle. See *battle*1, encounter.

strifeful (strīf'fūl), a. [< strife + -ful.] Full of strife; contentious; discordant.

But strifull mind and diverse qualitee
Drew them in partes, and each made others foe.
Spenser, F. Q., II. ii. 13.

strig (strig), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. The footstalk of a flower, leaf, or fruit. Ure, Dict., I. 302.—2. The tang of a sword-blade. See tang.

strig (strig), v. t.; pret. and pp. strigged, ppr. strigging. [< strig, n.] To remove the footstalk from: as, to strig currants.

striga (strī'gą), n.; pl. strigæ (-jē). [NL., < L. striga, a swath, furrow, < stringere, draw tight, contract: see strict.] 1. In bot., a sharp-pointed appressed bristle or hair-like scale, constituting a species of pubescence in plants. —2. In zoöl., a streak or stripe; a stria.—3. In arch., a flute of a column.

strigate (strī'gāt), a. [< NL. strigatus*, < L. striga, a furrow: see striga.] In entom., same as strigose.

Striges (strī'jēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. strix (strig-), an owl.] The owls, or Strigidæ in a broad sense, as a suborder of Raptores; the nocturnal birds of prey. The physiognomy is peculiar by reason of the lateral expansion, lengthwise contraction, and diploic thickening of the skull, which is often asymmetrical. The eyes look forward, not laterally as in other birds, and are set in a peculiar disk of radiated feathers more or less completely formed, the feathers of the front being antrorse and adpressed, hiding the base of the bill. This is the facial disk, of which some radiating feathers of peculiar shape and texture constitute a ruff. The eyes are very large, with a peculiarly shaped eyeball, the cornea being protuberant, and with the sclerotic presenting a figure somewhat like a short acorn in its cup; the iris is capable of great movement, dilating and contracting the pupil more than is usual in birds. The ear-parts are very large, often unlike on opposite sides of the head, and provided with a movable external flap, the operculum, sometimes of great extent. The tufts of feathers, or so-called "ears," of many owls are the cornlplumes or plumicorns. The bill is peculiar in that the nostrils open at the edge of the cere rather than in its substance, and the tomia are never toothed. There are four toes, of which the outer is versatile and shorter than the inner, with three of its joints together shorter than the fourth joint. The claws are all long, sharp, and curved, and the middle one is sometimes pectinate. The feathers lack aftershafts, and the plumage is peculiarly soft and blended, conferring a noiseless flight. The birds have no amblens muscle, one pair of intrinsic syringeal muscles, a nude oil-gland, long clubbed cæca, short intestines, moderately muscular gizzard, capacious gullet without special crop, a peculiar structure of the tarsometatarsi and shoulder-joint, a manubriated and double-notched or entire sternum, basipterygoid processes, and spongy maxilopalatines and lacrymals. The suborder is divided into two families, Strigidæ and Aluconidæ. Nyctharpages is a synonym. See cuts under barn-owl, braccate, Bubo[2], hawk-owl, Otus, Nyctala, owl[1], snow-owl, and Strix.

Strigidæ (strij'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Strix (Strig-) + -idæ.] The owls as a family of strigine or nocturnal birds of prey of the order Raptores: used in three senses. (a) Same as Striges, including all owls. (b) Same as Aluconidæ, including only the barn-owls. (c) Including all owls excepting the Aluconidæ. In this sense the distinctive characters are the furculum not ankylosed to the double-notched or fenestrate sternum, the middle claw not pectinate, and the facial disk incomplete or not triangular.

strigil (strij'il), n. [< L. strigilis (= Gr. στλεγγίς), a scraper, < stringere, draw tight, contract, touch, graze, stroke: see strict.] 1. An instrument of metal, ivory, or horn, used by the ancients for scraping the skin at the bath and in the gymnasium; a flesh-scraper. See cut under Lysippan.—2†. A flesh-brush, or a glove of hair-cloth, rough toweling, or other article used for stimulating the skin by rubbing.

You are treated after the eastern manner, washing with hot and cold water, with oyles, and being rubbed with a kind of strigil of seal's-skin, put on the operator's hand like a glove. Evelyn, Diary, June, 1645.

strigilate (strij'i-lāt), a. [< NL. strigilatus*, < strigilis, q. v.] In entom., noting the front leg of a bee when it is furnished with a strigilis.

strigilis (strij'i-lis), n.; pl. strigiles (-lēz). [NL., < L. strigilis, a scraper: see strigil.] An organ on the first tarsal joint of a bee's fore leg, used to curry or clean the antennæ; a curry-comb: so called on account of the fringe of stiff hairs. At the end of the tibia is a movable spur, and on this spur an expanded membrane, the velum, which can be brought into contact with the strigilis, forming a circular orifice. The bee lays the antenna in the hollow of the strigilis, presses the velum of the spur upon it, and draws the antenna through the aperture thus formed.

strigilose (strij'i-lōs), a. [Also, erroneously, strigillose; dim. of strigose.] In bot., minutely strigose.

strigine (strij'in), a. [< L. strix (strig-) + -ine[2].] Owl-like; related to or resembling an owl. (a) Of or pertaining to the Striges, or Strigidæ in a broad sense. (b) In a narrow sense, belonging to the Strigidæ (c); distinguished from Aluconidæ.

strigment† (strig'ment), n. [< L. strigmentum, that which is scraped off, a scraping, < stringere, draw tight, contract, graze, stroke: see strigil.] Scraping; that which is scraped off.

Brassavolus and many other, beside the strigments and sudorous adhesions from men's hands, acknowledge that nothing proceedeth from gold in the usual decoction thereof. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 5.

Strigopidæ (stri-gop'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1849), < Strigops + -idæ.] The Strigopinæ regarded as a family apart from Psittacidæ.

Strigopinæ (strig-ō-pī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Strigops + -inæ.] The owl-parrots; a subfamily of Psittacidæ, or the only subfamily of Strigopidæ, represented by the genus Strigops. Also Stringopinæ. O. Finsch.

Strigops (strī'gops), n. [NL. (G. R. Gray, 1845); also Strigopsis; also Stringops and Stringopsis (Van der Hoeven, 1856); < Strix (Strig-), a screech-owl, + Gr. ὤψ, eye, face.] A genus of Psittacidæ, or made type of a family Strigopidæ, containing the kakapo, or nocturnal flightless parrot of New Zealand, S. habroptilus; the owl-parrots: so called from the owlish physiognomy. The sternal keel and the furculum are defective, and the birds have not the power of flight. See cut under owl-parrot.

strigose (strī'gōs), a. [< NL. strigosus, < striga, q. v.] 1. In bot., rough with strigæ; beset with sharp-pointed and appressed straight and stiff hairs or bristles: as, a strigose leaf or stem.—2. In entom., streaked, or finely fluted; having fine, close parallel ridges or points, like the surface of a file. Also strigate.

strigous (strī'gus), a. [< NL. strigosus: see strigose.] Same as strigose.

strike (strīk), v.; pret. struck, pp. struck, stricken (obs. or dial. strucken), ppr. striking. [< ME. striken, stryken (pret. strok, stroke, strake, pp. striken, stricken), < AS. strīcan (pret. strāc, pp. strīcen), go, proceed, advance swiftly and smoothly, = OFries. strika = D. strijken = MLG. striken, LG. striken = OHG. strīhhan (strong), streichōn (weak), MHG. strichen, streichen, G. streichen, smooth, rub, stroke, spread, strike; cf. Icel. strjūka, strykja = Sw. stryka = Dan. stryge, stroke, rub, wipe, Goth. striks, a stroke, tittle, akin to L. stringere, draw tight, graze, stroke, etc. (see stringent, strain[1], strict). Cf. streak[1], streak[2], strake[1], strake[2], stroke, etc. The senses of strike are much involved, the orig. sense 'go,' 'go along,' being commonly lost from view, or retained only as associated with the sense 'hit.'] I. intrans. 1. To go; proceed; advance; in modern use, especially, to go or move suddenly, or with a sudden turn.

A mous that moche good couthe, as me thoughte,
Stroke forth sternly, and stode biforn hem alle.
Piers Plowman (B), Prol., l. 183.

To avoyd them, we struck out of the way, and crossed the pregnant champian to the foot of the mountaines.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 158.

By God's mercy they recovered themselves, and, having the flood with them, struck into the harbour.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 47.

Whether the poet followed the romancer or the chronicler in his conception of a dramatic character, he at the first step struck into that undeviating track of our humanity amid the accidents of its position.
I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 239.

A dispatch from Newfoundland says that the caplin have struck in. This means that the cod, the most famous of all commercial fish, has arrived on the banks.
Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII. 352.

2†. To flow; glide; run.

Ase strem that striketh stille.
Morris and Skeat's Specimens Early Eng., ii. 48.

3. To pass with sudden quickness and effect; dart; pierce.

Till a dart strike through his liver. Prov. vii. 23.

How the bright and blissful Reformation (by Divine Power) strook through the black and settled Night of Ignorance and Anti-christian Tyranny.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

4. To come suddenly or unexpectedly.

We had struck upon a well-beaten track on entering the hills. B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 117.

5. To run or extend in any particular direction, especially with reference to the points of the compass: a word used chiefly by geologists in speaking of the strata, or of stratified masses, but also by miners in indicating the position of the lode or vein. The latter, however, generally use run in preference to strike.—6. To lower a sail, a flag, or colors in token of respect; hence, to surrender, as to a superior or an enemy; yield.

The enemy still came on with greater fury, and hoped by his number of men to carry the prize; till at last the Englishman, finding himself sink apace, and ready to perish, struck. Steele, Spectator, No. 350.

The interest of our kingdom is ready to strike to that of your poorest fishing towns. Swift.

7. To touch; glance; graze; impinge by appulse.

Let us consider the red and white colours in porphyry: hinder light from striking on it, and its colours vanish.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. viii. 19.

8. To run aground or ashore; run upon a bank, rock, or other obstacle; strand: as, the ship struck at midnight.—9. To inflict a blow, stroke, or thrust; attack: as, to strike in the dark.

We have drawn our swords of God's word, and stricken at the roots of all evil to have them cut down.
Latimer, Sermons, p. 249.

He strake at him, and missed him, d' ye mark?
Chapman, Gentleman Usher, v. 1.

A Surprize in War is like an Apoplexy in the Body, which strikes without giving Warning for Defence.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 70.

By their designing leaders taught
To strike at power which for themselves they sought.
Dryden, Astræa Redux, l. 32.

10. To hit; beat; tap: as, the hammer strikes on the bell of a clock.

They plunge their Oars all at one instant into the Water, keeping exact time with each other; and that they may the better do this, there is one that strikes on a small Gong, or a wooden Instrument, before every stroke of the Oar.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 74.

11. To sound by percussion, with or as with blows; be struck: as, the clock strikes.

One whose Tongue is strung vp like a Clocke till the time, and then strikes, and sayes much when hee talkes little. Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Stayed Man.

A deep sound strikes like a rising knell!
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 21.

12. To use one's weapons; deal blows; fight: as, to strike for one's country.

God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.
Shak., Hen. V., iv. 3. 5.

Is not he the same God still? Is his hand shortned that he cannot strike, or doth his heart fail that he dare not punish? Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. x.

13. To press a claim or demand by coercive or threatening action of some kind; in common usage, to quit work along with others, in order to compel an employer to accede to some demand, as for increase of pay, or to protest against something, as a reduction of wages: as, to strike for higher pay or shorter hours of work.—14. To steal, as by pocket-picking. [Slang.]—15†. To give the last plowing before the seed is sown. Davies.

To harrow the ridges ere ever ye strike
Is one piece of husbandry Suffolk doth like.
Tusser, September's Husbandry, st. 9.

16. To take root, as a slip of a plant.

The young tops strike freely if they are taken off about three inches long, and inserted singly in some sandy soil in small pots. The Field, March 12, 1887. (Encyc. Dict.)

17. To fasten to stones, shells, etc., as young oysters; become fixed or set.—18†. To move with friction; grate; creak.

The closet door striked as it uses to do, both at her coming in and going out. Aubrey, Misc., p. 83.

19. In the United States army, to perform menial services for an officer; act as an officer's servant: generally said of an enlisted man detailed for that duty.—20. To become saturated with salt, as fish in the process of pickling or curing.—21. To run; change or fade, as colors of goods in washing or cleaning. Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 321.—To be struck or stricken in years, to be far along in years; to be of an advanced age.

And they had no child, . . . and they both were well stricken in years. Luke i. 7.

The king
Is wise and virtuous, and his noble queen
Well struck in years. Shak., Rich. III., i. 1. 92.

To strike amain. See amain[1].—To strike at, to make or aim a blow at; attempt to strike; attack: as, to strike at one's rival.—To strike back. (a) To return blow for blow. (b) To refuse to lead, as fish when, instead of following close along the leader and passing into the bowl of the weir, they retreat from the net, and with a sweep double the whole weir.—To strike for, to start suddenly for; make for: as, he struck for home. [Colloq.]—To strike home, to give a decisive and effective blow or thrust.

Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike home.
Shak., M. for M., i. 3. 41.

To strike in. (a) To make a vigorous move, effort, or advance.

If he be mad, I will not be foolish, but strike in for a share. Brome, Northern Lass, iii. 2.

He advises me to strike in for some preferment, now I have friends. Swift, Journal to Stella, xxx.

(b) To put in one's word suddenly; interpose; interrupt.

I proposed the embassy to Constantinople for Mr. Henshaw, but my Lord Winchelsea struck in.
Evelyn, Diary, June 18, 1660.

(c) To begin; set about.

It [the water of the Dead Sea] bore me up in such a manner that when I struck in swimming, my legs were above the water, and I found it difficult to recover my feet. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 36.

(d) To fall in; conform; join or unite.

I always feared ye event of ye Amsterdamers striking in with us.
Cushman, quoted in Bradford's Plymouth Plantation, p. 57.

He struck in very zealously with the Presbyterians, went to their meetings, and was very liberal in his abuses, not only of the Archbishop, but of the whole order.
E. Gibson, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 227.

(e) To arrive; come in; make for the shore: said of fish.

Those who have been on the Newfoundland coast when the caplin strikes in will not forget the excitement that ensued. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII. 352.

To strike into. (a) To enter upon, as by some sudden act or motion; break into: as, to strike into a run.

It struck on a sudden into such reputation that it scorns any longer to sculk, but owns itself publickly.
Government of the Tongue.

(b) To turn into quickly or abruptly; betake one's self to in haste.

It began raining, and I struck into Mrs. Vanhomrigh's, and dined. Swift.

To strike out. (a) In boxing, to deliver a blow from the shoulder. (b) To direct one's course, as in swimming: as, to strike out for the shore. (c) To make a sudden move or excursion: as, to strike out into an irregular course of life.

I concluded to move on and strike out to the south and southwest into Missouri. The Century, XLI. 107.

(d) In base-ball, to be put out because of failure to strike the ball after a certain number of trials: said of the batter.—To strike up. (a) To begin to play or sing.

If the Musicke overcome not my melancholiy, I shall quarrel; and if they sodainly do not strike up, I shall presently strike thee downe.
Heywood, Woman Killed with Kindness, i. 1.

He got a little excited, as you may have seen a canary sometimes when another strikes up.
O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, ix.

(b) To make acquaintance; become associated: with with. [Colloq.]

He spurr'd to London, and left a thousand curses behind him. Here he struck up with sharpers, scourers, and Alsatians.
Gentleman Instructed, p. 491. (Davies, under Alsatian.)

II. trans. 1†. To pass the hand over lightly; stroke: as, to strike the beard or hair.

I stryke ones heed, as we do a chyldes whan he dothe well. Je applanie. . . . My father sayeth I am a good sonne; he dyd stryke my heed by cause I had conned my lesson without the booke. Palsgrave.

Also euen when he [Sir T. More] shuld lay doune his head on the blocke, he, hanyng a great gray beard, striked out his beard, and sayd to the hangman, I pray you let me lay my beard ouer the blocke least ye should cut it.
Hall, Chron. (ed. 1809), p. 818.

2†. To pass lightly as in stroking.

I thought, He will surely . . . strike his hand over the place and recover the leper. 2 Ki. v. 11.

3. To make level or even, as a measure of grain, salt, etc., by drawing a strickle or straight-edge along the top, or, in the case of potatoes, by seeking to make the projections equal to the depressions: as, to strike a bushel of wheat; a struck or striked as distinguished from a heaped measure.

Four straiked measures or firlots contains in just proportion four heaped firlots.
Report Scotch Commissioners, 1618.

All grain to be measured stricked, without heaps, and without pressing or shaking down.
Act Irish Parliament, 1695.

4†. To balance the accounts in.

And the said journall, with two other bookes, to lye upon the greencloth dayly, to the intent the accomptants, and other particular clerkes, may take out the soultions entred into said bookes, whereby they may strike their lydgers, and soe to bring in their accompts incontinently upon the same.
Ordinances and Regulations, p. 229. (Halliwell.)

5. To lower or dip; let, take, or haul down: as, to strike the topmasts; to strike a flag, as in token of surrender or salute; to strike or lower anything below decks.

Fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, [they] strake sail, and so were driven. Acts xxvii. 17.

Now, strike your sailes, yee jolly Mariners,
For we be come unto a quiet rode.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xii. 42.

The Maltese commanding ours to strike their flag for the great masters of Malta, and ours bidding them strike for the King of England.
Court and Times of Charles I., I. 409.

6. To take down or apart; pack up and remove; fold: as, to strike a tent; to strike a scene on the stage of a theater.

The king, who now found himself without an enemy in these parts, struck his tents, and returned to Gaza in Darwaro. Bruce, Source of the Nile, II. 28.

Yes, on the first bad weather you'll give orders to strike your tents. Sheridan (?), The Camp, ii. 3.

7. To lade into a cooler, as cane-juice in sugar-making.—8†. To dab; rub; smear; anoint.

They shall take of the blood, and strike it on the two side posts. Ex. xii. 7.

The mother said nothing to this, but gave nurse a certain ointment, with directions that she should strike the child's eyes with it.
Keightley's Fairy Mythology (Bohn's Ant. Lib.), p. 302.

9. To efface with a stroke of a pen; erase; remove from a record as being rejected, erroneous, or obsolete: with away, out, off, etc.: as, to strike out an item in an account.

Madam, the wonted mercy of the king,
That overtakes your faults, has met with this,
And struck it out.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, ii. 1.

That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away
From the great compt. Shak., All's Well, v. 3. 56.

Vernon is struck off the list of admirals.
Walpole, Letters, II. 13.

Halifax was informed that his services were no longer needed, and his name was struck out of the Council Book.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

10. To come upon suddenly or unexpectedly; hit upon; light upon; find; discover: as, to strike oil; to strike ore; to strike the right path. [Chiefly colloq.]

One meets (on paper only) with the "eighteen-carat desperado," who has "struck it rich" on the Pikes or in the ranches. Cornhill Mag., N. S., No. 64, p. 369.

We resumed our march the following day, but soon struck snow that materially impeded our progress.
Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 400.

"I didn't strike the stairs at first," whispered the butcher, "and I went too far along that upper hall; but when I came against a door that was partly open I knew I was wrong, and turned back."
F. R. Stockton, Merry Chanter, xii.

11. To enter the mind of, as an idea; occur to.

It appeared never to have struck traveller or tourist that there was anything in Albania except snipes.
R. Curzon, Monast. in the Levant, p. 204.

It struck me that . . . it might be worth while to study him. D. Christie Murray, Weaker Vessel, iv.

12. To impress strongly: as, the spectacle struck him as a solemn one.

It [the temple of Baalbec] strikes the Mind with an Air of Greatness beyond any thing that I ever saw before, and is an eminent proof of the Magnificence of the ancient Architecture. Maundrell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 137.

I have been struck, also, with the superiority of many of the old sepulchral inscriptions.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 215.

13. To appear to: as, how does it strike you?

Now, Mrs. Dangle, didn't you say it struck you in the same light? Sheridan, The Critic, i. 1.

When earth breaks up and Heaven expands,
How will the change strike me and you,
In the house not made with hands?
Browning, By the Fireside.

14. To fall into; assume: as, to strike an attitude.

No sooner had the horses struck a canter than Gibbie's jack-boots . . . began to play alternately against the horse's flanks. Scott, Old Mortality, iii.

15. To give a blow to; smite; hit; collide with; impinge upon. See to strike down, off, out, etc., below.

The servants did strike him with the palms of their hands. Mark xiv. 65.

He at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer; while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius.
Shak., A. and C., iii. 11. 36.

The laird strak her on the mouth,
Till she spat out o' blude.
Laird of Wariestoun (Child's Ballads, III. 110).

16. To attack; assail; set upon.

That was the lawe of Iewes,
That what woman were in anontrie taken, were she riche or pore,
With stones men shulde hir stryke, and stone hir to deth.
Piers Plowman (B), xii. 77.

The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome!
Shak., Cor., iv. 1. 13.

Death struck them in those Shapes again,
As once he did when they were Men.
Prior, Turtle and Sparrow.

17. To assail or overcome, as with some occult influence, agency, or power; smite; shock; blast.

I will go study mischief,
And put a look on, arm'd with all my cunnings,
Shall meet him like a basilisk, and strike him.
Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 2.

About Maidstone in Kent, a certain Monster was found strucken with the Lightning, which Monster had a Head like an Ass. Baker, Chronicles, p. 75.

Even brave men have been struck with this involuntary trembling upon going into battle for the first time, the series of sensations commencing with the boom of the yet distant cannon.
J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 109.

18. To knock; dash: as, to strike one's foot against a stone.

He struck his hand upon his breast,
And kiss'd the fatal knife. Shak., Lucrece, i. 1842.

19. To deal or inflict: with blow, stroke, or a similar word as object.

Hadst thou foxship
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome
Than thou hast spoken words? Shak., Cor., iv. 2. 19.

Not riot, but valour, not fancy, but policy, must strike the stroke. G. Harvey, Four Letters.

Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow.
Byron, Childe Harold, ii. 76.

20. To produce by blows or strokes: as, to strike fire; to strike a light.

War is a Fire struck in the Devil's tinder-box.
Howell, Letters, ii. 43.

21. To cause to ignite by friction: as, to strike a match.—22. To tap; broach; draw liquor from: as, to strike a cask.

Strike the vessels, ho!
Here is to Cæsar! Shak., A. and C., ii. 7. 103.

23†. To take forcibly or fraudulently; steal: as, to strike money. [Slang.]

Now we haue well bousd, let vs strike some chete. Now we haue well dronke, let vs steale some thing.
Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, App.

24. To bring suddenly and completely into some specified state, by or as by a swift, sharp blow or stroke: as, to strike one dumb.

S. Paule was himselfe sore against Christ, til Christ gaue him a great fal, and threw him to the ground, and strake him starke blind.
Sir T. More, Cumfort against Tribulation (1573), fol. 11.

Oh, hard news! it frets all my blood,
And strikes me stiffe with horrour and amazement.
Heywood, Fair Maid of the West (Works, ed. 1874, I. 398).

In view of the amazed town and camp,
He strake him dead, and brought Persita off.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, i. 1.

25. To pierce; stab.

Yet when the tother answered him that there was in euery mans mouth spoke of him much shame, it so strake him to ye heart that w' in fewe daies after he withered & consumed away. Sir T. More, Rich. III. (Works, p. 61 f).

For I hit him not in vaine as Artagerses did, but full in the forehead hard by the eye, and strake him through and through his head againe, and so overthrew him, of which blow he died. North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 792.

26. To produce with sudden force; effect suddenly and forcibly; cause to enter.

It cannot be this weak and writhled shrimp
Should strike such terror to his enemies.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 24.

Bring out the lady: she can quell this mutiny,
And with her powerful looks strike awe into them.
Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 2.

Waving wide her myrtle wand,
She strikes a universal peace through sea and land.
Milton, Nativity, i. 52.

27. To stamp with a stroke; impress; hence, to mint; coin: as, to strike coin at the mint.

The princes who struck these medals, says Eugenius, seem to have designed them rather as an ostentation of their wealth than of their virtues.
Addison, Ancient Medals, iii.

Here they are, thirty good Harry groats as ever were struck in bluff old Hal's time. Scott, Abbot, vii.

28. To cause to enter or penetrate; thrust: as, a tree strikes its roots deep.

Bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary.
Shak., Lear, iii. 3. 16.

29. To cause to sound; announce by sound: as, the clock strikes twelve; hence, to begin to beat or play upon, as a drum or other instrument; begin to sing or play, as a song or tune: often with up.

Strike up the drums. Shak., K. John, v. 2. 179.

Strike the Lyre upon an untry'd String.
Congreve, Taking of Namure.

When the college clock struck two, Hogg would rise, in spite of Shelley's entreaty or remonstrance, and retire for the night. E. Dowden, Shelley, I. 67.

30. To make; effect; conclude; ratify: as, to strike a bargain. [Compare the Latin fœdus ferire, to strike a treaty; also the phrase to strike hands.]

The rest strike truce, and let loue seale firm leagues twixt Greece and Troy. Chapman, Iliad, iii. 98.

A bargain was struck; a sixpence was broken; and all the arrangements were made for the voyage.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xvi.

Be admonished, by what you already see, not to strike leagues of friendship with cheap persons, where no friendship can be. Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 195.

31. To cease, stop, quit, or knock off as a coercive measure: as, to strike work.

I never heard of authors striking work, as the mechanics call it, until their masters the booksellers should increase their pay. Scott, in Lockhart's Life, xi.

Don't yo think I can keep three people . . . on sixteen shillings a week? Dun yo think it 's for mysel' I'm striking work at this time? Mrs. Gaskell, North and South, xvii

32. To make a sudden and pressing demand upon; especially, to make such a demand successfully: as, to strike a friend for fifty dollars. [Colloq.]—33†. To match, as the stock and counterstock of a tally (see tally); hence, to unite; join.

I'll find a portion for her, if you strike
Affectionate hearts, and joy to call you nephew.
Shirley, The Brothers, i. 1.

34†. To fight; fight out.

They fight near to Anxerre the most bloody battle that ever was struk in France.
Raleigh, Hist. World, Pref., p. xx.

We, that should check
And quench the raging fire in others' bloods,
We strike the battle to destruction?
Fletcher and Rowley, Maid in the Mill, iv. 2.

35. To draw (lines) on a surface or on the face of a piece of stuff, as by snapping or twanging a chalked string stretched tightly along it.—36. In carp., to form (a molding) with a molding-plane.—37. To harpoon or bomb (a whale).—38. In angling, to hook (a fish when it rises to the fly but fails to hook itself). It is accomplished by a quick dexterous turn or twist of the wrist.—39. To put (fish) in a strike-barrel.—40. In electroplating, to produce the beginning of a deposit of metal upon, as on a plate or other article of metal placed in the electroplating solution. The work is said to be struck as soon as a uniform film of deposited metal distinctly appears upon its surface.—41. In color-making and dyeing, to affect (a coloring matter) so as to obtain the desired precipitation of color in the vat or on the fabric by the addition of the proper color-producing chemical. See color-striker.

A simpler method of dyeing by means of bichromates is also given, . . . by which the logwood is struck of an intense black and fixed.
O'Neill, Dyeing and Calico Printing, p. 86.

42. In electric lighting, to produce (the arc) by parting the carbons.—A struck battle†, a hard-fought battle.

Ten struck battles
I suck'd these honour'd scars from, and all Roman.
Fletcher, Bonduca, i. 1.

Strike me luck, strike me lucky, a familiar expression used in making a bargain, derived from the old custom of striking hands together in ratification of the bargain, the buyer leaving in the hand of the seller an earnest-penny.

But if that 's all you stand upon,
Here, strike me luck, it shall be done.
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. i. 540.

Striking the fiars. See fiar, 2.—Striking-up press. See press[1].—Struck jury. See jury.—To strike a balance, to compare the summations on both sides of an account, in order to ascertain the amount due by either party to the other.—To strike a center or centering, in arch. See centering[2].—To strike a docket. See docket.—To strike a lead. (a) In mining, to light on a lode or vein of metal. (b) To enter on any undertaking that proves successful.—To strike all of a heap. See heap.—To strike an answer (or other pleading), to strike it out as improper or insufficient. [Local, U. S.]—To strike down. (a) To prostrate by a blow; fell. (b) In fisheries, to head up and stow away barrels of, as fish.—To strike fire. See fire.—To strike from, to remove with or as with a blow or stroke: as, to strike a name from a list.

Among the Arabians they that were taken in adultery had their heads stricken from their bodies.
Homilies, Serm. against Adultery, p. 120.

To strike hands. See hand.—To strike off. (a) See def. 9. (b) (1) To cancel; deduct: as, to strike off the interest of a debt. (2) To separate or remove by a blow or stroke: as, to strike off what is superfluous or injurious.

Ffrom thense we entred in to the gardeyn, and visited the place wher our savyor was takyn and where Scynt Petir Stroke of Malcus eere.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 29.

(3) To print: as, to strike off a thousand copies of a book.—To strike oil. See oil.—To strike out. (a) To produce by collision, as by blows or strokes: as, to strike out sparks with steel.

My pride struck out new sparkles of her own.
Dryden, Hind and Panther, i. 75.

(b) See def. 9. (c) To plan quickly or for an emergency; devise; invent; contrive: as, to strike out a new plan of finance. (d) In base-ball, to put out, as the pitcher does the batter when the latter is unable in a certain number of trials to hit the ball: as, he struck out three men in succession.—To strike root, sail, soundings, tally. See the nouns.—To strike up. (a) To begin to play or sing: as, to strike up a tune.

Strike up our drums, to find this danger out.
Shak., K. John, v. 2. 179.

(b†) To send up; give out.

Let the court not be paved, for that striketh up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter.
Bacon, Building (ed. 1887).

(c) To enter upon by mutual agreement; begin to cultivate: as, to strike up an acquaintance with somebody.

She [Mme. de Souza] charmed and delighted me, and we struck up an intimacy without further delay.
Mme. D'Arblay, Diary, IV. 174.

strike (strīk), n. [< ME. strike, strie, strek, streek (= LG. strīek); < strike, v.] 1. A wooden implement with a straight edge for leveling a measure of grain, salt, etc., by striking off what is above the level of the top; a strickle.

Wing, cartnave and bushel, peck, strike ready [at] hand.
Tusser, Husbandly Furniture, st. i.

2. A piece of wood used in the manufacture of pottery, in brickmaking, etc., to remove superfluous clay from a mold.—3. A puddlers' stirrer; a rabble.—4†. A stanchion in a gate, palisade, railing, or the like.

Stowe says "there were nine tombs of alabaster and marble, invironed with strikes of iron, in the choir." See preface to the "Chronicle of the Grey Friars of London."
Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), Notes, p. 39.

5. In metal-working, a hook in a foundry to hoist the metal.—6. The direction or run of a bed or member of a stratified formation, especially with reference to the points of the compass. See bearing, 12, and cut under dip.

The Devonian sandstones . . . are exposed in rugged cliffs slightly oblique to their line of strike, along a coast-line of ten miles in length, to the head of the bay [Gaspé].
Dawson, Geol. Hist. of Plants, p. 106.

7. An English dry measure, consisting regularly of two bushels. It was never in other than local use, and varied in different localities from half a bushel to four bushels.

He selleth all the malt or corn for the best, when there be but two strikes of the best in his sack.
Latimer, Misc. Scl.

Jailer. What dowry has she?
Daugh. Some two hundred bottles,
And twenty strike of oats; but he'll ne'er have her.
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 2.

How many strike of pease would feed a hog fat against Christide?
Marston, Antonio and Mellida, I., ii. 1.

8. A handful or buneh of flax, jute, or other fiber, either ready for heckling or after heckling; a strick.

This pardoner hadde heer as yelow as wex,
But smoothe it heng as doth a strike of flex.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 676.

9. In sugar-making and -refining, the quantity of syrup emptied at one time into the coolers; also, the quantity of sugar boiled or crystallized at one time: as, to boil a strike; to run off a strike.

The strike is now done, sir is admitted to the pan, and the contents are run off into the "mixer."
The Century, XXXV. 114.

10. In base-ball: (a) An unsuccessful attempt of the batter to hit the ball. (b) A ball so pitched as to pass over the home-plate, and considered by the umpire as one that the batter should have tried to strike.—11. In American bowling, a play by which one of the contestants knocks down all the balls with one bowl, entitling him to add to his score as many points as the number of the pins knocked down with the first two balls of his next play. Also called ten-strike. Compare spare[1], n., 2.—12. A concerted or general quitting of work by a body of men or women for the purpose of coercing their employer in some way, as when higher wages or shorter hours are demanded, or a reduction of wages is resisted; a general refusal to work as a coercive measure. Compare lockout.

Accounts at that time [1362] of strikes in the building-trade are particularly numerous.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), Int., p. cxliv.

There have been times and incidents when the strike was the only court of appeals for the workingman, and the evil lay in the abuse of them and not in the use of them.
Sci. Amer., N. S., LVII. 292.

13. Any unscrupulous attempt to extort money or to obtain other personal advantage by initiating an attack with the intention of being bought off, as by introducing a bill into a legislature, hostile to some moneyed interest, with the hope of being paid to let the matter drop. [Political slang, U. S.]—14. Full measure; especially, in brewing, full measure of malt: thus, ale of the first strike is that which has its full allowance of malt and is strong.

Three hogsheads of ale of the first strike.
Scott.

15. In coining, the whole amount struck at one time.—16. In type-founding, an imperfect matrix for type; the deeply sunken impression of the engraved character on a punch in a short and narrow bar of copper: so called because the punch is struck a hard blow with a hammer. Also known as unjustified matrix, or drive. See type-founding.

When the letter is perfect, it is driven into a piece of polished copper, called the drive or strike. This passes to the justifier, who makes the width and depth of the faces uniform throughout the fount.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 699.

17. A metal piece which is inserted in a door-jamb, and against which the latch strikes as the door closes. It is beveled to permit the easy closing and self-latching of the door. Also called striker-plate.

18. Same as stick[3], 10.—19. In soap-making: (a) The general crystalline appearance of hard soaps, which is characteristic of soaps which retain the normal amount of water, and in which the saponification and separation have been complete. (b) The proper and characteristic marbling of well-made mottled soaps.—By the strike, by measure not heaped up, but having what was above the level of the measure scraped off with a strike.—Strike of day, the dawn or break of day.

If I was to speak till strike o' day.
Dickens, Hard Times, ii. 4.

strike-a-light (strīk'a-līt″), n. A piece of flint trimmed into the shape of a gun-flint, but somewhat larger, used with pyrites or steel for procuring fire from the sparks. Such implements have been frequently found among prehistoric relics. They have been used from remote ages, and are still manufactured and sold for that purpose.

Another strike-a-light which I lately bought in a stall at Trèves is about 2 inches long by 1⅛ broad, and is made from a flat flake, trimmed to a nearly square edge at the butt-end, and to a very flat arc at the point.
Evans, Ancient Stone Implements of Great Britain, p. 283.

strike-block (strīk'blok), n. In carp., a plane shorter than a jointer, used for shooting a short joint.

strike-fault (strīk'fâlt), n. In geol., a fault running in the same general direction as the strike of the strata where it occurs.

strike-or-silent (strīk'ôr-sī″lent), n. In horol., a piece which sets the striking-mechanism of a clock in or out of action. E. H. Knight.

strike-pan (strīk'pan), n. In sugar-manuf., same as teache or teache-pan.

strike-pay (strīk'pā), n. An allowance paid by a trades-union to men on strike.

In one memorable case, at least, a great employer . . . himself gave strike pay to his own men, when, under a sense of social duty, they left his works empty.
Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 722.

strike-plate (strīk'plāt), n. The keeper for a beveled latch-bolt, against which it strikes so as to snap shut automatically. Car-Builder's Dict.

striker (strī'kėr), n. [< strike + -er[1].] 1. One who strikes, in any sense of the verb strike. Specifically—(a†) A robber.

I am joined with no foot-land rakers, no long-staff six-penny strikers.
Shak., I Hen. IV., ii. 1. 82.

(b) A workman who with others quits work in order to coerce their employer to accede to their demands.

The method employed by the Strikers in this country, during the past ten years, and more especially in their recent strikes, is most unreasonable, violent, as well as disastrous in its results.
N. A. Rev., CXLII. 602.

(c) One who seeks to effect a strike, in sense 13. [Political slang, U. S.]

If he can elect such a ticket even in Virginia alone, he will take the field after election as a striker, and will offer his electoral votes to whichever candidate will give the highest terms.
The Nation, Sept. 6, 1883, p. 200.

(d) In the United States army, a soldier detailed to act as an officer's servant. See strike, v. i., 19. (e†) A wencher.
Massinger. (f†) A harpooner.

Where-ever we come to an anchor, we always send out our strikers, and put our hooks and lines overboard to try for fish.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 118.

(g) In the hardware districts of England, a workman who manages the fire, heats the steel, and assists the forger. (h) An assistant or inferior shipwright. (i) A man employed to strike off the superfluous quantity of grain, salt, etc., from the top of a measure.

2. That which strikes. Specifically—(a) A species of tilt-hammer operated directly from the engine. (b) A hardened mold upon which a softened steel block is struck to receive a concave impression. (c) The hammer of a gun, the stroke of which fires the piece. (d) An automatic apparatus which regulates the descent, at the proper time and place, of the ruling-pens of a paper-ruling machine. (e) The lever which puts a machine into motion. [Eng.] 3. In ornith., a tern or sea-swallow. [Local, U. S.]—4. In the menhaden-fishery: (a) The man who manages the striker-boat. A vessel usually has two striker-boats, with one man in each; these row close to the school of fish, observe its course, signal the purse-crew to set the seine, and drive the fish in the desired direction with pebbles which they carry in the boats. (b) A green hand who works at low wages while learning the business, but is one of the crew of a vessel.

striker-arm (strī'kėr-ärm), n. A seat-arm. Car-Builder's Dict.

striker-boat (strī'kėr-bōt), n. In the menhaden-fishery, the striker's boat. See striker, 4 (a).

striker-out (strī'kėr-out'), n. In lawn-tennis, the player who receives, and if possible returns, the ball when first served.

It now becomes the duty of the adversary, called the striker-out, to return the ball by striking it with his racket in such a manner that it shall pass back over the net to the service side.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 179.

striker-plate (strī'kėr-plāt), n. Same as strike, 17.

striking (strī'king), n. [Verbal n. of strike, v.] 1. The removal of the center upon which an arch has been built. See striking-plate.—2. The propagation of plants by cuttings or slips.

striking (strī'king), p. a. Standing out prominently and conspicuously, so as strongly to impress the eye or the mind; prominent; notable; impressive; remarkable; surprising: as, a striking resemblance; a striking remark.

The most striking characteristic of the poetry of Milton is the extreme remoteness of the associations by means of which it acts on the reader.
Macaulay, Milton.

striking-beam (strī'king-bēm), n. A cylindrical horse on which hides, when removed from the tanning-liquor, are placed. While drying they are struck or scraped from time to time.

strikingly (strī'king-li), adv. In a striking manner; in such a manner as to surprise or impress; forcibly; impressively.

The force of many strikingly poetic passages has been weakened or unperceived, because their origin was unknown, unexplored, or misunderstood.
T. Warton, Pref. to Milton's Smaller Poems.

strikingness (strī'king-nes), n. Striking character or quality.

striking-plate (strī′king-plāt), n. In carp., in a centering used in erecting an arch of masonry, a device for lowering or setting free the centering under the arch when completed. It consists of a compound wedge secured by keys. When the keys are driven out, the wedge slips backward, and causes the centering to fall.

striking-solution (strī′king-sō-lū″shon), n. A weak solution of silver cyanide, with a large proportion of free potassium cyanide, in which metals to be silver-plated are immersed for a few seconds to effect an instantaneous deposit of silver on the metal in order to insure a perfect coating in the silver-bath proper.

strikel†, striklert. Old spellings of strickle, strickler.

string (string), n. [< ME. string, streng, strynge, < AS. strenge = MD. strenghe, stringhe, D. streng, strenge, strenk (streng-), strank (strang-) = LG. strenge = OHG. strang, MHG. stranc, strange, G. strang = Icel. strengr = Dan. streng = Sw. sträng, a string, line, cord; perhaps < AS. strang, etc., strong (see strong); otherwise akin to L. stringere, draw tight, Gr. στραγγάλη, a halter, στραγγός, hard-twisted: see strain[1], stringent, strangle.] 1. A slender cord; a thick thread; a line; a twine; a narrow band, thong, or ribbon; also, anything which ties.

I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots.
Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 7. 45.

Queen Mary came tripping down the stair,
Wi' the gold strings in her hair.
Mary Hamilton (Child's Ballads, III. 123).

Vouchsafe to be an azure knight,
When on thy breast and sides Herculean
He fix'd the star and string cerulean.
Swift, Poetry.

Mrs. General Likens had her bonnet-strings untied; she took it off her head as she got out of the buggy.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 80.

2. A strip, as of leather, by which the covers of a book are held together.

Many of those that pretend to be great Rabbies in these studies have scarce saluted them from the strings and the titlepage, or, to give 'em more, have bin but the Ferrets and Moushunts of an Index.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

3. The line or cord of a bow.

The best bow that the yeman browthe
Roben set on a stryng.
Robin Hood and the Potter (Child's Ballads, V. 27).

4. In musical instruments, a tightly stretched cord or wire by the vibration of which tones are produced. The materials most used are gut, as in instruments of the lute and viol families, and brass or steel, as in the mandolin, the zither, and the pianoforte, though silk is also used. Silk strings are usually, and metal strings sometimes, wound with light silver wire to increase their weight; and such strings are often called silver strings. The pitch of the tone produced depends on the density, tension, and vibrating length of the string. The vibration is produced either by plucking or twanging with the finger, by a plectrum, or by a jack, as in the lute and harp families generally, and in the harpsichord; by the friction of a bow, as in the viol family; by a stream of air, as in the æolian harp; or by the blow of a hammer, as in the dulcimer and the pianoforte. The strings are named either by the letters of the tones to which they are tuned, or by numbers. The smallest string of several representatives of the lute and viol families is often called the chanterelle, because commonly used for the principal melody or cantus. The tuning of strings is effected usually by means of tuning-pins or -pegs, which in lutes and viols are placed in the head of the instrument, but in harps, zithers, and pianofortes in one side or rim of the frame. Not only has each instrument had a varying number of strings in different countries and at different periods, but the accordatura, or system of pitches, to which they are tuned has also varied. The vibrating length of the strings in instruments of the lute and viol families may be diminished, and the pitch of their tones raised, by pressing them with the fingers of the left hand against the fingerboard. The exact places for such shortening or "stopping" are sometimes marked by frets, as in the guitar and also in the zither. The modern harp is provided with a mechanism for raising the pitch of certain sets of strings one or two semitones by means of pedals.

Of instrumentes of stringes in acord
Herde I so pleye a ravyshing swetnesse.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 197.

Ye'll take a lock o' my yellow hair, . . .
Ye'll make a string to your fiddle there.
The Bonny Bows o' London (Child's Ballads, II. 362).

There 's not a string attuned to mirth
But has its chord in Melancholy.
Hood, Melancholy.

5. pl. Stringed instruments, especially the stringed instruments of a band or orchestra taken collectively — that is, violins, violas, violoncellos, and double basses — in distinction from the wind and the percussires.

Praise him upon the strings and pipe.
Book of Common Prayer, Psalter, Ps. cl. 4.

6. Something resembling a string. (a) A tendril, or vegetable fiber; particularly, the tough substance that unites the two parts of the pericarp of leguminous plants: as, the strings of beans.

Duck-weed . . . putteth forth a little string into the water, far from the bottom. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 567.

(b) In mining, a thin seam or branch of a lode; a small vein; a fissure filled with mineral or metalliferous matter, but wanting in regularity and permanence. (c) A nerve or tendon of an animal body.

Heart with strings of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe!
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 3. 70.

7. A cord or thread on which anything is filed; a file; also, a set of things strung on a string or file: as, a string of beads; hence, any series of persons or things connected or following in succession; a series or succession of persons, animals, or things extending in a line.

Sir Harry hath what they call a string of stories, which he tells every Christmas. Steele, Guardian, No. 42.

No king or commonwealth either can be pleased to see a string of precious coast towns in the hands of a foreign power. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 291.

8. A drove or company of horses or steers; a stud. [Colloq.]

Going into the corral, and standing near the center, each of us picks out some one of his own string from among the animals that are trotting and running in a compact mass round the circle. T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXV. 656.

9. In billiards: (a) A number of wooden buttons strung on a wire to keep the score or tally of the game. There is a string for each player or side, one white with every fifth button black, the other the converse of this, for convenience in counting the buttons to be moved along the wire for each run made by either player or side. (b) The score, tally, or number of points scored by either player or side at any stage of a game: as, he made a poor string at first, but won. (c) A stroke made by each player from the head of the table to the opposite cushion and back, to determine, by means of the resultant positions of the balls, who shall open the game. — 10. In arch., a string-course. — 11. In ship-building, the highest range of planks in a ship's ceiling, or that between the gunwale and the upper edge of the upper-deck ports. — 12. In printing, a piece-compositor's aggregate of the proofs of types set by him, pasted on a long strip of paper. The amount of work done is determined by the measurement of this string. — 13. The stringy albumen of an egg. See chalaza. — 14. A hoax, or discredited story. [Printers' slang, Eng.] — A string of cash. See cash[3], 1. — Bass string. See bass[3]. — Close string. See close[2]. — Cut and mitered string, in stair-building, an outer string cut to miter with the end of the riser. — False string, in a musical instrument, an imperfect string, giving an uncertain or untrue sound. — Instrument of ten strings, in the Bible, a variety of nebel or psaltery. — Italian string. See Italian. — Open string, in musical instruments of the stringed group, a string that is not stopped or shortened by the finger or a mechanical stop, but is allowed to vibrate throughout its full length. — Order of the Yellow String. See order. — Plaited string work. See plaited. — Roman string. See Roman. — Rough string. See rough-string. — Silver string. See def. 4. — Soprano string. Same as chanterelle, 1. — Sympathetic string. See sympathetic. — The whip with six strings. See the Six Articles, under article. — To harp on one string. See harp. — To have two strings to one's bow. See bow[2].

string (string), v.; pret. and pp. strung, ppr. stringing. [< string, n. As with ring[2], the strong forms of the principal parts conform to the supposed analogy of sing, sang, sung, etc.] I. trans. 1. To furnish with strings.

Orpheus' lute was strung with poets' sinews.
Shak., T. G. of V., iii. 2. 78.

2. To put in tune the strings of, as of a stringed instrument.

Here the Muse so oft her harp has strung
That not a mountain rears its head unsung.
Addison, Letter from Italy.

3. To make tense; impart vigor to; tone. See high-strung.

Toil strung the nerves and purified the blood.
Dryden, Epistle to John Dryden, l. 89.

Sylvia was too highly strung for banter.
Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, vii.

4. To fasten, suspend, or hang with a string: as, to string a parcel; to string up a dog. — 5. To thread or file on a string: as, to string beads. — 6. To prepare for use, as a bow, by bending it sufficiently to slip the bowstring into its notches, so that the string is tightly strained. — 7. To extend in a string, series, or line.

Ships were strung for miles along the lower levee [of New Orleans], and steamboats above, all discharging or receiving cargo. W. T. Sherman, Memoirs, vi.

8. To deprive of strings; strip the strings from: as, to string beans. — 9†. To carve (lampreys). Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 265.

II. intrans. 1. To stretch out into a string or strings when pulled; become stringy.

Let it [varnish] boil until it strings freely between the fingers. Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 64.

2. To walk or move along in a string or disconnected line; straggle: as, they came stringing along. [Colloq.] — 3. In billiards, to hit one's ball so that it will go the length of the table and back, to determine who shall open the game.

string-band (string′band), n. A band composed of stringed instruments, or the stringed instruments of such a band taken by themselves.

string-bark (string′bärk), n. Same as stringy-bark.

string-bean (string′bēn), n. A bean of which the green pods are used for food, prepared before cooking by stripping off the fibrous thread along their back. Varieties of the common kidney-bean, or French bean, are so treated.

string-block (string′blok), n. In pianoforte-making, the wooden block into which are driven the studs for holding the loops of the ends of the strings furthest from the tuning-pins.

string-board (string′bōrd), n. In carp., a board that supports any important part of a framework or structure; especially, a board which sustains the ends of the steps in a wooden staircase. Also called string-piece or stringer.

string-course (string′kōrs), n. In arch., a narrow molding or a projecting course continued horizontally along the face of a building, frequently under windows. It is sometimes merely a flat band, more often molded, and sometimes richly carved.

String-course (sculptured), 13th century. (From triforium of Amiens Cathedral, France.)

stringed (stringd), a. [< string + -ed[2].] 1. Having strings; furnished with strings: as, a stringed instrument. — 2. Produced by strings or stringed instruments.

Divinely-warbled voice
Answering the stringed noise.
Milton, Nativity, l. 97.

3. Fastened with a string or strings; tied.

Stringed like a poor man's heifer at its feed.
Wordsworth, Prelude, v.

Bob took up the small stringed packet of books.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, iv. 3.

4. In her., furnished with a string of any sort, as a cord or ribbon.

stringency (strin′jen-si), n. [< stringen(t) + -cy.] Stringent character or condition. (a) Tightness; straitness: as, a stringency in the money-market. (b) Strictness; closeness; rigor: as, the stringency of the regulations was increased.

As the known exactness of the uniformity became greater, the stringency of the inference increased.
W. K. Clifford, Lectures, I. 156.

stringendo (strin-jen′dō). [It., ppr. of stringere, < L. stringere, draw tight, compress: see stringent.] In music, pressing or accelerating the tempo: usually with a crescendo. Also incalzando.

stringent (strin′jent), a. [< L. stringen(t-)s, ppr. of stringere, draw tight, compress, contract, touch, graze, stroke, etc.: see strain[1], strict, and cf. strike.] 1†. Tightening or binding; drawing tight. Thomson. — 2. Straitened; tight; constrained; hampered by scarcity or lack of available funds: as, a stringent money-market. — 3. Strict; close; rigorous; rigid; exacting; urgent: as, to make stringent regulations.

stringently (strin′jent-li), adv. In a stringent manner; with stringency; tightly; rigorously; strictly. Bailey.

stringentness (strin′jent-nes), n. Stringency.

stringer (string′ėr), n. [< string + -er[1].] 1. One who strings. (a) One who makes or furnishes strings for a bow. Nares. (b) The workman who fits a piano with strings. (c) One who arranges on a string: as, a bead- or pearl-stringer.

2. A device for attaching piano-strings to a ridge cast specially for that purpose on the plate, instead of winding them around tuning wrest-pins inserted in the wrest-pin plank. It is a small hooked steel bar with a screw-threaded shank that is passed through the ridge and then secured by a nut. The wire string is first passed through a hole in the hooked end of the stringer, and then looped once around the hook.

In tuning, the string is tightened by turning the nut on the shank of the stringer.

3. In railway engin., a longitudinal timber on which a rail is fastened, and which rests on transverse sleepers.—4. In ship-building, an inside strake of plank or of plates, secured to the ribs and supporting the ends of the beams; a shelf. See cut under beam, 2 (g).—5. In carp.: (a) A horizontal timber connecting two posts in a framework. (b) Same as string-board.—6. A tie in a truss or a truss-bridge.—7†. A fornicator; a wencher.

A whoreson tyrant! hath been an old stringer in his days, I warrant him!
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, i. 1.

8. A small stick or switch used to string fish on by the gills.

string-gage (string′gāj), n. A gage, like a wire-gage, for measuring the size of a string for a musical instrument.

string-halt (string′hâlt), n. A corruption of spring-halt.

stringiness (string′i-nes), n. Stringy character or condition; fibrousness. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 360.

stringing (string′ing), n. [Verbal n. of string, v.] 1. In silk-manuf., same as glossing.—2. pl. Straight or curved inlaid lines in buhl-work.

stringless (string′les), a. [< string + -less.] Without strings.

His tongue is now a stringless instrument.
Shak., Rich. II., ii. I. 149.

stringman† (string′man), n. A musician who plays upon a stringed instrument.

Some use trumpetts, some shalmes, some small pipes, some are stringemen.
MSS. Hard. No. 610, in Collier's Eng. Dram. Poetry, I. 32.

string-minstrel (string′min″strel), n. A minstrel who accompanies himself on a stringed instrument. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 278.

Stringopidæ (string-gop′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stringops + -idæ.] Same as Strigopidæ.

Stringopinæ (string-gō-pī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Stringops + -inæ.] Same as Strigopinæ.

Stringops, Stringopsis (string′gops, string-gop′sis), n. [NL., < Gr. στρίγξ (στριγγ-) (> L. strix, strig-), a screech-owl (< στρίζειν, cry, squeak), + ὤψ, face, eye.] Same as Strigops.

string-orchestra (string′ôr″kes-trȧ), n. A string-band.

string-organ (string′ôr″gan), n. A musical instrument with a keyboard, characterized by a graduated set of vibrators or free reeds, which are severally connected by rods with a corresponding set of wires or strings in such a way that the vibrations of the reeds are communicated to the appropriate strings. The tones thus secured are sweet and pure, combining some of the advantages of both the harmonium and the pianoforte.

string-pea (string′pē), n. See pea[1], 1.

string-piece (string′pēs), n. A name of various parts in constructions of wood. (a) That part of a flight of stairs which forms its ceiling or soffit. (b) Same as string-board. (c) A long piece of timber, especially one used to support a floor. (d) In a frame, a horizontal connecting-piece. (e) A heavy horizontal piece of squared timber carried along the edge of the front of a wharf or of cribwork, to hold the timbers in place, and strengthen the whole.

string-plate (string′plāt), n. In pianoforte-making, the metal plate which carries the string-block. It was originally made separate, but is now combined in a single casting with the entire frame.

stringwood (string′wůd), n. A small euphorbiaceous tree, Acalypha rubra, formerly of St. Helena, now extinct. It was a handsome tree, named from its pendent spikes of reddish male flowers.

stringy (string′i), a. [< string + -y[1].] 1. Consisting of strings or small threads; fibrous; filamentous: as, a stringy root.

Power by a thousand tough and stringy roots
Fixed to the people's pious nursery-faith.
Coleridge, tr. of Schiller's Piccolomini, iv. 4.

2. Ropy; viscid; gluey; that may be drawn into a thread.

They hoard up glue, whose clinging drops,
Like pitch or bird-lime, hang in stringy ropes.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

3. Sinewy; wiry. [Colloq.]

A stringy little man of about fifty.
Jerrold, Men of Character, Job Pippins, iii.

4. Marked by thread-like flaws on the surface: as, stringy glass; stringy marble. Marble-worker, § 8.

stringy-bark (string′i-bärk), n. 1. One of a class of Australasian gum-trees (Eucalyptus) distinguished by a tenacious fibrous bark. The common stringy-bark is E. obliqua, abounding in Tasmania and southern Australia, in Victoria from its gregarious habit called messmate-tree (which see). A common stringy-bark of Victoria and New South Wales is E. macrorrhyncha, a smaller tree, the wood of which is used for various purposes. Other stringy-barks are E. capitellata, E. eugenioides, E. tetrodonta, E. microcorys (mostly known as tallow-wood), E. piperita (white stringy-bark), and E. amygdalina; the last two are also called peppermint-tree. See cut under Eucalyptus. Also called string-bark.

Split string-bark timber is the usual material for fences in Australia, when procurable. A. L. Gordon.

2. In Australia, a post and rail fence.

strinkle (string′kl), v. t. and i.; pret. and pp. strinkled, ppr. strinkling. [< ME. strinklen, strenklen, strenkelen, freq. of strenken, sprinkle; origin uncertain. The resemblance to sprinkle is appar. accidental; but the word may be a var. of sprinkle, perhaps due to initial conformation with strew.] To strew or sprinkle sparingly. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

strinkling (string′kling), n. [Verbal n. of strinkle, v.] 1. The act of one who strinkles.—2. That which is strinkled; a small quantity.

Men whose brains were seasoned with some strinklings at least of madness and phrensy.
Dr. H. More, On Godliness, xiv. § 11. (Trench.)

striolate (strī′ō-lāt), a. [< NL. striolatus*, < striola*, dim. of L. stria, a furrow: see stria.] In bot., minutely striate.

striolet (strī′ō-let), n. [< NL. striola* (dim. of L. stria) + -et.] In entom., a short stria or impressed line. Kirby.

strip[1] (strip), v.; pret. and pp. stripped or stript, ppr. stripping. [(a) < ME. stripen, streepen, strepen, strupen (pret. strepte, strupte, pp. strept, i-struped), < AS. strȳpan*, strēpan*, in comp. be-strȳpan, rob, plunder, = MD. stroopen, rob, plunder, skin, strip, also bind, strain, etc., D. stroopen = MLG. strōpen, plunder, strip, = OHG. stroufen, MHG. stroufen, G. streifen, strip, skin, flay; (b) cf. D. strijpen, strip (leaves), whip, = LG. strepen, strip (leaves), etc., = MHG. striefen, skin, flay. The two sets of forms (to either of which the ME. stripen, strepen could be referred) are more or less confused with each other, and with the forms of strip[2], stripe; but they appear to be orig. distinct. The two senses 'rob' or 'plunder' and 'skin' are not necessarily connected, though rob and reave supply a partial analogy.] I. trans. 1. To rob; plunder; despoil; deprive; divest; bereave: with of before the thing taken away: as, to strip a man of his possessions; to strip a tree of its fruit.

Wherefore labour they to strip their adversaries of such furniture as doth not help? Hooker, Eccles. Polity, ii. 7.

If such tricks . . . strip you out of your lieutenantry.
Shak., Othello, ii. 1. 173.

Like Thieves, when they have plundered and stript a man, leave him. Wycherley, Ep. Ded. to Plain Dealer.

2. To deprive of covering; remove the skin or outer covering of; skin; peel: with of before the thing removed: as, to strip a beast of its skin; to strip a tree of its bark.

The forward, backward falx, the mare, the turn, the trip,
When stript into their shirts, each other they invade Within a spacious ring. Drayton, Polyolbion, i. 244.

A simple view of the object, as it stands stripped of every relation, in all the nakedness and solitude of metaphysical abstraction. Burke, Rev. in France.

3. To uncover; unsheathe.

On, or strip your sword stark naked.
Shak., T. N., iii. 4. 274.

4. To unrig: as, to strip a ship.—5. To tear off the thread of: said of a screw or bolt: as, the screw was stripped.—6. To pull or tear off, as a covering or some adhering substance: as, to strip the skin from a beast; to strip the bark from a tree; to strip the clothes from a man's back: sometimes emphasized with off.

And he stripped off his clothes also. 1 Sam. xix. 24.

She stripp'd it from her arm.
Shak., Cymbeline, ii. 4. 101.

7. To milk dry; press all the milk out of: as, to strip a cow.—8. In fish-culture, to press or squeeze the ripe roe or milt out of (fishes). After the fishes are stripped the spawn of opposite sexes is mixed together; and after this artificial fecundation the eggs are hatched by artificial methods.

9. In agri., to pare off the surface of in strips, and turn over the strips upon the adjoining surface. Imp. Dict.—10†. To separate; put away: with from.

His . . . unkindness,
That stripp'd her from his benediction.
Shak., Lear, iv. 3. 45.

11. In tobacco-manuf., to separate (the wings of the tobacco-leaf) from the stems. E. H. Knight.—12. In carding, to clean (the teeth of the various cylinders and top flats) from short fibers. E. H. Knight.—13. In file-making, to cross-file and draw-file (a file-blank) in order to bring it to accurate form and to clean the surface preliminary to grinding and cutting.—14. In mining, to remove the overlying soil or detrital material from (any bed or mineral deposit which it is desired to open and work).—15. In gun-making, to turn (the exterior of a gun-barrel) in a lathe in such manner that its longitudinal axis shall coincide with the axis of the bore.—16†. To run past or beyond; outrun; outstrip. See outstrip.

Alate we ran the deer, and through the lawnds
Stripp'd with our nags the lofty frolic bucks.
Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay.

=Syn. 2. To denude, lay bare.

II. intrans. 1. To take off the covering or clothes; uncover; undress.—2. To lose the thread, as a screw, or have the screw stripped off, as a screw-bolt.—3. To issue from a rifled gun without assuming the spiral turn: said of a projectile. Farrow.—4. To come off, as an outer covering (as bark); separate from an underlying surface.—5. To be stripped of milt or spawn. Compare I., 8.

strip[2] (strip), n. [Another form of stripe: see stripe. Strip is to stripe as bit to bite, smit to smite. It is commonly referred to strip[1], v.] 1. A narrow piece, comparatively long: as, a strip of cloth; a strip of territory.—2. An ornamental appendage to women's dress, formerly worn: it is spoken of as worn on the neck and breast.

When a plum'd fan may shade thy chalked face,
And lawny strips thy naked bosom grace.
Bp. Hall, Satires, IV. iv. 51.

A stomacher upon her breast so bare,
For strips and gorget were not then the weare.
Dr. Smith, Penelope and Ulysses, l. 1658.

3. A stripling; a slip. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xlvi.—4. In joinery, a narrow piece of board nailed over a crack or joint between planks.—5. In mining, one of a series of troughs forming a labyrinth, or some similar arrangement, through which the ore flows as it comes from the stamps, and in which the particles are deposited in the order of their equivalence.

strip[3] (strip), n. [Sc. also strype, streape, dim. strypie; perhaps another use of strip[2]. Cf. strippet.] 1. A rill. [Scotch.]—2. Destruction of fences, buildings, timber, etc.; waste. [U. S.]

strip-armor (strip′är″mor), n. Armor, especially for the legs, used in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and showing broad raised strips alternating with sunken bands.

stripe (strip), n. [< ME. stripe (stripe, prob. also strīpe, > E. strip[2]), < MD. strijpe, strepe, D. streep = MLG. stripe, LG. stripe, a stripe or strip, = MHG. G. streif = Dan. stribe (< D.), a stripe, strip; cf. strip[1], strip[2].] 1. A streak of a different color from that of the ground; a long narrow division of something of a different color from the ground: as, a stripe of red on a green ground; hence, any linear variation of color. Compare streak[2], stria, striga.—2. A narrow piece attached to something of a different color or texture: as, the red stripe on the leg of a soldier's trousers.—3. Generally, a strip or narrow piece.

The whole ground that is sown, to the sandy ascent of the mountains, is but a narrow stripe of three quarters of a mile broad. Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 75.

4. A long narrow discolored mark made on flesh by the stroke of a lash or rod; a wale; hence, a stroke made with a lash, whip, rod, strap, or scourge.

Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed.
Deut. xxv. 3.

5†. A blow; a stroke.

Enery one gyue but one suer stripe, & suerly ye iorney is ours. Hall, Chron., Rich. III., an. 3.

But, when he could not quite it, with one stripe
Her lions clawes he from her feete away did wipe.
Spenser, F. Q., V. xi. 27

6. Distinctive color; particular kind or character; hence, distinguishing characteristic: as, a politician of the Republican stripe.

I shall go on: and first in differing stripe
The flood-god's speech thus tune an oaten pipe.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, i. 2.

Various poems are of a democratic, liberal stripe, inspired by the struggle then commencing over Europe.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 256.

Bengal stripe, a kind of cotton cloth woven with colored stripes; gingham.—Cirrus stripe, a long thin stripe of cirrus cloud, generally occurring in parallel rows which, by the effect of perspective, usually appear to be convergent. The motion of these stripes is usually either broadside forward, or oblique to their length.

Cirrus-stripes lie in regions of maximum pressure most often nearly perpendicular to the isobar.
Abercromby, Weather, p. 92.

obie's stripe. Same as Krause's membrane (which see, under membrane).—Spanish stripes. See Spanish.—stars and stripes. See star[1].—To come to hand stripes†, to come to close quarters; fight hand to hand. Brende, tr. of Quintus Curtius, ix.

stripe (strīp), v. t.; pret. and pp. striped, ppr. striping. [< stripe, n.] 1. To make stripes upon; form with lines of different colors; variegate with stripes.—2. To strike; lash. [Rare.]—3†. To thrust.

He has striped his bright brown brand
Out through Clerk Saunders' fair bodye.
Clerk Saunders (Child's Ballads, II. 48).

Droved and striped. See drove[3].

striped (strī'ped or strīpt), a. 1. Having stripes. See streaked. Striped and streaked are synonymous, but differ slightly as stripe and streak do, the former implying greater firmness, evenness, and regularity of the markings indicated: as, a striped zebra; streaked soap.—Striped-barked maple, striped dogwood. Same as striped maple.—Striped dormouse, function, jasper. See the nouns.—Striped grass. Same as ribbon-grass.—Striped maple, mullet, perch, snake, spinebelly, etc. See the nouns.—Striped muscle, striated muscle. See muscular tissue (with cut), under muscular.—Striped squirrel, the chipmunk.

striped-bass (strī'ped-bȧs), n. Roccus lineatus, the bass or rockfish. See cuts under bass and gill. [U. S.] stripetail (strīp'tāl), n. A humming-bird of the genus Eupherusa, of which there are several species.

strip-leaf (strip'lēf), n. Tobacco from which the stalks have been removed before packing.

strip-lights (strip'līts), n. pl. In a theater, rows of lights fastened behind wings.

stripling (strip'ling), n. [Appar. < strip[2] + -ling[1].] A youth in the state of adolescence, or just passing from boyhood to manhood; a lad. Manderille, Travels, p. 278.

And the king said, Enquire thou whose son the stripling is. 1 Sam. xvii. 56.

And now a stripling cherub he appears.
Milton, P. L., iii. 636.

stripper (strip'ėr), n. [< strip[1] + -er[1].] One who strips, or an implement or machine used for stripping. Specifically—(a) In wool-carding: (1) A small card-roll the function of which is to remove or strip the fiber from another roll in a carding-machine. The fiber thus stripped off is delivered to some other carding-roll or worker. In some carding-machines a stripper is used to take the wool from the licker-in and deliver it to the breast-cylinder. (2) An automatic device for lifting the top cards or flats employed in some kinds of wool-carding machines. Also called angle-stripper. (b) A machine for smoothing down old and worn-out files to make them ready for recutting; a file-stripper. (c) An implement used on osier-farms for stripping off willow-bark. One form is an annular scraper through which the willows or switches are drawn after starting the bark sufficiently to allow the wood to pass through the scraper and be grasped by a pair of nippers. The bark thus stripped off is used for medicinal purposes, and the peeled switches are used for baskets and other willow wares.

strippet† (strip'et), n. [< strip[3] + -et.] A small brook; a rivulet. Holinshed, Descrip. of Scotland, x.

stripping (strip'ing), n. [Verbal n. of strip[1], v.] 1. That which is removed by stripping.

Light strippings from the fan-trees.
Browning, Paracelsus, iv.

2. pl. The last milk drawn from a cow, procured by a downward stripping action of the thumb and forefinger.—3. In fish-culture, the operation of pressing ripe spawn or milt out of the live fish.—4. In quarrying and mining, the act of removing the superficial detritus, soil, etc., preparatory to opening a mine or quarry, or to lay bare the surface for examination; also, the material thus removed.

stripping-knife (strip'ing-nīf), n. A knife for separating the blades of sorghum from the stalks to prepare them for grinding. E. H. Knight.

stripping-plate (strip'ing-plāt), n. A fixed plate rigidly attached to a wheel or roller, to scrape or strip off any adhering material, as in paint-grinding mills, clay-crushers, and in some rolling-mills for metals which adhere to rollers.

stripulose (strip'ū-lōs), a. In entom., covered with coarse, decumbent hairs, as the elytra of certain beetles.

stripy (strī'pi), a. Stripe-like; occurring in stripes; marked by streaks or stripes.

Strisores (strī-sō'rēz), n. pl. [NL.; origin obscure.] An artificial order or suborder of birds, including a number of picarian families. It was divided by Cabanis into Macrochires (the humming-birds, swifts, and goatsuckers) and Amphibolæ (the colies, touracos, and hoactzins). [Not in use.]

stritchel (strich'el), n. An assibilated form of strickle.

strive (strīv), v. i.; pret. strove, pp. striven (formerly also strived, Rom. xv. 20), ppr. striving. [< ME. striven, stryven, strifen (orig. a weak verb, pret. strived, afterward conformed to the analogy of strong verbs like drive, pret. drove, with pret. strof, strove, pp. striven), < OF. estriver = Pr. estribar, strive, prob. < OHG. strīban*, in deriv. weak verb, MHG. G. streben = D. streven = MLG. streven, LG. strewen = Sw. sträfva = Dan. stræbe, strive; cf. Icel. strīdha = Sw. strida, strive: see stride, and cf. strife.] 1. To make strenuous effort; endeavor earnestly; labor hard; do one's endeavor; try earnestly and persistently: followed by an infinitive: as, he strove hard to win the prize; to strive to excel; to strive to pay one's way.

Strive to enter in at the strait gate. Luke xiii. 24.

I'll strive . . . to take a nap.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 104.

When there is perfect sincerity—when each man is true to himself—when everyone strives to realize what he thinks the highest rectitude—then must all things prosper.
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 518.

2. To contend; struggle; battle; fight: followed by with, against, or for: as, to strive against fate; to strive for the truth.

First with thi bettir be waar for to stryue, Agens thi felaw noo quarel thou contryue.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 58.

While Iesvs stroue with Sathans strong Temptations.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 1.

Against the Deity 'tis hard to strive.
Prior, Second Hymn of Callimachus.

Striving with love and hate, with life and death,
With hope that lies, and fear that threateneth.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 151.

3. To vie; contend for preëminence: with with.

With the rose colour stroof hire hewe.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 180.

Nor that sweet grove
Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspired Castalian spring, might with this Paradise
Of Eden strive. Milton, P. L., iv. 275.

4. To quarrel or contend with one another; be at variance one with another, or come to be so; be in contention, dispute, or altercation.

Do as adversaries do in law,
Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 2. 279.

5. To oppose by contrariety of qualities: with with.

Now private pity strove with publick hate,
Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate.
Sir J. Denham, On the Earl of Strafford's Trial [and Death.

=Syn. 1. Undertake, Endeavor, etc. (see attempt); seek, aim, toil.—2. To compete, contest.—4. To dispute, wrangle.

strive (strīv), n. [< strive, v.] A striving; an effort; a strife. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

striver (strī'vėr), n. [< strive + -er[1].] One who strives or contends; one who makes efforts of body or mind. Glanville.

striving (strī'ving), n. [Verbal n. of strive, v.] Strenuous or earnest effort; struggle; endeavor.

Failure after long perseverance is much grander than never to have a striving good enough to be called a failure. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xxii.

strivingly (strī'ving-li), adv. In a striving manner; with earnest or persistent efforts or struggles. Imp. Dict.

Strix (striks), n. [NL., < L. strix (strig-), < Gr. στριξ (στριγ-), a screech-owl, perhaps < στρίζειν*, equiv. to τρίζειν, creak, grate, croak.] A Linnean genus of owls. (a) Containing all the Striges. (b) Restricted to the barn-owls: same as Aluco. See cut under barn-owl. (c) Restricted to the wood-owls, like Strix stridula, having the facial disk complete, circular, and no plumicorns. In this sense it is now commonly employed. The common barred owl of the United States is Strix nebulosa. See cut in preceding column.

Barred Owl (Strix nebulosa).

stroak†, stroaking†. Obsolete spellings of stroke[1], stroking.

stroam† (strōm), v. i. [Prob. a var. of stream (as soam[2] for seam[2]), perhaps associated with roam: see stream.] 1†. To wander about idly and vacantly.—2. To walk with long strides. [Prov. Eng.]

He, ejaculating blessings upon his parents, and calling for just vengeance upon himself, stroamed up and down the room. Mme. D'Arblay, Camilla, iii. 10. (Davies.) strob (strob), n. [< Gr. στρόβος, a twisting or whirling round, < στρέφειν, turn, twist. Cf. strobile, strophe.] The angular velocity of one radian per second.

strobic (strob'ik), a. [< strob + -ic.] Appearing to spin.—Strobic circles, a number of circles drawn concentrically which appear to spin round when they are moved about.

strobila (strō-bī'lȧ), n.; pl. strobilæ (-lē). [NL., < Gr. στροβίλη, a plug of lint like a pine-cone, cf. στρόβιλος, anything twisted, a pine-cone, etc.: see strobile.] In zoöl.: (d) In Hydrozoa, a stage in the development of a discophoran, supervening upon the scyphistoma or hydra-tuba stage by the development of ephyræ, and before these become detached from one another and from the stalk upon which they grow. See ephyra, 1, and scyphistoma. (b) In Vermes, a segmented tapeworm; the chain of zooids formed by a scolex and the proglottides which have successively budded from it. (c†) [cap.] [NL.] A supposed genus of acalephs, based on the strobiliform stage of certain hydrozoans. Sars, 1835. (d) [cap.] [NL.] In entom., a genus of lepidopterous insects. Sodoffsky, 1837.

Two Strobilæ or Strobilæ, a, b, of Cyanea capillata, resulting from fission of the hydræ tubæ of the scyphistoma stage. At a tentacles are developed at the base of the lower of the two ephyræ borne upon the stalk of the strobila.

strobilaceous (strob-i-lā'shius), a. [< strobile + -aceous.] 1. Resembling a strobile; strobiliform.—2. Bearing strobiles; strobiliferous.

strobilæ, n. Plural of strobila.

Strobilanthes (streb-i-lan'thēz), n. [NL. (Blume, 1825), so called from the inflorescence, usually cone-like when in bud; < Gr. στρόβιλος, a pine-cone, + ἄνθος, a flower.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Acanthaceæ and tribe Ruellieæ. It is characterized by flowers with acute linear calyx-lobes, a somewhat equally five-lobed corolla with a short or long and slender tube, stamens four and perfect or two perfect and two rudimentary, and two or perhaps rarely three ovules in each of the two ovary-cells. There are about 180 species, natives mostly of India, scantily represented in China, Japan, and Malaysia, with one species in tropical Africa. They are herbs or shrubs, commonly erect, bearing opposite entire or toothed leaves, which are in a few species very unequal in the same pair. Their usually rather large and handsome flowers are often blue or purple, and form dense or interrupted spikes which are terminal or crowded in the axils, and are sometimes replaced by a panicle or cyme. The fruit is an oblong or linear capsule slightly contracted at the base. Several species are cultivated for ornament, sometimes under the name cone-head. S. flaccidifolius yields the room, or maigyee dye, of India, etc. See room[2], and cut under stoma, 2.

strobilate (strob'i-lāt), v. i.; pret. and pp. strobilated, ppr. strobilating. [< strobile + -ate[2].] To form or develop strobiles; be or become a strobile; effect strobilation.

strobilation (strob-i-lā'shon), n. [< strobilate + -ion.] 1. Formation or production of strobiles; metameric division of a scyphistoma or hydra tuba into medusæ.—2. Gemmation of the successive links or joints of a tapeworm; also, the transverse fission of various worms.

strobile (strob'il), n. [= F. strobile = G. strobel, a pine-cone, < LL. strobilus, a pine-cone, < Gr. στρόβιλος, anything twisted, a pine-cone, a top, sea-snail, whirlpool, twist or turn, etc., < στρέφειν, turn, twist, spin.] 1. In bot., a cone (which see, and cuts under Lepidostrobus and pericarp). Also strobilus.

With reference to fructification, the form of Lycopodites Milleri renders it certain that it must have borne strobiles at the ends of its branchlets, or some substitute for these, and not naked spore-cases like those of Psilophyton. Dawson, Geol. Hist. of Plants, p. 101.

2. In zoöl., a strobila. Quain, Med. Dict., p. 1587.

strobiliferous (strob-i-lif'ẹ-rus), a. [< L. strobilus (see strobile, 2) + ferre = E. bear[1].] In zoöl., bearing a strobile or chain of zooids: as, the strobiliferous stage of an acaleph or a worm.

strobiliform (strō-bil'i-fôrm), a. [< L. strobilus (see strobile) + forma, form.] In bot. and zoöl., having the form or character of a strobile.

strobiline (strob'i-lin), a. [< Gr. στροβίλινος, of or like a pine-cone, < στρόβιλος, a pine-cone: see strobila.] Of or pertaining to a strobile or strobiles; strobiliform; strobilaceous.

strobilite† (strob'i-līt), n. [< Gr. στρόβιλος, a pine-cone, + -ite[2].] A fossil pine-cone, or something supposed to be the fruit of a coniferous tree.

strobilization (strob″i-li-zā'shọn), n. [< strobile + -ize + -ation.] Same as strobilation.

The second mode of reproduction [of Scyphistoma], the process of strobilization, begins later.
Claus, Zoöl. (trans.), p. 256.

strobiloid (strob'i-loid), a. [< Gr. στρόβιλος, a pine-cone, + εἶδος, form.] Like a strobile; strobiliform: as, strobiloid gemmation; strobiloid buds. Encye. Brit.

strobilophagous (strob-i-lof'ạ-gus), a. [< NL. Strobilophaga (Vieillot, 1816), a genus of birds (the same as Pinicola, q. v.), < Gr. στρόβιλος, a pine-cone, + φαγεῖν, eat.] Feeding upon pine-cones, as a bird.

Strobilosaura (strō-bī-lō-sâ'rä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στρόβιλος, a pine-cone, + σαῦρα, a lizard.] A former superfamily of Lacertilia, having a fleshy inextensile tongue, eyelids, developed limbs, and aerodont or pleurodont dentition. It included the families Agamidæ and Iguanidæ. Also Strobilosauria.

strobilosauran (strō-bī-lō-sâ'rạn), a. and n. [< Strobilosaura + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Strobilosaura; agamoid or iguanoid.

II. n. A member of the Strobilosaura.

Also strobilosaurian.

strobilure (strob'i-lūr), n. [< NL. Strobilurus.] A lizard of the genus Strobilurus.

Strobilurus (strob-i-lū'rus), n. [NL. (Wiegmann), < Gr. στρόβιλος, a pine-cone, + οὐρά, tail.] A genus of South American iguanoid lizards, having the tail ringed with spinose scales (whence the name). S. torquatus is the Brazilian strobilure.

strobilus (strō-bī'lus), n. Same as strobile, 1.

stroboscope (strob'ō-skōp), n. [< Gr. στρόβος, a twisting or whirling round (< στρέφειν, turn, twist: see strobile), + σκοπεῖν, view.] An instrument used in the study of the periodic motion of a body, as one in rapid revolution or vibration, by illuminating it at frequent intervals (for example, by electric sparks or by a beam of light made intermittent by passing through a moving perforated plate), or again by viewing it through the openings of a revolving disk: also used as a toy. The phenakistoscope and zoëtrope represent one form of stroboscope.

stroboscopic (strob-ō-skop'ik), a. [< stroboscope + -ic.] Pertaining to the stroboscope, to observations made with it, or to the physical principle involved in its use. Nature, XXXIX. 451.

strocalt, strocklet, stroclet, n. See strokle.

strode (strōd). Preterit of stride.

stroft. An obsolete form of the preterit of strive.

stroglet, v. i. A Middle English form of struggle.

stroit, v. t. See stroy.

stroil (stroil), n. [Also stroyl; origin obscure.] The couch- or quitch-grass, Agropyrum repens: applied especially to the white and worm-like roots. See cut under quitch-grass. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

strokalt, n. See strokle.

stroke[1] (strōk), n. [Formerly also stroak; < ME. strook, strok, strak, < AS. strāc (= MHG. G. streich, a stroke), < strīcan (pret. strāc), go, pass along, etc.: see strike, v., and cf. strike, n., strake[2], streak[2], n.] 1. A sweeping movement of a sustained object; the moving of something held or supported through a limited course; in mech., one of a series of alternating continuous movements of something back and forth over or through the same line: as, the strokes of an oar; a stroke of a pen in writing; the strokes of a file, a saw, a piston-rod, or a pump-handle; the length of stroke of a pendulum.

A few strokes of his muscular arms, and he is reached by the launch and swings himself up into her bows.
St. Nicholas, XVII. 834.

In a stroke or two the canoes were away out in the middle of the Scheldt. R. L. Stevenson, Inland Voyage, p. 11.

2. In rowing, specifically—(a) The manner or style of moving the oars or making strokes; the handling of the oars: as, to set the stroke for the race; the stroke was very rapid or exhausting. (b) The guiding-stroke: as, to pull stroke in a race. (c) The rower who sets the stroke; the stroke-oar or strokesman.—3. A line or mark impressed by or as if by a sweeping movement; hence, a part of an impression of any kind appearing as if so made: as, the hair-strokes, curved strokes, or up-and-down strokes of a letter; fine or coarse strokes in an engraving. See cut under type.

Carracci's strength, Correggio's softer line,
Paulo's free stroke, and Titian's warmth divine.
Pope, To Mr. Jervas, l. 38.

4. A throb; a pulsation; a beat.

For twenty strokes of the blood, without a word,
Linger'd that other, staring after him.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

5. In musical instruments with a keyboard, the range of motion of a key.—6. A striking of one body or mass upon another; a sudden impact of an object moved or hurled through space; a blow or concussion, especially one administered or effected by design or in some definite manner: as, a stroke of the fist or of a sword; the strokes of a hammer; the stroke of a bat, a cue, or a mallet against a ball (in various games).

He smote a-boute hym grete strokes bothe on the lefte syde and on the right side. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 118.

How now! what noise? That spirit 's possess'd with haste
That wounds the unresisting postern with these strokes.
Shak., M. for M., iv. 2. 92.

7. A sudden or special effect produced upon an object as if by a striking movement; a result or consequence of the action of some rapidly working or efficient agency or cause: as, a stroke of lightning; a stroke of paralysis (for which the word stroke is often used absolutely, both colloquially and by physicians); the stroke of fate or of death: used in the Bible especially of a divine chastisement or judgment.

Remove thy stroke away from me. Ps. xxxix. 10.

When I did speak of some distressful stroke
That my youth suffer'd. Shak., Othello, i. 3. 157.

She'll make you shrink, as I did, with a stroke
But of her eye, Tigranes.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, i. 1.

A stroke of cruel sunshine on the cliff.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

8. A sound of striking; a resonant concussion; a giving out of sounds by striking: as, the strokes of a bell or a hammer; the clock is on (that is, on the point of giving out) the stroke of twelve.

His hour 's upon the stroke.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, iii. 2.

9. An effective movement, action, or expression; an energetic touch, effort, or exertion; a piece or course of activity: as, a good stroke of business; he will not do a stroke of work; a bold stroke for liberty.

The boldest strokes of poetry, when they are managed artfully, are those which most delight the reader.
Dryden, State of Innocence, Pref.

I am heartily glad to hear Mr. Cook has given the finishing stroke to your fine chapel.
Dr. Plot, in Letters of Eminent Men, I. 74.

Christianity [is] the greatest and happiest stroke ever yet made for human perfection.
M. Arnold, Literature and Dogma, iv.

10. A trait; a feature; a characteristic.

In its main strokes, it accords with the Aristotelean philosophy. Parker, Platonic Philosophy, 2d ed., p. 42.

I have the highest idea of the spiritual and refined sentiments of this reverend gentleman, from this single stroke in his character. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, i. 10.

11. A feat; a thing successfully done; a coup.

To wake the soul by tender strokes of art.
Addison, Cato, Prol.

But the advance in double column against the combined fleets was a stroke of genius as affairs stood.
The Academy, June 28, 1890, p. 437.

12†. Capacity for doing anything; effective ability; skill in action or manipulation.

Neither can any man be entertained as a Soldier that has not a greater stroke than ordinary at eating.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 71.

13†. Moving or controlling power; influence; sway; ascendancy; standing; importance.

They . . . which otherwise have any stroke in the disposition of such preferments. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 81.

In this new state of government Appius was the man that bare the greatest stroke; he ruled the rost and swaied all the rest. Holland, tr. of Livy (ed. 1600), p. 109.

A stroke above, a degree above; of somewhat higher grade or quality than. [Colloq.]

She was a stroke above the other girls. Dickens.

Indoor stroke. See outdoor, 3.—Split stroke. See split.—Stroke of the glottis. See glottis.—To keep stroke, in rowing, to move the oars in unison.

stroke[1] (strōk), v. t.; pret. and pp. stroked, ppr. stroking. [< stroke[1], n.] To act as stroke or strokesman to; handle the stroke-oar for or of. [Recent.]

The Yale crew have lost their stroke. . . . He stroked the university crew to victory in six races.
Harper's Weekly, XXXIII. 571.

stroke[2] (strōk), v. t.; pret. and pp. stroked, ppr. stroking. [Also dial. (Sc.) strake, strait; < ME. stroken, straken, < AS. strācian (= D. strijken = OHG. streichōn, MHG. G. streichen, also freq. streicheln), stroke, causal form of strīcan, etc., go, strike: see strike, and cf. stroke[1]. Cf. Sw. stryka, Dan. stryge, Icel. strjūka, stroke (see stroll).] 1. To pass the hands or an instrument over (something) lightly or with little pressure; rub, or rub down, with a gentle movement in a single direction: an action often performed for soothing or caressing a person or an animal, also for smoothing or polishing an object, etc., and sometimes as a curative process.

She straiked my head, and she kembed my hair.
Alison Gross (Child's Ballads, I. 168).

I . . . seated myself in my easy chair, stirred the fire, and stroked my cat. Steele, Tatler, No. 266.

And then another pause; and then,
Stroking his beard, he said again.
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Second Interlude.

2. Hence, figuratively, to soothe; flatter; pacify; encourage. [Now prov. Eng.]

Such smooth soft language as each line Might stroake an angry god, or stay Jove's thunder. Carew, To my Rival.

3. To affect in some way by a rubbing action.

What a slovenly little villian art thou!
Why dost thou not stroke up thy hair?
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, v. 5.

The ancient Chinese were very proud of the Hair of their Heads, letting it grow very long, and stroking it back with their Hands curiously. Dampier, Voyages, I. 407.

4. In masonry, to work the face of (a stone) in such a manner as to produce a sort of fluted surface.—To stroke the wrong way (of the hair, expressed or implied), to go against the grain of; ruffle or annoy, as by opposition: from the irritating effect on an animal, especially a cat, of rubbing up the fur by stroking it in the direction opposite to the way it lies.

stroke[2] (strōk), n. [< stroke[2], v.] An act of stroking; a stroking caress.

His white-man'd steeds, that bow'd beneath the yoke,
He cheer'd to courage with a gentle stroke.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xii. 108.

stroke[3]†. An obsolete form of the preterit of strike.

stroke-gear (strōk'gēr), n. In machine-tools having a reciprocating cutter, that part of the gearing by which the forward and backward strokes of the tool-slide are effected—the return stroke being usually made with much greater velocity than the cutting stroke.

stroke-oar (strōk'ōr), n. 1. The aftermost oar in a rowboat, to the strokes of which those of the other oars must be conformed.—2. The oarsman who handles the stroke-oar; the strokesman.

stroke-oarsman (strōk'ōrz'man), n. One who handles the stroke-oar. In a whale-boat the stroke-oarsman is usually the lightest man of the crew. Also called after-oarsman.

stroker (strō'kėr), n. [< stroke[2] + -er[1].] 1. One who strokes; formerly, one who practised stroking as a method of cure.

Cures worked by Greatrix the stroker.
Warburton, Works, X. xxvii.

2†. A soothing flatterer; a fawning sycophant. [Rare.]

What you please, Dame Polish,
My lady's stroker.
B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady, iv. 1.

3. In printing, a form of wood or bone paper-folder with which the layer-on or feeder strokes or brings forward separate sheets of paper to the grippers of a printing-machine. [Eng.]—Stroker in, in printing, the workman who strokes or combs separate sheets of paper to the grippers of a printing-machine. [Eng.]

strokesman (strōks'man), n.; pl. strokesmen (-men). [< stroke's, poss. of stroke, + man.] A stroke-oar or stroke.

stroking (strō'king), n. [Formerly also stroaking; verbal n. of stroke[2], v.] 1. The act of passing the hand over a surface.—2. pl. The last milk drawn from a cow, pressed out by gentle stroking; strippings. [Prov. Eng.]

The cook entertained me with choice bits, the dairy-maid with stroakings.
Smollett, Roderick Random, xl. (Davies.)

strokle†, n. [Also strocle, strockle, strokal, strocal; appar. a var., simulating stroke, of strickle.] A glassmakers' shovel with recurved edges, for handling sand and other materials. Blount, Glossographia, p. 615.

stroll (strōl), v. i. [Early mod. E. also strowl, stroule, stroyle; appar. contracted from a ME. form strouklen,* < MD. struyckelen, D. struikelen, stumble, = MHG. strücheln, G. straucheln, stumble, G. dial. (Swiss) strolchen, rove, freq. of OHG. strūhhōn, MHG. strūchen, stumble; = Icel. strjūka, stroke, rub, brush, flog, etc., go off, stray, = Dan. stryge = Sw. stryka, stroke, stroll, ramble; cf. Sw. stryker, dial. strykel, a stroller. Akin to struggle, q. v., but prob. not to straggle, which, with strake[1], etc., belongs to AS. strīcan, ME. striken, go, proceed, wander, = G. streichen, go (> streicher, a stroller), etc.: see strike, strake[1], straggle, etc., struggle.] 1. To saunter from point to point on foot; walk leisurely as inclination directs; ramble, especially for some particular purpose or aim.

> An elderly dame dwells in my neighborhood, . . . in whose odorous herb garden I love to stroll sometimes, gathering simples. Thoreau, Walden, p. 149.
>
> There was something soothing, something pleasant, in thus strolling along the path by the flowing river. Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xxxix.

2. To rove from place to place; go about deviously as chance or opportunity offers; roam; wander; tramp: used especially of persons who lead a roaming life in search of occupation or subsistence.

> In 1703, "3 strowling Gipsies are ordered down to Huntington to be Tryed for Robbing two Women." Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 222.
>
> He turned strolling player; but his force and figure were ill suited to the boards. Macaulay, Goldsmith.

3. To turn in different directions; veer or glance about; rove, as the eyes. [Rare.]

> The am'rous Eyes thus always go
> A-stroling for their Friends below.
> Prior, Alma, ii.

=Syn. 1 and 2. Saunter, Wander, etc. See ramble, v.

stroll (strōl), n. [< stroll, v.] 1. A wandering along or about; a leisurely walk; a saunter.

> Bright days, when a stroll is my afternoon wont,
> And I meet all the people I do know or don't.
> F. Locker, Piccadilly.

2†. A stroller.

> We'll entertain no mountebanking stroll,
> No piper, fiddler, tumbler through small hoops,
> No ape-carrier, baboon-bearer.
> Middleton and Rowley, Spanish Gypsy, ii. 1.

3. A narrow strip of land. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stroller (strō'lėr), n. [< stroll + -er[1].] One who strolls; a wanderer; a straggler; a vagabond; especially, an itinerant performer.

> When strollers durst presume to pick your purse.
> Dryden, Fifth Prol. to Univ. of Oxford.
>
> He had been stolen away when he was a child by a gipsy, and had rambled ever since with a gang of those strollers up and down several parts of Europe.
> Addison, Sir Roger and the Gipsies.
>
> We allow no strollers or vagrants here.
> Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxxii.

strom[1]†, n. A Middle English form of stream.

strom[2] (strom), n. [Origin obscure.] An instrument to keep the malt in the vat. Bailey, 1731. [Prov. Eng.]

stroma (strō'mą), n.; pl. stromata (-mą-tą). [NL., < L. stroma, < Gr. στρῶμα (στρωματ-), a covering, a coverlet, < στρωννύναι, στορεννύναι, spread, spread out, strew: see strew, stratum.] 1. In anat.: The sustentacular tissue or substance of a part or organ, usually of connective tissue.—2. In bot.: (a) In fungi, a variously shaped more or less continuous layer of cellular tissue, in which perithecia or other organs of fructification are immersed. Sometimes called receptacle. See cut under ergot. (b) In vegetable physiology, the solid matter remaining after all the fluid has been expressed from protoplasm. Goodale.—Cancer stroma, the interlacing connective-tissue framework containing the alveoli of cancer-cells.—Intertubular stroma, the connective-tissue framework which supports the tubules of the kidney, and which contains the blood-vessels, lymphatics, nerves, etc.—Stroma fibrin, fibrin formed from the stroma of the blood-corpuscles.—Stroma of red blood-corpuscles, that part of those corpuscles which remains after the hemoglobin is removed.—Stroma of the ovary, the connective tissue of the ovary. Formerly the ova were supposed to originate in this stroma. They are, however, derived from the investing cell-layer or germ-epithelium of the ovary, from which multitudinous cells, some of them to become ova, penetrate the stroma.

Stromateidæ (strō-mą-tē'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stromateus + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Stromateus, related to the scombroids and carangoids. They have large dentigerous or sacciform gill-rakers on the last branchial arch, extending into the esophagus; a single long dorsal fin with a few spines in front; and the ventrals, when present, generally under the pectorals, but in the typical forms more or less reduced, or absent. They are small fishes of most warm seas, of about 6 genera and 25 species, divided into Stromateinæ and Centrolophinæ. Also Stromateina, as a division of Scombridæ.

stromateine (strō-mat'ē-in), a. and n. [< Stromateus + -ine[1].] I. a. Of, or having characters of, the Stromateidæ.

II. n. A fish of the family Stromateidæ.

stromateoid (strō-mat'ē-oid), a. and n. [< Stromateus + -oid.] Same as stromateine.

Stromateoides (strō″mą-tē-oi'dēz), n. [NL. (Bleeker, 1857), < Stromateus + Gr. εἶδος, form.] A genus of stromateoid fishes, with restricted branchial apertures. S. sinensis is the white and S. cinercus the gray pomfret. See cut under pomfret.

Stromateus (strō-mat'ē-us), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1748), < Gr. στρωματεύς, a coverlet, a bag for bedclothes (in pl. patchwork), a kind of fish, < στρῶμα (στρωματ-), a coverlet or spread (in allusion to the color of the typical species, supposed to resemble that of a spread or carpet): see stroma.] The typical genus of the family Stromateidæ, in which the ventral fins are lost in the adult, the caudal peduncle is not keeled, and the gill-membranes are free from the isthmus. There are a number of species, of tropical to warm temperate seas. One of the best-known is S. triacanthus of the Atlantic coast of the United States, variously called butter-fish, harvest-fish, and dollar-fish. (See cut under butter-fish.) A very similar species is S. alepidotus; another is S. simillimus of the Californian coast, highly esteemed as a food-fish, known in the markets of San Francisco as the pompano. See pompano, 2.

stromatic[1] (strō-mat'ik), a. [< stroma(t-) + -ic.] In anat., physiol., and bot., of the nature of a stroma; resembling a stroma; stromatous.

stromatic[2] (strō-mat'ik), a. [< Gr. Στρώματα, a false reading for Στρωματεῖς, i. e. 'patchwork,' 'miscellany,' the title of a work by Clement of Alexandria; pl. of στρωματεύς, a coverlet: see Stromateus.] Miscellaneous; composed of different kinds. [Rare.]

stromatiform (strō'mą-ti-fôrm), a. [< NL. stroma(t-), q. v., + L. forma, form.] In bot., having the form of a stroma.

Stromatopora (strō-mą-top'ō-rą), n. [NL. (De Blainville, 1830), < Gr. στρῶμα(τ-), a covering, + πόρος, pore.] 1. The typical genus of Stromatoporidæ.—2. [l. c.] A member of this genus.

Stromatoporidæ (strō″mą-tō-por'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stromatopora + -idæ.] A family of hydrocoralline corals, typified by the genus Stromatopora. They are all of Paleozoic age. Also Stromatoporoidea.

stromatoporoid (strō-mą-top'ō-roid), a. and n. [< Stromatopora + -oid.] I. a. Pertaining to the Stromatoporidæ, or having their characters.

II. n. A member of the Stromatoporidæ.

stromatous (strō'mą-tus), a. [< stroma(t-) + -ous.] 1. Of or pertaining to stroma.—2. In bot., bearing or producing a stroma.

stromb (strom), n. [< NL. Strombus.] A conch of the family Strombidæ, and especially of the genus Strombus; a wing-shell; a fountain-shell. The best-known stromb is S. gigas, whose delicate pink shell is used for cameo-cutting, and also ground up in the manufacture of some fine kinds of porcelain, for which purposes it is said that 300,000 were imported into England in one year from the Bahamas. Another well-known species is S. pugilis, so called from the red, as if bloody, mouth. See also cut under wing-shell.

A Wing-shell or Stromb (Strombus pugilis).

Strombidæ (strom'bi-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Strombus + -idæ.] A family of tænioglossate siphonostomatous pectinibranchiate gastropods, typified by the genus Strombus; the strombs or wing-shells. The animal has an elongate annulated muzzle. The eyes are highly developed, at the ends of thick elongated peduncles, from which the inner sides of the tentacles, when present, originate. The foot is compressed, rather small, and adapted for leaping. The shell is mostly obconic, with a rather short conic spire and an elongate and narrow aperture; a horny claw-like operculum, serrated along the outer margin, is generally developed. Numerous species live in tropical seas, and some of them attain a large size. The largest is Strombus gigas, the giant conch of the West Indies, much used for cameos, and also as an ornament, especially around fountains, whence it is known as the fountain-shell. The family is divided into Strombinæ and Seraphyinæ. See cuts under Rostellaria, scorpion-shell, and stromb.

Strombidium (strom-bid'i-um), n. [NL. (Claparède and Lachmann, 1859), < Strombus + Gr. dim. -ιδιον.] A genus of peritrichous ciliate infusorians, of the family Halteriidæ. These interesting animalcules inhabit both salt and fresh water, and, though there are no springing-hairs, they are noted for such activity and energy of movement that their examination is difficult. They are free-swimming, of globose or turbinate form, with eccentric terminal oral aperture associated with a spiral wreath of erect cirri; the endoplast and contractile vacuole are conspicuous. Numerous species are described.

strombiform (strom'bi-fôrm), a. [< NL. strombus + L. forma, form.] Shaped like a wing-shell; having the form of a stromb; belonging or related to the Strombidæ.

strombine (strom'bin), a. and n. [< Strombus + -ine[1].] I. a. Of, or having characters of, the Strombidæ; stromboid.

II. n. A stromboid; a gastropod of the family Strombidæ.

strombite (strom'bīt), n. [< stromb + -ite[2].] A fossil stromb, or some similar shell.

stromboid (strom'boid), a. and n. [< stromb + -oid.] I. a. Resembling a stromb; pertaining or related to the Strombidæ; strombiform.

II. n. A strombine or stromb.

strombuliform (strom'bū-li-fôrm), a. [< NL. strombulus,* dim. of strombus,* a top (see Strombus), + L. forma, form.] 1. In geol., formed like a top.—2. In bot., twisted or coiled into the form of a screw or helix, as the legumes of the screw-bean, some species of Medicago, etc.

Strombuliform Pods.
a, Of Medicago orbiculata. b, Of Medicago apiculata. c, Of Medicago ciliaris.

Strombus (strom'bus), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1758), < L. strombus, a kind of spiral snail, < Gr. στρόμβος, a top, a pine-cone, a snail, anything twisted or whorled, < στρέφειν, twist, turn: see strobile.] The typical genus of Strombidæ, formerly conterminous with the family, now restricted to such species as the West Indian giant stromb, S. gigas; the wing-shells, fountain-shells, or strombs. They are active, predatory, and carnivorous marine shells, much used for ornamental purposes. Also called Gallus. See cut at stromb.

stromeyerine (strō'mī-ėr-in), n. [As stromeyer(ite) + -ine[2].] Same as stromeyerite.

stromeyerite (strō'mī-ėr-it), n. [Named after Fr. Stromeyer, a German chemist and mineralogist (died 1835).] A sulphid of silver and copper occurring in crystals near chalcocite in form, also massive. It has a dark steel-gray color and metallic luster.

strommell†, n. An obsolete form of strammel.

strond†, n. An obsolete form of strand[1].

strong[1] (strông), a. [Se. strang; < ME. strong, stronge, strang (compar. strenger, strengere), < AS. strang, strong (compar. strengra, strængra), strong, mighty, = OS. strang = MD. strenge, strengh, D. streng = MLG. LG. strenge = OHG. strang, strangi, strengi, MHG. strenge, G. streng, hard, rigid, severe, strict, = Icel. strangr = Sw. sträng = Dan. streng, strong; connections uncertain; perhaps related to string. Cf. L. stringere, draw tight (see stringent, strain[1], strict); Gr. στραγγός, tightly twisted, στραγγάλη, a halter, etc. (see strangle). No connection with stark[1]. Hence strength, strengthen, etc.] 1. Possessing, exerting, or imparting force or energy, physical or moral, in a general sense; powerful; forcible; effective; capable; able to do or to suffer.

> Ther-fore worschip god, bothe olde and 3ong,
> To be in body and soule yliche stronge.
> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 304.
>
> What can be strong enough to resist those charms which neither innocency, nor wisdom, nor power are sufficient security against? Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. iii.
>
> Know how sublime a thing it is
> To suffer and be strong.
> Longfellow, Light of Stars.
>
> When a man is able to rise above himself, only then he becomes truly strong. J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 368.

2. Having vital force or capability; able to act effectively; endued with physical vigor; used absolutely, physically powerful; robust; muscular: as, a strong body; a strong hand or arm.

> And he was a moche knyght, and a stronge oute of mesure. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 164.
>
> Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness. Judges xiv. 14.
>
> Of two persons who have had, the one the education of a gentleman, the other that of a common sailor, the first may be the stronger, at the same time that the other is the hardier. Bentham, Introd. to Principles of Morals, vi. 9.

3. Having means for exerting or resisting force; provided with adequate instrumentalities; powerful in resources or in constituent parts: as, a strong king or kingdom; a strong army; a strong corporation or mercantile house.

Whan the kynge Brangore was come to Eastrangore, his stronge place, . . . he dide it stuffe with knyghtes and vitalle. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 247.

He grewe stronge, and in shorte space got to himselfe a greate name. Spenser, State of Ireland.

At last, nigh tir'd, a castle strong we fand,
The utmost border of my native land.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso's Godfrey of Boulogne, iv. 55.

4. Having or consisting of a large number, absolutely or relatively; numerically forcible or well provided: usually implying also some special element of strength in some or all of the units composing the number: as, a strong detachment of troops; a strong political party.

Hym thoughte he was nat able for to speede,
For she was strong of freendes.
Chaucer, Doctor's Tale, l. 135.

5. Of specified numerical force; having so many constituent members: applied to armies, and sometimes to other bodies of men, or to animals.

First demand of him how many horse the duke is strong. Shak., All's Well, iv. 3. 149.

The rebels at Drumclog were eight or nine thousand strong. Swift, Mem. of Capt. Creichton.

6. Exerting or capable of characteristic force; powerful in the kind or mode of action implied; specifically, forceful or efficient: as, a strong painter or actor; a strong voice; strong eyes.

His mother was a witch, and one so strong
That could control the moon, make flows and ebbs.
Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 269.

I was stronger in prophecy than in criticism. Dryden.

A solitary shriek, the bubbling cry
Of some strong swimmer in his agony.
Byron, Don Juan, ii. 53.

7. Vigorous in exercise or operation; acting in a firm or determined manner; not feeble or vacillating: used of the mind or any of its faculties: as, a strong-minded person; a strong intellect, memory, judgment, etc.

Divert strong minds to the course of altering things. Shak., Sonnets, cxv.

8. Possessing moral or mental force; firm in character, knowledge, conviction, influence, or the like; not easily turned, resisted, or refuted: as, a strong candidate; a strong reasoner.

Pray that ye may be strong in honesty,
As in the use of arms.
Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 3.

They were very diligent, plain, and serious; strong in Scripture, and bold in profession.
Penn, Rise and Progress of Quakers, i.

He wants to show the party that he too can be a "Strong Man" on a pinch. The Nation, XXX. 1.

9. Marked by force or vigor of performance; done, executed, produced, or uttered energetically; effected by earnest action or effort; strenuous; stressful; urgent.

Anthony wered with strong hesinesse
The Erle of Faborugh.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 2495.

When he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears. Heb. v. 7.

The ears of the people they have therefore filled with strong clamour. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iv. 4.

10. Marked by force of action or movement; vigorously impelled or sent forth; impetuous; violent; vehement: as, a strong wind; strong tides; strong breathing.

If, Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 835.

When they came to the great river, they were carried over by one Ludham, . . . the stream being very strong. Winthrop, in New England's Memorial, p. 170, note.

11. Firm in substance or texture; capable of resisting physical force; not weak; not easily broken, rent, or destroyed: said of material things.

His bones are as strong pieces of brass. Job xl. 18.

The graven flowers that wreathe the sword
Make not the blade less strong.
Whittier, My Psalm.

12. Solid.

Ye . . . are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat [solid food, R. V.]. Heb. v. 12.

13. Firmly fixed or constituted; having inherent force or validity; hard to affect or overcome; sound; stable; settled: as, a strong constitution or organization (of body, mind, government, etc.); strong arguments, reasons, or evidence; to take a strong hold, or get a strong advantage; a strong project.

In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence. Prov. xiv. 26.

Ye strong foundations of the earth. Micah vi. 2.

14. Vigorous or extreme in kind; specifically, distinct or exceptional; bold; striking; effective; forceful; conspicuous: as, strong invectives; a strong attraction.

And Merlyn, that full of stronge arte was, yede hem aboute, and cleped the kynge as they weren sette, and shewed hym the voyde place. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 60.

On our ground of grief
Rise by day in strong relief
The prophecies of better things.
Whittier, Astræa at the Capitol.

15. Intense or thorough in quality; having a high degree of the proper specific character; not mild, weak, dull, insipid, or ineffective: as, strong drink; strong tea; a strong infusion; strong lights and shadows; a strong color.

So is it fulle of Dragounes, of Serpentes, and of other venymous Bestes that no man dar not passe, but zif it be strong Wyntre. Mandeville, Travels, p. 266.

This is strong physic, signior,
And never will agree with my weak body.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, iii. 2.

By mixing such powders we are not to expect strong and full white, such as is that of paper.
Newton, Opticks, I. ii. 5.

16. Intense or intensified in degree; existing in great amount or force; forcibly impressive to feeling or sensation: used of either active or passive qualities: as, strong love or devotion; a strong flavor or scent.

Is it possible . . . you should fall into so strong a liking with old Sir Rowland's youngest son?
Shak., As you Like it, i. 3. 28.

Nor was her heart so small
That one strong passion should engross it all.
Crabbe, Works, IV. 83.

17. Forcibly offensive in quality; repellent to sense or sensation; ill-tasting or ill-smelling; rank; rancid; tainted.

They say poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know we have strong arms too. Shak., Cor., i. 1. 61.

18. In eom., specifically, firm; favorable to gain; steadily good or advancing; active; profitable: as, a strong market; strong prices; to do a strong business.—19. In gram., inflected—(a) as a verb, by a change of the radical vowel instead of by regular syllabic addition: opposed to weak: thus, find (found), speak (spake or spoke, spoken), strike (struck, stricken), and swim (swam, swum) are strong verbs; (b) as a noun or an adjective, with fuller retention of older case-distinctions: thus, German Buch is called of strong declension, and Held of weak. Strong and weak are purely fanciful terms, introduced by J. Grimm; they belong properly to Germanic words alone, but are occasionally applied to similar phenomena in other languages also.

20. In photog., same as dense, 3.—Strong arm or hand, figurstively, great power or force; forcible or violent means; overpowering vigor; the force of arms: as, to overcome opposition with a strong arm; "a strong hand," Ex. vi. 1.

It was their meaning to take what they needed by strong-hand. Raleigh.

Strong box, a strongly made case or chest for the preservation of money and other things of great value in small compass.—Strong double refraction, in optics. See refraction, 1.—Strong drink, election, place. See the nouns.—Strong faints. See faint, 2.—Strong room, a fire-proof and burglar-proof apartment in which to keep valuables.—Strong water. (a) Distilled spirit of any sort: generally in the plural: as, a draught of strong waters.

In the time of our fast, two of our landmen pierced a rundlet of strong water, and stole some of it.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 4.

(b) Aqua fortis, or some other strong biting acid.

Metals themselves do receive in readily strong-waters; and strong-waters do readily pierce into metals and stones; and . . . [some] strong-waters will touch upon gold, that will not touch upon silver. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 800.

=Syn. 2. Sturdy, Stout, etc. (see robust); hardy, sinewy.—3. Potent.—11. Tenacious, tough.—13. Impregnable.—14. Vivid.—15. Pungent, sharp.

strong[1] (strông), adv. [< ME. strong, stronge; < strong[1], a.] Strongly; very; exceedingly. [Obsolete except in the slang phrase below.]

I will to-morowe go to an Abbey, and feyne me stronge sike. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 52.

To go or come it strong, to do a thing with energy and perseverance. [Slang.]

strong[2]†. An obsolete past participle of string. Spenser, Virgil's Gnat, l. 16.

strong-back (strông'bak), n. Naut.: (a) A piece of wood or iron over the windlass, to trice the chain up to when the windlass is to be used for any purpose. (b) A spar across beat-davits, to which the boat is secured at sea.

strongbark (strông'bärk), n. A tree or shrub of the boraginaceous genus Bourreria, which belongs to the West Indies and tropical America. One species, B. Havanensis, which extends into Florida, is a small tree or shrub with a hard, fine, and beautiful wood of a brown color streaked with orange; the larger trees, however, are hollow and defective.

strong-barred† (strông'bärd), a. Strongly barred; tightly fastened. Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 370.

strong-based† (strông'bāst), a. Strongly or firmly based. Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 46.

strong-besieged† (strông'bē-sējd″), a. Strongly besieged. Shak., Lucrece, l. 1429.

strong-bonded† (strông'bon″ded), a. Strongly bound or secured; made strongly binding. Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 279. [Rare.]

strong-fixed† (strông'fikst), a. Strongly fixed; firmly established. Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 102.

stronghand† (strông'hand'), n. Violence; force; power: a contraction of the phrase by the strong hand. See strong arm or hand, under strong.

stronghold (strông'hōld), n. A fastness; a fort; a fortified place; a place or position of security: often used figuratively, and formerly as two words.

David took the strong hold of Zion. 2 Sam. v. 7.

strong-knit (strông'nit), a. Strongly or well knit; firmly joined or compacted.

For strokes received, and many blows repaid,
Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 4.

strongle (strong'gl), n. A strongyle. T. S. Cobbold.

strongly (strông'li), adv. [< ME. strongly, strongely, stronglieche, stranglieche; < AS. stranglīce, strong, < stranglic, strong, < strang, strong: see strong[1] and -ly[2].] In a strong manner, in any sense of the word strong.

That Cyter [Cassay] is strongliche enhabyted with peple, in so moche that in on House men maken 10 Housholdes. Mandeville, Travels, p. 209.

Fly, fly; delay
Doth oft the strongliest founded Plots betray.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 44.

strongman's-weed (strông'manz-wēd), n. See Petiveria.

strong-minded (strông'mīn″ded), a. 1. Having a strong or vigorous mind.—2. Not in accordance with the female character or manners; unfeminine: applied ironically to women claiming the privileges and opportunities of men.

strong-mindedness (strông'mīn″ded-nes), n. The character or quality of being strong-minded, especially as used of women.

strong-tempered† (strông'tem″pērd), a. Made strong by tempering; strongly tempered. Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 111.

strongylate (stron'ji-lāt), a. [< strongyle + -ate[1].] Having the character of a strongyle, as a sponge-spicule; simply spicular, with blunt ends. Sollas.

strongyle (stron'jil), n. [< NL. strongylus (see Strongylus), < Gr. στρογγύλος, round, spherical, < *στράγγειν, draw tight: see strangle.] 1. A spicule of the monaxon biradiate type, with each end rounded off; a strongylate sponge-spicule. It is simply a rhabdus whose two ends are blunt instead of sharp. A strongyle blunt at one end and sharp at the other becomes a strongyloxea. Sollas.

2. In Vermes, a nematoid or threadworm of the genus Strongylus in a broad sense; a strongylid. There are many species. See Strongylidæ.

Strongylia (stron-jil'i-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στρογγύλος, round, spherical: see strongyle.] A suborder of chilognath myriapods, with manducatory mouth, and sexual organs opening in the anterior part of the body. It includes the families Polyxenidæ, Polydesmidæ, Iulidæ, and Lysiopetalidæ. H. C. Wood, 1865.

strongylid (stron'ji-lid), a. and n. Same as strongyloid.

Strongylidæ (stron-jil'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Strongylus + -idæ.] A family of endoparasitic nematoid worms, typified by the genus Strongylus, and containing about 10 other genera. They are formidable parasites, sometimes attaining a length of 3 feet, though usually much smaller than this. They are cylindrical, and more or less elongated and filiform; the mouth is oval, circular, or triangular, and armed or unarmed; and the tail of the male is furnished with a bursa or pouch, or a pair of membranous lobes, and usually a pair of protruding spicules. The female is commonly larger than the male. Strongylus bronchialis is the lung-strongle of man: the female is an inch long, the male half that size. S. armatus infests the horse; S. micrurus and S. contortus are found in ruminants, as cattle and sheep. Eustrongylus gigas is the giant strongyle of the kidney, the largest known endoparasite of this kind, the male being about a foot long, the female a yard or more. Strongylus quadridentatus or Sclerostoma duodenale infests the human intestine, and a similar strongyle, Syngamus trachealis, causes the gapes in poultry, occurring in great numbers in the air-passages.

Strongylocentrotus (stron″ji-lō-sen-trō'tus), n. [NL. (Brandt), < Gr. στρογγύλος, round, spherical, + κεντρωτός, < κέντρον, point, center: see center[1].] A genus of regular sea-urchins, Common New England Sea-urchin (Strongylocentrotus drobachiensis).

of the family Echinidæ. One of the commonest and best-known sea-urchins of the Atlantic coast of the United States is S. drobachiensis.

strongyloid (stron'ji-loid), a. and n. [< strongyle + -oid.] I. a. Like a strongyle; related to the genus Strongylus; belonging to the Strongylidæ.

II. n. A strongyle, or some similar nematoid.

strongyloxea (stron-ji-lok'sē-ä), n.; pl. strongyloxeæ (-ē). [NL., < Gr. στρογγύλος, round, + ὀξύς, sharp.] A strongyle blunt at one end and sharp at the other; a strongyloxeate sponge-spicule. Encye. Brit., XXII. 417.

strongyloxeate (stron-ji-lok'sē-āt), a. [As strongyloxea + -ate[1].] Blunt at one end and sharp at the other, as a sponge-spicule of the rhabdus type; having the character of a strongyloxea. Sollas.

Strongylus (stron'ji-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. στρογγύλος, round, spherical, < στράγγειν*, draw tight, squeeze: see strangle.] 1. The typical genus of the family Strongylidæ. Müller, 1780.—2. [l. c.; pl. strongyli (-lī).] In sponges, a strongyle.

strontia (stron'shi-ä), n. [NL. (Klaproth), < strontium, q. v.] The monoxid of strontium, SrO, an alkaline earth which when pure is an infusible grayish-white powder having an acrid burning taste. It is soluble in water with evolution of heat, slaking into a hydrate, $Sr(OH)_2$, which is quite soluble and deposits from its solution crystals of the hydrate containing eight molecules of water of crystallization. The hydrate has a strong alkaline reaction, and is more caustic than lime, but less so than the alkalis. Strontia does not occur native, but is prepared by igniting the carbonate, the mineral strontianite.

strontian (stron'shi-an), n. and a. [< strontium + -an.] I. n. Native strontium carbonate; strontianite; hence, also, strontia, and sometimes strontium. [Indefinite and rare.]

II. a. Pertaining to or containing strontia or strontium.—Strontian yellow, a color formed by adding potassium chromate to a solution of a strontium salt.

strontianiferous (stron'shi-a-nif'e-rus), a. [< strontian + -i-ferous.] Containing strontian. Philos. Mag., 5th ser., XXV. 238.

strontianite (stron'shi-an-īt), n. [< strontian + -ite[2].] Native strontium carbonate, a mineral that occurs massive, fibrous, stellated, and rarely in orthorhombic crystals resembling those of aragonite in form. It varies in color from white to yellow and pale green. It was first discovered in the lead-mines of Strontian, in Argyllshire, Scotland.

strontic (stron'tik), a. [< strontia + -ic.] Same as strontitic.

strontites (stron-tī'tēz), n. [NL., < stronti(um) + -ites.] Same as strontia: so named by Dr. Hope, who first obtained this earth from strontianite, or native carbonate of strontium.

strontitic (stron-tit'ik), a. [< NL. strontites + -ic.] Pertaining to or derived from strontia or strontium.

strontium (stron'shi-um), n. [NL., < Strontian, in Argyllshire, Scotland.] Chemical symbol, Sr; atomic weight, 87.37; specific gravity, 2.54. A dark-yellow metal, less lustrous than barium, malleable, and fusible at a red heat. When heated in air, it burns with a bright flame to the oxid. It decomposes water at ordinary temperatures, evolving hydrogen, and uniting with the oxygen of the water to form the oxid strontia. It does not occur native. The chief strontium minerals are the carbonate (strontianite) and the sulphate (celestine). Strontium also occurs as a silicate in the mineral brewsterite. It has been detected in the waters of various mineral springs, as well as in seawater, and in the ashes of some marine plants. Salts of strontium are chiefly used in pyrotechny, imparting an intense red color to flames.

strook† (strůk). An old preterit of strike. Pope, Iliad, xxi. 498.

stroot (strůt), v. An obsolete or dialectal form of strut[1].

strop (strop), n. [The older and more correct form of strap; < ME. strop, strope, < AS. stropp (= D. strop, etc.), < L. stroppus, struppus, a strap: see strap.] 1. Same as strap. Specifically—2. A strap or strip of leather, thick canvas, or other flexible material, suitably prepared for smoothing the edge of a razor drawn over it while it is attached by one end and held in the hand by the other; hence also, by extension, a two-sided or four-sided piece of wood, with a handle and a casing, having strips of leather of differing surfaces affixed to two sides, and the two other sides, when (as more commonly) present, covered with coarser and finer emery or other abrasive powder for use in honing a razor.—3. Naut., same as strap, 1 (a).—4. In rope-making, a rope with an eye at each end, used in twisting strands.

strop (strop), v. t.; pret. and pp. stropped, ppr. stropping. [< strop, n.] To sharpen on or as if on a strop or strap.

Scarce are the grsy-haired sires who strop their razors on the family Bible, and doze in the chimney-corner.
C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 2.

strope (strōp), n. A dialectal form of strap.

strophanthin (strō-fan'thin), n. [< Strophanthus + -in[2].] An active poisonous principle, said to be neither an alkaloid nor a glucoside, found in the seeds of Strophanthus hispidus.

Strophanthus (strō-fan'thus), n. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1801), so called from the twisted and tailed lobes of the corolla; < Gr. στρόφος, a twisted band, a cord (< στρέφειν, turn, twist), + ἄνθος, flower.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Apocynaceæ, tribe Echitideæ, and subtribe Nerieæ. It is characterized by a glandular calyx; a funnel-shaped corolla with five tailed lobes and an ample throat, bearing about ten scales within, and including the long taper-pointed anthers; and an ovary of two distinct carpels, ripening into divergent follicles with seeds tailed at one end and extended at the other into a long plumose beak. There are about 20 species, natives of Asia and tropical Africa, with one, S. Capensis, in South Africa. They are small trees or shrubs or often climbers, either smooth or hairy, with opposite feather-veined leaves, and terminal cymes of handsome flowers which are either white, yellowish, orange, red, or purple. The seeds of several species or varieties in Africa yield arrow-poison; in western Africa S. hispidus affords the inée poison (see poison of Pahonias, under poison), in eastern Africa S. Kombe the kombe poison, and some species between Zanzibar and Somali-land the wanika poison. But S. Kombe is suspected to be a variety of S. hispidus, and the third species is probably the same. Since 1878 these seeds have excited great medical interest as a medium for the treatment of heart-disease, but their investigation is not complete. (See strophanthin.) Several species are cultivated under the name twisted-flower.

strophe (strō'fē), n. [< NL. strophe, < L. strophe, < Gr. στροφή, a turning round, a recurring metrical system, the movement of a chorus while turning in one direction in the dance, the accompanying rhythmical (musical and metrical) composition, < στρέφειν, turn, twist.] 1. In anc. pros.: (a) A system the metrical form of which is repeated once or oftener in the course of a poem; also, a stanza in modern poetry. In a narrower sense—(b) The former of two metrically corresponding systems, as distinguished from the latter or antistrophe. (c) The fourth part of the parabasis and first part of the epirrhematic syzygy. It is hymnic in character, as opposed to the sceptic tone of the epirrhema.—2. In bot., one of the spirals formed in the development of leaves. [Rare or obsolete.]—Asclepiadean strophe. See Asclepiadean.

strophic (strof'ik), a. [< Gr. στροφικός, of or pertaining to a strophe, < στροφή, a strophe: see strophe.] Of or pertaining to a strophe or strophes; constituting strophes; consisting of strophes: as, strophic composition; strophic poems.

strophical (strof'i-kal), a. [< strophic + -al.] Same as strophic. Athenæum, No. 3300, p. 123.

strophiolate (strof'i-ō-lāt), a. [< strophiole + -ate[1].] In bot., bearing or furnished with a strophiole or something that resembles it.

strophiolated (strof'i-ō-lā-ted), a. [< strophiolate + -ed[2].] Same as strophiolate.

strophiole (strof'i-ōl), n. [< L. strophiolum, a small wreath or chaplet, dim. of strophium, < Gr. στρόφιον, a band, a breast-band, dim. of στρόφος, a twisted band, a braid, a cord, < στρέφειν, twist, turn.] In bot., an appendage produced from the hilum of certain seeds, of the same origin as a true aril, but less developed. Sometimes used interchangeably with caruncle, from which it clearly differs.

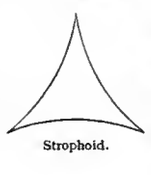
strophoid (strof'oid), n. [< F. strophoïde, < Gr. στρόφος, a twisted band, a cord.] 1. A nodal plane cubic curve which is the locus of a focus of a conic whose directrix and two tangents are given.—2. A curve which is the locus of intersections of two lines rotating uniformly with commensurable velocities. See also substrophoid.—Right strophoid, a strophoid symmetrical with respect to the line through the two centers of rotation.



Strophoid.

Strophostyles (strof-ō-stī'lēz), n. [NL. (Elliott, 1824), so called from the incurved style; < Gr. στρόφος, a twisted band, a cord, + στῦλος, a pillar.] A genus of leguminous plants, of the tribe Phaseoleæ. It is distinguished from the related genus Phaseolus, in which it was formerly included, by capitate flowers with the keel and included style and stamens incurved but not spirally coiled, and followed by a commonly terete and straight pod with its scurfy or smooth seeds quadrate or oblong, not reniform. About 17 species have been described, but some of them insufficiently, natives largely of North America, including Mexico and the West Indies, also occurring in Peru, India, and China. They are tangled vines with prostrate or climbing stems, usually retrorsely hairy, bearing pinnate leaves of three leaflets, and usually long-stalked purplish clusters of a few sessile flowers. Two species, known as wild bean, both called Phaseolus helvolus by various authors, extend along the Atlantic coast northward to Long Island or further, of which S. peduncularis (Phaseolus umbellatus) is a slender twiner of sandy fields, and S. angulosa (P. diversifolius) a commonly trailing plant extending west to Minnesota, and to Missouri, where on river-bottoms a high-climbing variety sometimes reaches 30 feet. Another species, S. pauciflorus, occurs in the southern and western United States. See Phaseolus.

strophulus (strof'ū-lus). n. [NL., dim. of strophus*, < Gr. στρόφος, a twisted band, a cord: see strophiole.] A papular eruption upon the skin, peculiar to infants, exhibiting a variety of forms, known popularly as red-gum, white-gum, tooth-rash, etc.

strossers† (stros'ėrz), n. [A var. of trossers, which is a variant of trousers: see trousers.] Same as trossers.

You rode like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait strossers. Shak., Hen. V., iii. 7. 57.

Seta his son a-horseback in cloth-of-gold breeches, while he himself goes to the devil a-foot in a pair of old strossers!
Middleton, No Wit Like a Woman's, ii. 1.

stroud[1] (stroud), n. [Also strowd; origin obscure.] A senseless or silly song. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

stroud[2] (stroud), n. [Also strowd; origin obscure.] 1. Same as strouding.—2. A blanket made of strouding.

Be pleased to give to the son of the Piankasha king these two strouds to clothe him.
Journal of Capt. Treat (1752), p. 52. (Bartlett.) strouding (strou'ding), n. [< stroud[1] + -ing[1].] Coarse warm cloth; a kind of blanketing used in trading with North American Indians.

Hazelnuts enough to barter at the nearest store for a few yards of blue strouding such as the Indians use.
The Century, XXXIII. 33.

stroup (stroup), n. [Also stroop; < ME. stroupe, strowpe, < Sw. strupe, the throat, gullet, = Norw. strupe, the throat, gullet, an orifice, = Dan. strube, the throat, gullet; cf. Icel. strjūpi, the trunk of the human body with the head cut off.] 1. The trachea or windpipe. [Obsolete and prov. Eng.]

He smote him in the helm, bakward he bare his stroupe.
Langtoft's Chronicle, p. 190. (Halliwell.)

2. A spout (of a tea-kettle, etc.). [Scotch.]

strout, v. An obsolete or provincial variant of strut[1]. Bacon.

strove (strōv). Preterit of strive.

strow (strō), v. t.; pret. strowed, pp. strowed or strown, ppr. strowing. An archaic form of strew.

strow†, a. [Cf. strow, strew.] Loose; scattered. [Rare and dubious.]

Nay, where the grass,
Too strow for fodder, and too rank for food,
Would generate more fatal maladies.
Lady Alimony, D 4 b. (Nares.)

strowd[1] (stroud), n. See stroud[1].

strowd[2], n. See stroud[2].

strowl†, v. i. An old spelling of stroll.

strown (strōn). A past participle of strow.

strowpe†, n. See stroup.

stroy†, v. t. [ME. stroyen, by apheresis from destroyen: see destroy.] To destroy. Middleton.

stroy†, n. [ME., < stroy, v.] Destruction.

stroyall† (stroi'âl), n. [< stroy, v., + obj. all.] One who destroys or wastes recklessly; a waster.

A giddy brain master, and stroyall his knave, Brings ruling to ruin, and thrift to her grave.
Tusser, Good Husbandly Lessons.

stroyer† (stroi'èr), n. [< ME. stroyere, by apheresis from destroyer.] A destroyer.

The drake, stroyere of his owene kynde.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 360.

stroyl†, n. See stroil.

ABBREVIATIONS

USED IN THE ETYMOLOGIES AND DEFINITIONS.

a., adj. ..... adjective.
abbr. ..... abbreviation.
abl. ..... ablative.
acc. ..... accusative.
accom. ..... accommodated, accommodation.
act. ..... active.
adv. ..... adverb.
AF. ..... Anglo-French.
agri. ..... agriculture.
AL. ..... Anglo-Latin.
alg. ..... algebra.
Amer. ..... American.
anat. ..... anatomy.
anc. ..... ancient.
antiq. ..... antiquity.
aor. ..... aorist.
appar. ..... apparently.
Ar. ..... Arabic.
arch. ..... architecture.
archæol. ..... archæology.
arith. ..... arithmetic.
art. ..... article.
AS. ..... Anglo-Saxon.
astrol. ..... astrology.
astron. ..... astronomy.
attrib. ..... attributive.
aug. ..... augmentative.
Bav. ..... Bavarian.
Beng. ..... Bengali.
biol. ..... biology.
Bohem. ..... Bohemian.
bot. ..... botany.
Braz. ..... Brazilian.
Bret. ..... Breton.
bryol. ..... bryology.
Bulg. ..... Bulgarian.
carp. ..... carpentry.
Cat. ..... Catalan.
Cath. ..... Catholic.
caus. ..... causative.
ceram. ..... ceramics.
cf. ..... L. confer, compare.
ch. ..... church.
Chal. ..... Chaldee.
chem. ..... chemical, chemistry.
Chin. ..... Chinese.
chron. ..... chronology.
colloq. ..... colloquial, colloquially.
com. ..... commerce, commercial.
comp. ..... composition, compound.
compar. ..... comparative.
conch. ..... conchology.
conj. ..... conjunction.
contr. ..... contracted, contraction.
Corn. ..... Cornish.
craniol. ..... craniology.
craniom. ..... craniometry.
crystal. ..... crystallography.
D. ..... Dutch.
Dan. ..... Danish.
dat. ..... dative.
def. ..... definite, definition.
deriv. ..... derivative, derivation.
dial. ..... dialect, dialectal.
diff. ..... different.
dim. ..... diminutive.
distrib. ..... distributive.
dram. ..... dramatic.
dynam. ..... dynamics.
E. ..... East.
E. ..... English (usually meaning modern English).
eccl., eccles. ..... ecclesiastical.
econ. ..... economy.
e. g. ..... L. exempli gratia, for example.
Egypt. ..... Egyptian.
E. Ind. ..... East Indian.
elect. ..... electricity.
embryol. ..... embryology.
Eng. ..... English.
engin. ..... engineering.
entom. ..... entomology.
Epis. ..... Episcopal.
equiv. ..... equivalent.
esp. ..... especially.
Eth. ..... Ethiopic.
ethnog. ..... ethnography.
ethnol. ..... ethnology.
etym. ..... etymology.
Eur. ..... European.
exclam. ..... exclamation.
f., fem. ..... feminine.
F. ..... French (usually meaning modern French).
Flem. ..... Flemish.
fort. ..... fortification.
freq. ..... frequentative.
Fries. ..... Friesic.
fut. ..... future.
G. ..... German (usually meaning New High German).
Gael. ..... Gaelic.
galv. ..... galvanism.
gen. ..... genitive.
geog. ..... geography.
geol. ..... geology.
geom. ..... geometry.
Goth. ..... Gothic (Mœsogothic).
Gr. ..... Greek.
gram. ..... grammar.
gun. ..... gunnery.
Heb. ..... Hebrew.
her. ..... heraldry.
herpet. ..... herpetology.
Hind. ..... Hindustani.
hist. ..... history.
horol. ..... horology.
hort. ..... horticulture.
Hung. ..... Hungarian.
hydrsul. ..... hydraulics.
hydros. ..... hydrostatics.
Icel. ..... Icelandic (usually meaning Old Icelandic, otherwise called Old Norse).
ichth. ..... ichthyology.
i. e. ..... L. id est, that is.
impers. ..... impersonal.
impf. ..... imperfect.
impv. ..... imperative.
improp. ..... improperly.
Ind. ..... Indian.
ind. ..... indicative.
Indo-Eur. ..... Indo-European.
indef. ..... indefinite.
inf. ..... infinitive.
instr. ..... instrumental.
interj. ..... interjection.
intr., intrans. ..... intransitive.
Ir. ..... Irish.
irreg. ..... irregular, irregularly.
It. ..... Italian.
Jap. ..... Japanese.
L. ..... Latin (usually meaning classical Latin).
Lett. ..... Lettish.
LG. ..... Low German.
lichenol. ..... lichenology.
lit. ..... literal, literally.
lit. ..... literature.
Lith. ..... Lithuanian.
lithog. ..... lithography.
lithol. ..... lithology.
LL. ..... Late Latin.
m., masc. ..... masculine.
M. ..... Middle.
mach. ..... machinery.
mammal. ..... mammalogy.
manuf. ..... manufacturing.
math. ..... mathematics.
MD. ..... Middle Dutch.
ME. ..... Middle English (otherwise called Old English). mech. ..... mechanics, mechanical.
med. ..... medicine.
mensur. ..... mensuration.
metal. ..... metallurgy.
metaph. ..... metaphysics.
meteor. ..... meteorology.
Mex. ..... Mexican.
MGr. ..... Middle Greek, mediæval Greek.
MHG. ..... Middle High German.
milit. ..... military.
mineral. ..... mineralogy.
ML. ..... Middle Latin, mediæval Latin.
MLG. ..... Middle Low German.
mod. ..... modern.
mycol. ..... mycology.
myth. ..... mythology.
n. ..... noun.
n., neut. ..... neuter.
N. ..... New.
N. ..... North.
N. Amer. ..... North America.
nat. ..... natural.
naut. ..... nautical.
nav. ..... navigation.
NGr. ..... New Greek, modern Greek.
NHG. ..... New High German (usually simply G., German).
NL. ..... New Latin, modern Latin.
nom. ..... nominative.
Norm. ..... Norman.
north. ..... northern.
Norw. ..... Norwegian.
numis. ..... numismatics.
O. ..... Old.
obs. ..... obsolete.
obstet. ..... obstetrics.
OBulg. ..... Old Bulgarian (otherwise called Church Slavonic, Old Slavic, Old Slavonic).
OCat. ..... Old Catalan.
OD. ..... Old Dutch.
ODan. ..... Old Danish.
odontog. ..... odontography.
odontol. ..... odontology.
OF. ..... Old French.
OFlem. ..... Old Flemish.
OGael. ..... Old Gaelic.
OHG. ..... Old High German.
OIr. ..... Old Irish.
OIt. ..... Old Italian.
OL. ..... Old Latin.
OLG. ..... Old Low German.
ONorth. ..... Old Northumbrian.
OPruss. ..... Old Prussian. orig. ..... original, originally.
ornith. ..... ornithology.
OS. ..... Old Saxon.
OSp. ..... Old Spanish.
osteol. ..... osteology.
OSw. ..... Old Swedish.
OTeut. ..... Old Teutonic.
p. a. ..... participial adjective.
paleon. ..... paleontology.
part. ..... participle.
pass. ..... passive.
pathol. ..... pathology.
perf. ..... perfect.
Pers. ..... Persian.
pers. ..... person.
persp. ..... perspective.
Peruv. ..... Peruvian.
petrog. ..... petrography.
Pg. ..... Portuguese.
phar. ..... pharmacy.
Phen. ..... Phenician.
philol. ..... philology.
philos. ..... philosophy.
phonog. ..... phonogrsphy.
photog. ..... photography.
phren. ..... phrenology.
phys. ..... physical.
physiol. ..... physiology.
pl., plur. ..... plural.
poet. ..... poetical.
polit. ..... political.
Pol. ..... Polish.
poss. ..... possessive.
pp. ..... past participle.
ppr. ..... present participle.
Pr. ..... Provençal (usually meaning Old Provençal).
pref. ..... prefix.
prep. ..... preposition.
pres. ..... present.
pret. ..... preterit.
priv. ..... privative.
prob. ..... probably, probable.
pron. ..... pronoun.
pron. ..... pronounced, pronunciation.
prop. ..... properly.
pros. ..... prosody.
Prot. ..... Protestant.
prov. ..... provincial.
psychol. ..... psychology.
q. v. ..... L. quod (or pl. quæ) vide, which see.
refl. ..... reflexive.
reg. ..... regular, regularly.
repr. ..... representing.
rhet. ..... rhetoric.
Rom. ..... Roman.
Rom. ..... Romanic, Romance (languages).
Russ. ..... Russian.
S. ..... South.
S. Amer. ..... South American.
sc. ..... L. scilicet, understand, supply.
Sc. ..... Scotch.
Scand. ..... Scandinavian.
Scrip. ..... Scripture.
sculp. ..... sculpture.
Serv. ..... Servian.
sing. ..... singular.
Skt. ..... Sanskrit.
Slav. ..... Slavic, Slavonic.
Sp. ..... Spanish.
subj. ..... subjunctive.
superl. ..... superlative.
surg. ..... surgery.
surv. ..... surveying.
Sw. ..... Swedish.
syn. ..... synonymy.
Syr. ..... Syriac.
technol. ..... technology.
teleg. ..... telegraphy.
teratol. ..... teratology.
term. ..... termination.
Teut. ..... Teutonic. theat. ..... theatrical.
theol. ..... theology.
therap. ..... therapeutics.
toxicol. ..... toxicology.
tr., trans ..... transitive.
trigon. ..... trigonometry.
Turk. ..... Turkish.
typog. ..... typography.
ult. ..... ultimate, ultimately.
v. ..... verb.
var. ..... variant.
vet. ..... veterinary.
v. i. ..... intransitive verb.
v. t. ..... transitive verb.
W. ..... Welsh.
Wall. ..... Walloon.
Wallach. ..... Wallachian.
W. Ind. ..... West Indian.
zoögeog. ..... zoögeography.
zoöl. ..... zoölogy.
zoöt. ..... zoötomy.

KEY TO PRONUNCIATION.

a as in fat, man, pang.
ā as in fate, mane, dale.
ä as in far, father, guard.
à as in fall, talk, naught.
á as in ask, fast, ant.
ã as in fare, hair, bear.
e as in met, pen, bless.
ē as in mete, meet, meat.
ė as in her, fern, heard.
i as in pin, it, biscuit.
ī as in pine, fight, file.
o as in not, on, frog.
ō as in note, poke, floor.
ö as in move, spoon, room.
ô as in nor, song, off.
u as in tub, son, blood.
û as in mute, acute, few (also new, tube, duty: see Preface, pp. ix, x).
u̇ as in pull, book, could.

ü German ü, French u.
oi as in oil, joint, boy.
ou as in pound, proud, now.

A single dot under a vowel in an unaccented syllable indicates its abbreviation and lightening, without absolute loss of its distinctive quality. See Preface, p. xi. Thus:

ạ as in prelate, courage, captain.
ẹ as in ablegate, episcopal.
ọ as in abrogate, eulogy, democrat.
ụ as in singular, education.

A double dot under a vowel in an unaccented syllable indicates that, even in the mouths of the best speakers, its sound is variable to, and in ordinary utterance actually becomes, the short u-sound (of but, pun, etc.). See Preface, p. xi. Thus:

a̤ as in errant, republican.
e̤ as in prudent, difference.
i̤ as in charity, density.
o̤ as in valor, actor, idiot.
ṳ as in Persia, peninsula.
ė̤ as in the book.
ụ̈ as in nature, feature.

A mark (⌣) under the consonants t, d, s, z indicates that they in like manner are variable to ch, j, sh, zh. Thus:

t̰ as in nature, adventure.
d̰ as in arduous, education.
s̰ as in leisure.
z̰ as in seizure.

th as in thin.
TH as in then.
ċh as in German ach, Scotch loch.
n̂ French nasalizing n, as in ton, en.
l (in French words) French liquid (mouillé) l.

' denotes a primary, " a secondary accent. (A secondary accent is not marked if at its regular interval of two syllables from the primary, or from another secondary.)

SIGNS.

< read from; i. e., derived from.
> read whence; i. e., from which is derived.
\+ read and; i. e., compounded with, or with suffix.
= read cognate with; i. e., etymologically parallel with.
√ read root.
* read theoretical or alleged; i. e., theoretically assumed, or asserted but unverified, form.
† read obsolete.

MDCCCLXXXIX